To a statement of defence, setting up that the defendant was discharged from the claim by an order of discharge obtained by him as the result of proceedings for liquidation by arrangement subsequently to the accrual of the claim, the plaintiffs replied that they had had no notice of the liquidation proceedings until long after they had been concluded, and that the defendant had not inserted their names as his creditors, or their debt in any list, statement or document forming any part of the proceedings, and that subsequently to the close of the proceedings the defendant had promised to pay the claim:—Held, a bad reply. Ib.

— Restraining Action.]—An action having been brought against the debtor by a creditor whose name was not inserted in the debtor's statement of affairs, and who had no notice of the liquidation proceedings, the debtor obtained an injunction restraining further proceedings in the action:—Held, that the right of the creditor had been prejudiced by the resolutions, and that the action ought not to be restrained. Harold, Ex parte, Meade, In re, 3 Ch. D. 119; 45 L. J., Bk. 121; 34 L. T. 649; 24 W. R. 903.

— Holder of Bill of Exchange.]—In the statement of debts produced by a debtor at the meetings of creditors, at which resolutions for accepting a composition were passed, the debtor had inserted the amount coming due on two bills of exchange, and the name and address of the drawer as the creditor, believing the drawer to be the holder of the bills. The bills had, in fact, been negotiated:—Held, that the actual holder, having had no notice of the meeting of creditors, was not bound by the resolutions to accept a composition. Mathewes, Ex parte, Angel, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 304; 44 L. J., Bk. 128; 32 L. T. 631; 23 W. R. 730.

A mistake made inadvertently by a debtor in the statement of his debts, will not be allowed to be corrected, unless he takes steps for doing so within a reasonable time after finding out the mistake. Ib.

Fraudulent Omission—Remedy of Creditor.]—

A certificate of discharge, obtained by a debtor who has filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, is a defence to an action by a creditor whose name has been fraudulently omitted by the debtor from the list of creditors delivered to the registrar, the only remedy of such creditor being to apply to the Court of Bankruptcy to vacate the registration and cancel the certificate. Wadsworth v. Pickles; 5 Q. B. D. 470; 49 L. J., Q. B. 454; 43 L. T. 410; 28 W. R. 628.

Entry of Creditor as fully Secured.—A debtor, in his statement of affairs, entered A. as a creditor, fully secured. The creditors accepted a composition of 10s. in the pound. A did not attend or take any part at either of the meetings, nor prove any debt under the petition. The debtor paid the composition to all the creditors except A. Two years afterwards the debtor filed a second petition, whereupon A. realized his security, and claimed to prove under the first petition for the balance remaining due:—Held, that he was not bound by the debtor's statement of his affairs, and that he was entitled to prove for the balance found due to him, and be paid the composition payable upon such balance. Hodgkinson, Ex parte, Bestwick, In re, 1 Ch. D. 702; 45 L. J., Bk. 78; 34 L. T. 73. Affirmed, 2 Ch. D. 485; 45 L. J., Bk. 148; 34 L. T. 784; 24 W. R. 938—C. A.

6. EXAMINATION OF THE DEBTOR.

When to be Held.—The proper time for investigating the affairs of a debtor, who has filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement with his creditors, is at the meetings of creditors; and the registrar has no power, upon the presentation to him for registration of a resolution for composition, to direct an examination before him of the debtor or other witnesses. Lery, Ex parte, Varbetian, In re, 11 L. R., Eq. 619; 40 L. J., Bk. 40; 24 L. T. 332; 19 W. R. 586.

Order granted on prima facie Case.—When a person is entitled to stand as a creditor of a debtor whose estate is being wound up in liquidation, he is entitled to have an order for the examination of the debtor under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 96, as extended by the r. 166, on making out a prima facie case for such examination in accordance with the requirements of r. 172. Swift, Ex parte, Russell, In re, 26 L. T. 226—L. J.

Questions limited to State of Assets.—Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 125, sub-s. 3, a debtor is only bound to answer such questions as are properly put for the purpose of shewing the state of the assets; he is not bound to answer vexatious questions or questions put by a creditor for the purpose of obtaining information to be used in a matter not affecting the interests of the creditors. Hope, In re, 9 Ch. D. 398; 47 L. J., Bk. 78; 38 L. T. 762; 27 W. R. 7—C. A. Affirmed 38 L. T. 537.

Semble, that the effect of r. 301 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, is to make the creditors, if they act bona fide, the sole judges whether the debtor has given sufficient information as to his affairs. Id.

liquidating debtor attending at the first meeting of his creditors to answer inquiries, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, sub-s. 4, is entitled to the advice of his solicitor as to whether a question is material. Mackenzie, Ex parte, Helliwell, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 88; 44 L. J., Bk. 14; 31 L. T. 421; 23 W. R. 121.

A refusal to answer proper questions would be a ground of objection to the registration of the resolutions. Id.

When a paper was put into the debtor's hand, and he was asked the question whether it was written by his authority; but the paper was not read to the meeting nor was his solicitor allowed to see it, and, by his solicitor's advice, he refused to answer the question:—Held, that this was no ground for refusing the registration of the resolutions, though the question put was really material. Id.

Any questions should be put so that the meeting generally may see their materiality. Id.

Answers form Part of Statement of Affairs.—The answers given by a debtor at a liquidation meeting to questions put to him by the creditors respecting his affairs are to be taken as part of his statement of affairs. Aaronsen, Ex parte, Aaronsen, In re, 7 Ch. D. 713; 47 L. J., Bk. 60; 38 L. T. 243; 26 W. R. 470—C. A.

7. THE RESOLUTIONS.

a. Generally.

Must be reduced to Writing.—The provision in r. 275, Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, that "only such resolutions as are reduced into writing and signed by or on behalf of the statutory majority of creditors at a meeting shall be taken cognizance of by the court," refers only to resolutions in favour of liquidation by arrangement or the acceptance of a composition. Till, Ex parte, Ratcliffe, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 631; 44 L. J., Bk. 103; 32 L. T. 521; 23 W. R. 670.

Cannot be Signed after Filing.—When a special resolution for liquidation has been filed by the person intrusted with it, it is too late for a creditor to sign it. Thorne, Ex parte, Butlin, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 722; 42 L. J., Bk. 60; 29 L. T. 122; 21 W. R. 766.

Resolution Rejected—Withdrawal of Opposition allowed.—At the meeting of the creditors of a debtor, whose proofs amounted to 50,075*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, fifty-two creditors out of fifty-nine voted for a resolution for liquidation by arrangement; but, because the proofs of the fifty-two assenting creditors amounted only to 32,072*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.*, which sum fell short of three-fourths of the 50,075*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, the resolution was lost. Among those who voted for bankruptcy (as opposed to liquidation by arrangement) were a banker, a creditor for 6,963*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.*, and F. & Co., creditors for 1,425*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* Both of them voted by proxy, and both of them were desirous subsequently to withdraw their vote, and vote for liquidation by arrangement, in which case the requisite three-fourths in value would be obtained:—Held, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, that the banker and F. & Co. might be deemed assenting creditors to the liquidation by arrangement. Wehner, In re, 20 W. R. 199.

But every case of the kind must be dealt with according to its own circumstances. Id.

Proper Resolutions—Money Paid in Satisfaction of Creditors' Right to apply to Court.]—

Resolutions to the effect that the affairs of the debtor should be liquidated by arrangement and not by bankruptcy, that if the bankrupt should within a month pay 4,000*l.*, and give a bond to the trustee for a further sum of 5,000*l.*, he should have a discharge, and that the sum of 4,000*l.* was to be deemed a satisfaction of the creditors' rights to apply to the court in reference to the pay or half-pay of the debtor, are proper resolutions. Pooley, Ex parte, Russell, In re, 5 L. R., Ch. 722; 40 L. J., Bk. 41; 23 L. T. 275; 18 W. R. 1013.

— Good in Form, Bad in Substance.]—

Resolutions which in form are resolutions for liquidation by arrangement, but amount in fact to resolutions for a composition, are an evasion of the act, and ought not to be registered. Harold, Ex parte, Meade, In re, 3 Ch. D. 119; 45 L. J., Bk. 121; 34 L. T. 649; 24 W. R. 903.

The creditors of a debtor who had filed a liquidation petition resolved that his affairs should be liquidated by arrangement, and appointed a trustee; that, on payment by the debtor to the trustee of a sum equal to 1*s.* in the pound on the amount of the debts, he should be entitled to have his discharge; and that the payment should be made by three instalments of 4*d.* in the pound, at six, twelve, and eighteen months from the registration of the resolutions. No second meeting was summoned to confirm these resolutions, but they were registered:—Held, that the arrangement was, in substance, a composition; that it amounted to an evasion of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, and that the resolutions ought not to have been registered. Id.

Where some Resolutions ultra vires, rest may be Registered.]—

A debtor, partner in a firm, having filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement, a general meeting of his creditors was held, at which the requisite majority of his joint and separate creditors passed a resolution agreeing to the liquidation, appointing a trustee and committee of inspection, and granting the debtor his discharge. The resolution also contained a clause authorizing the trustee to sell to the mother of the debtor his reversionary interest under his father's will at such a price as would pay the costs of the liquidation and a composition of 1*s.* in the pound to his separate creditors. This resolution was registered:—Held, that the clause authorizing the trustee to sell the reversionary interest was ultra vires and void; but that the rest of the resolutions were not thereby rendered invalid, and that the liquidation must proceed in the ordinary course. Browning, Ex parte, Marks, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 583; 43 L. J., Bk. 129; 30 L. T. 481; 22 W. R. 638.

When some of the resolutions passed by creditors are ultra vires, the court has power to direct the registration of the rest. Ashworth, Ex parte, Hoare, In re, 18 L. R., Eq. 705; 43 L. J., Bk. 142; 30 L. T. 906; 22 W. R. 925.

— Resolutions may be Registered as to Part.]—

The creditors of a debtor passed resolutions for liquidation by arrangement, and appointed a trustee with power to sell the estate at such price as should be sufficient to pay a composition of 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound to the creditors. The registrar registered the resolutions for the liquidation and the appointment of a trustee, but struck out the remaining resolutions as ultra vires:—Held, that the registrar had full power to strike out the void resolutions, and register the others. Frampton, Ex parte, Watkins, In re, 45 L. T. 720.

Application to register Notice to Creditors.]—

A creditor who has objected to a proof tendered at a meeting under a liquidation petition, and has had his objection marked upon the proof, ought to have notice given to him, either by the registrar or by the person whose duty it is to register the resolutions passed at the meeting, of the time when and the place where the application for the registration of the resolutions is to be heard. Lancaster, Ex parte, 5 Ch. D. 911; 46 L. J., Bk. 90; 37 L. T. 674; 25 W. R. 669—C. A.

A creditor, who had objected to a proof of debt, had no notice given to him of the application to register the resolutions carried by means of that proof, and they were registered in his absence. He afterwards applied to the county court judge to vacate the registration, and upon the hearing of this application he insisted upon some technical objections, but did not ask to have the creditor, whose proof he had objected to, cross-examined, or adduce any evidence to shew the invalidity of the debt:—Held, that the irregularity had been cured, and that the registration ought not to be vacated. Id.

Registrar cannot direct Issue.]—Upon an application under the 295th Bankruptcy Rule to register the resolutions passed by the creditors, the registrar has no power to direct an issue to be tried by a jury as to the existence of a debt, but must decide the matter himself or refer it to the judge. Williams, Ex parte, Beetonson, In re, 46 L. T. 241; 30 W. R. 491.

Registration of Resolutions after Adjudication.]—

When there has been a simple adjudication in bankruptcy, without any stay of proceedings, and resolutions are afterwards duly passed in favour of liquidation, it is the duty of the registrar to register such resolutions, whatever may be the consequences of such registration. Davis, Ex parte, Russ, In re, 2 Ch. D. 231; 45 L. J., Bk. 61; 34 L. T. 259; 24 W. R. 684. But see next case.

The registrar has no power to register a resolution for liquidation or composition after an adjudication of bankruptcy has been made; unless the adjudication has been made under r. 266 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, in which case the adjudication is intended to be merely ancillary to the liquidation. Davis, Ex parte (2 Ch. D. 231), overruled. Milward, Ex parte, Stanley, In re, 16 Ch. D. 256; 50 L. J., Ch. 166; 44 L. T. 73; 29 W. R. 167—C. A.

After an ordinary adjudication of bankruptcy has been made (not an adjudication merely for the purpose of protecting the debtor's property pending proceedings for liquidation or composition) the creditors have no power to pass resolutions for either liquidation or composition, and such resolutions if passed will be inoperative. Milward, Ex parte (supra), explained and followed. Bennett, Ex parte, Ward, In re, 16 Ch. D. 541; 44 L. T. 38; 29 W. R. 343—C. A.

Resolutions adopted without Debtor's Knowledge—Effect of, as a Discharge.]—In 1877 the trustee in a liquidation, with the consent of the creditors but without the knowledge of the debtor, bought the debtor's estate for such a sum as would pay certain mortgages, a dividend to the creditors of 5s. in the pound, and all the costs of the liquidation. The county court judge approved of this resolution as a "scheme of settlement." The debtor thereupon started another business of a different kind, in the course of which he purchased goods. In 1881 these goods were seized by the trustee on behalf of the creditors:—Held, that there was no scheme of settlement under s. 28; that the sale was of a part of the debtor's estate only, and did not include after-acquired property; that the debtor was a stranger to the whole transaction and was not thereby discharged; and that the trustee was justified in taking possession of the goods. Greener or Wainwright, Ex parte, Wainwright, In re, 30 W. R. 62. Affirmed, 19 Ch. D. 140; 51 L. J., Ch. 67; 45 L. T. 562; 30 W. R. 125—C. A.

Registration—Locus Standi to Oppose.]—Upon the hearing of an application to register liquidation resolutions, no one has a locus standi to be heard in opposition but a creditor who has previously proved a debt in the mode prescribed by the rules. A person who claims to be a creditor, and in that character to oppose the registration, cannot prove his debt when he comes before the registrar to oppose. If he has not previously proved a debt he cannot be heard. Bagster, Ex parte, Bagster, In re, 24 Ch. D. 477; 49 L. T. 272; 32 W. R. 215—C. A.

Locus Standi of Creditor withdrawing Proof.]—A person who alleged that he was a creditor tendered a proof of debt at the first meeting of the creditors, but withdrew it. He attended before the registrar to oppose the registration of the resolutions passed by the creditors:—Held, by Bacon, C. J., and semble, per James, L. J., that the objector had no locus standi, and the registrar could not put his proof on the file for the purpose of giving him a locus standi. Duce, Ex parte, Whitehouse, In re, 13 Ch. D. 429; 42 L. T. 385; 28 W. R. 601—C. A.

b. Validity with Reference to Amount of Assets or Dividends.

Assets.]—Where a debtor has practically no assets distributable among his creditors, resolutions for a liquidation by arrangement ought not to be registered, even though they do not include a discharge to the debtor. Aaronsen, Ex parte, Aaronsen, In re, 7 Ch. D. 713; 47 L. J., Bk. 60; 38 L. T. 243; 26 W. R. 470—C. A.

The statement of a debtor who had filed a liquidation petition shewed that his debts amounted to 540l., and that his assets were only 32l. The creditors resolved upon a liquidation. One creditor opposed the registration of the resolutions:—Held, that the petition was an abuse of the procedure of the court, and that the registration had been rightly refused. Staff, Ex parte, Staff, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 775; 44 L. J., Bk. 137; 32 L. T. 40; 23 W. R. 950.

A debtor filed a liquidation petition, and the creditors unanimously resolved to accept a composition of 3d. in the pound. The debts were 130l.; the assets amounted to 7l. The registrar refused to register the resolutions, though no creditor opposed, on the ground that there were no "available assets for distribution among the creditors":—Held, that, as all the requirements of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and the rules had been complied with, the resolutions must be registered. Elworthy, Ex parte, Elworthy, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 742; 44 L. J., Bk. 123; 32 L. T. 699; 23 W. R. 790.

Power of Majority not to be Used out of Motives of Kindness to Debtor.]—The power of the majority of creditors, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, to resolve to accept a composition which will be binding on the minority must be exercised bona fide for the benefit of the creditors and not out of motives of kindness to the debtor. Page, Ex parte, 2 Ch. D. 323; 45 L. J., Bk. 119; 34 L. T. 638; 24 W. R. 502—C. A.

Therefore, where a resolution was passed for the acceptance of an offer by the debtor to pay 1s. in the pound in twelve months, without security, and his own estimate of his assets shewed that he could have paid 5s.:—Held, that the registrar had rightly refused to register the resolution. Id.

The statement of affairs of a debtor who had filed a liquidation petition shewed that his debts amounted to 11,358l., while his assets were only 75l. Of the debts the preferential claims amounted to 127l. The creditors, by the proper statutory majority, resolved to accept a composition of 1s. in the pound, to be paid within one month after registration of the resolution, no security for its payment being offered. One of the dissentient creditors opposed the registration:—Held, that the resolution could not have been passed in the interests of the creditors, but must have been passed for the benefit of the debtor; that it therefore was not binding on the dissentient minority, and that the registrar was right in refusing to register it. Terrell, In re, Sheffield and Rotherham Joint Stock Banking Company, Ex parte, 4 Ch. D. 293; 46 L. J., Bk. 47; 35 L. T. 646, 648; 25 W. R. 153—C. A.

Where Debtor has bona fide Claims.]—Want of bona fides will not necessarily be imputed to liquidation resolutions, however small the assets immediately available may be, if the debtor has substantial bona fide claims which are the subject of pending litigation. Hope, Ex parte, Hope, In re, 9 Ch. D. 398; 47 L. J., Bk. 78; 38 L. T. 762; 27 W. R. 7—C. A.

In Absence of Fraud, Resolutions must be Registered.]—The statutory majority of the creditors of a liquidating debtor passed a resolution accepting a composition of 6d. in the pound, which was subsequently duly confirmed:—Held, that in the absence of fraud, the resolution must be registered. Williams, Ex parte, 36 L. T. 324; 25 W. R. 432.

The creditors of a debtor, whose statement of affairs shewed that his debts amounted to 534l. and his assets to 85l., resolved on a liquidation by arrangement, and gave the debtor an immediate discharge. The registration was opposed by one creditor, who had, after the filing of the petition, seized the whole of the debtor's goods under a f. fa. :—Held, that the resolutions could not be treated as any abuse of the procedure of the court, or as having been passed malâ fide. Early, Ex parte, Golding, In re, 13 Ch. D. 300; 42 L. T. 298; 28 W. R. 310—C. A.

Opposition by Judgment Creditor.—The statement of affairs of a debtor who had filed a liquidation petition shewed that his debts were 1,759*l.* and his assets 85*l.*, the latter sum being subject to a deduction in respect of preferential debts. The creditors resolved upon a liquidation by arrangement, and gave the debtor an immediate discharge. They also voted 10*l.* for the remuneration of the trustee. The registration of the resolutions was opposed by a creditor who had brought an action against the debtor for 182*l.*, but who had been restrained from proceeding with his action. He was in a position to sign judgment and issue execution so soon as the injunction should be dissolved :—Held, that, notwithstanding the small amount of the assets, the resolutions ought to be registered, the contest being really whether the assets, such as they were, should be distributed among the creditors generally, or be swept away by the judgment creditor, and this although the judgment creditor offered in the Court of Appeal to undertake to present a bankruptcy petition against the debtor. Matheus, Ex parte, Sharpe, In re, 16 Ch. D. 655; 50 L. J., Ch. 284; 44 L. T. 117—C. A.

c. Vacating or Setting Aside.

Fraud or Malpractices.—The court will not rescind the registration of resolutions for composition on the ground of misstatement of assets by the debtor except upon evidence sufficient to convict him of a misdemeanor under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, sub-s. 6. Law, In re, Hart, Ex parte, 47 L. J., Bk. 88.

A liquidating debtor whose statement of affairs shewed debts amounting to 5,146*l.*, with assets 3,485*l.*, was proved to have estimated six specified debts at 63*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* only in his statement of affairs, while in the course of the next two years he recovered 249*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* in respect of them. On an application by a creditor to rescind the registration of the resolutions on the ground that the debtor had fraudulently misstated his assets :—Held, that the evidence being insufficient to establish an intent to defraud, the application must be dismissed, but without costs. Ib.

—Application not Barred by Delay.—Held, also, that the application, under the circumstances, was not barred by delay, though made more than two years after the date of the resolutions. Ib.

Creditor accepting Benefits cannot impugn Resolution.—A creditor who dissents from, but who accepts the composition paid under resolutions adopted for the liquidation by arrangement of a debtor's affairs, cannot, the debtor having duly received his discharge and certificate, on default being afterwards made in the payment of a part of the composition, impugn the validity of the resolutions and sue on the original debt. Lewis v. Leonard, 5 Ex. D. 165; 49 L. J., Ex. 308; 42 L. T. 351; 28 W. R. 719—C. A.

Certificate of Discharge, Effect of.—The certificate of discharge given by the registrar to a debtor whose affairs are liquidated by arrangement is conclusive evidence of the validity of the liquidation proceedings. Ib.

The defendants filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and at the first meeting of creditors a resolution was passed that the defendants' discharge might be granted on a certificate of the committee of inspection and trustee to that effect. At a subsequent meeting of creditors for the purpose of considering a scheme for the settlement of the defendants' affairs, it was resolved that the whole estate should be sold to one of the defendants in consideration of his paying a dividend of 8*s.* in the pound secured by four promissory notes payable at successive dates. The certificate of discharge was granted. The plaintiff was a creditor and proved on the estate to the full amount of his debt. Three of the promissory notes were paid to all the creditors including the plaintiff, but default was made in payment of the fourth :—Held, first, that the certificate of discharge was, by force of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 49, 125, conclusive evidence of the validity of the proceedings under the liquidation, and that the discharge was valid. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the plaintiff having received and retained a dividend could not be heard to object to the resolutions. Ib.

When a resolution to discharge a liquidating debtor has been passed by the statutory majority and registered, the registration will be vacated if it is shewn that any one of the votes of the majority was obtained by a malpractice on the part of the debtor, such as bribing the creditor to give his vote, even though, if the vote thus procured were struck off, the statutory majority in favour of the discharge would remain. Baum, Ex parte, Baum, In re, 7 Ch. D. 719; 47 L. J., Bk. 48; 38 L. T. 367; 26 W. R. 568—C. A.

—Time.—An application to vacate the registration of a resolution on the ground of fraud or mala fides is not an appeal to which the limit of twenty-one days applies. Ib.

—Jurisdiction of High Court of Justice.—The High Court of Justice has jurisdiction to inquire and decide whether fraud has been committed in the registration of a resolution for liquidation by arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 125, 127. Eyre v. Smith, 2 C. P. D. 435; 37 L. T. 417; 25 W. R. 871—C. A.

Therefore when in an action of debt the defendant pleads that he has liquidated his affairs by arrangement and that the debt sued for is provable under the proceedings, the plaintiff is at liberty to reply and prove that the registration of the resolution for liquidation in the Court of Bankruptcy has been procured by fraud, and is therefore invalid. Ib.

Locus Standi—Appeal against Cancellation of Registration.—Creditors who have not been heard before the registrar on an application to register have nevertheless a locus standi to appeal against an order cancelling the registration. Walter, Ex parte, Webb, In re, 2 Ch. D. 326; 45 L. J., Bk. 105; 34 L. T. 701; 24 W. R. 834—C. A.

8. THE TRUSTEE.

a. Appointment, Powers and Duties.

Creditor's Vote rejected—Vacation of Appointment.—If a creditor having a clear right of proof is excluded from voting in the appointment of a trustee and committee of inspection by reason that his proof is rejected, and the proof is afterwards sustained, the court will vacate the appointments so made, and order a new choice. Crouther, Ex parte, Harrison, In re, 24 L. T. 330.

Appointment too late.—The first meeting of creditors held under liquidation proceedings was adjourned for six months, and at the adjourned meeting resolutions were passed agreeing to a liquidation and appointing a trustee:—Held, that since the trustee had not been appointed until more than six months from the presentation of the liquidation petition, the resolution had no power to vest any estate in him and ought not to be registered. Wilson, In re, Fenning, Ex parte, 3 Ch. D. 458; 35 L. T. 830; 25 W. R. 185—C. A.

A trustee can be appointed by the creditors under a liquidation petition, though more than six months have elapsed since the filing of the petition. Fenning, Ex parte (3 Ch. D. 455), discussed. Credit Company, Ex parte, McHenry, In re, 24 Ch. D. 353; 49 L. T. 385; 32 W. R. 47—C. A.

The last clause of sub-s. 7 of s. 125 relates only to the effect of the appointment of a trustee under a liquidation after he has been appointed, and does not impose on the making of the appointment any limitation similar to that which by s. 6 is imposed on the making of an adjudication of bankruptcy, viz., that the act of bankruptcy on which the adjudication is founded must have occurred within six months before the presentation of the petition for adjudication. Ib.

Removal of Trustee.—The trustee in a liquidation by arrangement, and any member of the committee of inspection, may be removed, and others appointed, by a special resolution of the creditors, summoned under r. 304 or 305 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870. Hopkins, Ex parte, Hart, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 506; 43 L. J., Bk. 127; 30 L. T. 447.

—Trustee entitled to Notice of Resolution.]

—A trustee in a liquidation is entitled to notice of a meeting at which it is intended to propose a resolution to remove him from office. Wright, Ex parte, Bagnall, In re, 27 W. R. 476.

Payment of Moneys into Bank, and Accounts.]

—In a liquidation by arrangement the creditors may, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 125, sub-s. 8, prescribe the bank into which the trustee is to pay the moneys which he receives without passing any formal resolution for the purpose, and evidence is admissible of their having done so. Old, Ex parte, Bright, In re, 17 L. R., Eq. 457; 43 L. J., Bk. 47; 30 L. T. 72; 22 W. R. 365.

Creditors at a first meeting resolved on liquidation and appointed a trustee. At the same meeting the trustee stated to the creditors that he should open an account in his own name, as trustee of the debtor, at a bank of which he was manager, and should pay into that account all moneys received by him from the debtor's estate. The creditors assented to this arrangement, but no formal resolution was passed confirming it:—Held, that the estate being under liquidation, the creditors had sufficiently prescribed the bank into which the money was to be paid, and that the trustee could not be charged with interest for not having paid it into the Bank of England. Ib.

Held, also, that it is the duty of an inspector to see that accounts are filed by the trustee every three months. Ib.

The provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 20, as to the audit of the trustee's accounts, apply to liquidation by arrangement as well as to bankruptcy. Ib.

Disputing Debt.—The trustee allowed to dispute a debt for which judgment had been recovered against the bankrupt, the defence being one which might have been raised in the action. Chatteris, Ex parte, Orkney (Earl), In re, 26 L. T. 174; 20 W. R. 322—L. J.

A. & C., trading at Bremen, had correspondents at Havannah, and also a correspondent in London. A. & C. shipped cheese and also tea by two several shipments to their correspondents at Havannah, and drew bills against these shipments on their correspondent in London, giving notice to their correspondents at Havannah. Subsequently the correspondents at Havannah sent remittances to the correspondent in London, sufficient to meet the bills which the correspondent in London had accepted. The bills were dishonoured; the London correspondent became bankrupt, some of the remittances being still in specie. The Havannah correspondents also became bankrupt:—Held, that the appropriation of the remittances to meet the bills being disputed, the trustee could not be directed to receive the amounts and pay part to A. & C., but that the proper course was to direct an inquiry who were the parties entitled to the remittances. Richardson, In re, 20 W. R. 968.

Duty to form Reserve Fund—Secured Creditor—Claim to Prove for Balance of Debt after Realisation of Securities under Agreement with Trustee, and Payment of Dividend.]—G. & Co., who were entered upon the debtor's statement of affairs as fully-secured creditors, in April, 1873, commenced negotiations with the trustees in the liquidation for a joint sale of the property comprised in their securities; and a memorandum of the terms was drawn up. In August, 1874, these negotiations ended in a definite agreement being concluded in the terms of the memorandum. One of the terms of this agreement was to the effect, that if the securities held by G. & Co. did not realize sufficient to pay their debt and expenses, they should be entitled to prove for the balance. In May, 1874, a dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound was paid to all the creditors who had proved their debts, but no notice of the declaration of the dividend or payment was given to G. & Co. Some of the securities having been realized, and the rest being regarded as of no value, Messrs. G. & Co., in September, 1878, sent in a proof for 1,017l. 2s. 9d., the balance of the amount due to them, and claimed to be paid a dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound thereon:—Held, on appeal, that the trustees having had plain notice of the claim of G. & Co., ought to have set aside a reserve under Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, r. 312, and that the dividend claimed must be paid. Snell, Ex parte, Cole, In re, 42 L. T. 62.

Examination of Trustee.]—The Court of Bankruptcy has power to order the examination of the trustee in bankruptcy, and where such examination is necessary, will make the order for it upon the application of a creditor. Crossley, Ex parte, Taylor, In re, 13 L. R., Eq. 409; 41 L. J., Bk. 35; 20 W. R. 400.

Release of Trustee does not operate as Removal.]—The rule in bankruptcy that the release of a trustee operates as a removal of the trustee, and that thereupon the registrar becomes the trustee, does not apply to cases of liquidation. Witt, Ex parte, Armstrong, In re, 40 L. T. 836; 27 W. R. 888.

Where a debtor was entitled under a will to property which was not realized until several years after the close of the liquidation and the release of the trustee:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to receive and give a discharge for such property, and that it was his duty to distribute it under the order of the court. Id.

Allowance of Costs and Charges.]—A trustee is entitled to have out of the estate all expenses properly incurred by him which are not ordered to be paid by other parties; but it is not necessary or proper for any order to that effect to be made by the court. Lucas, Ex parte, Wood, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 302; 41 L. J., Bk. 21.

After a bill, filed on behalf of creditors to set aside as fraudulent and void a voluntary settlement by their debtor, and a composition signed by the creditors in ignorance of such prior voluntary settlement, the debtor was adjudicated bankrupt, and an order was made by the Court of Bankruptcy setting aside the voluntary settlement. The plaintiffs, whose claim to prove under the bankruptcy had been admitted notwithstanding the opposition of the trustees of the settlement, wrote to them proposing to dismiss the bill without costs as against them, and that plaintiffs' costs should come out of the estate. The trustees declined this proposal, but offered to consent to an order staying all proceedings in the suit without costs, or dismissing the bill without costs:—Held, that upon the bankruptcy of the debtor the trustee in bankruptcy should have applied to the court to have stopped the suit, which, though rightly instituted in the first instance, could no longer be prosecuted with benefit to the creditors, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the costs of suit up to the date of their letter to the trustees of the settlement, out of the estate realized in bankruptcy, and the trustee in bankruptcy to the costs only of realizing the estate. Tanqueray v. Boules, 14 L. R., Eq. 151.

Held, also, that the trustees of the settlement who, by their refusal of plaintiffs' offer, had compelled them to bring the suit to a hearing, must pay all plaintiffs' costs incurred since the date of that offer. Id.

b. Vesting of Debtor's Property.

In cases of liquidation by arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the effect of the resolution is to divest all the property of the debtor and vest it in the trustee; but when the creditors resolve on a composition the property remains in the debtor. Malone v. —, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 473.

Relation back of Title.]—A trustee under liquidation has the same powers as a trustee under a bankruptcy; and (though by s. 125, sub-s. 4, "the liquidation by arrangement shall be deemed to have commenced as from the date of the appointment of the trustee," yet the title of the trustee does not date only from his actual appointment, and there may be dealings with the debtor's property prior to that date which he is entitled to call in question. Todhunter, Ex parte, Norton, In re, 10 L. R., Eq. 425; 39 L. J., Bk. 17; 25 L. T. 313; 18 W. R. 890.

Execution.]—A sheriff seized the goods of a debtor under an execution, and under judges' orders sold them and paid the proceeds into court. Between the seizure and the sale the debtor filed a petition in liquidation, and notice thereof was given to the sheriff and the execution creditor before the sale. After the sale a trustee in liquidation was appointed, and the execution creditor obtained payment of the money out of court without notice to the trustee:—Held, that the question must be decided as if the petition for liquidation had been a petition in bankruptcy presented before the sale, followed by an adjudication after sale; and that, assuming the filing the petition for liquidation to be an act of bankruptcy, yet the execution creditor having seized before notice thereof was protected by s. 95, sub-s. 3, and was entitled to retain the proceeds against the trustee. Id.

In liquidation the title of the trustee to the debtor's property relates back from the date of the trustee's appointment to such filing, though s. 125, sub-s. 4, says that the liquidation shall be deemed to have commenced as from the date of the appointment of the trustee. Duignan, Ex parte, Bissell, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 605; 40 L. J., Bk. 68; 25 L. T. 286; 19 W. R. 1127.

After such a petition had been filed by a trader debtor, his goods were seized and sold under an execution for less than 50*l.* After the seizure, and before the sale, the sheriff and the execution creditor received notice of the filing. After the sale a trustee was appointed:—Held, that the execution was not protected by s. 95, sub-s. 3; and that the goods were the property of the trustee. Id.

When a debtor's estate is being liquidated by arrangement, instead of in bankruptcy, the words "date of the appointment of the trustee" must be substituted for the words "date of the order of adjudication" in s. 95, sub-s. 3. Venus, Ex parte, Gwyn, In re, 10 L. R., Eq. 419; 39 L. J., Bk. 23; 18 W. R. 979.

The title of the trustee in a liquidation by arrangement relates back to an act of bankruptcy committed by the debtor before the filing of the petition in the same way as that of a trustee in a bankruptcy. Eyles, Ex parte, Edwards, In re, 16 L. R., Eq. 99; 42 L. J., Bk. 55; 21 W. R. 574.

On the 8th of February a creditor levied execution upon the goods of his debtor, upon a judgment for less than 50*l.* On the 10th of February, the sheriff not having sold, the debtor filed a liquidation petition, and a receiver was appointed. The debtor had, on the 16th of January, executed a bill of sale, assigning all his property to secure a past debt:—Held, that the title of the trustee under the liquidation related back to the execution of the bill of sale, and that he was entitled to the goods seized by the execution creditor. Id.

Title as against Execution Creditor.]—After the sheriff had seized the goods of a debtor, the debtor presented to the county court a petition for liquidation by arrangement, thereby committing an act of bankruptcy, and on the same day obtained an injunction restraining the sheriff from proceeding to a sale. The sheriff, however, sold the goods, and paid the balance of the proceeds of the sale into the county court:—Held, that the execution creditor, and not the trustee, was entitled to the money in court. Rocke, Ex parte, Hall, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 795; 40 L. J., Bk. 70; 25 L. T. 287; 19 W. R. 1129.

The Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 125, sub-a. 7, enacts, that "the appointment of a trustee under a liquidation shall, according to circumstances, be deemed to be equivalent to and a substitute for the presentation of a petition in bankruptcy, or the service of such petition, or an order of adjudication in bankruptcy." Nevertheless, the words "notice of a petition for liquidation having been presented" may be substituted for the words "notice of a bankruptcy petition having been presented," in s. 87; and a petition for liquidation has the same effect as a petition in bankruptcy in cases under that section, although the trustee in liquidation be not appointed within the fourteen days there mentioned. Keys, Ex parte, Skinner, In re, 10 L. R., Eq. 432; 39 L. J., Bk. 28; 25 L. T. 315; 18 W. R. 918.

Therefore, where the sheriff seized and sold the goods of a trader on a judgment for more than 50*l.*, and after the sale a petition for liquidation was presented, of which the sheriff had notice within fourteen days, an order restraining the sheriff from paying the proceeds to the execution creditor, and directing payment to the trustee when appointed, was affirmed. Id.

—Assignment of Debtor's Property to Trustee.]—The creditors of a liquidating debtor accepted a composition to be secured by such charge on the debtor's property as the trustee should require. The first instalment of the composition not having been paid, the trustee took possession, and subsequently the debtor by deed assigned all his property to the trustee for the benefit of his creditors. The sheriff having afterwards seized the debtor's property under a fi. fa. issued by a judgment creditor:—Held, that from the date of the deed of assignment the trustee was the legal owner of the debtor's property, that the possession taken by him was effectual, and consequently that there was no property of the debtor which the sheriff could seize. North Eastern Railway Company v. Spark, 37 L. T. 143.

The creditors of a liquidating debtor resolved upon a liquidation by arrangement, appointed a trustee, and agreed to accept a composition payable by instalments. The debtor and trustee then entered into a deed by which the trustee agreed to sell all the stock-in-trade, chattels, and effects to the debtor for a sum sufficient to pay the composition. The deed provided that the debtor might, under the direction and control of the trustee, carry on his former business; and that the trustee should be at liberty, so long as any part of the composition remained unpaid, at any time without consent of the debtor, "by forcible entry or otherwise, to enter into and upon any premises" of the debtor where any stock-in-trade or assets of the debtor were, and "to seize and take possession of all and every the chattels and effects there found." The debtor obtained his discharge and recommenced trading, the trustee in no way interfering with him in the conduct of the business, and subsequently filed a second liquidation petition. Some days previously thereto the debtor made default in payment of the second instalment of the composition, whereupon the trustee put a man in charge of the debtor's shop, who remained in possession during the day, but went away to sleep, returning each morning early, the debtor being allowed to have possession of the keys to lock up the shop every night and reopen it in the morning. The night before he filed his second petition the debtor locked up the premises as usual, but next morning went away, taking the keys with him. The shop was not reopened, whereupon the trustee broke in and took forcible possession before the second liquidation petition was filed:—Held, that the possession taken by the trustee was a mere formal possession; that the locking up of the shop by the debtor with the intention not to reopen it constituted, under the circumstances, an act of bankruptcy of which the trustee had notice, and therefore the forcible possession taken by him was invalid. Nicholson, Ex parte, Anderson, In re, 37 L. T. 40.

Held, also, that the deed was against the policy of the law, and that therefore the trustee under the second liquidation was, as against the trustee under the first liquidation, entitled to all the debtor's property. Id.

After-acquired Property.]—The creditors of a manufacturer resolved on a liquidation by arrangement, and appointed a trustee and a committee of inspection. They afterwards passed a resolution accepting an offer by the debtor and B., a friend of his, to purchase "the whole of the debtor's estate and effects" for 6,000*l.*, towards which the debtor was to contribute 200*l.*, payable by instalments. A deed was executed conveying the machinery, stock-in-trade, and all other property then vested in the trustee under the liquidation, or which he had power to dispose of, to B. B. took the debtor into partnership in the business, and the instalments were all duly paid. The debtor then applied for his discharge, but a meeting of the creditors, summoned to consider the question, refused to grant it:—Held, that the sale included all the future property of the debtor, and that the debtor was entitled to an injunction restraining the committee of inspection and other creditors from taking proceedings against property acquired by him since the commencement of the liquidation. Tinker, Ex parte, France, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 716; 43 L. J., Bk. 147; 30 L. T. 806. Affirming 43 L. J., Bk. 91; 30 L. T. 615; 22 W. R. 794.

The creditors of a liquidating debtor in 1877 passed a special resolution authorizing the sale of his estate to the trustee at such a price as would pay a dividend of 5*s.* in the pound to the creditors, and also the costs of the liquidation. The resolution was sanctioned by the court, and was carried out by the trustee. The debtor was not a party to the arrangement, and did not know of it for some time afterwards. The creditors did not pass any formal resolution fixing the close of the liquidation, or granting the debtor a discharge, but he commenced another business. In 1881 this came to the knowledge of the trustee, and he thereupon took possession of the debtor's stock-in-trade, claiming it on behalf of the creditors under the liquidation:—Held, that the resolution did not amount in substance to a close of the liquidation or a discharge of the debtor, and that consequently the trustee was entitled to the debtor's after-acquired property for the benefit of the creditors. Wainwright, or Greener, Ex parte, Wainwright, In re, 19 Ch. D. 140; 51 L. J., Ch. 67; 45 L. T. 562; 30 W. R. 125—C. A. Affirming S. C., 30 W. R. 62.

But held, that, under the circumstances, the costs might properly be the subject of appeal, and that the debtor's costs must be paid out of the estate, and (reversing the decision of Bacon, C. J.) that the trustee's costs must also be allowed out of the estate. Id.

c. Sale of Estate to Debtor.

Authority of Trustee to sell Estate to Debtor.]

—The creditors of a liquidating debtor passed a resolution agreeing to the liquidation, appointing a trustee, and directing the trustee to resell to the debtor all the estate, other than a certain debt, in consideration of the debtor's promissory notes for 7s. 6d. in the pound, payable by three equal instalments, and such a sum as would pay the costs of the liquidation. The resolution was subsequently confirmed and registered:—Held, that the clause authorizing the trustee to resell the estate to the debtor was ultra vires and void, and must be rejected, but that the rest of the resolutions were not thereby rendered invalid, and that the liquidation must proceed in the ordinary course. Dugdale, Ex parte, 36 L. T. 324; 25 W. R. 468.

Sale of Debts to Debtor.]—To an action for goods sold, the defendant pleaded that since the cause of action arose, and before action, the estate of the plaintiff went into liquidation under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), and B. was duly appointed trustee. The plaintiff replied that the trustee, for good and valuable consideration, sold, assigned, and transferred to him all the estate vested in him as trustee under the liquidation:—Held, that the sale was warranted by s. 25, sub-s. 3, and the plaintiff entitled to sue in his own name; and that the replication was no departure from the declaration. Kitsoun v. Hardwicke, 7 L. R., C. P. 473; 26 L. T. 846.

9. SCHEME OF ARRANGEMENT.

The creditors of a firm of liquidating debtors agreed to a scheme of arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 28, which was sanctioned by the court. Under this scheme the assets were transferred to a company, which was to carry on the business, and debentures were issued to the creditors for the amount of their proved debts, which were to be payable out of the surplus profits, after meeting certain prior charges. Among the creditors was C., who had accepted accommodation bills to a large amount for the firm, and who afterwards himself filed a liquidation petition, and paid his creditors a composition of 4s. in the pound. The holders of the bills thus accepted proved against C.'s estate, and received their composition, amounting altogether to about 32,000l. They also proved against the estate of the liquidating firm under the scheme of arrangement. Some of them received the composition before proving, and consequently only proved for 16s. in the pound; the others proved for the whole amount. C. then claimed to stand in the place of the bill-holders as a creditor of the liquidating firm to the extent of what he had paid under the composition, and to have debentures issued to him to the nominal amount of 32,000l. in their stead. His claim to stand in the place of those bill-holders who had received their composition before proving under the scheme of arrangement to the extent of 4s. in the pound was allowed; but as to the others who had proved for the whole amount:—Held, first, that the debentures were not issued to the creditors in satisfaction of their debts, but in substitution for the dividends which under a bankruptcy would have been payable on them. Turquand, Ex parte, Fothergill, In re, 3 Ch. D. 445; 45 L. J., Bk. 153—C. A.

Held, secondly, that the scheme of arrangement made no difference in the relation between C. and the liquidating firm, namely, that of surety and principal debtor, and therefore that he had no equity to receive anything out of these assets till the creditors had been actually paid 20s. in the pound. His claim to debentures in respect of that part of the composition was consequently disallowed. Id.

The creditors of a bankrupt agreed, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 28, to a scheme for the settlement of his affairs, which was afterwards approved by the court. The scheme provided that a composition of 9s. 6d. in the pound should be paid to all the creditors but three; that the bankrupt should take back his estate; and that the adjudication should be annulled. The three excepted creditors agreed to make no claim on the bankrupt or his estate for three years from the date of the annulling the adjudication. On the 20th of April, 1871, the order to annul was made. The composition was paid, the bankrupt took back his estate; he traded again and contracted fresh debts, and on the 1st of October, 1875, he filed a liquidation petition:—Held, that the excepted creditors were entitled to prove in the liquidation and to receive dividends pari passu with the new creditors. Russell, Ex parte, Winn, In re, 2 Ch. D. 424; 45 L. J., Bk. 85; 34 L. T. 295; 24 W. R. 802.

The creditors of a trader resolved on a liquidation, and also that, on his entering into a covenant to pay the trustee 5,000l. by ten half-yearly instalments, the trustee should assign to the debtor his household furniture, and allow him to carry on his business, accounting to the trustee for the then stock in hand, and that within a month after the execution of the covenant by the debtor and the registration of the resolution, the discharge of the debtor should be granted to him. The deed of covenant was executed and the debtor was thereupon let into possession of the stock-in-trade and the business, which he carried on for more than two years. His discharge was also granted to him. Ultimately the creditors resolved that the business and stock should be sold, and an offer to buy them for 3,000l. was accepted. The debtor joined in the sale. The 3,000l. having been paid to the trustee, and the debtor having died:—Held, that a creditor whose debt was contracted after the debtor had resumed his business was not entitled to any lien upon the 3,000*l.* or any part thereof. Robertson. Ex parte, Magnus, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 962; 42 L. J., Bk. 85; 29 L. T. 124; 21 W. R. 875.

Order approving does not oust Jurisdiction of Court of Bankruptcy.]—The effect of an order of the Court of Bankruptcy, approving a scheme of settlement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 28, of which one of the terms was the annulling of the bankruptcy and vesting the property of the bankrupt in a person appointed therein pursuant to s. 81, is not to take the matter out of the powers of the Court of Bankruptcy so as to prevent the general rules of bankruptcy applying. West v. Baker, 1 Ex. D. 44; 45 L. J., Ex. 113; 34 L. T. 102; 24 W. R. 277.

Therefore, in an action brought by such person duly appointed by order, for work done by the bankrupt before bankruptcy:—Held, that the defendant had a right to set off a claim for unliquidated damages which would have been provable under the bankruptcy. Ib.

10. EMPLOYMENT OF DEBTOR TO REALIZE ESTATE.

Power to commit Debtor.]—On the 8th of October the creditors of two debtors, who were partners in trade, resolved on a liquidation, and appointed trustees, and on the 5th of November they granted the debtors their discharge in respect of their partnership liabilities. The trustees employed the debtors as their servants, at a weekly salary, to realize the estate. After the order of discharge was granted one of the debtors received moneys on account of the partnership estate, and applied them in paying his separate creditors. An order was made by the county court that he should refund the moneys thus misapplied, and he failed to obey the order:—Held, that there was jurisdiction under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 19, to commit him for contempt of court. Waters, Ex parte, Waters, In re, 18 L. R., Eq. 701; 43 L. J., Bk. 128; 30 L. T. 766; 22 W. R. 796.

11. ADJUDICATING LIQUIDATING DEBTOR A BANKRUPT.

Discretion of Court.]—When a debtor against whom a petition for adjudication has been presented files a petition for liquidation, the court has a discretion either to postpone the adjudication till after the meeting of creditors, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 80, sub-s. 10, or to adjudicate the debtor a bankrupt and suspend the proceedings under the adjudication under r. 266 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, or to adjudicate him a bankrupt simply. Walton, Ex parte, Dando, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 215; 44 L. J., Bk. 37; 32 L. T. 313; 23 W. R. 778.

Seemingly, that r. 266 is only intended to apply to cases where the judge considers that the property would not be sufficiently protected by the proceedings in liquidation. Ib.

The power given to the court by s. 125, sub-s. 12 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to adjudge a debtor, who has filed a liquidation petition, a bankrupt, may be exercised even though no liquidation or composition resolutions have been passed by the creditors. Walker, Ex parte, McHenry, In re, 22 Ch. D. 813; 52 L. J., Ch. 653; 48 L. T. 291; 31 W. R. 419—C. A.

No Petition required.]—When the court is satisfied that proceedings in liquidation cannot proceed without injustice and undue delay of creditors, it may at once adjudicate the debtor bankrupt, without the presentation of any petition for adjudication, or notice to the creditors. Marland, Ex parte, Ashton, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 777; 44 L. J., Bk. 116; 32 L. T. 875; 23 W. R. 951.

Affidavits need not be Re-sworn when Creditors Resolve on Bankruptcy.]—When at the first meeting held under a petition for liquidation, the creditors resolve upon a bankruptcy, and a petition for adjudication is accordingly presented, the affidavits of debt made by the creditors under the petition for liquidation need not be re-sworn for the purposes of proofs under the bankruptcy. Hopkins, Ex parte, 22 L. T. 450.

The proper course is to transfer the proceedings under the petition for liquidation to the petition for adjudication whereby all the proceedings will be consolidated. Ib.

12: SECOND LIQUIDATION.

When a resolution for composition has been passed which is capable of being enforced against a debtor, he cannot present a second petition for liquidation or for composition; and any resolution passed under such a petition is void, and ought not to be registered. Sydney and Wiggins, Ex parte, Sydney, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 208; 44 L. J., Bk. 21; 31 L. T. 714; 23 W. R. 205.

Creditors under a liquidation petition resolved that the liquidation should close, and the trustees be released as from January, 1871, but no order of discharge was given to the debtor. Four years after the debtor filed a second petition, and the creditors again resolved on liquidation:—Held, that the creditors under the second petition need not give notices of their meetings to the creditors under the first petition. Williams, Ex parte, Williams, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 743; 44 L. J., Bk. 122; 32 L. T. 699; 23 W. R. 790.

A debtor having commenced proceedings for liquidation, his creditors passed a resolution that his discharge should be granted to him on his paying 4,000*l.* in a month, and giving a bond for payment of 5,000*l.* more to the trustee by five yearly instalments. In default of payment of any instalment, the whole 5,000*l.* was to become payable at once. The 4,000*l.* was paid, the bond given, and two yearly instalments paid under it, but default was made in payment of the third. The debtor then commenced fresh proceedings for liquidation, and presented a statement of accounts shewing a large amount of debts and hardly any assets. He was in receipt of half-pay as retired officer in the army. The creditors passed a resolution that the affairs of the debtor should be liquidated by arrangement; that until full payment of the debts the debtor should pay to the trustee the excess of his income above 600*l.* a year; and that as soon as a deed had been executed to carry the resolutions into effect the debtor should, without any further resolution, be discharged from the debts. The trustee under the former liquidation proved for the 3,000*l.*, and voted for the resolutions without the consent of the committee of inspection, and without his vote the resolutions would not have been passed. The registrar having refused to register these resolutions:—

Held, that after the 4,000*l.* mentioned in the former resolutions had been paid and the bond given, the future property of the debtor was released, and that the former liquidation was not pending so as to prevent the debtor from instituting fresh proceedings for liquidation. Russell, Ex parte, Russell, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 255; 44 L. J., Bk. 42; 32 L. T. 4; 23 W. R. 817.

Held, also, that the trustee under the former liquidation had all the rights of a creditor for 3,000*l.*, and that his vote in the second liquidation was effectual whether his voting as he did was a breach of trust or not. Ib.

Held, that the resolutions under the second proceedings were manifestly not passed for the benefit of the creditors, but for the sake of discharging the debtor, and therefore were not binding on dissentient creditors, and that on this ground they ought not to be registered. Ib.

Effect of, on Property of the Debtor.—The creditors of a trader who had filed a liquidation petition resolved that he should have his discharge when they had received 2*s.* in the pound on their debts. The estate realized only half that sum. The debtor went into business again and contracted new debts, and afterwards filed a second liquidation petition:—Held, that, in the absence of positive evidence that the trustee or the creditors under the first petition were aware of the subsequent trading, they were entitled in priority to the new creditors to the assets acquired by the debtor in the course of his trading, to the extent necessary to make up the 2*s.* in the pound. Ford, Ex parte, Caughey, In re, 1 Ch. D. 521; 45 L. J., Bk. 96; 34 L. T. 634; 24 W. R. 590—C. A. Affirming 45 L. J., Bk. 19.

It could not be assumed that the old creditors intended, when they passed their resolution, that the debtor should trade again in order to be able to pay the 2*s.* in the pound. Ib.

At a meeting of creditors held under a petition for liquidation, it was resolved to accept a composition payable by three instalments, the first two of which were to be secured by the acceptances of the debtor, and the third by the acceptances of a surety. The surety required as the condition of giving his acceptances that the debtor should deposit goods to the amount thereof, but this was not known to the creditors. The debtor failed to pay the second instalment, and filed a second petition for liquidation, and the trustee appointed under the second petition applied for an order upon the surety for delivery up of the goods deposited:—Held, that the creditors by accepting the composition had left the debtor absolute owner of the assets, and there was nothing to prevent his depositing them as he had done. Robinson, In re, Burrell, Ex parte, 1 Ch. D. 537; 45 L. J., Bk. 68; 34 L. T. 198; 24 W. R. 353—C. A.

An undischarged liquidating debtor filed a second petition, under which resolutions were passed and registered, empowering the trustee to sell the estate to the debtor for a certain sum, on payment whereof the debtor was to be entitled to his discharge. The sale was made, the debtor paid the money, took over the property, traded therewith and acquired other property. The creditors under the first liquidation established their claim to the whole of the purchase-money. All parties having throughout been aware of the facts:—Held, that the debtor had, by paying the money to the trustee, performed the condition on which he was entitled to his discharge, and that his subsequently-acquired property was free from any claim under the second liquidation. Caughey, Ex parte, 4 Ch. D. 533; 46 L. J., Bk. 18; 36 L. T. 25; 25 W. R. 308.

13. STAMP DUTY ON ASSETS.

Where Assets exceed Debts.—When the assets of a liquidating debtor exceed his debts, stamp duty upon the registration of the special resolution of the creditors is not payable on any amount exceeding the sum estimated as necessary to pay all the creditors in full. Murray, Ex parte, Forrest, In re, 16 L. R., Eq. 215; 42 L. J., Bk. 96; 28 L. T. 678; 21 W. R. 768.

Must be Paid on Debtor's Estimate.—A debtor filed a liquidation petition, and in his statement he estimated his assets at 4,660*l.* The creditors resolved on a liquidation. When the trustee presented the resolution for registration he had made an affidavit in which he stated that he believed the assets would not realize more than 1,000*l.*, and he had only paid stamp duty on 1,000*l.* It did not appear that the value of the assets, as estimated by the debtor, would be more than enough to pay the creditors in full:—Held, that stamp duty must be paid on the amount of the debtor's estimate. Berger, In re, 16 L. R., Eq. 23; 42 L. J., Bk. 97; 29 L. T. 76; 21 W. R. 883.

Refusal of Registration—Return of Stamp Duty.—When the registration of liquidation resolutions is refused, the court has no power to order repayment of the ad valorem duty paid on the presentation of the resolutions for registration. The only mode of obtaining a return of the duty is by a memorial to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. Izard, Ex parte, Moir, In re, 20 Ch. D. 703; 51 L. J., Ch. 939; 47 L. T. 212; 30 W. R. 861—C. A.

14. JURISDICTION OF COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

To restrain Actions—Not before Appointment of Receiver.—Before the Court of Bankruptcy will grant an injunction in any matter a receiver must be appointed. Robinson, In re, 22 L. T. 247.

Before Appointment of Trustee.—The court has power to grant an injunction on the application of the receiver under a liquidation by arrangement, before a trustee has been appointed. Iaao, Ex parte, De Vecchj, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 58; 40 L. J., Bk. 19; 22 L. T. 523; 19 W. R. 38.

Affidavit.—When an injunction is sought to restrain proceedings in actions brought against the debtor who has presented a petition for arrangement, the nature of the debts in the actions sought to be restrained must be set out in the affidavit filed in support of the application. Anon., 22 L. T. 247.

Notice to Creditor.—The court will not, in the case of liquidation upon a debtor's own petition, interfere to restrain creditors from pursuing their legal remedies without proper notice being given to them. Anon., 21 L. T. 685.
A London tradesman was enjoined by the county court of Devon from proceeding with an action to try the right to goods claimed as part of the property of a bankrupt. The injunction order was obtained ex parte without notice to the creditor, and contained no undertaking on the part of the trustee in bankruptcy to proceed to try the right to the goods or to answer damages arising from the delay caused by the injunction:—Held, that the order was irregular. Escherich and Barrett, In re, Malet, Ex parte, 20 W. R. 766.

— Actions of Contract but not of Tort.—A creditor brought an action against his debtor, in which he joined counts in contract for breach of promise in not accepting certain bills of exchange, with count in tort for misrepresentations contained in a letter written by the debtor. The debtor afterwards filed a petition for liquidation, and the creditors agreed to a composition:—Held, that the debtor was entitled to an injunction to restrain the plaintiff from proceeding at law on the counts in contract, but that the court had no jurisdiction to restrain him from proceeding on the counts in tort. Baum, Ex parte, Edwards, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 673; 41 L. J., Bk. 25; 31 L. T. 12.

Held, also, that the creditor having elected to proceed at law, could not receive a composition in respect of what he might fail to recover in the action. Ib.

— Debt incurred by Means of Fraud.—After a liquidating debtor has obtained his discharge, a creditor, whose debt has been incurred by means of fraud, is entitled to sue the debtor at law for the amount of the debt, notwithstanding that the liquidation is not closed, and that he has proved the debt in the liquidation. The Court of Bankruptcy will not, in such a case, restrain the action. Hemming, Ex parte, Chatterton. In re, 13 Ch. D. 163; 41 L. T. 513; 28 W. R. 218—C. A.

If the creditor has received any dividends in the liquidation, the debtor will only remain liable for the unpaid balance of the debt; and, if no dividends have been paid, the debtor, if he pays the creditor in full, is entitled to stand in his place in respect of any dividend which may be declared on the debt in the liquidation. Ib.

Whether s. 15 of the Debtors Act, 1869, applies to a liquidation by arrangement, quære. Ib.

— Ejectment.—The court will, upon the motion of the receiver under a petition for adjudication, restrain an ejectment brought against him since the presentation of the petition with the view of saving expense to the estate. Betts, Ex parte, Figuls, In re, 22 L. T. 245.

When, after a petition for liquidation filed by a debtor, a mortgagee of his farm brings an ejectment to recover possession of the property, the court has jurisdiction to restrain the action until after the first meeting of creditors. Jordan, In re, 18 W. R. 863.

— Action as to Property.—Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to restrain the proceedings in an action, the object of which is in effect to determine whether certain goods form part of a bankrupt's estate. Cohen, Ex parte, Sparke, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 20; 41 L. J., Bk. 17; 25 L. T. 473; 20 W. R. 69—L. J.

A trader, in May, 1870, being in want of money, borrowed of C. 55*l.* on the security of two bills of sale, by which he assigned the whole of his property, worth about 600*l.*, to him. It was agreed verbally between them that these bills of sale should be given up within the period limited for registration, and new bills of sale from time to time substituted for them. This was done twice. The last bills of sale were given on the 20th July, 1870. No fresh advance was made on the occasion of the renewal. On the 9th of August, 1870, the trader filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement, and on the next day the bills of sale of the 20th July were registered. The trustee took possession of the goods comprised in the bills of sale, and the mortgagee brought an action against him to recover possession of the goods:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had jurisdiction to restrain the proceedings in the action, and that an injunction restraining these proceedings was rightly granted. Ib.

Held, also, that the bills of sale were void as against the trustee. Ib.

B. having obtained judgment against J., the sheriff levied upon his goods. He presented a petition for liquidation by arrangement, and the county court granted an interim injunction restraining B. and the sheriff from proceeding further under the execution. Trustees of the bankrupt's estate were appointed, and by mutual arrangement on payment of 25*l.* by the trustees to the sheriff the execution officer was withdrawn, and the court continued the injunction. The trustees proceeded to administer the estate:—Held, that the injunction order be discharged, and that the trustees account for and pay over to B. the net proceeds of the goods sold. Bailey, Ex parte, Jecks, In re, 20 W. R. 76.

— By Bill of Sale Holder.—The holder of a bill of sale took possession of the goods of the debtor, who, a day or two afterwards, filed his petition under the arrangement clauses. He was subsequently appointed receiver under the petition, and upon his appointment withdrew his man from possession, whereupon the trustee entered, and sold the goods as part of the debtor's estate. He then commenced an action against the trustee to recover the proceeds of the sale:—Held, that the trustee was right, and that the court was justified in restraining the further proceeding in the action. Macdonald, Ex parte, Beveridge, In re, 24 L. T. 475; 19 W. R. 717.

— Chancery Suits.—The fact of a debtor before a Court of Bankruptcy being the sole defendant in a chancery suit, is not of itself sufficient ground for an application to a Court of Bankruptcy to stay proceedings in the chancery suit. Hide, Ex parte, Turner, In re, 20 W. R. 508.

The Court of Bankruptcy will not interfere in such a case except when such interference is requisite for protecting the general interests of the creditors. Ib.

— In the Case of Partners.—When one partner of a firm files a petition for liquidation by arrangement, the court has no jurisdiction to restrain an action by a creditor of the firm against all the partners. Isaac, Ex parte, De Vecchj, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 58; 40 L. J., Bk. 19; 22 L. T. 523; 19 W. R. 38.

— English Creditor Suing in Foreign Court.]

—The court will grant an injunction to restrain the proceedings of an English creditor in a foreign court for a debt incurred in England against the debtor who has filed a petition for liquidation. Ormiston, Ex parte, Distin, In re, 24 L. T. 197.

— Action in Ireland.]—The court granted an injunction to restrain the prosecution of an action in Ireland upon a claim, which, if due, would be provable under a deed of inspection executed in December, 1869. Tait, In re, 13 L. R., Eq. 311; 41 L. J., Bk. 32; 20 W. R. 318.

— Action in New York.]—A trader in London, being in difficulties, sent round a letter to his creditors, asking for indulgence; thereupon certain creditors in New York commenced actions in the New York courts in respect of bills accepted, made payable, and dishonoured in London to attach the debts due to him from various New York firms. The trader immediately filed a petition for liquidation, a receiver was appointed, and application made for an injunction to restrain the actions in the New York courts:—Held, that the court would not grant an injunction against the foreign creditors suing abroad. Chapman, In re, 15 L. R., Eq. 75; 42 L. J., Bk. 38; 27 L. T. 628; 21 W. R. 104.

— Foreign Creditor Suing in English Court.]

But the Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to and will restrain a foreign creditor, who is suing the debtor in an English court, from proceeding in his action, after he has had notice of the filing of a petition for liquidation by the debtor. Lovering, Ex parte, Thorpe, In re, 27 L. T. 863; 21 W. R. 327.

— Restraining Debtor.]—At the first meeting of the creditors under a liquidation petition, one person who claimed to be the largest creditor was ejected by force and not allowed to vote. Resolutions were passed by the other creditors present, but the registration of them was opposed by the excluded creditor, and the court refused to allow them to be registered. The debtor soon afterwards commenced an action against the excluded creditor for a balance which he alleged to be due to him. At this time no order had been made for the discharge of a receiver, who had been appointed under the petition:—Held, that there was jurisdiction to restrain the debtor from proceeding with his action. Taylor, Ex parte, Morris, In re, 13 L. R., Eq. 256; 43 L. J., Bk. 103; 30 L. T. 473; 22 W. R. 613.

But the excluded creditor was required to undertake to apply within a fortnight either for an order to call a fresh first meeting of the creditors under the petition, or for an adjudication of bankruptcy against the creditor. Id.

Distresses.]—A distress for rent is not “an execution or legal process” within those terms in s. 13, and therefore where a gas company who, by an express section in its special act, was authorized to recover rent and charges due to it for gas “by the same means as landlords may recover rent in arrear,” after notice of filing a petition for liquidation by arrangement distrained upon the goods of the debtors for a sum due for gas supplied, and the county court judge granted an injunction restraining further proceedings in the distress:—Held, that the injunction had been improperly granted, and that the distress was good against the trustee under the liquidation. Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas Light Company, Ex parte, Fanshaw, In re, 11 L. R., Eq. 615; 40 L. J., Bk. 52; 24 L. T. 639; 19 W. R. 603.

The Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to restrain a distress for rent or other legal proceeding against the debtor or his estate in respect of any debt provable, and to decide the question of the landlord's right to distrain. Russell, Ex parte, 18 W. R. 763.

A wine warehouseman had been in the habit of receiving wine belonging to other persons, in cask and in bottle, and properly storing and warehousing the same. It was also a part of his business to bottle wine for other persons, and to see that it was properly stored away in bins and kept at a proper temperature, so as to bring it to maturity; and also to receive wine for the purpose of having it bottled and forthwith returned. The landlord of the premises where the wines were deposited having levied a distress for rent, and the warehouseman having filed a petition for liquidation, and applied for an injunction restraining the landlord from proceeding to a sale:—Held, that wine in cask or in bottle could not be deemed “perishable,” and that, inasmuch as it could not reasonably be said that the depositing wine in another person's cellar was an incident to the trade carried on by the owner of the wine, the wine was liable to distress, except as to that portion of it which had been sent in for the purpose of being bottled and returned to the owner at a day named. Id.

After a liquidation petition had been filed and a receiver had been appointed, and had taken possession of the debtor's property, the debtor's landlord, without asking the leave of the court, levied a distress for a year's rent due to him. The judge of the county court restrained the landlord from proceeding with his distress, and ordered him to be committed for contempt of court:—Held, that the court could not interfere with the statutory right given to the landlord by the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 34, and the order for committal discharged. Till, Ex parte, Mayhew, In re, 16 L. R., Eq. 97; 42 L. J., Bk. 84; 21 W. R. 574.

Mortgagees.]—L., in June, 1863, for further securing 1,000*l.*, then advanced by C., assigned to C. his household furniture, farming stock, crops, &c., and the deed contained a power of sale in case of default of payment on demand. In February, 1870, C.'s executor, after demand made and default of payment, seized and sold. In March, 1870, L. filed a petition for liquidation, and obtained an order from a county court restraining C.'s executor from taking further proceedings until further orders, and also restraining the incoming tenant from paying the purchase-money of a portion of the property:—Held, that as the property had become the property of the mortgagee, there was no authority or right in the court to interfere with his possession. Croft, Ex parte, Lawrence, In re, 18 W. R. 756.

Under certain circumstances the court will deal with claims between a legal mortgagee and the receiver; as where the debtor, having mortgaged all his property, absconded with the money, the court ordered the property to be sold, and after payment of the principal, interest and costs due to the mortgagee; and the costs of sale, the residue of the purchase-money to be paid into court. Betts, Ex parte, Figula, In re, 22 L. T. 245.

Petition of Right.—A person was adjudicated bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. He subsequently presented a petition of right in the Queen's Bench, praying the recovery of a sum of money due to him from the Lords of the Admiralty. An injunction staying all further proceedings in this petition was issued against him by the Court of Bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. The bankrupt disputed the validity of this order, and proceeded with his petition of right after service of the order:—Held, that he was guilty of a contempt of court in so doing. Davis, In re, 21 L. T. 685; 20 W. R. 766.

Sales by the Sheriff.—The court will, after the presentation of a petition, interfere to restrain a sale of the property of the bankrupt by the sheriff, although the sheriff was in possession prior to the adjudication. Tidey, In re, 21 L. T. 685.

Sequestration.—A sequestration in a chancery suit is "legal process" within the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 13. Hughes, Ex parte, Brown, In re, 12 L. R., Eq. 137; 40 L. J., Bk. 46; 19 W. R. 771.

Where the usual order directing a sale by the sequestrators had been made by the Court of Chancery, and the owner of the property was adjudicated bankrupt before the sale:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had jurisdiction to restrain the sale. Ib.

Effect of Injunction.—It is a matter for the exercise of judicial discretion whether or not an injunction shall be granted under Rule 260. Mills, Ex parte, Manning, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 594; 40 L. J., Bk. 89; 24 L. T. 859; 19 W. R. 912.

M. & B. jointly accepted a bill: before the bill matured M. petitioned for arrangement of his affairs by liquidation. The creditors resolved upon liquidation, and a trustee was appointed. Afterwards the holder of the bill, which had been meanwhile dishonoured, sued M. & B. upon it. They pleaded non-acceptance. Notice of trial was then given; subsequently to which an injunction was granted by the registrar, restraining further proceedings in the trial against M.:—Held, that the application for an injunction ought to have been made at once before pleading in the action; and that the proper order now was merely to restrain execution against M. Ib.

An injunction is merely for the protection of the debtor's estate, and has no effect on the rights of the creditors, inter se. Roche, Ex parte, Hall, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 795; 40 L. J., Bk. 70; 25 L. T. 287; 19 W. R. 1129.

15. TRANSFER FROM ONE DISTRICT TO ANOTHER.

Liquidation proceedings were begun by mistake in a county court, when the debtor lived beyond the limits of its district. The mistake was not discovered till just before the second meeting of creditors, and thereupon they passed a resolution to transfer the proceedings to the proper court. The registrar refused to register the resolutions, on the ground that all the proceedings were a mere nullity. On appeal he was directed to register the resolutions, and the proceedings were transferred. Buckland, Ex parte, 15 L. R., Eq. 221; 42 L. J., Bk. 32; 21 W. R. 291.

An extraordinary resolution presented to the registrar under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, must be properly stamped and also verified by affidavit before the registrar can receive it for the purpose of registering or filing it. Davis, Ex parte, Davis, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 526; 41 L. J., Bk. 69; 27 L. T. 53; 20 W. R. 791.

A direction to transfer the proceedings to another court is part of the resolution in which it is inserted, and has no validity till such resolution has been registered. Ib.

Meetings of Joint and Separate Creditors.

The proceedings under a liquidation petition filed by partners cannot be transferred from the court in which they were commenced to another court, unless a resolution directing the transfer is passed, not only by a general meeting of the joint creditors, but also by separate general meetings of the separate creditors of each partner. Rule 285 applies to all cases in which meetings of creditors have to be held under a liquidation petition by partners, and in all such cases separate meetings must be held of the joint creditors, and of the separate creditors of each partner. Horrocks, Ex parte, Wood, In re, 19 Ch. D. 367; 51 L. J., Ch. 261; 45 L. T. 692; 30 W. R. 298—C. A. Affirming 45 L. T. 559.

16. COSTS OF LIQUIDATION.

Costs a First Charge.—The costs of the receiver under a liquidation petition ought to be paid out of the estate in priority to the costs of the debtor's solicitor. The first charge on the assets is for the costs of realizing them. Royle, Ex parte, Johnson, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 780; 32 L. T. 39; 23 W. R. 908.

A trustee in a liquidation who had paid the costs of the debtor's solicitor out of the assets, which were insufficient to pay both those costs and the costs of the receiver, was ordered to pay the receiver's costs personally. Ib.

Where Debtor adjudicated Bankrupt.—A debtor filed a petition for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement, but no resolution was come to by the creditors. The debtor was subsequently adjudicated bankrupt:—Held, that the costs of the liquidation proceedings must, in the absence of proof that the debtor had acted from corrupt or improper motives, be paid out of the estate. Haves, In re, Jeffery, Ex parte, 9 L. R., Ch. 144; 43 L. J., Bk. 27; 29 L. T. 859; 22 W. R. 287. Affirming 17 L. R., Eq. 61; 43 L. J., Bk. 1; 29 L. T. 433; 22 W. R. 57.

A liquidation by arrangement was rejected by the creditors, but a receiver appointed under the liquidation remained in office when the debtor was adjudged a bankrupt:—Held, that the proceedings in liquidation were pending so as to enable the court, under r. 292 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, to direct the trustee of the bankruptcy to pay the costs of the liquidation. Ib.

Accountant's Charges.—A debtor, prior to filing a petition for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement, employed an accountant to make up his books, and deposited a sum of money with him. Three days afterwards the petition was filed, and the accountant was appointed receiver. The registrar ordered the receiver to pay over the balance of the sum deposited with him after deducting only the taxed amount of his charges as receiver in liquidation, and refused to allow him to make any deduction in respect of his services rendered to the debtor during the three days before the petition was filed:—Held, that the accountant was entitled to a reasonable remuneration for those services, and that the registrar ought to have ascertained what was a reasonable remuneration with the assistance of the taxing master, though it would not be a formal taxation, as charges in respect of services rendered prior to the commencement of the liquidation did not come within the 5th rule of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1871. Banks, Ex parte, Prince, In re, 31 L. T. 530—L. J.

XVIII. COMPOSITION UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1869.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

Distinction between Bankruptcy and Composition.—A bankruptcy and a composition arrangement under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, differ materially from each other. Breslawer v. Brown, 3 App. Cas. 672; 47 L. J., C. P. 729; 39 L. T. 67; 26 W. R. 536.

A resolution to accept a composition and the acceptance of it have not the same effect as a discharge in a regular bankruptcy. Ib.

Provisions for Protection of Debtor.—The provisions for the protection of a debtor in s. 12 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and r. 289 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, do not apply to a composition. Pashler v. Vincent, 8 Ch. D. 825; 27 W. R. 2—C. A.

Jurisdiction to Commit for Contempt.—Sect. 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, does not apply to composition proceedings; and when resolutions for a composition have been registered there is no jurisdiction to examine anyone under that section. Willey, Ex parte, Wright, In re, 23 Ch. D. 118; 52 L. J., Ch. 546; 48 L. T. 380; 31 W. R. 553—C. A. Reversing 48 L. T. 79; 31 W. R. 383.

Distinction between Liquidation and Composition.—The rights of a debtor and his creditors are wholly different in the two cases of liquidation by arrangement under s. 125, and composition under s. 126, though both proceedings are begun by the debtor filing a petition and a declaration of his inability to pay his debts. Birmingham Gaslight and Coke Company, Ex parte, Adams, In re, 11 L. R., Eq. 204; 40 L. J., Bk. 1; 24 L. T. 42; 19 W. R. 123.

Rights of Debtor over Property.—A debtor who has filed a petition for liquidation and has effected a composition with his creditors, has complete dominion over his property, and full power to dispose of it until, upon action taken by his creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, the composition has been set aside and the debtor adjudged a bankrupt: and a purchaser from him is not bound to inquire as to the payment of instalments under the composition. Kearley and Clayton's Contract, In re, 7 Ch. D. 615; 47 L. J., Ch. 474; 38 L. T. 92; 26 W. R. 324.

When a resolution to accept a composition has been duly passed and registered the property of the debtor is not taken from him, or vested in a trustee, or distributed in the same manner as in bankruptcy; and there is no power to deprive secured creditors of their securities. Ib.

Under a statutory power to levy money due by distress and sale a creditor seized his debtor's goods. The debtor then filed in the county court a petition for liquidation and obtained an injunction restraining the creditor from selling. A resolution to accept a composition was afterwards duly passed by the requisite majority of creditors and registered. The county court having made an order on the creditor to deliver the goods to the debtor:—Held, that the order must be discharged. Ib.

Secured Creditor proving for Balance of Debt above assessed Value of Security.—The effect of Rule 272 of the General Rules, 1870, read together with s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), is that in composition proceedings under s. 126, a secured creditor, who proves for the balance of his debt after deducting the assessed value of his security, and afterwards realizes the security, must pay to the debtor any surplus realized above the assessed value, after allowing interest upon the assessed value from the assessment until the realization. Société Générale de Paris v. Geen, 8 App. Cas. 606; 32 W. R. 97.

Composition after Adjudication — Rights of Execution Creditor.—Goods were seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa. The debtor was adjudicated bankrupt. His creditors resolved to accept a composition:—Held, that the resolution did not revert the title to the goods in the debtor; but that the execution creditor was restored to his position. And the Court of Bankruptcy enjoined the debtor from prosecuting an action against the sheriff for not delivering up the goods that had been seized. England, In re, 12 L. R., Eq. 207; 40 L. J., Bk. 65; 24 L. T. 519. Affirmed, 24 L. T. 860; 19 W. R. 914.

2. STAYING BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS.

F. filed a petition for adjudication against P., who shortly afterwards filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition. Before any meeting of creditors had been held, an adjudication was made by consent on F.'s petition, with a stay of proceedings under it till a certain day, before which the creditors duly passed resolutions for accepting a composition, which were afterwards duly registered. Orders had been made, by which the proceedings under the adjudication were from time to time stayed until after the registration:—Held, that r. 266 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, applies to a case where the petition for adjudication precedes the liquidation petition; that the order for the adjudication must be regarded as made under that rule; and that, resolutions for accepting a composition having been duly registered, the adjudication ought to be annulled. Foster, Ex parte, Pooley, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 59; 44 L. J., Bk. 22; 31 L. T. 397; 23 W. R. 145.

3. MEETINGS OF CREDITORS.

Presence of Debtor.—The meaning of s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, is that the debtor must as a rule be personally present at the meetings of his creditors to consider a proposed composition, and personally produce his statement of affairs. It is not sufficient that he should be in a room immediately adjoining that in which the meeting is held, ready to be called in if the creditors wish to examine him, even though the creditors are informed of this. If he is not actually present in the room, he is bound to shew that he was prevented by sickness, or that the creditors, for some other cause satisfactory to them, excused his presence. If he does not do this, any resolutions passed accepting a composition will be invalid and cannot be registered. Grunelins, Ex parte, W. N. (1876), 244, considered. Best, Ex parte, Best & Marshall, In re, 18 Ch. D. 488; 45 L. T. 95—C. A.

Fresh meeting of creditors refused as there had been no slip in the proceedings. Ib.

Presence of Shorthand Writer—Duty of Chairman.—Inasmuch as the answers given by a debtor to questions put to him at the meetings of his creditors under a liquidation petition form part of his statement of affairs, it is essential that a written record of those answers should be made, and therefore a creditor who desires to examine the debtor is entitled to have a shorthand writer present at the meeting to take notes of the examination, though, if several creditors wish to employ a shorthand writer, the meeting has power to limit the number who may be present. It is no part of the duty of the chairman of the meeting to take notes of the debtor's examination. Solomon, Ex parte, Tilley, In re, 20 Ch. D. 281; 51 L. J., Ch. 677; 47 L. T. 57; 30 W. R. 603—C. A.

A meeting of creditors under a liquidation petition refused to allow a shorthand writer to be present on behalf of one of the creditors to take notes of the debtor's examination by him, and no note of the examination was taken. The debtor's written statement of his affairs was, in the opinion of the court, grossly insufficient. Resolutions accepting a composition were passed by the statutory majority:—Held, that the proceedings were irregular, and that the resolutions ought not to be registered. Ib.

Adjourned Second Meeting.—The creditors at a second meeting duly convened in accordance with 126th sect. of the Bankruptcy Act, have power to adjourn such meeting beyond the fourteen days specified in that section. Where, therefore, resolutions for a composition were passed at the first meeting, held on the 7th January, and at the second meeting duly convened to confirm those resolutions, the creditors adjourned it until the 24th, when they passed resolutions for liquidation by arrangement:—Held, that such resolutions should be registered. Knowles, Ex parte, Jones, In re, 44 L. T. 160; 29 W. R. 584.

Composition under s. 28—Notice of Meeting.—The notice of meeting for the purpose of approving of a scheme under s. 28 should state clearly and fairly the nature of the proposals to be brought forward. Straubridge, Ex parte, Hickman, In re, 32 W. R. 173—C. A.

Fresh Meeting.—When the registration of resolutions is refused, but there is no proof of mala fides, and the large majority of the creditors have shewn that they desire to have a composition, a fresh meeting ought to be summoned. And leave may be given to use at the fresh meeting the proofs and proxies which were already on the file. Best, Ex parte (supra), explained. Solomon, Ex parte, Tilley, In re, supra.

4. DEBTOR'S STATEMENT OF AFFAIRS.

Must be produced at each Meeting.—Unless a debtor complies with clause 3 of the 126th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and produces at each meeting of the creditors a statement of his assets and debts, with the names and addresses of his creditors, a resolution to accept a composition cannot be registered. Sidcy, Ex parte, 24 L. T. 401.

Contingent Liabilities.—If an estimate of a contingent debt can be made so as to be inserted in the statement, the statute throws the burden of making it on the debtor. If its amount could not be estimated in any way, the resolution of the creditors agreeing to a composition on other debts could not affect it. Breslau v. Brown, 3 App. Cas. 672; 47 L. J., C. P. 729; 39 L. T. 67; 26 W. R. 536. Affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, nom. Wilson v. Breslau, 2 C. P. D. 314; 46 L. J., C. P. 593; 37 L. T. 24; 25 W. R. 818, which reversed the decision of the Common Pleas Division, 36 L. T. 18.

W. had given a bond as surety for B. for the payment of any costs and damages which might be found to be due from B. in an admiralty suit in which he was defendant. While the suit was proceeding he filed a petition for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement or composition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. In his statement of affairs he inserted the name and address of W. as a creditor for a certain sum of money lent to him, and the creditors resolved to accept a composition. W. claimed and proved a larger debt due, signed the composition deed, and received the composition agreed upon, no mention being made of the contingent liability on the admiralty bond. After the composition had been paid he was called upon to pay the amount secured by the bond:—Held, that an action could be maintained against B. for the amount paid on the bond. Ib.

Bill of Exchange—Holder unknown.—The requirements of the Bankruptcy Act, as to the entry in a statement of affairs of a debt due upon a bill of exchange, where the holder is unknown to the debtor, are substantially complied with if it can be proved that the entry was such that notices sent in accordance therewith were actually received by the creditor. Wood v. Bates, 46 J. P. 280.

Debtor in Partnership—Solvent Partner.—A debtor who carries on one business alone, and another in partnership, must when he files a liquidation petition (his partner being solvent) set forth in his statement of affairs the assets and liabilities of the partnership business in detail, as well as his own separate assets and liabilities;

i. e. in each case he must give the names of the creditors, with the amount due to each, and the names of the debtors, with the amount due from each. He must also state the account between himself and his partner, so as to shew the balance (if any) due to him. If he does not give these particulars, his statement of affairs will be insufficient, and any liquidation or composition resolutions founded on it cannot be registered. If for any reason it is impossible for the debtor to make such a statement of the affairs of the partnership, he cannot have a liquidation of his affairs by arrangement or a composition, but must submit to bankruptcy. If without setting out the above particulars in his statement of affairs, the debtor refers (in such a way as to incorporate it with his statement) to a report made by an accountant which contains the necessary information, and which is produced to the meetings of creditors:—Semble, that this would be a sufficient statement. Amor, Ex parte, Amor, In re, 21 Ch. D. 594; 52 L. J., Ch. 138; 48 L. T. 16; 31 W. R. 282—C. A.

Where Statement insufficient.—The meaning of r. 301 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, is, that, on the presentation of a special resolution for liquidation by arrangement to the registrar for registration, the passing of the resolution is conclusive evidence that the debtor's statement of affairs is sufficient, and the registrar has no power to inquire into the sufficiency of the statement. Webb, In re, Walter, Ex parte, 2 Ch. D. 326; 45 L. J., Bk. 105; 34 L. T. 701; 24 W. R. 834—C. A.

If, however, it is clear ex facie that the statement produced by the debtor is one which the majority of the creditors could not have accepted bonâ fide in the interest of the creditors, this may be taken as an objection to the registration of the resolution, but it cannot be raised after registration. Ib.

If the statement is a fraudulent one, the proper course for a dissentient creditor to take is to move, after the resolution has been registered, to have the registration vacated. Ib.

Creditors who have not been heard before the registrar on an application for the registration of resolutions, or before the chief judge on an application to reverse the order for registration, have a locus standi to appeal from the order of the chief judge. Ib.

The registrar may register resolutions for liquidation, omitting from them, with the debtor's consent, a resolution for an immediate discharge. Ib.

Effect of Insufficiency.—If for any reason a debtor who files a liquidation petition is unable to produce a proper statement of his affairs, he cannot have a liquidation by arrangement or a composition, but must submit to be made a bankrupt. Solomon, Ex parte, Tilley, In re, 20 Ch. D. 281; 51 L. J., Ch. 677; 47 L. T. 57; 30 W. R. 603—C. A.

5. OMISSION TO INSERT CREDITOR'S NAME AND DEBT IN STATEMENT OF AFFAIRS.

Omission of one Debt.—Under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, a debtor must, in order to bind a non-assenting creditor by a composition, shew in his statement the whole of every debt due to the creditor, so that if the debtor states one and omits another of the debts, the creditor is not bound in respect of the debt stated. Macdonald v. Chesney, 50 L. J., Q. B. 87—C. A.

Wrong Amount—Too little.—On the 24th of April, B. in an action recovered judgment for 53*l.* and costs. On the 25th of April the debtor filed a liquidation petition. In his statement of affairs he inserted B. as a creditor for the 53*l.*, but made no mention of the costs. The first meeting of the creditors was held on the 19th of May. B. attended and proved a debt of 203*l.*, being the 53*l.*, and 150*l.*, the estimated amount of the costs. The meeting was adjourned to the 29th of May, when the creditors resolved to accept a composition, B. voting in the minority. On the 8th of June the costs of the action were taxed at 147*l.*. On the 9th of June B. gave notice to the debtor that he withdrew his proof, and the same day he issued execution against the debtor for the judgment debt and costs. On the 11th of June the second meeting of the creditors was held, and B. then gave written notice that he withdrew his proof, without prejudice to again proving on a subsequent occasion. The chairman refused to take the proof off the file. The composition resolutions were confirmed. B. took objections to the resolutions, and opposed their registration, but the registration was made:—Held, that, by reason of the insufficient statements of B.'s debt in the debtor's statement, B. was not bound by the composition, and that he was not estopped by his conduct from enforcing his execution against the debtor. Lang, Ex parte, 5 Ch. D. 971; 37 L. T. 449; 26 W. R. 68—C. A.

A liquidating debtor, in his statement of affairs, by mistake inserted the amount of the debt due by him to one of his creditors as 17*l.*, the amount being really 17*l.* 15*s.*:—Held, that the creditor was not bound by composition resolutions which were passed by the statutory majority, but to which he did not assent. Engelhardt, Ex parte, Engelhardt, In re, 23 Ch. D. 706; 52 L. J., Ch. 748; 49 L. T. 281; 31 W. R. 802—C. A.

By a mortgage deed of an advowson, the mortgagor covenanted to pay the sum of 2,200*l.*, part of the purchase-money remaining on mortgage, at a specified date, with interest at 5 per cent. if the same should remain unpaid at that date. The interest being in arrear, the mortgagee, on the 17th July, 1882, issued a writ for the amount claimed under the mortgage deed, and upon the 29th July signed judgment for 2,285*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for debt, interest and costs. Upon the 14th November the mortgagor filed a liquidation petition under which composition resolutions were passed, and registered on the 6th January, 1883. In the statement of affairs the mortgagee was entered as a fully-secured creditor for 2,317*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, for debt and interest at 4 per cent., upon the judgment to the date of the petition. A writ of sequestration was issued at the instance of the mortgagee on the 27th January, 1883, and on the 15th March following the bishop was absolutely restrained from taking any further proceedings thereunder:—Held, on appeal, that the rights of the mortgagee under the mortgage deed not having been extinguished by the judgment, interest at 5 per cent. was due under the mortgage, and that therefore the debt was inaccurately set out in the statement of affairs, and the mortgagee was not bound by the composition resolutions. Oxford (Bishop), Ex parte, Sneyd,

— Injunction—Delay.—After a delay of four months from the time when the debtor first became aware of a mistake, the court will not restrain the creditor from proceeding with an action for the debt, even for the purpose of enabling the debtor to summon a general meeting of his creditors, under r. 306, in order to obtain their assent to the correction of the mistake in the statement of affairs. Engelhardt, Ex parte, Engelhardt, In re, 23 Ch. D. 706; 52 L. J., Ch. 748; 49 L. T. 281; 31 W. R. 802—C. A.

Per Fry, L. J.:—Whether, having regard to the negative words of s. 126, an injunction could be in any case granted for such a purpose, quare. Ib.

— Too much.—The plaintiff entered into a composition with his creditors, under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. In his statement of affairs presented at the meeting of creditors, he set down the defendants as his creditors for a certain amount, but set down a second debt really due to them as due to some one else. The defendants attended the meeting, tendered proof of the second debt, which was admitted, took part in the discussion, opposed the resolution for a composition, and when it was carried, declined to accept the amount of the composition:—Held, that the defendants were not bound by the resolution for composition as to this debt, because the plaintiff had not complied with the requirements of s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, that there had been no waiver by the defendants, and that the case was governed by Lang, Ex parte (5 Ch. D. 971). Oppenheim v. Jackson, 48 L. J., C. P. 441; 41 L. T. 193. Affirmed, 49 L. J., C. P. 216—C. A.

Bills of Exchange—Holder not bound.—The acceptor of two bills of exchange, which had not to his knowledge been negotiated, took proceedings for liquidation by composition, and in his list of creditors entered the drawer as his creditor for the amount of the bills, without stating that the debt was due on bills of exchange. The bills had, in fact, been negotiated, and the holder received no notice of the meeting of creditors:—Held, that the holder was not bound by the resolutions at the meeting, and was entitled to pursue his remedies irrespectively of them. Mathewes, Ex parte, Angel, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 304; 44 L. J., Bk. 128; 32 L. T. 631; 23 W. R. 730.

The resolution for a composition was confirmed on the 8th of October, 1874; the holder commenced an action on one of the bills on the 5th of November, and the first instalment of the composition was payable on the 9th of January, 1875:—Held, that it was too late after this for the debtor to have time allowed him to remedy the mistake under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126. Ib.

Name of Drawer inserted—Subsequent Indorsement by Holder to Drawer and his Partner.—A debtor under a composition inserted in his statement of affairs the names of certain creditors as drawers of certain bills of exchange. The bills were actually held by a bank, but were after the date of the petition indorsed to a firm consisting of the drawers and another person, which firm sued upon them:—Held, that the composition was a good defence to the action. Forwood v. Walker, 36 L. T. 21.

Amount of Bills given for Debt inserted, but not Amount of Debt—Bills dishonoured.—Being indebted to the plaintiff for goods sold to the amount of 143l. 12s. 9d., the defendants gave him bills for the sum, less discount, but adding interest, so that the amount of the bills was 142l. 7s. 3d. These bills were dishonoured. The defendants compounded with their creditors under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and, in the statement of debts, entered the amount of the debt due to the plaintiff, a non-assenting creditor, as 142l. 7s. 3d., viz., the amount of the bills. The plaintiff sued for 143l. 12s. 9d., the original debt. The defendants pleaded the composition:—Held, by Lopes, J., that the original cause of action was suspended but not satisfied by the bills, and revived when they were dishonoured; that, therefore, at the date of the composition, the amount of the debt due to the plaintiff was 143l. 12s. 9d., and as it was not correctly shewn in the statement, the composition was no bar to his action. Burliner v. Royle, 5 C. P. D. 354; 43 L. T. 254; 41 J. P. 831.

Insertion of a Creditor's Debt—Non-assenting Creditor claiming a larger Sum—Default of Debtor and Trustee.—At a meeting of creditors in a liquidation under ss. 125 and 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, a statement of assets and debts was produced by the debtor, the defendant, in which the plaintiffs were inserted as creditors for 150l., and it was resolved that a stated composition payable in four instalments at stated intervals from the date of the registration of the resolutions, should be accepted and be secured by the joint and several promissory notes of the defendant and a named surety, and that X. be appointed a trustee to receive and distribute the composition notes, and such resolutions were duly registered. The plaintiffs did not attend the meeting, but had notice of the resolutions, nor did they assent to the amount alleged in the defendant's statement to be due to them, but claimed and sent in a proof for a larger sum. After registration of the resolutions, the defendant delivered to the trustee the joint and several promissory notes of himself and the surety for the composition instalments payable at the stated periods, filled up with the correct amounts in all cases where the creditors were satisfied with the defendant's statement of such amounts, which notes were distributed to such creditors and were duly honoured. The plaintiffs, however, claiming a larger sum than the debt admitted to be due, the notes intended for them were delivered in blank to the trustee, who had authority from the defendant and the surety to fill them up with the correct amount of the composition instalments, when the amount of the debt was settled, and to hand them so filled up to the plaintiffs. After receiving these notes, the trustee by letter requested from the plaintiffs particulars of their claim in order to the completion of the composition notes, in reply to which the plaintiffs referred him to their solicitors for information, to whom, however, no application was ever made, nor were any other steps taken to adjust the debt, nor were the notes ever filled up or tendered to the plaintiffs, nor was any tender or offer to pay the composition upon the admitted debt of 150*l.* ever made. In an action by the plaintiffs for the amount claimed by them to be due from the defendant, Hawkins, J., before whom it was tried without a jury, found as facts, that the instalments of the composition were due to those bound by it before action brought; that the trustee was willing to fill up and deliver the notes to the plaintiffs for the composition on 150*l.*, but not on any larger amount unless agreed on, which it never was; that the plaintiffs did nothing to prevent the defendant or the trustee from filling up and tendering to the plaintiffs the notes as a composition upon 150*l.*, and never waived the performance of anything it was incumbent upon the defendant or the trustee to do, unless the facts before mentioned amounted in law to such waiver, which the learned judge held they did not. After argument before him on further consideration, it was further held, by Hawkins, J., that owing to the defendant's omission to tender to the plaintiffs, or to deliver to the trustee, the composition to which he admitted the plaintiffs were entitled, the plaintiffs were in a position to maintain the action for the full amount of their admitted original debt, and judgment for that amount (150*l.*), and costs was given for them accordingly. Tea Company v. Jones, 43 L. T. 255.

Held, also, that it is not enough for a debtor to say to his creditor, "I am ready and willing to pay your composition upon the debt I admit, if you are content to receive it as a composition upon the amount due to you," or "when we can agree upon the sum upon which the composition is to be calculated." To be discharged from liability for debts included in his statement, he must pay or tender unconditionally to his creditor the composition payable upon the admitted debt, giving the creditor the opportunity of accepting or rejecting it, and failing to do so, he cannot in an action by the creditor avail himself of the composition arrangement, nor is the merely handing blank notes to the trustee to be filled up by the amount he should deem to be correct any discharge of the obligation cast upon the debtor. Ib.

Waiver by Creditor.—The conditions respecting the statement of the names and addresses of creditors, which a debtor seeking to obtain a composition under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, is bound to make, are for the benefit of the creditors, not of the debtor, and consequently may be waived by any creditor. Breslauer v. Brown, 3 App. Cas. 672; 47 L. J., C. P. 729; 39 L. T. 67; 26 W. R. 536.

Amount Uncertain—Reference.—Upon composition proceedings under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the names of the plaintiffs were inserted in the statement of the debtor produced at the meetings, as "Creditors claiming to hold security," and the amount of their claim was stated to be 94,000*l.* To this was appended a note: "Under legal advice, this claim was resisted, and became the object of an action and reference, which reference is now pending." After the resolutions accepting a composition had been passed, the award was made by the arbitrator, by which he found for the plaintiffs in the action, with damages 40*s.*, and, as to the matters in difference, that a sum of 3,320*l.* was due to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs having brought an action on the award, the defendant set up the composition resolutions as a defence:—Held, that the above facts did not bring the case within s. 126, and consequently that the plaintiffs were not barred from proceeding at law to recover the full sums awarded. Melhado v. Watson, 2 C. P. D. 281; 46 L. J., C. P. 502; 36 L. T. 724; 25 W. R. 562. Reversing 46 L. J., C. P. 349; 36 L. T. 18.

6. EXAMINATION OF DEBTOR.

Prima facie Case of Fraud.—After the creditors of a debtor have resolved to accept a composition, and the resolutions have been registered, the court has jurisdiction, if a dissentient creditor makes out a prima facie case of fraud on the part of the debtor, to order him to be examined as to his affairs. Jones, Ex parte, 16 L. R., Eq. 386; 23 L. T. 679; 21 W. R. 768.

A mere categorical denial by the debtor, unsupported by any other evidence, of the charges of fraud, is not a sufficient answer to the prima facie case made against him. Ib.

Declining to Answer without Solicitor's Advice.—At a meeting of creditors under a petition for liquidation the solicitor of a creditor asked the debtor whether a certain letter was in his handwriting. He replied that it was not. He was then asked whether it had been written by his authority. His solicitor thereupon asked to see it. This was refused, and the debtor, under the advice of his solicitor, declined to answer the question, and the examination was dropped, without the nature of the letter being made known to the meeting. Resolutions for accepting a composition were then passed:—Held, that there had been no such refusal by the debtor to give information as would render the resolutions invalid. Mackenzie, Ex parte, Helliwell, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 88; 44 L. J., Bk. 14; 31 L. T. 421; 23 W. R. 121. Affirming 20 L. R., Eq. 758; 44 L. J., Bk. 117; 33 L. T. 59.

7. RESOLUTIONS.

a. Generally.

Where in Debtor's Favour.—A creditor who votes for a composition with a debtor is bound to vote bona fide for the benefit of the creditors, and not for the benefit of the debtor. Cobb, Ex parte, Sedley, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 727; 42 L. J., Bk. 63; 29 L. T. 123; 21 W. R. 777.

A creditor voted at a first meeting of creditors for a resolution for liquidation by arrangement. A requisite majority not having been obtained, the resolution was not registered; but the registrar, on the application of the debtor, directed a fresh first meeting to be called. Before that meeting was held the creditor sold his debt to T. for 10*s.* in the pound. At the meeting he, by T.'s direction, voted for a composition of 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, and by his vote the resolution was carried:—Held, that, inasmuch as it was clear that the vote in respect of T.'s debt was given for the benefit of the debtor, and not of the creditors, the vote ought to be rejected, and the resolution was accordingly set aside. Ib.

tion has been obtained by the vote of a creditor who has purchased the debt, in respect of which he votes, in order to vote in favour of the composition, such a fraud taints the whole of the proceedings for a composition, and the court will make an order of adjudication of bankruptcy against the debtor on the petition of a duly-qualified creditor in spite of the pendency of the proceedings for a composition. Fore Street Warehouse Company, Ex parte, Burrs, In re, 30 L. T. 624—L. J.

— Resolutions Voidable, not Void.—P. having filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, his creditors, except G., resolved to accept a composition of 5s. in the pound, payable by instalments. W. became surety for the composition, and P. assigned his property to W. by a duly-registered bill of sale. W. bought the debt due to G., and was thereby enabled to vote in his name at the second meeting of creditors. The resolutions for composition had not been set aside. The plaintiff having obtained judgment against P., seized a stack of hay comprised in the bill of sale.—Held, that the resolutions not having been set aside, the bill of sale could not be impeached, and the plaintiff could not enforce his execution against the property assigned to W. Seymour v. Coulson, 5 Q. B. D. 359; 49 L. J., Q. B. 604—C. A.

When a Resolution becomes Extraordinary.]

—A resolution accepting a composition does not become an extraordinary one until it has been confirmed at the second meeting of the creditors, and it has no validity whatever until it is registered. McLaren, Ex parte, McCollin, In re, 16 Ch. D. 534; 50 L. J., Ch. 203; 44 L. T. 36; 29 W. R. 389—C. A.

Composition under s. 28.—In giving or withholding the approval of the court to a composition with creditors, accepted by the proper majority under s. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the judge is exercising a judicial discretion, and is bound to consider the objections brought before him by a dissentient creditor, and to give his decision judicially upon sufficient reasons. Merchant Banking Company of London, or Murray, Ex parte, Durham, In re, 16 Ch. D. 623; 50 L. J., Ch. 606; 44 L. T. 358; 29 W. R. 363—C. A. Reversing 43 L. T. 799.

The power of the court under s. 28 is not limited, as in the case of a composition accepted by the resolution of two meetings of creditors under s. 126, to setting aside the resolution on the ground of fraud in the proceedings. Ib.

The propriety of the resolutions is to be judged of by the court upon the facts as they appear at the time when its approval is sought, not as they appeared at the time when the resolutions were passed. Ib.

The exercise of the discretion by the judge is subject to appeal, but the Court of Appeal ought not to interfere unless it is clearly shewn that the judge has exercised his discretion wrongly. Ib.

The fact that by composition resolutions under s. 28 no security was given for some of the instalments, and the management of the assets was intrusted to a debtor who for several years previously had indulged in recklessly extravagant refusing to give the approval of the court to the resolutions. Ib.

Registration of Resolutions after Adjudication.—The registrar has no power to register a resolution for liquidation or composition after an adjudication of bankruptcy has been made; unless the adjudication has been made under r. 266 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, in which case the adjudication is intended to be merely ancillary to the liquidation. Davis, Ex parte (2 Ch. D. 231), overruled. Milward, Ex parte, Stanley, In re, 16 Ch. D. 256; 50 L. J., Ch. 166; 14 L. T. 73; 29 W. R. 167—C. A.

After an ordinary adjudication of bankruptcy has been made (not an adjudication merely for the purpose of protecting the debtor's property pending proceedings for liquidation or composition) the creditors have no power to pass resolutions for either liquidation or composition, and such resolutions if passed will be inoperative. Milward, Ex parte (supra), explained and followed. Bennett, Ex parte, Ward, In re, 16 Ch. D. 541; 44 L. T. 38; 29 W. R. 343—C. A.

The creditors of a bankrupt, at a meeting held pursuant to s. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, passed resolutions for the payment of the costs incurred in the bankruptcy proceedings; for the acceptance of a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound; and for the annulment of the bankruptcy upon such payments being made. The bankrupt's father was the principal creditor. There were no assets. The confirmation of the resolutions was opposed, and the county court judge refused to sign them, considering that they had been passed out of sympathy with the debtor, and not bona fide in the interests of the creditors.—Held, upon appeal that the motive of sympathy was a legitimate one, provided it did not injure anyone else, and that, as there was no probability of the creditors getting more than 2s. 6d. in the pound out of the estate, the resolutions ought to be confirmed and registered. Hickman, Ex parte, Tamlyn, In re, 48 L. T. 913.

In giving its approval to resolutions for a scheme of settlement under s. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the court will consider not only the pecuniary interests of the creditors, but the whole of the circumstances, and if there are any grounds for suspecting that any discreditable transactions have taken place, though there is no proof of fraud, the court will not approve resolutions which would have the effect of preventing a full investigation. The functions of the court in this respect are different under s. 28 from those under ss. 125, 126. Strauchbridge, Ex parte, Hickman, In re, 32 W. R. 173—C. A.

Amount of Composition reduced by Extraordinary Resolution.—Creditors have power by means of an extraordinary resolution to reduce the amount payable under a composition; and creditors who had agreed to the original resolution, but dissented from the resolution for the reduction, are nevertheless bound by the latter resolution when duly passed. Radcliffe Investment Company, Ex parte, Glover, In re, 17 L. R. Eq. 121; 43 L. J., Bk. 4; 29 L. T. 694; 22 W. R. 235.

Registration closes Proceedings.]—After the registration of composition resolutions the composition proceedings are no longer pending. Pashler v. Vincent, 8 Ch. D. 825; 27 W. R. 2—C. A.

b. Validity with reference to Amount of Assets and Dividends.

Small Amount of Composition.]—The statement of a debtor who had filed a liquidation petition shewed that his debts amounted to 1,257l., and that his assets were worth 371l. The creditors resolved to accept a composition of 1s. in the pound, to be paid in twelve months. One creditor opposed the registration of the resolution:—Held, that, having regard to the amount of the assets, the resolution could not have been passed bonâ fide, and that registration of it had been rightly refused. Page, In re, Page, Ex parte, 2 Ch. D. 323; 45 L. J., Bk. 1; 34 L. T. 638; 24 W. R. 502—C. A.

When the registrar is satisfied, either from the small amount of composition offered or otherwise, that resolutions accepting a composition have been passed in the interest of the debtor, and not for the benefit of the creditors, it is his duty to refuse to register them, even though no creditor opposes the registration. Resolutions accepting a composition of 2d. in the pound, payable in three months, and not secured in any way, were passed by the statutory majority of a debtor's creditors. His statement of affairs shewed that he had no assets:—Held, that the resolutions must have been passed in the interest of the debtor, not of the creditors; that they could not therefore bind the dissentient creditors; and that the registrar was right in refusing to register them, though no creditor opposed the registration. Williams, Ex parte, Williams, In re, 18 Ch. D. 495; 50 L. J., Ch. 741; 45 L. T. 96—C. A.

The statement of affairs of a debtor, who had filed a liquidation petition, shewed that his debts amounted to 1,293l., and that he had no assets. At the first meeting of his creditors he admitted in answer to questions put to him that he was in the receipt of a salary of 5l. a week. The creditors resolved by the proper statutory majority to accept a composition of 6d. in the pound, to be paid within a month after the registration of the resolutions, and to be secured to the satisfaction of the chairman of the meeting. The resolutions were confirmed at the second meeting:—Held, that the proceedings were an abuse of the process of the court, and that the resolutions ought not to be registered. Ball, Ex parte, Parnell, In re, 20 Ch. D. 670; 51 L. J., Ch. 911; 47 L. T. 213; 30 W. R. 738—C. A.

The question in all such cases is whether the creditors, in accepting the composition offered, have acted bonâ fide, i.e., in the interest of the creditors, and not merely with a view to benefit the debtor. Hudson, Ex parte, Walton, In re, 22 Ch. D. 773; 52 L. J., Ch. 584; 47 L. T. 674; 31 W. R. 372—C. A.

There is no hard and fast line as to the amount of composition which may be accepted, except that the sum must not be so small that no reasonable man would accept it, for in such a case the amount would in itself be evidence of want of bona fides. Id.

The creditors of a debtor whose debts amounted to 304l. 18s., and whose assets were only 8l. 13s., resolved to accept a composition of 3d. in the pound, the payment of which was to be secured by one of the creditors. The registration of the resolutions was opposed by a dissentient creditor:—Held, that, having regard to the small amount of the composition, the resolutions must have been passed solely in the interest of the debtor; that they were an abuse of the process of the court, and that they ought not to be registered. Russell, Ex parte, Robins, In re, 22 Ch. D. 778; 47 L. T. 675; 31 W. R. 442—C. A. Reversing 47 L. T. 338.

Held, that resolutions accepting a composition of 1s. in the pound ought to be registered, the debtor having no assets, but the payment of the composition being secured by a third person. Id.

The statement of affairs produced by a debtor, who had filed a liquidation petition, shewed that his debts amounted to 2,500l., and his assets to 70l. The creditors at the first meeting resolved to accept a composition of 6d. in the pound, to be paid within one month after the registration of the resolutions, but without any security. These resolutions were subsequently confirmed. A judgment creditor having opposed the registration:—Held, that the proceedings were irregular, and that the resolutions not having been bonâ fide in the interest of the creditors, ought not to be registered. Pulbrook, Ex parte, Lloyd, In re, 48 L. T. 128.

c. Vacating or Setting Aside.

Fraud or Malpractices.]—The court will not rescind the registration of resolutions for composition on the ground of mis-statement of assets by the debtor except upon evidence sufficient to convict him of a misdemeanor under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, sub-s. 6. Law, In re, Hart, Ex parte, 47 L. J., Bk. 88.

Delay by Debtor.]—A debtor will not be allowed, by delaying registration of the resolutions, to postpone payment of a composition which has been accepted by his creditors. Accordingly a delay of more than three weeks, owing to non-payment by inadvertence of the fees for stamps, in obtaining the registration of resolutions for a composition, is ground for vacating, on the application of a creditor, the registration. Whitnall, Ex parte, Whitnall, In re, 20 Ch. D. 438; 46 L. T. 775.

8. PROOF OF DEBTS.

No Preferential Debts.]—The Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 32, with respect to the proof of preferential debts, has no application to the case of a composition. Walter, Ex parte, Heath, In re, 15 L. R., Eq. 412; 42 L. J., Bk. 49; 21 W. R. 523.

Unascertained Debt.]—When a compounding debtor puts in his statement an amount (by estimate) for an unascertained debt, he must tender the composition on such amount. The creditor is not bound to prove his debt if he is content with the amount set down, unless he desires to vote. Peacock, Ex parte, Duffield, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 682; 42 L. J., Bk. 78; 28 L. T. 830; 21 W. R. 755.

A claim for untaxed costs in an action is a provable debt, and is within the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126. Ib.

A debtor who made a composition with his creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, was liable to a creditor for payment of untaxed costs in an action, and the debtor inserted them in his statement at an estimated amount. The costs were not taxed at the time appointed for payment of the composition; and accordingly the debtor did not tender the composition to the creditor. The creditor then signed judgment, and had the costs taxed, and levied execution against the goods of the debtor for the whole amount. The debtor applied for an injunction to restrain the creditor:—Held, that the debtor ought to have paid the composition on the estimated amount of the debt, and that the creditor was entitled to proceed with his execution notwithstanding the composition. Ib.

Plaintiffs' Costs up to Passing of confirming Resolution.—A plaintiff in the action was allowed to add to his debt his costs in the action up to the day when the confirmatory resolution accepting the composition was passed. Härtel, Ex parte, Thorpe, In re, 42 L. J., Bk. 34; 27 L. T. 863.

Creditor whose Name Omitted.—A creditor whose name and the amount of whose debt are not entered in the statement of a compounding debtor, and who is, therefore, not bound by the composition, may nevertheless take advantage of the composition, and prove his debt, and claim a share in the fund in the hands of the trustee. Curuc, Ex parte, Curuc, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 308; 44 L. J., Bk. 67; 32 L. T. 318; 23 W. R. 459.

A resolution having been passed at a meeting of creditors to accept a composition from a debtor, the debtor paid a sum of money to the trustee which was more than sufficient to pay the composition to all the creditors whose names and debts were entered in his statement. Other creditors who were not bound by the composition had previously filed a bill in chancery against the debtor and certain persons, charging them with a breach of trust. They did not come in and prove this debt in the composition, but simply gave notice to the trustee of their claim. After all the creditors who were bound by the composition had been paid, the debtor applied to the court to order the trustee to pay back the surplus of the fund to him:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to entertain the application under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 72, and to take the necessary accounts between the trustee and the debtor. Ib.

Held, that the plaintiffs in the chancery suit had a right to take advantage of the composition, although they were not bound by it, and that the court would not make an order as to the disposal of the surplus until a decree had been made in the chancery suit. Ib.

After the registration of simple composition resolutions (by which no trustee is appointed for the receipt and distribution of the composition and no security is given for its payment) the proceedings are at an end, and the Court of Bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to entertain an application by a creditor, who was omitted from the debtor's statement of affairs, and who has taken no part in the proceedings, for the admis-

Composition under s. 28—Locus standi of Bankrupt to apply to reduce Proof of a Creditor.—After the creditors of a bankrupt have resolved, under s. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to accept a composition offered by the bankrupt, the bankrupt, though undischarged, has a locus standi to apply to the court to reduce the amount of the proof of a creditor, and the mere fact that the proof has been upon the file of the proceedings in the bankruptcy for upwards of a year does not estop the bankrupt from making the application. Bacon or Bond, Ex parte, Bond, In re, 17 Ch. D. 447; 44 L. T. 834; 29 W. R. 574—C. A. Affirming S. C., 43 L. T. 798; 29 W. R. 292.

Rejection of Proofs by Trustee.—The trustee appointed under r. 279 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, to receive and distribute a composition, has no power to reject in toto the proof of a creditor who is included in the debtor's statement. Botting, Ex parte, Bostel, In re, 19 L. R., Eq. 261; 44 L. J., Bk. 47; 31 L. T. 736; 23 W. R. 536.

But, if the amount of the debt is in dispute between the debtor and the creditor, the trustee is entitled to an inquiry to ascertain what is really due. Ib.

9. EFFECT OF COMPOSITION.

Composition may be pleaded in bar of Actions.—A resolution under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, by the requisite majority of creditors to accept in satisfaction from the debtor a composition upon the debts due, payable at a future time or by instalments, may be pleaded in bar to an action for the original debt, brought before any default on the debtor's part by a creditor bound by the resolution. Slater v. Jones, Capes v. Ball, 8 L. R., Ex. 186; 42 L. J., Ex. 122; 29 L. T. 56; 21 W. R. 815.

Effect of Joint Composition on Joint and Several Liability.—The acceptance of a composition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 126 and 127, in respect of the joint debt due by the makers of a joint and several promissory note, is not a satisfaction of the separate liability of one of the makers on the note. Simpson v. Henning, 10 L. R., Q. B. 406; 44 L. J., Q. B. 143; 33 L. T. 508—Ex. Ch.

The plaintiff, being the holder of a joint and several promissory note of the defendant and H., sued the defendant on the note. The defendant pleaded that the note was given by him and H. to the plaintiff on account of a partnership debt; and that afterwards the defendant and H. as partners, being unable to pay their debts, instituted proceedings, which took place under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 126 and 127, according to the forms given in the schedule; and, thereupon, an extraordinary resolution of the creditors of the defendant and H., that a composition of 8s. 6d. in the pound, payable by instalments, should be accepted in satisfaction of the debts due from them to their creditors, was passed; that the provisions of the composition became binding on the plaintiff and on all the creditors of the defendant and H., and that the debts due to the plaintiff and to all other creditors became and were satisfied within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 126 and 127:—Held, that the acceptance of a composition on the joint debt under s. 126 was not a satisfaction of the defendant's separate liability, and, therefore, that the plea was bad. Ib.

On Debt fraudulently Contracted.]—When an attorney brought an action, knowing he had no authority from the plaintiff, and on judgment for the defendant a rule was granted ordering him, the attorney, to pay the defendant's costs, and then such attorney, under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, entered into a composition with his creditors:—Held, that he was not discharged from such payment, as the case was one of fraud within 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 49. Jenkins v. Feraday, 7 L. R., C. P. 358; 41 L. J., C. P. 152; 27 L. T. 37; 20 W. R. 781.

A creditor who alleges that his debt has been contracted fraudulently by his debtor may, after receiving a composition from him under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, commence an action against him for the balance of the debt, without being obliged to prove to the Court of Bankruptcy a prima facie case of fraud. Halford, Ex parte, Jacobs, In re, 19 L. R., Eq. 436; 44 L. J., Bk. 53; 32 L. T. 103; 23 W. R. 442.

On Debt, Proof of which has been Disallowed.]—Upon a liquidation by arrangement, a meeting of creditors, by resolution passed, agreed to accept a composition. This resolution was duly confirmed at a second meeting. A creditor present at both meetings sent in a claim for a debt and law costs which was not allowed. No circular and tender of the composition were sent to him as to the other creditors. The creditor then brought an action in the county court to recover the amount of his claim, but the debtor obtained an injunction from the county court sitting in bankruptcy restraining execution:—Held, that the resolution was regular, and must be enforced. Hemingway, Ex parte, Howard, In re, 26 L. T. 298; 20 W. R. 572.

On Rights against Co-Debtors and Sureties.]—When resolutions formally agreed to by creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 125, 126, contain no reservation of any rights against co-debtors or sureties, the reservation of such rights by a subsequent deed of composition is inoperative. Wilson v. Lloyd, 16 L. R., Eq. 60; 42 L. J., Ch. 559; 28 L. T. 331; 21 W. R. 507. But see next case.

In 1869, A. retired from a partnership which had been carried on between him, B., and C., B. purchasing A.'s share in the business, and covenanting to indemnify him against all partnership debts and liabilities. The liabilities then existing included two bonds given to secure moneys advanced to the firm for partnership purposes, on which A. and B. had become jointly and severally liable to D. In August, 1871, B. and C. made an arrangement with their creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Resolutions were passed by the creditors, including D., who proved for his debt, to accept a composition of 15s. 3d. in the pound, payable by instalments extending over two years; and an inspectorship deed releasing B. and C., and reserving to the creditors their rights against any surety or person other than B. and C., liable in respect of the debts thereby released, was executed by the creditors, including D.:—Held, that the effect of the composition under which time had been given to B. and C., as principal debtors, without the consent of A., was to discharge him. Ib.

When the acceptor of a bill of exchange presents a petition for liquidation or composition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, and the creditors pass a resolution for liquidation or composition, the acceptor must be considered as discharged by operation of law, and the drawer is not thereby discharged from his liability. In such a case it makes no difference whether the bill-holder is present at the meeting or not, or whether he votes in favour of the resolution or against it. Jacobs, Ex parte, Jacobs, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 211; 44 L. J., Bk. 34; 31 L. T. 745; 23 W. R. 251.

Bequest by Creditor to Compounding Debtor.] D., who was indebted to his father L., on a bill of sale, and a promissory note, was adjudicated bankrupt. At a meeting of the creditors of D. a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound was accepted in satisfaction of the debts due to them, and the bankruptcy was annulled. L., who did not prove his debt, and was not paid the composition, died, having bequeathed to D. a share of his estate. The executors who proved the will (D. being an executor, who did not prove) did not prove the debt under the composition. D. assigned his share of the estate to B., who brought an action for the administration of L.'s estate. The executors claimed a right of retainer against B. for the debt:—Held, that the amount of composition was substituted for the provable debts, whether such debts were proved by the creditors or not; and that the executors were not entitled to the right of retainer against the bequest of the share of the estate for the whole debt, but only for the composition on the debt and interest, six years' arrears of interest on the promissory note, and the whole arrears on the bill of sale. Orpen, In re, Beswick v. Orpen, 16 Ch. D. 202; 50 L. J., Ch. 25; 43 L. T. 728; 29 W. R. 467.

Reservation of Rights of Secured Creditors.]—Two partners filed a liquidation petition. Their joint creditors resolved to accept a composition of 10s. in the pound in satisfaction of their debts. Among the creditors who voted in favour of the resolution was a banking company, who held security for their debt upon the separate estate of one of the partners. The affidavit by which they proved their debt stated their security, but they voted in respect of their whole debt. The resolutions contained no provision reserving the right of creditors who held collateral securities to retain them, but a provision to that effect was inserted in a deed afterwards executed to carry out the arrangements of the composition. The composition was duly paid to the bank:—Held, that the bank was entitled to retain their security. Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Company, Ex parte, Littler, In re, 18 L. R., Eq. 249; 43 L. J., Bk. 73; 30 L. T. 339; 22 W. R. 567.

On Securities obtained by Creditor between Petition and Meeting.]—A resolution for composition has no retrospective effect so as to invalidate securities obtained by a creditor in the interval between the filing of the petition and the first meeting of creditors. Jones, Ex parte, Jones, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 663; 44 L. J., Bk. 124; 33 L. T. 116; 23 W. R. 886.

Liability of Execution Creditor for Failure to withdraw Sheriff after Composition—Malice.]—In the absence of malice, no action will lie against a judgment creditor for not withdrawing the sheriff from possession after the judgment creditor has become bound by a composition of the debt. According to the statement of claim, A., having recovered a judgment against B., issued a writ of fi. fa., under which the sheriff entered into possession of B.'s goods. B. filed a petition of insolvency, and A. proved for the amount of his judgment against B.'s estate. Resolutions for a composition were passed and registered. The sheriff refused to withdraw from possession without A.'s instructions, which were not given by A. No malice was alleged as against A.:—Held, on demurrer, that, in the absence of malice, A.'s failure to instruct the sheriff to retire gave B. no right of action against A. Phillips v. General Omnibus Company, 50 L. J., Q. B. 112.

Composition under s. 28.]—When a bankruptcy has been annulled under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 28, and a scheme of arrangement of the bankrupt's affairs has been approved of by the court, the bankrupt is discharged from his debts, and no action is maintainable against him in respect of any debt provable under the bankruptcy. Gilbey v. Jeffries, 11 Q. B. D. 559; 52 L. J., Q. B. 601; 48 L. T. 699—C. A. Affirming 52 L. J., Q. B. 116; 31 W. R. 381; 47 J. P. 102.

10. PAYMENT OF COMPOSITION AND EFFECT OF FAILURE TO PAY.

Enforcing Payment by Surety.]—The Court of Bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to enforce the payment of a composition by a surety who has covenanted with a trustee on behalf of the creditors for its payment. Mirabita, Ex parte, Dale, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 772; 44 L. J., Bk. 119; 33 L. T. 60; 23 W. R. 864.

Court of Bankruptcy may compel Trustee to sue Surety.]—If the surety fails to pay, it is the duty of the trustee to sue him at law on his covenant; and if the trustee neglects this duty, the Court of Bankruptcy has power to compel him to perform it. Id.

Trustee Indemnified against Costs.]—Under composition resolutions a trustee was appointed, and a surety for the debtor covenanted with the trustee to pay two of the instalments of the composition. These instalments were not paid when they became due:—Held, that, upon the application of a creditor, the court had jurisdiction under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, to order the trustee to sue the surety upon his covenant, but that the order should provide for the indemnity of the trustee against the costs of the action. Monkhouse, Ex parte, Dale, In re, 1 Ch. D. 287; 45 L. J., Bk. 71; 33 L. T. 614; 24 W. R. 800.

Security given by Debtor to Surety.]—The creditors of a debtor resolved to accept a composition payable in three instalments, the third instalment being guaranteed by a surety. Before the resolution was passed, the debtor had agreed with the surety to indemnify him against any liability which he might incur under his guarantee by depositing goods with him. This agreement was not made known to the creditors. After the resolutions were registered the surety accepted bills of exchange for the amount of the third instalment of the composition, and certain goods were deposited with him by the debtor. The debtor paid the first instalment, but failed to pay the second, and thereupon he filed a liquidation petition. Afterwards the surety paid the third instalment:—Held, that the agreement with the surety was valid, and that he was entitled to retain the goods as against the trustee under the liquidation. Burrell, Ex parte, Robinson, In re, 1 Ch. D. 537; 45 L. J., Bk. 68; 34 L. T. 198; 24 W. R. 353—C. A.

After Default in Payment.]—Two partners in trade filed a liquidation petition, under which a trustee of their property was appointed. Afterwards the creditors, under the provisions of s. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1867, passed resolutions authorizing the trustee to accept a composition from the debtors, and the arrangement was approved by the court. The composition was to be paid in four instalments, part of the last of which was to be secured by a surety. One of the debtors, who was about to carry on the business alone, agreed to pay 30l. to the trustee weekly, until he should have paid the amount of the composition. In case of his making default, the trustee was to be at liberty to take possession of his stock-in-trade, assets and effects, and realize them for the benefit of the creditors of the firm. The discharge of the debtors was to be granted, the liquidation closed, and the trustee released, so soon as the trustee should certify to the court that a sum sufficient to pay the composition had been paid to him by the debtor. The first instalment was duly paid, but the debtor afterwards made default, and the trustee took possession of his stock-in-trade and effects. It then appeared that the debtors had, shortly before the seizure, executed a deed assigning the outstanding book debts of the firm to the surety and another person, as security for moneys advanced by them, and also as a security to the surety against his liability in respect of the last instalment of the composition. The advances had been made since the passing of the resolutions, to enable the debtor to carry on the business and to pay the first instalment of the composition:—Held, that the resolutions of the creditors gave an implied authority to the debtor to carry on the business in the ordinary way, and to pledge the assets in order to raise money for the purposes of the business, or for the purpose of paying the composition, and that the assignees were entitled to the book debts as a security for the advances which they had made. Allard, Ex parte, Simons, In re, 16 Ch. D. 505; 44 L. T. 35; 29 W. R. 406—C. A.

But, held, that the resolutions did not authorize the pledging of the assets as an indemnity to the surety against his liability in respect of the last instalment of the composition, and that

— Estate assigned to Surety—No resulting Trust.—Resolutions were passed in favour of a composition; all the estate of the debtor was to be assigned to D., he becoming surety for the payment of the composition and being appointed trustee. Afterwards a deed was executed by the debtor, the creditors and D., embodying these resolutions, but not declaring any trusts:—Held, that he was absolutely entitled to the surplus of the estate after the payment of the composition and the costs, and that there was no resulting trust in favour of the debtor. Wilcocke, Ex parte, Wilcocke, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 12; 31 L. T. 520.

Default in Payment by Debtor.—When, by resolutions under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, the creditors agreed to accept a composition payable by instalments, and the debtor made default in payment of an instalment to a creditor:—Held, that the creditor could maintain an action against the debtor for the balance of the whole debt remaining unpaid, and would not be restrained by the Court of Bankruptcy. Hutton, In re, Hodge, Ex parte, 7 L. R., Ch. 723; 42 L. J., Bk. 12; 27 L. T. 396; 20 W. R. 978.

So, when by an extraordinary resolution under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, creditors resolve to accept a composition in satisfaction of their debts, but the debtor fails to pay the composition, the creditors are entitled to bring actions for their original debts. Edwards v. Coombe, 7 L. R., C. P. 519; 41 L. J., C. P. 202; 27 L. T. 315; 21 W. R. 107.

When by a resolution under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, the creditors of a debtor agree to accept a composition payable by instalments, and the debtor makes default in payment of an instalment, a non-assenting creditor is entitled to maintain an action for the whole debt. Goldney v. Lording, 8 L. R., Q. B. 182; 42 L. J., Q. B. 103; 21 W. R. 543.

— Creditors restored to former Rights.—The non-payment by a debtor of a composition according to the terms of a resolution, passed pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, revives not only the debt but also the rights and remedies of the creditor in respect thereof as they would have existed if no such composition had been agreed to. Newell v. Van Praagh, 9 L. R., C. P. 96; 43 L. J., C. P. 94; 22 W. R. 377.

Therefore, where after a judge's order had been made under the Debtors Act, 1869, for the payment of a judgment debt by instalments, the judgment debtor took proceedings for liquidation under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and a resolution binding on the judgment creditor was passed according to s. 126, to accept a composition, and the debtor subsequently failed to pay the composition, according to the terms of the resolution:—Held, that the judgment creditor was entitled to proceed upon the judge's order for the payment of the debt by instalments as if there had been no composition, and accordingly to apply under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 5, for the debtor's committal in case of his not paying such instalments when he had the means of paying. Id.

— Even where there is a Surety for Payment.—Where creditors agree to accept a composition payable in instalments, some of which are guaranteed by a surety, if default is made in the payment of any one instalment the creditors have a right to sue the debtor, or to prove in his bankruptcy, for the balance of their original debts, after deducting what they have received, either from the debtor or the surety, in respect of the composition, and not merely for the amount of the unpaid instalments of the composition. Gilbey, Ex parte, Bedell, In re, 8 Ch. D. 248; 47 L. J., Bk. 49; 38 L. T. 728; 26 W. R. 768—C. A.

— Surety cannot recover from Creditors.—The surety, though he is entitled to prove in the debtor's bankruptcy for what he has paid in respect of the composition, has no right to put the creditors to an election whether they will carry out the composition arrangement in toto or reject it in toto. Id.

Where default is made in payment of a composition, and bankruptcy supervenes, the fact that one of the instalments of the composition was guaranteed and paid by a surety in no way affects the right of the creditors to prove under the bankruptcy for the whole amount of their original debts, after giving credit for the instalments they have received. In such a case the surety must be taken to have entered into the contract subject to the known law that the creditors are remitted to their original rights on default in payment of any instalment. He cannot therefore recover back from the creditors the instalment he has paid to them. His proper remedy is to prove under the bankruptcy for the instalment he has paid. Id.

— Giving Notes for Composition is no Satisfaction.—A debtor having filed a petition for liquidation under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, at a meeting duly convened (the plaintiffs being assenting creditors), resolutions were passed that a composition of 3s. in the pound should be accepted by the creditors in satisfaction of their debts, that such composition should be payable by instalments at three, six, and twelve months, and that the security of S. should be accepted for the whole of the composition: and a trustee was appointed. Joint and several promissory notes of the debtor and S. for the composition, payable at the National Provincial Bank of England at Birmingham, were given to the plaintiffs and the other creditors, and receipts signed by them, expressing it to be in "discharge of their debts." The first note was presented at the bank at maturity, and dishonoured, but no demand was made upon S. or the trustee:—Held, that the plaintiffs were remitted to their right to sue for their original debt, the mere giving of the notes, without payment, not being satisfaction within the terms of the resolution or of the receipt. Edwards v. Hancher, 1 C. P. D. 111; 33 L. T. 575.

After the defendant had been adjudicated a bankrupt, his creditors, amongst whom were the plaintiffs, agreed to accept a composition, and bills of exchange were given to the plaintiffs for the amount; the bills having been dishonoured:—Held, that the mere giving the bills, without payment, was not a discharge of the original debt, and that the plaintiffs were remitted to their right to sue for it. Erskine v. Moreland, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 243.

— Payment by Debtor to his Solicitor—Default by Solicitor.—The day before a composition fell due the debtor paid to his solicitor, who had the conduct of the proceedings, and who also held his bill for the whole amount of the composition, sufficient to pay the composition to all the creditors. The solicitor had received a written authority from a judgment creditor to pay his composition to R., his solicitor. The solicitor did not pay R. immediately, but retained the composition, intending to pay him in a few days, when he was going to meet him on other business. The judgment creditor proceeded to levy execution for his original debt:—Held, that the composition not having been paid on the day named, the judgment creditor was remitted to his original rights, and that an injunction would not lie. Masters, Ex parte, Winson, In re, 1 Ch.D. 113; 45 L.J., Bk. 18; 33 L. T. 613; 24 W. R. 113.

— Creditor's Debt Unascertained—Reference—Award.—The creditors of debtors who had filed a liquidation petition resolved to accept a composition, and appointed a trustee to receive and distribute it. In the debtors' statement it was mentioned that two persons claimed to be creditors for a large sum, but that their claim was the subject of an action, which had been referred to an arbitrator, the reference being still pending. These persons attended the meetings of the creditors (of which notice had been sent to them) and tendered a proof, but their proof was objected to, and they were not allowed to vote. Several months afterwards the arbitrator made his award, finding a large sum due to them. The composition not having been paid or tendered to them, they commenced an action against the debtors for the amount of the award:—Held, that the action ought not to be restrained. Watson, Ex parte, 2 Ch. D. 63; 34 L. T. 778; 24 W. R. 592—C. A.

— Creditor suing for Composition, cannot afterwards sue for Original Debt.—Under a composition arrangement, the debtor was to pay by four instalments, each secured by the promissory note of himself and his sureties; having made default in payment of the third instalment the creditor sued upon the promissory note for that instalment, and was paid it; the creditor then sued for the original debt, less by the amount of the three instalments paid, and seized the debtor's goods in execution:—Held, that, the creditor having elected to sue for the amount of the instalment, and been paid it, was not entitled to revert to his right to sue for the original debt, and that he should be restrained from levying under the execution. Butler, In re, 1 Ir. R., Ch. D. 225.

Default in Payment by Trustee.—When under a composition arrangement a trustee is appointed by the creditors, the debtor is not liable for any default of the trustee in paying the composition. Waterer, Ex parte, Taylor, In re, 43 L. J., Bk. 25; 29 L. T. 907; 22 W. R. 426.

A creditor holding a security of uncertain value, was inserted in the debtor's statement for an estimated balance. The trustee did not pay or tender the composition on the amount, but — Trustee need not Tender Composition.—The trustee under a composition is not bound to tender the composition. Id.

To an action by the indorsees of a bill of exchange against the acceptors, they pleaded that the necessary proceedings for a composition by the acceptors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, had been taken, and that a trustee on behalf of the creditors had been appointed by the extraordinary resolution for receipt and distribution of the composition, and that a sum sufficient to pay the composition had been duly paid to the trustee for the purpose of his paying the same pursuant to the resolution. The plaintiffs replied that the amount of the composition due to them was not paid or tendered to them, but the trustee, by the direction, request, and procurement of the acceptors, refused to pay the same to the plaintiffs:—Held, a bad replication, on the ground that the acceptors were discharged on the payment to the trustee of money applicable and sufficient to pay the composition. Campbell v. Im Thurn, 1 C. P. D. 267; 45 L. J., C. P. 482; 35 L. T. 265; 24 W. R. 675.

The mere non-payment by the trustee does not defeat the composition, and the money being impressed with a trust for the benefit of the creditor, any direction by the debtor with respect to it is a nullity. Id.

Semble, that the trustee is entitled before paying over the composition to a creditor to investigate the validity of his claim. Id.

Non-payment due to Creditor's Neglect.—Where the creditors of a liquidating debtor have duly passed resolutions for a composition payable by instalments at certain definite times, and have appointed a trustee under the 279th of the Bankruptcy Rules; and at the time when the first instalment of the composition became due the debtor, who had sent cheques to all the creditors, had also placed in the hands of the trustee funds sufficient to pay the amount of that instalment to a particular creditor, who, however, neglected to present the cheque or apply to the trustee for the amount; such creditor is not entitled to institute bankruptcy proceedings against the debtor with a view to having him adjudicated a bankrupt, upon the ground that he did not in fact receive the instalment of his composition upon the day named in the resolutions for payment. Ortelli, Ex parte, Sherratt, In re, 45 L. T. 799.

11. ADJUDICATING DEBTOR A BANKRUPT.

Does not require Act of Bankruptcy.—The power given to the court by s. 120 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to adjudge a compounding debtor a bankrupt, is a discretionary power, and is independent of the commission by him of an act of bankruptcy, and it may be exercised more than six months after the filing of the liquidation petition. Charlton, Ex parte, 6 Ch. D. 45; 46 L. J., Bk. 110; 37 L. T. 45; 25 W. R. 800—C. A. Affirming 36 L. T. 561; 25 W. R. 633.

A declaration by the debtor of his inability to pay one of the instalments of the composition at the time appointed is a sufficient ground for the exercise of this power. Ib.

By resolutions for composition creditors agreed to accept 5s. in the pound, payable in two instalments of 4s. and 1s. at six months' and two years' date respectively. The debtor, who continued trading, was unable to meet the second instalment. Thereupon a creditor, to whom the sum of 13l. was due under the second instalment, applied that the debtor might be adjudicated a bankrupt under s. 126 :—Held, that it was not a proper case to make the adjudication. Shiers, In re, Shiers, Ex parte, 7 Ch. D. 416; 47 L. J., Bk. 31; 37 L. T. 724; 26 W. R. 216.

Rights of Creditors on Revival of Bankruptcy through failure of Composition.—J. claimed to be a secured creditor of S., a bankrupt, and to be entitled to the whole of the property set forth by S. in his statement of affairs by virtue of two bills of sale. The securities were disputed by the trustee, and ultimately the creditors passed resolutions under the 28th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, that the offer of J. to pay 620l. to the trustee be accepted, that the bankruptcy be thereby annulled, and that J. releasing his claim upon the estate, his securities be not disputed by the trustee. This compromise was entered into on the basis that the property held by J. comprised the whole of the debtor's estate, and was carried into effect. S. having subsequently come into possession of property which he had omitted in his statement of affairs, the order annulling the adjudication was discharged, and the bankruptcy was revived. J. thereupon tendered a proof for the balance which remained due to him after he had realized his securities, which was rejected :—Held, on appeal, that the effect of the order reviving the bankruptcy was to destroy the resolutions in toto, and that all parties were remitted to their original rights and position. Spanton, In re, Jarvis, Ex parte, 10 Ch. D. 179; 48 L. J., Bk. 45; 39 L. T. 651; 27 W. R. 297—C. A.

12. SECOND COMPOSITION.

When creditors have resolved, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126, to accept a composition in satisfaction of the debts due to them from their debtor, the debtor cannot make a new composition with his creditors under that section until all the instalments of the old composition have been paid. Sydney, Ex parte, Sydney & Wiggins, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 208; 44 L. J., Bk. 21; 31 L. T. 714; 23 W. R. 205.

Where nothing further remains to be done under composition resolutions, and the rights of the creditors thereunder are in no way interfered with, the court will not refuse to register resolutions for a composition under a second petition by the same debtor, notwithstanding that all the creditors have not been paid their composition under the first petition. Lomas, Ex parte, Davies, In re, 42 L. T. 595.

13. JURISDICTION OF COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

To restrain Actions on original Debt.—When an action is brought by one of the creditors of a compounding debtor against the debtor for his original debt, the Court of Bankruptcy ought to restrain the action if it can see clearly that it is vexatious and without foundation, even though the question in dispute concerns only the debtor and the creditor who is suing. Lopez, Ex parte, 5 Ch. D. 65; 46 L. J., Bk. 95; 36 L. T. 275; 25 W. R. 419—C. A.

But, if there is a substantial question to be tried, the action ought to be allowed to proceed. Ib.

In February, 1871, a debtor effected a composition with his creditors. The proof of K. was disputed, and was only settled by the judge on the 29th of July, 1873. The composition on the amount as settled was not then paid at once, but the solicitors of both parties waited till the order was drawn up and signed by the registrar. On the 22nd of August, 1873, the debtor asked to be allowed to pay the composition partly in cash and partly in bills at two and four months. This request was refused, and K. then said that the composition not having been paid he should commence an action for the whole debt. On the 27th of August the registrar signed the order, and on the same day the debtor tendered payment of the composition in cash. This was refused, and an action for the original debt commenced on the 29th of August :—Held, that it would be inequitable to allow K. to proceed with the action. King, Ex parte, Harper, In re, 17 L. R., Eq. 332; 43 L. J., Bk. 41.

— To try Validity of Resolutions.—Where resolutions accepting a composition payable by the debtor have been duly passed and registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, a creditor will be restrained from proceeding at law in order to try the validity of the resolutions. Thorpe, In re, Härtel, Ex parte, 8 L. R., Ch. 743; 42 L. J., Bk. 34; 28 L. T. 530; 21 W. R. 428.

When a creditor objects to be bound by an arrangement with creditors, on grounds personal to himself and not applicable to the rest of the creditors, he will not be restrained by the Court of Bankruptcy from trying the question in an action. Paper Staining Company, Ex parte, Bishop, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 595.

A creditor refused to be bound by a resolution for a composition registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 125, on the ground that his name was not duly inserted in the debtor's statement of debts, and that the composition had not been tendered to him within the prescribed time :—Held, that he ought not to be restrained from suing the debtor at law. Ib.

— By Debtor against Sheriff.—The Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to restrain an action of trespass brought by an arranging debtor, after the registration of a resolution duly passed and confirmed by the creditors to accept a composition, against the sheriff, who, before the date of the petition upon which the composition was based, had levied upon the goods of the debtor under a fi. fa., and had continued in possession twelve clear days after service of notice of the registration and to withdraw. England, In re, Middlesex (Sheriff), Ex parte, 12 L. R., Eq. 207; 40 L. J., Bk. 65; 24 L. T. 519. Affirmed, 24 L. T. 860; 19 W. R. 914—L. J.

To re-open Proceedings.—Even after a resolution for a composition has been registered, the Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction, on a proper case being shewn, to re-open the question, and, with that object, to order the examination of the debtor. Davis, In re, 19 W. R. 524.

But a creditor invoking the exercise of this jurisdiction must shew a prima facie case of fraud against the debtor in procuring the composition. It is not sufficient to allege that the assenting creditors were friendly to the debtor. Ib.

Court of Equity will only Interfere in Special Cases.]—A Court of Equity will not interfere upon any question arising out of a creditors' composition deed, or other proceedings in bankruptcy, except under special circumstances. Graham v. Winterson, 16 L. R., Eq. 243; 42 L. J., Ch. 633; 28 L. T. 803; 21 W. R. 722.

No Jurisdiction to order Sale of Security at instance of Equitable Mortgagees.]—In a case of composition the Court of Bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to make an order for sale at the instance of an equitable mortgagee of the estate of the debtor. Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Company, Ex parte, Littler, In re, 18 L. R., Eq. 249; 43 L. J., Bk. 73; 30 L. T. 339; 22 W. R. 567.

Composition under s. 28—Sale of Security at instance of Secured Creditor—Jurisdiction.]—Where the trustee of a liquidating debtor had with the sanction of the creditors accepted a composition under s. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction upon the application of a secured creditor, who had not proved in the liquidation, to order the sale of his security. His proper course was to realize his security as a mortgage in the usual manner in the High Court and then prove for any deficiency that might ensue in the Court of Bankruptcy. Holmes, In re, Woods or Holmes, Ex parte, 43 L. T. 447; 29 W. R. 124.

14. COSTS OF COMPOSITION.

The costs of a composition are not governed by Bankruptcy Rules, 1871, r. 8, which provides for the taxation of costs in "bankruptcy or liquidation" on a lower scale when the provable debts and assets respectively are under certain amounts. Castle, Ex parte, Meikle, In re, 1 Ch. D. 111; 45 L. J., Bk. 13; 24 W. R. 143.

The creditors of a liquidating debtor accepted a composition, payable by instalments, secured by the joint and several promissory notes of the debtor and a surety. The debtor and his surety being unable to pay the composition, the debtor obtained leave to summon a general meeting of his creditors to vary the terms of the composition, but proceeded in all respects as if a fresh first meeting was being convened. At the new meeting resolutions were duly passed accepting a smaller composition, but the registrar refused to register the resolutions, and the debtor was subsequently adjudicated bankrupt. The debtor's solicitor applied to the court for payment of his costs incurred under the proceedings to vary the composition:—Held, that the registrar having refused to register the resolutions, and no appeal having been brought from his order, there were no proceedings pending within the meaning of r. 292 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870; and that even if the proceedings were pending within the meaning of the rule, the costs in relation to the proceedings were in the discretion of the judge, and that the exercise of his discretion in that respect would not be interfered with. Hopper, Ex parte, Elliott, In re, 37 L. T. 725. Affirmed, 8 Ch. D. 53; 47 L. J., Bk. 41; 38 L. T. 366; 26 W. R. 488—C. A.

XIX. COMPOSITION DEEDS.

I. GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS AND INCIDENTS.

a. What are.

Deed assigning whole Property to Trustees for Creditors—No Creditors Parties to Deed.]—

Under a will, S. was entitled on the death of A. to a share of a fund. By deed made by him, being the tenant for life, he assigned stock-in-trade, scheduled, and all his real and personal estate, using very general language, to a trustee to sell for the payment of his creditors. No creditors were parties, but some were paid under it. Afterwards the trustee sold the residue. The will contained a clause that on any legatee becoming bankrupt, or mortgaging or anticipating his share, or compounding with his creditors, his share should go over:—Held, that the deed was not a composition deed, and was not a forfeiture within the meaning of the will. Waley, In re, 3 Drew. 165; 8 Eq. R. 380; 24 L. J., Ch. 499; 1 Jur., N. S. 338. See Sharp v. Cosserat, 20 Beav. 470.

Trusts not kept—Creditors have no Remedy.]—A person conveyed to trustees personal property upon trust to sell the same, and after satisfying certain specified charges and claims in a prescribed order out of the proceeds, to divide the residue among his scheduled creditors, not any of whom were parties or privy to the execution of the deed. The trustees, after partially executing the trusts, by making sales and paying off the specified charges and claims in the order directed, concurred with the grantor in doing several acts inconsistent with the subsequent trusts:—Held, that, after the death of the grantor, a scheduled creditor had no equity against the trustees to enforce the execution of the trust, the conveyance being in the nature of a private arrangement for the personal convenience of the grantor, and vesting no right in the creditors. Gerrard v. Lauderdale (Lord), 2 Russ. & Mylne, 451.

Deed made without Knowledge of Trustee.]—

A. executed a deed, conveying all his property to a creditor, B., in trust for B. and the other creditors of A. A. sent this deed to B., with whom he had not previously communicated on the subject. B. received the deed on the next day, and on that day a judgment creditor of A. delivered a fi. fa. to the sheriff. On the next day, B. wrote to A. signifying his assent. On an issue between B. and the judgment creditor, the jury found that the deed was honest and bona fide:—Held, that B. was entitled to the property, the deed not being revocable by A., inasmuch as it was for the benefit in part of the trustee B., and B.'s assent not being necessary to vest the property in himself for the same reason. Siggers v. Evans, 5 El. & Bl. 367; 3 C. L. R. 1209; 24 L. J., Q. B. 705; 1 Jur., N. S. 851.

Requirements under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36.]—If a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors purports in its language to be and is intended for the benefit of all the creditors, it is sufficient to bring it within the exception of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36 (Bills of Sale Act), so as not to require registration under that act, although the deed does not appear to be executed by all the creditors. General Furnishing and Upholstery Company v. Venn, 2 H. & C. 153; 32 L. J., Ex. 220; 9 Jur., N. S. 550; 8 L. T. 432.

Letter of Licence.—A letter of licence by deed made between a debtor and his assenting creditors was not a deed capable of binding non-assenting creditors of the debtor by force of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861. Latham v. Lafone, 2 L. R., Ex. 115; 36 L. J., Ex. 17; 15 L. T. 627; 15 W. R. 453.

b. Validity.

As against a subsequent Execution Creditor.]

—At 10 o'clock a.m., on the 3rd December, 1862, a debtor assigned all his estate and effects to trustees, to pay rateably all debts due to his creditors, being such persons as would have been entitled to rank as creditors in bankruptcy if the debtor had been adjudicated bankrupt upon a petition for that purpose, filed on the 25th of November, 1862. All the statutory requirements as to trust deeds for the benefit of creditors were complied with, and the trustees took possession of the debtor's estate and effects. At 11.30 on the same 3rd of December, a creditor signed judgment in an action against the debtor, and shortly afterwards a fi. fa. was delivered to the sheriff, under which he took in execution the debtor's goods:—Held, that the deed was not fraudulent under 13 Eliz. c. 5, as hindering and delaying creditors, since the execution creditors might obtain under it a composition in respect of the costs of the judgment. Evans v. Jones, 3 H. & C. 423; 11 L. T. 636.

Held, also, that the trustees were entitled, as against the execution creditors, to the proceeds of the execution. Id.

Defective under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 134—Good at Common Law.]

—A deed by which a debtor assigned all his property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors, was expressed to be intended to operate under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. By reason of some of the written assents necessary to make up the required majority being invalid the deed could not operate under the act:—Held, that it was nevertheless good at common law to pass the property of the debtor to the trustee, that it was not invalid for want of registration as a bill of sale, and could not be regarded as a mere execution. Johnson v. Ossenton, 4 L. R., Ex. 107; 38 L. J., Ex. 76; 19 L. T. 793; 17 W. R. 675.

Deed not executed by Creditor—Pleading.]—A plea to an action against the defendant, as acceptor of several bills of exchange, stated, that, after the time of payment, he being resident in Scotland, in consideration that certain of his creditors should forbear to sue, made his deed according to the law of Scotland, by which he assigned his personal property in Scotland for the benefit of his creditors; that notice of the deed was given to the plaintiff, and that plaintiff, by a writing effectual by the law of Scotland, nominated R. H. as his attorney, to concur in and adopt the deed, and to receive the dividends. The plea then stated that R. H. adopted the deed; that divers other creditors accepted the assignments; that the causes of action arose before the execution of the deed; and that all the proceedings were in conformity with the law of Scotland; whereby the defendant, by the law of Scotland, hath become absolutely discharged from the causes of action. Replication, that the defendant has not become, nor is, discharged:—Held, that the law of Scotland was put in issue; secondly, that the plea did not disclose a defence by the law of England, as it did not appear that the plaintiff had executed the deed, or induced any other creditor so to do, or in any way precluded himself from suing on the original debt. Woodham v. Edwards, 1 N. & P. 207; 5 A. & E. 771; 2 H. & W. 443.

Wholly in Favour of Debtor.]—To a plea setting up a composition deed, the plaintiffs replied, upon equitable grounds, that the deed was not executed or assented to by them; that the defendant at the time the deed was made was in possession of available assets sufficient for the payment of a much larger composition than that agreed upon; that the agreements in the deed were not bonâ fide made for the equal benefit of all the creditors; that the agreements were made solely from motives of benevolence and kindness to and for the defendant, and for his sole and only benefit, and without any just regard to the rights or interests of the other creditors, and to give the defendant a release and discharge from his debts on the payment of his composition; that such composition was only a nominal composition, and wholly disproportioned to the assets of the defendant which were available to the payment of the said creditors, their debts and demands:—Held, that the replication was good, and an answer to the plea. Hart v. Smith, 4 L. R., Q. B. 61; 38 L. J., Q. B. 25; 19 L. T. 419; 17 W. R. 158; 9 B. & S. 543.

c. What Property Passes.

Cattle on Farm.]—An assignment for benefit of creditors, by a trader and farmer, of all her "effects, stock, books, and book debts," conveys the cattle on the farm. Lewis v. Rogers, 1 C., M. & R. 48; 5 Tyr. 872.

Policy of Insurance.]—A. conveyed all his property to trustees, for the benefit of his creditors. The conveyance contained general words; amongst others, "all and singular the personal estate and effects whatsoever," and all writings belonging to the same. He was possessed at the time of a policy on his own life, the existence of which was not known to the trustees, and which remained in his possession. He died, and the trustees having afterwards learned the existence of the policy, claimed it from his executor, who refused to deliver it up, and obtained the money from the insurance office:—Held, that the legal property in the policy, and the beneficial interest in the contract, passed to the trustees by the deed; that they might maintain trover for the policy against the executor; and that the proper measure of the damages, under the circumstances, was the amount of the money obtained by it. Watson v. McLean, El. Bl. & Bl. 75—Ex. Ch.

Contingent Interest.]—Under an assignment to creditors by a debtor of all his stock-in-trade, book, and other debts, goods, securities, chattels and effects whatsoever, except the wearing apparel of himself and his family, a contingent interest in the residuary estate of a testator (to which the debtor was entitled in the event of his sister dying without a child) passes. Iverson v. Gassiot, 3 De G., Mac. & G. 958.

Mortgage of Leasehold Premises.—A deed of assignment by A. of all his personal estate and effects whatsoever to trustees, for the benefit of creditors, passes a deed of assignment of leasehold premises made to A. by way of mortgage, with power of sale. West v. Steward, 14 M. & W. 47.

Term of Years.—A debtor (by a deed executed after the repeal of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861) assigned to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors, "All his goods and chattels, personal estate, substance and effects whatsoever, and all his right, title, property, benefit, claim and demand whatever therein:"—Held, that these words were sufficient to pass a term of years in certain premises. White v. Hunt, 6 L. R., Ex. 32; 40 L. J., Ex. 23.

Held, also, that the trustee having executed the deed of assignment and put a man in possession of the premises, and never having disclaimed the lease (though he had not expressly accepted it) was liable to the lessor as assignee of the term for rent. Id.

Benefit derived from Contract between other Parties—After-acquired Property.—By a deed of inspectorship, registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192, it was provided that all the estate and effects of the debtor should be administered in accordance with the bankrupt law. At the date of the deed there was in existence an agreement between railway companies, to which the debtor was no party, by which it was agreed that the contract for the execution of the works therein referred to should be let to the debtor or his nominee. The debtor afterwards and during the continuance of the inspectorship nominated contractors, and received from them the sum of 3,500*l.* for so doing:—Held, that this sum was no part of the estate and effects of the debtor at the date of the deed; also, that upon the construction of the deed after-acquired property was not included therein. Piercy, Ex parte, Piercy, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 33; 43 L. J., Bk. 9; 29 L. T. 559; 22 W. R. 65.

d. Preliminary Agreements for Composition.

Agreement to accept Part of Debt.—Composition arrangements with creditors form an exception to the rule that an agreement to accept part of a debt in discharge of the whole is no legal satisfaction of the remainder. Pfeffer v. Browne, 28 Beav. 391.

Agreement to Execute—Accord and Satisfaction.—An agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, and the other creditors of the plaintiff, to execute a composition deed, is no accord and satisfaction. Lowe v. Eginton, 7 Price, 604.

Where Debt ascertained and Fund provided.—Where there is an agreement between a debtor and his creditors for the latter to accept a composition if the debt has been ascertained by the agreement, and a fund provided, and all the creditors are bound to forbear, it seems that a plea of that fact will be good to an action brought by one of the creditors for his whole demand. Heathcote v. Crookshanks, 2 T. R. 24.

Agreement with Portion of Creditors.—An agreement entered into between a debtor and any number of his creditors less than the whole number to take a composition for their debts is binding upon those who enter into the agreement. Norman v. Thompson, 4 Ex. 755; 19 L. J., Ex. 193.

And where a man being embarrassed, all his creditors signed an agreement to give him time to pay by instalments, and to take his notes for the amount:—Held, that this agreement was binding on each of them, the signing of the others being a sufficient consideration, and that they could not sue for their original cause of action without proving that the agreement had been broken on the part of the debtor. Boothby v. Sowden, 3 Camp. 175. And see Anstey v. Marden, 1 N. R. 124; 2 Smith, 426.

Agreement in Consideration of General Composition—Refusal of some Creditors.—An agreement for a composition entered into by one creditor, in contemplation and in consideration of a general composition being entered into by all the creditors, is not binding on him if the others refuse to come in. Reay v. Richardson, 2 C., M. & R. 422; 1 Gale, 219; 5 Tyr. 931.

Deed executed on Faith of Agreement.—A creditor who agrees to take a composition from his debtor, on the faith of which the debtor executes a deed of assignment of all his property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors, will not be allowed, by refusing to execute such deed, to sue his debtor for the whole of his demand. Butler v. Rhodes, 1 Esp. 236; Peake, 238.

Where, at a meeting of the creditors of a deceased insolvent, called by his executor, they agreed to a rateable distribution, on the faith of which he executed a deed of assignment of all the assets which had come to his hands, for the benefit of the creditors:—Held, that one of them could not afterwards refuse to come in under the deed, and bring an action for his debt against the executor. Brady v. Sheil, 1 Camp. 147.

Assignment by Debtor—Subsequent Agreement as to Carrying on Business.—A., being insolvent, by agreement stipulated to assign his property immediately, the creditors consenting that the business should be carried on for their benefit until the next Michaelmas, and that then the property should be divided among them: the insolvent assigned his effects; at the next Michaelmas several of the creditors who had signed this instrument agreed that the business should be carried on by the trustees for a further time:—Held, that a creditor who had signed the first agreement, but who had not in any way concurred in the second, could not maintain an action against the insolvent for a debt existing at the time of the first agreement. Cork v. Saunders, 1 B. & A. 46.

Tender of Composition agreed on.—Where a man's creditors agree to take a composition on their debts, to be secured partly by the acceptances of a third person, and partly by his own notes, and to execute a composition deed containing a clause of release, he cannot be sued for the original debt due to a creditor who had promised to come in under the agreement, to whom the acceptances and notes were regularly tendered, and who refused to execute the composition deed after it had been executed by all the other creditors. Bradley v. Gregory, 2 Camp. 383.

Omission to Tender.—Where a plaintiff, the drawer of a bill, accepted by the defendant, agreed with him and the rest of his creditors to take a composition of 8s. in the pound, to be secured by promissory notes to be given by the defendant, payable on days certain; and that he should assign to the creditors certain debts, upon which they should execute a general release; and the assignment was executed, and all the creditors, except the plaintiff, received their composition and executed the release, and the plaintiff might have received his notes if he had applied for them, but it did not appear that the defendant had ever tendered them to the plaintiff, or that he had ever applied for them; and the plaintiff afterwards, and after the days of payment of the notes had expired, sued the defendant on the bill of exchange:—Held, that he was not precluded by the agreement from recovering. Cranley v. Hilliary, 2 M. & S. 120.

What Amounts to an Agreement.—To an action on a bill by the executors of the indorsee against the acceptors, they pleaded that the acceptance was an accommodation acceptance for the drawer with the knowledge of the indorsee; and that the drawer became insolvent, and the indorsees, the defendants, and two other creditors, agreed among themselves, as his friends, to release their several back debts and liabilities. The plea averred that the defendants and the two other creditors did discharge and release their several debts, and then went on to state that the indorsee, in consideration of the premises, and that certain other creditors would release, abandon, and never enforce payment of their debts, agreed with the defendants that he would never ask for, sue for, demand, or enforce payment of the bill of exchange. There was an averment that the other creditors had released their debts. The evidence was that the indorsee at first promised to sign the account, if some more signatures were obtained to it; but, after they were obtained, he refused to sign it, but said on one occasion that he knew the bill was an accommodation bill, and he should not call on the defendants to pay it; and on another, that the bill should not come against any of the parties, but that he himself would come in as the rest of the creditors. The agreement signed by the creditors contained these words: "We, the undersigned, do hereby agree to accept of a release from E. A. (the drawer) of the equity of redemption, &c.; and we agree, upon the execution of such deed, to execute releases." The indorsee died, and the action on the bill was brought by the executors:—Held, that the allegations in the plea were not sustained by the evidence. Deacon v. Stodhart, 9 C. & P. 685.

— Conditional Promise to Sign.—The defendant, being in difficulties, called a meeting of his creditors, one of whom was the plaintiff, and proposed a composition to them, which, however, was not arranged. A witness, who was clerk to an accountant employed by the defendant, proved that he afterwards showed to the plaintiff a composition paper, which had already been signed by some of the creditors, and asked him to sign it also. The paper purported to be a memorandum, by which each of the undersigned creditors, in consideration of the agreement therein contained on the part of the others, agreed with the others, and also with the defendant, to accept a composition of 10s. in the pound. The plaintiff being informed that L., one of the creditors, had not signed, said that he would not sign until L. had done so. The witness left the plaintiff on the understanding that he was to get L. to sign, and then that he (the plaintiff) would sign. The witness did get L. to sign, but the plaintiff could not be induced to keep his promise, and never did sign:—Held, in an action by the plaintiff to recover the amount of his debt, that these facts did not constitute any defence, as no such agreement can operate as a defence if made merely between the debtor and a single creditor; and also that there was no agreement with the plaintiff, as the composition paper was expressly confined to those who had signed it. Boyd v. Hind, 1 H. & N. 938; 26 L. J., Ex. 164; 3 Jur., N. S. 566.

Held, also, that there was no evidence that the plaintiff authorized the witness, as his agent, to make any representations to L. that he would sign if L. signed. Id.

Held, also, that the plaintiff might, perhaps, be liable to an action on the breach of the promise to sign the paper. Id.

Right to Sue for other Debts.—It may be doubtful whether a creditor accepting a composition on certain bills, the debtor and the other creditors not supposing that he is the holder of any other bills for which the debtor is liable, can sue upon such other bills; but if he induces others to agree to the composition, on the faith of his false representation that he is not the holder of the other bills, or that the bills for which he accepts the composition are the only bills of the debtor which he holds, he cannot afterwards sue the debtor upon them. Blackstone v. Wilson, 26 L. J., Ex. 229.

Signing Preliminary Resolutions—Refusal by Trustees to allow Creditor to come in under Deed.—The plaintiff attended a meeting of the defendants' creditors, and concurred in certain resolutions for the execution of a release to the defendants, on their executing an assignment of all their effects to trustees for distribution amongst their creditors. The defendants and the trustees at first disputed the amount of the plaintiff's debt, but subsequently altogether refused to allow him to come in under the deed:—Held, that his having signed the preliminary resolutions was, under the circumstances, no bar to his right to sue the defendants for his original debt. Garrard v. Woolner, 1 M. & Scott, 327; 8 Bing. 258; 4 C. & P. 471.

e. Time and Mode of Accession.

What is an Accession.—A creditor cannot be said in any sense to have acceded to the provisions of a composition deed unless he has put himself in the same situation with regard to the debtor as if he had actually executed the deed.

Forbes v. Limond, 4 De G., Mac. & G. 298; 18 Jur. 33.

— Acquiescence.—It is not, in equity, necessary that a creditor should execute a creditors' deed; if he does some act which amounts to acquiescence, he is entitled to the benefit of it; but it is not sufficient in him merely to stand by and take no part in the matter. Biron v. Mount, 24 Beav. 642; 27 L. J., Ch. 191; 4 Jur., N. S. 43.

A debtor executed an assignment to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, in consideration of their covenanting not to take any proceedings against him for three years; and it was provided that those creditors who should not execute the deed within six months should be excluded from the benefits conferred thereby. One of the creditors neglected to sign the deed, but acquiesced in it, and took no proceedings against the debtor:—Held, that such creditor, having treated the deed as valid, and acquiesced in its provisions, was entitled to the benefits conferred by it. Baber, In re, 10 L. R., Eq. 554.

— Form of Assent.—A proposal having been made to creditors to accept "a composition, payable in equal instalments at three, six, and nine months, the two last instalments to be secured," certain creditors assented, on the 27th of May, in the following form:—"We agree to the composition proposed, and authorize you to sign such deed on our behalf, and undertake to execute the deed of release if tendered for that purpose."—Held, that assents in this form were not sufficient to bind the creditors to a deed not executed till the 7th of August or registered till the 11th under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, because they did not state how the instalments were to be secured, or from what time the periods of three, six, and nine months were to be calculated; and also because the deed was not executed within a reasonable time after the assents were given. Birks v. Clarke, 5 L. R., Ex. 197; 39 L. J., Ex. 166; 23 L. T. 162; 18 W. R. 814.

— Not Assenting within Time limited.—Upon a composition deed, the benefits of which were in terms limited to creditors who should come in and accede to the deed within a limited time, certain creditors, who neither assented to nor dissented from the deed during such time, were, under the circumstances, afterwards admitted to share in the benefit of the composition, together with those who had acceded before the expiration of the stipulated time. Although the deed contained no release or stipulation that the dividend was to be taken in full satisfaction of the debts:—Held, that satisfaction ought to be inferred, as the deed constituted a cessio bonorum. Whitmore v. Turquand, 3 De G., F. & J. 107; 30 L. J., Ch. 335; 7 Jur., N. S. 377; 4 L. T. 38; 9 W. R. 488.

A creditor assigned property to trustees upon trust to sell and apply the clear proceeds in payment of the debts owing by him to such of his creditors as should, before a certain day, execute the deed, and the surplus, if any, to the assignor, and the deed contained a release by the creditors. The assignor and the trustees, who were also creditors, executed the deed at once. No other creditor executed before the stipulated day; but notice of the deed was given to them all, and they forebore to sue, and fifteen years afterwards some were permitted to execute, the trustees meanwhile having taken possession of and sold part of the property:—Held, that the deed was binding on the assignor, and that the creditors were entitled to have the trusts of it carried into effect. Nicholson v. Tutin, 2 Kay & J. 18; 1 Jur., N. S. 1201.

— Duty of Trustees to enlarge Time.—A creditors' deed contained a proviso, that such creditors as should not execute or assent in writing to the deed on or before a certain day, or within such further time, not exceeding thirty days, as the trustees should appoint, should be excluded from the benefit of the deed. The trustees issued an advertisement, which stated their power of extending the time for execution. The debtor owed his son a large sum of money. The son was in America at the date of the deed. A solicitor, who had acted for him when in England, on the last day for execution wrote to the trustees on behalf of the son, signifying his assent to the deed. Subsequently he received from the son a power of attorney to execute the deed, and before the end of the period for which the trustees might have enlarged the time for executing the deed, he applied to them to permit him to execute on behalf of the son:—Held, that the son was entitled, under these circumstances, to the benefit of the deed, because it was the duty of the trustees to enlarge the time, so as to allow his attorney to execute the deed. Raworth v. Parker, 2 Kay & J. 163; 25 L. J., Ch. 117.

— Time of Essence of Promise.—A voluntarily covenanted to raise a fund for payment of a composition on the debts, owing by his father and his grandfather, to all such of their creditors as should execute the deed of composition within a limited time. Certain creditors executed within the time stipulated, and a sum sufficient to satisfy their claims was charged by the covenantor, by way of mortgage to the trustees of the composition deed, on his real estate:—Held, that time was of the essence of the promise, and that, as against creditors who had executed in due time, others who had failed to execute were not entitled to have the benefit of the deed. Williams v. Mostyn, 33 L. J., Ch. 54; 9 L. T. 476; 12 W. R. 69.

— Mortgagee.—A debtor assigned all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, with a proviso, that, in case any creditor should not come in under the deed for six months after its date, he should be peremptorily excluded from the benefit of it:—Held, that a mortgagee of part of the property, whose solicitor corresponded with the trustees on the subject of the mortgage, but who did not express any intention to come in under the deed for some years afterwards, was not entitled to the benefit of the trust. Gould v. Robertson, 4 De G. & S. 509.

— Equitable Relief.—Though a creditor, who is prevented by accident signing a composition deed within the period specially appointed for that purpose, may obtain equitable relief, yet it will not be extended to one who has delayed making his claim, and has set up a title adversely to the deed. Watson v. Knight, 19 Beav. 369.

Whatever may be the general rule, if there is any, as to extending indulgence to a creditor under a composition deed, who does not claim the benefit of the deed within the time specified therein, that rule does not apply to a creditor who actively refuses to come in under or assent to the deed within the time limited, and who does not retract such refusal within that time. Johnson v. Kershaw, 1 De G. & S. 260; 11 Jur. 553, 795.

An agreement to guarantee a composition to all the creditors of a third person who should, before a day specified, sign a release to the debtor of their respective claims, is an agreement entered into with such creditors only as actually sign before that day, and cannot be enforced in favour of a creditor, who, in consequence of a misapprehension by both parties of their respective rights, failed to sign the release before the day specified. Emmet v. Dewhurst, 3 Mac. & G. 587; 21 L. J., Ch. 497; 15 Jur. 1115.

— Judgment Creditor.—Trust deeds were prepared for the benefit of creditors, and a time was fixed within which the creditors were to execute or be excluded from the benefit of such deeds, the trustees having discretion to allow creditors to sign after the period fixed. A judgment creditor relying upon his claim as paramount to the deeds, declined to execute during twenty-two years. The judgment subsequently turned out to be invalid, and he petitioned the court, in a suit instituted for carrying into effect the trusts of the deeds, to be allowed the benefit of such deeds, and offered to execute them:—Held, that there was no such case of mistake or misapprehension as to constitute an equity. Brandling v. Plummer, 27 L. J., Ch. 188.

W. entered into a composition deed, by which the creditors should accept a composition of 10s. in the pound, secured by the joint and several promissory notes of the defendant and W.; the notes to be delivered seven days after the registration of the deed; the whole of W.'s estate to belong to the defendant, and to be realized for his benefit. The plaintiff agreed to assent to the deed and afterwards refused to be bound by it, on the ground that his assent had been obtained by fraud. The deed was duly registered, and the notes were tendered to the plaintiff, but he refused to accept them. The plaintiff then brought an action for his debt against W., who pleaded the composition deed, which was a valid deed on the face of it, and the plaintiff replied that the assents were obtained by fraud. The action was referred, and the defendant being unable to prove the sufficiency of the assenting creditors, so as to satisfy the statute, consented that an award should be made by which the verdict should be entered in the plaintiff's favour. W. was afterwards adjudged bankrupt. The defendant had realized W.'s estate. The plaintiff then brought an action against the defendant for the amount of the notes given by the defendant for the composition due to the plaintiff under the deed:—Held, that the action was not maintainable, and that whether the deed was invalid or not could not be determined, and that his proper remedy was by application to the Court of Bankruptcy, which had power to do complete justice between the parties. Latter v. White, 5 L. R., H. L. 578; 41 L. J., Q. B. 342. Affirming S. C. in Ex. Ch., 6 L. R., Q. B. 474; 40 L. J., Q. B. 162; 25 L. T. 658; 19 W. R. 1149; Reversing S. C., 5 L. R., Q. B. 622; 40 L. J., Q. B. 9; 23 L. T. 242; 19 W. R. 63.

Creditor coming in After.—A creditor who has, as between himself and the debtor, successfully contested in a court of law the validity of a creditors' or composition deed executed by his debtor, is not thereby precluded from afterwards coming in under the deed, and obtaining the benefits which he would only be entitled to on the footing that the deed was valid. Id.

f. Amount and Nature of Debt.

Debt left Blank.—Where a creditor signs a deed of composition leaving the amount of his debt in blank, he binds himself to all existing debts. Harry v. Wall, 1 B. & A. 101; 2 Stark. 195. See Margetson v. Aitkin, 3 C. & P. 338.

Debt erroneously Understated.—And an indemnity against a debt owing by a person, which is erroneously understated, covers the whole amount. Hancock v. Clay, 2 Stark. 100.

Filling up Blank after Execution.—A debtor executed a deed conveying his property to trustees to sell for the benefit of creditors, the particulars of whose demand were stated in the deed; a blank was left for one of the principal debts, the exact amount of which being subsequently ascertained was inserted in the blank the next day in the debtor's presence, and with his assent; he afterwards recognized the deed as valid in various ways, as by letters, and particularly by being present when it was executed by his wife, and by joining her in a fine to enure to the uses of the deed:—Held, that the deed was valid notwithstanding the filling up of the blank after execution. Hudson v. Revett, 5 Bing. 368; 2 M. & P. 663.

Blank filled up with wrong Amount.—To an action against an acceptor of a bill for 337l., he pleaded a release. The plaintiff replied, non est factum; and that a blank was left in the deed for the plaintiff's debt, which, after execution by him, was filled up erroneously, without his authority. The evidence was, that, after the acceptance, the plaintiff became indebted to the defendant in 142l. for goods sold; that afterwards the plaintiff signed the deed, which recited that the defendant was indebted to certain persons, parties thereto, in the sums set opposite to their names in the schedule; and in consideration of a guarantee of 10s. in the pound by a third party, the creditors, parties thereto, released the debts then owing to them. The plaintiff executed the deed, but a blank was left opposite to his name, which afterwards, without his authority, was filled up with the sum of 337l. The jury found that the debt which the parties meant to be released was the balance, after deducting the 142l. from the 337l.:—Held, that on these facts the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict on the issues on both replications. Fazakerly v. McKnight, 6 El. & Bl. 795; 26 L. J., Q. B. 30; 2 Jur., N. S. 1020.

Signing without Prejudice to Securities.—A., a creditor of a firm, held securities from one of its members for money advanced by him at different times to the firm, but claimed a balance beyond what those securities would cover; all the creditors of the firm agreed to accept a composition of 7s. for every 20s. due to the creditors respectively. A. was the first to sign this deed, but added to his signature the words, "without prejudice to any securities whatever that I hold;" the other creditors signed in their respective order under A.'s signature:—Held, that such a composition, thus accepted, did not affect the rights of A. upon his previous securities, but only related to the balance beyond the sum they would cover, and that he might afterwards enforce those securities in equity. Duffy v. Orr, 1 C. & F. 253; 5 Bligh, N. S. 620.

What Debts released—Dilapidations.]—A rector of a parish died insolvent, leaving the rectory-house dilapidated. He was indebted to W., who, with other creditors, received a composition for their debts from the widow and administratrix of the deceased rector, and they executed a general release by signing their names against the amount stated in a schedule. W. succeeded to the rectory, and he made a further claim of 200*l.* against the estate of the insolvent for dilapidations. The insolvent's widow, afterwards, by her will, charged her real and personal estate with payment of her husband's debts. In a suit in equity for the administration of her estate:—Held, that the release discharged all the claims of W. against the estate of the insolvent, and that the claim for dilapidations was not payable under the will of the testatrix. Bisnott v. Burgess, 23 Beav. 278; 26 L. J., Ch. 697; 2 Jur., N. S. 1221.

Fraud—Right to follow Goods.]—H., a commission agent, being employed by B. to effect sales of goods at B.'s risk, had goods consigned to him by B., to be forwarded to W. H. fraudulently sent these goods to R. on his own account, and afterwards assigned his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. A balance was due from R. to H.:—Held, that B. was entitled to the balance due from R., in part discharge of the amount due to him (B.) from H., and to prove under the assignment for the balance. Broadbent v. Barlow, 30 L. J., Ch. 569; 7 Jur., N. S. 479; 4 L. T. 193.

g. Creditors must be treated on an Equal Footing.

A composition deed must appear on the face of it to be for the benefit of all the creditors. Ilderton v. Jewell, 33 L. J., C. P. 148; 10 Jur., N. S. 747; 9 L. T. 815; 12 W. R. 530—Ex. Ch.

The deed of arrangement contemplated by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 192, is one which is made for the benefit of all the creditors of the debtor, and to which all may become parties. Berridge v. Abbott, 13 C. B., N. S. 507; S. P., Copeman v. Hart, 14 C. B., N. S. 91; Dewhurst v. Kershaw, 1 H. & C. 726; 32 L. J., Ex. 146; 7 L. T. 720; 11 W. R. 315.

Where executing Creditors are in a worse Position than the Others.]—The position, that a deed is not good unless it puts all the creditors on an equal footing, does not extend to cases in which the executing creditors voluntarily put themselves in a worse position than those whom they seek to bind. Hidson v. Barclay, 3 H. & C. 361; 34 L. J., Ex. 217; 12 L. T. 353; 13 W. R. 583—Ex. Ch.

Creditors who execute or accede to a valid composition deed may, by a separate deed, enter into a collateral engagement with the debtor, provided they do not obtain any benefit not conferred on dissenting creditors. Id.

Deeds held Good.]—A deed of composition was made between a debtor and the several persons who subscribed the schedule thereto, "on behalf of themselves and all and every other the creditors" of the debtor, and shewed a clear intention that all creditors should be equally benefited:—Held, that all the creditors were parties; that there was no inequality, and that the deed was good. McLaren v. Baxter, 2 L. R., C. P. 559; 36 L. J., C. P. 247; 16 L. T. 521; 15 W. R. 1017.

A composition deed, containing a covenant with all the creditors for paying the composition, and a release by the parties of the first part, was expressed to be made between "the several parties whose names were subscribed and seals affixed, creditors of the debtor on behalf of themselves and all and every other the creditors of the debtor of the one part, and the debtor of the second part":—Held, that all the creditors were parties to the deed, and could sue on the covenant, and that there was, therefore, no inequality. Isaacs v. Green, 2 L. R., Ex. 352; 36 L. J., Ex. 253; 16 L. T. 633.

A deed between the debtor of the first part, D., a surety, of the second part, and the several persons, creditors of the debtor, whose names were thereunto subscribed, and all other the creditors of the debtor, of the third part, after reciting that the debtor was indebted "to the said several creditors in the several sums of money set opposite to their respective names in the schedule" thereunder written; and that it had been agreed by the requisite majority in number and value of the said several creditors to accept the composition and security therein expressed in full satisfaction of their respective debts, witnessed that, in consideration of the joint and several promissory notes of the debtor and D. for the payment of such composition "on the respective sums of money aforesaid," they, the creditors, parties thereto of the third part, released to the debtor all actions, suits, debts, claims and demands, which they had against him, and accepted the stipulated composition in full satisfaction of the debts and sums due to them specified in the schedule; and the debtor and D. covenanted with each and every of the creditors, parties thereto, of the third part, to pay the composition "upon their respective debts as aforesaid," and to make and deliver to them the promissory notes:—Held, that there was no inequality in the deed, as on the true construction of it all the creditors, whether their debts were scheduled or not, were equally entitled to the benefit of the covenants therein contained. Tutley v. Wanless, 2 L. R., Ex. 275; 36 L. J., Ex. 153; 16 L. T. 601; 15 W. R. 356—Ex. Ch.

By a deed expressed to be made between a debtor of the one part, and all his creditors of the other part, he covenanted with all his creditors to pay them a compensation by instalments, and also that, "as soon as the deed should be delivered to him, signed and sealed by the said several creditors, he would give to each of them, the said several creditors, promissory notes or acceptances for the payment of the instalments, signed or indorsed by two sureties":—Held, that the latter covenant, if operative at all, would have the effect of giving the promissory notes to all the creditors without distinction, and that therefore it created no inequality. Peel v. Webster, 36 L. J., Ex. 188; 16 L. T. 598.

A deed purported to be made by the debtor of the first part, H., a creditor, of the second part, J., trustee, of the third part, the executing creditors of the fourth part, and the non-executing creditors of the fifth part. After reciting that the creditors had agreed to accept 10s. in the pound by way of composition, the deed contained a joint and several covenant by the debtor, and H. with J., that immediately upon registration, they would pay him such a sum as would be sufficient to pay to all the creditors an instalment of 7s. 6d. in the pound upon their debts, with a proviso, that the separate estate of H. should be primarily liable under the covenant; secondly, a similar covenant to pay to J. a sum sufficient to pay the remaining instalment of 2s. 6d. in the pound within twelve months to all the creditors (other than H.); thirdly, a covenant by the debtor with H. to pay to him, on registration of the deed, and within twelve calendar months, the instalments of 7s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. in the pound in respect of his debt; fourthly, a declaration that J. should stand possessed of the sums so paid in respect of the instalments, in trust, after the registration of the deed, upon demand in writing by H. and the other creditors, to pay to them the instalments; and, fifthly, a general release by H. and the parties of the fourth part of the debts due to them from the debtor.—Held, that the deed was valid, there being no such inequality in favour of H. as to avoid the same; and that the deed was pleadable as a release in bar to an action by a non-assenting creditor. Wells v. Hacon, 5 B. & S. 196; 33 L. J., Q. B. 204; 10 Jur., N. S. 862; 10 L. T. 411; 12 W. R. 790.

A composition deed between the debtor of the first part, and all his creditors of the second part, after reciting that it was intended to relate to the debtor's liabilities and his release therefrom, and to operate equally for the benefit of, and to bind all the creditors assenting or dissenting, the debtor covenanted with the parties of the second part to pay them a composition on the amounts of their debts. The deed also contained a release to the debtor from all debts:—Held, that dissenting creditors, although not named therein, were made parties to the deed by description, and that the deed was valid. Reeves v. Watts, 1 L. R., Q. B. 412; 35 L. J., Q. B. 171; 12 Jur., N. S. 565; 14 L. T. 478; 14 W. R. 672.

A composition deed made between a debtor of the one part and all his creditors of the other part, and containing a covenant whereby the debtor covenanted to pay all his creditors a composition upon their debts and in consideration of such covenant they release their debts, is good, inasmuch as it makes all creditors parties, and any creditor may sue upon the covenant, though he may not have executed the deed. Gresty v. Gibson, 1 L. R., Ex. 112; 35 L. J., Ex. 74; 12 Jur., N. S. 319; 13 L. T. 676; 14 W. R. 284; 4 H. & C. 28.

By a deed between the debtors of the first part, trustees of the second part, and "the several persons, joint and separate creditors of the debtors, whose names and seals are hereunto set and affixed," of the third part, after reciting that the parties of the first part stood indebted on their joint account to the several persons and in the several sums set opposite their names in the schedules thereunder, and were also indebted to certain other persons, and that, being unable to pay their joint and separate creditors the whole of their demands, they had agreed to convey all their joint and separate estate to the parties of the second part in trust for themselves and the rest of the creditors rateably and in such manner as the joint and separate estate would be distributable under a fiat of bankruptcy, and that the parties of the second and third parts had agreed to release the debtors; the parties of the first part, "by and with the consent of the creditors parties hereto," conveyed all their estate to the parties of the second part, upon trust to convert the same, and "to pay and apply so much of the trust moneys as should arise from the conversion of the partnership property of the debtors in and towards payment and discharge of the several debts due and owing to the several joint creditors of the debtors, or so much of the same debts as the same trust moneys will extend to pay rateably and in proportion, but so as the same shall be paid and applied in the same way as would be done in bankruptcy;" and to pay and apply so much of the trust moneys as arose from the conversion of the separate property of the debtors in payment of their separate debts. The deed contained also a covenant by the trustees to make a faithful distribution of the moneys "unto and amongst the several joint and separate creditors of the debtors, according to their rights and interests and the true intent and meaning of these presents;" a release of the debtors by the parties of the second and third parts, and a declaration that the trustees should take all possible steps for making the deed "binding upon all the creditors of the joint and separate estates of the debtors, whether parties to the deed or not." It was admitted that the deed, which was duly registered, was executed by all the joint creditors, but no sums or amounts were set opposite their names, and it was not suggested that there was any creditor who had not taken his benefit under it. In an action by the trustees under the deed, for a debt accruing due from the defendant to the debtors before the date of the deed:—Held, that the evident intention on the face of the deed being that it should be a good deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and one by which all the creditors would be entitled to benefit, the words appended to the description of the parties of the third part, apparently limiting its operation to the creditors "whose names and seals are hereunder set and affixed," might be rejected as falsa demonstratio, and that they did not control or overrule the general intention of the deed that all the creditors, and not a portion of them only, were to be benefited. But that at all events the deed, as against the defendant, who was not a party to it, was good to pass a chose in action, and the trustees might sue in their own names. Durant v. Robinson. 34 L. T. 617.

A deed between A. and his creditors, reciting that A. was unable to pay 20s. in the pound, and had applied to his creditors to receive and take a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound, proceeded, "which we, the several creditors signing these presents, have agreed to, and being a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value of the creditors whose debts amount to 10l. and upwards, have agreed to accept, and in consideration, and on payment thereof, or whenever thereafter called upon for the purpose, severally undertake and agree to execute to A. a good and sufficient release in law of our claims upon him," is a valid deed, as affording the same remedy to those of the creditors who had not, as to those who had, signed the same. Clapham v. Atkinson, 4 B. & S. 722; 33 L. J., Q. B. 81; 10 Jur., N. S. 357; 9 L. T. 679; 12 W. R. 342. Affirmed, 4 B. & S. 722, 730; 34 L. J., Q. B. 49; 11 Jur., N. S. 217; 10 L. T. 908; 12 W. R. 1062—Ex. Ch.

Preference given to Creditor guaranteeing Composition.]—A debtor assigned his property for realization and distribution to a creditor, who covenanted, as surety, with the general body of creditors, to pay to them by instalments 5s. in the pound on their debts, which sum he was also himself to receive, provided that he should not be liable under such covenant for a greater amount in the whole than 3,000*l*. The deed provided that the surety should apply any surplus, which might remain after the payment of the composition, towards the payment of the remaining 15s. in the pound on his own debt, it being stipulated that he "should have the advantage of this security for the remainder of his debt, in consideration of his undertaking the liability of suretyship."—Held, that this stipulation created no such inequality as to avoid the deed. Bisnell v. Jones, 4 L. R., Q. B. 48; 38 L. J., Q. B. 2; 19 L. T. 262; 17 W. R. 49; 9 B. & S. 884.

The deed also provided, that if the surety should arrange with any creditor to make an immediate payment of the composition payable to him, with a deduction therefrom by way of discount in consideration of such immediate payment, the surety should be at liberty to repay himself out of the trust fund the full amount of the composition payable to such creditor, without deducting the sum allowed to the surety for discount:—Held, that this created no such inequality as to avoid the deed. Id.

By a deed between N. of the first part, D., a creditor of N., of the second part, and all N.'s creditors of the third part, N. & D. covenanted with all the other creditors for payment to them of a composition of 4s. in the pound on their debts; and all the creditors released N. from the original debts, subject to a proviso making the deed void on default in payment of the composition, and N. assigned over his property to D. absolutely:—Held, that this deed was not on its face void as giving an undue advantage to D. Nicholson, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 332; 22 L. T. 286; 18 W. R. 411.

— Promissory Notes given to Executing Creditors—Covenant to give them also to Others.]

—By a composition deed entered into between a debtor of the first part, the creditors who executed the deed of the second part, S. of the third part, and a trustee, on behalf of creditors not parties to the deed, of the fourth part, the debtor covenanted with the creditors who executed the deed to deliver to them certain promissory notes as security for the payment of the amount of the composition settled by the deed. He also covenanted with the trustee that he would deliver like notes to the creditors who were not parties to the deed:—Held, that the advantage which the former class of creditors acquired over the latter class, by reason of their being able to sue in their own names in respect of a breach of the covenant, while the latter could only sue in respect of such a breach of covenant by using the name of the trustee, was not such an advantage as would make the deed bad upon the ground of inequality. Soury v. Law, 3 L. R., Q. B. 281; 37 L. J., Q. B. 96; 16 W. R. 145, 725.

A deed of composition, containing a release in consideration of payment by promissory notes, is not unequal, because the non-assenting creditors have not the notes tendered to them, and have no direct notice. Blumberg v. Rose, 1 L. R., Ex. 232; 35 L. J., Ex. 144; 12 Jur., N. S. 378; 14 L. T. 365; 14 W. R. 657; 4 H. & C. 311.

— Non-executing Creditors to demand Composition in Writing.]—A deed of arrangement between a debtor and his creditors, containing a clause that, in case any dividend should be declared before all the creditors had executed or assented to the deed, the inspectors should retain a sufficient sum for the purpose of paying the dividends of non-assenting creditors and creditors whose dividends had not been ascertained, the amount of which should be paid to them upon their request in writing, imposes no unreasonable condition on those creditors. Herrnulewicz v. Jay, 6 B. & S. 697; 34 L. J., Q. B. 201; 11 Jur., N. S. 581; 12 L. T. 494; 13 W. R. 807; S. P., Strick v. De Mattos, 3 H. & C. 22; 33 L. J., Ex. 276; 10 Jur., N. S. 753; 10 L. T. 590; 12 W. R. 963. Affirmed, nom. Woods v. De Mattos, 1 L. R., Ex. 91; 35 L. J., Ex. 664; 12 Jur., N. S. 78; 14 W. R. 226; 3 H. & C. 987—Ex. Ch.

To an action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange he pleaded an inspectorship deed, which provided, that in case any dividend should be declared before all the creditors had executed or assented to the deed, the inspectors should retain a sufficient sum for the purpose of paying a dividend to any creditor who should not have executed the deed; upon his request in writing:—Held, that this provision did not make the deed bad. Bailey v. Bowen, 3 L. R., Q. B. 133; 37 L. J., Q. B. 61; 17 L. T. 470; 16 W. R. 396.

The deed also provided, that if any of the creditors should at any time thereafter while the deed was in force prosecute any action against the debtor in respect of their respective debts, the deed should have the same force and effect as an order of discharge granted under an adjudication in bankruptcy, and should be pleadable in bar as a defence, and that a certificate given by the inspectors of the conclusion of the winding up of the estate should be conclusive evidence of the facts therein certified, and that the debtor should be absolutely released:—Held, that this provision was unobjectionable. Id.

The deed also provided, that the inspectors might authorize or require the debtor to enter into or undertake new contracts in the way of his trade or business:—Held, that the reasonableness of such a provision was a matter for the consideration of the creditors themselves, and that there was nothing in it upon which the court could hold that the deed was not a good deed. Id.

Deeds held Bad.]—A deed of composition which purports to be made between the debtor and such of his creditors as shall execute the same, and which either expressly or impliedly excludes from its benefits and provisions non-executing creditors, is not a valid deed. Ilder-ton v. Castrique, 14 C. B., N. S. 99; 32 L. J., C. P. 206; 9 Jur., N. S. 993; 8 L. T. 537; 11 W. R. 753.

The 192nd section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, applies only to deeds which contain provisions for the benefit of all the debtor's creditors, and this requisite is not fulfilled by a deed, the trusts of which are for the benefit of such of the debtor's creditors as shall execute the deed within a limited time. Morgan, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 288; 32 L. J., Bk. 15; 9 Jur., N. S. 559; 7 L. T. 729; 11 W. R. 316.

To an action upon a bill of exchange by in-dorsee against acceptor, he pleaded a composition deed, which contained a covenant to pay all the creditors the several sums of money placed opposite to their names in the schedule of the deed. The plaintiff's debt was not scheduled:—Held, that there being no provision made for debts not scheduled, the deed was no answer to the action. Bucelot v. Mills, 1 L. R., Q. B. 104; 35 L. J., Q. B. 3; 13 L. T. 321; 14 W. R. 98.

A composition deed was made between the scheduled creditors on behalf of themselves and all the other creditors of the one part, and the debtor of the other part. The debtor agreed to pay a composition to all the creditors at a future day, and the creditors agreed to accept the composition, and released the debtor:—Held, that only the scheduled creditors could sue for the composition, and therefore the deed was unequal, and not binding upon non-assenting creditors. Gurrie v. Kopera, 3 H. & C. 694; 34 L. J., Ex. 128; 11 Jur., N. S. 491; 12 L. T. 432; 13 W. R. 843.

A deed of composition being made between the persons whose names were in the schedule, creditors of H., of the first part, H. of the second part, and sureties of H. of the third part, and containing covenants on the part of the parties of the first part, and all other, if any, the creditors of H., that the deed should, in consideration of a covenant by H. to pay 10s. in the pound, operate as a release of his debts to them, and a covenant by H. to pay the composition at a future day:—Held, first, that the non-executing and non-assenting creditors could not sue on the covenant to pay the composition. Chesterfield, Midland, and Silkstone Company v. Hawkins, 3 H. & C. 677; 34 L. J., Ex. 121; 11 Jur., N. S. 468; 12 L. T. 427; 13 W. R. 840.

Held, secondly, that the non-executing and non-assenting creditors were not in the same position, and the deed was void as against a non-assenting creditor. Id.

— Composition Paid to Executing Creditors on Execution.—A deed, by which, in consideration of a composition paid to the creditors executing the deed, those creditors released the debtor, and the debtor covenanted to pay a like composition to parties not executing, is bad, on the ground that the creditors who did not execute are placed in a worse position than those who did. Cockburn, Ex parte, 33 L. J., Bk. 17; 10 Jur., N. S. 573; 10 L. T. 252; 12 W. R. 673.

A deed, in which the creditors are entitled to the composition "on signing the deed," places the non-signing creditors in a disadvantageous position, and is void on that account. Martin

v. Gribble, 3 H. & C. 631; 34 L. J., Ex. 108; 11 Jur., N. S. 490; 12 L. T. 395; 13 W. R. 690; S. P., Kilby v. Wright, 18 C. B., N. S. 272.

— Covenant to pay "present Creditors."—A composition deed should be so framed as to give to the assenting and non-assenting creditors equal rights under it. Broadhurst v. Benham, 3 H. & C. 472; 34 L. J., Ex. 61; 11 Jur., N. S. 20; 11 L. T. 537; 13 W. R. 183—Ex. Ch.

A composition deed recited that the debtor was indebted to the several creditors, parties to the deed; and the debtor covenanted with "the several persons parties thereto of the other part respectively," that he would pay "unto all and every the present creditors of him," the debtor, 5s. in the pound on the several amounts of their debts; and in consideration of the premises, and until default made, "each of them doth hereby, for himself and herself, so far as relates to his and her own acts, covenant with (the debtor), that they will not sue:"—Held, that this covenant being with the assenting creditors only, the non-assenting creditors were not in so good a position as those assenting, and therefore, that the deed was bad. Id.

— Covenant to pay Parties to Deed.—Declaration on a bill of exchange against the acceptor. Plea, that by deed between the acceptor of the first part, two creditors and trustees for themselves and other creditors of the second part, and the other undersigned creditors of the acceptor of the third part, he assigned all his estate to trustees, to pay a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound upon the amount of the debts due to the several parties to the deed of the third part:—Held, that the deed confined its benefits to the parties, and not to the creditors generally, and was therefore bad. Davis v. Raphael, 11 Jur., N. S. 140; 11 L. T. 539; 13 W. R. 185—Ex. Ch.

Creditors under £10 to be paid when Trustee thinks Fit.—A composition deed, by virtue of which the statutory majority of creditors agrees to accept a composition, payable by instalments at the end of two, four, and six months respectively, containing a proviso empowering the trustees to pay those creditors whose compositions do not exceed 10l., in one sum, at such time as they should think fit, is unequal and unreasonable. Thompson v. Knight, 2 L. R., Ex. 42; 36 L. J., Ex. 30; 15 L. T. 285; 15 W. R. 283.

Construction of Deed.—A composition, "between all and every, the creditors and creditor, hereinafter called the creditors" of E. of the one part, and E. of the other part, after reciting his inability to pay his debts in full, and the agreement of the creditors to accept a composition of 12s. in the pound, of which 10s. in the pound were to be secured by promissory notes, and an instalment of 2s. in the pound in cash, to be paid "at or immediately before the execution of these presents," witnessed, that in consideration of the premises and of the delivery to the creditors of the promissory notes, "and of the payment by E. to the creditors on their execution thereof, of 2s. in the pound, which delivery and payment the creditors hereby acknowledge," they, the creditors, released unto E. all actions, suits, debts, &c.:—Held, by Cockburn, C. J., and Crompton J., that the proper construction of the deed was, that the promissory notes and the 2s. in the pound were secured to these only of the creditors who executed the deed; and that, therefore, the deed was not a valid one; but, by Blackburn, J., and Mellor, J., that the effect of the deed was to confer the like advantages upon executing and non-executing creditors, and that it was, therefore valid, and binding upon the latter. Dingwall v. Edwards, 4 B. & S. 738; 33 L. J., Q. B. 161; 10 Jur., N. S. 386; 10 L. T. 132; 12 W. R. 597.

h. Reasonable and Unreasonable Provisions.

In Case of Non-execution—Non-execution is not a Refusal.—Where there was a proviso, "that if all and every the creditors should refuse to execute or otherwise consent to the deed within six months from the date thereof, it should be void:" and some of the creditors did not execute the deed, but there was no evidence of their refusing to do so:—Held, that such non-execution was not a refusal within the meaning of the proviso, and did not make the deed void. Holmes v. Love, 5 D. & R. 56; 3 B. & C. 242; R. & M. 138.

—Concurrence a Condition Precedent.—An agreement, whereby a debtor undertook to convey his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, contained a proviso that the agreement was to be void, unless the creditors, whose names and descriptions were stated on the other side of the agreement, should concur in the arrangement:—Held, that this was not a condition precedent, the performance of which the debtor was bound to aver on setting up the agreement as an answer to an action by one of his creditors. Matthews v. Taylor, 2 M. & G. 667; 3 Scott, N. R. 52; 5 Jur. 321.

—What is Equivalent to Signing.—Where a composition deed is entered into with a clause that, if certain creditors do not sign, it shall be null and void; if such creditors accept of the composition, or the security for it, though they do not actually sign the deed, it is valid and good. Jolly v. Wallis, 3 Esp. 228.

—Onus on Creditor to prove Refusal.—A debtor agreed to assign all his property in trust for his creditors, upon the usual covenants, and to be void if not signed before a given day by all the creditors; and the trustees sold the property, and paid sixteen shillings in the pound, and a creditor had not executed within the given time mentioned, nor would the debtor execute:—Held, that an action could not be maintained by a creditor who had executed, until it was ascertained that the other creditor would not execute. Tutlock v. Smith, 6 Bing. 339; 3 M. & P. 676.

—Delivery without Condition—Escrow.—Previously to the execution of a composition deed, it was agreed in the presence of a surety for the payment of the composition that it should be void unless all the creditors executed it: a creditor at the same interview, but subsequently to such agreement, executed the deed in the ordinary way, and without saying anything at the time of the execution. The deed was then delivered to one of the creditors, who was to get it executed by the rest:—Held, that the condition previously expressed, although not introduced into the act of delivery, was sufficient to make this a delivery of the deed as an escrow, and that all the creditors not having executed it the surety was not bound thereby. Johnson v. Baker, 4 B. & A. 440.

—Creditors to be paid in Full need not Sign.]

—A composition deed by which a tradesman assigned all his effects for the benefit of his creditors, recited that he was indebted to his landlord in a specific sum for rent; to the crown in a certain sum for excise duties, and to A. & B. by name, as judgment creditors, in 400*l.*; and then recited that one of the trustees was to pay these specific demands, and all debts under 10*l.* in full; then followed a proviso for avoiding the deed, "if any creditor or creditors whose respective debts should amount to 100*l.* or upwards, or any two creditors whose debts should amount to 150*l.* or upwards, should not duly execute the deed within three calendar months from the date, or in case any commission of bankruptcy should in the meantime be awarded." A. and B., whose judgment debt was to be paid in full, having refused to execute the deed upon request, one of the general creditors, who had executed, brought an action to recover the amount of his demand against the debtor:—Held, that the deed was a bar to the action, and that the execution by A. & B. was not necessary to render it valid. Wells v. Greenhill, 1 D. & R. 493; 5 B. & A. 869.

—Non-execution by Trustees.—A debtor assigned all his effects to four of his creditors, in trust for themselves and the rest of the creditors; in the deed there was a proviso that the trustees, and the rest of the creditors, should execute within a certain time; two only of the trustees executed. The non-execution by the other two trustees within the time will not make the deed void. Small v. Marwood, 4 M. & R. 181; 9 B. & C. 300.

For Retention of Securities.—A creditor, holding a security for his debt, may stipulate to have the benefit of it, in addition to the amount of the composition offered by a debtor to his creditors; but he must either hold himself entirely aloof from the other creditors, or distinctly communicate with them on the subject, if he at all acts in common with them. Cullingworth v. Lloyd, 2 Beav. 385.

The creditors of an insolvent agreed, by an instrument (not under seal), that they would accept in full satisfaction of their debts, 12*s.* in the pound, payable by instalments, and would release him from all demands; one of the creditors, who signed for the whole amount of his debt, held at the time, as a security for part, a bill of exchange drawn by the debtor, and accepted by a third person: the money due on this bill having afterwards been paid by the acceptor:—Held, that the creditor might retain it, the agreement of composition not containing any stipulation for giving up securities, and the effect of it not being to extinguish the original debt. Thomas v. Courtney, 1 B. & A. 1. See Cooper v. Green, 7 M. & W. 638; Nichols v. Norris, 3 B. & Ad. 41, n.

Saving Rights against Surety.—Payee against maker of a promissory note. Plea, that the note was made by the defendant and G., and that the plaintiff afterwards, by deed-poll, released G., whereby the defendant was released. Replication, non est factum. The deed, by which the creditors of G. agreed to accept a composition, contained a clause that it should not extend to invalidate notes upon which other parties might be jointly liable with G., or prejudice the claim of any creditor against a surety of G. :—Held, first, that the replication put in issue the construction of the deed as alleged in the plea; secondly, that the deed did not release the defendant. North v. Wakefield, 13 Q. B. 536; 18 L. J., Q. B. 214; 13 Jur. 731.

An action by a non-assenting creditor is barred by a plea setting out the deed of composition, in which creditors have "agreed to accept 2s. 6d. in the pound in discharge, so far as they can, without prejudice to the rights of third parties and sureties;" and alleging a tender to the plaintiff of the amount due. Garrod v. Simpson, 34 L. J., Ex. 70; 11 Jur., N. S. 227; 11 L. T. 777; 13 W. R. 460.

To an action by a drawer of a bill against the acceptor, he pleaded a deed, whereby his creditors agreed to accept a composition in discharge of their claims, and did freely, clearly and absolutely exonerate and discharge, and for ever quit claim unto, the debtor all and singular their respective debts and claims: proviso, that the acceptance of the composition should not in anywise prejudice the right of any of the creditors from claiming or realizing any security held by them, or from suing any person or persons other than the debtor liable to payment thereof:—Held, a good plea. Keyes v. Elkins, 5 B. & S. 240; 34 L. J., Q. B. 25; 11 Jur., N. S. 111; 11 L. T. 474; 13 W. R. 190.

Court will not assume Existence of Sureties.—The court will not assume the existence of sureties, the effect of which might be to invalidate a composition deed in which there is no reservation of rights against sureties. Johnson v. Barrett or Barratt, 1 L. R., Ex. 65; 35 L. J., Ex. 15; 11 Jur., N. S. 1023; 13 L. T. 597; 14 W. R. 194; 4 H. & C. 16.

Bill of Exchange—Drawer consenting to Indorsee executing the Deed.—Action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange. Plea: A composition deed registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861; the deed contained no reservation of rights against sureties. Replication: That the bill was accepted for value and indorsed to the plaintiff for value, and that if he had assented to the deed he would have discharged the drawers. Rejoinder: That before the registration of the deed the drawers consented to the plaintiff executing and becoming bound by the deed. The issue upon the rejoinder having been found for the defendant:—Held, that as by reason of such consent the plaintiff might have come in for the composition and have held the drawers liable for the balance, he was in the same position as if the right to have recourse to the drawers had been reserved to him in the deed, and therefore he was bound by it. Pool v. Willats, 4 L. R., Q. B. 630; 38 L. J., Q. B. 255; 20 L. T. 1006; 17 W. R. 1009; 9 B. & S. 957.

Effect of Proviso.—In a mortgage deed by the principal debtor a third party entered into a covenant to pay interest only on the money thereby secured. Subsequently the principal executed a deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192, which amounted to a cessio bonorum, and contained a general release from his creditors, followed by a proviso reserving any rights they might have against any other persons in respect of any debt due by the debtor, either alone or jointly with any other person:—Held, that the surety was not discharged from payment of interest which had accrued due since the date of the composition deed. Green v. Wynn, 4 L. R., Ch. 204; 38 L. J., Ch. 220; 20 L. T. 131; 17 W. R. 385.

A deed of arrangement under the Bankruptcy Acts, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, contained a release of the debtor, subject to a proviso reserving the rights of creditors holding securities:—Held, that this operated as a covenant not to sue, and not as an extinguishment of the debt so as to bar the remedy against the surety, notwithstanding the deed contained an absolute assignment of all the debtor's property and effects to the trustees, and also provisions for enabling them to carry on the trade for the benefit of the estate. Bateson v. Gosling, 7 L. R., C. P. 9; 41 L. J., C. P. 53; 25 L. T. 560; 20 W. R. 98.

Surety called upon to Pay is bound by the Deed.—In an action by the drawer against the acceptor of a bill, he pleaded a composition deed executed by him before the bill was due. The deed contained a clause reserving the rights of creditors against sureties. In the declaration the bill was stated to be payable to the plaintiff, without shewing that it was a negotiable instrument. The replication alleged that the bill was payable not to the plaintiff only, but to the plaintiff or order; that he had indorsed the bill; that the holders of the bill at the time of the making and registration of the deed presented the bill for payment, and it was dishonoured by the defendant. The plaintiff never assented to the deed, and was compelled to pay the amount of the bill to the holders, upon which he became the holder. The replication concluded, that "the plaintiff, except as in the replication mentioned, was not a creditor of the defendant in respect of his claim on the bill:—Held, that there was no departure from the declaration, but that the replication was bad because the plaintiff was a creditor and was barred by the deed. Hooper v. Marshall, 21 L. T. 639.

To an action on a bond the defendant pleaded that F. made the bond, and the defendant made it as his surety; and that F., being unable to meet his debts, entered into a deed with his creditors, of whom the plaintiff was one, by which he assigned all his property for the benefit of the plaintiff and his other creditors to trustees; and that the plaintiff covenanted with F. that the plaintiff would not at any time thereafter commence or prosecute any action or other proceeding against F., for or by reason of any debt then due and owing by him to the plaintiff; and thereby the plaintiff gave time to F., in respect of the debt and bond in respect whereof the defendant was such surety. The plaintiff replied by setting out the deed. The deed contained a proviso that nothing therein contained should prejudice or affect any claim, demand or remedy which the several parties and creditors of F. then had or should have by virtue of any mortgage, lien, charge or other incumbrance against any person who might be liable for the payment of any of the debts of F. in the character of a surety or otherwise; and in consideration of the assignment the parties thereto and creditors of F. covenanted with F. that they would not at any time commence or prosecute any action or other proceeding against him for any debt then due from him to them; and that in case of any such action or suit being commenced or prosecuted by them contrary to the terms of the deed, the deed might be pleaded as a release in bar:—Held, that the replication was good, inasmuch as it admitted the effect of the deed as alleged in the plea, but avoided it by the terms of the proviso. Stevens v. Stevens, 5 Ex. 306.

— Right of Surety against Principal.—A necessary consequence of a reservation in a composition deed of a creditor's remedies against a surety is the continuance of the surety's right to be indemnified by the principal debtor, and this right will not be held to be abandoned unless a contract to abandon it is proved. Close v. Close, 4 De G., Mac. & G. 176.

The plaintiff, being a shareholder in a banking co-partnership, became security for money advanced by the bank to the defendant, who afterwards by a deed, to which the plaintiff and the bank were parties, assigned his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. By this deed the rights of the creditors against sureties were reserved:—Held, that the plaintiff, who had been compelled to pay the debt to the bank, was entitled to recover the amount from the defendant. Kearseley v. Cole, 16 M. & W. 128; 16 L. J., Ex. 115.

For Carrying on Debtor's Trade.—An assignment to trustees, for the benefit of all creditors who may execute the deed, is not valid as against creditors who do not execute, if it authorizes the trustees to carry on the debtor's trade, and contains such terms, that the creditors subscribing would become partners in the business. Owen v. Body, 5 A. & E. 28; 2 H. & W. 31; 6 N. & M. 448.

The trade in question being that of an hotel keeper, it was no objection to such an assignment, that the debtor, when it was executed, had not a licence for retailing excisable liquors, there being no evidence that the trustees contemplated selling, or in fact sold, any liquors without such licence, and a licence having been procured two days after the execution of the deed. Id.

For Accounting by Trustees.—A covenant not to sue if the trustees fairly accounted for the effects, does not operate as a release of the creditor's debts if the trustees refuse to account. Kesterton v. Sabery, 2 Chit. 541. And see Small v. Marwood, 4 M. & R. 181; 9 B. & C. 300.

Against Molestation—Action.—A., a trader, entered into an arrangement by deed with his creditors, by which it was agreed that he should have a letter of licence for five years, during which period he should carry on the trade under the inspection of persons therein named; and it was provided, that if any creditor should, during the continuance of the licence, molest or interfere with A., A. should thereupon be relieved, exonerated, acquitted and discharged of and from all debts and demands of the creditor by whom the letter of licence should be so contravened, and that the deed should or might be pleaded in bar to such respective debts or demands accordingly:—Held, that the bringing of an action by a creditor, party to the deed within the five years, was a molestation or an interference with A., within the proviso, and that the deed operated as a defeasance, and was pleadable in bar as such. Gibbons v. Vouillon, 8 C. B. 483; 7 D. & L. 266; 19 L. J., C. P. 74; 14 Jur. 66.

— Not a Release.—A debtor conveyed his life interest in property in trust for creditors, parties to the deed; and the creditors, in consideration thereof, granted to the debtor licence to reside and attend to his affairs in any place he might think proper, without suit or molestation in his person or his goods, chattels, and effects, by any such creditors; and that in case of any suit or molestation by any of such creditors, contrary to the true intent and meaning of such licence, the debtor should be wholly released and acquitted of the debt, and the deed might be pleaded in bar:—Held, that this amounted only to a licence by the creditor to the debtor to live unmolested, and did not operate as a release of the debt or a discharge of the debtor's estate. O'Brien v. Osborne, 10 Hare, 92; 16 Jur. 960.

Proviso for Avoidance of Deed — Debtor's Solicitor not allowed to insist on Proviso.—A debtor entered into a compromise with his creditors, among whom was his solicitor, who called the meeting of creditors, attended the same, and prepared the deed of composition. The creditors and the solicitor executed the deed. In the deed was contained a covenant by the debtor to assure his life forthwith, and keep it assured during three consecutive years for 1,500*l.*, a sum equal to which was covenanted by the debtor to be paid to the trustees for division among the creditors by monthly payments, or otherwise as the trustees might require. If the debtor should fail in any payment covenanted to be made, or in assuring or keeping assured his life according to his covenant, the deed should be void. There was a private agreement between the debtor and the solicitor that the latter should be paid his debt in full. The debtor did not assure his life till a year after the deed, when he paid 500*l.* the amount covenanted to be paid within that period, and assured his life for 1,000*l.*, all that was then due. The policy was deposited with one of the trustees. Two other instalments were subsequently paid to the trustees according to the terms of the deed. The solicitor subsequently brought an action against the debtor for his whole demand:—Held, that it was the duty of the solicitor to explain to the debtor, or to ascertain whether he understood, the legal and equitable obligations imposed by the deed; and that the solicitor could not be allowed, in a court of justice, to say, that he had believed that a policy for 1,500*l.* had been effected. Watts v. Hyde, 17 L. J., Ch. 409; 10 Jur. 127. S. C., at law, 1 D. & L. 479; 12 M. & W. 254; 13 L. J., Ex. 41.

Held, also, that the solicitor could not insist on the proviso for making the deed void, and that the debtor had a clear equity to restrain the action. Id.

Certain Charges to be Paid in Full.—A provision in a deed of assignment of a debtor's estate to trustees, for the benefit of his creditors, that the trustees shall stand possessed of the estate upon trust in the first place to defray the expense of preparing and registering the deed and procuring the assents of the creditors to it, is not unreasonable so as to prevent the deed from binding a non-assenting creditor. Jacobson v. La Mert, 2 L. R., Ex. 394; 36 L. J., Ex. 221; 16 L. T. 569.

A deed of inspectorship contained the following clause:—The proceeds of the estate shall be applied, first, in paying the costs incurred, or to be incurred, or relating to the suspension of payment of the debtor; secondly, in paying rent for which the debtor's estate could be distrained, wages, or salaries; thirdly, in paying rateably the debts of creditors, with interest:—Held, not unreasonable. Strick v. De Mattos, 3 H. & C. 22; 33 L. J., Ex. 276; 10 Jur., N. S. 753; 10 L. T. 590; 12 W. R. 963. Affirmed, nom. Woods v. De Mattos, 1 L. R., Ex. 91; 35 L. J., Ex. 664; 12 Jur., N. S. 78; 14 W. R. 226; 3 H. & C. 987—Ex. Ch.

A deed of arrangement provided for the payment in full of the costs of a previous deed of inspectorship, and all costs, charges and expenses incurred by the inspectors for the benefit of the estate, including the costs of an execution creditor, in consideration of the execution being withdrawn:—Held, that the deed was valid on the grounds, first, that the inspectors had an equitable lien for those costs on the bankrupt's estate; and secondly, that payment of a doubtful claim is not ultra vires, or alien to the payment of the debts of the debtor and his release therefrom, and the winding up of his estate. Fitzpatrick v. Bourne, 3 L. R., Q. B. 233; 37 L. J., Q. B. 265; 16 W. R. 766; 9 B. & S. 157. Affirmed, 3 L. R., Q. B. 446; 37 L. J., Q. B. 266; 18 L. T. 731; 16 W. R. 849; 9 B. & S. 157—Ex. Ch.

Creditors to verify Debts.—The following clause is not unreasonable:—Each creditor, before becoming entitled to any dividend, shall (if required by the inspectors) deliver to them a statement in writing, signed by him, of his debt, and verify it by solemn declaration. Strick v. De Mattos, supra.

A clause by which the trustee is empowered to require any creditor of the debtor to verify the nature and amount of his debt, with full particulars, by statutory declaration proved before the commissioners of bankruptcy, "or otherwise as the trustee may think fit," is reasonable, and a deed with such a clause is binding on a non-assenting creditor. Coles v. Turner, 1 L. R., C. P. 373; 35 L. J., C. P. 169; 12 Jur., N. S. 688; 14 W. R. 402—Ex. Ch. See Thickmott v. Simmonds, 14 W. R. 882.

Trustees' Discretion as to Payment of Dividends.—A discretion to determine the amount of dividends, and to pay them at such place and in such manner as the trustee may think fit, is reasonable. Id.

So there is nothing unreasonable in empowering the trustees to determine the amount of dividend to be from time to time paid to the creditors, and pay such dividend in such place and in such manner as they shall think fit. Jacobson v. La Mert, supra.

Covenant not to Sue except to prevent Discharge of third Parties.—Held that a clause:—And in consideration of the premises, it is agreed and declared (but each of the creditors of the debtor who shall have executed, or acceded to, or be bound by, these presents, agreeing and declaring for himself and his partners, and so far as relates to his and their acts and defaults) that the creditors of the debtor who shall have executed, or otherwise acceded to, or been bound by, these presents, shall not, nor their partners nor assigns, at any time (except in respect of the covenants or agreements herein contained, or any one of them) commence or prosecute any action at law or in equity, or other proceedings, against the debtor, on account of any part of the debts now due from him to the creditors who shall have executed, or otherwise acceded to, or be bound by, these presents, and that this agreement may be pleaded to any action brought contrary to this agreement, as if the same were an actual release, was not unreasonable and void, since it amounted to a simple covenant not to sue, except so far as necessary to prevent the discharge of third parties. Hudson v. Barclay, 3 H. & C. 361; 34 L. J., Ex. 217; 12 L. T. 353; 13 W. R. 583—Ex. Ch.

Not to Sue for a limited Time.—A covenant in a composition deed not to sue the debtor for a limited time is not unreasonable, neither is a power to revoke a letter of licence. Walker v. Nevill, 3 H. & C. 403; 34 L. J., Ex. 73; 11 Jur., N. S. 246; 11 L. T. 774; 13 W. R. 523.

Nothing unauthorised to bind Non-assenting Creditors.—Held, that a clause:—That if there is anything in the deed not authorized by the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, it shall be obligatory upon those persons only who shall have executed or acceded to it, is not unreasonable. Id.

A deed containing several provisions which would be bad as against non-assenting creditors; and declaring that it was intended to operate as a trust deed under the act, and to bind all existing creditors, but if there should be anything not authorized by the provisions of the act, such unauthorized thing should be obligatory upon assenting creditors only, is valid, as it does not attempt to bind non-assenting creditors by any unreasonable provisions. Somerville, Ex parte, 1 L. R., Ch. 21; 35 L. J., Bk. 1; 11 Jur., N. S. 1029; 13 L. T. 350; 14 W. R. 113.

A deed contained the following provisions:—These presents are intended to be a deed of inspectorship within the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861; but in case they cannot so operate, they shall be binding on creditors executing or assenting to them. 32. The estate and effects of the debtor shall be administered on the principles of the bankrupt law, and if there is anything in the deed inconsistent with those principles, it shall be read as if such inconsistent matter were expunged:—Held, that neither of these provisions was unreasonable, and that the deed was binding on non-assenting creditors. Strick v. De Mattos, col. 1305.

Minority to be Bound by Majority.—The following provisions are not unreasonable:—1. That a resolution signed by the majority in number and value of the creditors, parties to the deed or bound by it, shall be binding on all persons parties to the deed or bound by it, and effectual for the allowance and passing of the accounts of the trustees, and for discharging them from the trusts of the deed, and all claims and demands in respect of it. 2. That in case the trustees appointed by the deed, or any of them, or any trustee to be appointed as afterwards mentioned, should die, or should refuse or decline, or become incapable to act in the matters and things entrusted to them by the deed, a majority in number and value of the creditors present at a meeting convened by circular, sent by any creditor of the debtor by post or otherwise, might nominate or choose such other person or persons as they should think fit to be trustee or trustees, in the place of any such trustee or trustees. Bond v. Weston, 1 L. R., Q. B. 169; 35 L. J., Q. B. 7.

A clause, authorizing the trustees of the deed to employ the debtor, or any other person, in winding up his business, and in realizing the property comprised in the deed, and to pay a salary to him, does not invalidate the deed against a non-assenting creditor. Russell v. Murphy, 16 Ir. Ch. Rep. 54.

An assignment to a trustee for the benefit of creditors, which empowers the trustee to employ the debtor or other person in winding up his affairs, and collecting and getting in his estate and carrying on his trade, is not void as against creditors within 13 Eliz. c. 5, if it appears from the deed that the main object is to wind up the business for the benefit of the creditors, and not to carry on the trade with a view of future profits. James v. Whitbread, 11 C. B. 406; 20 L. J., C. P. 217; 15 Jur. 612; S. P., Coates v. Williams, 7 Ex. 205; 21 L. J., Ex. 116.

Power to Sell to Debtor—Dividends not to be disturbed by Creditor of whose Demand Trustees have no Notice.]—A deed giving the trustees power to sell to the debtor himself, with or without security, and providing that no former dividend should be disturbed, or liability incurred in consequence of such dividend, by reason of any debt due to any creditor of whose claim the trustees had no notice before they began to pay such dividend, does not contain unreasonable provisions. Greenberg v. Ward, 1 L. R., C. P. 585; 35 L. J., C. P. 316; 12 Jur., N. S. 524; 14 L. T. 760; 14 W. R. 795.

Provision affecting Assenting Creditors only.]

—A trust deed contained the following clause:—No creditor who shall have executed or otherwise acceded to these presents shall negotiate any bills of exchange or other negotiable instruments on which the debtor is liable, without having first indorsed thereon a memorandum of the execution of or other accession to these presents by such creditor:—Held, that the clause was not unreasonable and void, since it bound only those creditors who executed or otherwise assented to the deed. Hidson v. Barclay, col. 1306.

Debts not to be Paid for two Years.]—A deed is not to be deemed unreasonable on the ground that it postpones the payment of the debts for two years, although it gives no benefit to the creditors, except the covenant of the debtor. Richmond Hill Hotel Company, In re, King, Ex parte, 4 L. R., Eq. 566. Affirmed, 3 L. R., Ch. 10; 38 L. J., Ch. 541; 17 L. T. 188; 16 W. R. 57.

Trustees to be Indemnified against Costs.]

A provision that the trustees shall, upon the request and at the cost of the creditors, take proceedings for enforcing performance of the covenants, upon being indemnified against the costs, is not unreasonable. Hidson v. Barclay, col. 1306.

Discretion of Trustees.]—So, a discretion to give time for the payment of debts, or to compound for or abandon such debts as the trustees might consider bad. Coles v. Turner, col. 1305.

Valuation of Securities.]—So also, a clause for ascertaining the value of securities held by creditors by a valuer to be appointed by either party or an umpire. Id.

Power to pay Debts under £10 in full—Power nugatory.]—A deed for the benefit of creditors contained a power to the trustees to pay in full the demands of all creditors under 10l.:—Held, that although such a power might be inconsistent with the bankrupt law, it did not invalidate the deed, but the power was simply nugatory. Spyer, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 318; 32 L. J., Bk. 62; 9 Jur., N. S. 949; 8 L. T. 743; 11 W. R. 1008.

Deed in Substitution of another Avoided on Failure to pay Composition.]—A debtor, by deed, registered on the 2nd of November, 1866, covenanted to pay his creditors 2s. 6d. in the pound within two months from the registration; and the creditors released their debts, subject to a proviso for avoiding the deed on default in payment of the composition. Default was made, and on the 3rd of January, 1867, a similar deed was registered, with the assent of the requisite majority of creditors, by which the debtor covenanted for payment of 2s. 6d. in the pound within seven days after the expiration of four months. A non-assenting judgment creditor applied for leave to issue execution, on the ground that the deed was unreasonable, for that the composition, having regard to the state of the debtor's affairs, was unreasonably small, and that the second deed provided for payment only of the same composition as the first deed, after a longer time, and without any additional security. The commissioner gave leave to issue execution:—Held, that the deed was not ex facie void; the circumstance that it had been immediately preceded by the other deed being not decisive against its validity, but only a circumstance rendering strict investigation proper; and that the order for leave to issue execution ought to be discharged, and the case remitted to the commissioner for further investigation. Roots, Ex parte, 2 L. R., Ch. 559; 36 L. J., Bk. 38; 15 W. R. 728.

A debtor, being in difficulties, assigned all his property to B. for the benefit of his creditors, and summoned a meeting of his creditors. No creditor was a party to the assignment, and at the meeting it was resolved to have a new deed, with two trustees nominated by the creditors, and B. and the debtor accordingly executed an assignment, which was duly registered:—Held, that the first deed was only intended to be operative, in case of the creditors adopting it, and that, as they refused to adopt it, it did not invalidate the second deed. Somerville, Ex parte, 35 L. J., Bk. 1; 11 Jur., N. S. 1029; 13 L. T. 350; 14 W. R. 113.

Forfeiture of Debt on Creditor Suing.—A deed of composition containing a covenant that if any creditor should sue the debtor, unless and until default should be made in meeting at maturity bills of exchange and promissory notes given as a security for the composition, the debtor's estate and effects should be thenceforth absolutely released and discharged from the debt, is unreasonable and void. Dell v. King, 2 H. & C. 84; 33 L. J., Ex. 47; 10 Jur., N. S. 427; 12 W. R. 280.

A deed contained a covenant by the debtor with trustees for the creditors to pay the full amount of his debts by instalments, with the usual clause of release; and also a covenant that if any creditor should "act or do contrary to the covenant, he, the debtor, shall be and is hereby for ever acquitted and released of and from all sums of money, bonds, accounts, and demands whatsoever due, owing, or belonging to, or which may or might be asked, claimed or demanded by such of the creditors so acting or doing contrary to the covenant:"—Held, in an action by a non-assenting creditor, that he was not barred, for that the covenant vitiated the deed as regarded such creditor. Thompson v. Gunthorpe, 11 L. T. 708.

Action on a bill of exchange. Plea, a deed of arrangement containing a covenant by the creditors, parties to the deed, not to sue or impede the debtor in respect of their several debts, and that if any of them should do so, that the debtor should be discharged from all demands whatsoever of the creditors by whom he should be sued:—Held, that if the clause of forfeiture was intended to bind non-executing creditors, the deed was bad, and if not binding on non-executing creditors, the deed was no defence to the action, the plaintiff not having executed the deed. Lyne v. Wyatt, 18 C. B., N. S. 593; 34 L. J., C. P. 179; 11 Jur., N. S. 446; 12 L. T. 383; 13 W. R. 688.

Creditor to verify Debt within limited Time.—A stipulation that any creditor who fails, within a certain time, to verify his debt is disentitled to claim his dividend, is unreasonable. Giddings v. Penning, 1 L. R., Ex. 325; 35 L. J., Ex. 191; 12 Jur., N. S. 634; 14 L. T. 667; 14 W. R. 940.

A clause in a composition that the trustees may require the creditors to verify the amount of their debts in such manner as they may deem expedient, and the creditors failing or refusing to do so, should lose all benefit under the deed, is unreasonable. Leigh v. Pendlebury, 15 C. B., N. S. 815; 33 L. J., C. P. 172; 10 Jur., N. S. 296; 10 L. T. 30; 12 W. R. 468.

So is a clause that all creditors whose debts do not exceed 10*l.* shall be paid in full. Id.

Composition Payable after Trustee has certified Assent of sufficient Majority.—A deed is void for containing a provision that the composition should be paid "as soon as a trustee shall, in writing under his hand, certify" that the requisite number of creditors has assented to the deed. Boulnois v. Mann, 1 L. R., Ex. 28; 35 L. J., Ex. 58; 11 Jur., N. S. 1006; 13 L. T. 531; 14 W. R. 181; 4 H. & C. 9.

Composition to become due Ten Days after Notice of Assent of Creditor.—A deed purporting to be made between the debtor and the whole of his creditors, containing a covenant to pay each creditor 10*s.* in the pound with this proviso: "In case any creditors should not at the date of the deed assent to it, the composition should be considered to become due to them within ten days from their assent being received or left at the debtor's abode," is by reason of such proviso not binding on non-assenting creditors. Armitage v. Baker, 10 L. T. 526.

Indemnity of Debtor against Liability on Bills of Exchange.—A deed containing the following covenant: "And all creditors to whom bills or other negotiable instruments may have been given by the debtor for the debts due to such creditors, should indemnify the debtor and his estate against all claims or demands by other persons than themselves in respect of such bills or instruments, and all losses, damages, and costs, by reason or in respect thereof: and should, if any such bills had been indorsed or transferred to any other persons, take the same up, and retire the same before or when they should become due, so as to prevent any claim or demand in respect thereof being made upon the debtor or his estate," is an unreasonable clause, and not binding upon a non-assenting creditor. Balden v. Pell, 5 B. & S. 213; 33 L. J., Q. B. 200; 10 Jur., N. S. 916; 10 L. T. 493; 12 W. R. 1004; S. P., Woods v. Foote, 1 H. & C. 841; 32 L. J., Ex. 199; 9 Jur., N. S. 178; 7 L. T. 836; 11 W. R. 383—Ex. Ch.; Inglebach v. Nichols, 14 C. B., N. S. 85; 9 Jur., N. S. 1015; 8 L. T. 318; 11 W. R. 697; Nicholson v. Potts, 10 L. T. 192; 12 W. R. 440—Ex. Ch.

A composition deed, containing a covenant by the creditors, limited by each creditor to his own acts, to indemnify the debtor from payment of any sum of money relating to any bill of exchange, promissory note, or other security or securities which the debtor may have given to the creditors respectively, is a covenant that invalidates the deed, and the defect is not cured by an averment in a plea that there were no creditors other than assenting creditors to whom the covenant could apply. Oldis v. Armston, 2 L. R., Ex. 406; 36 L. J., Ex. 181; 16 L. T. 601; 15 W. R. 965.

Liability imposed on Non-assenting Creditors.—Traders assigned all their estate and effects to trustees, for the benefit of all the creditors, with power to the trustees to call in and compound all debts, to sell all or any of the stock, works, &c., and in the meantime to carry on the business of the debtors for such period as they should think fit; and there was a clause that "the trustees should be indemnified out of the estate of the debtors, or otherwise by the creditors, in proportion to the amount of their respective debts, against and in respect of all transactions and personal engagements, matters and things whatsoever, which they shall lawfully do or cause to be done, or enter into or order or direct in and concerning the management or conduct of the business:"—Held, that, as this clause imposed a personal liability on the non-assenting creditors beyond the loss of their debts, it was ultra vires, and the deed was not within s. 192. Wigfield v. Nicholson, 3 L. R., Q. B. 450; 37 L. J., Q. B. 155; 18 L. T. 323; 16 W. R. 1038; 9 B. & S. 261.

A Deed Void in certain Events is Voidable at Election of Party not in Default.—A composition deed contained a covenant by the debtor and his sureties, to pay 7s. 6d. in the pound, by three instalments. The deed provided that, as between the sureties and the creditors, the sureties should be considered principal debtors, and that in case the debtor should be adjudicated bankrupt before all the instalments were paid, then the deed and all its clauses to be at an end and void:—Held, that by the word "void" was meant "voidable," at the election of the parties not in default. Hughes v. Palmer, 19 C. B., N. S. 893; 34 L. J., C. P. 279; 11 Jur., N. S. 876; 12 L. T. 635; 13 W. R. 974.

i. Covenants to Pay Composition.

Covenant to pay Instalments to Trustee—To extend over Seven Years.—A deed, in which a debtor covenants to pay instalments to a trustee for the creditors, is not void for want of a covenant with the creditors that they shall be paid. Nor because the instalments are to extend over seven years. Stone v. Jellicoe, 3 H. & C. 263; 34 L. J., Ex. 11; 10 Jur., N. S. 976; 11 L. T. 140; 12 W. R. 922.

Covenant by Surety alone.—A debtor assigned to a surety all his stock-in-trade, goods, chattels, and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, absolutely, and the surety covenanted with the creditors of the debtor to pay them a composition of 6s. 8d. in the pound on their debts by two instalments of 3s. 4d. each, at the expiration of three and six months, to be secured by the joint and several promissory notes of the debtor and the surety. And the creditors accepted the composition in satisfaction and discharge of their debts, and released the debtor from all claims whatsoever:—Held, a valid deed. Dewhurst v. Jones, 3 H. & C. 60; 33 L. J., Ex. 294.

Composition Payable before Period allowed for Registration.—It is no objection to a deed that the composition is payable before the expiration of the twenty-eight days allowed for registering the deed. Brooks v. Jennings, 1 L. R., C. P. 476; 12 Jur., N. S. 341; 14 L. T. 19; 14 W. R. 440.

Recital amounts to Covenant.—A recital in such a deed, that the debtor has agreed to pay a composition of a given amount to all his creditors, amounts to a covenant. Id.

j. Schedule of Creditors.

Schedule Unnecessary.—It is not essential to the validity of a deed of composition that it should contain a schedule of creditors. Stone v. Jellicoe, 3 H. & C. 263; 34 L. J., Ex. 11; 10 Jur., N. S. 976; 11 L. T. 140; 12 W. R. 922.

Schedule added after Execution vitiates Deed.—A deed was expressed to be made between the debtor, a surety, and scheduled creditors. At the time of registration no schedule was annexed, but a schedule was afterwards added by the debtor:—Held, that the addition of the schedule vitiated the deed. Sellin v. Price, 2 L. R., Ex. 189; 36 L. J., Ex. 93; 16 L. T. 21; 15 W. R. 749.

k. Verification of Debts.

Affidavit may be dispensed with.—The affidavit of the debtor usually required upon the registration of a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors may be dispensed with. Trump, In re, 14 W. R. 494.

Requisites of Affidavit.—A statement in the affidavit by the debtor, that the amount in value of his property, credits, estate, and effects comprised in a deed of arrangement is under a certain value, is sufficient compliance within the 5th condition of s. 192. Russell v. Murphy, 16 Ir. Ch. Rep. 54.

Joint and Separate Creditors.—The affidavit required by the 5th condition of s. 192 need not distinguish between the joint and separate creditors. Walker v. Nerill, 3 H. & C. 403; 34 L. J., Ex. 70.

l. Examination of Debtor.

Discretion of Commissioner.—The Court of Bankruptcy will not interfere with the discretion of a commissioner as to the examination by a non-assenting creditor of a debtor who has executed an inspectorship deed. Redway, Ex parte, 35 L. J., Bk. 20; 12 Jur., N. S. 365; 14 L. T. 389; 14 W. R. 664—L. J.

Dissenting Creditor may Examine.—A dissenting creditor to a trust deed is on the same footing as an assenting creditor, and has, therefore, equally the right to examine the debtor, although such examination may tend to shew the invalidity of the deed, provided such creditor is not detaining the debtor in prison, or claiming any portion of the property subject to the trusts of the deed, or defending an action in which the debtor or his assignee is plaintiff. Brooks, Ex parte, 33 L. J., Bk. 41; 10 Jur., N. S. 621; 10 L. T. 552; 12 W. R. 924.

Examination of Debtor as to Validity.—Creditors of a debtor, who has executed a simple composition deed, containing no assignment of property, are entitled to examine the debtor for the purpose of impeaching the deed. Fackiri, In re, 2 L. R., Ch. 368; 36 L. J., Bk. 10; 16 L. T. 371; 15 W. R. 472.

m. Right of Debtor to Allowances.

A debtor who has executed a trust deed for the benefit of his creditors, is not, in the absence of express stipulation, entitled to receive the allowances directed to be made to bankrupts in the event of their estates realizing certain dividends. Gibbins, Ex parte, 34 L. J., Bk. 39; 12 L. T. 786; 13 W. R. 1001; S. P., Turner, Ex parte, 12 L. T. 770.

n. Re-assignment of Property to Debtor.

Cannot Sue on old Debt without Order from Court.—A debtor executed a composition deed in 1869, by which he assigned to trustees all his property, including moneys and securities for money, debts, &c., with a power to sue for the same, covenanting to pay to the creditors a composition of sixteen shillings in the pound, and the creditors released the debtor from all actions,

&c. By a subsequent deed in 1870, after reciting a proviso for re-conveyance in the former deed, and that the full amount of the composition had been paid, the trustees re-assigned to the debtor all the real and personal estate, securities for money, debts, &c., assigned to them, except such as had been disposed of in pursuance of the former deed:—Held, that he could not maintain an action in his own name for a debt due before the date of the original deed without first obtaining an order from the court, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 197. Lockwood v. Jenkinson, 25 L. T. 698; 20 W. R. 182.

o. Form of Release.

Deed containing no Release.—A composition deed, by which the debtor conveys all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, but which does not contain a release to him, is not good as a defence on equitable grounds to an action against the debtor. European Central Railway Company v. Westall, 6 B. & S. 970.

Release of all Claims—Release governed by Recital.—To an action by a non-assenting creditor a plea that by a deed the creditors agreed to accept a composition in full satisfaction of their debts, containing a general release of all actions, suits, contracts, damages, claims, or demands, in respect of any debt, sum of money, bills, bonds, notes, securities for money, contracts, provisos, agreements, reckonings, accounts, dealings, or transactions between the debtor and his creditors from the beginning of the world to the date of the deed, is good, and the release, being governed by the recital, is not too general. Haseigrove v. House, 1 L. R., Q. B. 101; 35 L. J., Q. B. 1; 12 Jur., N. S. 333; 13 L. T. 462; 14 W. R. 128; 6 B. & S. 975.

Release not restrained by Covenant not to Sue.—A deed of inspectorship contained, in different parts of the instrument, a general release of the debtor from all claims, &c. (except under the provisions of the deed), and a covenant by the creditors not to sue the debtor for a limited time in respect of any debt or demand provable under the deed, and that if any of them did so the deed should operate and have the effect of an order of discharge, and be pleadable in bar to every such action:—Held, that the release was not restrained by the covenant not to sue. Bond v. Weston, 1 L. R., Q. B. 169; 35 L. J., Q. B. 7.

General Release—Scheduled Debts.—In a composition deed, the limitation of the consideration for the release to creditors whose debts are scheduled, does not affect the absolute and unconditional character of the release, it being manifest from the whole deed that payment of the composition to the whole body of the creditors was contemplated and provided for by the deed. Tetley v. Wanless, 15 L. T. 255.

Where creditors release the debtor from all debts, such release is absolute and general, notwithstanding a subsequent statement in the deed that the creditors have accepted the composition in discharge of the debts specified in the schedule only. Id.

A composition deed releasing all the claims of the creditors against the debtor does not operate to deprive non-assenting creditors of their remedy against a co-debtor. Andrew v. Macklin, 4 B. & S. 566; 34 L. J., Q. B. 89; 11 Jur., N. S. 409; 13 W. R. 291.

Conditional Release.—By a composition deed, executed in March, 1867, the debtor, after assigning all his effects for the benefit of his creditors, contracted to pay them a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound on their debts in three instalments of 2s. 6d. each; the first and second instalments to be secured by his own promissory notes at three and six months; and the third instalment by the joint and several note of himself and a surety. The deed contained a conditional release by the creditors of the debtor from his debts, and a covenant by the creditors not to sue, and also a proviso that if the notes or either of them were not paid when due, the conditional release and covenant should be absolutely void. The notes became due on the 4th June, the 4th September, and the 4th December, 1867. After the second note had become due, namely, on the 17th September, certain creditors, who had not executed the deed, assented to the deed, and took from the debtor three promissory notes, under its provisions, for the amount of the composition on their debt. Two of such notes, namely, those for the first and second instalments were then overdue, but were not paid to these creditors until some three or four weeks after the 17th September:—Held, that as the release was expressly made conditional on the punctual payment of the notes, and the debtor had failed to pay the first and second of such notes, which were payable instantan on their delivery to these creditors, for some three or four weeks after delivery, according to the strict letter of the deed the release became inoperative, and could not be pleaded as an answer to the action for the balance of their debt. Milligan v. Salmon, 18 L. T. 887.

To an action for the recovery of a debt, the debtor pleaded a deed, dated the 25th June, 1867, whereby he and a surety covenanted to deliver to the creditors, on the day of the date of the deed, promissory notes signed by the debtor and a surety for a composition upon their debts, and the creditors, in consideration of the premises, released the debtor from all debts due to them. The release was accompanied by the following clause: "Provided that if the debtor and the surety shall not, within two calendar months from the 17th June, 1867, make and deliver the promissory notes unto the creditors, according to the true intent and meaning of these presents; then and in such case these presents shall thereupon become absolutely void and of no effect, and the creditors shall be restored to their original rights as if these presents had not been made, provided that the creditors shall personally or otherwise apply for their notes." The debtor did not deliver the notes, either on the day of the date of the deed, or within two months after the 17th June, 1867, but the creditors never personally or otherwise applied for them:—Held, that the release was not avoided by the non-performance of the covenant to deliver the notes on the day of the date of the deed, being wholly independent of the performance thereof; that the release was not avoided by the non-delivery of the notes within the two months, inasmuch as the creditors had not applied for them; and that there was nothing unreasonable in the proviso with respect to the application for the notes, and the deed was therefore good. Solomon v. Laverick, 18 L. T. 545.

— Creditor with Secret Advantage.—A composition deed contained a release of the debtor, subject to a proviso making the release void on non-payment of any of the instalments covenanted to be paid by the deed:—Held, that, as against a creditor who had acceded to the deed, but by means of a secret arrangement had received more than the amount of the whole composition, the release was absolute, although the instalments had not been paid according to the covenant. Oliver, Ex parte, 4 De G. & S. 354.

Release—Deed Executed under Mistake of Law.—Where a deed of composition with, and assignment in trust for creditors was construed to include a release of debt guaranteed:—Held, in an action against the surety, to be no answer, either on legal or on equitable grounds, to a plea setting out the release; that the plaintiffs executed, not as creditors, but as trustees, and solely for the purpose of accepting and declaring the trusts, and not with the intention of releasing the debt guaranteed; that they did not sign the list of creditors; and that if the deed operated to release the debt, it was executed by mistake, and in ignorance that such would be its legal effect and operation. Tred v. Johnson, 25 L. J., Ex. 110.

— Creditor loses Right to retain Security.—By the release of a debt by a composition deed the creditor loses also the right to retain a written instrument deposited with him by the debtor as a security for the debt. Therefore, the relinquishment of such security for the benefit of the debtor forms no consideration for a parol promise by the debtor to pay the residue of the debt, beyond the amount of the composition reserved under the deed. Cowper v. Green, 7 M. & W. 638. But see Thomas v. Courtney, 1 B. & A. 1.

— Agreement to pay Debt barred.—If by a deed of composition, a creditor releases his debt, a subsequent agreement, not by deed, between the creditor and debtor, that the former shall be paid in full, cannot stand, unless for a valuable consideration beyond the mere fact of the release of the debt. Watts v. Hyde, 17 L. J., Ch. 409; 10 Jur. 127.

p. Execution of Deed obtained by Misrepresentation.

Misrepresentation by Debtor.—If, in consequence of a debtor representing to one of his creditors, that, if he will agree to accept a composition for his debt, all the other creditors will do the same, such creditor does agree, the agreement is not binding on him if that representation is untrue. Cooling v. Noyes, 6 T. R. 263. See Reay v. Richardson, 2 C., M. & R. 422; 5 Tyr. 931; 1 Gale, 219; Lewis v. Jones, 8 D. & R. 567; 4 B. & C. 506.

If a party obtains the benefit of a trust deed executed by his creditors, and in it is contained a consideration, that he will make a full disclosure of his property, but he conceals a portion of it, the creditors signing the deed may still proceed against him. Wenham v. Fowle, 3 D. P. C. 43.

— Allowing Creditor to remain under False

Impression.—Where a creditor compounds with his debtor under a false impression, in which the debtor knowingly leaves him, as to the extent of the debtor's estate, the creditor is not estopped from suing for the balance of his debt. Vine v. Mitchell, 1 M. & Rob. 337.

— Creditor a party to a Fraud practised on other Creditors.—Action for a debt. Plea, a release. Replication, that the release was obtained from the plaintiff by the fraud, covin and misrepresentation of the defendants. It appeared that the defendants, being indebted to several persons, and amongst others to the plaintiff, whose debt amounted to 989l. 7s., proposed a composition of 6s. 8d. in the pound, which was agreed to by a majority of the creditors in number; but the plaintiff, who was not present when the 6s. 8d. was agreed to at a meeting of creditors, refused to concur, unless he was paid 13s. 4d. in the pound upon part of the debt, and the other part was paid in full. Upon receiving notes for the full amount agreed upon, and the positive assurance of the defendants that no other creditor than himself was preferred, and that no one of them was to have a farthing beyond the 6s. 8d., he signed a release for his whole debt. The assurance of the defendants that no other creditor was preferred was untrue:—Held (by Wightman, J.) that upon this issue it was no answer to the action to shew that the plaintiff had contracted for a preference in fraud of the other creditors; and that the defendants could not be allowed to set up a counter-fraud by them and the plaintiff, by which they colluded to deceive other persons, as an answer to a charge of fraud practised by the defendants upon the plaintiff, which would have the effect of depriving him of part of his original just right. Mallalieu v. Hodgson, 16 Q. B. 689; 20 L. J., Q. B. 339; 15 Jur. 817.

Held (by Coleridge and Erie, JJ.), that the stipulation by the plaintiff for a preference, being a fraud upon the other creditors, was void, and no part of it could be legally relied on by him as forming a material inducement for the deed; and that the replication was not supported by shewing that the plaintiff was deceived by the misrepresentation of the defendants that no other creditor should have a preference, and that he would not have executed the deed if he had not been so deceived. Id.

Misrepresentation by Debtor and one Creditor

— Absence of Fraud.—A plaintiff holding two bills drawn by the defendant, one for 400l., the other for 156l. 19s. 10d., executed a composition deed, containing a general release of the defendant, and a schedule of the sums due to various creditors who executed the deed. After the plaintiff's name was put the sum of 156l. 19s. 10d. only, at the request of the defendant, who expected the plaintiff would recover the bill for 400l. by suing the acceptor. The other creditors were not told that the plaintiff had a debt of 400l. as well as 156l. 19s. 10d.:—Held, he could not afterwards sue the defendant on the bill for 400l. Britten v. Hughes, 5 Bing. 460; 3 M. & P. 79. See Margetson v. Atkins, 3 C. & P. 338.

— Vendor agreeing not to enforce Contract—Deposit Money.—A. agreed to purchase an estate, and paid a deposit; B., the seller, was unable to make a good title by the stipulated day. A. afterwards, upon negotiating a compromise with his creditors, stated his apprehension that he might be compelled by B. to complete the purchase, and applied to B. to cancel the contract and return the deposit. B. refused to do either, but said that he would never take any steps against A. to enforce the contract. Upon this footing the composition proceeded, C. engaging to secure 7s. in the pound. It would be a fraud upon the creditors, and upon C., if B. were to seek to enforce the contract; and, therefore, A. cannot maintain an action against B. for the deposit. Clark v. Upton, 3 M. & P. 89.

q. Private Agreement with particular Creditors.

When void.—A corrupt bargain between a debtor and some of his creditors, whereby they are induced to execute a composition deed, renders the deed void as a fraud against a creditor not a party to it, and it is not necessary that it is any part of the corrupt bargain that the preferred creditors are to have an undue share of the assets of the debtor. Daughish v. Tennent, 2 L. R., Q. B. 49; 36 L. J., Q. B. 10; 15 W. R. 196; 8 B. & S. 1.

— For better Security.—A trust deed was proposed to the creditors at large of an insolvent, whereby they all engaged to accept payment of their whole debts by instalments; the first four of which were to be guaranteed by collateral security, the two last to remain upon the single security of the insolvent: several of the creditors refused to sign unless the plaintiffs did; and the plaintiffs stipulated privately with the insolvent, as the condition of their signature, that he should procure them collateral security for the two last instalments, as well as the prior ones, conceiving that they had collateral security originally to cover their debt; and upon the faith of such private agreement, they signed the trust deed, which was then signed by the rest of the creditors:—Held, that such private agreement was a fraud upon the other creditors, and void, although the effect of it was not to secure to the plaintiffs the payment of more money than the other creditors were to receive, but only further security for the same sum. Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 372; 1 Smith, 41.

By a deed of composition between a trader and his creditors, it was agreed that the trader should give them his bills, accepted by a friend, for ten shillings in the pound, payable in certain portions at fixed periods, and his own promissory notes for the remaining five shillings, and that the creditors should be at liberty to take his own notes only for their full demands if they pleased; one of the creditors, who signed the deed, took bills from the debtor, accepted by his friend, for the whole fifteen shillings in the pound, payable at the same respective times as the bills agreed to be given by the deed of composition: the payment of these bills was resisted, upon the ground that it was a security beyond that agreed for, and greater than the other creditors obtained; but the transaction was adjudged fair, the creditor not receiving by it more than the others. Feise v. Randall, 6 T. R. 146; 1 Esp. 224.

— Assigning Security held by Creditor.—Defendants holding as security, for a debt due to them from D., a policy of assurance effected by D., refused to join in a composition deed, by which D. was to be released from his debt on paying 8s. in the pound, unless D. assigned the policy to them; D. assigned it, and the defendants then executed the composition deed:—Held, that such assignment was a fraud, and D. having become bankrupt, that his assignees were entitled to recover from defendants the money they had received on the policy, notwithstanding the 8s. in the pound were never paid. Alsager v. Spalding, 4 Bing. N. C. 407; 6 Scott, 204; 1 Arn. 181.

— Agreement to keep up Insurance for ultimate Payment of Debt.—If, upon a composition between a man and his creditors, one accepts the composition, and, in addition, agrees that the debtor shall keep up a policy on his life for the ultimate payment of the remainder of the debt, such an agreement is void, unless every creditor assents, and the policy belongs to the representatives of the debtor. Pfleger v. Browne, 28 Beav. 391.

— When Creditor is Surety for Composition.—A creditor executed a deed of composition, and, as part of the transaction, became surety for the dividend. He received from the debtor two bills of exchange for the full amount of certain sums due from the debtor to him as a consideration for his joining as surety; and this fact was not known to the other creditors:—Held, that the transaction was void, as giving the creditor-surety an undue advantage over the other creditors. Wood v. Barker, 1 L. R., Eq. 139; 35 L. J., Ch. 276; 11 Jur., N. S. 905; 13 L. T. 318; 14 W. R. 47.

— Creditor persuading others to execute Deed.—Where a creditor agreed with his debtor that if he would secure his debt by a promissory note, he would endeavour to prevail on the rest of the creditors to accept a composition, and the transaction was to be kept secret from them:—Held, that a note so given was void on account of the fraudulent consideration. Wells v. Gilling, 4 Moore, 78; 1 B. & B. 447.

— Time of making Agreement.—An insolvent assigned over his effects for the benefit of his creditors, and in the deed there was a proviso that the shares of those creditors who did not execute it before a given day should be paid to the insolvent; an agreement made between the insolvent and a creditor, after that day, that the latter should sign the deed, and the former pay the remainder of the whole debt, is fraudulent and void. Jackson v. Lomas, 4 T. R. 166.

A plea stating that the plaintiff, and the defendant's other creditors, agreed to accept a composition and release their debts; that several creditors, relying upon the agreement, executed a release; and that the plaintiff afterwards obtained and accepted the bond in suit for the residue of the plaintiff's debt, by fraud and covin, and without the knowledge or consent and in fraud of the other creditors, is tantamount to an allegation not of fraud and covin generally, but of fraud and covin effected by the particular means described in the inducement: and, as the facts stated do not shew any stipulation for the giving of the bond contemporaneously with the agreement for the composition, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment non obstante verdicto after an issue upon the fraud and covin found in favour of the defendant. Tuck v. Tooke, 4 M. & R. 393; 2 B. & C. 437; S. C., nom. Tooke v. Tuck, 4 Bing. 224; 12 Moore, 435.

Creditor the Solicitor preparing Deed.—A debtor entered into a compromise with his creditors, among whom was his solicitor, who called the meeting of creditors, attended the same, and prepared the deed of composition. The creditors, and the solicitor, executed the deed. In the deed was contained a covenant by the debtor to assure his life forthwith, and keep it assured during three consecutive years for 1,500*l.*, a sum equal to which was covenanted by the debtor to be paid to the trustees for division among the creditors by monthly payments, or otherwise, as the trustees might require. If the debtor should fail in any payment covenanted to be made, or in assuring or keeping assured his life according to his covenant, the deed should be void. There was a private agreement between the debtor and the solicitor, that, notwithstanding the deed, the latter should be paid his debt in full. The debtor did not assure his life till a year after the deed, when he paid 500*l.*, the amount covenanted to be paid within that period, and assured his life for 1,000*l.*, all that was then due. The policy was deposited with one of the trustees. Two other instalments were subsequently paid to the trustees, according to the terms of the deed. The solicitor subsequently brought an action against the debtor for his whole demand:—Held, that the agreement that the deed should not, as between the solicitor and his debtor, have its full effect, could not be effectual either at law or in equity. Watts v. Hyde, 17 L. J., Ch. 409; 10 Jur. 127; S. C., at law, 1 D. & L. 479; 12 M. & W. 254; 13 L. J., Ex. 41.

Ratification of Agreement.—If all the creditors consent to accept a composition upon an assignment of effects by a deed of trust, to which they are all parties, and one of them, before he executes, obtains from the debtor a promissory note for the residue of his demand, by refusing to execute till such note is made, the note is void in law, as a fraud on the rest of the creditors; and a subsequent promise to pay it is a promise without consideration, which will not maintain an action. Cockshott v. Bennett, 2 T. R. 763.

The defendant, being indebted to the plaintiff and other creditors, in order to induce the plaintiff to accept a composition, agreed to pay him an additional composition, which was secured by a bill of exchange drawn by the plaintiff upon and accepted by the defendant's brother. The bill being dishonoured, and the plaintiff having threatened legal proceedings, the defendant by deed assigned to the plaintiff a policy of assurance as a security for payment of the bill:—Held, that the indenture was tainted with the illegality of the original transaction, and therefore could not be enforced. Geere v. Mare, 2 H. & C. 339; 33 L. J., Ex. 50; 8 L. T. 463; S. P., Clay v. Ray, 17 C. B., N. S. 188.

Composition cannot be recovered.—Where a party refused to sign an agreement to accept of his debtor a composition of 10*s.* in the pound, but the debtor's brother, offering to supply him with coals to the amount of the other 10*s.*, he signed the composition agreement; and the other creditors knew nothing of the coal transaction:—Held, that he could not recover upon a promissory note for the amount of the 10*s.* composition. Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 429; 3 M. & P. 18.

Where the plaintiff, before signing a composition deed, by which the creditors of the defendant agreed to take the defendant's bills at long dates for their respective debts, stipulated, without their knowledge, for a bill of exchange, to be indorsed to him by the defendant for a further sum—the whole agreement between the plaintiff and defendant is void, as being fraudulent upon the other creditors; and the latter cannot recover upon the defendant's bills for the amount of the composition money, even although he has received nothing on the bill indorsed to him by the defendant. Hovden v. Haigh, 3 P. & D. 661; 11 A. & E. 1033.

Debtor may recover from Creditor Money paid in accordance with Agreement.—The plaintiff, being in embarrassed circumstances, offered his creditors a composition of 5*s.* in the pound. The defendant, a creditor, refused to accept it unless the plaintiff paid him 50*l.*, and gave him a bill of exchange for 108*l.* The other creditors would not accept the composition if the defendant did not. The plaintiff paid the defendant the 50*l.* and gave him the bill of exchange, and the defendant then executed the composition deed:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover back the money in an action for money had and received. Atkinson v. Denby, 6 H. & N. 778; 30 L. J., Ex. 361; 7 Jur., N. S. 1205; 4 L. T. 252; 9 W. R. 539. Affirmed, 7 H. & N. 934; 31 L. J., Ex. 362; 8 Jur., N. S. 1012; 7 L. T. 93; 10 W. R. 389—Ex. Ch.

Where a creditor at the time of signing the composition deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192, took from the debtor a private agreement that the debtor should make future payments on his account:—Held, that the agreement was so far fraudulent that the debtor could recover back from the creditor the payments subsequently made thereunder. Lenzberg, Ja. r., 7 Ch. D. 650; 47 L. J., Ch. 178; 26 W. R. 258.

— Even if paid to Third Parties.—Where a defendant being a creditor of the plaintiff, entered into a composition deed with other creditors to receive 10*s.* in the pound, under an agreement with the plaintiff that he would give the defendant his promissory notes for the remainder of the debt, which notes were accordingly given, and the composition was paid to the defendant, and he negotiated the notes, the holder of one of which enforced payment from the plaintiff by action:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover back the amount from the defendant in an action for money had and received. Smith v. Cuff, 6 M. & S. 160. See Wilson v. Wray, 2 P. & D. 253; 10 A. & E. 82.

Where the defendant, being a creditor of the plaintiff, entered into a composition deed with the other creditors to receive 10*s.* in the pound, under an agreement with the plaintiff that he would give the defendant his promissory note for the remainder of the debt, which the defendant should keep in his own hands, and the note was accordingly given and the composition paid to the defendant, and he negotiated the note, the holder of which enforced payment from the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover from the defendant the sum so paid by him in as action for money paid. Horton v. Riley, 11 M. & W. 492; 13 L. J., Ex. 81.

When Creditor estopped from alleging Invalidity of Composition Deed.—Action upon three several notes. Plea, that the defendants were indebted to the plaintiff in 989*l.* 7*s.*, and had accepted four bills for the amount, drawn by him, and payable to his order; that the defendants compounded with their creditors, and that the plaintiff agreed to the composition, receiving a preference beyond the other creditors, and executed a release of his debt; that it was his duty to take up the four bills, but that he neglected to do so, and the holder of the bills threatened to sue the defendants, who, in order to induce the plaintiff to take them up, gave him the notes:—Held, that the fraudulent preference of the plaintiff did not make the composition void as against him; consequently that there was no sufficient consideration for giving the notes, as the plaintiff ought to have indemnified the defendants from the consequences of liability upon the bills. Mallalieu v. Hodgson, 16 Q. B. 689; 20 L. J., Q. B. 339; 15 Juf. 817.

When not.—A declaration stated, that by a deed between the persons whose names and seals were thereunto subscribed and affixed, and who were creditors of the plaintiff, of the first part, the plaintiff of the second part, and M. of the third part, it was recited that the plaintiff was indebted to the persons of the first part in sums secured by bills accepted by the plaintiff, and being unable to pay them in full he had agreed to give his creditors a composition in the pound, to be guaranteed by bills drawn by M. upon and accepted by the plaintiff, and that such composition bills had been given; and by the deed, such of the creditors to whom the plaintiff might have given, or who might be holders of bills of exchange of the plaintiff, covenanted with him that they would indemnify him against and in respect of such bills, and all actions by reason thereof. That the defendant, as a creditor, subscribed his name and affixed his seal to the deed, and that at that time the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant and his partner in an amount secured by two bills, accepted by the plaintiff, and which were then outstanding; that when the bills became due, the holder sued the plaintiff for their amount, and in order to stay the action he paid a large sum of money; breach, that the defendant did not indemnify the plaintiff. Plea, that before the defendant executed the deed, the plaintiff was indebted to him and his partner, and the other persons, creditors and parties to the deed of the first part, and the plaintiff, being unable to pay the defendant and his partner, and the creditors, their debts in full, offered to deliver to each of them a composition bill, upon the terms and conditions in the deed mentioned, provided they would execute the deed; and thereupon the plaintiff represented to the other creditors, that the defendant and his partner had agreed to accept the composition bills for the same proportionate amount, and upon the same terms and under the same conditions as the other creditors; and that upon the faith of such representations, the other creditors were induced to execute the deed, whereas, in truth and in fact, at the time such representations were made, it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant and his partner, that the plaintiff should pay the defendant and his partner the full price of goods before then sold and delivered by the defendant and his partner to the plaintiff, and which formed part of the sum due from the plaintiff to the defendant and his partner, and that the plaintiff would further pay in cash, to the defendant and his partner, 5*s.* in the pound upon the whole amount due from the plaintiff to them, in lieu of delivering to them composition bills; and that for the purpose of inducing the other creditors to believe that the representations were true, the defendant should, for himself and his partner, make and execute the deed, which agreement was, at the time of the other creditors executing the deed, unknown to them:—Held, first, that the plea sufficiently stated that a fraud was intended to be committed by the plaintiff and defendant on the other creditors, by a bargain unknown to them, to give and receive more than they were to receive. Higgins v. Pitt, 4 Ex. 312; 18 L. J., Ex. 488.

Held, secondly, that the plaintiff could not sue on this covenant, which was part of the same fraudulent executory agreement, and therefore void as against the creditors, and that the defendant might set up such defence, although a party to the fraud. Id.

Preferential Payment—In consideration of Annuling Prior Adjudication.—Messrs. P., being debtors to the plaintiff in 4,161*l.*, were adjudicated bankrupts upon his petition. He held two policies upon the life of one of the bankrupts as a security for a portion of his debt. The defendant entered into a composition with his creditors other than the plaintiff, who had proved their debts, of 3*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, and they upon that amount being paid or secured, signed their consent to a petition to annul or supersede the bankruptcy. The plaintiff at first refused to sign the petition, but by a written agreement entered into between himself and the defendant, and after reciting these facts, the plaintiff undertook to sign the petition and to execute a release from all demands upon the bankrupts upon payment by the defendant, within one month after the bankruptcy had been superseded or annulled, of 167*l.* as a composition for 1,453*l.*, parcel of the debt of 4,161*l.*, and upon a transfer to him (the plaintiff) of the two policies of insurance. The other creditors were wholly ignorant of this agreement:—Held, that these facts did not support a plea which alleged that the agreement was entered into in fraud of the other creditors, and that it was therefore fraudulent and void. Smith v. Salzmann or Saltzman, 9 Ex. 535; 23 L. J., Ex. 177.

—To Creditors Suing—Payment under Pressure.—At a meeting of the defendant's creditors, the following agreement, to which the plaintiff was an assenting party, was made and signed by all the creditors present:—"We the undersigned creditors of W. B., in consideration of 10*s.* in the pound on our respective debts set opposite to our respective names, hereby agree to accept the same in discharge of our said debts, on the understanding that no concealment or fraud has been practised by the said W. B.: the whole of the creditors receiving not exceeding a like sum in discharge of their debts."—At the time of entering into this agreement, it was known that the debtor was being sued in a county court by one P. as executor of a creditor for a small sum which was afterwards paid in full the day before the cause was ripe for trial:—Held, that the agreement was limited to the creditors signing it; and that, even if it were not so, the payment to P. being made under pressure, and not in pursuance of a prior arrangement to give him a preference, did not render the transaction void. Carey v. Barrett, 4 C. P. D. 379.

2. UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY ACT OF 1849.

a. Under Control of the Court of Bankruptcy.

Statutory Majority—Joint Debts.—The three-fifths of the creditors required by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 216, to give effect to an arrangement with creditors, might include creditors to whom debts were due from the arranging debtor jointly with others. Heath, Ex parte, 4 De G. & S. 593.

Grounds for disturbing Decision of Commissioner.—In the accounts of an arranging debtor, his stock in trade was valued at 472*l.*, his good credits at 499*l.*, the doubtful at 276*l.*, and the bad at 1,808*l.* His debts were 3,900*l.* There were uncontradicted affidavits that, if the estate was realized under a bankruptcy, a dividend of 2*s.* in the pound only would be paid. A proposal for immediate payment of a dividend of 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, and for the delivery of the debtor's own promissory notes for 2*s.* 6*d.* more on a future day, had been assented to by three-fifths of the creditors:—Held, that there was not sufficient ground for disturbing the decision of the commissioner, who declined to confirm the proposal as being not reasonable, and adjudicated the debtor a bankrupt. Perrins, Ex parte, 1 De G., F. & J. 299; 29 L. J., Bk. 12; 6 Jur., N. S. 206.

What a discontinuance of Proceedings.—A debtor petitioned the Bankruptcy Court, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 211. Protection was granted, and a private sitting appointed, but the sitting was adjourned; at the second sitting the proceedings were adjourned into open court. The debtor then appealed to the Lords Justices, who remitted the case to the commissioner for further consideration. The commissioner further adjourned the first sitting:—Held, that there was no discontinuance of the proceedings by the adjournment into court. Naylor v. Mortimore, 17 C. B., N. S. 207; 23 L. J., C. P. 273; 10 Jur., N. S. 1001; 10 L. T. 903; 13 W. R. 47.

Letters of Attorney need not be under Seal.]

—It was not necessary that letters of attorney, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 217, should be under seal, nor need letters of attorney authorizing public officers of companies to consent be under the seal of the companies. Id.

Tender of Composition.—By an agreement or a resolution under the control of the Bankruptcy Court, in pursuance of the arrangement clauses of the act of 1849, a composition was proposed, and between the first and second meetings a creditor told the debtor that he would be paid in full, and that he need not trouble himself to come and offer the proposed composition:—Held, that it was the duty of the debtor, after the confirmation of the agreement or resolution at the second meeting, to tender the composition to the creditor. Jeffries v. Onions, 13 L. T. 606; 14 W. R. 145—Ex. Ch.

A debtor assigned all his effects to trustees for all his creditors, parties to the assignment, who should assent thereto within three months from its date. The execution of the assignment by the debtor and the trustees was attested by a solicitor, as required by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 68, and notice of it was given in the London Gazette and otherwise, as required by that section:—Held, that the assignment was within the provisions of the 68th section, and therefore valid. Harris v. Pettit, 31 L. J., Ch. 552; 9 Jur., N. S. 68; 6 L. T. 572; 10 W. R. 599.

Petition—Act of Bankruptcy.—Where a trader presented a petition for arrangement with his creditors, and no arrangement being effected, he was adjudicated bankrupt on that petition:—Held, that the petition for arrangement created a valid act of bankruptcy. Harrison, Ex parte, 26 L. J., Bk. 30; 3 Jur., N. S. 228—L. J.

But where a trader petitioned for arrangement, and filed an account of debts, and made a proposal, and at an adjourned meeting he did not attend, and neither the proposal, nor any modification of it, was accepted; whereupon the meeting was adjourned to the public court, and he was adjudged bankrupt, but the adjudication was not founded on the petition of a creditor, nor was the petition dismissed:—Held, that the filing the petition for arrangement was not an act of bankruptcy, that petition never having been actually dismissed, and no petition for an adjudication of bankruptcy having been filed within two months in pursuance of s. 76. Mont v. Sharp, 2 H. & N. 540; 27 L. J., Ex. 29; 3 Jur., N. S. 1327.

Certificate of Commissioner—On whom binding.—A certificate granted by a commissioner in bankruptcy to a petitioning trader under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 221, was binding on those persons only who were creditors at the time of the petition, and had notice of the sittings of the court, as required by the act. Wasson v. Allcard, 8 Ex. 260; 22 L. J., Ex. 45—Ex. Ch.

—Not conclusive Evidence.—The certificate of a commissioner under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 221, was not conclusive evidence that the resolution therein mentioned has been carried into effect, and that the creditors have been satisfied; and where those facts are disproved, will not operate as a bar to an action by a creditor. Jeffries v. Onions, 13 L. T. 606; 14 W. R. 145—Ex. Ch.

Appeal—Conduct of Creditors—Estoppel.—Debtors arranged with their creditors for payment to them of 10*s.* in the pound by instalments, and, to secure the payment of those instalments, they assigned all their estate and effects to trustees, to carry on the business until payment, or until default in payment of any instalment. The assignment provided, that, if the proceeds of the trade were insufficient, the trustees were to convene a meeting of the creditors, and either to sell the estate and divide the proceeds, or wind up the estate in such manner as should be agreed on by three-fifths of the creditors. The arrangement was to be in satisfaction of the debts. The instalments were not all paid, and the creditors concurred in a sale of the debtors' estate, after which the debtors obtained a certificate from the district commissioner under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 221. The creditors moved for an order to set aside that certificate, but failed. They then appealed:—Held, that the certificate was correct, and the appeal must be dismissed, the creditors having by their own conduct precluded themselves from disputing the certificate. Foster, Ex parte, 6 Jur., N. S. 664—L. J.

b. By Deed.

Whole Property must be given up.—A deed of arrangement between a trader and his creditors executed by six-sevenths in number and value of the creditors whose debts amounted to 10*l.*, was not binding on a creditor, not a party to the deed, unless the deed provided for the distribution of the whole of the trader's estate among his creditors. Tetley v. Taylor, 1 El. & Bl. 521; 21 L. J., Q. B. 346; 17 Jur. 130—Ex. Ch.; S. P., Drew v. Collins, 6 Ex. 670; 20 L. J., Ex. 369; 15 Jur. 584; Fisher v. Bell, 12 C. B. 363; 21 L. J., C. P. 228.

Nor was such a deed valid, though it conveyed the debtor's whole estate to trustees, if it empowered them to give back to the debtor effects to the value of 20*l.* Cooper v. Thornton, 1 El. & Bl. 544; 22 L. J., Q. B. 145.

A deed which excepted from the assignment the wearing apparel of the debtor and his family, was void. March v. Warwick, 1 H. & N. 158; 25 L. J., Ex. 334.

But a deed of arrangement was not rendered void by an exception out of the assignment to the trustees of the necessary wearing apparel of the debtor, his wife and family; or of a leasehold house held by the debtor at a rack-rent, and recited to be of no value, the deed containing a covenant by the debtor to assign it to the trustees when he should be required to do so. Spitzer v. Chaffers, 14 C. B., N. S. 686; 33 L. J., C. P. 7; 10 Jur., N. S. 258; 8 L. T. 665; 11 W. R. 914.

A deed of arrangement, which provided for the distribution of the debtor's estate in the same manner "as if he had become bankrupt" on a certain day, was void; since a deed of arrangement must provide for the distribution of all the debtor's estate, but a bankrupt is entitled to retain certain excepted articles. Snodin v. Boyce, 4 H. & N. 391; 28 L. J., Ex. 245; 33 L. T. 164.

A deed of arrangement, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224, which provided for the winding-up of a trader's estate by him under the superintendence of inspectors, contained a clause that the estate, with the exception of such allowances and payments of effects or moneys to the debtors as the inspectors or inspector for the time being might, in their or his discretion, authorize or direct, but not exceeding in quantity or amount the allowances which might have been made to the debtors out of their estate and effects under the statute relating to bankrupts, in case a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy had been filed against them on a certain day and they had been thereunder adjudicated bankrupts, and which allowances and payments to the quantity and amount aforesaid, or to any less quantity or amount the inspectors or inspector for the time being might direct and authorize, should be administered as nearly as circumstances would admit, having regard to the provisions hereof, upon the principles and according to the rules and practice of the bankruptcy law, and as if such petition for adjudication of bankruptcy had been filed and such adjudication made as aforesaid, was void. Cruger v. Dunlop, 7 H. & N. 525; 32 L. J., Ex. 42; 7 L. T. 132; 10 W. R. 801—Ex. Ch.

— Even if Debts to be paid in full.—A deed of inspectorship, containing a covenant by a debtor for payment of his debts in full by instalments, and a covenant on the part of the creditors executing the deed not to sue in the meantime, but not providing, except in certain events, for the assignment of all the debtor's estate, was not a deed of arrangement within the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224. Wilkes, Ex parte, 5 De G., Mac. & G. 418; 24 L. J., Bk. 6.

In favour of all Creditors.—The deed of arrangement must have provided for the distribution of all the debtor's estate and effects, and amongst all his creditors. Irving v. Gray, 3 H. & N. 34; 27 L. J., Ex. 273; 4 Jur., N. S. 380.

But a deed providing for the distribution of all the debtor's estate amongst all his creditors, who would have been creditors under an adjudication of bankruptcy on the day of the meeting of creditors, treating such creditors as creditors for the sums they would on that day be entitled to prove for in bankruptcy, was not invalid, because, first, it did not contain an express assignment by the debtor of his estate, but only a covenant to assign it when required by the inspectors; secondly, because it made no provision for creditors who might become so between the day of the meeting and the date of the deed, it not appearing that there were any creditors who became so between those times; thirdly, because it contained a letter of license which was absolute and not conditional; and, fourthly, because it did not contain a provision rendering it absolutely void if the debtor did not perform the covenants contained in it. Id.

A plea of arrangement by deed, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224, was not good unless it shewed on the face of it that the deed was for the distribution of the whole of the debtor's estate, and enured for the benefit of all the creditors, and not only of those who should execute the deed. Bloomer v. Darke, 2 C. B., N. S. 165; 26 L. J., C. P. 214.

In an action on a bill of exchange, the defendant pleaded a deed of arrangement with his creditors, to which the plaintiff was not a party. The plea stated, that it was provided by the deed (which was made subsequently to the 12th February, 1856), that the estate of the defendant should be administered and the assets payable and distributable amongst the creditors in the same manner as they would be payable and distributable, as if he had been adjudicated a bankrupt on the 12th of February, 1856, and as if the debts of the creditors, parties thereto, had been proved on the 12th of February. The deed contained a covenant that the creditors would not commence any proceedings at law or in equity against the defendant on account of their debts, and that if any creditor failed to observe that covenant, his debts should be extinguished, and the covenant might be pleaded as a release. The plea averred, that no person became a creditor between the 12th of February, 1856, and the time of making the deed; and that three calendar months had elapsed since the plaintiff had notice from the defendant of his suspension of payment, and of the deed:—Held, first, that the deed did provide for a distribution of the entire estate and effects of the defendant amongst all his creditors, since the words "as if the debts of the creditors, parties thereto, had been proved on the 12th of February," did not limit the operation of the previous words, so as to make the estate and effects distributable amongst those creditors only who were parties to the deed. Macnaught v. Russell, 1 H. & N. 611; 26 L. J., Ex. 192.. See Swayne, Ex parte, 3 De G. & J. 53.

Held, secondly, that as the plea averred that no person became a creditor between the 12th of February, 1856, and the time of making the deed, the deed was not open to the objection that it contained no provision in respect of persons who might become creditors in the intermediate time. Ib.

The plaintiff could not object that the covenant not to sue was unreasonable, for he was not a party to it. Ib.

It was not necessary to allege that three months had elapsed since the plaintiff had notice that the deed was signed by six-sevenths of the creditors; for, according to the true construction of the statute, the three months ran from the time that notice was given of the suspension of payment and of the deed of arrangement. Ib.

Partners—Joint and Separate Debts—Creditors executing Deed.]—A deed of arrangement, by which A. and B., traders, assigned all their joint and several real and personal estate to trustees for the benefit of their creditors, after providing for the payment of the expenses of the deed, declared the trusts as to the distribution of the estate as follows:—"To pay and divide all the remainder of the trust moneys unto and amongst all the creditors of A. and B. rateably, and in proportion to the amount of their debts, without any preference whatsoever, until the whole of such debts be fully paid and satisfied, or so much thereof as the residue of the moneys will extend to; and upon further trust to pay the ultimate surplus of such moneys (if any), and also the dividends of such of their creditors as shall not come in and execute these presents, unto A. and B., their executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that the deed was void, first, because it did not provide that the joint estate should be distributed to the joint creditors, and the separate estate to the separate creditors, according to the law of bankruptcy; and, secondly, because it did not provide for the distribution of the estate among all the bankrupt's creditors, but only amongst those who executed the deed. Leonard v. Sheard, El. & El. 667; 28 L. J., Q. B. 183; 5 Jur., N. S. 1050; 33 L. T., O. S. 9.

—To an action against the acceptors of a bill of exchange, they pleaded a plea founded upon a deed of arrangement made by them with their creditors under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224, which had not been signed by the plaintiff, but which was said on the part of the debtors to be nevertheless binding on him by reason of its being executed by six-sevenths in number and value of their creditors. The instrument was not a composition deed, but it contained a clause by which each of the creditors, parties to or bound by the deed, covenanted not to sue, impede or molest the debtors; and then followed another clause, to the effect that if any creditor, by whom or on whose behalf the deed should have been actually executed, should act contrary to that covenant, the debtors should be absolutely discharged from all claims and demands, both at law and in equity, by such creditor:—Held, that this latter clause was not binding upon the plaintiff, it being in its nature merely personal to the individual creditors who chose to sign the deed, and inapplicable to the creditors in general. Legg v. Cheesebrough, 5 C. B., N. S. 741; 28 L. J., C. P. 209; 5 Jur., N. S. 795.

What Instrument sufficient.]—To a scire facias suggesting a breach of a bond, the defendant pleaded that, before issuing the scire facias, he was a trader and indebted, and suspended payment; and that thereupon "a memorandum of arrangement within the meaning and according to 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224, was made between him and the several persons whose names were thereunto subscribed, being creditors, &c.; that all things were performed and done as required by the statute to make the memorandum of arrangement an obligatory instrument within the statute upon all the creditors of the defendant;" that the plaintiffs were creditors, and after the memorandum of arrangement had been signed, and before the scire facias, had notice, and that the defendant and the parties of the other part had at all times since making the memorandum of arrangement well and truly observed the agreements therein; and that by reason of the premises, and by force of the statute, the memorandum of arrangement became and was and is obligatory on the plaintiffs, as if they had signed the same:—Held, that the plea was bad, inasmuch as it disclosed nothing to shew that the memorandum of agreement was a bar to the action. Tabor v. Edwards, 4 C. B., N. S. 1; 27 L. J., C. P. 183; 4 Jur., N. S. 339.

Provisions causing Inequality.]—A composition deed, purporting to provide for the distribution of the whole of the debtor's property, contained a clause professing to defeat any action brought by a creditor (whether one who had signed the deed or not), by making such action ipso facto a release of the debt; and another clause enabling any creditor, with the inspector's leave, and notwithstanding the former clause, to bring an action, and, in case of success, to receive dividends on the amount recovered:—Held, that the conjoint effect of those clauses was to establish a double inequality, and so the deed did not relate to the equal distribution of the debtor's assets amongst the creditors in payment of their debts only, so as to be within the operation of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224, and to bind dissenting creditors. Gardner v. Chapman, 8 C. B., N. S. 317; 29 L. J., C. P. 281; 6 Jur., N. S. 1254.

Made before passing of Act.]—A deed of arrangement, though executed by six-sevenths in number and value of the creditors of an insolvent estate, was not binding on the rest, if executed so as to be capable of being carried into effect before the passing of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. Larpernt v. Bibby, 5 H. L. Cas. 481; 24 L. J., Q. B. 301; S. P., Noble v. Gaddan, 5 H. L. Cas. 504.

12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224—"Creditors."—In 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224, the word "creditors" included those creditors with whom the arrangement had been entered into. Culvert, Ex parte, 3 De G. & J. 95; 27 L. J., Bk. 42; 4 Jur., N. S. 1258.

Proof of Execution.—In order to prove a deed of arrangement, the defendant produced from the Court of Bankruptcy a certificate of the inspectors, filed there in conformity with 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 126, and an account and an affidavit of the defendant in conformity with s. 227. The account included the debts and names of the creditors mentioned in the schedule to the deed. The certificate and other documents were not filed until after action brought. The defendant also proved that the deed was for some time before the commencement of the action in the same state as to the execution thereof by the several parties as when produced at the trial, with the exception of two creditors, without whom six-sevenths in number and value appeared to have executed.—Held, sufficient evidence of the due execution of the deed. Wing v. Gray, 3 H. & N. 34; 27 L. J., Ex. 273; 4 Jur., N. S. 380.

Tender or Payment of Composition.—The mere agreement to accept a composition under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 230, without the payment or tender of the amount, did not release the bankrupt from liability. Hazard v. Mare, 6 H. & N. 435; 30 L. J., Ex. 97; 5 L. T. 743; 9 W. R. 252.

3. UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY ACT OF 1861.

a. Requirements of Act.

i. Majority of Creditors.

Nature of Debts—Bills indorsed by Debtor.—Outstanding bills indorsed by the debtor are properly included in considering whether three-fourths in value of the debtor's creditors executed the deed. Ilderton v. Castrique, 13 L. T. 506.

Who should assent.—A debtor executed an inspectorship deed by which it was provided that, in the case of debts due from him on negotiable instruments, either the original holder, or the present or ultimate holder, or any intermediate indorsers, might execute or assent to the deed, but that the ultimate holder should be deemed the creditor and party to the deed. The debtor was liable on acceptances on bills drawn by S., who was returned as an assenting creditor in respect of them; but, in fact, S. was, at the time of the registration, the holder of only a small part of those bills, the rest being in the hands of his bankers, who had discounted them. After the registration all the bills came into the hands of S.:—Held, that the bankers were the proper parties to have been returned as creditors in respect of the bills in their hands, and that S. had no right to assent in respect of his contingent liability as drawer; and, as striking out of these bills turned the scale of assents and dissents, the deed was void. Petrie, Ex parte, 3 L. R., Ch. 232; 37 L. J., Bk. 13; 18 L. T. 169; 16 W. R. 467.

The bills having been given in respect of a speculation the result of which was not ascertained:—Held, that S. could not be deemed a creditor in respect of his estimated loss in the transaction. Id.

Company—Liability to Calls.—A contributory of a company in course of winding up executed a deed of arrangement with his creditors, and entered the company as creditors only for a call of 5*l.* per share which had been made. He was liable to be called on for 35*l.*, per share more, and calls to that amount were afterwards made. If the company had been entered as creditors for this whole amount, the dissenting creditors would have been the majority in value. The debtor subsequently alleged a set-off against the calls, which he had not stated on the application for registration:—Held, that the company ought to have been entered as creditors for the estimated amount of the future calls, as well as the call already made, being the amount provable in bankruptcy according to the Companies Act, 1862, s. 75; that the deed, therefore, was not assented to by the majority required by the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192; and was not binding on a dissentient creditor. Pickering, Ex parte, 4 L. R., Ch. 58; 38 L. J., Bk. 1; 19 L. T. 369; 17 W. R. 38.

Disputed Debt.—In estimating whether the deed has been assented to by the proper majority in number and value of the creditors, all the creditors and debts returned in the schedule must be taken into consideration, whether such debts are disputed or not. Middleton, Ex parte, 3 De G., J. & S. 201; 33 L. J. Bk. 36; 10 L. T. 82, 571.

Secured Creditors.—The word creditors in the first condition specified in the 192nd section means and extends to creditors holding security, good or bad, sufficient or insufficient, as well as creditors wholly without security; and in reckoning the proportion of assenting creditors, the debts due to secured as well as unsecured creditors must be taken into account. Godden, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 260.

If, in ascertaining whether three-fourths in value of the creditors have signed a composition deed, both secured and unsecured creditors are included in the whole amount, the creditors, parties to the deed, must be taken to have signed in respect of both their secured and unsecured debts, and the proportion ought to be calculated accordingly. The names and the amount of the debts of all the creditors must appear, whether secured (wholly or in part) or unsecured. Turquand v. Moss, 17 C. B., N. S. 15; 33 L. J., C. P. 355; 10 Jur., N. S. 824; 10 L. T. 574; 12 W. R. 960; S. P., Smith, Ex parte, 10 L. T. 803; King v. Randall, 14 C. B., N. S. 721; 11 W. R. 1031.

In ascertaining whether a deed of composition has been executed by a majority of creditors, all the creditors must be taken into account, whether or not they have security for their claims. Whittaker v. Lowe, 11 Jur., N. S. 530; 12 L. T. 500; 13 W. R. 723. Affirmed, 1 L. R., Ex. 74; 35 L. J., Ex. 44; 12 Jur., N. S. 375; 13 L. T. 469; 14 W. R. 197; 4 H. & C. 109—Ex. Ch.

A deed of arrangement may be registered as if assented to by a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors without deducting the amount of the securities held by such creditors as are secured. Stark, In re, 1 L. R., Ch. 150; 35 L. J., Bk. 15; 12 Jur., N. S. 40; 13 L. T. 573; 14 W. R. 255.

Goods were contracted to be sold, with a condition that they should not be delivered unless the vendors chose or the goods were required by the purchaser for the actual purposes of his business until payment of a bill of exchange which was given by the purchaser for the full value of the goods. The bill of exchange having been dishonoured and the goods nearly all remaining undelivered, the purchaser executed a trust deed, and the vendors assented thereto for a sum which included the value of goods contracted to be sold:—Held, that upon the facts of the case the contract for sale and purchase was absolute and not conditional, and that the retention of the goods was to operate as a security for the payment of the bill of exchange, and that the vendors could, if they chose, assent to the deed for an amount of which the sum so secured formed part. Midleton, Ex parte, 3 De G., J. & S. 201; 33 L. J., Bk. 36; 10 L. T. 82, 517.

— Under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 104.—The 31 & 32 Vict. c. 104, s. 3, which enacts that "no creditor shall be reckoned in the computation of the requisite majority" of creditors executing a deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192, unless he proves his debt, "and in the computation of the requisite value of such creditors," the amount due to each creditor, after deducting the value of the securities held by him on the debtor's property, shall alone be reckoned, is not retrospective. Ellis v. McCormick, 4 L. R., Q. B. 271; 38 L. J., Q. B. 127; 20 L. T. 223; 17 W. R. 506; 10 B. & S. 83.

A debtor in 1864 executed a deed of assignment of his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors; it contained a clause empowering the trustees to carry out contracts which he had entered into, but not a release. The deed was executed by the requisite majority of creditors in value if the debts were reckoned exclusively of secured debts, but not if they were included:—Held, that the deed was void. Id.

Who may assent—Bank Manager.—The manager of a bank has no authority, as such, after the bank has ceased to carry on business, to assent to a deed of arrangement between a debtor of the bank and his creditors. Pinder v. Coqui, 15 W. R. 22.

— On behalf of Incorporated Companies.—An arranging debtor's creditors were public unincorporated companies and banking companies, incorporated under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, or 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113. These creditors were represented at the meetings, and assented to the resolution under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, made at a private meeting, by a person who acted for them under powers of attorney (not under seal) executed by their managers, secretaries or public officers, who did not appear to be authorized under seal to grant such powers of attorney, or otherwise than by virtue of their being such managers, &c.; but the banks which they represented had ratified their acts by receiving the composition:—Held, that the assents were properly given. Naylor v. Mortimore, 17 C. B., N. S. 207; 33 L. J., C. P. 273; 10 Jur., N. S. 1001.

— Liquidator of Company.—A joint-stock company, in the course of being wound-up compulsorily, appeared among the assenting creditors in the name of the official liquidator, G.:—Held, that the debtor must prove that G. was in fact the official liquidator, and was duly authorized to assent to the deed. Drew v. Myers, 19 L. T. 740.

— Assignor of Debt.—Where a creditor has assigned his debt to another, an assent in writing by the original creditor is not a sufficient assent. Id.

Assent when given.—The majority of assenting creditors required for the purpose of making a deed binding on dissenting creditors, must be constituted by creditors who have assented before registration of the deed. Raistrick, Ex parte, 37 L. J., Bk. 12; 18 L. T. 41; 16 W. R. 388; S. P., Beddall v. King, 4 L. R., C. P. 549; 38 L. J., C. P. 249; 20 L. T. 325; 17 W. R. 614.

— Before Deed drawn up.—A creditor may assent in writing before the deed is prepared or executed by the debtor; and if the assent is to a deed of composition only, it will be sufficient, although the deed, when prepared, also contains a release. Waddington v. Roberts, 3 L. R., Q. B. 579; 37 L. J., Q. B. 253; 18 L. T. 853; 16 W. R. 1040; 9 B. & S. 697.

The assent of creditors to a deed may be given before the deed is executed or even prepared; all that is necessary is, that the deed when drawn up should substantially correspond with the terms of the deed specified in the assent. Rutty v. Benthall, 2 L. R., C. P. 488; 36 L. J., C. P. 194; 16 L. T. 287; 15 W. R. 744.

The assent is not rendered invalid by the mere fact that the document containing it also professes to empower a third person to execute the deed for the creditor, and is not stamped as a power of attorney. Id.

The creditors of a debtor assented to a letter of licence being granted to him. Subsequently a deed was executed carrying out the arrangement; but in addition there was recited in it, as part of the arrangement, a deed of the previous day conveying certain of the debtor's property to a trustee selected by himself, for the benefit of all his creditors:—Held, that the deed was not in conformity with the assents, and so, not being assented to by the requisite number of creditors, was bad under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. Styring v. Waters, 22 L. T. 541; 18 W. R. 808.

Conditional Assent.—A conditional assent on the part of a creditor to a deed cannot, so long as the condition remains unfulfilled, be reckoned in calculating the statutory majority of creditors. Rawlins, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 225.

The assents of creditors to a composition deed must, when the deed is registered, be unconditional; but they will not be rendered invalid by their containing a condition which is fulfilled by the deed itself. Horsfall v. Swan Bank and Brick Works Company, 18 L. T. 409; 16 W. R. 934.

Qualified Assent.—A written assent to a deed, appearing on its face to be given "without prejudice to the creditor's rights under a former deed," is invalid, because qualified and not absolute. Johnson v. Ossenton, 4 L. R., Ex. 107; 38 L. J., Ex. 76; 19 L. T. 793; 17 W. R. 675.

Creditor's right to inspect.—A creditor has a right to demand inspection at common law of the written assents to a deed, they being by virtue of the statute part of the deed itself. Andrew v. Pell, 2 L. R., C. P. 251.

Creditor's right to impeach Deed on ground of Assent by insufficient Majority.]—A creditor may shew that the affidavit delivered to the registrar on the registration of a deed contains an untrue statement as to the majority of creditors required by the act having assented to or approved of such deed. Beddall v. King, 4 L. R., C. P. 549; 38 L. J., C. P. 249; 20 L. T. 325; 17 W. R. 614.

Proof of Assents.]—Upon a plea of composition and release:—Held, that the production of the deed and certificate of registration, and sealed copies of the affidavits required by s. 192, and by the General Rules of 1862, will not dispense with proof that a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors of 10*l*. and upwards have in writing assented to or approved of the deed. Bramble v. Moss, 3 L. R., C. P. 458; 37 L. J., C. P. 209; 18 L. T. 241; 16 W. R. 649.

The affidavit made on the registration of an inspektorship deed is not sufficient evidence of the assent of the creditors. Phillips v. Furber, 5 L. R., Ch. 746; 22 L. T. 707; 18 W. R. 985.

Inspectors claiming under a deed of inspektorship registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, must prove the assents to the deed of the creditors. Id.

Only two Creditors for amounts over 10*l*.]—A trust deed, which has been assented to by the only two creditors for amounts above 10*l*., will be received for registration as assented to by a majority of such creditors. Hammond, In re, 12 Jur., N. S. 460; 14 L. T. 692.

ii. Execution by Trustees.

Trustee not necessary.]—A deed of composition is good as a defence against an action of a non-executing creditor, though it appoints no trustee. Deuchurst v. Jones, 3 H. & C. 60; 33 L. J., Ex. 294; 10 Jur., N. S. 753; 10 L. T. 538; 12 W. R. 885.

A deed of composition between all the creditors of the first part and the debtor of the second part, in which no trustee is appointed, and which provides no security for the payment of the composition, is valid, since, if the composition is not paid, each creditor has his action. Brooks v. Jennings, 1 L. R., C. P. 476; 12 Jur., N. S. 341; 14 L. T. 19; 14 W. R. 440.

Three Trustees—Execution by Two.]—At a meeting of the creditors of a debtor, it was resolved that there should be an assignment of the debtor's estate, and that two creditors who were present should be appointed the trustees. At the instance of the solicitor of an absent creditor, his client was also nominated one of the trustees. The deed was subsequently prepared, and executed by the two original trustees, but the third refused to sign it:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had no power to direct the deed to be registered without his signature. King, Ex parte, 34 L. J., Bk. 20; 11 Jur., N. S. 4; 11 L. T. 466; 13 W. R. 330.

iii. Attestation of Execution by Debtor.

Power of Attorney given by Debtor residing abroad.]—A debtor resident abroad executed a power of attorney authorizing a person in this country to execute a deed of composition with his creditors. The execution of the power of attorney by the debtor and of the composition deed by the attorney was attested by solicitors:—Held, that the terms of the third rule of sect. 192 had been sufficiently complied with, and that the deed ought to be registered. Bell, In re, 2 De. G., J. & S. 672; 34 L. J., Bk. 36; 12 L. T. 752; 13 W. R. 1002.

iv. Registration of Deed.

What Deeds.]—The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 194, applies not only to deeds which comply with, and are framed under, the 192nd section, but to every deed whatever which is or professes to be, or is obviously on the face of it intended to be, a deed of arrangement between a debtor and the whole body of his creditors. Hodgson v. Wightman, 1 H. & C. 810; 32 L. J., Ex. 147; 9 Jur., N. S. 308; 7 L. T. 832; 11 W. R. 574.

Every such deed, therefore, which is not registered in the Court of Bankruptcy, under the provisions of the 194th section, is inadmissible in evidence. Id.

A deed of composition purported to be entered into between a debtor and the creditors who executed the deed, and the creditors (stated therein to be, or representing at the least, three-fourths in value) in consideration of the payment of a composition which the debtor covenanted to pay to them, by two instalments on specified days, released their debts. It did not appear whether all the creditors, or what proportion of them in number and value, executed the deed. In an action by one of the executing creditors against the debtor, the deed of composition being offered in evidence by the debtor in support of a plea of release:—Held, that this was a deed intended to be executed by, or binding on, the whole body of creditors, and that being unregistered it could not be given in evidence. Id.

A deed whereby A., a debtor, assigned his estate to trustees upon trust out of the proceeds to pay rateably to the parties thereto of the third part, who should execute the deed within twenty-one days from its date (being respectively creditors of A.) the several debts set opposite their names in the schedule; with a proviso that such creditors as should not execute or assent in writing to take the benefit of the deed within the limited time, should be excluded from all benefit thereunder, is a deed between the debtor and all his creditors, and, as such, requires registration, and is, therefore, in default of such registration, inadmissible in evidence. Prichard v. Timothy, 35 L. J., Ex. 165; 14 L. T. 443.

Deed registered under s. 194.]—A deed registered under s. 194, in order to operate under s. 197, must be registered with all the formalities required by s. 192. Pearson v. Pearson, 1 L. R., Ex. 308; 35 L. J., Ex. 172; 12 Jur., N. S. 589; 4 H. & C. 316.

Deed under s. 185.]—In an action by a debtor for an arrest, after the execution of a deed of arrangement, under s. 185 of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, by a creditor who had not executed such deed, the absence of an allegation in the declaration, that the deed was registered under s. 187, before action, is a fatal defect. Renwick v. Dale, 8 L. T. 366.

Deed registered under s. 194.—The registration of trust deeds under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, ss. 192, 194, although in practice performed by the same officer, are distinct and have different operations; and where, for the want of the papers required by the orders, registration under the former section had been refused by the officer, and the applicant had registered the deed under s. 194.—Held, that the registration did not prevent the deed, which was an assignment of all the debtor's property, from being an act of bankruptcy. Morgan, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 288; 32 L. J., Bk. 15; 2 Jur., N. S. 559; 7 L. T. 729; 11 W. R. 316.

Enlarging Time for Registration.—The Court of Bankruptcy has no power to order the registration of a trust deed seeking to bind creditors who have not executed, where the twenty-eight days after the signature of the debtor have elapsed. The power of extending the time, under s. 194, is applicable only to deeds not seeking to bind the minority. Skinner, In re, 34 L. J., Bk. 9; 10 Jur., N. S. 1137; 11 L. T. 354; 13 W. R. 114.

The power of a commissioner of bankruptcy to extend the period of registration does not cease at the expiration of the twenty-eight days, but may be exercised subsequently, so as to make a deed registered within the enlarged time receivable in evidence. Wishart v. Fowler, 4 B. & S. 674; 33 L. J., Q. B. 125; 10 Jur., N. S. 633; 9 L. T. 608; 12 W. R. 307.

A trust deed under s. 192 must be registered within twenty-eight days after execution by the debtor, and where a commissioner, within the twenty-eight days, refused to direct the registration, on the ground of informality:—Held, after the expiration of the twenty-eight days, that he had no jurisdiction to direct the registration. Power, In re, 1 L. R., Ch. 153; 11 Jur., N. S. 985; 13 L. T. 451.

Discretion of Commissioner to refuse Registration.—Where a commissioner has refused to allow the registration of a trust deed, on the ground that the affidavit upon which the application to register had been made was insufficient:—Held, that the matter was discretionary with the commissioner. Anon., 11 Jur., N. S. 69; S. C., nom. Groome, Ex parte, 13 W. R. 302.

Stamping—Secured Debts.—An inspectorship deed of a debtor's estate is sufficiently stamped if, in addition to the ordinary deed stamp, it bears an ad valorem stamp calculated at the rate of 5s. upon every hundred pounds of the whole amount of the debts uncovered by security; and the amount of the secured debts need not be taken into consideration in calculating the stamp duty. Grates v. Lovett, 18 L. T. 297.

Inadequate Stamp.—The trustees under a deed of arrangement put in the deed, which was in the form given in Schedule (D.) of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, for the purpose of proving their title to certain machines, of the value of 300*l.*, alleged to have belonged to the bankrupt. The deed was stamped with a stamp, calculated upon a valuation of the property transferred, not exceeding 700*l.*, although, on the face of it, it purported to pass all the bankrupt's property; and it was admitted that the trustees had received property under the deed, exclusive of the value of 650*l.* at the least:—Held, that the trustees were not precluded, by the inadequacy of the stamp, from contending that the machines also passed by the deed. Gregory v. Baillon, 4 F. & F. 1069.

Cancellation of Registration.—The Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to order the registration of a deed of arrangement with creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192, to be cancelled. Greaves, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 326; 22 L. T. 184; 18 W. R. 363.

On what Grounds.—When a creditor's deed has been registered without having been assented to as required by the act, the court will not necessarily order the registration to be cancelled; but it will do so where the deed is fraudulent, and one to which the assenting creditors must be supposed to have assented, on the assumption that it would not be registered unless the requisite amount of assents were obtained. Ib.

A creditors' deed, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192, may be impeached for inadequacy of composition, importing fraud. Williams, Ex parte, Pullen, In re, 10 L. R., Eq. 57; 39 L. J. Bk., 1; 18 W. R. 406.

Such a deed, when registered, is in the nature of a record, and the court has power to order the registration to be vacated. Ib.

Delay in Applying for Cancellation.—Mere delay in applying to set aside a creditor's deed for fraud, is in itself no ground for refusing such an application, if the position of the parties be not altered. Ib.

After a year's delay a judgment creditor is not entitled to ask the Court of Bankruptcy to rescind an order made for the registration of a deed nor for leave to issue execution notwithstanding the deed, although the order for registration may have been made upon a state of facts not altogether satisfactory. Banfield, Ex parte, 1 L. R., Ch. 154; 35 L. J., Bk. 12; 12 Jur., N. S. 37; 14 L. T. 239; 14 W. R. 153.

Proof of Registration.—A memorandum written on the face of a composition deed, stating the day and the hour of the day on which the deed was brought to the office of the chief registrar for registration, and that it was duly registered pursuant to the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is prima facie evidence that an affidavit, pursuant to clause 5 of s. 192, was delivered to the chief registrar, together with the deed; and it is unnecessary to prove the truth of the affidavit. Waddington v. Roberts, 3 L. R., Q. B. 579; 37 L. J., Q. B. 233; 18 L. T. 855; 16 W. R. 1040; 9 B. & S. 637.

The memorandum of registration in the margin of the deed, under s. 196, is sufficient proof that the registration was completed in the requisite time; and the seal of the Bankruptcy Court attached to each of the documents required by the fifth clause of s. 192 is sufficient proof that the provisions of that clause have been satisfied. Morgan v. Sarin, 16 L. T. 457; 15 W. R. 865.

A joinder of issue to a plea of a deed of arrangement necessitates the formal proof of all the requisites to the validity of such deed laid down in the act; and a special replication is not necessary for that purpose. Morgan v. Savin, 16 L. T. 333.

—Certificate of Registration.—The certificate of registration of an inspectorship deed is prima facie evidence of the filing of the affidavits required by the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, ss. 192, 197; but is not evidence of the facts alleged in those affidavits. Phillips v. Furber, 5 L. R., Ch. 746; 22 L. T. 707; 18 W. R. 985.

Alteration of Deed after Registration.—A deed was expressed to be made between the debtor and certain persons named in a schedule as creditors, and all his other creditors, and was executed by a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value of the debtor's creditors, and was then registered; after registration, the names of two additional creditors of the debtor were inserted in the schedule:—Held, that there was no material alteration of the deed, and, that, as the requisite number had assented before registration, the insertion of the names of the two creditors after registration did not affect the validity of the deed. Wood v. Slack, 3 L. R., Q. B. 379; 37 L. J., Q. B. 130; 18 L. T. 510; 16 W. R. 859.

v. Surrender of Debtor's Property.

Deed not include Whole Property of Debtor.]

—An assignment or a surrender of a debtor's estate is not necessary to the validity of a deed of composition or release, but to render such a deed binding on the minority of creditors, who have not executed or assented to or approved of it, it is necessary that they should stand under the deed in the same situation and with the same advantages as the creditors forming the majority. Cockburn, Ex parte, 33 L. J., Bk. 17; 10 Jur., N. S. 573; 10 L. T. 252; 12 W. R. 673; S. P., Rawlins, In re, 32 L. J., Bk. 27; 9 Jur., N. S. 316; 7 L. T. 582; 11 W. R. 157; Morgan, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 288; 32 L. J., Bk. 15; 9 Jur., N. S. 559; 7 L. T. 729; 11 W. R. 316.

A cessio bonorum is not necessary in order to render a deed binding. Clapham v. Atkinson, 4 B. & S. 722; 34 L. J., Q. B. 49; 11 Jur., N. S. 217; 10 L. T. 908; 12 W. R. 1062—Ex. Ch.

It is no objection to the validity of an arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 110, that it does not provide for the entire distribution of the bankrupt's estate among his creditors. Symes v. Hughes, 9 L. R., Eq. 475; 39 L. J., Ch. 304; 22 L. T. 462.

Assignment must be in accordance with Deed.]

—The 7th condition of s. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861 does not mean that the debtor's property must be given up to the trustee, but that if the deed provides for its being given up, in order to bind non-assenting creditors, the property must be given up in accordance with the terms of the deed. Johnson v. Barratt, 1 L. R., Ex. 65; 35 L. J., Ex. 15; 13 L. T. 597; 14 W. R. 194; 4 H. & C. 16.

A deed of composition is not invalid because it contains an assignment of all the debtor's estate and effects to a trustee absolutely, with a proviso that until default in payment of the composition the debtor may hold and enjoy the estate and effects, and use and deal with the same. Id.

Declaration for breach of an agreement, whereby, in consideration that the plaintiff would assign all his estate to the defendants, two of his creditors, as trustees for the equal benefit of all his creditors, and would disclose to the defendants all his estate, the defendants promised, upon the realization of his estate, to return and pay to the plaintiff 50l.:—Held, that the declaration was bad, inasmuch as the agreement therein set forth, being made without the consent of the creditors, was illegal as a fraud on their rights. Blacklock v. Dobie, 1 C. P. D. 265; 45 L. J., C. P. 498; 35 L. T. 338; 24 W. R. 574.

Where Debtor has no Property.—Where a debtor, being sued by a creditor on a dishonoured bill of exchange, and having no present assets, and only the deferred possibility of the accrual of a trifling sum on a balance of accounts between the debtor and his late partner, such possibility being dependent upon the result of legal proceedings taken by the partners to obtain relief against payments made by them, executed a trust deed in the form given in Schedule (D), which was registered:—Held, that the deed was invalid as a fraud upon the act, and that a dissentient creditor ought to have leave to issue process against the debtor, notwithstanding the registration of the deed. Morrison, Ex parte, 3 De G., J. & S. 232. Affirmed, 33 L. J., Bk. 47; 10 Jur., N. S. 787; 10 W. R. 1093.

Where Majority of Creditors neglect to secure Part of Assets.]

—Where an officer in the army retired upon half-pay, receiving for so doing a sum of money equal to about half the selling value of his commission, and then executed a deed of composition with his creditors, giving them 10s. in the pound upon the amount of their debts, the court, finding that the majority of creditors (the largest of whom was the debtor's sister) had taken no pains to secure any part of the debtor's half-pay for the benefit of the creditors:—Held, that the deed was not binding on a dissentient creditor. Deacon, Ex parte, 19 L. T. 438; 17 W. R. 129.

b. Deeds in Form of Schedule D.

Affidavit—Requisites.—An affidavit for obtaining the registration of a deed made in the form of Schedule (D), that the deponent had been informed, and believed, that negotiable securities had been negotiated, and that he was unable to ascertain in whose hands they were, is insufficient in not stating the grounds of belief, and the steps taken to ascertain who were the holders of the securities. Dobson, Ex parte, 10 Jur., N. S. 812; 10 L. T. 802; 12 W. R. 1094.

Insufficient Majority—May be good at Common Law.]

—A debtor executed a trust deed in the form given in Schedule (D). The deed was registered, but was not assented to by a majority of creditors:—Held, that this deed was good at common law, and subject to the provisions of ss. 194 and 197 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861. Symons v. George, 4 H. & C. 996; 34 L. J., Ex. 187; 11 Jur., N. S. 713; 13 L. T. 190; 13 W. R. 922—Ex. Ch. Affirming 3 H. & C. 68; 33 L. J., Ex. 231; 10 Jur., N. S. 637; 10 L. T. 424; 12 W. R. 827.

Date.]—The date of a trust deed in the form in the Schedule (D.) is that of the supposed adjudication to which the 197th section refers. Mendel, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 330.

Title of Trustees.]—By a deed in the form given in Schedule (D.), to which the required majority of the creditors assented, a debtor assigned all his effects to a trustee, to be applied and administered for the benefit of the creditors in like manner as if the debtor had been at the date thereof duly adjudged a bankrupt:—Held, that the title of the trustee dated from the execution of the deed; and that a distress for rent levied between that time and the day of registration could not be made available for more than one year's rent. Selby v. Greaves, 3 L. R., C. P. 594; 37 L. J., C. P. 251; 19 L. T. 186; 16 W. R. 1127.

Unliquidated Damages.]—Although a trust deed does not in terms extend to creditors in respect of unliquidated damages, they can come in under a deed in the form of schedule D. Wilmot, Ex parte, 2 L. R., Ch. 795; 36 L. J., Bk. 17.

Cannot be pleaded in Bar.]—A deed of assignment in the form given in Schedule (D.) cannot be pleaded in bar of an action, as it contains no release, and there is in the statute no provision that it shall operate as a bar. Clarke v. Williams, 3 H. & C. 508; 34 L. J., Ex. 60; 11 L. T. 611; 13 W. R. 294. Affirmed, 3 H. & C. 1001; 34 L. J., Ex. 189; 13 W. R. 923.—Ex. Ch. S. P. Jones v. Morris, 34 L. J., Q. B. 90; 11 Jur., N. S. 481; Eyre v. Archer, 16 C. B., N. S. 638; 33 L. J., C. P. 296; 10 Jur., N. S. 802; 10 L. T. 615.

No Defence against Non-assenting Creditor.]—A deed made in the form given in Schedule (D.), without any release, affords no equitable defence to an action by a non-assenting creditor. Wright v. Jelley, 4 L. R., Ex. 9; 38 L. J., Ex. 22; 19 L. T. 384; 17 W. R. 164.

Deed executed by Partners—Joint and Separate Estates pass.]—When in accordance with the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 192, and in the form of Schedule (D.) to that act, two partners had conveyed all their estate and effects to trustees for the benefit of their creditors:—Held, that as well the separate estate as the joint estate of the partners passed under the deed. Eastwood v. Ward, 35 L. T. 502—C. A.

4. DEEDS IN CASES OF PARTNERSHIP.

Deeds compounding for Joint and Separate Debts—No Separate Estate.]—By a deed made between two debtors in partnership of the first part, trustees of the second part and the persons and firms whose names were subscribed, and all other the creditors of the debtors, of the third part, the two debtors and each of them conveyed all their and each of their estate and effects to the trustees absolutely, to be administered for the benefit of the joint and separate creditors of the two debtors, in like manner as if they had been duly adjudged bankrupt. The deed contained no recitals. This deed was duly registered on the 24th of November. On the 28th of November, one of the debtors was adjudged a bankrupt on the petition of a creditor, who, out of six separate creditors, was the only dissentient. The commissioner having refused a motion to have the petition dismissed, on the ground that it appeared there was no separate estate, and hence nothing to bind any dissentient separate creditor, order reversed on appeal. Oldfield, Ex parte, 11 L. T. 756.

By the statute, joint and separate creditors must deliberate and decide together, and there is nothing to warrant the conclusion that separate creditors may not constitute a binding majority within the statute, even although there may be no separate estate. Id.

Joint Debts and Separate Debts of one Partner only.]—To an action on a note, the defendants James and Frances pleaded a deed, whereby, after reciting that they had carried on business in partnership, all their property was assigned to trustees to pay a composition to the joint creditors of the two, and to the separate creditors of James; and the plea averred that the requisite majority in number and value of the joint creditors of the two, and of the separate creditors of James, had assented to the deed, and that there were no separate creditors of Frances. The plaintiffs replied, setting out the note, which was the joint and several note of the two defendants; the defendants rejoined that the note was given on account of and by way of security for a debt due to the plaintiffs from the defendants jointly:—Held, by Byles, Keating, and Montague Smith, JJ. (Bovill, C. J. dissenting), that, there being no separate creditor of Frances distinct from the joint creditors, but only a liability on her part to be sued separately upon a note given by way of security for a joint debt, the deed, which discharged the joint debt, necessarily discharged the several liability also. Rixon v. Emery, 3 L. R., C. P., 546; 37 L. J., C. P. 243; 18 L. T. 637; 16 W. R. 1171.

Held, by Bovill, C. J., that the effect of the note being to create a separate legal debt on the part of Frances, the deed was no discharge as to that debt, and that, as the deed did not bind all the creditors, it did not bind any non-assenting creditors. Id.

Joint and Separate Creditors placed on same footing.]—A deed of composition is not invalid as against non-assenting creditors, because there are joint and separate creditors, and joint and separate estates, and the deed places both classes of creditors on the same footing as regards the composition. Walker v. Ncrrill, 3 H. & C. 408; 34 L. J., Ex. 70; 11 Jur., N. S. 246; 11 L. T. 774; 13 W. R. 523.

An averment in a plea that the requisite majority of creditors, and each of them, executed the deed, is a sufficient averment that it was executed by both joint and separate creditors. Id.

The affidavit required by the fifth condition of sect. 192, need not distinguish between the joint and separate debts. Id.

Joint Debts only.]—A deed of composition made between two partners and their joint creditors only cannot bind a non-assenting creditor. Tomlin v. Dutton, 3 L. R., Q. B. 466; 37 L. J., Q. B. 153; 18 L. T. 815; 16 W. R. 1167; 9 B. & S. 251.

A deed of composition, made by the members of a partnership with the creditors of the partnership, is not binding on the separate creditors of each partner. European Central Railway Company v. Westall, 1 L. R., Q. B. 167; 35 L. J., Q. B. 9; 14 W. R. 177; 6 B. & S. 970.

Deed by one Partner only.]—Three partners were sued upon a note given by them for a partnership debt, and judgment was recovered against them. After action, but before judgment, C., one of the partners, executed a deed, by which he assigned all his estate to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, no reference being made to the partnership or its assets or its liabilities. The deed was duly registered, and a certificate obtained and notice given. C. was arrested under the judgment:—Held, that he was protected from arrest as well from joint as from separate creditors. Castleton, In re, 31 L. J., Bk. 71; 6 L. T. 705; 10 W. R. 851—L. J.

By remaining Partner after Dissolution.]—To the validity of a composition deed, executed by a single member of a dissolved firm after the dissolution, objection was taken on the part of creditors of the firm, on the ground that the joint creditors were insufficiently represented in the computation of the majority of assenting creditors:—Held, that the objection could not be entertained in the absence of evidence shewing the existence of joint estate at the date of the execution of the deed, and that the onus lay upon the objectors to produce such evidence. Cockburn, Ex parte, 3 De G., J. & S. 175; 33 L. J., Bk. 17; 10 Jur., N. S. 573; 10 L. T. 252; 12 W. R. 673.

When a partnership existing between two persons had been dissolved fifteen months before, and one of the partners in the late firm executed a composition deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192, the fact that the other partner had not executed the deed did not constitute a valid objection to registration. Hendry, In re, 18 W. R. 295.

What Property should be assigned.]—A trust deed for the benefit of the creditors, intended to be executed by debtors in business together as co-partners, and to be brought within the provisions of s. 192, is properly framed when its terms embrace all possible estate and property which not only does, but also may or might, belong to the partners jointly or to either of them separately. Oldfield, Ex parte, 3 De G., J. & S. 251.

Under old Law.]—If partners assign all their partnership effects to trustees for the benefit of their creditors, and some of the separate creditors of one partner do not assent to it, the assignment is fraudulent and void. Eckhardt v. Wilson, 8 T. R. 140.

5. RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES AND INSPECTORS.

Deed not executed by Creditors although communicated to some of them.]—Where a deed of assignment of a debtor's personal property to a trustee for the benefit of all his creditors who should execute or accede to the deed was bona fide made and executed by both the debtor and the trustee, and the property taken possession of under it, and afterwards the trustee by his agent communicated the contents of the deed and all that had been done to three of the creditors, each of whom expressed himself satisfied with the arrangement, but neither they nor any others of the creditors signed the deed or did any act under it:—Held, that the deed was valid and binding, and passed the property to the trustee as against an execution creditor, although not one of those to whom the contents of the deed had been made known. Harland v. Binks, 15 Q. B. 713; 20 L. J., Q. B. 126; 14 Jur. 979.

When Trustees are mere Mandatories.]—Where a debtor conveys property, in trust for creditors to whom the conveyance is not communicated, and the creditors are not in any manner privy to the conveyance, the conveyance operates not as an assignment, but only as a power to the trustees, which is revocable by the debtor. Smith v. Keating, 6 C. B. 136; S. P., Acton v. Woodgate, 2 Mylne & K. 492.

To a bill filed in equity by a trustee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors to recover from third parties property alleged to be vested in him by virtue of the deed, a demurrer will not lie, either on the ground that the creditors are not alleged to have executed the deed, or on the ground that they are not made parties to the suit. Glegg v. Rees, 7 L. R., Ch. 71; 41 L. J., Ch. 243; 25 L. T. 621; 20 W. R. 193.

A bill filed in 1871 alleged that, previously to a debtor's conviction for felony, by an indenture made in 1862 between himself of the first part, a trustee of the second part, and the several other persons whose names and seals were, or were intended to be, thereunto subscribed and set, being creditors of the debtor, of the third part, the debtor assigned all his personal estate and effects to the trustee upon trust in favour of his creditors; and that the indenture was duly executed by the debtor and the trustee, and registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 194, and the bill prayed for a declaration that the defendant, who had, in 1858, purchased a house in trust for the debtor, was a trustee of the house for the trustee of the deed:—Held, that although there was no sufficient allegation in the bill that the deed was executed by any creditor, still it did allege an assignment to the plaintiff, and that enabled him to sue third persons who had the property in their possession, and there was enough on the bill to require an answer. Id.

A man conveyed all his property to trustees upon trust to pay thereout 5,000*l.* which they were to raise on his behalf, and all other debts due from the assignor, including a debt due to the plaintiff. The trustees realized the property of the assignor, and alleged that they had paid some of the debts out of the proceeds. The plaintiff brought an action against the trustees, asking for an account of the property, and that the debts of the plaintiff and the other creditors might be satisfied thereout. The statement of claim contained no allegation that the assignment had been communicated to the plaintiff. The trustees demurred:—Held, that they were not trustees for the plaintiff, and that the demurrer must be allowed. Johns v. James, 8 Ch. D. 744; 47 L. J., Ch. 853; 39 L. T. 54; 26 W. R. 821—C. A. Reversing, 37 L. T. 778; 26 W. R. 276.

By a trust deed, executed by a debtor, it was declared the moneys, assured by certain policies on his life, should be held by the trustees (who were also creditors) as security for the payment to certain creditors (parties to the deed) of the several debts therein mentioned. S., one of these creditors, never executed the deed; and it was never communicated to him:—Held, that, after the death of the debtor, his executor was at liberty to revoke the trusts of the deed as against S., though a party to it, it never having been communicated to him. Sanders, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 567.

The doctrine that a conveyance of property to trustees in favour of creditors operates as a mere power to mandatories or agents, revocable until communicated to or assented to by the creditors, does not apply where the trustee himself takes a beneficial interest under the deed. Siggers v. Evans, 5 El. & Bl. 367; 24 L. J., Q. B. 305; 1 Jur., N. S. 851.

Semble, that where a deed of assignment has been executed to a stranger as trustee for creditors, a communication of the trust to a creditor, by reason of which he may not have pursued his remedy, or his position may have been altered, will render the deed irrevocable by the assignor, without any actual assent by any creditor. Ib.

A., on the 19th of August, bonâ fide executed a deed of assignment to the plaintiff (who was a creditor of A.), as trustee for the benefit of such of his creditors as should sign the deed, and placed it in the hands of his own attorney, undertaking to communicate himself with the plaintiff. Accordingly, on the 22nd, A. wrote to the plaintiff, informing him that he had executed the deed, and asking him to act as trustee. This letter was received by the plaintiff on the 23rd, about one o'clock p.m.; and on the 24th the plaintiff replied, accepting the trust, and on the 30th executed the deed. About four o'clock, p.m., on the 23rd, a fi. fa., at the suit of the defendant against A., was delivered to the sheriff:—Held, first, that the assignee being a creditor taking a beneficial interest under the deed, and not a mere mandatory, the deed did not operate as a voluntary conveyance, revocable by A., until the assent of some third party as creditor. Ib.

Title vests on Execution of Deed.—Held, secondly, that the title to the property vested in the plaintiff immediately upon the execution of the deed, and therefore prevailed against the defendant's execution. Ib.

A conveyance by a debtor of his goods to two creditors for the benefit of themselves and the other creditors passes the property at once, on the execution of the deed by the debtor, without any assent on the part of the trustees; but the knowledge of the debtor, at the time of making the deed, that a writ of execution is out against his goods, must be taken to be the knowledge of the trustees within the proviso of s. 1 of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97; and, consequently, the trustees' title is not protected by that section, and the goods are bound by the delivery of the writ to the sheriff. Hobson v. Thelluson, 2 L. R., Q. B. 642; 36 L. J., Q. B. 302; 15 W. R. 1037; 8 B. & S. 476.

Same Rights as Assignees in Bankruptcy.—Trustees to whom by the deed all the debtor's property is assigned for the benefit of his creditors, have, upon the registration of the deed, the same rights over the property as assignees in bankruptcy would have, and their title has relation back to and overrides any fraudulent transfer of the debtor's property made before the execution of the deed. Exley v. Inglis, 3

— Including Power to Summon Witnesses.—Trustees and creditors under a trust deed duly registered are entitled to the same powers, rights and privileges as are possessed by assignees and creditors under an adjudication in bankruptcy, including the power of summoning witnesses. Alexander, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 311; 32 L. J., Bk. 55; 9 Jur., N. S. 880; 8 L. T. 748; 11 W. R. 924.

Right to Sue.—Trustees need not, as in the case of a bankruptcy, obtain the sanction of the court to justify them in commencing or continuing an action against a debtor to the estate. Trevilco, In re, 13 W. R. 391.

When a debtor has executed a composition deed containing a covenant with a trustee to whom no cessio bonorum is made, the debtor himself, and not the trustee, is the proper party to a suit respecting a liability contingent at the date of the deed, but which has since become absolute. Moye v. Sparrow, 22 L. T. 154; 18 W. R. 400.

Right to Sell limited by Deed.—A debtor assigned his house and business in trust for payment of his debts, retaining to himself the management of the business, under the superintendence of the trustees, who, on his failing to perform his covenants in the trust deed, were thereby empowered, after having given him three months' notice, to sell the house and business. Such notice was given, but waived by consent of the creditors and trustees assembled at a general meeting:—Held, that a sale afterwards made by the trustees, without further notice, was unauthorized and unlawful. Tomney v. White, 3 H. L. Cas. 49.

Right to continue Contract of Debtor.—The trustees of a deed of composition, executed by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors, and duly registered, are not entitled to claim to complete a building contract entered into by the debtor prior to the date of such deed, where the debtor only contracted that he, "his executors and administrators" (omitting "assigns") would execute the works, the subject of the contract. Knight v. Burgess, 33 L. J., Ch. 727; 10 Jur., N. S. 166; 10 L. T. 90.

— To have Bank Stock transferred.—A debtor executed a deed vesting all his property in trustees, to be applied for the benefit of his creditors, in like manner as if he had been adjudged bankrupt. The deed was duly registered. Shortly afterwards he died, leaving bank stock standing in his name, and there was no personal representative:—Held, that, in the case of bankruptcy, the court could have made an order under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 128, directing the Bank of England to transfer the stock into the names of the assignees, without the bankrupt or his personal representative signing a transfer; that the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, s. 197, gave the trustees of such a deed as the present the same rights in this respect as if they had been assignees in bankruptcy; and that an order might be made upon the bank for transfer into the names of the trustees, upon which the bank could act without the concurrence of a personal representative.

Cannot recover Money from Debtor who has Paid under Garnishee Order.]—In an action by the trustees, under a deed of assignment to recover a debt due from the defendant to the assignor, it was alleged and admitted upon the record that a garnishee order for payment of the debt was served upon the defendant before he had notice of the deed and before the registration of it, and that he paid the debt to the judgment creditor in order to avoid execution, and because he could not otherwise avoid it:—Held, that this payment was a good defence to the action, as being compulsory, and under the sanction of a court of competent authority; that the allegation must be taken to mean either that the defendant had no notice of the deed at the time of payment, or, if he had, it was under such circumstances that he was unable to get the order set aside before he was compelled to pay under the immediate threat of an execution, and to save its being actually levied; and that it was unnecessary to decide whether the payment was good for all purposes, so as to enable the judgment creditor to get his debt in full, and to resist an action by the trustees for money had and received. Wood v. Dunn, 2 L. R., Q. B. 78; 36 L. J., Q. B. 27; 15 L. T. 411; 15 W. R. 180; 7 B. & S. 94—Ex. Ch.

Right to retain Costs of Acting under an Invalid Deed.]—A debtor by a deed duly registered assigned all his estate and effects to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. The deed was not in fact executed by the requisite number of creditors, and therefore was invalid, but the trustees had received assets:—Held, that a trustee could not be allowed to retain his costs of acting under the deed. Smith v. Dresser, 1 L. R., Eq. 651; 35 L. J., Ch. 385.

Right to Expenses.]—A trader assigned his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, and was afterwards declared bankrupt. The trustees, after the execution of the deed of assignment, but before any sale, had, in the management of the property, incurred certain expenses bona fide, but from which no particular benefit accrued to the estate:—Held, that such expenses must be repaid to them out of the estate. Tomlinson, Ex parte, 30 L. J., Bk. 41; 7 Jur., N. S. 982; 5 L. T. 13—L. J.

A. deposited goods with B. for sale, and then assigned his property to trustees for his creditors; the trustees, at B.'s request, paid the duties on the goods, which, when sold, did not produce sufficient to repay them:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to recover the money advanced by them, though A. had, before the assignment, agreed that it should go in liquidation of a claim which B. had upon him. Livesey v. Willis, 1 Marsh, 130; 5 Taunt. 446.

Indemnity by Creditors.]—Where a call had been made upon the creditors, who had executed a deed of insolvency, for the purpose of indemnifying the trustees, a creditor who had not only proved a debt under the deed, but had also received payment of a separate debt in consideration of suspending proceedings in bankruptcy, was only liable to contribute in respect of the debt

Several Covenant—Right to Contribution.]—The creditors, parties to an inspection deed, severally covenanted to indemnify, to a certain extent, the inspectors against liabilities incurred in carrying on the business of the debtor, which they were empowered to do. One of the creditors who had executed the deed, and to whom the inspectors had incurred a debt for goods supplied and advances made for the purpose of the business, filed a bill in equity against the inspectors, the debtor, and all the other acceding creditors, to have the inspectorship wound up, and the accounts taken, and to have the assets applied in payment of his claim, and the deficiency made good by rateable contributions of all the acceding creditors (including the plaintiff) in proportion to their debts:—Held, that there was no right to contribution. Selwyn v. Harrison, 2 John. & H. 334; 12 W. R. 98.

Purchase of Debtor's Property by Trustees.]—When a trustee for creditors under a deed of composition bona fide sold the property to a stranger from whom he subsequently re-purchased it at the same price, and the sale was confirmed by all the creditors who had executed the deed, and by two out of three of the assignees, a bill by the third assignee to set aside the sale was dismissed without costs. Dorer v. Buck, 5 Giff. 57.

Duties—To ascertain Validity of Claims against Debtor.]—Trustees, before they allow a creditor to sign a composition deed, are bound to ascertain the validity of his claim, as by signing he becomes a cestui que trust, and the trustees, except in cases of fraud, cannot refuse to pay such dividends as may be declared. Lancaster v. Elce, 31 Beav. 325; 31 L. J., Ch. 789; 8 Jur., N. S. 1167; 7 L. T. 123; 10 W. R. 824.

To Account to Creditors.]—A trustee, under a deed executed by a debtor and duly registered, is bound, upon the reasonable application of creditors, to give them full information with respect to his receipts and payments under the deed, and if he refuses or neglects to do so, he is liable to be fixed personally with the costs incurred by the creditors in obtaining such information. White, Ex parte, 13 L. T. 24; S. P., Edis, In re, 13 W. R. 1068.

To Submit to Examination.]—A trustee under a deed of trust stands in the same relation to the creditors that an assignee does, under an adjudication, to creditors who have proved under a bankruptcy, and he is bound to submit to the examination required by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 136. Lawrence, Ex parte, 32 L. J., Bk. 61; 9 Jur., N. S. 835; 8 L. T. 407; 11 W. R. 705.

Not bound to accept Onerous Property.] Assignees of all a debtor's property, in trust for the creditors, are not bound to accept a lease of which they were ignorant when they executed the assignment, and which they think likely to be injurious to the creditors. Carter v. Warner, M. & M. 479; 4 C. & P. 191.

They are entitled to a reasonable time to ascertain whether property, held under a lease by the debtor, can be made available for the benefit of the creditors, or not; but if they act in such a way as to render the premises of less value to the lessor, or deal with the property as if the lease was vested in them, they will, by that conduct, make themselves personally liable as assignees for the payment of rent and performance of covenants. Id.

A debtor executed a deed of trust whereby he conveyed all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, and whereby his creditors released their debts; and such deed was duly registered:—Held, that 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 197, had the effect of making 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 145, applicable to such deed, that the trustees had an election as to whether they would take a lease granted to the debtor, and that on their not so electing, the debtor might give up the same to the lessor under the provisions of such section. Porter v. Kirkus, 2 L. R., C. P. 590; 36 L. J., C. P. 311; 17 L. T. 85; 15 W. R. 1018.

Trustees who have executed and acted under a deed for the benefit of creditors are upon the same footing as trustees under a bankruptcy or an insolvency; and the execution of the deed, acceptance of the trusts, and general action under it do not of themselves constitute an acceptance of any particular asset. Levi v. Ayres, 3 App. Cas. 842; 47 L. J., P. C. 83; 38 L. T. 725.

L. held shares in a company as nominee of a firm in which he was a partner; the company was wound up, and he became liable to pay calls on the shares standing in his name. The firm afterwards became insolvent, and assigned its assets to trustees for the benefit of its creditors;—Held, that L. had no equity against the trustees to be indemnified by them for the calls so paid by him. Id.

Liabilities—Payment for Services.—An inspector will be liable personally to pay for services of persons whom he employs in and about the business of an arrangement, unless he expressly excludes such liability. Wardell v. Jackson, 1 F. & F. 452.

Confined to Accounting.—Independently of any question of fraud or misconduct, the liability of inspectors and managers under a creditors' deed is confined to accounting for all moneys received by them, or by their order or for their use. Chaplin v. Young, 33 Beav. 330; 11 L. T. 10.

For what Moneys accountable.—If they have the exclusive management and control of the whole establishment, and if all the subordinate managers, workmen and servants are appointed by them and are removable at their pleasure, in that case money paid to their cashier or to any person in the establishment, in the ordinary course of business, would be money paid for their use, for which they would be accountable. Id.

But if, by the arrangement, the trader is continued in the management of his business, and cannot be removed by the inspectors, then the inspectors would only be liable for the moneys actually paid to them or to their agent. Id.

The trustees of an insolvent's estate are not liable, after they have made a final dividend, in an action for money had and received, for money paid to them by mistake. Fyddell v. Clark, 1 Esp. 447.

Carrying on Debtor's Business.—S. & C., in business as ironmasters, being in embarrassed circumstances, assigned to trustees all their stock, &c., the deed containing powers for the trustees to carry on the business under the name of the Stanton Iron Company until the debts of the firm were paid. The deed was made for the benefit of creditors, and with their assent, and contained clauses authorizing the creditors to accept the resignation of the trustee, and to alter the trusts or direct the works to be discontinued. All the trustees were creditors of S. & C. The trustees who acted did carry on the business, and in the course of it their agent accepted bills in this form: "Per pro. Stanton Iron Co."—Held, that the creditors, through these acts of the trustees, were not liable, as partners in the company, upon such bills given to those who supplied the company with goods. Cow v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Cas. 268; 9 C. B., N. S. 47; 30 L. J., C. P. 125; 7 Jur., N. S. 105; 8 W. R. 754.

Goods Ordered by Debtor.—A debtor and his creditors entered into a deed of inspection under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. Before the deed was executed by the debtor he had ordered of the plaintiff certain goods, and after the plaintiff had informed the debtor that they were ready for delivery, the inspectors, by an order to which they signed their names for the debtor, requested the plaintiff to send the goods:—Held, that the inspectors were not personally liable for payment of the goods. Redpath v. Wigg, 1 L. R., Ex. 335; 35 L. J., Ex. 211; 12 Jur., N. S., 903; 11 L. T. 764; 14 W. R. 806; 4 H. & C. 432—Ex. Ch.

P. executed an inspectorship deed. He afterwards ordered goods of the plaintiff in the way of his trade. The plaintiff sued the trustees of the deed for the value of the goods:—Held, that as there was no liability on the trustees in respect of an ostensible authority, for the plaintiff gave credit to P.; and that, as there was no liability in respect of authority in fact apart from the deed, for the deed was carried into effect according to its terms; and that, as the deed did not create any authority to pledge the trustees' credit, for it only subjected P. to their control as to how the business was to be carried on by him upon his own resources, or in respect of advances made by them; and that, as it did not make him their servant, so that they could discharge him, the trustees were not liable. Eastbrook v. Barker, 6 L. R., C. P. 1; 40 L. J. C. P. 17; 23 L. T. 535; 19 W. R. 208.

When Debtor Agent of Trustees.—A trader executed a deed of inspection under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, by which he assigned all his property (but not his business) to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. The deed contained a covenant by him to carry on his business to the best of his ability under the inspection and control of the trustees, to whom he was to pay all moneys received by him; a provision that the trustees should be liable as against each other for their own defaults only; and an express declaration that the deed was intended to operate as a deed of inspection and composition under the act. The trustees derived no benefit under the deed other than that which they shared in common with the other creditors. After the deed was registered, the plaintiffs supplied goods, upon written orders, expressed to be for him, to the place where he had carried on his business previously to the execution of the deed, and where the business was still being carried on under his management. The trustees regularly supplied him with money for the current expenses weekly in advance, and they had no personal knowledge of the orders given to the plaintiffs, who, on the other hand, were not shewn to have had any knowledge of the deed:—Held, that the real intention of the parties, as appearing by the deed, was that he should carry on the business as his own, subject to the inspection and control of the trustees; and that the relation of master and servant or of principal and agent did not exist between them and him, and consequently that they were not liable to the plaintiffs for the price of the goods supplied on his orders. Id.

Where a newspaper proprietor carried on business under the control of inspectors, who were empowered by the deed to pay costs, and reimburse themselves out of moneys they might receive, there being nothing in the deed to import personal liability:—Held, that they were not personally liable to an attorney who had defended a suit relating to the business at the order of the trader, without any direction from them, unless there was anything in their previous communications with him to lead him to suppose they meant to make themselves personally liable for such claims. Steele v. Low, 2 F. & F. 772.

— For Default of Person employed to collect Moneys owing to Debtor.—By a creditors' deed, which provided that the debtor should carry on his business under the supervision of inspectors, the debtor covenanted with the inspectors that he would allow C., "who was intended by the inspectors to be employed as an accountant, or such other person as they might employ in lieu of C.," to collect and receive the moneys due to the debtor, and pay the balance into the bank. C. made default in payment of a large sum received by him:—Held, that he was not the agent of the inspectors, and that they were not liable to account to the debtor for his misfeasance. Hobson v. Jones, 9 L. R., Eq. 456; 39 L. J., Ch. 245; 22 L. T. 143; 18 W. R. 477.

— Allowing Solicitor to deal with Debtor's Estate.—Among the assets of a debtor who executed a creditors' deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192, was a bill of exchange which the debtor had deposited with his solicitor as a security for his professional charges. The bill was dishonoured at maturity, at which time the solicitor had received from other sources sufficient to pay all his charges then due. The trustee, however, allowed the bill to remain in the solicitor's hands, who brought an action on it against the acceptor, but nothing was recovered in consequence of the acceptor's insolvency. The creditors sought to charge the trustee with the loss of the money, on account of his allowing the solicitor to keep the bill and treat it as his own, instead of himself dealing with the acceptor and effecting a compromise:—Held, that there was no ground for charging the trustee on this account. Ogle, Ex parte, Smith, Ex parte, Pilling, In re, 3 L. R., Ch. 711; 42 L. J., Bk. 99; 21 W. R. 938.

— Over-payment of Dividends.—A creditor signed the deed for a debt due on bills for which the debtor was liable. Before making formal proof of the debt, the creditor received dividends from the estates of other persons who were liable on some of the bills, but the trustee nevertheless paid him dividends on the full amount of the bills. The other creditors sought to surcharge the trustee with the dividend thus overpaid:—Held, that, considering the uncertainty of the law at the time, the trustee ought not to be surcharged for the over-payment of the dividends. Id.

— Allowing Property to remain in Debtor's Possession.—The trustee allowed wine and spirits to the amount of 130*l.* to remain in the debtor's possession, which was eventually lost to the estate:—Held, that the trustee must personally make good the loss with interest at 5*l.* per cent. Id.

For Rent.—A deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors was executed the 13th March. On the 21st March the trustee took possession of premises held by the debtor under a lease. On the 25th March he paid the reserved rent to that day. On the 26th April he gave notice that he elected not to take the lease. He remained in possession till the 24th June. He took and held possession for the purpose of realizing the trust estate:—Held, that the trustee was not liable as assignee of the lease to pay the reserved rent, but only for use and occupation for the time he was in possession. Mallett v. Levin, 16 L. T. 531; 15 W. R.* 929.

By a deed for the benefit of creditors (executed after the repeal of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), the debtor assigned to a trustee all his personal estate, and the trustee executed the deed, and acted under it. In the personal estate was included a lease as to which the trustee did no act specifically accepting it. In an action by the landlord for rent:—Held, that the lease had passed to the trustee, and that he was therefore liable. White v. Hunt, 6 L. R., Ex. 32; 40 L. J., Ex. 23; 23 L. T. 559.

— Commissioner has no Jurisdiction to oust Trustees.—Disputes having arisen between the trustees of a deed of arrangement, an application was made to the commissioner upon the subject, who made an order directing the official assignee to act as assignee of the trust estate in the same manner as he would have done if under a bankruptcy of the debtors:—Held, that the commissioner had no jurisdiction to make such an order. Ruck, Ex parte, 32 L. J., Bk. 9; 8 Jur., N. S. 1219; 7 L. T. 405; 11 W. R. 126.

6. LIABILITY OF SURETIES FOR PAYMENT OF COMPOSITION.

Proviso for Release on Debtor being Adjudicated Bankrupt under Provisions of Deed—Adjudication by Creditor not Party.—B., having presented a petition for the liquidation of his affairs, the statutory majority of his creditors passed a resolution accepting a composition payable in three instalments, the last instalment to be guaranteed by a surety. The surety signed a guarantee accordingly, and a deed was made between B., the surety, and certain persons called "the inspectors." The creditors of B. were also made parties to the deed, but some of them did not execute it. By the deed, after reciting that it had been agreed that, until payment of the composition, B. should carry on his business under the inspectors, it was provided that if he should make default in the payment of it, or if it should appear to the inspectors, from the state of his business or otherwise, that the instalments would not be duly met, it should be lawful for them to apply to the Court of Bankruptcy to adjudge him a bankrupt, and without prejudice to this right it should be lawful for them in any such event to require him to assign all his property to them, as if they were trustees under liquidation proceedings; and further that, "in the event of his being adjudicated bankrupt, or of a conveyance or assignment of his property being made or required under the provisions of the deed before full payment of the composition, the surety should be released from his guarantee." B. having made default in payment of the second instalment, was made bankrupt on the petition of a creditor who was not bound by the resolution, and had not executed the deed. After the bankruptcy he made default in payment of the third instalment:—Held, that the surety was liable; as he could only be released from his guarantee by a bankruptcy procured by the inspectors under the provisions of the deed. Glegg v. Gibbey, 2 Q. B. D. 6; 46 L. J., Q. B. 7; 35 L. T. 761; 25 W. R. 42. Affirmed on appeal, 2 Q. B. D. 209; 46 L. J., Q. B. 325; 35 L. T. 927; 25 W. R. 311—C. A.

7. PROOF OF DEBTS UNDER TRUST DEEDS.

Generally.—The word "creditor" throughout the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, is used in the sense of a person having a claim which can be proved under the bankruptcy, whether it is strictly a debt or not; and in s. 192, it must be understood to mean all persons who had at the time of the execution of the deed a claim against the debtor, provable against his estate, if he then became bankrupt. Woods v. De Mattos, 1 L. R., Ex. 91; 35 L. J., Ex. 664; 12 Jur., N. S. 78; 3 H. & C. 987—Ex. Ch.

The drawer of a bill executed in 1866 a deed of arrangement with his creditors. The bill had been indorsed to the B. Company, and by the B. Company to the D. Company, and then by the D. Company to C. C. proved against the estates of both companies, which were being wound up, and received dividends from both, leaving only a small sum due. The liquidator of the D. Company paid the remainder, took up the bill, and applied under the drawer's deed of arrangement for a dividend on the whole amount of the bill:—Held, that, according to the true construction of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 197, creditors are not, for the purpose of ascertaining the dividend to which they are entitled, to be treated as having proved at the time of the registration of the deed, but at the time when they go in to make their claims against the estate; and that the liquidator, therefore, was not entitled to a dividend on the whole amount of the bill, but only for what the D. Company had paid upon it. Joint Stock Discount Company, Ex parte, Daunt, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 455; 24 L. T. 306; 19 W. R. 667.

Breach of Contract must be before Deed.—There can be no proof, under a deed of trust for damages on a contract, unless the contract was broken before the execution of the deed. Halliday, Ex parte, 2 De G., J. & S. 312; 11 Jur., N. S. 817; 12 L. T. 624; 13 W. R. 905.

H. & Co. purchased a cargo, the buyers to name the port of delivery. On the arrival of the ship they declined to name the port of delivery, and signified their inability to perform the contract. The sellers, therefore, named the port and sold the cargo at a loss; but before this was done H. & Co. executed a deed of trust:—Held, that the contract was still subsisting at the date of the deed, and that the sellers could not prove for the loss. Ib.

Unliquidated Damages.—The effect of the 197th section of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861 is to enable a creditor under a trust deed to apply, under s. 153, to have unliquidated damages assessed. Townsend, Ex parte, Penton, In re, 1 L. R., Ch. 158; 35 L. J., Bk. 17; 12 Jur., N. S. 303; 14 L. T. 3; 14 W. R. 321.

But where a creditor, instead of coming in under the deed, obtained judgment against the debtor:—Held, that the amount of the damages having been thus ascertained, he was precluded from subsequently applying under the deed, and (the debtor having in the meantime become bankrupt) must prove under the bankruptcy. Ib.

A person who has a claim for unliquidated damages is not a creditor within the meaning of ss. 192 and 197 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861. Wilmot, Ex parte, 2 L. R., Ch. 795; 36 L. J., Bk. 17.

Where a trust deed does not in terms extend to creditors in respect of unliquidated damages, they cannot come in under the deed by virtue of s. 153. Ib.

A composition deed executed and registered, containing a release by the creditors of their debts, claims, and demands, is no bar to an action for unliquidated damages for a breach of contract, the amount of which damages has not been ascertained and assessed under s. 153. Robertson v. Goss, 2 L. R., Ex. 196; 36 L. J., Ex. 251; 16 L. T. 566; 15 W. R. 965; S. P. Sharland v. Spence, 2 L. R., C. P. 456; 36 L. J., C. P. 230; 16 L. T. 355; 15 W. R. 767.

To a declaration containing a count for wrongful dismissal, the defendant pleaded a composition deed, executed after the accrual of the claim, containing a recital of the defendant's inability to pay his creditors in full; a recital of the willingness of a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value of the creditors whose debts amounted to 10l. and upwards, to accept a composition; a covenant by the defendant and certain sureties for the payment of the composition, and a release by the creditors of their debts and claims, except in respect of the covenant and certain promissory notes given to secure payment of the composition:—Held, that the defendant's liability to pay unliquidated damages for breach of contract, was not such a debt as was contemplated by the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, s. 192, or by the parties to the composition deed in agreeing to the release. Hoggarth v. Taylor, 2 L. R., Ex. 105; 36 L. J., Ex. 61; 15 W. R. 588.

Interest on Debts.—In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, a specialty creditor is entitled to interest upon his debt up to the creditors together; for registration is equivalent to bankruptcy. Turner, Ex parte, 11 L. T. 352, 13 W. R. 104.

Calls.]—Future calls in respect of shares in a company may be proved under a deed of composition, in the same way as under a bankruptcy. Richmond Hill Hotel Company, In re, King, Ex parte, 4 L. R., Eq. 506; 36 L. J., Ch. 718, 16 L. T. 783. Affirmed, 3 L. R., Ch. 10; 38 L. J., Ch. 541, 17 L. T. 188; 16 W. R. 57.

A., being the holder of shares in a company, executed an inspectorship deed. After the execution of the deed, a call was made on A.'s shares. Subsequently, but before the property included in the deed had been distributed among the creditors, the winding-up of the company commenced.—Held, that the call was not barred by the deed. Financial Corporation v. Lawrence, 4 L. R., C. P. 731; 38 L. J., C. P. 305; 17 W. R. 534.

Two shareholders in a company ordered to be wound up voluntarily executed as debtors a deed of inspectorship, to which the debtors, the inspectors, and all creditors who would have been entitled to prove against the debtors under an adjudication of bankruptcy, were expressed to be parties. The deed contained no actual assignment of the estate of the debtors, but contained provisions for converting their estate into money, and applying it in payment of the debts due to the creditors; and also contained provisions for a release being given to them in certain events. The deed was duly registered:—Held, that the Court of Chancery ought not to make an order in the winding-up upon the debtors for payment of calls, though the calls were made since the deed was executed, but that the calls were debts provable under the deed of inspectorship. Bank of Hindustan, China and Japan, In re, Mitchell's case, 5 L. R., Ch. 400; 39 L. J., Ch. 530.

Rent, Right to Distrain.]—After the registration of a valid deed of arrangement, a distress cannot be levied upon the effects of the debtor for more than one year's rent due prior to the date of such registration. Williams v. Cadbury, 2 L. R., C. P. 453; 36 L. J., C. P. 233; 16 L. T. 354; 15 W. R. 905.

Costs.]—B. having sued W., an arrangement was come to by which he should be entitled to sign judgment on a stated day, before which he executed and registered a composition deed. On the stated day B., to whom notice of the deed had been given, signed judgment for the debt, and costs. The composition reserved by the deed was tendered on the debt only, but was refused in respect of the costs, upon which liberty was given to B. to issue execution against W.:—Held, that these costs could not have been moved against his estate if he had been adjudged bankrupt on the day when the deed was registered; and that, as under such a deed, the act put all parties upon the same footing as under a bankruptcy, the debtor was entitled to the composition upon the debt alone, and the order could not be sustained. Weller, Ex parte, 17 L. T. 125; 15 W. R. 1186.

afterwards under the Liquidation Act, 1868, a scheme was settled under which the Court of Chancery ascertained the value of the securities held by the secured creditors, which value was to be taken by those creditors in part discharge of their debt, and they were to be at liberty to prove for the deficiency:—Held, that the value must be taken as a discharge pro tanto of the principal and interest due at the date of the deed, and not in discharge of any subsequent interest, so that the balance only of such principal and interest due at the date of the deed could be proved under the deed. Savin, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 760; 42 L. J., Bk. 14; 27 L. T. 466; 20 W. R. 1027.

By a composition deed, dated the 4th of November, 1864, and duly registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, a debtor, in consideration of a covenant on the part of himself and a surety to pay a composition of 10s. in the pound, obtained a release from his scheduled debts by a statutory majority of his creditors. The deed contained a proviso that every secured creditor should have the full benefit and advantage of his security, and should be entitled to the composition after allowing for the value of such security. Amongst the secured creditors was one for 229l. 8s. 5d., whose security was a policy of assurance on the life of the debtor. The creditor valued the policy at 16l.; and for the difference, namely, 213l. 8s. 5d., he received the composition of 10s. in the pound. The policy having fallen in after some premiums had been paid by the creditor:—Held, upon the construction of the deed, that the creditor, upon the execution of the deed, remained a creditor for 16l. only, and that (the composition having been duly paid) the proceeds of the policy, after payment of 16l. and interest, belonged to the debtor's estate, subject to repayment with interest to the creditor of premiums which he had paid. Bolton v. Ferro, 14 Ch. D. 171; 49 L. J., Ch. 569; 42 L. T. 529; 28 W. R. 578.

See further, XI. PROOF OF DEBTS.

Time when Debt sought to be set off accrued.]

—The claims and debts of an insolvent pass into the hands of the trustees of a trust deed by the registration, not by the execution, of the deed; and therefore, rent falling due from the insolvent in the interval may be set off in an action by the trustees for money payable to the insolvent. Stanger v. Miller, 1 L. R., Ex. 58; 38 L. J., Ex. 49; 11 Jur., N. S. 1003; 13 L. T. 331; 14 W. R. 108; 4 H. & C. 1.

A proportionate part of the rent due up to the day when the trustees' title enures may be set off by the landlord against a claim by the trustees. Id.

A trading firm assigned their estate, stock, and debts due to the firm to trustees, for sale and distribution, with power to carry on the business; but the trustees did not thereby undertake to discharge the liabilities of the firm. The assignment contained a proviso making it void if the firm became bankrupt before a certain day. The plaintiffs, who were at the date of the assignment creditors of the firm, afterwards became indebted to the trustees, who continued to carry on the business. The firm becoming bankrupt before the day named:—

Held, that the plaintiffs had no right to a set-off; but that the result would have been different if they, instead of being creditors, had been debtors at the date of the assignment, and had afterwards become creditors of the trustees. Hunt v. Jessel, 18 Beav. 100.

Lien of third Party.—An adjudication in bankruptcy obtained by D. against C. was set aside, and D. was ordered to pay C. his costs, for which, if not paid when taxed, C. was to be at liberty to issue execution. D. then executed an assignment to trustees for his creditors in the form of Schedule D. to the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. The costs were afterwards taxed. C., at the date of the deed, owed D. a sum exceeding the amount of the taxed costs. If C., who had not acceded to the deed, was reckoned as a creditor of D. for the amount of taxed costs, the deed was not assented to by the requisite majority of creditors. C.'s solicitor had not been paid his bill of costs in the bankruptcy proceedings, and claimed his lien on the costs payable by D. :—Held, that C.'s solicitor was entitled to a lien on the costs ordered to be paid to C. by D., and that therefore the debt due from C. to D. could not be set off against them. Cleland, Ex parte, 2 L. R., Ch. 808; 36 L. J., Bk. 45; 17 L. T. 187; 15 W. R. 1160.

Held, also, that C. ought to be allowed to issue execution for the costs, for that if he was, in respect of those costs, a creditor of D. within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, s. 192, the deed was not assented to by the majority requisite to bind non-assenting creditors; and if he was not such a creditor, the deed did not apply to his claim, so that in neither view could he be affected by the deed. Id.

Right of setting off Calls.—When a contributory, who is also a creditor of a company which is being wound up, becomes bankrupt or executes a creditors' deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, after the commencement of the winding-up, the debt must be set off against the calls, whether the claim be made in the bankruptcy or in the winding-up. And if the contributory had before his bankruptcy assigned his debt to a third party, the assignee will stand in the same position as the contributory would have done as to the right of set-off. Universal Banking Corporation, In re, Strang, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 492; 22 L. T. 219; 18 W. R. 475.

8. TENDER OR PAYMENT OF COMPOSITION.

Payment or Tender necessary.—Where, at a meeting of creditors of A., it is agreed that a composition of 6s. in the pound should be accepted, and that promissory notes for the amount "shall be given within fourteen days, the creditors assenting thereto within that time," and A. is sued for a debt due to one of the parties to the agreement, unless A. can shew a delivery or a tender of the notes, he is liable for the whole debt. Oughton v. Trotter, 2 N. & M. 71.

Although a debtor, compounding with his creditors, gives them the security of a third person for payment of part of the stipulated dividend, he is not discharged upon payment of that part only, if the residue continues unpaid. Walker v. Seaborne, 1 Taunt. 526.

To an action on a foreign bill of exchange, the defendant pleaded a composition deed not executed by the plaintiff, by which he covenanted with his creditors to pay 5s. in the pound on a given day, and the creditors, in consideration, released him from all claims, but in case of non-payment within fourteen days, the release was to be void. Averment, that the defendant was ready and willing to pay :—Held, that the plea was bad, for not averring a payment or a tender of the composition. Fessard v. Mugnier, 18 C. B., N. S. 286; 34 L. J., C. P. 125; 11 Jur., N. S. 283; 11 L. T. 635; 13 W. R. 388.

— And must be made at precise Time agreed on.—To counts by drawer against acceptor of two bills of exchange for 30*l.* and 41*l.* 16*s.*, a plea as to 13*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*, parcel of 30*l.*, in the first count, and as to the second count, that the defendant was in embarrassed circumstances, and indebted to the plaintiff, in respect of the causes of action in the introductory part of the plea mentioned, in 54*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, and to B. in another sum of money, and was unable to pay the plaintiff and B. their debts in full; and thereupon the defendant agreed with the plaintiff and B. to pay them respectively; and the plaintiff and B. mutually agreed with each other and the defendant to accept of him 10*s.* in the pound, as a composition upon, and in satisfaction and discharge of, their debts. The plea then averred readiness and willingness to pay, with a tender of the amount of the composition, and concluded with payment of it into court. It appeared that default had been made in payment of the instalments. The judge, at the request of the defendant's counsel, amended the plea accordingly :—Held, that the plea as amended was bad, even after verdict, for not stating that the payments were made at the precise times agreed on, or at least a tender made of them. Brown v. Povey, 1 Ex. 601; 11 Jur. 1043.

Semble, that, if the plea had been that a new mutual agreement between the plaintiff, the defendant and other creditors, binding on each at the time when it was made, was given as a substitution for, or in satisfaction of, the debt due from the defendant to the plaintiff, such plea would have been good; and in that case it would have been for the jury to decide whether the plaintiff agreed to accept the agreement itself, not the performance of it, as a satisfaction for his debt. Id.

— Release must be tendered for Execution.]

—To an action on a bill of exchange, a plea that it was agreed between the plaintiff and other creditors of the defendant, that 4*s.* 6*d.* in the pound should be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff and the other creditors, and that, upon receiving the money, the plaintiff and other creditors should execute a release of their debts; that a release was prepared for execution; and that the creditors, except the plaintiff, received the composition and executed the release; and that the defendant had always been ready and willing to pay the plaintiff the 4*s.* 6*d.* in the pound upon the plaintiff executing such release, is bad for want of an averment that the defendant tendered a release to the plaintiff for execution. Rosling v. Muggerridge, 4 D. & L. 298; 16 M. & W. 181; 16 L. J., Ex. 38.

When Tender excused.]—The original contract was made with the plaintiff when a resident abroad, and the deed of composition was entered into, and the debt became due also when the plaintiff was abroad:—Held, that his absence abroad was no excuse for non-payment. Ib.

Absence of the creditor from England affords an excuse for the want of an averment of tender or payment by the debtor only where the former has gone abroad after the making of the contract. Ib.

When Tender dispensed with.]—In an action by an attorney for his bill of costs, the defendant, in his plea, set out a composition deed which was not executed by the plaintiff, in which the creditors who signed the deed, in consideration of, and on payment of, the composition, covenanted with the defendant to execute a good and sufficient release, and the defendant covenanted with all his creditors to pay them the composition. The plea averred that the defendant had always been ready and willing to pay the composition according to the deed, but the plaintiff would not receive the same:—Held, that the averment in the plea amounted to an averment that the plaintiff had dispensed with a tender of the composition, and that the plea was good. Ilderton v. Custrique, 13 L. T. 506.

A composition deed contained covenants for the debtor forthwith to deliver to his creditors bills of exchange, to be drawn by the creditors on, and to be accepted by the debtor, and in default the deed to be void. The deed was executed on the 21st of April, 1865, and registered on the 16th of May. On the 8th of June, the debtor's solicitors wrote to inform A., a judgment creditor, that the acceptances were ready, and, the first bill becoming due on the 24th of October, tender of it and of cash to the amount was made to A., but was refused by him. In November, 1866, he obtained leave from the Court of Bankruptcy to issue execution on his judgment against the debtor, on the ground, mainly, that the bills had not been delivered forthwith:—Held, that the first tender having been refused, there was no need to tender subsequent instalments. Sullivan, Ex re, 36 L. J., Bk. 1; 15 L. T. 434.

In an action against the defendants as acceptors of a bill of exchange for 1,039*l.*, it appeared that they owed the plaintiffs a balance of 321*l.*, that the defendants failed, and their creditors, amongst whom were the plaintiffs, agreed to take a composition of five shillings in the pound on their debts, by notes of four and eight months; there was a dispute as to the balance due to the plaintiffs, and they promised to adjust their account with one of the defendants, and said they would do as the other creditors did; the defendants insisted for some time that 250*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* was the balance due, but the defendants' attorney called on the plaintiffs' attorney, and told him that the defendants were ready to pay the composition on 321*l.*, the sum really due, but the plaintiffs' attorney refused, and said they must have the whole; no actual tender was made of the notes or of cash for the amount of the composition:—Held, that a tender was not necessary under the circumstances, and that the plaintiffs could only recover the amount of the composition on the balance. Reay v. White, 1 C. & M. 748; 3 Tyr. 597.

Creditor dispensing with Tender or Payment.]—Declaration for goods sold and delivered. Plea on equitable grounds: a composition deed; with an averment that the defendant was ready and willing to pay to the plaintiff the first instalment of the composition, but the plaintiff refused to accept it, and discharged the defendant from paying or tendering it:—Held, good, without payment of money into court. Bamford v. Clewes, 3 L. R., Q. B. 729; 9 B. & S. 539.

To a declaration, the defendant pleaded as to all except 20*l.* 9*s.* non assumpsit; and as to this sum, that the defendant being in embarrassed circumstances, the plaintiff and other creditors agreed to take 5*s.* in the pound, and that the defendant was ready and willing to pay the amount of the composition, but the plaintiff refused to receive it, and discharged the defendant from payment of it:—Held, that the plea was no answer to the sum agreed to be taken for composition, because no consideration was stated for the plaintiff discharging the defendant from paying it, and that therefore the agreement as to that was void. The plea was allowed to be amended by paying that sum into court. Cropper v. Phillips, 3 D. P. C. 196; 1 C., M. & R. 649; 5 Tyr. 166.

To whom to be made.]—A tender of the composition must be made to the creditor, or to some one having authority to represent him. A tender to a mere workman or a servant will not suffice. Hoadley v. Jenkins, 16 L. T. 389.

Deducting Income-Tax from Composition.]—A debtor who executes a deed providing for payment of a composition of 8*s.* in the pound, cannot deduct from the balance due to a cash creditor the income-tax from year to year becoming payable upon the amount of interest due to such creditor, and which might have been deducted provided such interest had been regularly paid. Turner, Ex parte, 11 L. T. 352; 13 W. R. 104.

Effect of accepting Composition—Parol Agreement.]—A creditor who has agreed with his debtor, by parol, to take part as a composition for his whole demand, and has actually received money from the debtor in part payment of the composition, is not bound thereby, but may still proceed for his whole demand, unless it can be shewn that he has, by entering into such agreement and taking part of the composition, induced some other creditor also to compound with the debtor, so as that his subsequently proceeding for and recovering the whole amount of his own debt might be considered a fraud upon such other creditor. Greenwood v. Lidbetter, 12 Price, 183.

— Agreement not under Seal.]—Where a man's creditors entered into an agreement with him, not under seal, to take 20*l.* per cent. upon their debts in satisfaction of the whole; 10*l.* per cent. to be paid within a month, and the remaining 10*l.* per cent. to be secured by the acceptances of a third person at five and nine months; and the composition was paid pursuant to the agreement:—Held, that a creditor who had signed the agreement and received the composition could not afterwards bring an action for the residue of his debt. Steinman v. Magnus, 11 East, 390; 2 Camp. 124.

— Right of Debtor to recover Money paid to Holder of Bill on which Creditor has received Composition.—The plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in 50*l.* upon a bill of exchange drawn by the latter upon and accepted by the former. Before the bill arrived at maturity the plaintiff called a meeting of his creditors, which was attended by B. on the part of the defendant. At this meeting it was agreed that the several creditors of the plaintiff should receive a composition on their debts; and, accordingly, a deed of composition and release was prepared and executed (amongst others) by B. on behalf of the defendant, and the amount of the composition was afterwards paid to the defendant. The holder of the plaintiff's acceptance afterwards sued the plaintiff thereon, and compelled him to pay the amount, with 6*l.* 13*s.* for interest, and 2*l.* 10*s.* for costs:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the amount of the bill and interest. Hawley v. Beverley, 6 Scott, N. R. 837.

— Right to recover Amount paid in excess of Composition.—A., being a creditor of B., executed a composition deed, in which it was stipulated that the debts should be paid at 6*s.* in the pound, by promissory notes. After executing this deed, A. obtained a payment from B. in full:—Held, that B. could not recover back the difference between the full amount and 6*s.* in the pound, without proving that the composition notes had been paid, or giving some evidence that would be equivalent to such proof. Ward v. Bird, 5 C. & P. 229.

— Under Deed subsequently declared Void—Mistake of Law.—A debtor called a meeting of his creditors, and proposed a composition of 10*s.* in the pound, payable by two instalments, and a deed was prepared in supposed compliance with 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 192. The plaintiffs, who were creditors, declined to assent; but subsequently, on being informed by the debtor that the deed had been executed by the required number of creditors and had been registered, and the amount of the instalments having been remitted to them, they took the money and said nothing. The deed was afterwards decided to be void for want of a strict compliance with the provisions of the statute:—Held, that the plaintiffs were precluded from suing the debtor for the balance of their debt, as the mistake, if any, under which they had received the instalments was one of law and not of fact. Kitchin v. Hawkins, 2 L. R., C. P. 22; 12 Jur., N. S. 928; 15 L. T. 185; 15 W. R. 72.

— Where Deed fraudulent.—Where a debtor executed a composition deed, a creditor, who had assented to the deed and received his composition money under it, was afterwards, upon suspicious circumstances coming to his knowledge with reference to the execution of the deed, allowed to summon the debtor for examination, with the view of impeaching the validity of the deed. Fachiri, In re, 2 L. R., Ch. 368; 36 L. J., Bk. 10; 16 L. T. 371; 15 W. R. 472.

— Private Arrangement between Creditor and Debtor.—At a meeting of the creditors of a bankrupt, a statement was made on his behalf that a bank, who were secured creditors, had agreed to accept a composition of six shillings in the pound upon the balance of their claim, after deducting the value of the securities in their hands. The statement was uncontradicted by the agent of the bank, who was present, and upon the faith of it the unsecured creditors executed a letter of licence to the debtor, whereby they allowed time for payment of their demands. It subsequently appeared that on the day previously to the meeting of the creditors, a private arrangement had been made between the bankrupt's solicitor and the bank for payment of a composition of ten shillings in the pound. The bank having received the six shillings in the pound, and bankruptcy intervening:—Held, that the bank must be considered to have assented to the arrangement for payment of the six shillings in the pound, and that they could not prove against the estate in competition with the other creditors of the bankrupt. Hoile, In re, 12 W. R. 1087.

9. RECOVERY OF COMPOSITION.

When Action lies against Trustee.—A. declared that in consideration that he, at the request of B., consented and agreed to accept and receive from B. a composition of so much in the pound upon a certain sum of money owing from B. to A. in full satisfaction and discharge of the debt, B. promised to pay the composition:—Held, that this was not a good consideration to support an action against B., a mere accord not being a ground of action. Lynn v. Bruce, 2 H. Bl. 317.

Where A. deposited with B. 100*l.* to distribute amongst A.'s creditors, in proportion to their claims:—Held, that no one of these could maintain an action against B. before the proportions of all the claimants had been ascertained. Robson v. Andraie, 1 Stark. 372; 2 Chit. 263.

In an action against a trustee under a composition deed, between A. and his creditors, for the amount of a creditor's dividends (the deed reciting that the debtor was indebted to the several creditors whose debts were set opposite their names in the schedule annexed to the deed, which covenanted to pay a specific ratio of the debts), it is no defence to say that the creditor did not set the amount of his debt opposite to his name in the schedule: it is sufficient to render the trustee liable, that he had notice of the amount of the creditor's claim before action. Daniel v. Saunders, 2 Chit. 564.

— Trustees are mere Stakeholders.—When a deed of composition with creditors has been executed, under the terms of which certain persons constituted trustees under the deed are in possession of the promissory notes given to satisfy the amount agreed on as the composition, such trustees are, as between the parties to the deed, stakeholders, and are not the servants or agents either of the persons who gave the notes or of the persons who, under the provisions of the deed, would be entitled to receive them. Latter v. White, 5 L. R., H. L. 578; 41 L. J., Q. B. 342. Affirming 6 L. R., Q. B. 474; 40 L. J., Q. B. 162; 25 L. T. 658; 19 W. R. 1149.

If, therefore, the person who made the notes and handed them over to the trustees to deal with them under the deed, should afterwards give notice to the trustees not to hand them over to a particular creditor, the creditor cannot maintain detinue against such person, the notes not being in his possession either really or constructively. Id.

W. was in difficulties. A composition with his creditors was proposed, and was agreed to by them. By the deed of composition he and his father were to give promissory notes for the composition. L., a creditor, signed the deed, but on the next day wrote (through his attorneys) to say that he had discovered the balance-sheet presented to the creditors to be incorrect, and he withdrew his assent to the deed. The deed was duly registered under the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, and the promissory notes made, but L. refused to receive them. He afterwards brought an action against W. for the original debt, to which the deed was pleaded as an answer. L. replied that it had been obtained by fraud. The cause was referred to arbitration, and after it had been referred W. withdrew from the reference, and the award was made in favour of L. Nothing was done on the award, but some time afterwards L. demanded from the trustees the notes which had been made for his share of the composition. The trustees (acting upon a notice received from the father) refused to deliver up the notes. L. thereon brought detinue against the father:—Held, that the action was not maintainable, and that whether the deed was invalid or not could not be determined, and that his proper remedy was by application to the Court of Bankruptcy, which had power to do complete justice between the parties. Id.

Action by one of two Partners.—An action lies on a deed of composition with creditors, by one of two partners, who signed the deed in the name of his firm, and set his seal thereto, for non-payment of an instalment due on a partnership debt; for the other partner, not being a party to the deed, cannot join in the action. Metcalfe v. Rycroft, 6 M. & S. 75.

Power of Court of Bankruptcy.—Where a debtor, who has executed a deed of arrangement, declines to deliver over to a creditor the composition notes to which he is entitled, the Court of Bankruptcy will grant a rule calling upon him to shew cause why an order should not be made for that purpose. Anon., 13 W. R. 20.

Where a deed of composition has been duly registered, but has become unavailable by reason of the failure of the debtor to carry out the arrangement, the application for leave to issue execution against his property or person must be made to the Court of Bankruptcy. Skilton v. Symonds, 18 C. B., N. S. 418; 34 L. J., C. P. 151; 11 Jur., N. S. 140; 13 W. R. 409.

10. DEEDS COMPOUNDING FOR PARTICULAR DEBTS ONLY.

Without Intention of delaying other Creditors.—If a person, having several creditors, conveys by deed the legal interest in part of his real and personal property to a trustee, in trust (after deducting the expenses respecting the trust) out of the rents and profits to pay half the surplus to the grantor for his own use, and the residue among certain creditors named in a schedule, without any intention of fraudulently delaying the creditors not named in the schedule in obtaining their demands, the deed is good in law. Estwick v. Caillaud, 5 T. R. 420; 2 Anst. 381.

Debts in Discretion of Trustee.—A deed conveyed the lease of a farm and all the grantor's effects, and all debts due to him, to trustees, in consideration of a certain sum to be paid to him by one of the trustees, to dispose of all the property, and out of the produce to reimburse the trustee the sum advanced by him to the grantor, and all other the trustees' demands upon him, and then to pay all such debts as were justly due from the grantor, as the trustees in their discretion should think proper; the surplus to be holden for the benefit of the grantor's wife (whose property the bulk of it originally was), as a separate maintenance for her, in consequence of a separation between them on account of her husband's ill-usage:—Held, that such deed was not fraudulent or void, as against creditors, it appearing to have been made bona fide at the time, and that all the creditors of the grantor, known at the time, had, upon application to the trustees, received payment of their debts. Wynn v. Wilmore, 8 T. R. 521.

Estates assigned to Trustees to keep down Interest on Debts charged thereon.—A. and B., father and son, executed in 1818 an indenture of settlement, on the occasion of the son's intended marriage. The father and son, the lady and her father, and other persons, trustees, were parties to the indenture. Freehold estates were conveyed to the trustees for A. for life, remainder to B., and these estates were exonerated from debts due by A., which debts were made charges on certain leasehold premises expressly named. These premises were vested in trustees to keep down the interest of A.'s debts affecting any of the estates comprised in the deed, and they were empowered, with the desire and consent of A. and B., and notwithstanding any of the trusts therein, to sell the debts and incumbrances. Another deed was executed by A. and B. in 1824, which recited the former, appointed new trustees, added new debts and made provision for the payment of all. The trustees never acted in discharge of the trust, and the deeds were not communicated to the creditors; but B., who by an arrangement with his father had possession and management of the estates, paid the interest on the debts. After the deaths of A. and B., the son of the latter entered into possession of the estates. C., a bond creditor, whose name and claim were set forth in the schedule to the deed of 1818, filed a bill to have the trusts of that deed carried into execution.—Held, that this debt was within the trust contained in the indenture for the payment of the scheduled debts. Synnot v. Simpson, 5 H. L. Cas. 121.

Debt in which Trustee has Interest.—A. and B., father and son, executed deeds for the settlement of some of their family estates, and for payment of the debts of A. Certain estates were conveyed to trustees, with a power to sell, on the consent, in writing, of A. and B. or the survivor, and to apply the proceeds of the sale in payment of debts therein specified. A. was indebted to D., as trustee for an infirmity, and A. and B. had given joint and separate warrants of attorney to secure the debt. Separate judgments had been entered up against A. and against B. The amount of the sums thus due was stated in the deed. D. had some legal interest in the estates themselves. He was a party to the deed, and executed it:—Held, that this deed created a trust in favour of the infirmary of which he was a trustee. Montefiore v. Browne, 7 H. L. Cas. 241.

Power of Revocation.—In this deed there was a power of revocation to be exercised by A. and B. A. died without exercising it:—Held, that the power of revocation was then at an end. Id.

Default in Payment of Instalment.—A debt being payable by instalments, with interest, the debtor made default in payment of one of the instalments. By a deed, reciting that the creditor had agreed to give the debtor time upon having the payment of the debt secured to him, with interest, "by the instalments and in manner hereinafter appearing," provision was made for payment of the debt, with interest, by instalments different from the former ones, with a proviso, that upon default being made in payment of any instalment, the whole unpaid portion of the debt, with interest, should become immediately payable. The debtor made default:—Held, that the proviso was not in the nature of a penalty, and that a court of equity ought not to restrain the creditor from enforcing immediate payment of the whole moneys remaining due. Sterne v. Beck, 1 De G., J. & S. 595.

11. EFFECT OF DEEDS UPON ACTIONS AND SUITS.

On Action commenced before 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134.—A composition deed, by which the creditors, parties thereto, covenant not to sue the debtor for a certain period, cannot be pleaded to an action commenced before the act came into operation by a creditor who has not executed the deed. Oppenheimer v. Griece, 7 H. & N. 533; 31 L. J., Ex. 375; 10 W. R. 541.

Deeds Pleadable in Bar.—A simple covenant not to sue for a limited time is not pleadable in bar of an action, but a covenant not to sue for a limited time, and that the deed may be pleaded in bar and discharge of any action brought within that time, may be pleaded in bar of an action by a non-assenting creditor. Walker v. Nevill, 3 H. & C. 403; 34 L. J., Ex. 73; 11 Jur., N. S. 246; 11 L. T. 774; 13 W. R. 523.

A composition deed, professing to be made between the debtor and a surety and all the creditors (whether assenting or bound under the statute), recited, that the debtor had agreed to pay his creditors 5s. in the pound upon their debts, by two instalments of 2s. 6d. in the pound each, the first in cash, the second by the joint and several promissory notes of the debtor and the surety, at four months' date; and that the statutory majority of creditors had consented to accept such composition. It then witnessed, that in consideration of the premises, the several creditors released the debtor (in the largest possible term) from all debts, claims and demands, "save and except their rights, claims and demands under and by virtue of the deed, and of the promissory notes for the second instalment of the composition," with a proviso, saving their remedies against third persons; and the surety covenanted not to accept any security, preference or benefit, until the full amount of the composition should have been paid:—Held, that the deed amounted to an absolute release, and might be pleaded in bar as such. Lay v. Mottram, 19 C. B., N. S. 479; 12 Jur., N. S. 6.

A plea of a composition deed made between a debtor and his creditors relating to his debts and liabilities and his release therefrom, is pleadable in bar to an action by a non-assenting creditor. Whitebread v. Porter, 5 B. & S. 123; 10 L. T. 410; 12 W. R. 742.

To a declaration for a debt, a plea alleging that a deed was made between the defendant and certain of his creditors, being "an inspectorship deed, within the true intent, meaning and provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861;" that it was thereby provided that, on the happening of one of certain specified events, the defendant should be released; and that if any of the said creditors should commence any suit, the deed should operate as an order of discharge in bankruptcy, and that the conditions required by the Bankruptcy Act had been complied with, is a good plea. Corner v. Sweet, 1 L. R., C. P. 456; 12 Jur., N. S. 413; 14 W. R. 584.

Deed not Executed by Creditors.—A plea, that by a deed an insolvent and two sureties bound themselves to give, and pay at maturity, promissory notes to the amount of 3s. in the pound to all his executing and non-executing creditors, which deed was assented to by the requisite number of creditors, and in which was contained a covenant by the subscribing creditors that they would accept the notes by way of composition, and on payment would give a release; alleging a tender to the plaintiff; the deed being executed by the insolvent and by the sureties, but not appearing to have been executed by any of the creditors:—Held, that the plea was a good plea on equitable grounds. Scott v. Berry, 34 L. J., Ex. 193; 11 Jur., N. S. 510; 13 L. T. 40; 13 W. R. 844.

To an action of debt a composition deed was pleaded (executed after action), by which two instalments of a composition were to be paid on two future days, and which contained a release subject to be avoided by non-payment of the composition. To the plea after the first instalment was due, the plaintiff replied non-payment of the composition:—Held, that the plea was good, for that the release was an answer to the declaration at the time it was pleaded. Newington v. Levy, 6 L. R., C. P. 180; 40 L. J., C. P. 29; 23 L. T. 594; 19 W. R. 473. Affirming, S. C., 5 L. R., C. P. 607; 39 L. J., C. P. 334; 23 L. T. 70; 18 W. R. 1198.

No Release—Tender of Composition.—A composition deed, binding on non-assenting creditors, may, if the composition has been tendered, be pleaded in bar to an action by a non-assenting creditor, although the deed contains no release. Garrod v. Simpson, 3 H. & C. 395; 34 L. J., Ex. 70; 11 Jur., N. S. 227; 11 L. T. 777; 13 W. R. 469.

Deeds not Pleadable in Bar.—A composition deed containing a covenant on behalf of the debtor's creditors, parties thereto, not to sue, provided their debts are paid by certain monthly instalments, as provided by the deed, but containing no clause of release, cannot be pleaded in bar to an action. Ray v. Jones, 19 C. B., N. S. 416; 34 L. J., C. P. 306; 11 Jur., N. S. 812; 12 L. T. 737; 13 W. R. 1018.

A deed, by which a debtor simply conveys all his estate and effects to a trustee to be applied and administered for the benefit of his creditors as if he had been duly adjudged bankrupt, cannot be pleaded in bar to an action by a creditor. Clarke v. Williams, 3 H. & C. 1001—Ex. Ch.

Judgment set aside to allow Deed to be Plead.—A defendant, who, before action, executed a deed of arrangement, did not appear, but allowed judgment to go against him by default. Upon an application to stay proceedings upon the judgment on the ground that the deed had been executed:—Held, that it ought to have been pleaded, and that the defendant might have a rule nisi to set aside the judgment and be let in to plead the deed on payment of costs. Couston v. Robins, 12 W. R. 1012.

In what Actions—Cause of Action arising out of Jurisdiction.—An English composition and inspectorship deed, made under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, may be set up as an answer to an English action on a contract made and to be performed in Upper Canada; but it cannot be set up as an answer to an English action on a judgment obtained in Upper Canada in an action there on such a contract, if it could have been used as a defence in such Canadian action. Ellis v. McHenry, 6 L. R., C. P. 228; 40 L. J., C. P. 109; 23 L. T. 861; 19 W. R. 503.

—For Liability in respect of Calls.—A deed of inspectorship under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192, by a transferee of shares, is no bar to the claim of a transferor (who did not execute the deed) in respect of calls which had been made subsequently to the date of the deed, and which he had been compelled to pay by the default of the transferee to register the transfer. Holmes v. Symons, 13 L. R., Eq. 66; 41 L. J., Ch. 59; 25 L. T. 628; 20 W. R. 175. An appeal against this decision was compromised; 20 W. R. 921.

Deeds under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 192.—A deed under the 192nd section does not operate as a statutable release of the debtor, pleadable in bar of an action by a creditor; and the debtor can only avail himself of it by an application to the Court of Bankruptcy to stay the proceedings, or after certificate by an application to the court in which judgment has been obtained to stay execution. Ipton Park Iron Ore Company v. Pattinson, 2 H. & C. 828; 33 L. J., Ex. 193; 10 Jur., N. S. 427; 9 L. T. 806; 12 W. R. 344.

Proof of Plea.—A plea of composition with creditors, stating that defendants were indebted to the plaintiffs, and to other persons whose names were to the defendants unknown, and that the defendants agreed with the plaintiffs and their other creditors, and the plaintiffs and the other creditors mutually agreed with the defendants and each other to accept a composition, is not proved by evidence of some only of the other creditors besides the plaintiffs having agreed to accept a composition. Brown v. Bakey, 11 Jur. 39.

A deed which is on the face of it unreasonable or unequal as against non-assenting creditors, cannot be made good by any facts dehors the deed. Oldis v. Armston, 2 L. R., Ex. 406; 36 L. J., Ex. 181; 16 L. T. 601; 15 W. R. 965.

Action by Creditor whose Debt omitted from Schedule.—In an action against an acceptor of an overdue bill of exchange, he pleaded, for defence on equitable grounds, a deed made between himself and the several persons whose names were thereto subscribed being his creditors, which, after reciting that he proposed to pay them a composition of 5s. in the pound, which proposal was accepted by a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors, witnessed that the debtor covenanted that he would pay to those persons the several sums placed opposite to their names in a schedule to the deed, being the amount of the composition, by two equal instalments, and would forthwith deliver to them promissory notes for the amount of those instalments; they covenanting that until he made default in the performance of his covenants they would make no claim or demand against him; that he at the time he executed the deed was ignorant that the bill sued on had been indorsed to the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff was his creditor, and therefore could not insert the same in the schedule to the deed:—Held, that the deed was not an answer to the action. Burelot v. Mills, 6 B. & S. 986.

Mode of pleading Deed in Bar of Actions.—In pleading in bar a deed of inspectorship, it is sufficient, without setting out the deed at length, to aver that it is in all respects an inspectorship deed within the true intent and meaning of the statute, and give a general description of it. Corner v. Sweet, 1 L. R., C. P. 456; 35 L. J., C. P. 161; 14 W. R. 584; 1 H. & R. 405.

To an action for goods sold and delivered, a plea in bar of a deed of composition executed after action, and a tender of the composition after action, is good, without shewing that the defence arose after action, and the want of a formal commencement and conclusion does not make the plea bad. Brooks v. Jennings, 1 L. R., C. P. 476; 12 Jur., N. S. 341; 14 L. T. 19; 14 W. R. 440; 1 H. & R. 414.

Where the release is absolute, the deed may be pleaded without averring a tender of the composition-money. Johnson v. Barrett, 1 L. R., Ex. 65; 35 L. J., Ex. 15; 13 L. T. 597; 14 W. R. 194; 4 H. & C. 16.

A deed made between the debtor, a surety, and the persons whose names were thereto subscribed, and all others the creditors of the debtor, after reciting that the debtor was indebted to the said several creditors in the several sums of money set opposite to their respective names in the schedule thereto, and that it had been agreed by the statutory majority of the creditors to accept a composition in full satisfaction of their debts,—witnessed that, in consideration of the promissory notes of the debtor and the surety for the payment of the composition on the respective sums of money as aforesaid, they released to the debtor all actions, suits, debts, claims, and demands, and accepted the composition in satisfaction of the debts due to them specified in the schedule:—Held, that a plea of the above deed (which was executed and registered after the date of the writ of summons), pleaded as a plea to the further maintenance of the action, was a good answer, not only to the debt, but to the claim for damages and costs consequent upon the detention of the debt. Tetley v. Wanless, 2 L. R., Ex. 21; 36 L. J., Ex. 153; 16 L. T. 60; 15 W. R. 356—Ex. Ch.

A plea to a declaration for a debt, setting up a release contained in a composition deed which it alleged to be binding upon the plaintiff under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and by which certain specified creditors, not including the plaintiff, were postponed to the general body of creditors, is bad if it does not allege that the creditors so postponed executed, or at least assented to, the deed. Cairncross v. Willis, 38 L. J., Ex. 87; 20 L. T. 529.

After Action.—A deed of composition completed by execution of the requisite number of creditors after action, may be pleaded as a defence on the condition of payment of costs to the time of pleading. Morgan v. Harding, 11 W. R. 65.

At Nisi Prius.—A plea, puis darrein continuance, of a deed of arrangement allowed to be pleaded at nisi prius within eight days of the registration of the deed, although the cause had not been reached, nor in the cause list of the day. Bond v. Weston, 4 F. & F. 476.

Upon a plea, puis darrein continuance, of a deed of arrangement with a clause that it should operate by way of release on the prosecution of any suit or action by any of the creditors, it appearing that the deed was entered into after the cause was at issue, and registered more than eight days before the plea was tendered, but that there had been no fresh step in the cause since it was set down for trial, which was before the registration:—Held, that if there was any doubt as to whether the matter of defence arose within the last eight days, the judge, in the exercise of his discretion, would receive the plea at nisi prius; and it was accordingly so received. Aston v. King, 4 F. & F. 480.

In Action by Surety against Principal Debtor.]

—Declaration for money paid. Plea, that after the 4th October, 1861, and before the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the defendant was indebted to divers persons, and thereupon a deed of the 29th August, 1867, relating to his debts and his release therefrom, was made between him and his creditors, being "the several persons who, at the date of the deed, would be entitled to prove, under an adjudication in bankruptcy, against him, founded upon a petition filed on the day of the date of the deed," which deed recited his inability to meet his debts and his proposal to pay a composition of 5s. in the pound, which the debtors had agreed to accept in full satisfaction and discharge of their debts, and to execute the release thereafter contained; and the defendant covenanted to pay the composition in two instalments of 2s. 6d. each at three and six months from the registration of the deed, in consequence whereof the creditors released him from all his debts. And it was provided, that any creditor holding security for his debt, or having any claim upon or against any other person as well as the defendant for such debt, might execute or assent to the deed without prejudice to such security or claim. Averment that the deed was executed after the accruing of the claim of a certain other person whose name was to the defendant unknown, and that such claim was for money due from the defendant to such other person, who was a creditor of the defendant in respect of his claim at the time of the execution of the deed, and executed and was bound by the same; and that the plaintiff was a surety for the defendant to such other person in respect of such claim, and that the money alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff for the use of the defendant, was so paid after the execution of the deed by such other person, and was money paid by the plaintiff as such surety for the defendant to such other person for and on account of such claim, and not otherwise; and that at the time it was paid the defendant was released from such claim of such other person by the deed. Replication, that the plaintiff never executed or assented to the deed, and was no party thereto; and, that although the times for payment of the composition on the amount of the debt to which the plea was pleaded had elapsed before commencement of the action, yet the composition was never paid or tendered, or offered to be paid to the plaintiff pursuant to the deed:—Held, that the plea was good, and afforded a defence to the claim which was barred by the deed, the release contained in which was absolute, and would have been an answer to an action by the principal creditor, in whose place the surety was, by the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 173, entitled to stand, and so was bound by the deed. Hatch v. Hatch, 28 L. T. 506.

Issuing Execution notwithstanding Registration.]—A person who has been arrested, notwithstanding he had a certificate of the registrar in bankruptcy of his registration of a deed of arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, cannot maintain an action against the sheriff for detaining him in custody after the production of such certificate to the sheriff's officer. Ames v. Waterlow, 5 L. R., C. P. 53; 39 L. J., C. P. 41.

On the 3rd of August, A. served on B. a writ, under the Bills of Exchange Act; on the 5th, B. executed a composition deed; on the 13th the deed was registered, and a certificate thereof granted to B.; on the 15th judgment for non-appearance was signed; the sheriff took B. into custody on a ca. sa.; but on being shewn the certificate let him go:—Held, that the sheriff was liable to an action for escape at the suit of A. Allen v. Carter, 5 L. R., C. P. 414; 39 L. J., C. P. 212; 22 L. T. 586.

Effect on Proceedings in Equity.]—A deed of assignment in trust for creditors executed by the plaintiff during a suit causes an abatement, as upon bankruptcy, and the defendant should move that the suit be revived or stand dismissed, and not for dismissal for want of prosecution. Price v. Richards, 39 L. J., Ch. 118.

When a bill of foreclosure was filed against a lessee, who had executed a deed of assignment of all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 192:—Held, that the trustees should have been made parties, and not the lessee. Metropolitan Bank v. Offord, 10 L. R., Eq. 398; 39 L. J., Ch. 820; 22 L. T. 699.

A trustee in default to the trust estate, and having executed a creditors' deed duly registered before a bill filed against him for the execution of the trusts, is entitled to his costs from the date of the bankruptcy as between solicitor and client, from the party liable to the costs of the suit:—Held, that there is no difference in this respect between an executor and a trustee. Bowyer v. Griffin, 39 L. J., Ch. 159.

Setting up Deed in Bar of Suit against Creditor.—The defendant acted as the plaintiff's agent in certain commercial transactions previously and up to July, 1867. In that month the plaintiff fell into pecuniary difficulties, and executed a composition deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, whereby he covenanted to pay a composition to his creditors, and they released him from all his liabilities. The defendant was not present at the meeting at which the composition was agreed upon, and the proper majority of creditors was obtained without reference to him; but he afterwards claimed to be a creditor in respect of the said transactions for 300l., and his name was inserted in the schedule of the deed as a creditor for that amount, and he assented to the deed, and received the composition payable thereunder. Afterwards the plaintiff filed a bill for an account charging numerous false entries in the accounts rendered by the defendant:—Held, that the composition deed was no bar to a decree for account in favour of the plaintiff. Pike v. Dickinson, 12 L. R., Eq. 64; 40 L. J., Ch. 450; 24 L. T. 927. Affirmed, 7 L. R., Ch. 61; 41 L. J., Ch. 171; 25 L. T. 579; 20 W. R. 81.

12. OPERATION OF CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRATION.

Certificate founded on Invalid Deed is Void.—The certificate of the registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy that a composition deed has been filed and registered, is not available to the debtor for the purposes of protecting him from arrest, unless the deed of composition is a valid one; and a certificate founded on an invalid deed may be treated as void, without taking proceedings to set it aside. Iderton v. Jewell, 14 C. B., N. S. 665; 32 L. J., C. P. 256. Affirmed, 16 C. B., N. S. 143—Ex. Ch.

A certificate of the registration of a deed of arrangement is no answer to an action by a non-executing creditor, if the deed contains covenants which are unreasonable or contrary to the general scope and policy of the bankrupt laws. Leigh v. Pendlebury, 15 C. B., N. S. 815; 33 L. J., C. P. 172; 10 Jur., N. S. 296; 10 L. T. 30; 12 W. R. 468; S. P., Dewhurst v. Kershaw, 10 Jur., N. S. 734.

Certificate is only prima facie Evidence of Validity.—The certificate of registration is only prima facie evidence of the fulfilment of the requisites of the section to which the certificate extends, and may be controverted without a separate proceeding to set it aside. Page, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 283.

Execution—Omission to plead Deed.—A debtor, who had executed and registered a deed of composition containing a release, was sued by a non-assenting creditor for a debt due before the execution of the deed. The debtor neglected to plead the deed, and the creditor obtained judgment, and issued execution:—Held, that, as the debtor might have pleaded the deed, he was estopped from setting it up afterwards to defeat the execution. Rossi v. Bailey, 3 L. R., Q. B. 621; 37 L. J., Q. B. 204; 19 L. T. 130; 16 W. R. 1042.

It is no excuse for a sheriff not arresting a debtor, that the debtor produced a certificate of the registration of a composition deed, if he had had the opportunity of pleading the deed and had omitted to do so, of which the sheriff had notice; and an action will lie against the sheriff at the suit of the judgment creditor for not arresting under such circumstances. Godwin v. Stone, 4 L. R., Ex. 331; 38 L. J., Ex. 153; 20 L. T. 711; 17 W. R. 923.

Where a debtor, who made a composition deed, was sued by a non-assenting creditor, and suffered judgment by default, the court refused to order the sheriff to withdraw from possession of the debtor's goods under a fi. fa. issued on the judgment. Whitmore v. Wakerley, 3 H. & C. 538; 34 L. J., Ex. 83; 11 Jur., N. S. 182; 11 L. T. 683; 13 W. R. 350.

A defendant entered into a deed of arrangement which would have afforded a defence to the action. He had an opportunity of pleading it, but omitted to do so, and judgment was recovered against him:—Held, per Kelly, C. B., and Pigott, B., that he was still entitled to rely upon the deed as a protection against the execution on the judgment: per Bramwell and Channell, BB., that he was not. Staffordshire Joint Stock Banking Company v. Emmott, 2 L. R., Ex. 208; 36 L. J., Ex. 105; 16 L. T. 175; 15 W. R. 1135.

A plea of never indebted was withdrawn by consent on the understanding that judgment was not to be signed till the 8th of May. On the 7th of May the defendant registered a valid deed of composition. The plaintiff, a non-assenting creditor, signed judgment on the 8th of May, and brought an action on the judgment:—Held, that he was not entitled to enforce the judgment in this manner, because, although it might have been physically possible for the defendant to plead the deed in time, still, he had not such an opportunity of pleading it as he was bound to make available; and also, because he was prevented from pleading by the understanding on which he withdrew his plea. Braun v. Weller, 2 L. R., Ex. 183; 36 L. J., Ex. 100; 16 L. T. 22; 15 W. R. 519.

A plaintiff issued a writ of summons under the Bills of Exchange Act; the defendant did not appear to the writ, but before the time for appearance had expired, executed a deed of composition. The deed was assented to by the requisite number of creditors, but was not registered till after the time for appearing to the writ had expired, whereupon the plaintiff signed judgment and issued execution:—Held, that he could not proceed without leave of the Court of Bankruptcy. Hartley v. Mare, 19 C. B., N. S. 85; 34 L. J., C. P. 187; 11 Jur., N. S. 625; 12 L. T. 424; 13 W. R. 777.

Practice where Validity of Deed Disputed.—Upon a motion to set aside a fi. fa. upon the ground of a composition deed, the facts necessary to the validity of the deed being disputed, the court referred the matter to the master to report the facts, and ordered the sheriff to sell and to bring the money into court. Maginn v. Coles, 13 W. R. 350.

— In respect of Debts incurred after Registration.]—The certificate of the registration of a deed does not protect a debtor from arrest for a debt contracted after such registration. Williams v. Rose, 3 L. R., Ex. 5; 37 L. J., Ex. 12; 17 L. T. 253; 16 W. R. 316.

The protection of the certificate of registration does not extend to process in respect of debts accruing due after the date of registration, and therefore a sheriff is liable to an action for an escape, if he discharges a debtor, whom he has arrested, upon the production of the registrar's certificate, if the debt accrued due subsequently to the date of registration. Dignam v. Bailey, 4 L. R., Q. B. 376; 38 L. J., Q. B. 218; 17 W. R. 727—C. A. Affirming 3 L. R., Q. B. 178; 37 L. J., Q. B. 71; 17 L. T. 471; 16 W. R. 359.

—Bill Indorsed after Registration.—B. executed a deed of composition, containing a release by the creditors, which was registered immediately; at this time a bill drawn by C. and accepted by B. was running. The bill was indorsed to the plaintiff after it became due; the plaintiff sued B. on the bill and obtained judgment against him, and the sheriff, having arrested B. on a ca. sa., discharged him on the production of the certificate of registration of the deed. The plaintiff having brought an action against the sheriff for an escape, the sheriff pleaded the certificate as a justification, to which the plaintiff replied that the plaintiff's cause of action accrued after the registration of the deed, and the plaintiff was not a creditor bound by the deed.—Held, that the debt was barred by the deed, and the certificate therefore was a justification to the sheriff in discharging B. Id.

Debtor in Execution.—A debtor in execution, who obtains from the Court of Bankruptcy a certificate of the filing and registration of a composition deed, is entitled to be discharged out of custody. Marks v. Hall, 2 L. R., Q. B. 31; 36 L. J., Q. B. 40; 7 B. & S. 839.

A judgment debtor, arrested on a ca. sa. after execution by him of a valid deed of assignment, but before the expiration of the time limited for its registration, is, upon its registration, entitled to be discharged out of custody. Bearnsman v. Langlands, 3 H. & C. 433; 34 L. J., Ex. 3; 11 Jur., N. S. 45; 11 L. T. 348; 13 W. R. 79.

—Where Deed invalid.—The production of a certificate, valid on its face, of the registration of a deed of assignment by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors, justifies a sheriff in releasing the debtor whom he has arrested at the suit of a creditor, although the deed is in fact invalid as between the debtor and non-assenting creditors. Lloyd v. Harrison, 1 L. R., Q. B. 502; 35 L. J., Q. B. 188; 12 Jur., N. S. 701; 14 W. R. 737; 6 B. & S. 36—Ex. Ch.

—Where Sheriff has Notice of Invalidity.—A sheriff is bound to discharge a debtor out of custody on the production of the certificate of registration of a deed of arrangement, made subsequently to the judgment under which the debtor is arrested, notwithstanding the deed, though valid on the face of it, is in fact invalid, and the sheriff has notice of such invalidity. Ames v. Colnaghi, 3 L. R., C. P. 359; 37 L. J., C. P. 159; 18 L. T. 327; 16 W. R. 758.

—No Action against Sheriff for not discharging Debtor.—Though a debtor who produces to the sheriff a certificate of the filing and registration of a deed conveying his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, is entitled to his discharge, no action lies against the sheriff for not discharging him on producing such certificate. Ames v. Waterlow, 21 L. T. 393; 18 W. R. 67.

—City of London Small Debts Act.—Where a debtor who has executed a deed of arrangement with his creditors, and received his certificate of protection, is arrested and committed under a judgment summons issuing out of the City of London Sheriffs' Court, the Court of Bankruptcy will order his release, notwithstanding the provision in the City of London Small Debts Act, that no "protection order or certificate granted by any court of bankruptcy, or for the relief of insolvent debtors, shall be available to discharge any defendant from any commitment under such last-mentioned order." Kinnaird, In re, 7 L. T. 25.

—Re-arrest of Debtor.—Where a protection obtained under a deed of arrangement is impeached, and the deed is bad on the face of it, and default has been made by the debtor in carrying out its terms, a judge will give leave to re-arrest at the suit of a creditor barred by the deed. Daniels v. Jansen, 10 L. T. 909.

—Jurisdiction of Court of Bankruptcy.—A debtor having been taken under a ca. sa., notwithstanding his having produced to the officer a certificate of his having registered a deed of composition, an application was made to a judge in chambers for an order to release the debtor, which the judge refused to grant, on the ground that the deed was not a valid deed.—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had no power to release the debtor, and that the proper course to have taken was to have applied to the court out of which the process issued. Smith, Ex parte, 10 L. T. 551.

Execution against Goods of Debtor.—If a fi. fa. is issued at the suit of a non-assenting creditor after notice of the registration of a valid composition deed, the court will set it aside. Stone v. Jellicoe, 3 H. & C. 263; 34 L. J., Ex. 11.

A debtor, whose goods had been taken in execution under a fi. fa. before sale, executed a composition deed, which was duly registered.—Held, that the execution was no longer available, and the Court ordered the sheriff to withdraw from possession. Rogers v. Roberts, 4 H. & C. 609; 36 L. J., Ex. 40; 15 W. R. 340.

—Garnishee.—An order was made attaching a debt in the hands of a garnishee, and afterwards an order to pay over. Default was made, and, under an execution thereupon, the sheriff seized the goods of the garnishee, who, before sale, executed and registered a composition deed.—Held, that 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 198, applied, and that the sheriff must withdraw. Kent v. Tomkinson, 2 L. R., C. P. 502; 36 L. J., C. P. 224; 17 L. T. 41.

—Proceeds of Execution.—A plaintiff issued execution, after notice that a composition deed was about to be registered by the defendant;

the defendant's attorney gave notice of the same fact to the sheriff's officer, who withdrew on having the attorney's undertaking for the amount of the debt and costs, after refusing to withdraw on any other terms. At the time the undertaking was given the deed was, in fact, registered, and contained a release of all the creditor's claims and demands. The defendant having paid to the sheriff the amount of the undertaking under protest, and the sheriff having paid the same into court, the defendant moved to have the money paid out to him :—Held, that he was entitled to the money, inasmuch as the money represented the proceeds of the execution, and the plaintiff was not, at the time the undertaking was given, in a position in which he could have derived any benefit from the execution if it had been proceeded with. Milner v. Rawlings, 1 L. R., Ex. 249; 36 L. J., Ex. 250; 16 L. T. 829; 15 W. R. 1044.

— Where Deed becomes Void. ]—On the 20th of October, 1866, a debtor executed a deed of composition, by which, in consideration of her covenant to pay her creditors a composition of 5s. in the pound by two instalments of 2s. 6d. each, at three and six months respectively from the date of the deed, the creditors covenanted that, if the instalments were duly paid they would accept the composition in satisfaction of their respective debts, and that the deed should be an absolute release to the debtor therefrom; proviso, that unless and until the instalments of the composition, or some or one of them, should become payable, and should not be paid within three days after demand, the creditors should not sue in respect of their debts, and a further proviso, that in case the instalments, or any of them, should not be duly paid when due, the deed and the release therein contained should be at an end. The deed was executed or assented to by the required number and value of creditors, and was duly registered and gazetted, and a certificate of registration was given to the debtor. On the 28th of February, 1867 (the first instalment, payable on the 20th of January, not having been paid or tendered), the sheriff seized the debtor's goods under a f. fa. at the suit of a non-assenting creditor :—Held, that the deed being by force of the last proviso absolutely void, the certificate of registration was no bar to the execution. Baker v. Painter, 2 L. R., C. P. 492; 17 L. T. 53.

Garnishee Order. ]—Where a garnishee order to pay a judgment creditor has been made, but the judgment debtor has registered a composition deed before payment by the garnishee to the judgment creditor, the order is gone, and the subsequent payment by the garnishee is no defence to an action by the trustees under the deed. Wood v. Dunn, 1 L. R., Q. B. 77; 35 L. J., Q. B. 11; 12 Jur., N. S. 338; 13 L. T. 403; 14 W. R. 84.

Summons under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127. ]—The registrar's certificate of the due registration of a deed operates as a protection to the debtor against process under a summons taken out pursuant to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, for non-payment, in obedience to an order of the court, of a debt under 20l. recovered against him in a superior court. Gwillim v. Norris, 11 L. T. 575.

Attachment subject to Leave of Court of Bankruptcy. ]—Where, upon a rule for an attachment against a defendant for not paying money due under an order of nisi prius, it appeared that, after the money became due, he had entered into a trust deed for the benefit of his creditors, the rule for the attachment was made absolute; but it was ordered that the attachment should not issue until the plaintiff had obtained leave from the Court of Bankruptcy to make it available. Welsh v. Butt, 31 L. J., Q. B. 263; 10 W. R. 714.

Discretion of Court of Bankruptcy. ]—The Court of Bankruptcy is not bound ex debito iustitiæ, but it has a discretion to give or refuse leave to issue execution. Daniels, Ex parte, 10 L. T. 850.

The defendant, being sued by a creditor, before trial but not in time to plead it to the action, registered a deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. The plaintiff recovered judgment; and, without obtaining leave from the Court of Bankruptcy, issued execution; but before it had been enforced the defendant applied to the court to stay proceedings. The court refused to interfere, although it appeared that the writ was about to be immediately executed. Harding v. Inskip, 4 L. R., Ex. 80; 38 L. J., Ex. 81; 19 L. T. 609.

Deed Registered under s. 194 of Act of 1861. ]—A deed of composition, registered under s. 194, although executed by more than three-fourths in number of the creditors, will not bind the remainder. Morgan, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 288; 32 L. J., Bk. 15; 2 Jur., N. S. 559; 7 L. T. 729; 11 W. R. 316.

Unregistered Deed receivable in Evidence against Debtor. ]—A deed of trust for the benefit of creditors, although unregistered, may be received in evidence as against the bankrupt. Wensley, Ex parte, 32 L. J., Bk. 23; 9 Jur., N. S. 315; 7 L. T. 548; 11 W. R. 241.

13. JURISDICTION OF THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 197. ]—The jurisdiction given to the Bankruptcy Court by the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 197, extends for certain purposes to trust deeds registered under s. 194, as well as to those registered under s. 192, although all the powers given to the court by s. 197 with respect to deeds registered under s. 192, cannot be exercised with respect to deeds registered under s. 194. Atkinson, Ex parte, Brooksbank, In re, 9 L. R., Eq. 736; 39 L. J., Bk. 10; 22 L. T. 279; 18 W. R. 598.

A deed, by which a debtor residing within the jurisdiction of the Leeds District Court conveyed all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, was executed and duly registered, in 1869, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 194. By virtue of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 130, and of the orders and general rules made thereon, the jurisdiction of the Leeds District Court over trust deeds was transferred to the Bradford County Court :—Held, that (whether this was a "legal proceeding pending in bankruptcy," under s. 20 of the Bankruptcy Repeal and Insolvent Court Act, or not) the Bradford County Court had jurisdiction over the deed. Id.

The jurisdiction given to the Court of Bankruptcy by the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 197, applies to the case of a deed registered under s. 194, as well as to a deed registered under s. 192. Clough, Ex parte, Ingham, In re, 41 L. J., Bk. 45; 25 L. T. 646; 20 W. R. 105—L. J.

— Extended by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71.—The Bankruptcy Court, under the Act of 1869, has over deeds of arrangement and composition registered under s. 192 of the Act of 1861, not only all the jurisdiction which the Act of 1861 gave to the court over such deeds but also all the larger and more extensive jurisdiction which s. 72 of the Act of 1869 has given to the court over bankruptcies. Rumbold, Ex parte, Taylor, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 842; 40 L. J., Bk. 82; 25 L. T. 253; 19 W. R. 1102.

Jurisdiction of Court of Chancery.—The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in the administration of creditors' deeds is not excluded by the Bankruptcy Act, 1861; but the Court of Chancery will not exercise its jurisdiction except where the Court of Bankruptcy is unable to give adequate relief. Stone v. Thomas, 5 L. R., Ch. 219; 39 L. J., Ch. 168; 22 L. T. 359; 18 W. R. 385.

A creditor filed a bill against the trustees of a creditors' deed, alleging that one of the trustees had purchased some of the property at an under-value, and praying that the sale might be set aside, and the trusts of the deed administered by the court:—Held, that this was not a sufficient ground for the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Id.

A debtor, by a deed registered in bankruptcy, covenanted when required to assign his estate to inspectors, to be administered as in bankruptcy. He afterwards became bankrupt. The inspectors filed a bill against the assignees in bankruptcy and a mortgagee of the debtor, claiming the balance in the hands of the mortgagee:—Held, that the Court of Chancery would not exercise its jurisdiction between the inspectors and the assignee, as both were subject to the Court of Bankruptcy. Phillips v. Furber, 5 L. R., Ch. 746; 22 L. T. 707; 18 W. R. 985.

— To Appoint new Assignee.—When proceedings in bankruptcy have been suspended by a resolution of the creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 110, and an assignee has been appointed by them to wind up the estate out of court, such assignee is a trustee within the meaning of the trustee acts, notwithstanding the absence of a trust deed. Therefore, when an assignee so appointed had died before the winding-up was completed, the court appointed a successor on a petition supported by a statutory majority of the creditors entitled to the benefit of the trusts. Raphael, In re, 9 L. R., Eq. 233; 39 L. J., Ch. 200; 18 W. R. 247.

— As between Trustee and Stranger to Bankruptcy.—Although under the provisions of the acts of parliament relating to bankruptcy in cases of registered arrangement deeds the Court of Bankruptcy is armed with powers, both legal and equitable, ample enough to do complete justice, the jurisdiction of a court of equity is not thereby ousted, as between the trustee of a deed of arrangement and a third person who is a stranger to the bankruptcy. Ellis v. Silber,

— As between Trustee and Sole Creditor.—The plaintiffs brought an action against the trustee of a composition deed, registered in bankruptcy, to compel him to sue for some of their debtor's estate, outstanding in Trinidad. The plaintiffs were the only creditors interested under the deed. They relied upon this: that the deed contained clauses which, since it was executed, had been decided to be invalid. The defendant objected to the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had not the exclusive jurisdiction; and a motion to stay the action, and transfer the matters to that court, was therefore refused, with costs. Jenney v. Bell, 2 Ch. D. 547; 45 L. J., Ch. 369; 34 L. T. 485; 24 W. R. 550.

— Under Companies Act, 1863, s. 115.—A contributory, on being examined under the Companies Act, 1862, s. 115, objected to answer questions aimed at impeaching a composition deed executed by him, on the ground that the Court of Bankruptcy was the proper forum in which proceedings of that nature should be taken:—Held, that he must answer the questions, one of the objects of that section being to enable a liquidator to ascertain whether he ought or ought not to take proceedings elsewhere. London Gas Meter Company, In re, Webber, Ex parte, 41 L. J., Ch. 145; 20 W. R. 394—L. J.

Deed executed in District Court.—The proper jurisdiction to deal with a trust deed executed under proceedings in a district court of bankruptcy, and afterwards duly registered in London, is the district court. Cox, Ex parte, 31 L. J., Bk. 49; 8 Jur., N. S. 733; 6 L. T. 672; 10 W. R. 744.

To order Payment of Costs.—The Court of Bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to order the trustees of a deed to pay the costs of a petitioning creditor who has obtained an adjudication subsequently to the execution of the deed, but in respect of which further proceedings have been stayed, upon the deed being duly registered. Jones, Ex parte, 10 Jur., N. S. 812; 10 L. T. 804; 12 W. R. 1094.

The Court of Bankruptcy has no power to order payment to the trustees of the costs and expenses incurred in reference to carrying out the trusts of a deed of assignment, which proves to be inoperative by reason of the want of the necessary assents by creditors. Cumber, In re. 10 L. T. 387; 12 W. R. 767.

To direct Examination of Trustee.—A commissioner has power, either under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 136, or irrespectively of that section, by virtue of his authority over a trustee appointed by a trust deed, to direct the trustee to be examined as to his dealings with the debtor's estate; and although it will be a good practice not to direct such examination without some ground being shewn for it, the court will not in general entertain an appeal as to the sufficiency of such ground. Lawrence, Ex parte. 1 De G. J. & S. 307; 32 L. J., Bk. 61; 9 Jur., N. S. 835; 8 L. T. 407; 11 W. R. 705.

To order Production of Securities.]—When a composition deed, not containing any assignment of property, has been duly registered, the Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction, in the course of an examination of one of the creditors by another, to order the former creditor to produce a mortgage deed which he holds as security from the debtor. Marks, In re, 1 L. R., Ch. 429; 35 L. J., Bk. 22; 12 Jur., N. S. 737; 14 W. R. 824.

XX. EFFECT OF BANKRUPTCY AND LIQUIDATION.

1. ON EXECUTIONS.

a. Under Statutes prior to the Bankruptcy Act, 1869.

i. Executions founded on Warrants of Attorney or Cognovits.

Under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106.]—A trader is not to be deemed unable to meet his engagements within the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 135, if his assets exceed the amount of his liabilities, even although it does not appear that he could have immediately realised the amount. Loader v. Hiscock, 1 F. & F. 132.

A warrant of attorney given to a retiring partner, contemporaneously with the deed of dissolution, to secure him payment of the capital he had brought into the business, is not given for an antecedent debt or demand within 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 135. Ib.

A judgment and execution on a cognovit, not filed according to 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, are not absolutely void, but only inoperative against the assignees of a bankrupt. Green v. Gray, 1 D. P. C. 350.

When judgment was signed, within twenty-one days, upon a warrant of attorney given by a bankrupt, which had been filed within twenty-one days after its execution, but without any affidavit ever being filed, attesting that the warrant was filed within twenty-one days after the execution of it—Held, that the judgment and execution issued thereon were void as against the assignees. Acraman v. Herniman, 16 Q. B. 998; 20 L. J., Q. B. 355; 15 Jur. 1008.

Where, upon taking a guarantee for repayment of advances to one of their customers, certain bankers also took from their principal debtor a warrant of attorney to cover the debt, and at the same time agreed with the guarantor that they would at any time, at his request, enter up judgment and levy execution on the warrant of attorney against the principal debtor; but by their neglect to file the warrant of attorney, or a true copy thereof, the warrant of attorney became void:—Held, that this neglect on the part of the bankers operated as a discharge to the surety. Watson v. Aloock, 4 De G., Mac. & G. 247; 22 L. J., Ch. 858; 17 Jur. 568. See Parker v. Watson, 8 Ex. 404; 22 L. J., Ex. 167.

D., being possessed of 299*l.*, lent it to W., whom she was about to marry. He, as a security for the loan, gave to her and S. a warrant of attorney, in 1837, to confess judgment for 600*l.* By the defeasance, which stated that the loan was made in contemplation of marriage, W. was to hold the money as long as D. and S. should please, paying interest to S. for her, and, on her request, S. might on a week's notice require payment of the principal, judgment was to be entered up.

tered up forthwith, and execution was to issue in default of payment after notice. The marriage took place, judgment was entered up, and in 1845 S., at the wife's request, gave a week's notice demanding payment, and as it was not paid issued execution, and levied on W.'s goods. W. in a few days afterwards became bankrupt, and his assignee applied to set aside the judgment and execution, on the grounds, first, that the execution was irregular, the judgment not having been revived by scire facias, and being more than a year old; and secondly, that the marriage between D. and W. had discharged the judgment. The court refused the application. Dolling v. White, 1 B. C. C. 170; 22 L. J., Q. B., 327; 17 Jur. 505.

A judgment on a warrant of attorney, duly entered up more than a year before the bankruptcy of the debtor, and registered before such bankruptcy, constitutes a lien, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, upon the real estate of the bankrupt debtor within the meaning of the exception in the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 184. Boyle, Ex parte, 22 L. J., Bk. 78; 17 Jur. 979.

Under previous Statutes.]—A warrant of attorney which was not filed within the twenty-one days prescribed by 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, was void against the assignees in bankruptcy, although judgment was signed and execution issued on it before the commission of the act of bankruptcy. Bittleston v. Cooper, 14 M. & W. 399.

Or although the petitioning creditor's debt upon which the fiat was founded did not exist at the time of the execution of the warrant of attorney, or within the twenty-one days. Everett v. Wells, 2 Scott, N. R. 525; 9 D. P. C. 424; 2 M. & G. 269.

Where a party taking a cognovit neglects to file it within twenty-one days, it cannot in any case be made available in the event of the subsequent bankruptcy of the party giving it; and even when the judgment has been entered up, execution issued, and seizure and sale effected long before the act of bankruptcy of such party, and no fraud is suggested. Biffin v. York, 5 Scott, N. R.; 5 M. & G. 428; 12 L. J., C. P. 162. 7 Jur. 259.

Trover would lie against a sheriff, who, having seized goods after an act of bankruptcy under a fi. fa. issued on a judgment founded on a warrant of attorney, sold the goods after the fiat. Heston v. Gibbs, 12 M. & W. 111; 1 D. & L. 420; 13 L. J., Ex. 53.

The 1 Will. 4, c. 7, s. 7, exempting judgments on cognovit, and by default, confession, or nil dicit, in any action commenced adversely and without collusion, from the operation of s. 108 of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, did not extend to a judgment on a warrant of attorney, though given without collusion or fraudulent preference; and a sheriff having seized and sold the goods on an execution issued upon such judgment, and paying over the proceeds after notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by the defendant, was answerable to the assignees for money had and received. Crossfield v. Stanley, 4 B. & Ad. 87; 1 N. & M. 668.

Judgment was entered up on a warrant of attorney given by two joint traders: and a fi. fa. issued, returnable on the 2nd May. On the 1st of that month, the sheriff's officer received from the defendants the money directed to be levied. On the 2nd of May one of them committed an act of bankruptcy, and the other on the 5th. On the 11th, a commission of bankruptcy issued; and on the 19th the sheriff paid over the money to the execution creditor. In an action by the assignees—Held, that the creditor was entitled to retain it, not being a creditor having a security at the time of the bankruptcy. Morland v. Pellatt, 8 B. & C. 722; 2 M. & R. 411.

A plaintiff in execution, upon a judgment by confession, ceased to be a creditor having security for his debt, within the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108, when the goods seized under that execution were sold, even though an act of bankruptcy was committed before the return of the writ. Higgins v. McAdam, 3 Y. & J. 1.

A warrant of attorney was given to secure a debt in 1819, judgment was entered up, a fi. fa. issued, and goods seized, which were assigned over to the plaintiff in 1825, about a fortnight previously to bankruptcy.—Held, that the assignees were not authorized by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108, in taking possession of the goods seized in execution. Wymer v. Komble, 6 B. & C. 479; 9 D. & R. 511.

A creditor on a judgment founded upon a warrant of attorney issued execution thereon, and seized and sold the goods of the debtor under a fi. fa., without notice of any act of bankruptcy committed. On the day after the sale, a fiat issued against the debtor.—Held, that the assignees were not entitled to recover from the creditor the proceeds of the sale, inasmuch as at the time of the fiat he was not a creditor of the bankrupt, within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108. Ramsey v. Eaton, 10 M. & W. 22.

An execution on a judgment founded on a warrant of attorney, to be good, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108, against a fiat, must be so executed that the execution creditor has ceased to be a creditor of the bankrupt holding a security for his debt: the sale under the execution must, therefore, be complete before fiat. Ward v. Dalton, 7 C. B. 643; 18 L. J., C. P. 236; 13 Jur. 734.

Assignees of a bankrupt were entitled to recover goods bona fide seized by an execution creditor under a fi. fa. on a judgment upon a warrant of attorney after a secret act of bankruptcy, but not sold until after the date and issuing of the fiat, and notice thereof; and the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, did not protect such an execution. Skey v. Carter, 11 M. & W. 571; 2 D. N. S. 831; 5 Scott, N. R. 877, n.; 12 L. J. Ex. 511; 7 Jur. 427—Ex. Ch.; S. P., Whitmore v. Robinson or Robertson, 1 D. N. S. 135; 8 M. & W. 463; 6 Jur. 1088; Lackington v. McLachlan, 5 Scott, N. R. 874.

If a sheriff seized goods under a fi. fa. upon a judgment founded upon a warrant of attorney, such writ became void by the issuing of a fiat against the debtor before the sale. Graham v. Lynes, 7 Q. B. 491; 14 L. J., Q. B. 290; 9 Jur. 1104; Goldschmidt v. Hamlet, 6 M. & G. 187; 6 Scott, N. R. 962; 1 D. & L. 801; Congreve v. Everts, 10 Ex. 298.

An execution founded on a warrant of attorney, and complete by sale prior to the fiat, was protected by 2 and 3 Vict. c. 29, notwithstanding the creditor before the sale had notice of an act of bankruptcy. Whitmore v. Greene, 2 D. & L. 174; 14 M. & W. 104; 13 L. J., Ex. 811; 8 Jur. 697.

If an execution creditor would allege, against the claim of assignees, that his judgment was signed under a warrant of attorney in an action commenced adversely, and was, therefore, protected by 1 Will. 4, c. 7, s. 7, the onus of proving the action so commenced was on such creditor. Linnit v. Chaffers, 4 Q. B. 762; D. & M. 14; 12 L. J., Q. B. 867.

ii. Executions founded on Judges' Orders.

Under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 137.]—This section does not avoid a judge's order not filed pursuant to its direction, as against the trader himself, but only as against his assignees, if he afterwards should become bankrupt. Bryan v. Child, 5 Ex. 368; 1 L., M. & P. 429; 19 L. J., Ex. 264; 14 Jur. 510.

A. having commenced an action for a debt against B., a trader, B. proposed that a judge's order should be made for a stay of proceedings upon payment of debt and costs, and sent to A. a summons for that purpose, upon which a consent was indorsed by A. A judge's order was thereupon made at the instance of B., directing proceedings to be stayed on payment of debt and costs, in default of payment, judgment to be signed and execution to issue. B. served a copy of this order on A. Neither the original order, nor any copy of it, was filed with the clerk of the dockets and judgments in the Queen's Bench, as directed by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 137. Judgment was signed, and execution taken out, under the order; and the sheriff paid to A., from the proceeds of the sale of goods of B., the debt and costs for which execution had issued. After the execution and payment B. became bankrupt.—Held, that under 12 and 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 137, the order, judgment and execution were void as against B.'s assignees, the order not having been filed; and that the assignees might recover from A. the amount paid him under the execution, as money received to their use as assignees. Farrow v. Mayes, 18 Q. B. 516; 17 Jur. 132.

A., a trader, gave B. a judge's order for payment of a debt and costs to be taxed. The costs were duly taxed, and the debt and costs paid; and afterwards, and within twenty-one days from the date of the order, B. caused it to be filed.—Held, that he had a right to do so. Dimmack v. Bowley, 2 C. B., N. S. 542; 26 L. J., C. P. 231; 3 Jur., N. S. 1059.

Under previous Statutes.]—An execution issued upon a judge's order was an execution obtained by confession within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108. Andrews v. Deeks or Diggs, 4 Ex. 827; 20 L. J., Ex. 127.

A defendant sued adversely consented to a judge's order, to pay debt and costs forthwith, upon which judgment was entered up, and a fi. fa. issued on the 9th February, under which the sheriff seized the goods, at two o'clock of the same day. At three o'clock of the same day, a declaration of the defendant's insolvency was filed, pursuant to 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 6. A fiat issued on the 10th February, and notice was given on that day to the sheriff. The defendant was adjudged a bankrupt, and assignees were appointed on the 25th February.—Held, that the judgment was a judgment by nil dicit, and the execution a valid execution protected by 1 Will. 4, c. 7, s. 7. Bell v. Bidgood, 1 C. B. 763; 7 D. & L. 260; 19 L. J., C. P. 16.

seizure and execution. —The words "bona fide executed and levied," in 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, meant bona fides on the part of the execution creditor and sheriff. Belcher v. Magway, 12 M. & W. 108; 1 D. & L. 441; 13 L. J., Ex. 49; 7 Jur. 1100.

Seizure and Sale. —A sheriff being in possession of the goods of T. under a f. fa. on the evening of Saturday, the 20th December, executed a bill of sale of the goods seized to L., the execution creditor, containing a clause of indemnity by L. to the sheriff. T. had previously committed an act of bankruptcy, upon which he was afterwards made a bankrupt. Notice of this act of bankruptcy was sent to L.'s residence, but in consequence of his absence from home was not received by him until Saturday. L. did not execute the bill of sale until Monday, the 22nd, when the goods were delivered to him. —Held, that the property passed upon the execution of the bill of sale by the sheriff, and that the execution was therefore executed and levied by seizure and sale within 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 133. Christie v. Winstington, 6 Ex. 287; 22 L. J., Ex. 212.

A seizure of a trader's goods under an execution commenced adversely, gives the creditor no priority in case such trader is made bankrupt upon a petition for adjudication filed before the sale of the goods, whether the act of bankruptcy is before or after the seizure. Hutton v. Cooper, 2 L. M. & P. 104; 6 Ex. 159, 20 L. J., Ex. 153.

Goods seized by a sheriff under a f. fa. were valued and delivered to the execution creditor, upon a bona fide purchase by him; but no bill of sale was executed:—Held, that there was a valid sale of the goods. Herniman v. Beecher, 11 Ex. 760.

An execution is bona fide completed by sale if there is a bill of sale to the execution creditor for the full value, and the amount is actually paid over. Lander v. Husock, 1 F. & F. 132.

Where a debtor commits an act of bankruptcy after his goods are seized by a sheriff under a f. fa., the execution is not valid as against the assignees, unless it has been perfected by sale of the goods before the filing of the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy. Young v. Reebuck, 2 H. & C. 297, 32 L. J., Ex. 260; 8 L. T. 453.

Where, after the seizure of goods by the sheriff, the sale has been delayed by an interpleader order, and the debtor is adjudicated bankrupt upon his own petition in the interval between the seizure and the sale, the assignee of the bankrupt's estate is entitled as against the execution creditor to the proceeds of the sale, on the ground that the seizure has not been perfected by sale before adjudication. O'Brien v. Bradie, 1 L. R., Ex. 302; 35 L. J., Ex. 188, 12 Jur., N. S. 527; 14 L. T. 559, 14 W. R. 840.

An order for the protection of the property of a trader, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 211, did not operate to disentitle a judgment creditor to the benefit of a f. fa. levied by seizure of the goods of the trader before the presentation of the petition. Bottomley v. Heywood, 7 H. & N. 663; 31 L. J., Ex. 500; 8 Jur., N. S. 1156; 7 L. T. 44; 10 W. R. 780.

Notice of Act of Bankruptcy. —An execution seizure, but before sale, committed an act of bankruptcy, of which the creditor had notice. —Held, that the words notice of any prior act of bankruptcy, in 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 133, have reference only to acts of bankruptcy committed prior to the seizure, and not to acts of bankruptcy subsequent thereto; and that, consequently, the creditor was entitled to the benefit of his execution. Edwards v. Sherebrook, 3 B. & S. 280; 32 L. J., Q. B. 46; 9 Jur., N. S. 527; 7 L. T. 275; 11 W. R. 83. Affirmed, 9 Jur., N. S. 201—Ex. Ch.

The sheriff having seized, notice was given of a prior act of bankruptcy by the debtor, and a petition was filed, under which he was adjudicated bankrupt; the goods remained unsold, and the messenger took possession of them:—Held, that the sheriff was not entitled to a rule calling upon the assignees to pay him the expenses of preparing for a sale of the goods. Shorie v. Blaine, 14 C. B., N. S. 356.

Before the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 133. —On the 22nd November, 1842, a f. fa. issued upon a judgment obtained against A., the partner of B., and on the same day was lodged with the sheriff. On the following day the officer entered under a warrant granted thereon, and seized the whole of the partnership effects. On the 2nd December another f. fa. issued upon a judgment against A. and B., directed to the same sheriff, who thereupon granted a warrant to different officers: no actual seizure was made under this second writ. On the 7th December each of the partners committed an act of bankruptcy; on the 9th a fiat issued against them, under which they were duly declared bankrupts. The sheriff afterwards sold the whole of the partnership effects, in satisfaction of the two writs:—Held, that the sheriff was not justified in selling any part of the goods to satisfy the second writ, such writ not having been served or levied by seizure upon the property of the bankrupts before the issuing of the fiat, within 6 Geo. 4. c. 16, s. 108. Johnson v. Evans, 7 M. & G. 240; 7 Scott, N. R. 1036, 1 D. & L. 928; 13 L. J., C. P. 117.

A trader on the 15th of August, 1842, committed an act of bankruptcy, by assigning all his property for the benefit of creditors to trustees, of whom the plaintiff was one; and on the same day, but before such assignment, a seizure of a portion of the trader's goods was made by the sheriff, under an execution at the suit of a bona fide hostile creditor. On the 17th of August, the sheriff assigned to his creditor the goods so seized, in satisfaction of his execution. The plaintiff who was also a creditor of the bankrupt, paid off the judgment creditor, and took an assignment of these goods on the 12th of October. A fiat was issued against the trader on the 25th of January, 1843, at which time it was found by the jury, that the goods remained in the possession, order and disposition of the bankrupt:—Held, that, as the seizure was made under the execution before the act of bankruptcy, and the title of the judgment creditor would, therefore, have been good as against the assignees, even supposing he had notice of such act of bankruptcy, the plaintiff who took the assignment from him, with notice of the act of bankruptcy, had also a title as against them. Forrest v.

ment.]—After a writ of fi. fa. had been issued against a non-trader and lodged with the sheriff, but before any levy had been made, an arrangement (which the court held to be fraudulent) was, with the knowledge of the under-sheriff, made between the debtor and H., an auctioneer, that H. should, after a levy had been made, purchase goods of the debtor sufficient to satisfy the amount to be levied, and that he and the debtor should at once select the goods which H. was to purchase. H. knew that the debtor was about to file a liquidation petition. On the 19th of March the goods were selected, and were pointed out to B., a clerk of the under-sheriff, who took a list of them, which he handed to the under-sheriff. On the 20th of March B. seized the goods and put a man in possession. Shortly afterwards the debtor filed a liquidation petition, but, before notice of the petition had been served on the under-sheriff, he had sent to H., telling him that the seizure had been made, and that the selected goods were his property, and asking him to send a cheque for the amount of the levy. Later in the same day the under-sheriff gave up possession of the goods to a receiver who had been appointed under the petition, under the mistaken impression that the debtor was a trader. The next day H. sent a cheque for the amount of the levy to the under-sheriff, and out of the proceeds the execution debt was paid. A trustee having been appointed under the petition, H. applied to the court for an order that the trustee should deliver up the selected goods to him, or pay him the amount which they had produced. The trustee had sold them for double what H. had paid:—Held, that the goods had never become the property of H., and that, although, by virtue of the seizure before the filing of the petition, the execution creditor had acquired a security for his debt on the debtor's property, yet H., who had chosen to enter into a fraudulent arrangement with the debtor with knowledge that he was about to commit an act of bankruptcy, had no equity to be allowed to stand in the place of the execution creditor, notwithstanding the fact that, by paying the execution debt, he had relieved the debtor's estate from the necessity of paying it. Hall, Ex parte, Townsend, In re, 14 Ch. D. 132; 42 L. T. 162; 28 W. R. 556—C. A.

Seizure after Act of Bankruptcy.]—Filing a petition for liquidation by arrangement is an act of bankruptcy available for adjudication; and the title of the trustee relates back in the same manner as the title of a trustee under a bankruptcy. And, therefore, where a petition for liquidation by arrangement had been filed by a debtor before seizure of his goods under an execution, and notice of the filing was given to the solicitors of the execution creditor before sale, and the goods were afterwards sold by the sheriff to the solicitors, who were restrained by injunction from removing them:—Held, that the goods must be delivered up to the trustee who had been appointed. Dwigan, Ex parte, Bissell, In re, 11 L. R., Eq. 604; 40 L. J., Bk. 33; 24 L. T. 237; 19 W. R. 711. Affirmed, 6 L. R., Ch. 605; 40 L. J., Bk. 68; 25 L. T. 286; 19 W. R. 1127.

A warrant of fi. fa., on a county court judgment, was delivered to the bailiff of a county court to be executed. Later on the same day the debtor filed a petition for liquidation, and a receiver was appointed. The bailiff, on coming to the debtor's house to execute the warrant, found the receiver in possession:—Held, that the trustee under the liquidation was entitled to the goods as against the execution creditor; for that under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 12, goods are not, as against a trustee in bankruptcy, bound by a fi. fa. from the delivery of the writ to the sheriff, but a seizure of them before the act of bankruptcy is necessary. Williams, Ex parte, Davies, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 314; 41 L. J., Bk. 38; 26 L. T. 303; 20 W. R. 430.

ii. Fieri Facias against Goods of Traders for Sums exceeding 50l.

a. Who is a Trader.

In order that the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 87, may be applicable, it is not necessary that the debtor should have been adjudicated bankrupt as a trader, but only that he should be in fact a trader. Revell v. Blake, 8 L. R., C. P. 533; 42 L. J., C. P. 165; 29 L. T. 67; 22 W. R. 96—Ex. Ch.

After the sheriff, under a fi. fa., had seized the goods of a debtor, they were claimed by M. under a bill of sale. On the application of the sheriff the court made an interpleader order. The debtor then filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement, describing himself as a cashier, and a trustee was subsequently appointed. Afterwards M. abandoned his claim, and the sheriff sold the goods, and the judgment creditor claimed the proceeds of the sale, but the trustee having proved that the debtor was a share-broker, and therefore a trader, the court ordered the balance of the proceeds of the sale to be paid to him:—Held, that it was competent for the trustee to prove the debtor a trader; and consequently that, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 87, the trustee, and not the execution creditor, was the person entitled to receive the balance of the moneys arising from the sale of the debtor's goods. Ross, Ex parte, Hare, In re, 28 L. T. 450; 21 W. R. 560.

Dissolution of Partnership—Appointment of Receiver.]—E. and F. being in partnership as wine merchants, F. brought an action in the Chancery Division for a dissolution of the partnership, and an order was made by the court for a dissolution and the appointment of a receiver, under which a receiver took possession of the partnership effects and carried on the business, F. ceasing to take any part in the business, and having no other occupation than that of book-keeper to a trading company. An action having been commenced against E. and F. upon bills accepted by the firm before the receiver took possession, judgment was signed against F. and his separate property taken in execution for a sum exceeding 50l.:—Held, that F. was not at the time of the execution a "trader" within the meaning of s. 87 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71. Dave v. Vergara, 11 Q. B. D. 241; 49 L. T. 41; 47 J. P. 583.

(B) What is an Execution for a Sum exceeding 50l.

Expenses of Execution.]—Judgment having been entered up against a trader for 48l. 19s., the sheriff levied and sold goods of the debtor to

Fearne, 6 Q. B. 20; 13 L. J., Q. B. 30; 8 Jur. 645.

The court would not set aside an execution issued upon a judgment obtained by default, confession, or nil dicit, and served and levied by seizure upon the property of a bankrupt before his bankruptcy: the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108, not rendering the execution in such case void, but merely enacting that the plaintiff in such execution should share rateably with the other creditors. Taylor v. Taylor, 5 B. & C. 392; 8 D. & R. 159.

iv. Proceedings by Assignees.

Before the 13 & 13 Vict. c. 106.—If a sheriff took goods of a bankrupt in execution, after the act of bankruptcy and before the commission issued, and sold them after the commission, trover lay against him. Cooper v. Chitty, 1 W. Bl. 65; 1 Burr. 20.

If a creditor accompanied the sheriff's officer in levying an execution, which was afterwards avoided by a commission of bankruptcy, trover might be maintained against him by the assignees, though he had never received the goods or their value from the sheriff. Menham v. Edmondson, 1 B. & P. 369.

A sheriff seized the goods of a debtor under a fi. fa., and sold and delivered them to the judgment creditor, in satisfaction of the debt, after a secret act of bankruptcy committed by the debtor, but before the commission:—Held, that the seizure and sale of the goods were a wrongful conversion, for which the sheriff was liable in trover at the suit of the assignees subsequently chosen. Balme v. Hutton, 3 M. & Scott, 1; 9 Bing. 471; 1 C. & M. 262; 2 Tyr. 620; reversing S. C. 2 Tyr. 17; 2 C. & J. 19; 2 Y. & J. 101.

A sheriff who after an act of bankruptcy committed by a defendant, but without notice to the sheriff of such an act of bankruptcy, and before the issuing of a commission against the defendant, seized and sold the goods of the defendant under a fi. fa., was liable in trover to the assignees. Garland v. Carlisle, 3 M. & W. 152; 4 Bing. N. C. 7; 5 Scott, 587; 9 Bligh, N. S. 421.

An action for money had and received lay by the assignees of a bankrupt against a creditor who had levied his debt by fi. fa., subsequently to the act of bankruptcy. Hitchin v. Campbell, 2 W. Bl. 827; 3 Wils. 304; Lofft, 208.

Where a creditor obtained judgment by nil dicit against a trader, and thereupon issued a fi. fa., under which the sheriff seized the goods of the trader, who afterwards, and before the goods were sold, committed an act of bankruptcy, upon which a commission issued, and he was duly declared a bankrupt, of which the sheriff had notice, but nevertheless sold the goods, and paid over the proceeds to the execution creditor:—Held, that he was not justified in paying over the money, and was liable to be sued for it by the assignees, in an action for money had and received. Notley v. Buck, 2 M. & R. 68; 6 B. & C. 160.

An execution having issued against a trader, his goods were seized and sold under it, after he had committed an act of bankruptcy. The assignees brought trover:—Held, that the jury in assessing the damages might deduct the expenses of the sale from the proceeds of the goods. Clarke v. Nicholson, 1 C., M. & R. 724; 5 Tyr. 233.

On the 4th March the sheriff entered upon the premises of B., under a fi. fa. in his hands at the suit of the defendant, an execution creditor. When the sheriff entered, all the goods of B. were in possession of an officer of the Mayor's Court, London, who had taken them in execution at the suit of L.; and the goods were also under a distress put in by the landlord for rent. On the 9th March a fiat issued against B. On the 6th April the landlord sold all the goods, paid himself and L., and paid the surplus into court, to abide the event of an issue directed to be tried between the assignees of B. and the defendant:—Held, that the assignees could not impeach the title of the defendant by setting up the claims of the landlord, or of L. Belche v. Patten, 6 C. B. 608; 6 D. & L. 370; 18 L. J., C. P. 69; 12 Jur. 1028.

i. Fieri Facias against Goods of Non-Traders or of Traders for Sums not exceeding 50l.

Seizure before Act of Bankruptcy.—An execution creditor for a sum less than 50l., who has seized the goods of a bankrupt before the committing of an act of bankruptcy, is entitled to the proceeds of them as against the trustee, although the adjudication is prior to the sale. Slater v. Pinder, 7 L. R., Ex. 95; 41 L. J., Ex. 66; 26 L. T. 492; 20 W. R. 441—Ex. Ch. Affirming 6 L. R., Ex. 228; 40 L. J., Ex. 146; 24 L. T. 631; 19 W. R. 778.

An execution creditor who has seized the goods of his debtor before the latter has committed an act of bankruptcy is entitled to the proceeds of them as against the trustee. Bailey, Ex parte, Jecks, In re, 13 L. R., Eq. 314; 41 L. J., Bk. 1; 25 L. T. 918; 20 W. R. 76.

Therefore where goods of a non-trading debtor were seized on the 18th of February, and the debtor filed a petition for liquidation on the 22nd of February:—Held, that the execution creditor was entitled to the proceeds of the execution. Ib.

After the sheriff had seized the goods of a debtor, the debtor presented to the county court a petition for liquidation by arrangement, thereby committing an act of bankruptcy, and on the same day obtained an injunction restraining the sheriff from proceeding to a sale. The sheriff, however, sold the goods, and paid the balance of the proceeds of the sale into the county court:—Held, that the execution creditor, and not the trustee, was entitled to the money in court. Rocke, Ex parte, Hall, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 795; 40 L. J., Bk. 70; 25 L. T. 287; 19 W. R. 1129.

After execution levied on the goods of a debtor, a petition for liquidation was filed by the debtor, and notice served on the bailiff. On the day appointed for the sale an order of the court was obtained for the appointment of a receiver, and an injunction was granted to restrain further proceedings under the execution. Subsequently, a trustee was appointed:—Held, that the goods seized were the property of the trustee, and that the execution creditors were not entitled to be paid their debt out of the proceeds of the sale. Veness, Ex parte, Gwynn, In re, 10 L. R., Eq. 419; 39 L. J., Bk. 23; 25 L. T. 311; 18 W. R. 979. But see preceding cases.

— Levy avoided by Fraudulent Arrange-by abandoning so much of his judgment debt as might be necessary to keep the total amount for which the goods were sold under 50*l.*, avoid the operation of s. 87 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and that, therefore, the execution creditor and not the trustee in liquidation was entitled to the proceeds of the execution. Turner v. Bridgett, 8 Q. B. D. 392; 51 L. J., Q. B. 374; 30 W. R. 586; 46 J. P. 343.

γ. Who Entitled to Proceeds.

When no prior Act of Bankruptcy, and no notice within the 14 days.—An execution levied by seizure and sale of a trader's goods for a debt exceeding 50*l.*, although an act of bankruptcy, is not for that reason necessarily a void proceeding; and if the execution creditor had no notice of a prior act of bankruptcy, and no notice of a petition for adjudication is given to the sheriff under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 87, within fourteen days after the sale, the execution creditor is entitled to the proceeds of the sale notwithstanding a supervening bankruptcy. Villars, Ex parte, Rogers, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 432; 43 L. J., Bk. 76; 30 L. T. 348; 22 W. R. 603. Reversing 30 L. T. 104; 22 W. R. 397.

The sheriff may make a valid sale by private contract of goods seized under an execution, to the execution creditor. Ib.

If the sheriff sells goods seized under the same writ on different days, all the sales will be considered as one transaction. Ib.

An execution in respect of a judgment for a sum exceeding 50*l.* levied by seizure and sale of the goods of a trader debtor cannot be protected by s. 95, sub-s. 3, since such an execution is itself an act of bankruptcy by s. 6, sub-s. 5; and the execution creditor, therefore, has notice of an act of bankruptcy within s. 95, sub-s. 3. Keys, Ex parte, Skinner, In re, 10 L. R., Eq. 432; 39 L. J., Bk. 28; 18 W. R. 918. But see preceding case.

A sheriff seized a trader's goods in an execution in respect of a judgment for a sum exceeding 50*l.*, sold them, and retained the proceeds. Within fourteen days after, the debtor filed a petition for liquidation, and notice thereof was served on the sheriff. A trustee was not appointed within fourteen days:—Held, that the execution was not protected by s. 95, sub-s. 3; that the petition for liquidation had the same effect as a petition in bankruptcy, so far as to bring the case within s. 87; and that the sheriff must retain the proceeds till a trustee in liquidation should be appointed, and pay them, under that section, to the trustee when appointed. Ib.

Petition before Sale.—The sheriff seized in execution, under a judgment for more than 50*l.*, goods of a trader. Before sale, and whilst the sheriff was in possession, the debtor presented a petition for liquidation by arrangement, and the trustee appointed under the liquidation obtained an order restraining further proceedings in the execution:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to the goods as part of the debtor's estate, and that the sheriff must give up possession to him. Rayner, Ex parte, Johnson, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 325; 41 L. J., Bk. 26; 26 L. T. 306; 20 W. R. 456. Affirming 26 L. T. 205; 20 W. R. 397.

In the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 95, sub-s. 3, "act of bankruptcy" means an act of bankruptcy which has been committed at the time of seizure.

Therefore, when a petition for liquidation is presented after the goods of the debtor, a non-trader, are seized in execution, and the sale takes place before the appointment of a trustee, and no act of bankruptcy has been committed before the seizure, the execution creditor is entitled to the proceeds. Ib.

Sale suspended by Interpleader.—Where an execution for a sum exceeding 50*l.* is levied by seizure of the goods of a trader, but the sale is suspended by an interpleader order, and before sale a liquidation petition is filed by the execution debtor, the case comes within the 87th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and the execution creditor is deprived of the benefit of his execution. Halling, Ex parte, Haydon, In re, 7 Ch. D. 167; 47 L. J., Bk. 25; 37 L. T. 809; 26 W. R. 182—C. A.

A judgment creditor issued execution on the goods of a trader for a debt above 50*l.* A prior claim was put in by a bill of sale holder, and on an interpleader summons taken out by the sheriff, the judge made an order, after payment of costs, to pay the amount of the debt of the bill of sale holder into court, and to pay the balance to the execution creditor. Before sale the debtor filed his petition for liquidation. The execution creditor claimed the goods, as against the trustee, under the judge's order:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to the goods, subject to the claim of the holder of the bill of sale. Ib.

Sale delayed by Injunction.—When the goods of a trader have been seized under an execution, and the sheriff is prevented from selling by an injunction granted in liquidation proceedings which afterwards prove abortive, and the debtor is afterwards adjudicated a bankrupt upon a petition presented within fourteen days after the failure of the liquidation proceedings, the creditor has no right to enforce his execution. Harper, Ex parte, Bremner, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 376; 44 L. J., Bk. 57; 32 L. T. 317; 23 W. R. 433.

Sale by Bailiff before Time fixed by Statute.—An execution levied by seizure upon the goods of a trader under a county court judgment, and sold by the high bailiff by consent of both parties after the commission of an act of bankruptcy of which the execution creditor had notice, and upon which the adjudication subsequently proceeded, but before the expiration of the five days required by the County Courts Act, 1846, s. 106, is not a protected transaction within the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 95. Bulmer, Ex parte, Hughes, In re, 40 L. T. 40.

Sale on two different Days.—Sect. 87 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), enacts that, where the goods of any trader have been taken in execution in respect of a judgment for a sum exceeding 50*l.*, and sold, the sheriff shall retain the proceeds of such sale in his hands for a period of fourteen days, and upon notice being served on him within that period of a bankruptcy petition having been presented against such trader (followed by an adjudication), shall hold the proceeds of such sale, after deducting expenses, on trust to pay the same to the trustee. On the 29th of December, 1882, an execution was issued at the suit of the plaintiff against the defendants, traders, upon a judgment for 87*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* debt and costs, and lodged with the sheriff, who on the same day seized certain goods of the defendants and sold them on the 10th of January, 1883, realizing by that sale 41*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.* On the 12th of January other goods of the defendants which were upon other premises occupied by them were sold under the fi. fa., and realized 74*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* On the 24th of January, 1883, a petition in bankruptcy was presented against the defendants, under which they were adjudicated bankrupts on the 19th of February. The sheriff had notice of the petition on the 25th of January:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to the whole proceeds, as the "sale" contemplated by s. 87 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, was not completed until the 12th of January, within fourteen days from the receipt by the sheriff of notice of the filing of the petition. Jones v. Parcell, 11 Q. B. D. 430; 52 L. J., Q. B. 672; 49 L. T. 197; 47 J. P. 614.

When Proceedings on Petition fail.—Execution for a debt above 50*l.* was levied on the goods of a trader on the 17th of November. On the 18th of November the debtor filed a liquidation petition. On the 22nd of November the sheriff sold, and on the same day notice of the petition was served on him. Upon the 16th of December the creditors met, and separated without passing any resolutions. On the 17th of December the sheriff paid the proceeds of the sale to the execution creditor. On the 19th of December a petition was presented against the debtor, stating the filing of the liquidation petition and the proceedings thereunder, and on the 10th of January an adjudication was made:—Held, that the proceedings under the liquidation petition came to an end on the 16th of December, and that, consequently, the execution creditor was entitled to the proceeds of the sale. James, Ex parte, Condon, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 609; 43 L. J., Bk. 107; 30 L. T. 773; 22 W. R. 937.

On the 23rd of February the execution creditor, upon the authority of a decision of the Court of Appeal, which was afterwards reversed, paid the proceeds of the sale to the trustee under the bankruptcy. —Held, that though this was a voluntary payment made under a mistake of law, yet the trustee, being an officer of the court, was bound to repay the money to the person properly entitled to it. Id.

Prior Execution at Suit of same Party constituting Act of Bankruptcy—Notice.—A creditor issued execution against a trader for a debt above 50*l.* After the goods seized by the sheriff had been sold, the same creditor issued another execution against the debtor for another debt above 50*l.* The goods seized under the second execution were sold, and the money produced by the sale was paid over to the creditor, the sheriff having had no notice within fourteen days from the sale of any bankruptcy petition against the debtor. Afterwards the debtor was adjudicated a bankrupt upon the act of bankruptcy committed by the seizure and sale under the first execution. The money produced by the first sale was not paid to the creditor till after the sale under the second execution:—Held, that, though it was not proved that the creditor had, when the sale took place under the second execution, any actual knowledge that the sale had been made under the first, he must be deemed to have had notice of the proceedings under his own execution, and must therefore refund the money produced by the second execution. Davies, Ex parte, Husband, In re, 19 L. R., Eq. 438; 44 L. J., Bk. 62; 32 L. T. 103; 23 W. R. 384.

Two Executions, one under and one over 50*l.—On the 25th of November a sheriff seized the goods of a trader under a writ of execution for 191*l.*, and on the 16th of December another seizure was made for a debt of 32*l.* On the 30th of December the debtor filed a liquidation petition. At this time the sheriff was in possession, but no sale had been made. On the 22nd of January a trustee was appointed:—Held, that the creditor for the 32*l.* was entitled to proceed to a sale under his execution. Loxering, Ex parte, Peacock, In re, 17 L. R., Eq. 452; 43 L. J., Bk. 58; 29 L. T. 897; 22 W. R. 365.

Payment by Debtor to avoid Seizure or Sale.—The sheriff having seized the goods of a trader under an execution for more than 50*l.*, the debtor, before sale, paid him, on the 18th of November and the 21st of November, two sums of 100*l.* and 32*l.* respectively, on account of the debt. The judgment creditors knew of and assented to the payments. The debtor, on the 24th of November, filed a petition for liquidation, and a restraining order was served on the sheriff, who continued to hold the sums so paid on account. Subsequently, on the 20th of December, trustees were appointed, who claimed the 132*l.*:—Held, that the judgment creditors, having assented to the payments, were entitled to the money as against the trustees. Stock v. Holland 9 L. R., Ex. 147; 43 L. J., Ex. 112; 31 L. T. 121; 22 W. R. 661.

The sheriff having received a writ of execution against a trader for a debt exceeding 50*l.*, the debtor, on the 24th of July, before any levy had been made, paid to the sheriff's officer, a large part of the debt in a bill, a cheque drawn by another person, and bank notes. On the 25th of July the sheriff's officer asked the creditors whether they would accept in part payment what the debtor had given him, and shewed them the bill. They expressed their assent. On the 26th of July (Saturday) the debtor filed a liquidation petition, and a receiver was appointed. On the 28th of July the sheriff's officer, having received the remainder of the debt from another person liable for it, paid the whole to the creditors:—Held, that the transaction was a payment under pressure; and that the creditors were not bound to hand over to the trustee the bill of exchange, the cheque, or the bank notes. Brook, Ex parte, Hassall, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 301; 43 L. J., Bk. 49; 30 L. T. 103; 22 W. R. 395. Reversing 43 L. J., Bk. 35; 29 L. T. 653; 22 W. R. 205.

8. Right of Sheriff to Expenses.

A sheriff's officer seized the goods of a trader debtor under a fi. fa. for more than 50*l.*, and advertised them for sale. Before the sale could take place the debtor filed a petition for liquidation, and the trustee obtained an injunction restraining the sale, and possession was then given up. Upon the application of the sheriff for his

did not affect the right of the sheriff to be paid by the trustee the necessary expenses of possession and of preparing for sale. Craycraft, In re, Browning, Ex parte, 8 Ch. D. 896; 47 L. J., Bk. 96; 38 L. T. 864; 26 W. R. 559.

A sheriff seized goods under a fi. fa. delivered to him indorsed to levy a sum for the debt and interest, besides fees, poundage and other incidental expenses. Before sale he had notice of a composition in bankruptcy proceedings, accepted by the execution creditor from the debtor. Thereupon he was requested to withdraw by the execution debtor, but refused, except upon payment of his fees and possession money. The execution creditor took no further steps in the matter, neither directing him to sell nor countermanding the execution of the writ. The sheriff sold goods to levy the sum required to meet his fees, possession money and expenses of levy. The execution debtor brought trover and trespass against him:—Held, that the debt being barred by the acceptance of the composition, the execution creditor had lost his right to levy in respect of the debt, and that the right of the sheriff to levy for his fees, possession money and expenses fell with the right to levy the debt, and therefore that the action was maintainable. Sherry v. Abdy, 1 Ex. D. 299; 45 L. J., Ex. 808; 34 L. T. 101.

c. Liability of Sheriff.

In order to make a sheriff liable for paying over the proceeds of an execution before the expiration of the fourteen days during which the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 87, requires him to hold the same in the case of a trader debtor, the notice served on him under that section must clearly establish the identity between the debtor to whose bankruptcy the notice refers and the person whose goods the sheriff has sold. Spencer, Ex parte, Smith, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 168; 44 L. J., Bk. 24; 31 L. T. 494; 29 W. R. 204. Affirming 44 L. J., Bk. 7; 23 W. R. 55.

On the fourteenth day after the sheriff had sold under an execution the goods of one W. Smith, a judgment debtor, the debtor's solicitor served upon the sheriff a notice intitled in an action other than that under the judgment in which the sheriff had sold the goods, stating that "the said W. Smith, one of the above-named defendants," had that day filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement:—Held, that the notice was not sufficient to make the sheriff liable for the proceeds of sale which he had paid over to the execution creditor, as it did not shew on its face that the debtor who had filed the liquidation petition was the person whose goods the sheriff had sold. Id.

When the sheriff has sold under an execution the goods of a person who is not evidently a trader, and notice of the filing of a liquidation petition is given to the sheriff under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 87, it should give such information to the sheriff, that he may identify the debtor with the person whose goods have been sold, and may infer that he is a trader. Id.

iii. When Composition resolved on.

An execution issued after petition, but before resolution for a composition, is not affected by 116; 23 W. R. 886. Affirming 33 L. T. 61.

A creditor sued out a fi. fa. and delivered it to the sheriff. Earlier in the same day the debtor filed a petition for liquidation or composition, and he afterwards obtained an injunction restraining the proceedings in the execution. At the first meeting of creditors a resolution was passed to accept a composition:—Held, that the creditor was entitled to proceed with his execution. Id.

Where a sheriff, who has seized goods of a trader under a fi. fa. for an amount exceeding 50*l.*, receives notice within fourteen days of a bankruptcy petition having been presented against the trader, and subsequently a resolution for composition is duly passed and registered, the sheriff ought to pay the proceeds of the execution to the execution creditor. Lender v. Knight, 26 W. R. 897—C. A. Affirming 26 W. R. 818.

But where an injunction had been granted, prior to the composition proceedings being resolved on, restraining the sheriff from further proceedings till further order, and it was stated at the bar on his behalf, but was not apparent on the pleadings, that before the execution creditor could have got the injunction dissolved after the registration of the composition for resolution, an order was made by the Court of Bankruptcy summoning a fresh meeting, under which order the resolution for composition was subsequently vacated and a liquidation by arrangement resolved upon; the court gave the sheriff leave to amend, to state these facts, and to raise the point as to whether the plaintiff could have obtained the dissolution of the injunction during the pending proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court. Id.

It is not competent for a debtor by presenting a petition and effecting a composition with his creditors, without the appointment of a trustee, or any change of property, to deprive a creditor of the advantage of a lawful seizure of goods made before the presentation of the petition, and without notice of any act of bankruptcy. Birmingham Gaslight and Coke Company, Ex parte, Adams, In re, 11 L. R., Eq. 204; 40 L. J., Bk. 1; 24 L. T. 42; 19 W. R. 123.

A. being indebted to a gas company, the company, under the powers given them by their act, obtained on the 29th of July, 1870, a warrant for the seizure of his goods, which warrant was immediately executed. Later in the day he filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement, and applied to the registrar of the local county court for an order restraining the sale of goods, which order was granted. Meetings of creditors were afterwards duly held, and the creditors resolved to accept a composition of 5*s.* in the pound; no trustee being appointed. The debtor afterwards applied for and obtained from the registrar an order on the gas company to re-deliver to the applicant the goods seized:—Held, that the order was wrong, and must be discharged. Id.

On filing a liquidation petition an injunction was at once granted, ex parte, restraining a creditor from proceeding further in an action in which he had recovered judgment against the debtor. The next day the creditor delivered a fi. fa. to the sheriff. He did not deny that, before he did so, he knew of the restraining order. The creditors resolved upon a compotion:—Held, that the judgment creditor was not entitled, after the registration of the resolution, to enforce his execution against the debtor. Lewis, In re, Maunthner, Ex parte, 3 Ch. D. 113; 45 L. J., Bk. 125.

A majority of the creditors of a bankrupt resolved that his bankruptcy should be annulled and a composition, to be secured by an assignment of his personal property to the trustee under the bankruptcy, accepted. This scheme was approved by the court, and an order annulling the bankruptcy was made. Thereupon a dissentient creditor who had issued execution before an act of bankruptcy had been committed, but who, if the bankruptcy had continued, would have lost the benefit of his execution, instructed the sheriff to sell. On the application of the trustee, the court granted an injunction restraining him from taking proceedings under his execution. Hillyard, Ex parte, Chidley, In re, 1 Ch. D. 177; 45 L. J., Bk. 49; 33 L. T. 553; 24 W. R. 182—C. A.

A non-assenting creditor of a compounding debtor, under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, against whom no equity can be raised by reason of his personal conduct, can acquire a valid security for his debt by levying an execution on the debtor's goods at any time before the registration of the extraordinary resolution accepting the composition. McLaren, Ex parte, McColla, In re, 16 Ch. D. 534; 50 L. J., Ch. 203; 44 L. T. 36; 29 W. R. 389—C. A.

Presence of Creditor at Meeting when raising no Equity against him.—The mere fact that a judgment creditor, who is entered in the debtor's statement of affairs as having no security for his debt, is present in silence at the first meeting of the creditors, not proving his debt or taking any other part in the proceedings, will not raise an equity against him so as to prevent his levying an execution on his judgment, and thus acquiring a valid security for his debt before the registration of an extraordinary resolution accepting a composition. Id.

iv. Elegit.

Elegit.—Under a writ of elegit the sheriff is entitled to seize the debtor's goods at once, before the holding of the inquisition, and from the time of the seizure the creditor becomes a secured creditor within the meaning of s. 16 (sub-s. 5) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. S. 87 has no application to a seizure of goods under an elegit. Abbott, Ex parte, Gourlay, In re, 15 Ch. D. 447; 50 L. J., Ch. 80; 43 L. T. 417; 29 W. R. 143—C. A. Affirming S. C., sub nom. Gourlay, In re, Ormandy, Ex parte, 49 L. J., Bk. 23; 42 L. T. 155.

—Executed by Seizure but not by Sale after but without Notice of Act of Bankruptcy—Relation back.—After an act of bankruptcy had been committed, a judgment creditor for a sum exceeding 50*l.*, without notice of the act of bankruptcy, issued an elegit against the goods of the bankrupt (there being no land); but before inquisition proceedings preparatory to sale had been commenced, a bankruptcy petition founded on the act of bankruptcy was presented, and the sheriff was restrained:—Held, that the transaction was not protected by sub-s. 3 of s. 95. Salger,

—Delivery by Sheriff to Creditor.—A creditor to whom goods of the bankrupt have been delivered by the sheriff, under a writ of elegit issued after the act of bankruptcy (of which the creditor had no notice) on which the adjudication is founded, is protected under sub-s. 3 of s. 95 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, against the title by relation back of the trustee in bankruptcy. The fact that, after seizure, but before sale, of the goods, the creditor had notice of another act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt after seizure but before sale, will not prejudice the title of the creditor. Vale, Ex parte, Bannister, In re, 18 Ch. D. 137; 50 L. J., Ch. 787; 45 L. T. 200; 29 W. R. 855—C. A.

v. Equitable Execution.

Equitable Execution—Receiver.—A judgment creditor became the transferee of a legal mortgage of leaseholds belonging to the judgment debtor. He then commenced an action in the Chancery Division, claiming an account and payment of what was due to him on both mortgage and judgment; or a sale of the property and payment out of the proceeds; and the appointment of a receiver. On the same day he obtained ex parte an order extending over eight days, appointing an interim receiver of the rents, without security. On the eighth day he obtained, on notice, an order absolute for the appointment of the same person to be receiver of the rents, upon his giving security. On the same day the debtor filed a liquidation petition, and a receiver of his property was appointed by the Court of Bankruptcy. It did not appear which receiver was appointed first. The receiver in the action never gave security. The creditor had not sued out an elegit:—Held (affirming the decision of Bacon, C. J.), that the appointment of the receiver in the action was such a delivery in execution by lawful authority of the mortgaged lands, within the meaning of s. 1 of the act 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, as to render the judgment creditor a secured creditor, within the meaning of s. 16, sub-s. 5, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and that he was entitled to hold the lands as a security for his judgment debt as well as for his mortgage debt. Evans, Ex parte, Watkins, In re, 13 Ch. D. 262; 49 L. J., Bk. 7; 41 L. T. 565; 28 W. R. 127—C. A.

Equitable Execution—Receiver appointed without Notice of Act of Bankruptcy—Receiver previously appointed by Court of Bankruptcy.

—S. recovered judgment for a debt against C. and issued an elegit. The sheriff returned that the debtor had no lands which he could seize. C. had leasehold property which was subject to mortgages. S. thereupon obtained the appointment of a receiver of the rents of the leasehold property without prejudice to the rights of the prior incumbrancers. On the same day a petition for adjudication in bankruptcy was filed against C., and a receiver was appointed in bankruptcy a few minutes before the appointment of the receiver in the action. C. afterwards filed a petition for liquidation, the same receiver was appointed in the liquidation as had been appointed in the bankruptcy, and resolutions were passed for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement. S. had not, until some days after the appointment of his receiver, any notice that C. had committed an act of bankruptcy, or that any proceedings in bankruptcy were pending against him :—Held, that as, at the time when S. obtained equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver, the property was legally though not actually in the possession of the receiver appointed by the Court of Bankruptcy, the equitable execution was ineffectual, and was not protected by s. 95, sub-s. 2, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Salt v. Cooper, 16 Ch. D. 544; 50 L. J., Ch. 529; 43 L. T. 682; 29 W. R. 553—C. A.

vi. Sequestration.

Chose in Action.—The mere issuing of a writ of sequestration against a defendant and the service of it on a debtor to him, or a trustee of a fund for him, without anything further being done to render the sequestration effectual against the debt or fund, is not enough to make the plaintiff a secured creditor of the defendant within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Nelson, Ex parte, Hoare, In re, 14 Ch. D. 41; 49 L. J., Bk. 44; 42 L. T. 389; 28 W. R. 564—C. A.

2. ON CROWN PROCESS.

An adjudication in bankruptcy and appointment of an official assignee took place on the same day on which an extent issued against the bankrupt for a crown debt, but at an earlier period of the day :—Held, that the extent operated from the first moment of the day, and the title of the crown prevailed. Edwards v. Reg. (in error), 9 Ex. 628; 2 C. L. R. 590; 23 L. J., Ex. 42; 18 Jur. 384—Ex. Ch.

A penalty for not paying the excise duties, incurred before an act of bankruptcy, but not substantiated by conviction till after, continues a lien upon the estate in the hands of the assignees, and may be distrained for. Stacey v. Hulse, 2 Dougl. 411; S. P., Rea v. Fowler, 2 Dougl. 416, n.

If a soap-maker, having incurred a forfeiture for concealing soap, contrary to 1 Geo. 1, c. 2, s. 36, became bankrupt, and a provisional assignment of his estate was made, after which the soap was condemned, and the bankrupt convicted, and thereupon a warrant issued to levy the penalty on his goods generally, such a warrant was bad, and could not justify a seizure of the soap in the hands of the assignees. Austin v. Whitehead, 6 T. R. 436.

Personal estate was seized under the crown's extent, which was afterwards set aside for irregularity, and the effects ordered to be delivered up to the assignees of the debtor, duly appointed under a commission of bankruptcy sued out after the teste of the extent; a second extent, tested the day the first was set aside, and subsequently to the assignment, was issued, and delivered to the sheriff, before the execution of the order for delivery of the goods to the assignees, the sheriff still holding them in his custody :—Held, that the property in the effects had been changed and transferred by the assignment; that the crown had no lien thereon, and consequently that the assignees were entitled to reduce them into possession. Rea v. Marsh, McChel. & Y. 250.

Although a warrant of the commissioners of the land-tax is not equal to an extent, so as to bind the goods of a bankrupt from the date, yet if a collector becomes bankrupt, and his goods are afterwards seized under a warrant from the commissioners before the actual execution of the assignment, the king's debt must be satisfied. Rea v. Jones, 8 Price, 108.

A. & B., bankers in London, had in their hands, at the time of their bankruptcy, cash and short bills belonging to C. & D., bankers in the country. The cash was the excise duties remitted by the country bankers to and received by the London bankers, and against which the former had given to the commissioners the latter's acceptances. In respect of the duties an extent had issued :—Held, that the crown had a right to elect against what securities it would go; and, on the consent of the Attorney-General, the short bills were ordered to be delivered up. Routon, Ex parte, 1 Rose, 15.

3. ON ACTIONS.

Abatement or Continuance of Actions on Bankruptcy of Parties.—In an action issue was joined, and notice of trial was given by the sole plaintiff. He then filed a liquidation petition, and a trustee of his property was appointed. When the action came on for trial no one appeared either for the plaintiff or for the trustee, and there was no evidence that any notice of the action had been served on the trustee :—Held, that Ord. L., r. 1, applies only when the cause of action survives or continues in some person who is before the court; that the action had abated, and that the only order the court could make was to strike it out of the list. Eldridge v. Burgess, 7 Ch. D. 411; 47 L. J., Ch. 342; 38 L. T. 232; 26 W. R. 435.

When two of five defendants, jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff, had become bankrupt :—Held, that the action might proceed against the other three defendants without bringing the trustees in bankruptcy of the two bankrupt defendants before the court, or giving them notice of the proceedings. Lloyd v. Dimmack, 7 Ch. D. 398; 47 L. J., Ch. 398; 38 L. T. 173; 26 W. R. 458.

When a defendant is adjudicated bankrupt after action brought, upon an act of bankruptcy, which occurred before action brought, the plaintiff may confess that the property claimed was in the order and disposition of the defendant at the date of the act of bankruptcy, and sign judgment under Ord. XX. r. 3, for his costs. Champion v. Formby, 7 Ch. D. 873; 47 L. J., Ch. 395; 26 W. R. 391.

See further, title PRACTICE (Proceedings on Change of Parties).

Action against Bankrupt.—The Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 12, which limits the remedy against the property or person of an adjudicated bankrupt, in respect of a provable debt, to the manner directed by the act, does not prevent an action being brought for such debt. Marshall v. King, 31 L. T. 511; 23 W. R. 92.

The plaintiff contracted to repair a boiler belonging to the defendant. During the performance of the contract the defendant was adjudicated bankrupt. The plaintiff, without knowledge of the adjudication, obtained a bill of exchange as security for the amount due for his labour. The defendant did not obtain his dis-the adjudication in bankruptcy:—Held, that without an order of discharge, the bankruptcy was no answer to the action, and also that there was good consideration for the account stated. Id.

On Rights of Action vested in Bankrupt.]—In an action against attorneys for breach of duty in failing to procure the best price for the equity of redemption of premises of the plaintiff, which had been entrusted to them for sale, the declaration alleged as special damage that they "well knew that if the plaintiff did not obtain a reasonable price, his bankruptcy would be the necessary and inevitable consequence," and further, that in consequence of the breach of duty alleged, he was adjudicated bankrupt. They pleaded his bankruptcy:—Held (by a majority of the court), that the plea was good, that the cause of action passed to the assignees, and that the knowledge that bankruptcy would follow from the breach of duty made no difference. Morgan v. Steele, 7 L. R., Q. B. 611; 41 L. J., Q. B. 260; 26 L. T. 206.

4. ON CONTRACTS.

A contract for the construction of a chattel under which the purchase-money is to be paid by instalments during the progress of the work is not necessarily dissolved by the insolvency of the purchaser before its completion, but the insolvent purchaser has the right to have the chattel completed for the benefit of his estate, or he may, by giving notice to the vendor, abandon the contract, the vendor proving against his estate, for damages; and this is so, whether under the terms of the contract the property in the unfinished chattel has passed to the purchaser subject to the vendor's lien for unpaid instalments, or whether it remains in the vendor, subject to a charge in favour of the purchaser for the instalments he has paid. Lambton, Ex parte, Lindsay, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 405; 44 L. J., Bk. 81; 32 L. T. 380; 23 W. R. 662.

When an insolvent purchaser abandons such a contract, having previously given acceptances for the instalments due, the holder of these acceptances, in the event of the subsequent insolvency of the vendor, will have no right, under the rule in Waring, Ex parte (19 Ves. 345), to have the chattel sold, and the proceeds applied in discharge of the acceptances. Id.

On Contracts of Agency.]—The bankruptcy of an agent is not per se a defence to an action for wrongful dismissal, even though the agent is to receive moneys on account of his principal. The fitness of the agent to perform his duties is a question for a jury. McCall v. Australian Meat Co., 16 W. R. 188.

On Contract for Sale of Goods.]—An iron company in October, 1874, contracted to supply a steel company with iron at a certain price, to be delivered in monthly instalments, and to be paid for, as to some, by bills at four months, and as to the rest, by cash at a certain length of credit. The instalments were delivered till the month of February, 1875, inclusive, in which month the purchasing company called a meeting of their principal creditors, and stated that they were of credit in their existing contracts, which however was refused them. The selling company then refused to deliver any more iron except upon immediate cash payments, and in consequence of that refusal the purchasing company gave notice to rescind the contract. The purchasing company continued to carry on the business after the meeting, and endeavoured to raise fresh capital by issuing preference shares, but in June, 1875, they passed a resolution for winding-up. The selling company claimed to prove for damages for breach of the contract against the estate of the purchasing company:—Held, that there was no such declaration of insolvency at the meeting in February as to justify the selling company in refusing to deliver iron except for cash payments; and consequently that the purchasing company had a right to rescind the contract; and the claim for damages was dismissed. Phoenix Reformer Steel Company, In re, Carruthers Hematite Iron Company, Ex parte, 4 Ch. D. 108; 46 L. J., Ch. 115; 25 L. T. 776; 25 W. R. 187—C. A.

In order to justify the vendors in such a case in exercising their right of refusal to deliver, there must be such proof or admission of the insolvency of the purchasers at the time as amounts to a declaration of intention not to pay for the goods. Id.

The defendants had, on the 5th of February, sold to the plaintiffs 200 tons of iron, to be delivered twenty-five tons monthly at 5*l.* per ton, net cash, or by a four months' bill with 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton added. By the usage of trade no delivery was due under this contract till the 1st of April. On the 12th of March the plaintiffs found themselves to be insolvent, and they gave notice of the fact to the defendants. On the 16th of March they filed a petition in the Bankruptcy Court for liquidation by arrangement or composition. The usual course of business under previous contracts between the parties of a similar description was for the defendants to deliver upon such contracts without further demand of delivery. No delivery, however, was made by the defendants or claimed by the plaintiffs in April. On the 5th of April, at the first meeting of the creditors, a resolution was passed to accept a composition of five shillings in the pound. Though the existence of the contract was mentioned at the meeting, no mention was made of it in the written statement of the plaintiffs' affairs. No step was taken in relation to the contract by either party until the 13th of May, when the market for iron having risen, the plaintiffs claimed the delivery of iron in fulfilment of the contract, offering and being ready to pay cash for it. The defendants replied, stating that the plaintiffs having failed to perform their part of the contract there was an end of it. The plaintiffs thereupon brought an action against the defendants for non-delivery of the iron:—Held, that the effect of the facts was that there had been a rescission of the contract before the 13th of May, the conduct of the plaintiffs having been such as to justify the defendants in the belief that the plaintiffs intended to abandon the contract upon their insolvency, and there being evidence that the defendants in such belief had likewise abandoned it. Morgan v. Bain, 10 L. R., C. P. 18; 44 L. J., C. P. 47; 31 L. T. 616; 23 W. R. 229.

A manufacturer sold 330 tons of bleaching-powder to be delivered thirty tons per month, payment to be made in cash fourteen days after each delivery. The whole amount was delivered except one instalment of thirty tons due in December, 1871; but the November instalment was not paid for. On the 20th of December the buyer called a meeting of his creditors and declared himself insolvent. On the 23rd of December, the seller wrote a letter refusing to deliver any more bleaching-powder under the contract. In February following, the buyer was adjudicated bankrupt, and the trustee applied to the court for an order upon the seller to pay 150*l.* damages for non-delivery of the December instalment of goods:—Held, that although neither the non-payment of the November instalment nor the bankruptcy of the buyer would entitle the seller to rescind the contract, yet he had a right, after the declaration of insolvency, to refuse to deliver any more goods till the price of both the November and December instalments had been tendered to him. Chalmers, Ex parte, Edwards, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 289; 42 L. J., Ch. 37; 28 L. T. 325; 21 W. R. 349.

Held, also, that the seller's letter of the 23rd of December did not excuse the trustee of the buyer's estate from tendering the price of the two instalments before claiming damages for the non-delivery of the December instalment. Id.

5. ON AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

Authority not revoked till Notice of Act of Bankruptcy.]—Where authority had been given previous to an act of bankruptcy by the bankrupts to the defendant in the course of mutual dealings to receive the purchase-money of their estate, and to place it to their account, and such authority had been acted upon before notice of an act of bankruptcy:—Held, that such authority was not revoked by the act of bankruptcy; that the payment thereof to the defendant was a rightful payment; that being so received it became a debt and an item in the account between him and the bankrupts before notice of any act of bankruptcy, and that the defendant was entitled to set off against it, in an action brought by the trustee in bankruptcy, the debt due from the bankrupts to him. Elliott v. Turquand, 7 App. Cas. 79; 51 L. J., P. C. 1; 45 L. T. 771; 30 W. R. 477—P. C.

Power of Attorney.]—Bankruptcy determines a power of attorney. Markwick v. Hardingham, 15 Ch. D. 339; 43 L. T. 647; 29 W. R. 361—C. A.

As a general rule, the power of attorney must be treated as revoked by an act of bankruptcy committed by the giver of it as against the trustee under his subsequent bankruptcy. Snowball, Ex parte, Douglas, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 534; 41 L. J., Bk. 49; 26 L. T. 894; 20 W. R. 786.

But if, after the act of bankruptcy, but before an adjudication, property of the bankrupt is conveyed under the power to a bona fide purchaser without notice of the act of bankruptcy, he may hold the property as against the trustee under the bankruptcy. Id.

6. ON BEQUESTS BY WILL.

After G. had been adjudged a bankrupt by a Scotch sequestration, and before he obtained his discharge, his wife, who had taken part in procuring the sequestration, made her will and thereby gave an annuity to him for life, and declared, that if he should become bankrupt, or should assign, the annuity should cease; and she also empowered the trustees of her will in their discretion at any time to refuse or discontinue payment of the annuity to her husband. After the death of the testatrix, and before the first payment of the annuity became due, G. obtained a discharge which did not divest the property from the trustee in the sequestration:—Held, that the annuity was forfeited. Trappes v. Meredith, 7 L. R., Ch. 248; 41 L. J., Ch. 237; 26 L. T. 5; 20 W. R. 130.

Under a clause of forfeiture of a life interest on a future bankruptcy, a forfeiture will be caused by a past bankruptcy which remains unannulled at the time at which the first payment under the gift for life becomes due, although the bankruptcy is afterwards annulled, before any claim is made by the persons entitled under the gift over. The retention of the money by the trustees is equivalent to payment to another person. Parnham, In re, 13 L. R., Eq. 413; 41 L. J., Ch. 292; 20 W. R. 396.

Under a bequest of an annuity with a proviso that it should cease if the annuitant assign, incur, or part with the same, and upon a liquidation by arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, of the affairs of the annuitant:—Held, that a forfeiture had taken place. Amherst, In re, 13 L. R., Eq. 464; 41 L. J., Ch. 222; 25 L. T. 870; 20 W. R. 290.

A testator bequeathed stock to trustees, upon trust, after the death of a tenant for life, to divide the income equally among the sons of his sister, with a declaration that in the event of any one of such sons assigning or otherwise disposing of the life interest thereinbefore given, or if by act or operation of law he should be personally deprived of the benefit of the bequest, his life interest should immediately cease and determine; and on such event occurring, the income should be paid to the person or persons entitled to the same under the bequest thereafter contained. After the death of testator a son of the sister was adjudicated bankrupt; but he obtained an annulment of the bankruptcy before the death of the tenant for life:—Held, that there was no forfeiture of his life interest. Parnham, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 80.

A father devised his real estates to trustees charged with the payment of an annuity of 150*l.* to each of his younger sons, and he declared that if any son entitled to such annuity should at any time do or permit any act, deed, matter, or thing whatsoever whereby the same should be aliened, charged, or incumbered in any manner whatsoever, the annuity should thereupon absolutely cease. One of the younger sons failed to comply with a debtor's summons, and was adjudicated a bankrupt on the petition of the creditor who had issued the summons:—Held, that the annuity had ceased under the clause in the will, and did not go to the trustee in the bankruptcy. Eyton, Ex parte, Throckmorton, In re, 7 Ch. D. 145; 47 L. J., Bk. 62; 37 L. T. 447; 26 W. R. 181—C. A.

A testator gave the income of property to one of his trustees for life, or till bankruptcy, or till he should do or suffer anything to deprive himself of the enjoyment of the income. He was adjudicated bankrupt, the bankruptcy was an-meantime:—Held, that he had not forfeited his life interest. Robins v. Ross, 48 L. J., Ch. 884; 80 L. T. 152.

A mother by her will, dated February 18, 1874, gave the residue of her property upon trust to pay the income in equal fourth shares to her sons and grand-daughters, but provided that if any of them "should become insolvent or be declared bankrupt, or should assign, charge, or incumber his or her share or do or suffer anything, whereby the same or any part thereof would, through his or her act or default, or by process or operation of law or otherwise, if belonging absolutely to him or her, become vested in or payable to some other person or persons," there should be a forfeiture of his or her interest in favour of the others of them. W., one of the sons, had been made a bankrupt within the knowledge of the testatrix in December, 1872, and was still so at the time of her death in February, 1875. In July, 1875, the statutory majority of W.'s creditors agreed to accept a composition, but owing to circumstances beyond W.'s control, the order for annulment of his bankruptcy was delayed, and was not drawn up until October, 1878:—Held, that no forfeiture of his interest under the will had arisen. Anson v. Waddell, 10 Ch. D. 157; 48 L. J., Ch. 111; 40 L. T. 81; 27 W. R. 186.

7. CREDITOR'S REMEDY AFTER CLOSE OF BANKRUPTCY.

A creditor's remedy against the estate of a bankrupt three years after the close of the bankruptcy, where the bankrupt has not obtained his discharge, cannot be enforced against the representatives of the estate of a deceased bankrupt. Simmons, In re, Kelly, Ex parte, 7 Ch. D. 161; 47 L. J., Bk. 80; 37 L. T. 684; 26 W. R. 120—C. A.

The proper remedy is by an action for administration. Id.

In 1854 a person entitled to a contingent interest in a fund took the benefit of the Insolvent Act, but omitted this interest from his schedule. In 1876 the contingent interest vested in possession, and later in the year he was found lunatic. The court made an order giving the holder of the fund liberty to pay into court to the credit of the lunacy, and directing it to be invested, and the income paid to the committee, and refused to hear the provisional assignee of the insolvent's estate in opposition to the application for such order. On a subsequent petition presented in the lunacy by the provisional assignee:—Held, that the close of the insolvency did not prevent the distribution of the fund amongst the insolvent's creditors, and that the fund must be paid to the provisional assignee. Hinds, In re, 7 Ch. D. 26; 37 L. T. 768; 26 W. R. 193—C. A.

XXI. THE BANKRUPT OR LIQUIDATING DEBTOR.

1. SURRENDER.

Bankrupt allowed to Surrender after Lapse of Statutory Period.]—Where it is consistent with public justice and for the interests of the creditor, and the bankrupt is not an object. Shelton, Ex parte, 3 De G. & J. 47.

—Where Bankrupt Abroad at Date of Fiat.]—Where a bankrupt is abroad when the fiat issues and is not informed of its existence till after the time for surrendering has passed, the court, upon petition, will permit him to surrender, and will allow him his costs out of the estate. Harrison, Ex parte, 12 L. J., Bk. 27; 6 Jur. 1088.

—Non-attendance at Adjourned Last Examination.]—A bankrupt, who was abroad when the commission was issued, after the lapse of many years returned to England, and obtained an order for leave to surrender, and pass his last examination. He accordingly went down from London to Liverpool to attend the commissioners for this purpose, but no one expressed any wish or intention to examine him; and the commissioners, after taking his surrender, adjourned the last examination for three months, but not at the request of the bankrupt:—Held, that his non-attendance at the adjourned meeting did not deprive him of his right to an order on the assignees, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 132, to declare how they had disposed of his real and personal estate. Tarleton, Ex parte, 2 Mont. D. & D. 189.

—Application by Assignees to Discharge Order for Surrender.]—A fiat was issued in January, and in November the bankrupt petitioned for leave to surrender, stating that he left England thirteen months before on account of family disagreements, and in the belief that he left enough to pay his creditors, and that he had lately returned to this country. On that petition the assignees appeared, and did not oppose it; and the order was made, and costs were directed to be paid out of the estate. After this the bankrupt stated to the commissioner that he left England from pecuniary embarrassments, and took away goods with him. The assignees petitioned that the former order might be discharged; but the petition was dismissed, with costs. Pennell, Ex parte, 3 De G. & S. 555; 18 L. J., Bk. 7; 13 Jur. 165.

—Bankrupt's Costs not Allowed.]—Where a bankrupt left England on account of his embarrassments, and consequently did not hear of the fiat till after the time for surrendering had expired, he was not allowed his costs on petitioning for leave to surrender. Perry, Ex parte. De Gex, 377; 11 Jur. 48.

—Court will not interfere with Commissioner's Discretion.]—The court refused to interfere with the discretion of the commissioner as to not allowing liberty to a bankrupt to surrender. Gordon, Ex parte, 19 L. J., Bk. 12.

—Scotchman allowed to Surrender after Petitioning for Sequestration in Scotland.]—A petition by a domiciled Scotchman, made a bankrupt in England, for leave to surrender, will not be refused on the ground that he opposed the petition for adjudication, and that by obtaining a Scotch sequestration on his own petition (which was afterwards recalled in Scotland) he had incurred great expense and occasioned a long delay, it not appearing that his opposition was unwar-

Indictment for not Surrendering.]—See OFFENCES BY BANKRUPTS, post.

2. EXAMINATION.

Not upon Oath.]—By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 48 (which substituted a declaration for an oath), it was not only unnecessary, but illegal, to examine a bankrupt upon oath. Remaden, In re, 1 B. C. Rep. 133; 3 D. & L. 748; 16 L. J., Q. B. 294; 10 Jur. 879.

Adjournment of Last Examination sine die.]—A commissioner has no power, under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 106, s. 162, to adjourn the last examination of a bankrupt sine die, unless for such an offence as under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 159, would disentitle him to his order of discharge. Grumitt, Ex parte, 33 L. J., Bk. 42; 10 Jur., N. S. 738; 10 L. T. 680; 13 W. R. 1018.

A commissioner having adjourned the last examination of a bankrupt sine die, on the ground of the unsatisfactory condition of the accounts, the assignees were ordered to furnish definite objections, and this was done; but on the matter coming on again, it was found that there was no statement of the particulars in which, or of the reasons why the accounts were deemed unsatisfactory; and the matter was ordered to stand over, with leave to make any further application to the commissioner. Quinn, Ex parte, 10 L. T. 704.

A bankrupt on his last examination stated that he had not the means of verifying the first item in his cash account, dated about a year before the bankruptcy, by any earlier cash account, although he could verify it by other means, and stated that he had not the means of furnishing any better accounts. The registrar acting for the commissioner adjourned the bankrupt's examination sine die, with liberty to apply to the court again:—Ordered, on appeal, that the bankrupt should be at liberty to go before the commissioner, and give such further explanation of his accounts as he was able. Riley, Ex parte, 3 De G. & J. 469.

Where bankrupts had failed to account for the loss of 9,000*l.* to their estate, and in their examination had stated that they did not know what had become of the amount.—Held, that their last examination had been properly adjourned sine die. Brook, Ex parte, 8 L. T. 875.

Held, also, that it was the duty of the creditors' assignees, and not of individual creditors, to appear, and oppose the passing the last examination; the costs of the appearance of the assignees were therefore refused. Id.

When a bankrupt has filed accounts shewing a large deficiency, of which he is unable to give any satisfactory explanation, the court will adjourn his last examination sine die, although he states his inability to give any further information. Milne, Ex parte, Denton, In re, 28 L. T. 175; 31 W. R. 435.

Notice of Adjournment.]—A registrar, as deputy for a commissioner, adjourned a meeting for the last examination of a bankrupt; and the notice of adjournment recited that the meeting was before Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque. Notice of such adjournment was indorsed on the order of protection, and the paper was given to the bankrupt being the only person present, and that a mere memorandum indorsed on the order of protection was not such a notice as is required to be served upon the bankrupt, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 221, informing him of the day allowed him for finishing his examination, the non-compliance with which (notice being duly given) is made a misdemeanor by that section. Reg. v. Bushnell, 9 Cox, C. C. 383.

Where the public examination of a bankrupt has been adjourned to a day fixed, with liberty to apply for an earlier day upon payment of a sum named, and the bankrupt applies for and has an earlier day appointed upon which to pass his public examination, the notices required by the 111th rule must be given to each creditor. Henry, Ex parte, Woodhouse, In re, 48 L. T. 912.

Liquidating Debtor.]—If a trustee in a liquidation by arrangement is dissatisfied with the information given to him by the debtor as to his debts and assets, he is entitled to summon the debtor for examination before the court, and is not bound, before he can proceed with the examination, to show that the debtor has made default in giving him the information which he is entitled to require. Clegg, Ex parte, Bennett, In re, 5 Ch. D. 145; 46 L. J., Bk. 1; 36 L. T. 429; 25 W. R. 504—C. A. Reversing 3 Ch. D. 315; 45 L. J., Bk. 126; 34 L. T. 949; 24 W. R. 504.

Order not made Ex Parte.]—An application by a trustee under a liquidation for a summons for the examination of the debtor should not be made ex parte, but upon notice to the debtor, who is entitled to be heard thereon. The onus of proving that the debtor has refused to give information is on the trustee. Bennett, In re, Clegg, Ex parte, 3 Ch. D. 315; 45 L. J., Bk. 126; 34 L. T. 949; 25 W. R. 258.

Written Requisitions—Power of Registrar to Order.]—A trustee examined the bankrupt at his public examination concerning alleged fraudulent transactions, on which he had previously examined him in private, but failed to obtain satisfactory explanation. The registrar, sitting as chief judge, against the wish of the trustee, stopped the public examination, considering that it was a waste of public time, and adjourned it to a future day, ordering the trustee in the meantime to deliver written requisitions to the bankrupt as to the points on which he required information:—Held, that even if the registrar had power to order the trustee to deliver such written requisitions, which he had not, he had not exercised a sound discretion in stopping the examination; and order discharged accordingly. Crump, Ex parte, Hendrey, In re, 1 Ch. D. 530; 45 L. J., Bk. 98; 34 L. T. 12; 24 W. R. 557—C. A.

Trustee must Examine Accounts before Public Examination.]—It is the duty of a trustee, prior to the public examination of the bankrupt, to examine into the accounts, and require the production of his books and all such information

Passing Public Examination — Conditional Order.]—The Court of Bankruptcy has no power to make an order that a bankrupt do pass his public examination conditionally on his doing certain acts. The examination ought to be adjourned till he has done all that is required by the act and the rules, and till he is able to swear his affidavit in the form No. 45 appended to the rules, and then an absolute order for his passing should be made. Smith, Ex parte, Angerstein, In re, 7 L. R. Ch. 662; 41 L. J., Bk. 44; 27 L. T. 330; 20 W. R. 851.

Signing Examination.]—The court has no jurisdiction to make an order on a bankrupt, after his petition has been dismissed, to sign an examination taken pending the proceedings in bankruptcy. Spiller, In re, 18 W. R. 295.

Furnishing Cash Account of Business.]—When a trader four years previously to his bankruptcy had been engaged in a partnership business, and two important items in his accounts were connected with the transactions of that partnership business, the trustee was held to be entitled to demand a cash account of that business, notwithstanding the lapse of time. Crawford, Ex parte, Crawford, In re, 28 L. T. 244; 21 W. R. 509.

Sect. 19 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, gives the court power to order a bankrupt to file a cash account of his receipts and payments for a specified period before his bankruptcy, and, if the circumstances which appear on the file of proceedings shew that such an order ought to be made, the court can make it without any further evidence. The court, however, has a discretion in the matter, and such an order ought not to be made as a matter of course, but only under special circumstances. Moir, Ex parte, Moir, In re, 21 Ch. D. 61; 51 L. J., Ch. 931; 47 L. T. 267; 30 W. R. 738—C. A.

A bankrupt who had been engaged in an extensive business as a promoter of public companies, had kept no accounts, and could produce no record whatever of his transactions, except his banker's pass-book, and some counterfoils of recent cheques.—Held, that this was a sufficient reason for ordering him to file a cash account of his receipts and payments for two years before his bankruptcy. Id.

Admissibility in Evidence.]—To render an examination of a bankrupt under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 117, admissible as a deposition under the seal of the court, pursuant to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 208, it must appear that his answers after they were reduced into writing were signed and subscribed by the bankrupt. Reg. v. Aken, 20 L. T. 498; 17 W. R. 683.

3. COMMITTAL FOR NOT ANSWERING QUESTIONS.

Examination must be Fair and Relevant.]— hearings of estate, or which may tend to disclose any secret grant, conveyance, or concealment of his lands, tenements, goods, money or debts." Leggs, Ex parte, 1 B. C. C. 163; 23 L. J., Q. B. 345; 17 Jur. 415.

Where a bankrupt, on a second or subsequent examination, states that he wishes to explain some of his former statements, but that he does not sufficiently recollect them, his memory should be refreshed by their being repeated to him. Id.

Bankrupt's Answers must be Reasonably Probable.]—The court will not discharge from custody a bankrupt committed for not answering questions when the court is of opinion that the story contained in his answers is not such as to satisfy a reasonable person of its truth. Lord, Ex parte, 16 M. & W. 462; 16 L. J., Ex. 118; 11 Jur. 186.

A warrant of commitment set out the whole of the bankrupt's examination respecting a sum of money which was not forthcoming, and which he alleged to have been stolen from him by housebreakers; it then proceeded, "which answers are not, nor are any of them, satisfactory to me the commissioner."—Held, sufficient, although some of the answers might, on the face of them, be satisfactory, for that the bankrupt was committed on account of answers, which, taken as a whole, were unsatisfactory. Id.

Power of Court to interfere with Discretion of Commissioner.]—If the court can see clearly that the commissioner was wrong in holding that the answers were not satisfactory, they will order the bankrupt to be discharged; but they are always slow in such a case to interfere with the discretion of the commissioner, and will not do so unless they are satisfied that he was wrong. Ward, In re, 3 D. & L. 766; 10 Jur. 433; 15 L. J., Q. B. 233.

If the examination, when viewed as a whole, is entirely unsatisfactory, the commissioner will be justified in finding that the answers are not, nor are any of them, satisfactory, although the answers to certain introductory questions may be such as would be perfectly satisfactory when viewed by themselves. Id.

Incredible Account.]—If, upon the examination of a bankrupt touching the disposition of his property, he swears to an account of the same, which appears to be incredible, the commissioners may commit him. Norden, Ex parte, 6 T. R. 118.

Here Misbehaviour no Ground for Committal.]—The commissioners cannot commit a bankrupt for misbehaviour only, or any act or omission not comprised in the statute giving them authority. Miller v. Scars, 2 W. Bl. 1141.

Unsatisfactory Answers.]—A general answer by a bankrupt under examination, that he has lost 1,886*l.* by selling goods under prime cost, is not satisfactory, especially if falsified by subsequent confessions of the disposal of different sums for other purposes. Langhorn's case, 2

ing kept any books, does your memory serve you as to how the 100l." (the proceeds of a cheque drawn by the bankrupt, payable to B.) "was appropriated?" replied, "Not now:"—Held, that the commissioner was justified in committing the bankrupt to prison for not fully answering to his satisfaction. Bradbury, Ex parte, 14 C. B. 15; 2 C. L. R. 585; 23 L. J., C. P. 25; 18 Jur. 189.

Satisfactory Answers.]—A bankrupt, to a question whether he had not within six months previously to the commission executed two conveyances of his estate and effects, or part thereof, to his son, answered, "Not to my knowledge." This answer held to be satisfactory, no further questions having been put. Norris's case, 2 J. & W. 437.

There being reason to apprehend that a bankrupt after the adjudication was about to abscond to America, the commissioners issued a summons against him, and on that summons without any warrant the messenger arrested him, and brought him before the commissioners, when they proceeded to examine him, and put to him this question:—"You having five months ago taken away 1,500l. and now accounting only for 600l. of it, what account do you now give of the rest?" To which the bankrupt having answered, "I can give no account;" the commissioners committed him for answering unsatisfactorily. The court, on the petition of the bankrupt, ordered his immediate discharge. James, Ex parte, 3 Deac. 518; 3 Jur. 538.

What admitted by Answer.]—A bankrupt answering a question which embodies a statement of the acts or sayings of himself, or of a third person, without denying or qualifying, is understood to admit the statement. Crowley's case, 2 Swans, 75; Buck, 264.

4. PRIVILEGE AND PROTECTION.

Extent of Privilege—Contempt of Court.]—The privilege of a bankrupt from arrest during his examination extends to an attachment issued for a contempt in not paying money into court. Bury, Ex parte, 3 Mont., D. & D. 309; 7 Jur. 406.

Or not paying money under an award made a rule of court. Parker, Ex parte, 3 Ves. 554.

Debts contracted since Bankruptcy.]—The protection from arrest granted to a bankrupt during the suspension of his certificate does not protect him from arrest in respect of debts contracted since his bankruptcy. Grace v. Bishop, 11 Ex. 424; 25 L. J., Ex. 58.

An order for protection does not protect a bankrupt from arrest at the suit of a subsequent creditor, even though he has not passed his final examination. Phillips v. Poland, 1 L. R., C. P. 204; 35 L. J., C. P. 128; 12 Jur., N. S. 260; S. C., 1 L. R., Ch. 356; 35 L. J., Bk. 19; 12 Jur., N. S. 425; 14 L. T. 502.

Plaintiff suing out Execution without Notice of Protection Order.]—Trespass was not maintainable against a plaintiff in an action, or his attorney, for suing out an execution, and causing the defendant to be arrested under it, the defendant having at the time an order for protection from arrest under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 4, of which the plaintiff had no notice. Yearsley v. Heane, 14 M. & W. 322; 3 D. & L. 265.

Non-payment of Rates—Imprisonment in Default of Payment.]—An action was brought against overseers of the poor for maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, obtaining a warrant for arresting A. for poor-rates, they knowing that he was privileged from arrest pending his examination. There was a count for false imprisonment. A. owed for two poor-rates before his bankruptcy, and for one allowed and published after it. He obtained protection from arrest under the Bankruptcy Act. The rates were then demanded of him, and not paid. The overseers applied to a justice. A summons was issued, calling on him to appear before the justices to shew cause why he had not paid the rates. He indorsed on the summons that his goods were under the protection of the Court of Bankruptcy; but did not appear to shew cause. The justices issued a distress warrant against A. His goods having been seized under the bankruptcy, a return of nulla bona was made to the warrant. On that return the justices issued a warrant for A.'s imprisonment, in default of payment, and he was arrested and imprisoned under it by direction of the overseers, who knew all the facts:—Held, that there was no evidence of malice, or of want of reasonable or probable cause for obtaining the warrant; and that there was no ground for maintaining an action against the overseers on either count. Phillips v. Naylor, 4 H. & N. 565; 25 L. J., Ex. 225; 5 Jur., N. S. 966; 33 L. T. 167; 7 W. R. 504—Ex. Ch.

May be taken by his Bail.]—A bankrupt may be taken by his bail for the purpose of rendering him, notwithstanding his privilege from arrest; and if they neglect to take him they may be fixed. Payne v. Spencer, 6 M. & S. 237.

After Order of Discharge.]—On the 20th of November the defendant was adjudicated bankrupt, on the petition of a creditor, in Dublin. On the 12th of January he obtained a first-class certificate, and also an order of protection from arrest. The certificate was retained in the court, to allow of any creditors, within a month, appealing against its being granted. The plaintiff, on the 2nd of October, commenced an action against the defendant, upon a promissory note given in respect of a debt owing from the defendant, and which he had entered in his schedule. The defendant pleaded to the action, but did not appear at the trial, on the 10th of December, when a verdict passed for the plaintiff. The costs were taxed on the 8th of January, and the defendant was arrested on the 13th, when he produced his order of protection:—Held, that, having obtained his certificate, he was privileged from arrest in respect of the costs as well as of the debt, and that the arrest was unlawful. Simpson v. Maravita, 4 L. R., Q. B. 257; 38 L. J., Q. B. 76; 20 L. T. 275; 17 W. R. 589.

Crown Process.]—A bankrupt attending commissioners, in obedience to their summons, was arrested under an extent at the suit of the crown:—Held, that although the crown is not within the bankruptcy statutes, the bankrupt was entitled to his discharge; on the principle of the common law protecting witnesses attending

Debt Provable—Discharge of Debtor.]—Where a debt is due before the bankruptcy, and consequently provable under the commission, the court will in general discharge the bankrupt out of custody. Holding v. Impey, 7 Moore, 614; 1 Bing. 189; S. P., Robinson v. Vale, 4 D. & R. 340; 2 B. & C. 769.

— Exceptions—Fraud.]—Unless it appears that the certificate was obtained by fraud. Vincent v. Brady, 2 H. Bl. 1.

Or the commission appears to be grossly fraudulent. Sowley v. Jones, 2 W. Bl. 725.

— Certificate disputed.]—Or that it is seriously meant to be disputed. Stacey v. Frederici, 2 B. & P. 390.

Costs as Co-Respondent.]—A bankrupt having his order of discharge drawn up and delivered out to him is entitled to his release from custody under an attachment for costs of a suit in the Divorce Court, in which he was co-respondent. Green, In re, 6 L. T. 109.

Alimony.]—An attachment issued out of the Divorce Court for non-payment of alimony, is no bar to the bankrupt's release. Rawlins, In re, 12 L. T. 57.

Shareholders in Insolvent Company.]—A shareholder of an insolvent banking company, against whom the court had, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, s. 13, granted leave to a judgment creditor of the company to issue execution, but who afterwards became himself bankrupt, was entitled, upon obtaining his certificate, to be discharged out of custody under such execution. Thompson v. Harding, 3 C. B., N. S. 254; 27 L. J., C. P. 38; 4 Jur., N. S. 94.

The court in which the order for execution was obtained is the proper court to apply to for the discharge, which it has the power to grant under the general jurisdiction it possesses over its own process. Id.

Cases in Nature of Criminal Offence.]—A commitment under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, ss. 78, 99, for recovery of the penalty imposed by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7, for disobeying an order of justices to maintain a relative, was in the nature of criminal process, and therefore a bankrupt in custody under it was not entitled to protection under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 112. Bancroft v. Mitchell, 2 L. R., Q. B. 549; 36 L. J., Q. B. 257; 16 L. T. 558; 15 W. R. 1132; 8 B. & S. 558.

A debtor was convicted under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 6, for violations of copyright in engravings, and sentenced to pay a fine, and in default was imprisoned. After the conviction he executed a deed of composition with his creditors, which was duly registered. He then applied for discharge from prison:—Held, that the process under which he was arrested was of a criminal nature, and not for a debt, and that he was not entitled to his discharge. Graves, Ex parte, 3 L. R., Ch. 642; 19 L. T. 241; 16 W. R. 993.

Outlawry.]—A creditor obtained judgment against S. on a bill of exchange, and not having been able to arrest him, proceeded to outlawry, bankrupt:—Held, that he was not "in prison or in custody for debt" within 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 112, and that the court had no jurisdiction to order his release. Stoffel, Ex parte, 3 L. R., Ch. 240; 37 L. J., Bk. 4; 16 W. R. 237.

Bond under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8.]—A debtor who had executed a bond under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 1, and against whom a verdict was returned in the action, who afterwards was declared bankrupt, and surrendered to the fiat, and then immediately rendered in discharge of his sureties in the bond, was not, under such arrest or imprisonment, within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 23, so as to entitle him to his discharge from custody. Oldaker, Ex parte, 1 De Gex, 591; 17 L. J., Bk. 8; 12 Jur. 108.

Solicitor—Money due as Solicitor.]—A solicitor who had made default in payment of a sum of money due from him as solicitor was adjudicated bankrupt, and after his adjudication was arrested under a writ of attachment issuing out of the Court of Exchequer. He applied to the Court of Bankruptcy to order his discharge. The Lords Justices, in the exercise of their discretion under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 13, declined to interfere with the writ of attachment issued by the Court of Exchequer, and refused the application. Deere, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 658; 44 L. J., Bk. 120; 33 L. T. 115; 23 W. R. 866.

Trustees.]—A debtor, who had been committed to prison under an attachment, as a person in a fiduciary character making default in payment of a sum of money which he had been ordered by the court to pay, filed a declaration of insolvency, and, on a petition alleging such declaration as an act of bankruptcy, was adjudicated a bankrupt. Subsequently he applied to the court for his discharge from custody. The court refused to grant such discharge, but gave leave to the bankrupt, if he should be so advised, to renew his application when he had passed his final examination. Lewes (Earl) v. Barnett, 47 L. J., Ch. 144; 26 W. R. 101—C. A.

Power of Court of Bankruptcy to order Discharge.]—The Court of Bankruptcy has power to order the release from custody of a bankrupt who, having surrendered, and having obtained protection, is arrested. Browne, In re, 12 L. T. 641; 13 W. R. 926.

Suspension of Order of Discharge—Power of Court.]—A bankrupt passed his final examination, and obtained his order of discharge, suspended for twelve months, with protection for three months renewable from time to time on giving notice to the assignees and the opposing creditors. After the expiration of the three months the bankrupt was taken into custody under an execution, and he then applied, upon notice, for a renewal of his protection and a release from custody. He obtained a renewal of the protection, but upon the application for a release from custody:—Held, that the court had no power under the first part of s. 112 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, to grant the application, and that whether it had or had not a discretionary power under the latter part of the same section, it was not a case for the exercise of that discretion. Kimberley, Ex parte, 34 L. J., Bk. 28; 11 Jur., N. S. 571; 12 L. T. 291; 13 W. R. 641.

The Court of Bankruptcy has no inherent authority, independently of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 112, to order the release of a bankrupt whose order of discharge has been suspended with protection, and who (having neglected to obtain a renewal in time) is arrested on a ca. sa. after the expiration of his term of protection, and before the commencement of a second term. Ib.

Ca. sa. during Suspension not Enforceable after Certificate.—A ca. sa. against a bankrupt during the suspension of his certificate could not be enforced after such certificate had come into operation. Eccard, In re, 6 Ex. 111; 2 L. M. & P. 80; 15 Jur. 156.

6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 126—Power to stay Action.—Under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 126, which authorized the discharge of a certificated bankrupt taken in execution for a debt provable under his commission, the court had incidentally the power of staying, before judgment, proceedings against such a bankrupt for such a debt. Sadler v. Cleaver, 7 Bing. 769; 5 M. & P. 706.

Sheriff justified in releasing Bankrupt though Bankruptcy invalid.—A sheriff was justified in immediately discharging a person arrested for debt, or on an escape warrant, on the production by him of a summons, signed as required by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 23, to the officer who arrested him, and on giving him a copy thereof. In such case, the validity of the bankruptcy was immaterial; it was sufficient if the party was a bankrupt de facto, although not de jure. Norton v. Walker, 3 Ex. 480; 6 D. & L. 204; 18 L. J., Ex. 234.

Gaoler not Liable for Detention of Bankrupt.—The 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 113, which made "any officer" who shall detain a bankrupt in custody after he shall have produced his protection liable to penalties, did not apply to the gaoler or governor of a prison where the bankrupt was taken after his arrest, but only to the officer actually arresting the bankrupt. Myers v. Veitch, 4 L. R., Q. B. 649; 38 L. J., Q. B. 316; 20 L. T. 847; 17 W. R. 918.

Right of Bankrupt to Appeal against Refusal of Discharge.—A bankrupt who had unsuccessfully applied to be discharged from imprisonment renewed his application after his last examination:—Held, that it was to be regarded as an original application, and that its refusal gave a new right of appeal. Jones, Ex parte, 3 De G. & S. 671.

6. ALLOWANCE TO BANKRUPT.

The power given by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 194, to a commissioner, of making an allowance to a bankrupt, is not taken away by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 109, except where the creditors come to an actual resolution under the latter section. Ellerton, Ex parte, 33 L. J., Bk. 32; 10 Jur., N. S. 502; 10 L. T. 317, 722.

The words "up to the time of passing his last examination," contained in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 109, mean up to the time appointed, under s. 140, for a bankrupt to pass his last examination; and therefore, where a bankrupt had failed to pass his last examination at the first meeting, the allowance made to him by the creditors ceased. Osborne, Ex parte, 34 L. J., Bk. 15; 10 Jur., N. S. 1137; 11 L. T. 356; 13 W. R. 146.

If the creditors present at the first dividend meeting do not determine whether any and what allowance shall be made to a bankrupt out of his estate, pursuant to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 174, the court has no power under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 195, to order the statutory allowance therein stated to be paid to the bankrupt. Lovell, Ex parte, 1 L. R., Ch. 134; 35 L. J., Bk. 14; 13 L. T. 451; 14 W. R. 186.

Where Joint and Separate Estates.—Under a joint and separate fiat, a bankrupt's allowance is to be calculated on the amount of his separate estate, together with his share of the joint estate, not on the gross amount of the joint estate. Lomas, Ex parte, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 525; 4 Deac. & Chit. 240.

A partner is entitled to an allowance, although his separate estate does not contribute to the joint estate, so as to form the statutable amount for allowance. Morris, Ex parte, 1 Mont. 505; 1 Deac. & Chit. 526; S. P., Gibbs, Ex parte, 1 Mont. 105.

A., B., and C. were bankrupts; their joint estate paid 9s. in the pound; the separate assets of A. and B. contributed sufficient to make a dividend of 15s. in the pound; but C.'s separate estate contributed nothing:—Held, nevertheless, that he was entitled to an allowance. Ib.

Where A., being one of three partners, had paid 20s. in the pound on his separate estate, and 12s. 6d. in the pound had been paid on the joint estate; but on the separate estates of the other two partners a sufficient dividend had not been paid:—Held, that under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 129, A. was entitled to an allowance for his sole use, of five per cent., not exceeding 400l. Minchin, Ex parte, 1 Mont. & Mac. 135.

7. RIGHTS OF BANKRUPT.

a. Submitting to Arbitration.

A submission to arbitration by a bankrupt, though of matters which have passed to his assignees, is not void, and payment of costs pursuant to the award may be enforced against him. Milnes, In re, 15 C. B. 451; 2 C. L. R. 232; 24 L. J., C. P. 29; 18 Jur. 1108.

b. Suing as Trustee.

Action to recover an average loss on a policy of insurance on goods from the Havannah to a market in Europe, at 60s. per cent. premium, to return 23s. 9d. per cent. if the risk ended in the United Kingdom, and less if at other places in the north of Europe. Plea, the bankruptcy of the plaintiff before action. Replication, that on his bankruptcy he sold the goods and transferred the policy and his right and interest to recover for the loss of the goods to F., and delivered the policy to him. Rejoinder, that the cargo was delivered, and the risk thereon ended, before the bankruptcy, and that the right to have a return of premium was not transferred from the plaintiff before his bankruptcy:—Held, that the two same instrument, the bankrupt was entitled to sue for average loss as trustee for his vendee, that being a cause of action in which he had no beneficial interest at the time of his bankruptcy. Boddington v. Castelli (in error), 1 El. & Bl. 879; 1 C. L. R. 281; 23 L. J., Q. B. 31; 15 Jur. 781—Ex. Ch. Affirming, 8 C. 1 El. & Bl. 66; 22 L. J., Q. B. 5; 17 Jur. 457.

In an action for rent upon an indenture of lease, the defendant pleaded the bankruptcy of the plaintiff, who replied that he let the premises to the defendant as trustee for J. S., and that he had no beneficial interest therein, and was suing as such trustee.—Held, that his being trustee was not material, as he had shewn by parol that he had no beneficial interest in the premises. Houghton v. Kærig, 18 C. B. 235.

So, he may sue as a trustee for his assignees, and the defendant cannot object, unless they interpose. Cumming v. Roebuck, Holt, 172.

Though he is also a cestui que trust under the same instrument. Webster v. Scales, 4 Dougl.

c. Suing in respect of Contracts.

Contracts made after Fiat.]—A bankrupt has a good title to all property acquired, and a right to sue on all contracts made with him between the fiat and the allowance of his certificate; and also after the allowance of his certificate under a second fiat against him, under which his estate has not paid 15s. in the pound, unless his assignees interfere and claim the property, or the benefit of such contracts. Herbert v. Sayer, 2 D. & L. 49; 5 Q. B. 965; 13 L. J., Q. B. 209; 8 Jur. 812.

—Where in Course of Bankrupt's Trade.]

Action for work and labour as a surgeon and apothecary, and for medicines. Plea, his bankruptcy, and that the debt was claimed by the assignees. Replication, that the labour was personal labour bestowed after the bankruptcy, and done for the necessary present maintenance of the plaintiff and his family; and the medicines were purchased out of the earnings of his personal labour done after his bankruptcy; and that the medicines were increased in value by the plaintiff's personal labour, and were found and administered for the necessary present maintenance of himself and his family. Rejoinder, that the labour was not personal, nor the medicines purchased out of the earnings of personal labour, nor the medicines found or administered for the necessary present maintenance of the plaintiff and his family. The plaintiff was a general medical practitioner; he had filed a declaration of insolvency, and was an uncertificated bankrupt. By an arrangement with a friend, who had purchased his stock of medicines, he continued in possession of them on credit, carried on his business as before, and was supplied with fresh medicines on credit from wholesale houses. The plaintiff attended the defendant, giving the benefit of his skill, and furnishing the medicines which he thought necessary.—Held, that the plaintiff was carrying on his business as a medical practitioner, and therefore the replication was not proved. Elliott v. Clayton, 16 Q. B. 581; 20 L. J., Q. B. 217; 15 Jur. 293.

Goods Sold.]—The price of goods sold by an

After the bankruptcy of A., and before his certificate, B., one of his creditors, purchased goods from him. In an action by A., after he had obtained his certificate, for the price of the goods, the old debt could not be set off, being barred by the certificate. Id.

Money Lent.]—An uncertificated bankrupt may maintain an action for money lent. Evans v. Brown, 1 Esp. 170.

Unless his assignees interfere to prevent him. Chippendale v. Tomlinson, 7 East, 57, n.; 4 Dougl. 318.

Work and Materials.]—And for work and labour for his personal services, and for materials found, as well as for the mere work and labour. Silk v. Osborn, 1 Esp. 140.

An undischarged bankrupt may maintain an action, in respect of a debt due to him for work and labour done after his bankruptcy, if the trustee does not interfere. Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B. 965) followed. Jameson v. Brick and Stone Company, Limited, 4 Q. B. D. 208; 48 L. J., Q. B. 249; 39 L. T. 594; 27 W. R. 221—C. A.

Where Assignees claim Benefit of Contract.]

—It is a good plea to an action on a promissory note and for money lent, that the plaintiff is an uncertificated bankrupt, and that his assignees required the defendant to pay them the money claimed and debts. Kitchen v. Bartsch, 7 East, 53; 3 Smith, 58.

Earnings of Personal Labour by undischarged Bankrupt—Adding Trustee as Plaintiff.]

—The plaintiff, who was an architect, sued for remuneration in respect of employment under a contract made in 1877, and for damages for an alleged wrongful dismissal from such employment in 1880. The plaintiff was adjudicated bankrupt in 1878, and had never obtained his discharge.—Held, that the cause of action for remuneration and damages passed to the trustee, and that the proper course was to add him as co-plaintiff in the action, and give him the conduct of the action. Emden v. Carter, 17 Ch. D. 768; 51 L. J., Ch. 41; 44 L. T. 536—C. A. Affirming 8 C. 17 Ch. D. 169; 50 L. J., Ch. 492; 44 L. T. 344; 29 W. R. 600.

Carrying on Business for Benefit of Estate—

Right to Remuneration.]—If the assignees of a bankrupt manufacturer employ him in carrying on the manufacture for the benefit of the estate, and pay him money from time to time, this is evidence of such a contract between him and his assignees as will enable him to recover from them a reasonable compensation for his work and labour. Coles v. Barrow, 4 Taunt. 754; 2 Rose, 277.

Staying Proceedings under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 136.]

—If the drawer of a bill of exchange which had been duly accepted, indorsed it to another for the purpose of enabling him to raise money upon it, which the latter did by indorsing it over; and before the bill became due, the first indorsee was declared bankrupt and obtained his certificate, and an action was commenced against him by the drawer, the court would stay the proceedings under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 126. Heigh v. Jackson, 1 H. & H. 167; 2 Jur. 777.

d. Suing in respect of Torts.

Arising out of Contract—Wrongful Dismissal.]

—A. entered into an agreement with B. & C. to serve them for seven years, at the rate of three guineas weekly, the party making default to pay to the other 5,000*l.* by way or in nature of specific damages. A. was dismissed; he became bankrupt, and after the bankruptcy brought an action on the agreement, to which B. and C. pleaded his bankruptcy:—Held, that this plea was an answer, for that the right of action in respect of this breach of the agreement passed to his assignees. Beckham v. Drake (in error), 2 H. L. Cas. 579; 13 Jur. 921. Affirming S. C., in Ex. Ch., 11 M. & W. 315; 12 L. J., Ex. 486; 7 Jur. 204.

Trespass to Land—Personal Injury.—Action for breaking and entering the dwelling-house and garden of the plaintiff, and creating a noise and disturbance therein, and damaging the doors of the house, and the trees of the garden, and seizing his goods, and exposing them to sale on the premises, without his leave; whereby he and his family were disturbed and annoyed in the possession of the dwelling-house and garden, and the plaintiff was prevented from carrying on his business. Plea, in bar of the further maintenance of the action, that the plaintiff became bankrupt after the action, and that an assignee had been appointed, who accepted the appointment; whereby the causes of action became vested in the assignee:—Held, that the plea was bad; and that, the primary personal injury to the bankrupt being the principal and essential cause of action, it still remained in the bankrupt, and did not pass to his assignee. Rogers v. Spence (in error), 13 M. & W. 571; 12 C. & F. 700; 15 L. J., Ex. 49; S. C., 2 D., N. S. 999; 11 M. & W. 191; 12 L. J., Ex. 252.

—Seizing Goods.—An uncertificated bankrupt cannot maintain an action of trespass against subsequent creditors for breaking open his house, and seizing his after-acquired property, although the assignees do not ratify the seizure, and although they were unknown to the defendants until after the commencement of the action. Hull v. Pickersgill, 3 Moore, 612; 1 B. & B. 282. See Forster v. Bates, 12 M. & W. 226.

e. Future Property.

Title good against all except Assignees.—Property acquired by an uncertificated bankrupt after an act of bankruptcy committed by him, does not vest absolutely in his assignees, although they have a right to claim it; for if they remain passive, and do not make any claim, the bankrupt has a right to such property as against all other persons. Drayton v. Dale, 3 D. & R. 534; 2 B. & C. 293.

—May maintain Trover.—An uncertificated bankrupt has a right to goods acquired by him since his bankruptcy, against all the world but his assignees, and may maintain trover for them against a stranger. Webb v. Fox, 7 T. R. 391;

If an order for the delivery of goods in the hands of a third person is given to an uncertificated bankrupt, in payment of a debt accrued subsequently to his bankruptcy, he may maintain trover for them. Fowler v. Down, 1 B. & P. 44.

Certificated Bankrupt—Collusion.—The after-acquired goods of a certificated bankrupt having been taken in execution for a debt which might have been proved under the commission, the court set aside the fi. fa., and refused to put him to an audita querela, though it was stated that the bankruptcy was collusive, and that, in an action by the assignees, a jury had found against them as to the fact of trading. Barrow v. Poile, 1 B. & Ad. 629.

Assignees allowing Bankrupt to retain Possession.—Where the assignees of an uncertificated bankrupt, by agreement, for a valuable consideration paid to them by a third person, had allowed the bankrupt to remain in possession of his furniture, but which, notwithstanding, they afterwards seized:—Held, that they were warranted in so doing, on the ground that an uncertificated bankrupt cannot acquire property for himself, nor is he entitled to retain any property against his assignees. Nias v. Adamson, 3 B. & A. 225.

Under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71.—After the close of a bankruptcy, property falling in to the bankrupt belongs to him, and not to the trustee, although the bankrupt has not obtained an order of discharge. Petit, In re, 1 Ch. D. 478; 45 L. J., Bk. 63; 34 L. T. 51; 24 W. R. 359.

When the creditors of a liquidating debtor have passed a resolution granting him his discharge, his after-acquired property does not vest in the trustee for the benefit of the creditors, but belongs to the debtor; although no resolution fixing the close of the liquidation has been passed. Bennett's Trusts, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 490; 32 L. T. 652; 23 W. R. 822—C. A. Reversing S. C., 19 L. R., Eq. 245; 44 L. R., Ch. 244; 31 L. T. 720; 23 W. R. 229.

When the creditors of a liquidating debtor have passed a resolution granting him his discharge, his after-acquired property does not vest in the trustee, but belongs to the debtor, although no resolution closing the liquidation has been passed. Ebbs v. Boulnois, 10 L. R., Ch. 479; 44 L. J., Ch. 691; 32 L. T. 650; 33 ib. 342; 23 W. R. 820.

An undischarged bankrupt died intestate within three years after the close of his bankruptcy, having in the interval acquired fresh property and contracted fresh debts. Only a small dividend had been paid in the bankruptcy and the bankrupt had not, after the close of the bankruptcy, made any further payments to the creditors who had proved. An action was brought by one of the new creditors to administer the bankrupt's estate. The estate was sufficient to pay the costs of the action, to pay the new creditors in full, and to leave a surplus. This surplus was claimed by the old creditors:—Held, that the administratrix was entitled to the surplus, and that the old creditors had no right to it. Smith, In re, Green v. Smith (No. 2), 24 Ch. D. 672; 52 L. J., Ch. 921; 49 L. T. 297.

property acquired by him after the close of the bankruptcy, except such rights as are given to them by s. 54, and those rights cannot be enforced after the death of the bankrupt. Sect. 12 applies to property acquired by an undischarged bankrupt after the close of the bankruptcy as well as to property divisible among the creditors in the bankruptcy. Id.

After the close, on the 1st of December, 1874, of a bankruptcy, the debtor who had been made bankrupt became entitled, under the will of a testatrix who died in 1875, and under a decree dated the 8th of January, 1878, in a suit for the administration of her estate, the property amounting to about 20,000*l.* During the three years which elapsed after the close of the bankruptcy, the debtor did not pay 10*s.* in the pound, and he had not obtained an order of discharge. On the 26th of February, 1878, a creditor, whose name and debt appeared in the bankrupt's statement of affairs, but who had not proved before the close of the bankruptcy, sent in a proof of his debt to the registrar, who had become the trustee:—Held, that the proof was good, and that the creditor, notwithstanding that his debt was not proved before the close of the bankruptcy, was entitled to apply for leave to enforce payment of his debt as a judgment debt against the property of the debtor, under sub-a. 2 of s. 54 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Lancaster Banking Corporation, Ex parte, Westby, In re, 10 Ch. D. 776; 48 L. J., Bk. 89; 39 L. T. 673; 27 W. R. 292.

Upon the granting of an application for the sanction of the court, as required by sub-a. 2 of s. 54 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, a notice must be inserted in the Gazette, as prescribed by Form 70 in the Schedule to the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870. Id.

Allowance out of Property to Bankrupt—Bill of Sale.]—B., an undischarged bankrupt, to whom his creditors had given, by a resolution duly passed, a certain quantity of his furniture, assigned that furniture by bill of sale to the plaintiff, and afterwards sent it to the defendant, an auctioneer, who sold it and paid the money received to the bankrupt. In an action for conversion—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the furniture, for that the bankrupt could, under the resolution of his creditors, dispose of it to the plaintiff, and that there was no jus tertii which the defendant could set up. Brown v. Hickinbotham, 50 L. J., Q. B. 426.

Furniture left in Bankrupt's Possession—Bill of Sale.]—A trustee under a liquidation, who, with the authority of the creditors, permits the debtor to remain in possession of his furniture as apparent owner, does not, in the absence of knowledge that the debtor was holding himself out as the real owner and dealing with it as such, forfeit his right to it so long as there has been no closing of the liquidation or order of discharge; and his right to it and to any after-acquired property cannot be defeated by a bill of sale given by the debtor subsequently to the liquidation. Maggie v. Imperial Discount Company, 3 Ch. D. 711; 47 L. J., Q. B. 119; 38 L. T. 309; 26 W. R. 343—C. A.

cannot be followed by the trustee, though the person to whom the money was paid has notice of the bankruptcy. Dewhurst, Ex parte, Van-Iske, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 185; 41 L. J., Bk. 18; 25 L. T. 731; 20 W. R. 172.

A bankrupt, who had not obtained his order of discharge, took a furnished house at 5*l.* per week from a person who had notice of the bankruptcy, on the terms of paying six months' rent in advance if required. Having obtained 200*l.* as compensation for being turned out of an appointment which he had taken since the bankruptcy, he paid to the landlord out of this sum 130*l.* as the six months' rent, the landlord having required payment:—Held, that though the trustee in bankruptcy could have intercepted the 200*l.* and required it to be paid to him, he could not follow any part of it into the hands of the landlord. Id.

A bankrupt, who had never obtained his order of discharge or passed his final examination, procured employment as editor of a weekly newspaper without the permission or knowledge of his trustee, and six years after the bankruptcy he was awarded by the decree of a competent court 104*l.* as six months' salary in lieu of proper notice of dismissal:—Held, that the trustee could claim this money before it was paid to him, as against any creditors, subsequently to and without notice of the bankruptcy, for that, first, the trustee had been guilty of no breach of duty towards such creditors, so as to estop him from setting up his claim; and, secondly, that the money was not the proceeds of the bankrupt's personal labour subsequent to his bankruptcy, but a compensation for the breach of a contract, which became part of his estate in bankruptcy. Wedding v. Oliphant, 1 Q. B. D. 145; 45 L. J. Q. B. 173; 33 L. T. 837; 24 W. R. 246.

Damages recovered in Action of Tort.]—Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, as before it, damages in an action for a personal tort recovered by an undischarged bankrupt do not pass to his trustee. Vine, Ex parte, Wilson, In re, 8 Ch. D. 364; 47 L. J., Bk. 116; 38 L. T. 730; 26 W. R. 582. Affirming 38 L. T. 327; 26 W. R. 482—C. A.

Though if the bankrupt had accumulated the money and invested it in property, the trustee might be entitled to the property, yet he cannot intercept the damages or prevent the bankrupt from expending them in the maintenance of himself and his family. Id.

Property acquired by Fraud.]—A liquidating debtor who had not obtained his order of discharge engaged in trade. He ordered some goods from a wholesale house, who sent the goods to him in the belief that the order had come from a firm with whom they were acquainted, and whose name resembled that under which the debtor traded. The trustee claimed the goods:—Held, that the debtor had acquired no property in the goods, and that the trustee was bound to return them to the persons who had sent them. Reed, In re, Barnett, Ex parte, 3 Ch. D. 123; 45 L. J., Bk. 120; 34 L. T. 684; 24 W. R. 904.

After Suspension of Bankruptcy Proceedings no Discharge.]—A resolution of the creditors of a bankrupt, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, a 110, suspending proceedings in the bankruptcy, does not without the order of the court operate as a discharge of the bankrupt, and in the absence of such order any after-acquired property still vests in the assignee. Carter, In re, Carter, Ex parte, 2 Ch. D. 806; 45 L. J., Bk. 145; 35 L. T. 388—C. A.

Second Liquidation—Sale of Estate to Debtor by Trustee of First—Right of Trustee of Second.]

—An undischarged debtor went into business again, and afterwards filed a second liquidation petition. His creditors, old and new, empowered the trustee to sell the debtor's estate to him for 475*l.*, upon payment of which sum he was to be entitled to his discharge. The money was paid, and was then claimed by the trustee under the first liquidation. The court decided in favour of that claim. The second trustee thereupon claimed the debtor's stock-in-trade and effects:—Held, that the debtor, having paid the 475*l.*, was free from the claims of all his creditors, and was entitled to retain whatever property he had acquired. Caughey, Ex parte, 4 Ch. D. 533; 46 L. J., Bk. 18; 36 L. T. 39; 25 W. R. 308.

f. Surplus.

Right to Account.—A certificated bankrupt, who shews the probability of a surplus, is entitled to an account against his assignees. Malachy, Ex parte, 1 Mont., D. & D. 353; 4 Jur. 1092.

Right to Surplus cannot be attached under Garnishee Order.—The surplus money due to a bankrupt out of his estate after payment of 20*s.* in the pound to the creditors under the bankruptcy, is not a debt due to the bankrupt from the official assignee (though the bankrupt's estate remains vested in him) which can be attached under the garnishee clauses of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, by a judgment creditor of the bankrupt. Hunter v. Greensill, 8 L. R., C. P. 24; 42 L. J., C. P. 55; 27 L. T. 827; 21 W. R. 263.

Right of Mortgagee of Surplus.—A trustee in bankruptcy is not a trustee of the surplus of the estate for the bankrupt. The bankrupt, while undischarged, has no interest in the surplus beyond a mere hope or expectation, and he cannot, by assigning the surplus by way of security, give to his assignee any right to interfere in the administration of the estate, as, for instance, by examining an alleged creditor with respect to his claim. Sheffield, Ex parte, Austin, In re, 10 Ch. D. 434; 40 L. T. 16; 27 W. R. 622—C. A.

g. Setting aside Irregular Proceedings.

The interest which a bankrupt has in increasing the divisible fund under the fiat is sufficient to enable him to set aside an execution levied on his goods against good faith. Pinches v. Harvey, 1 G. & D. 236; 1 Q. B. 868; 6 Jur. 389.

A defendant who has become bankrupt and obtained his certificate after trial and verdict against him, has a right to set it aside for a want of a sufficient notice of trial, although his estate is insolvent, and his assignees are no parties to the application. Shepherd v. Thompson, 9 M. & W. 110; 1 D., N. S. 345.

Where an audit<sup>a</sup> querel<sup>a</sup> had been irregularly issued, and the plaintiff in the action subsequently became bankrupt, he was permitted to move to set aside the writ and proceedings, without shewing any assent on the part of the official assignee. Dearie v. Ker, 4 Ex. 82; 7 D. & L. 231; 18 L. J., Ex. 448.

Trustee compromising Claims on Property of Bankrupt.]

—A mortgagee of property of a bankrupt, who had foreclosed before the bankruptcy, sent in a claim three years after the commencement of the bankruptcy to prove for 21,000*l.* as the balance of his debt after giving credit for the value of his security, treating the foreclosure as re-opened. The trustee, believing that the claimant's right to re-open the foreclosure could only be decided by a very expensive litigation, effected a compromise with him with the assent of the creditors, by the terms of which compromise his claim was to be admitted for 20,000*l.*, all the other creditors were first to receive 18*s.* in the pound, then the claimant was to receive 18*s.* in the pound, and afterwards he and the other creditors were to share pari passu in the remaining assets. But for this claim the estate would have been sufficient to pay all the other creditors in full and to leave a large surplus for the bankrupt. The bankrupt disputed the validity of the claim altogether, and applied to the Court of Bankruptcy for an order for the examination of the claimant in respect of his claim:—Held, that the bankrupt was entitled to the order asked for, as the compromise was one which was only detrimental to the bankrupt, and was not such a one as the trustee could effect under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 27, sub-s. 3. Austin, Ex parte, 4 Ch. D. 13; 46 L. J., Bk. 1; 35 L. T. 529; 25 W. R. 51—C. A.

h. Appealing against Injunction.

A defendant, who had become bankrupt since the trial of the action, appealed against an injunction restraining him from selling certain articles with labels or wrappers in imitation of those used by the plaintiff, and from using a certain name, either alone or in combination with his own or any other name, in the manufacture of these articles in such manner as to lead to the belief that the articles made by the defendant had been manufactured by the plaintiff. The trustee in the bankruptcy did not join in the appeal:—Held, that, notwithstanding the bankruptcy, the defendant was entitled to appeal from the injunction, inasmuch as it imposed a personal liability upon him. Dence v. Mason, 41 L. T. 573—C. A.

i. Taking Part in Winding-up Proceedings.

Application for Proceedings to be taken against Director—Locus standi of Contributory who is an Undischarged Bankrupt.]

—An undischarged bankrupt, although on the list of contributories, is a mere stranger to the winding-up proceedings, and has no locus standi to apply therein that proceedings may be ordered to be taken against a director for money alleged to be improperly received by him. Cape Breton Company, In re, 45 L. T. 395—C. A.

j. Costs.

Immunity from Payment of Costs.]—No personal order can be made against a bankrupt for payment of costs of an unsuccessful appeal. Jacobs, Ex parte, Jacobs, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 34.

Trustee—Breach of Trust.]—A defaulting trustee is entitled to his costs of a suit for the execution of the trusts incurred after his bankruptcy. Boucyer v. Griffin, 9 L. R., Eq. 340; 39 L. J., Ch. 159.

Where the trustee of a settlement became bankrupt shortly after the commencement of an action for the execution of the trusts, and an order was made for payment by him into court of a sum of money certified to be due from him to the estate, he was held entitled to his costs of the action, though he was not to receive them until he had made good his default. Lewis v. Trask, 21 Ch. D. 862.

In an administration action one defendant was an executor. He was a defaulting trustee under a settlement. After the action was commenced he was adjudicated bankrupt, and a trustee in bankruptcy was appointed and made a defendant:—Held, that the defaulting trustee was entitled to be paid his costs incurred after his bankruptcy. Clare v. Clare, Clare, In re, 21 Ch. D. 865; 51 L. J., Ch. 553; 46 L. T. 851; 30 W. R. 789.

Where, after the commencement of an administration action against a defaulting executor or trustee, he becomes bankrupt, and, under s. 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, his debt remains undischarged by the bankruptcy, he is not entitled to be paid any of his costs of the action, whether incurred before or after the bankruptcy, until he has made good his default. But where the debt of the defaulting executor or trustee has been discharged by his bankruptcy—as where the bankruptcy has taken place prior to the Bankruptcy Act, 1869; or where, after the bankruptcy, his debt remaining undischarged, he renders services in the action in his character of executor or trustee, he is entitled to be paid his costs incurred subsequently to his bankruptcy, though his prior costs must be set off against his debt. Lewis v. Trask (21 Ch. D. 862) followed. Clare v. Clare (21 Ch. D. 865) not followed. Basham, In re, Hannay v. Basham, 23 Ch. D. 195; 52 L. J., Ch. 408; 48 L. T. 476; 31 W. R. 743.

Two executors, defendants in an administration action, were represented by the same solicitor, to whom they had given a joint retainer, and one of them was a debtor to the estate and became bankrupt after the passing of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869:—Held, that the solvent executor was entitled to be paid his separate costs out of the estate, and that the separate costs of the insolvent executor must be set off against the debt due from him to the estate; but that whether the whole or what part of the common costs of both executors was to be paid out of the estate was a question for the taxing master to determine according to the settled practice of the taxing-office. McEwan v. Crombie, Porter v. Grant, 49 L. T. 499; 32 W. R. 115.

By the chief clerk's certificate, a sum was found due from the estate to the two executors jointly:—Held, that an inquiry must be directed to ascertain whether that sum was, as between the executors, payable wholly to one, or how much was payable to one, and how much to the other; and that the part (if any) found due to the insolvent executor must be set off against the debt due from him to the estate. Id.

k. To Demand Delivery of Bill of Costs.

Rights.]—A bankrupt is not during the bankruptcy a party interested in the estate in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy so as to entitle him after his discharge, and although his creditors have been paid in full, to demand delivery and taxation of a bill of costs paid by the trustee out of the estate, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73 (The Solicitors Act, 1843), ss. 39, 40. Leadbitter and Harvey, In re, 39 L. T. 12. Affirmed, 10 Ch. D. 338; 48 L. J., Ch. 242; 39 L. T. 286; 27 W. R. 267—C. A.

8. TRADING BY BANKRUPT.

Gives Title good against all except Assignees.]

—If an uncertificated bankrupt carries on trade, and sells a vessel of which he is the ostensible owner, to A., A. has a good title against all persons but the assignees. Laroche v. Wakeman, Peake, 140.

Knowledge of Assignees.]—A., an uncertificated bankrupt, having been employed as manager of an hotel, agreed to purchase the stock and goodwill from B., who knew of the bankruptcy, and who agreed to lend A. money to purchase the stock and other trade effects, but on the understanding that the effects were to be assigned to B. as security for the debt. Accordingly B. lent to A. the money, taking A.'s bond for the amount, and the same day A. purchased the effects, and assigned the same as a security to B. The official assignee knew that A. was carrying on business on his own account, but did not know of the transaction:—Held, that the loan, purchase and mortgage were one transaction, and nothing passed to the official assignee except what was subject to A.'s lien. Kerakoose v. Brooks, 3 L. T. 712—P. C.

Carrying on former Business.—Right to Proceeds.]—A furniture broker, being an uncertificated bankrupt, was employed to remove goods, in the course of which business he employed several men and vans, supplied packing-cases, repaired furniture, and provided materials for this purpose, and other articles to a trifling amount:—Held, that the debt which thereby accrued was not in respect of personal labour, but was claimable by the assignees. Crofton v. Poole, 1 B. & A. 568.

Rights of Creditors without Notice.]—If a trustee allows a bankrupt to trade for the benefit of the creditors, the rights of an execution creditor in respect of a debt contracted after and without notice of the bankruptcy will be preferred to the rights of the trustee. Engleback v. Nixon, 10 L. R., C. P. 645; 44 L. J., C. P. 396; 33 L. T. 831.

Although such rights are purely equitable, a court of law will recognise them upon an interpleader issue. Id.

An advertising agent became bankrupt in 1870, and not having yet obtained his discharge, was allowed to carry on his trade for the benefit of his creditors, and in the course of such trade contracted a debt, in respect of which the defendant, who had no notice of the bankruptcy when he gave credit, obtained judgment, and issued execution against him, in pursuance of which the sheriff levied upon his furniture. Possession of the house in which the furniture was had been yielded up to an agent of the trustee of the bankrupt a few days before the sheriff entered, but the bankrupt, who had bought the furniture with the proceeds of the permitted trading, had not disclosed his ownership of it to the trustee until about a fortnight before that time:—Held, on an interpleader issue that the rights of the execution creditor ought to be preferred to the right of the trustee. Ib.

Without Knowledge of Trustee.]—In liquidation proceedings there is no such duty of looking after an undischarged debtor imposed upon the creditors or upon the trustee as will make them guilty of laches if the debtor trades again without interference on their part, unless they are aware of what he is doing; and, in the absence of positive evidence that they had such knowledge, they will be held entitled to the property acquired by the debtor in the course of his subsequent trading in priority to new creditors who have come in and proved under a second liquidation petition. Ford, Ex parte, Caughey, In re, 1 Ch. D. 521; 45 L. J., Bk. 96; 34 L. T. 634; 24 W. R. 590—C. A. Affirming 45 L. J., Bk. 19; 33 L. T. 482.

An undischarged liquidating debtor, being a master painter, took a job in the way of his trade, upon which, besides his own labour, he employed three workmen, and supplied the necessary materials. He received for the job 49l., of which he stated in evidence that the cost of the materials was 10l., and of the hired labour 15l.:—Held, that the debtor was carrying on his business, and that the entire proceeds belonged to his trustee. Dowling, In re, Banks, Ex parte, 4 Ch. D. 689; 46 L. J., Bk. 74; 36 L. T. 117; 25 W. R. 515.

Secured Creditor giving further Credit on Representation by Trustee—Right to apply Proceeds of Security.]—An undischarged debtor, with the knowledge and assent of his creditors, and of the trustee under the liquidation, continued trading, and dealt with his property as his own. A fully-secured creditor, who had not proved under the liquidation, relying on the statement of the trustee that the debtor was a free man, continued to deal with and give him credit. The security was subsequently realized, and a surplus remained in the hands of the creditor, which the trustee under the liquidation claimed:—Held, that such creditor was entitled, as against the trustee, to deduct from such surplus the debts due to him from the debtor in respect of the subsequent trading. Dysart, In re, Bolland, Ex parte, 9 Ch. D. 312; 47 L. J., Bk. 74; 38 L. T. 693; 26 W. R. 807—C. A.

Goods supplied on Bankrupt's Guarantee, but in Name of Son—Right of Assignees.]—An uncertificated bankrupt hired a shop; goods were supplied in the name of his son, but principally upon the father's guarantee:—Held, that his assignees were liable to an action of trespass at the suit of the son, for seizing them as the goods of the bankrupt. Davis v. Living, Holt, 275.

9. REMOVAL OF BANKRUPT TRUSTEE.

A trustee who becomes bankrupt ought to be removed from his trusteeship whenever the nature of the trust is such that he has to receive or deal with trust funds so that he can misappropriate them. Barker, In re, 1 Ch. D. 43; 45 L. J., Ch. 52; 24 W. R. 264.

The court having power under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 117, by reference to the Trustee Act, 1850, s. 32, to appoint a new trustee in substitution for a bankrupt, is the Court of Chancery. Coombes v. Brookes, 12 L. R., Eq. 61; 41 L. J., Ch. 114; 25 L. T. 198; 19 W. R. 1002.

10. BANKRUPT HOLDING POWER OF ATTORNEY.

Bankruptcy determines a power of attorney. Markwick v. Hardingham, 15 Ch. D. 339; 43 L. T. 647; 29 W. R. 361—C. A.

11. ACTIONS AGAINST BANKRUPT.

Debt incurred by Means of Fraud—Pending Liquidation Proceedings.]—In 1868 G. fraudulently obtained money from R. for investment, and appropriated it to his own use. In 1870 he gave R. promissory notes for the amount, upon which he paid interest from 1870 till 1879. In 1879 he filed a liquidation petition, and a trustee was appointed. Pending the liquidation proceedings, R. brought an action to recover the money:—Held, that the acceptance of the promissory notes and the interest had not changed the original character of the debt or substituted for it a simple contract debt. Ross v. Gutteridge, 52 L. J., Ch. 280; 48 L. T. 117.

A creditor is entitled to take proceedings and recover judgment against a liquidating debtor for a debt incurred by means of fraud while the liquidation proceedings are pending, although the judgment cannot be enforced until the debtor obtains his discharge. Ib.

12. PROCEEDINGS AGAINST ESTATE OF DECEASED BANKRUPT.

Sect. 54 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, does not enable the court to sanction proceedings under it against the estate of a deceased undischarged bankrupt. Kelly, Ex parte, Simmons, In re, 7 Ch. D. 161; 47 L. J., Bk. 30; 37 L. T. 584; 26 W. R. 120—C. A.

In 1873 a bankruptcy, under which no assets had been realized, was closed, but the bankrupt did not obtain an order of discharge. In April, 1877, the bankrupt died, leaving assets of which he had disposed by will. The petitioning creditor, then, with notice to the executors of the will, applied to the Bankruptcy Court for leave to enforce his debt against the estate of the bankrupt as a judgment debt, or for liberty to institute proceedings in the Chancery Division for the administration of the bankrupt's estate:—Held, that s. 54 did not enable the court to sanction proceedings against the estate of a deceased bankrupt, and that, as the creditor could commence proceedings for administration without the leave of the court, such leave was unnecessary. Ib.

13. PROCEDURE IN ACTIONS TO WHICH BANKRUPT IS PARTY.

Bankruptcy of Sole Plaintiff—One Defendant appointed Trustee.]—When a sole plaintiff has become bankrupt, and a defendant is appointed his trustee, that defendant may obtain an order dismissing the bill with costs against him, he undertaking not to take any proceedings for enforcing the order, except by proving for the amount of his costs in the bankruptcy. Abbottson v. Gregg, 23 L. T. 796; 19 W. R. 340.

Bankruptcy of Defendant after Notice of Trial.]—A defendant became bankrupt after service of notice of trial, and the common order of revivor was then made against his trustee, and served on him. The trustee did not enter an appearance. Notice was served on him that the action was restored to the paper for trial, but he did not appear at the trial:—Held, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to file the pleadings or a notice of motion for judgment as against the trustee under r. 6 of Ord. XIX. of the Rules of S. C. Chorlton v. Dickie, 13 Ch. D. 160; 49 L. J., Ch. 40; 41 L. T. 467; 28 W. R. 228.

Two Trustees—Continuing Action by One.]—When a sole plaintiff becomes bankrupt he cannot continue the action. If there are two trustees in bankruptcy, and one refuses to go on, the other may have an order as of course to continue the action and make his co-trustee a defendant. Jackson v. North Eastern Railway Company, 5 Ch. D. 844; 46 L. J., Ch. 723; 36 L. T. 779; 25 W. R. 518—C. A.

Reviving Suits by Assignee—Liability for Costs already Incurred.]—A plaintiff became bankrupt, leaving costs in the suit, which he had been ordered to pay prior to the bankruptcy, unpaid; his assignee revived the suit. The court, upon motion by defendants, stayed all further proceedings in the suit until payment of the costs by the assignee. Cook v. Hathway, 39 L. J., Ch. 99.

Filing Bills in Equity.]—An uncertificated bankrupt is incapable of suing in the Court of Chancery, though the bill charges fraud against all the defendants, including amongst them the creditors' assignee. Observations on demurring to a bill by an uncertificated bankrupt, charging personal fraud. Bill dismissed, but, inasmuch as the charges of fraud (which had been answered) were held to have been sustained, without costs. Motion v. Mojen, 14 L. R., Eq. 202; 41 L. J., Ch. 596; 20 W. R. 861.

A bankrupt cannot file a bill without previously applying to the Court of Bankruptcy on the subject. Payne v. Dicker, 6 L. R., Ch. 578; 24 L. T. 898; 19 W. R. 987. Varying 24 L. T. 492.

When a demurrer to a bill by a bankrupt was allowed, but without costs and with liberty to amend:—Held, that, under the circumstances, costs ought to have been given, and liberty to amend refused. Ib.

Conduct of Proceedings—Receiver—Bankrupt Administrator.]—An action was commenced in the court of one of the vice-chancellors for the administration of the estate of a testator, against the administrator with the will annexed. The administrator, being interested in that capacity in the estate of another testator, commenced an action for the administration of his estate in the court of a different vice-chancellor, and then became bankrupt. The plaintiff in the first suit moved in that suit that a receiver of the estate might be appointed, and that the plaintiff might be permitted to prosecute the second action in the name of the administrator:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the order asked for, and that it was properly made in the court to which the first action was attached. In such a case it is not the modern practice to permit the receiver to carry on an action in the name of a bankrupt executor or administrator. Hopkins, In re, Dowd v. Hawtin, 19 Ch. D. 61; 30 W. R. 601—C. A.

Party to Suits.]—A bankrupt is not a proper party to a suit instituted by the trustee under his bankruptcy to set aside a conveyance executed by the bankrupt with intent to delay or defeat his creditors. Weise v. Wardle, 19 L. R., Eq. 171; 23 W. R. 208.

Plea of Bankruptcy.]—A plea in the general form, according to the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 161, that the defendant became bankrupt according to the statute in force concerning bankrupts, and that the cause of action accrued before the defendant so became bankrupt, is not proved by shewing that he was adjudicated bankrupt before and received his order of discharge after action brought. Jones v. Hill, 5 L. R., Q. B. 230; 39 L. J., Q. B. 74; 21 L. T. 784; 18 W. R. 453.

14. LIABILITY ON NEW PROMISE TO PAY DEBTS.

See XIV. ORDER OF DISCHARGE AND ITS EFFECT.

XXII. OFFENCES BY BANKRUPT.

1. NOT SURRENDERING.

Partners—No actual Knowledge of Summons to Surrender.]—G., one of two partners who had been jointly adjudged bankrupts, was indicted, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 251, for not surrendering. There was no evidence that G. had actual knowledge of the adjudication and summons to surrender:—Held, that assuming the notice to surrender had been duly served, if he did not surrender pursuant to it, he was guilty of the offence of not surrendering; and even if the words with intent to defraud his creditors, in s. 251, override the whole section, that the absconding with the intent proved was sufficient. Reg. v. Gordon, Dears. C. C. 586; 25 L. J., M. C. 19; 2 Jur., N. S. 67.

Separate Notices.]—It appeared that only one duplicate adjudication, and only one duplicate notice to surrender, were served:—Held, that a separate notice to surrender ought to have been left for each of the bankrupts at their last known place of business. Ib.

Days named for Surrender.]—The summons or notice required the bankrupts to surrender on the 7th July and the 19th August, the last-named day being the day limited for their surrender:—Held, that service of the notice on the 27th July was sufficient. Ib.

Intent presumed.]—On an indictment against a bankrupt, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 251, for not surrendering, he having left the country before adjudication, it is not necessary to prove that he intended to defraud his creditors if he went away wilfully and to evade the jurisdiction in bankruptcy, and would deprive his creditors of their remedy. Reg. v. Hughes, 1 F. & F. 726.

But must be alleged in Indictment.]—An indictment against a bankrupt on 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 112, for not surrendering on the 42nd day, was bad, if it did not allege, that he had an intent to defraud his creditors. Reg. v. Hill, 1 C. & K. 168.

Summons to Surrender at "District Court of Bankruptcy."]—A fiat issued against J. D., directed to a district court of bankruptcy, where there were two commissioners, Mr. J. and Mr. S., to whom the fiats were allotted in rotation. This fiat was allotted to Mr. J. The court was all in one building, and the name of the commissioner to whom each fiat was allotted was posted up at the court. The summons granted by Mr. J. for the surrender of J. D. called on him to surrender "at the district court of bankruptcy." It was proved that he did not surrender to Mr. J., either at the district court or anywhere else:—Held, sufficient proof of non-surrender to Mr. J., either at the district court or anywhere else. Reg. v. Dealtry, 2 C. & K. 521; 1 Den. C. C. 287.

Held, also, that the summons was good, although it did not expressly inform the bankrupt that the fiat had been referred to the district court of bankruptcy, and did not contain an allegation that he had been adjudged a bankrupt at that court. Id.

2. FRAUDULENTLY OBTAINING GOODS ON CREDIT.

All preliminary Matters must be Proved.]—Upon an indictment under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 253, it is not enough to prove the petition to, and adjudication of, the Court of Bankruptcy, but the preliminary matters, viz., the petitioning creditor's debt, the trading, and act of bankruptcy must also be proved. Reg. v. Lands, Dears. C. C. 567; 25 L. J., M. C. 14; 1 Jur., N. S. 1176.

Petition Filed under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 211.]—An indictment for obtaining goods on credit within three months next preceding the date of the fiat and the filing of a petition for adjudication under the false colour and pretence of carrying on business and dealing in the ordinary course of trade, could not be sustained upon evidence that the petition filed was one for private arrangement under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 211, although the party was afterwards adjudicated a bankrupt, and the proceedings adjourned into open court. The misdemeanor contemplated by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 253, arose upon the filing of a petition under s. 89. Reg. v. Powell, 6 Cox, C. C. 134.

Goods on Approval.]—Where a person obtained goods on approval, and pawned them, and afterwards obtained credit for them:—Held, that 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 221, did not apply. Reg. v. Lyons, 9 Cox, C. C. 299.

Under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62.]—An indictment under the Debtors Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 11, sub-s. 13, which merely charges that a bankruptcy petition was presented against the defendant to the county court, upon which he was adjudged bankrupt, and that he, within four months before the presentation of the petition, did by certain false representations obtain from B. on credit certain property, and has not paid for the same, is sufficient in arrest of judgment. Reg. v. Watkinson, 26 L. T. 853.

No Evidence of false Representations.]—A trader, being in insolvent circumstances, purchased goods on credit, and shipped them to Australia, and obtained advances by pledging the bills of lading. Within four months afterwards he became bankrupt. In his examination he stated that he could give no account of what had become of the purchase-money:—Held, that in the absence of any evidence of his having obtained the goods on false representations, his conduct did not constitute an offence under the 14th or 15th sub-sections of s. 11 of the Debtors Act, 1869; and an application by the trustee for an order to prosecute him was refused. Brett, Ex parte, Hodgson, In re, 1 Ch. D. 151; 13 Cox, C. C. 128; 45 L. J., Bk. 17; 33 L. T. 711; 24 W. R. 101.

Held, also, that he had not committed an offence under the 13th sub-section of the same section. Id.

Representation must be False to Knowledge of Debtor.]—To make the false representation fraudulent under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 11, sub-s. 13 and 14, it must be made knowingly by the debtor. Reg. v. Cherry, 12 Cox, C. C. 32.

Where a debtor pretends to be dealing in the ordinary way of business, but is not in reality doing so, the onus is on him to satisfy the jury that he was acting honestly, and had no intention to defraud. Id.

3. CONCEALING, DISPOSING OF, OR PAWNING PROPERTY.

Concealing—Offence when Complete.]—The offence by a bankrupt in not discovering his property on examination is not complete until the examination is ended. Nash v. Reg. (in error), 4 B. & S. 935; 33 L. J., M. C. 94; 10 Jur., N. S. 819; 9 L. T. 716; 9 Cox, C. C. 424.

Indictment—Declaration of Insolvency wrongly alleged.]—In an indictment against a bankrupt for feloniously removing, concealing, and embezzling part of his personal estate, it was alleged that he committed an act of bankruptcy by being unable to meet his engagements, and by filing his petition to the Court of Bankruptcy:—Held, that as it was not alleged that he had filed a declaration that he was unable to meet his engagements, as required by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 70, there was no sufficient allegation of an act of bankruptcy, and the indictment could not be supported. Reg. v. Massey, 1 L. & C. C. 206; 9 Cox, C. C. 234; 32 L. J., M. C. 21; 8 Jur., N. S. 1183; 7 L. T. 391; 11 W. R. 42.

Jury to judge of Intent.]—On an indictment against a bankrupt for fraudulently concealing and disposing of goods, and fraudulently omitting transactions and inserting fictitious transactions in his schedule, the jury is to judge as to the intent, in such instances, from the general character of the transactions, as disclosed in the whole of the evidence, and to consider whether it indicates a scheme and design on the part of the debtor to obtain the benefit of the bankruptcy law, and relieve himself from his liabilities without making an honest disclosure and surrender of his property for the benefit of his creditors. Reg. v. Manser, 4 F. & F. 45.

Goods obtained in Paris and pawned in London—Question for Jury.]—A bankrupt was indicted for conspiring with B., and also with pawning and disposing of goods with intent to cheat and defraud his creditors; B. had a place of business in Paris, and goods were obtained there on credit and disposed of in London by pawning:—Held, that the questions for the jury were, whether the premises in Paris were really used as an independent place of business for buying and selling, or only as ancillary to the place of business in London, and merely for the purpose of getting hold of goods to be disposed of in London, and whether B. and the bankrupt acted together for the purpose of obtaining and disposing of such goods, with intent to cheat and defraud the creditors; and the jury finding on these questions against the bankrupt, he was guilty of pawning and disposing of goods; but not for conspiracy to obtain the goods. Reg. v. Raudnitz, 4 F. & F. 165.

Partners—Act of Bankruptcy—What Necessary to Prove.]—A bankrupt was indicted for obtaining goods within three months of filing his petition for adjudication under the false colour and pretence of carrying on business in the ordinary course of trade, and for pawning and disposing of such goods with intent to defraud. The facts were that he carried on business at Bread-street, in the city of London, in partnership with B., and the firm had a house in Paris, where B. principally was. B. was in the habit of buying large quantities of goods in Paris and transmitting them to London, where they were received in Bread-street, and immediately afterwards pawned or disposed of considerably below the wholesale invoice price. Amongst other creditors was D., who was a Frenchman, domiciled in Paris, and who afterwards, upon a declaration of insolvency filed by the bankrupt, became the petitioning creditor. Upon his petition, he and B. were jointly adjudicated bankrupts:—Held, that as the adjudication was not upon the bankrupt's own petition, it was necessary to prove the trading, petitioning creditor's debt, and act of bankruptcy. Id.

Held, also, that as the adjudication was joint, it was necessary to prove a joint trading, a joint petitioning creditor's debt, and an act of bankruptcy against each. Id.

The act of bankruptcy suggested against B. was that, having come over to this country two days before the adjudication, and having taken away the books, he had absconded, with intent to defeat his creditors:—Held (after objection that B. had not his place of business here, but in Paris), that it was a question for the jury whether he had left London bonâ fide, or for the purpose of defeating his creditors. Id.

Goods obtained out of Jurisdiction.]—Held, also, that as the goods had all been obtained in Paris, they were obtained out of the jurisdiction, and the bankrupt, although acting in concert with B. in Paris, was not answerable in this country. Id.

Bill of Sale—Evidence of Bankruptcy—Disposition of Property.]—A grocer obtained goods of his trade upon credit. Soon after receiving them and before they were paid for, he executed a bill of sale in favour of his sister, who lived with him. This bill of sale, which was given in consideration of a debt owing from him to his sister, passed away all his stock-in-trade and effects whatsoever, including the unpaid-for goods. Having been made bankrupt, he was indicted for misdemeanor under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11:—Held, that the production of the adjudication under the seal of the court was sufficient evidence of the bankruptcy; that disposing of the goods by a bill of sale was not disposing of them in the "ordinary way of trade;" and therefore that as property which the bankrupt had obtained on credit, and had not paid for, had passed by the bill of sale, he came within the section, unless he had no intent to defraud; but that assigning the whole of his property to one creditor, reserving nothing for the others, shewed an intent to defraud. Reg. v. Thomas, 22 L. T. 138.

Disposing of Stock assigned in Trust.]—In December, 1872, a debtor made a deed of assignment of farming stock, &c. to trustees upon certain trusts, and the debtor continued to carry on the farm as the bailiff of the trustees in pursuance of the trusts of the deed. On the 14th and 16th of October, 1873, he removed certain stock and sold it, and handed the proceeds to third parties in fraud of the trustees and the objects of the deed. On the 17th of October he petitioned the county court in bankruptcy for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement, and on the 7th of January, 1871, was indicted and found guilty of having within four months before the commencement of the liquidation fraudulently removed a part of his property of the value of 10*l.* and upwards, contrary to the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, sub-s. 5:—Held, that at the time of the removal the farming stock, &c. was not his property, and therefore the conviction must be quashed. Reg. v. Creese, 2 L. R., C. C. 105; 43 L. J., M. C. 51; 29 L. T. 897; 22 W. R. 375; 12 Cox, C. C. 539.

Indictment under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16.]—An indictment, after stating that a commission of bankruptcy issued against A., by virtue of which the commissioners adjudged him to be a bankrupt, charged, that he and other defendants conspired to conceal a part of his personal estate:—Held, that ever since the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 112, such an indictment was defective, for not shewing that the party actually became bankrupt. Re v. Jones, 4 B. & Ad. 345; 1 N. & M. 78.

Under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122.]—An indictment under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 32, that a bankrupt was possessed of real estate, and that upon his examination, being sworn, he feloniously did not then and there discover when he disposed of, assigned and transferred the said real estate, was bad, because it did not appear by the indictment that he ever had disposed of the property. Reg.

v. Harris, 1 Den. C. C. 461; T. & M. 177; 19 L. J., M. C. 11; 13 Jur. 990.

Disclosure required by Debtors Act, 1869—To what Property it relates.]—By the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, sub-s. 1, it is enacted that a bankrupt shall be guilty of a misdemeanor "if he does not to the best of his knowledge and belief fully and truly discover to the trustee of his estate all his property, real and personal, and how and to whom and for what consideration and when he disposed of any part thereof, except such part as has been disposed of in the ordinary way of his trade (if any), or laid out in the ordinary expense of his family, &c."—Held, that such disclosure was not restricted to property in possession of the bankrupt at the commencement of his bankruptcy. Reg. v. Mitchell, 50 L. J., M. C. 76; 43 L. T. 572; 45 J. P. 239; 14 Cox, C. C. 490.

Indictment—Concealment—Want of Certainty.]

—An indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 221, charged that A. was duly declared and adjudged bankrupt by the Court of Bankruptcy; that upon his examination in the court, with intent to defraud and defeat the rights of his creditors, he did not fully and truly discover, to the best of his knowledge and belief, all his property, to wit, all his personal property in money and goods, and did not, as to part of his property (not being part really and bona fide before sold or disposed of in the way of his trade or business, and not laid out in the ordinary expenses of his family) fully and truly discover, to the best of his belief, how and to whom, and for what consideration, and when he had disposed of, assigned or transferred such part. A. having been found guilty:—Held, first, that want of certainty in the statement of the property alleged not to have been discovered by A. was cured after verdict, by 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 21, the indictment sufficiently following the words of the statute. Nash v. Reg. (in error), 4 B. & S. 935; 33 L. J., M. C. 94; 10 Jur., N. S. 819; 9 L. T. 716; 9 Cox, C. C. 424.

—In Contemplation of Bankruptcy.]—An indictment alleged that the defendant and others unlawfully and wickedly did conspire and agree together, contrary to the provisions of the Debtors Act, 1869, and within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against the defendant, fraudulently to remove part of his property to the value of 10*l.*, that is to say (enumerating the articles), the defendant then being a trader and liable to become a bankrupt. To this there was a plea of not guilty, and a verdict of guilty and judgment. Error was brought on the ground that there was no allegation that the defendant was ever adjudged bankrupt:—Held, that the fact of his having been adjudged bankrupt was not necessary to complete the offence of conspiracy; it was complete if the persons charged had agreed to remove the goods in contemplation of an adjudication being obtained; and that this, though not expressly alleged, must be taken after verdict to have been proved before the jury; and that the defect was therefore cured by verdict. Heymann v. Reg. (in error), 8 L. R., Q. B. 102; 28 L. T. 162; 21 W. R. 357; 12 Cox, C. C. 383.

An indictment for fraudulently pledging property within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition did not allege that the debtor was adjudicated bankrupt thereon. The debtor being convicted, the indictment was held bad after verdict. Reg. v. Oliver, 13 Cox, C. C. 588; 36 L. T. 114; 25 W. R. 323.

—Averment of Liquidation.]—An indictment charged that the defendant being a trader "did within four months next before the commencement of the liquidation by arrangement of his affairs obtain from W. goods upon credit under the false pretence, &c., with intent to defraud." And in another count in similar terms the defendant was charged with unlawfully disposing of the goods otherwise than in the ordinary way of his trade. Both counts were framed under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 11, sub-s. 14, 15:—Held, that the counts were good after verdict, and sufficiently averred that the defendant was a person whose affairs were liquidated by arrangement within s. 11. Reg. v. Knight, 37 L. T. 801; 14 Cox, C. C. 31.

Removal of Property with Intent to Defraud Creditors—Removing Property to Defeat Execution.]—A., B., and C. were convicted, under s. 13, sub-s. 3, of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, of having, with intent to defraud the creditors of A., removed the property of A. since the date of an unsatisfied judgment against A. The evidence was, that on the next night after a judgment, which was still unsatisfied, had been obtained against A., the property of A. was removed from his house by A., B., and C., in order to defeat the creditor who had obtained the judgment, and to prevent him from levying thereon to satisfy the judgment. There was no evidence that A. had any other creditors, or that there was any intention to defeat the claims of any creditors of A. other than this particular creditor. No petition in bankruptcy had been presented against A., nor had any proceedings been taken to have his affairs liquidated by arrangement:—Held, that the absence of proceedings in bankruptcy or for liquidation was not material; that the provisions in question of the above statute applied to all persons; but that the conviction must nevertheless be quashed, inasmuch as an intent to defraud creditors was charged but was not proved. Reg. v. Rowlands, 8 Q. B. D. 530; 51 L. J., M. C. 51; 46 L. T. 286; 30 W. R. 444; 46 J. P. 437; 15 Cox, C. C. 31.

Married Woman a Bankrupt—Property of Husband.]—A married woman having been adjudicated a bankrupt upon her own petition, in which she described herself as a widow, was afterwards convicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 221, of having embezzled her property:—Held, that the conviction was wrong, as the property was her husband's. Reg. v. Robinson, 1 L. R., C. C. 80; 36 L. J., M. C. 78; 16 L. T. 605; 15 W. R. 966; 10 Cox, C. C. 467.

Conspiring to Defraud.]—A conspiracy by traders to dispose of their goods in contemplation of bankruptcy, with intent to defraud the creditors, is indictable at common law; and the clandestine removal of the goods, prior to an absconding, is evidence of such a conspiracy. Reg. v. Hall, 1 F. & F. 33.

4. TAMPERING WITH BOOKS.

Making False Entries in Books.—A bankrupt was convicted, upon an indictment under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 252, of having made a false and fraudulent entry in a book of account. The jury found that the entry was made by him with intent to deceive his creditors as to the state of his accounts, and to prevent the examination and investigation of them in the due course of bankruptcy, and to save him from having to account for the deficiency appearing in the genuine account, but that this was not done to defraud the creditors of any money or property, or to conceal any money or property, or in any way to prevent them from recovering or receiving any part of his estate, or to conceal any misappropriation or preference by him:—Held, that the conviction was wrong, as the bankrupt was not found to have had any intent to defraud his creditors within the meaning of the statute. Reg. v. Ingham, Bell, C. C. 181; 8 Cox, C. C. 240; 29 L. J., M. C. 18; 6 Jur., N. S. 55.

Indictment—Mutilating Books.—In an indictment against a bankrupt under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 252, for mutilating his books, it was alleged, that before and at the time of the offence, to wit, on the 23rd November, 1855, he was a trader liable to become bankrupt, and that he, for more than six months next immediately preceding the time of filing the petition for adjudication, did reside and carry on business, &c., within the jurisdiction, &c.: and that whilst he so resided, to wit, on the 23rd November, 1855, he filed with the registrar, a declaration that he was unable to meet his engagements; and that whilst he so resided, to wit, on the 23rd November, 1855, he did present his petition for adjudication:—Held, after verdict, that the averments were sufficient to shew that the requirements of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 119, s. 16, as to filing the declaration of insolvency, had been complied with. Reg. v. Scott, Dears. & B. C. C. 47; 25 L. J., M. C. 128; 2 Jur., N. S. 1096.

—“Unlawfully.”—An indictment averred that the bankrupt caused certain of his books to be altered, with intent to defraud, but it did not aver that it had been done “unlawfully.”—Held, that it was not necessary to make such averment, and that the indictment would be sufficient if the intent to defraud was proved. Reg. v. Featherbarrow, 10 Cox, C. C. 637; 17 L. T. 32.

5. PROSECUTION OF BANKRUPT.

Order to Prosecute made ex parte—Omission to State specific Offences.—An order of a commissioner, made on an ex parte application of petitioning creditors, before the appointment of assignees, stated that there were reasonable grounds for supposing that the bankrupt had been guilty of some one or more of the offences set forth in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 221, and directed that he should be criminally prosecuted, and that the petitioning creditors should be the prosecutors:—Held, that the order was not invalid by reason of the bankrupt not having had an opportunity of explanation, or that the order omitted to state the specific offences with which he was charged. Levi, In re, 34 L. J., Bk. 23; 11 Jur., N. S. 97; 11 L. T. 527; 13 W. R. 209.

Mere Suspicion insufficient.—Prosecutions are not to be ordered in cases of mere suspicion or conjecture; the court should be satisfied of there being evidence sufficient to establish the guilt of the parties. Still, Ex parte, 32 L. J., Bk. 12; 9 Jur., N. S. 7.

Order to Prosecute made by Court—Order Discharged.—A bankrupt had been guilty of acts which amounted to a misdemeanor within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 221, and the commissioner granted him an order of discharge, with a suspension of twelve months. On appeal, the court considered that the commissioner had jurisdiction to direct a prosecution before a court of criminal justice, and that it was not incumbent on him, with or without a jury, to try the case himself; and they discharged the order, and directed a prosecution by the assignees at the next assizes. Subsequently friends of the bankrupt subscribed money in order to provide a dividend, if the order made by the court should be discharged. The court discharged their order, and permitted the money to be accepted by the assignees. Dobson, Ex parte, Wilson, In re, 32 L. J., Bk. 1; 8 Jur., N. S. 1220; 7 L. T. 444, 815; 11 W. R. 100, 330.

Reasonable Evidence.—When there was reasonable evidence to go to a jury of a bankrupt having committed offences within s. 221 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, a prosecution would be directed, and the court would not try the question whether the evidence was sufficient to induce a jury to find him guilty, though a prosecution would not be directed on mere suspicion. Stallard, Ex parte, 3 L. R., Ch. 408; 37 L. J., Bk. 7; 16 W. R. 469.

In Liquidation Proceedings.—An order can be made under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 16, for the prosecution of a fraudulent debtor in a liquidation by arrangement, as well as in a bankruptcy. Dempsey, Ex parte, 8 L. R., Ch. 676; 42 L. J., Bk. 93; 28 L. T. 860; 21 W. R. 800.

—Property fraudulently Removed—Property Recovered by Trustee.—The application of the trustee in a liquidation under s. 16 of the Debtors Act, 1869, for an order to prosecute the liquidating debtor for fraudulently removing his property, ought not to be refused merely upon the ground that the trustee had recovered the property so removed. Monkhouse, Ex parte, Ward, In re, 40 L. T. 296.

Under Debtors Act, 1869—Representation must be in Writing.—The representation by a creditor to the court, mentioned in the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 16, as a foundation for an order directing the prosecution of a bankrupt for alleged offences under the act, must be made in writing, supported by proper evidence, and filed with the proceedings. Leonard, Ex parte, Leonard, In re, 19 L. R., Eq. 269; 44 L. J., Bk. 80; 31 L. T. 853; 28 W. R. 253.

—Application by Trustee.—When a trustee applies to the court, under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 16, for an order to prosecute the bankrupt for offences under that act, the application is properly made ex parte, without any notice to him, and he cannot appeal from the order. Marsden,

The order may be made without any further evidence than the report of the trustee, if the court is satisfied from that alone that there is a reasonable probability of a conviction. Ib.

Order made by Registrar of County Court—Appeal.]—When the order has been made by a registrar of a county court acting as judge, the judge has no power to re-hear the matter or to vary the order, which can only be altered by means of an appeal to the chief judge. Ib.

Vexatious Indictments Act.]—With reference to misdemeanors under the Debtors Act, 1869, the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act must be considered as controlled by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1. Reg. v. Bell, 12 Cox, C. C. 37.

Indictment too general.]—A count under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 13, sub-s. 1, alleging simply that the defendant did obtain credit from the prosecutor "by means of fraud other than by false pretences," without setting out the means, will be quashed as being too general. Ib.

Appeal—Who may Appeal—Accomplice.]—When an order is made for the prosecution of a bankrupt and also for the prosecution of another person as his accomplice, the accomplice is not a person aggrieved within the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 71, and has no right of appeal against the order. Brown, Ex parte, Appleby, In re, 2 Ch. D. 799; 45 L. J., Bk. 115; 35 L. T. 10; 24 W. R. 750—C. A.

Prosecution of Trustee, Debtor, and Accomplices—"Persons Aggrieved."]—The court has a discretionary power under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 16, to order a creditor to prosecute the trustee, the debtor, and accomplices for conspiracy, and if the charge against the accomplices fails, they are not persons aggrieved within the 71st section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Evans, Ex parte, Orbell. In re, 44 L. T. 762; 29 W. R. 573—C. A. Affirming 43 L. T. 575; 29 W. R. 200.

Evidence—Interlineations in Affidavit.]—G., one of two partners, who had been jointly adjudged bankrupts, was indicted under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 251, for not surrendering. Before proceedings in bankruptcy had been taken, the bankrupts left the kingdom, and stayed abroad, with the intent to defraud their creditors, by depriving them of their right to examine the bankrupts, and to make them responsible. On the trial, the proceedings in bankruptcy were put in, and in the affidavit verifying the petition for adjudication there were erasures and interlineations, and it was not proved when they were made:—Held, that the affidavit was admissible, as the court, in the absence of proof to the contrary, would presume that the alterations were made previously to the affidavit being sworn and used. Reg. v. Gordon, Dears. C. C. 586; 25 L. J., M. C. 19; 2 Jur., N. S. 67.

Document left at Counting-house—Secondary Evidence.]—After the bankrupts had gone, and after they were adjudged to be bankrupts, and the messenger had taken possession of their last known place of business, a duplicate adjudication was left at the counting-house there, and subsequently there was left there a copy of a summons or notice to surrender. Before the trial the counting-house was searched, and neither of these papers could be found. Notice to produce was served upon A. in prison:—Held, that secondary evidence might be given of the documents left at the counting-house. Ib.

Charge heard by Magistrates—Subsequent Depositions by Bankrupt.]—The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, s. 6 (similar to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85), contained a proviso, that no agent intrusted as aforesaid shall be liable to be convicted by any evidence whatsoever in respect of any act done by him, if he shall at any time previously to his being indicted for such offence have disclosed such act on oath in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved, or if he shall have disclosed the same in any examination or deposition before any commissioner of bankrupt. The defendants were charged before a magistrate with the offence for which they were afterwards tried under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, s. 6. By the depositions of witnesses on oath the charge was proved against them, and all the circumstances fully explained. They had previously been adjudged bankrupts, and subsequently, while the prosecution was pending against them, being examined in the Court of Bankruptcy at the instance of a creditor, they made a statement to the same effect as the depositions before the magistrate, and amounting to a confession of their guilt. Soon afterwards an indictment for the offence was preferred and found against them, upon which they were tried and convicted on exactly the same evidence which had been given before the magistrate:—Held, that the depositions in the Court of Bankruptcy were properly received in evidence at the close of the case for the prosecution under the plea of not guilty. Reg. v. Skerrin, Bell, C. C. 97; 28 L. J., M. C. 91; 5 Jur., N. S. 151; 7 W. R. 255.

Held, also, that such depositions were not a disclosure of the offence charged, within the meaning of the proviso in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, s. 6; and therefore that the defendants were not entitled to be acquitted. Ib.

Trustee under Liquidation.]—A debtor, whose affairs were liquidated by arrangement, was indicted under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 11, for that he knowing that false debts had been proved under the liquidation, failed for the period of a month to inform B., the trustee, thereof. The evidence was that the debtor, on the 23rd September, 1870, filed his petition in the county court, alleging that he was unable to pay his debts, and that he was desirous of instituting proceedings for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement or composition with his creditors; that on the 10th October the first meeting under the petition was held, and three false debts proved with his connivance. At the first meeting of the creditors, it was resolved that a composition of 8s. in the pound, payable by instalments, and to be secured, should be accepted, and B. was appointed trustee in the matter. On the 12th October, the registrar of the county court certified that B. was appointed trustee, and was declared to be trustee under the liquidation by arrangement. At the second meeting of creditors, it was resolved that the debtor's affairs should be liquidated by arrangement, and not in bankruptcy; that the remuneration of the trustee be left to a subsequent meeting, and that the trustee should pay the moneys received by him into a bank:—Held, that B. was proved to be the trustee under the liquidation by arrangement, notwithstanding that at the first meeting, when he was originally appointed, it was resolved to accept a composition of 8s., and nothing was then resolved as to a liquidation by arrangement. Reg. v. Beaumont, 26 L. T. 587.

— Answers to Questions not relating to Debtor's Trade Dealings or Estate.—By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 117, the Court of Bankruptcy may summon any bankrupt before it, and examine him touching all matters relating to his trade dealings or estate. A bankrupt was summoned and examined before a commissioner in bankruptcy:—Held, that having answered questions which did not relate to his trade dealings or estate, without any objection on his part, his answers were voluntary, and his examination was admissible against him upon a subsequent criminal charge. Reg. v. Sloggett, Dears. C. C. 656; 25 L. J., M. C. 93; 2 Jur., N. S. 476.

— Incriminating Answers.—Upon an examination under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 117, a bankrupt is bound to answer all questions touching "matters relating to his trade dealings or estate, or which may tend to disclose any secret grant, conveyance, or concealment of his lands, tenements, goods, money, or debts," although his answers may criminate himself; and such answers may afterwards be given in evidence against him upon a criminal charge. Reg. v. Scott, Dears. & B. C. C. 47; 25 L. J., M. C. 128; 2 Jur., N. S. 1096.

A compulsory examination of a bankrupt under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 117, is admissible against him on a criminal charge. Reg. v. Cross, Dears. & B. C. C. 68.

— Bankrupt's Balance Sheet.—The balance sheet of a bankrupt given on oath under his commission is not admissible against him on a criminal charge. Reg. v. Britton, 1 M. & Rob. 297.

— Under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71.—Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, Courts of Bankruptcy have power to compel bankrupts to give answers to questions incriminating themselves, and, therefore, such answers are admissible against them in a criminal prosecution. Reg. v. Hillam, 12 Cox, C. C. 174.

— Answers of Debtor on his Examination—Irregularity of Summons.—On an indictment of a trader for obtaining property on credit, under the false pretence of dealing in the ordinary way of his trade, within four months before his liquidation, contrary to the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, an examination of the trader in liquidation taken under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 37), was admitted in evidence against him. The summons to bring up the trader for examination was issued before the certificate of the appointment of the trustee was given by the registrar. The trader attended, was examined, and the examination was taken after the giving of the certificate of appointment:—Held, that whether the summons was regularly issued or not, the trader by appearing and submitting to be examined waived the irregularity, if any, and the examination was properly taken and admissible against him on the trial of the indictment. Reg. v. Widdop, 2 L. R., C. C. 3; 42 L. J., M. C. 9; 27 L. T. 693; 21 W. R. 176; 12 Cox, C. C. 251.

— Promise that Answers should not be used against Debtor.—An examination of a debtor before the registrar of the Bankruptcy Court is admissible in criminal proceedings taken against him, although a promise was made to him, before his examination, that it would not be used against him or filed. Reg. v. Cherry, 12 Cox, C. C. 32.

— Costs—Conspiracy with others.—Where a bankrupt had been prosecuted by direction of the Court of Bankruptcy, under three indictments, in two of which he was charged, jointly with other persons, with conspiracy:—Held, that the costs of these indictments ought to be allowed out of the chief registrar's fund. Levi, In re, 2 L. R., Ch. 493; 36 L. J., Bk. 49; 16 L. T. 270; 15 W. R. 855.

— Power of Judge to allow—Costs of Prosecution.—When the prosecution of a bankrupt is not ordered by any court, the judge at the trial has no power to allow the costs of the prosecution. Reg. v. Thomas, 22 L. T. 138.

— Prosecution compromised.—When the assignees of a bankrupt, having commenced a criminal prosecution against him for offences under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, compromise the prosecution without the sanction of the court, the court will not, save in exceptional cases, order the costs of the prosecution to be paid out of the chief registrar's fund or out of the bankrupt's estate. Berry, Ex parte, Evans, In re, 27 L. T. 53; 20 W. R. 849—L. J.

— Appeal—"Expenses incurred by such Prosecutor."—The costs of a successful appeal from an order of a commissioner refusing to direct a prosecution could not be ordered to be paid out of the chief registrar's account; for having been incurred before a prosecution had been directed, they were not "expenses incurred by such prosecutor" within s. 223. Stallard, Ex parte, 3 L. R., Ch. 408; 37 L. J., Bk. 7; 16 W. R. 469.

— Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, sub-s. 4, and ss. 16, 17.—An order to the trustee to prosecute for offences under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, sub-s. 4, having been refused, and the debtors having, subsequently to such refusal, been prosecuted by the trustee and convicted of offences under this section:—Held, that as under the circumstances the order to prosecute ought to have been made in the first instance, the trustee was now entitled to an order to prosecute nunc pro tunc in order to recover the costs of the prosecution. Costs of the appeal out of the estate. Stanlake, In re, Priestley, Ex parte, 10 Ch. D. 774; 48 L. J., Bk. 48; 39 L. T. 643; 27 W. R. 292.

XXIII. PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

1. RULES AND ORDERS.

Under the authority of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 70, rules and orders were made, directing the flats of a particular district, where there were two commissioners, to be allotted between them in a particular manner, and authorizing one commissioner to act in the flat allotted to the other in the absence of such other commissioner:—Held, that a court of common law will not take judicial notice of such rules and orders. Ramsden, In re, 1 B. C. Rep. 133; 3 D. & L. 748; 15 L. J., Q. B. 234; 10 Jur. 879.

The general orders are made by the lord chancellor under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 78, and no question as to their validity can be entertained by the court. Davies, In re, 21 L. T. 685.

The rules in the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, relating to bankruptcy, and those relating to liquidation by arrangement, are to be read as distinct codes of rules. Hopkins, Ex parte, Hart, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 506; 43 L. J., Bk. 127; 30 L. T. 447.

2. PETITIONS.

The court will hear the petition of a marksman, although the attestation of it is defective in not stating that the petition has been read to him, if the petitioner's affidavit, being an echo of the petition, is expressed in the jurat to have been read over to him. Washbrook, Ex parte, 2 Mont., D. & D. 490; 6 Jur. 156.

A petition of one of two bankrupts to annul the fiat was wrongly intitled:—Held, that the court might, after the expiration of twenty-one days from the insertion of the advertisement, permit the title to be amended, and the petition to be served on the other bankrupt, and that these steps did not render the amended petition a new proceeding, so as to be precluded by the lapse of the twenty-one days. Lord, Ex parte, 3 De G. & S. 607; 13 Jur. 1067.

Any application by a creditor to dismiss a bankrupt's petition, upon the ground of non-residence, should be by petition, and not by motion. Austin, Ex parte, 9 L. T. 492; 12 W. R. 177.

Substituted Service.—A non-trader, much indebted, left the realm, and an order was made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 70, for service of a petition for adjudication on him abroad. His solicitor, with whom he was in communication, was present when this order was made; but gave no information, and declined to accept service. The petitioner sent a clerk abroad, who was unable to find and serve the debtor. Service of the petition was then ordered to be made on the solicitor, and the debtor was thereupon adjudged bankrupt:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the adjudication was good. Calthrop, In re, 3 L. R., Ch. 252; 37 L. J., Bk. 17; 18 L. T. 166; 16 W. R. 446.

Amendment of Petition.—When a bankruptcy petition is amended under an order of the court the judge has a discretion as to requiring the amendment to be verified by affidavit, and if the alteration is an immaterial one an affidavit will not be required. Ritso, Ex parte, Ritso, In re,

Form of Petition.—A petition need not state the consideration for the debt, provided it state with sufficient clearness the case that the debtor is required to answer. Bass, Ex parte, Barnett, In re, 23 W. R. 101—L. J.

See further, VI. THE PETITIONING CREDITOR AND HIS DEBT.

3. AFFIDAVITS.

A petition, and the affidavits in support of it, were filed under an incorrect title. The petition was amended. The affidavits were ordered to be taken off the file, amended as to the title, and then re-sworn. Burton, Ex parte, 3 De G. & S. 578; 18 L. J., Bk. 17; 13 Jur. 297, 420.

An affidavit inadvertently filed without signature will be allowed to be taken off the file, for the purpose of being signed and re-sworn, upon an undertaking by the applicant's solicitor that it shall be re-filed in the same state in all other respects. Norton, Ex parte, 11 Jur. 699.

On the hearing before the registrar of an application for an injunction, the applicant sought to use an affidavit which had been sworn but not filed. This was objected to; and the applicant's counsel suggested that the matter should stand over to enable the affidavit to be filed. The registrar said that he thought there was a case for an injunction without an affidavit, and thereupon the applicant's counsel accepted an order in his favour on the evidence then before the court:—Held, that leave ought not to be given to use the affidavit in question upon the hearing of an appeal from the registrar's decision. Isaac, Ex parte, De Vecchj, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 58; 40 L. J., Bk. 19; 22 L. T. 523; 19 W. R. 38—L. J.

A warrant for the committal of a bankrupt was expressed to be made on the reading of the affidavits therein referred to. The commissioner before whom one of these affidavits was sworn had omitted to sign the jurat:—Held, that the warrant must be discharged, and that the court could not enter into the question whether there was enough in the other affidavits to support it, and that the defect could not be cured by the commissioner signing the jurat in court on the hearing of the application to discharge the warrant. Heymann, Ex parte, Heymann, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 488; 26 L. T. 339; 20 W. R. 457.

Cross-Examination on Affidavit.—Held (in accordance with a certificate of the registrars of the London Court of Bankruptcy), that, according to the practice of that court, when an affidavit has been filed by one of the parties to an application, the opposite party is not entitled to cross-examine the deponent on the affidavit, until it has been read on behalf of the party who has filed it. Child, Ex parte, Ottoway, In re, 20 Ch. D. 126; 51 L. J., Ch. 494; 46 L. T. 118; 30 W. R. 282—C. A.

—Right to withdraw Affidavit.—A party on whose behalf an affidavit has been filed, has a right, if he pleases, not to make use of the affidavit, and if he does not use it, the deponent cannot be cross-examined on it. Id.

4. SERVICE OF SUMMONSES AND NOTICES.

Discretion of County Court Judge.—The judge of a county court has a discretion to direct whether a summons for examination under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 96, shall be served by the solicitor of the person applying for it, or by the high bailiff of the court. Bolland, Ex parte, Holden, In re, 19 L. R., Eq. 131; 44 L. J., Bk. 9; 31 L. T. 445; 23 W. R. 24.

Service by Post.—Notice of an application to continue an interim injunction may be served by post. Lewis, In re, Mauthner, Ex parte, 3 Ch. D. 113; 45 L. J., Bk. 125; 34 L. T. 662.

Waiver of Irregularity.—A notice of motion was served out of the jurisdiction on the respondent. No order authorizing the service had been obtained from the court. The respondent appeared on the hearing of the motion, and objected to the jurisdiction of the court. On his objection being overruled, he asked for and obtained an adjournment to enable him to answer the case on its merits:—Held, that there had been a mere irregularity in the service, and that it had been waived. Robertson, Ex parte, Morton, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 733; 44 L. J., Bk. 99; 32 L. T. 697; 23 W. R. 906.

Notice of Injunction by Telegram.—A sheriff's officer and an auctioneer proceeded with the sale of the property of a trader seized under a fi. fa. after they had received notice by a letter from the debtor's solicitor that he had filed a liquidation petition, and had also received notice by telegram that the Court of Bankruptcy had made an order restraining further proceedings under the writ:—Held, that the sheriff's officer and the auctioneer had been guilty of contempt of court, and that they must pay the costs of a motion to commit them. Bryant, In re, 4 Ch. D. 98; 35 L. T. 489; 25 W. R. 230.

Seemle, that it is equally a contempt of court, if he has received notice of an act of bankruptcy. Id.

Sufficient notice of the granting of an injunction may be given by telegram; but, if it is sought to commit for contempt a person who, after receiving such a notice, disregards it, the court must decide upon the particular facts, whether he had in fact notice of the injunction, and it is the duty of those who ask for the commitment to prove this beyond reasonable doubt. Langley, Ex parte, Smith, Ex parte, Bishop, In re, 13 Ch. D. 110; 49 L. J., Bk. 1; 41 L. T. 388; 28 W. R. 174—C. A.

A person who has violated an injunction will not be committed for contempt when he swears that, though he had received notice of it by telegram, he bonâ fide believed that no injunction had been granted, and the circumstances shew that such a belief was not unreasonable. Id.

It is the duty of a sheriff's officer who receives notice by telegram, purporting to be sent by solicitors in London, of an injunction being granted by the Court of Bankruptcy to restrain a sale in the country under an execution, to telegraph to the Court of Bankruptcy, or to the London agents of the sheriff, to ascertain whether an injunction has really been granted. Id.

This, however, is not the duty of the auctioneer who is conducting the sale; he is only bound to communicate with the sheriff's officer who has instructed him to sell. Id.

A sheriff's officer, who is not himself present at the sale, and who has no actual notice of the injunction, is not responsible for the act of his deputy who allows the sale to be continued after receiving notice by telegram. Id.

A London solicitor, who obtains an order from the Court of Bankruptcy in London restraining a sale under an execution in the country, ought, instead of telegraphing the order to the sheriff's officer, to telegraph it to a solicitor at the place, as his agent, asking him to give notice of it to the persons affected. Id.

5. TRIAL OF ISSUES OF FACT.

A feigned issue directed the following questions to be tried between the assignees and the execution creditors, at whose suit goods of the bankrupt had been seized; viz.—If, at the time of the seizing and levying of the goods, the plaintiffs were entitled to the same as against and free from the execution; and if the goods were not subject to be seized and levied under the writ as against the plaintiffs:—Held, that that issue raised the question, not only as to notice of the act of bankruptcy, but the plaintiffs' title as assignees. Lott v. Melville, 9 D. P. C. 882; 3 M. & G. 40; 3 Scott, N. R. 346; 5 Jur. 436.

The goods of H. were seized under several writs of execution. H., having subsequently become bankrupt, and his assignees claiming the goods, an issue was directed, the goods being sold, and the proceeds paid into court, to abide the event. In the result four of the executions were set aside:—Held, that the right of the assignees to the proceeds paid into court was subservient to that of the other execution creditors, whose judgments were impeached. Goldschmidt v. Hamlet, 6 Scott, N. R. 962; 1 D. & L. 801; 6 M. & G. 187.

Trial in High Court, not in County Court.—Although, as a general rule, cases in which the trustee in bankruptcy is asserting a claim to property by a higher title than that of the bankrupt himself, ought to be tried in the Court of Bankruptcy, yet the rule is not an inflexible one, but the court has a judicial discretion to be exercised with regard to all the circumstances of the case:—Held, that the fact that a large amount was at stake, and that questions of character were involved, were sufficient grounds for refusing to allow a case, in which the trustee in a liquidation was seeking to set aside some transactions of the debtors as fraudulent under the bankruptcy law, to be tried in a county court. Armitage, Ex parte, Learoyd, Wilton & Co., In re, 17 Ch. D. 13; 44 L. T. 262; 29 W. R. 772—C. A.

When the trustee in a bankruptcy which is proceeding in a county court impeaches a deed executed by the bankrupt as fraudulent under the Statute of Elizabeth, if the amount at stake is beyond the ordinary jurisdiction of a county court and serious questions of character are involved, and the person interested under the deed desires that the question should not be tried in the county court, the judge ought to decline to exercise the jurisdiction conferred by s. 72, and ought to leave the matter to be tried in an action in the High Court in the ordinary way. Armi- tage, Ex parte (17 Ch. D. 13), approved. Price, Ex parte, Roberts, In re, 21 Ch. D. 553; 52 L. J., Ch. 131; 47 L. T. 402; 31 W. R. 104—C. A.

Judge's Notes conclusive.—When an issue of fact has been tried before a judge under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 72, and the Court of Appeal is furnished with the judge's notes of the trial, they are conclusive as to the evidence adduced before him, and the court will not receive the notes of a shorthand writer except by consent of both parties. Gillebrand, Ex parte, Sidebotham, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 52; 31 L. T. 715; 23 W. R. 194.

But not Findings.—The Court of Appeal is not bound to accept as conclusive the finding of the judge on the trial of such an issue. Ib.

Decision by Judge without Jury—Power of Court of Appeal to grant Issue.—When a question of fact in which the evidence is conflicting has been decided by the county court judge without a jury, neither party having asked for an issue, and the decision is appealed from, and upon the hearing of the appeal one of the parties desires an issue, the Court of Appeal, if satisfied that the circumstances of the case require it, will direct an issue to be tried before itself with a jury. Brown, Ex parte, Hooker, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 56; 31 L. T. 734; 23 W. R. 230.

Right to Jury.—Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 72, the judge must exercise a judicial discretion whether a question of fact should be tried by a jury. One party is not entitled as of right to demand a jury. Morgan, Ex parte, Simpson, In re, 2 Ch. D. 72; 45 L. J., Bk. 36; 34 L. T. 329; 24 W. R. 414.

An order for the trial of a question of fact by a jury was made upon the demand of one party only:—Held, that the order was only irregular, that the irregularity could be waived, and that it had been waived by both the parties appearing on the trial without taking the objection. Ib.

Interpleader—Notice of Motion.—Under the Interpleader Act, 1830, s. 6, application for an interpleader order may be made to the Court of Bankruptcy by the sheriff by motion on notice to the several claimants, it not being necessary that the court should first order the latter to attend. Streeter, Ex parte, Morris, In re, 19 Ch. D. 216; 45 L. T. 634; 30 W. R. 127—C. A.

Rehearing when Party improperly represented.—Under a fi. fa. issued by an execution creditor the sheriff took possession of goods claimed by a bill of sale holder, and gave the parties notice of motion before the Bankruptcy Court that they should appear in support of their claims. At the hearing of the motion, the creditor was represented only by a managing clerk, who, though he asked for an adjournment in order to have time to consider an affidavit of the other side, was compelled to allow the matter to go on, and was permitted to cross-examine witnesses, the court being under a mistaken impression that he was a solicitor. This fact did not appear until just before the close of the proceedings, when the court decided against the creditor. An application by counsel on behalf of the creditor to the Bankruptcy Court for a rehearing having been refused:—Held, on appeal, that the original order was wrongly made, as the creditor had a right to be properly represented, and that such order, as well as the refusal order, must be reversed. Ib.

New Trial—Grounds for.—When a question of fact has been tried by jury in the Court of Bankruptcy the court cannot set aside or disregard the verdict, unless either there was no evidence to go to the jury, or, by reason of some matter of law or of some new fact, the verdict has become immaterial to the decision of the case. Morgan, Ex parte, Simpson, In re, 2 Ch. D. 72; 45 L. J., Bk. 36; 34 L. T. 329; 24 W. R. 414.

If there was any evidence to go to the jury, and the verdict is, in the opinion of the court, against the weight of the evidence, the proper course to get rid of the verdict is to order a new trial. Ib.

Time within which Application to be made.—When a jury has found a verdict on an issue of fact, but no order consequent thereon has been made by the judge, it is not necessary that an application for a new trial should be made within twenty-one days from the finding. Reader, Ex parte, Wrigley, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 763; 44 L. J., Bk. 139; 32 L. T. 36.

Rule 143 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, does not apply to such a case, either directly or by analogy. Ib.

6. TRANSFER OF PROCEEDINGS.

The power given by the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 80 (cl. 3), to direct the transfer of proceedings from one court to another, is not confined to proceedings commenced since the act came into operation. Wieland, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 486; 39 L. J., Bk. 46; 22 L. T. 324.

The creditors in a bankruptcy commenced under the Act of 1861, after the Act of 1869 came into operation, passed a resolution to transfer the proceedings to a county court. The registrar of the district Bankruptcy Court made an order for the transfer accordingly, and transmitted the proceedings to the registrar of the county court:—Held, that whether the registrar of the Bankruptcy Court had or had not power to make the order for the transfer, the receipt of the proceedings by the registrar of the county court was sufficient to give the county court jurisdiction in the matter. Anderson, Ex parte, 23 L. T. 274; 18 W. R. 1124.

Transfer of Liquidation Petition.—See LIQUIDATION, ante.

7. COMMITTAL FOR CONTEMPT OF COURT.

A commissioner acting in the prosecution of a fiat may commit for a contempt of court. Watson v. Bodell, 14 M. & W. 37; 14 L. J., Ex. 281; 9 Jur. 626.

An order of commitment should contain an express adjudication that a contempt has been committed. Van Sandau, Ex parte, De Gex. 55; 1 Ph. 650; 15 L. J., Bk. 13.

The circulation of a libel on a court relating to a matter disposed of by an order still in minutes is a contempt for which the court may commit. Ib.

An apology and petition to be discharged from custody, and other proceedings, by a party committed for contempt under the order of commitment, and the consequential orders, do not preclude the party committed from disputing the validity of the commitment. Ib.

Although an order of commitment should contain an express adjudication that a contempt has been committed, the want of an express adjudication is not sufficient ground for discharging the order. Van Sandau, Ex parte, De Gex, 303.

Such an order may direct the party committed to pay the costs of the party complaining, but not his costs, charges and expenses. Ib.

By an order of the Court of Review, it was ordered that the plaintiff should pay the defendant costs mentioned in the order within fourteen days after he should have been duly and personally served with it. The costs not having been paid, the defendant, by petition to the court, after reciting the order, prayed that the plaintiff might be committed to the Fleet for his contempt of the order; and thereupon the court, after reciting these matters, ordered that the plaintiff "do stand committed to her Majesty's prison of the Fleet for his contempt in the petition mentioned or referred to." The plaintiff having been committed to the Fleet upon a warrant, which, after reciting the order, directed the plaintiff to be arrested and conveyed to the Fleet, there to remain until the further order:—Held, that the order being bad for containing no adjudication of a contempt, or any fact found, or anything directed to be done by the plaintiff to clear himself, the warrant which referred to the order was illegal. Green v. Elgie, 5 Q. B. 99; D. & M. 129; 14 L. J., Q. B. 162; 8 Jur. 187.

Where a party comes to the court praying a commitment for contempt, he must be fully prepared to support his case; and should he fail in any particular, the court will not allow him further time, but will dismiss his petition with costs. Saunders, Ex parte, 5 Jur. 1202.

Where a party took forcible possession of a bankrupt's effects whilst in the custody of the messenger, but finding he had done wrong gave up possession, the court, on a petition to commit him for a contempt, only ordered him to pay the costs of the petition. Fletcher, Ex parte, 2 Mont., D. & D. 129.

Length of Notice.]—Three clear days' notice must be given of an application to commit a person for contempt of court, and if the last of the three days happens to be a Sunday it is not to be counted in the computation of the three days. Ferrige, Ex parte, Ferrige, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 289; 44 L. J., Bk. 96; 32 L. T. 507; 23 W. R. 612.

The court has no power to abridge the three days' notice which is to be given of the hearing of an application to commit for contempt of court. Bryant, In re, 3 Ch. D. 810; 35 L. T. 173.

Committal of Bankrupt.]—When a bankrupt is employed by the trustees to assist them in realizing and collecting his assets, he acts in a fiduciary capacity; and his non-compliance with an order of the court to pay to the trustees moneys which he has received in such employment is a contempt of court within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 19, for which he can be committed to prison. Waters, Ex parte, 18 L. R., Eq. 701; 43 L. J., Bk. 128; 30 L. T. 766; 22 W. R. 796.

8. RE-DIRECTION OF BANKRUPT'S LETTERS.

Who may apply for Order.]—Under s. 85 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, an application for an order for the redirection of letters addressed to a bankrupt can only be made by the trustee in the bankruptcy. The petitioning creditor has no locus standi either to make the application, or to appeal from an order made on the application of the trustee if he thinks that order not sufficiently extensive. If the trustee refuses to apply for such an order, or to appeal from an order made on his application, the petitioning creditor cannot apply to the court himself. Semble, that he might obtain authority to use the name of the trustee. Lister, Ex parte, Halbertamm, In re, 17 Ch. D. 518; 29 W. R. 621—C. A.

9. RE-HEARING.

In what Cases.]—Courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy are entitled to rehear cases which they have decided, even if they should, by varying their former orders, give a right of appeal, which would otherwise have been lost by lapse of time. London and County Bank, Ex parte, Brown, In re, 16 L. R., Eq. 391; 42 L. J., Bk. 112; 29 L. T. 73.

On an application to direct a rehearing of a case by the county court judge, it was held by the chief judge in bankruptcy that the jurisdiction to rehear given by the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 71, in a proper case was almost without limit; and that the fact that an appeal from the original order was pending did not prevent the court from rehearing the case. But the chief judge held that under the circumstances the county court judge was right in refusing the rehearing. He also affirmed the original order. On appeal from both orders, the court of appeal affirmed the order refusing rehearing, and heard the other appeal with additional viva voce evidence. Keighley, Ex parte, Wike, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 667; 44 L. J., Bk. 13; 30 L. T. 407; 22 W. R. 630.

The jurisdiction given to every court of bankruptcy, by the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 71, to review, rescind or vary any order made by it, is almost without limit in proper cases, and the fact that an appeal from an order is pending will not prevent the rehearing of the case by the court. Ib.

When an order has been made, the court ought not to allow a rehearing of the matter merely for the purpose of enabling an appeal to be brought which would otherwise have been too late. Lister, In re, Simmons, Ex parte, 2 Ch. D. 749; 45 L. J., Bk. 113; 34 L. T. 744.

Rehearing—Time for.]—Though as a general rule a rehearing of a bankruptcy matter ought not to be allowed after the expiration of the time limited for appealing from the order, yet, there being no time fixed by the act or the rules for applying for a rehearing, the court will on special grounds allow a rehearing when it is applied for after the expiration of the time for appealing, even when the application is to rehear a bankruptcy petition which has been dismissed.

Application, how made.—Semble, that an application for a rehearing should not be made ex parte. Id.

Rehearing by Registrar.—A registrar sitting as chief judge has a discretion to rehear a case even after an appeal from his decision, if the point upon which a rehearing is desired is unaffected by the appeal. But an application for a rehearing ought, in an ordinary case, to be made within the time fixed by the 143rd of the Bankruptcy Rules of 1870 for entering an appeal; and where a long delay is unaccounted for a rehearing will not be granted. Brown, Ex parte, Jeavons, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 304; 43 L. J., Bk. 105; 30 L. T. 108; 22 W. R. 602.

Although a rehearing before the same judge who originally heard the case is not within rule 143 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, yet the court in granting a rehearing will have regard to that rule, and will not in general grant a rehearing after twenty-one days, unless the party seeking a rehearing can satisfactorily account for the delay. Id.

Rehearing by Court of Appeal.—Whether the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to rehear a bankruptcy appeal, quære. Banco de Portugal, Ex parte, Hooper, In re, 14 Ch. D. 1; 49 L. J., Bk. 21; 42 L. T. 210; 28 W. R. 433—C.A.

— Court will not rehear pending Appeal to House of Lords.—But if there be such a jurisdiction, the court will not, while an appeal to the House of Lords from an order made by it on a bankruptcy appeal is pending, rehear the appeal pro forma, for the purpose of inserting in its order evidence which was not before it when the appeal was heard, leaving the date of the order unaltered, or for the purpose of making a new order, bearing a date subsequent to the date of the presentation of the appeal to the House of Lords, with the new evidence inserted in it, but in other respects unaltered. Id.

— But will correct accidental slip.—But, semble, that, if by an accidental slip evidence, which was really before the court on the hearing of the appeal, had been omitted from the order, the court could rectify the error, notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal to the House of Lords. Id.

10. COSTS.

In Liquidation—Taxation.—Rule 8 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1871, does not apply to a case of composition, and, therefore, the solicitor who acts for a debtor in relation to his liquidation petition is, if the creditors resolve to accept a composition, entitled as against the debtor to have his costs of the proceedings taxed on the ordinary (not the lower) scale, even though the debtor's statement shews that his debts do not exceed 750*l.*, or that his assets do not exceed 200*l.* Castle, Ex parte, Meikle, In re, 1 Ch. D. 111; 45 L. J., Bk. 13; 24 W. R. 143.

The court has jurisdiction in a case of composition to order the taxation of the bill of costs of the debtor's solicitor. Dixon, In re, Shepherd,

Where a trustee was appointed, to whom the debtor gave a bill of sale of his property to secure the payment of the composition, the bill of sale containing a trust for sale of the property and for payment of the costs of the proceedings out of the sale moneys, an action, brought against the debtor by his solicitor for his costs incident to the proceedings, was restrained, on the terms of the trustee paying a sum of money into court, and giving an undertaking to pay whatever further sum might be found due on the taxation of the bill of costs. Id.

Priority of Payment.—A bankruptcy petition was presented against the debtor. Before the hearing he filed a liquidation petition. The hearing of the bankruptcy petition was several times adjourned, to await the result of the proceedings under the liquidation petition. Ultimately a liquidation was resolved upon, and the bankruptcy petition was then dismissed:—Held, that the petitioning creditor was entitled to be paid in priority, out of the estate, the costs of his petition, including therein the costs of and incident to a debtor summons on which the petition was founded, and the costs of the adjournment of the hearing. Bunnett, In re, Jeavons, Ex parte, 3 Ch. D. 320; 45 L. J., Bk. 128; 34 L. T. 804; 24 W. R. 851.

Of Solicitor.—One of two partners filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement which was duly resolved on, and a trustee appointed. At the time of filing the petition the stock-in-trade and effects of the firm had been seized under a fi. fa., and were about to be sold. There was no separate estate, and an order was afterwards made, with the consent of the solicitor of the other partner, who was an infant, for administering the joint assets and for payment of the costs and expenses of the trustee:—Held, that the costs of the solicitor of the petitioning debtor down to the appointment of the trustee ought to be paid out of the joint assets. Merr, In re, Pearce, Ex parte, 2 Ch. D. 320; 45 L. J., Bk. 144; 35 L. T. 705; 24 W. R. 808—C. A.

Solicitors' costs incurred in abortive proceedings to reduce the amount of a composition, the resolution for which the registrar refused to register, will not be allowed. Hopper, Ex parte, Elliott, In re, 8 Ch. D. 53; 47 L. J., Bk. 41; 38 L. T. 366; 26 W. R. 488—C. A. Affirming, 26 W. R. 171.

A debtor being unable to carry out the terms of a composition which had been duly resolved upon, summoned a fresh general meeting of his creditors, at which it was resolved to accept a composition at a much reduced rate. The registrar, however, refused to register the second resolution on the ground of irregularity, and two days afterwards the debtor was adjudicated a bankrupt:—Held, that the proceedings for reducing the composition were not pending at the date of the bankruptcy, and the costs of such proceedings were not therefore payable out of the bankrupt's estate under r. 292. Id.

Costs of Creditors' Solicitor in Registration of Resolutions.—Where creditors agree to accept a composition, and employ a solicitor to register the resolutions without making any special provisions therein for payment of the solicitor's costs, the court has no jurisdiction to enforce payment of these costs by the debtor. Pratt, In re, Gush, Ex parte, 12 Ch. D. 915; 48 L. J., Bk. 69; 27 W. R. 712.

Costs—Solicitor to Trustee—Right to Costs out of Estate—Power of Court to go behind Allocatur.]—The right of the solicitor to a trustee in bankruptcy to be paid his costs out of the bankrupt's estate is only the right of his client, the trustee; he has no independent right. If either the trustee or the solicitor has been guilty of misconduct, the court can refuse to allow the solicitor's costs to be paid out of the estate, and this notwithstanding that the costs have been taxed and an allocatur has been made by the taxing master. Harper, Ex parte, Pooley, In re, 20 Ch. D. 685; 51 L. J., Ch. 810; 47 L. T. 177; 30 W. R. 650—C. A.

It is an abuse of the bankruptcy law to purchase a debt due by a bankrupt in order to procure the appointment of a trustee favourable to the bankrupt or to a creditor or a particular class of creditors, or to purchase a debt for the purpose of making the debtor (e. g., the trustee in a bankruptcy) a bankrupt with the view, not of recovering the debt, but of putting pressure upon him for a collateral object, or of injuring him in some way. Griffin, Ex parte (12 Ch. D. 480) approved and followed. The trustee in a bankruptcy and his solicitor having been engaged in transactions of this kind, the court, after taxation of the solicitor's costs, refused to allow them to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate. Id.

When Bankrupt Defendant does not appear.]—When a bankrupt defendant does not appear at the hearing of an action, and his trustees appear and defend, they are liable to the costs of the action. Watson v. Holliday, 20 Ch. D. 780; 51 L. J., Ch. 906; 46 L. T. 878; 30 W. R. 747.

Trustees of Settlement—Costs of Appeal.]—The judge of the county court set aside a voluntary settlement. He gave the trustee in the liquidation his costs out of the debtor's estate, but made no order as to the costs of the trustees of the settlement. The trustees of the settlement appealed to the chief judge, who discharged the order of the county court. The Court of Appeal restored the order of the county court:—Held, that the trustees of the settlement ought to have been satisfied with the decision of the county court, and that they must bear their own costs of both appeals, and must pay the costs of the trustee in the liquidation of both appeals. Russell, Ex parte, Butterworth, In re, 19 Ch. D. 588; 51 L. J., Ch. 521; 46 L. T. 113; 30 W. R. 584—C. A.

Costs of Copy of Deposition.]—With regard to the costs of the copies of the deposition which were supplied for the use of the respondent's counsel, I think that in the present case those costs should be allowed. It must not be supposed that we should in all cases allow such costs, we might in some cases allow only the costs of making extracts. Hall, Ex parte, Cooper, In re, 19 Ch. D. 580; 51 L. J., Ch. 556; 46 L. T. 549—C. A., per curiam.

Sheriff's Costs of Appeal from Interpleader Order.]—The sheriff's costs of an appeal from an interpleader order made by the chief judge in bankruptcy were ordered to be paid by the party who should ultimately be decided to be in the wrong. Streeter, Ex parte, Morris, In re, 19 Ch. D. 216; 45 L. T. 634; 30 W. R. 127—C. A.

Transcript of Shorthand Writer's Notes.]—The costs of the transcript of a shorthand writer's notes of evidence are, like other costs, in the discretion of the judge within r. 188 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, notwithstanding the provisions with reference to these costs made by r. 207. Albezette, In re, Smith, Ex parte, 8 Ch. D. 599; 48 L. J., Bk. 13; 38 L. T. 395; 26 W. R. 513.

The charge for a copy of a shorthand writer's notes of the proceedings in a county court may be allowed as part of the costs of an appeal. Sawyer, Ex parte, Bowden, In re, 1 Ch. D. 698; 45 L. J., Bk. 56; 33 L. T. 759; 24 W. R. 375.

Recovery.]—A solicitor who has not been allowed costs in bankruptcy is not entitled to file a bill or a plaint in a court of equity to recover them. Graham v. Winterson, 16 L. R., Eq. 243; 42 L. J., Ch. 633; 28 L. T. 803; 21 W. R. 227.

Costs—Set-off.]—The Court of Bankruptcy will not allow costs of proceedings in the High Court to be set off against costs of proceedings in bankruptcy. Griffin, Ex parte, Adams, In re, 14 Ch. D. 37; 49 L. J., Bk. 28; 42 L. T. 704; 28 W. R. 714—C. A.

XXIV. APPEAL.

1. TIME FOR APPEALING.

Under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106.]—The time of the commissioner signing and delivering out an order, and not the time of his pronouncing it, is its true date with reference to an appeal. Heslop, Ex parte, 1 De G., Mac. & G. 477.

A petition to annul an adjudication may be presented by a creditor to the commissioner, and it is sufficient if he appeals from the commissioner's decision upon it within twenty-one days, although much more time may have elapsed since the adjudication. Bean, Ex parte, 1 De G., Mac. & G. 486; 21 L. J., Bk. 26.

Under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 12, the time allowed for appealing must be calculated from the date of the decision or order, and not from the time of its being drawn up. Dudley and West Bromwich Banking Company, Ex parte, 32 L. J., Bk. 68; 9 Jur. N. S. 702; 8 L. T. 189; 11 W. R. 576.

Where an appeal from an order in bankruptcy is by way of motion, it is sufficient if notice of motion is given within the twenty-one days limited in that section. Bromley, Ex parte, 34 L. J., Bk. 35; 11 Jur., N. S. 611; 12 L. T. 783; 13 W. R. 1051.

A petition of appeal against an order of a commissioner was presented within the twenty-one days fixed by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 12, and a second petition by other parties was presented after the twenty-one days had elapsed, but before the earlier petition came on for hearing:—Held, that the second petition was presented within due time. Mackenna, Ex parte, 30 L. J., Bk. 24; 7 Jur., N. S. 668; 4 L. T. 459; 9 W. R. 674—L. J.

— Proceedings in Colonies.—Where a person has gone to an English colony, and is adjudicated bankrupt in this country, and his goods are taken in the colony by the authority of the assignee appointed in England, for which taking he institutes proceedings in the colonial court, and subsequently appeals from its decision to the Privy Council, if he petitions the Court of Appeal in Bankruptcy to annul the adjudication, his petition is not too late though presented after the time appointed by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 233, the proceedings of the colony keeping alive his title to appeal. Bunny, Ex parte, 26 L. J., Bk. 83; 3 Jur., N. S. 1141—L. J.

Under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71—Sundays.—In reckoning the twenty-one days within which an appeal must be entered, the computation must be made exclusive of Sundays. Hicks, Ex parte, Ball, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 143; 44 L. J., Bk. 106; 32 L. T. 432; 23 W. R. 852.

And in reckoning the twenty-one days allowed by r. 143 of the Bankruptcy Rules of 1870 for appealing, Sundays are, by virtue of the rule in bankruptcy of 26th of May, 1873, not to be taken into account. Hall, Ex parte, Alven, In re, infra.

— Appeal from County Court to Chief Judge.—Notwithstanding the rules under the Judicature Acts, the time for appealing to the Chief Judge from an order made in a bankruptcy matter by a county court is still regulated by the Bankruptcy Rules. Hall, Ex parte, Alven, In re, 16 Ch. D. 501; 50 L. J., Ch. 400; 44 L. T. 8; 29 W. R. 298—C. A.

— Notice to Registrar—"Forthwith."—Rule 144 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, requires that upon entering an appeal a copy of the appeal notice shall be sent forthwith to the registrar of the court appealed from:—Held, that "forthwith" must be read with reference to the period of twenty-one days within which, by r. 143, a notice of appeal must be entered with the registrar of appeals, and that it means within twenty-one days from the date of the order appealed from, or as soon as possible afterwards. Sillence, In re, Sillence, Ex parte, 7 Ch. D. 238; 47 L. J., Bk. 87; 37 L. T. 676; 26 W. R. 129.

Where the order appealed from was made on the 22nd of August, and notice of appeal was duly left and entered with the registrar of appeals and a deposit paid, but a copy of the appeal notice was not served on the registrar of the court appealed from until the 12th of November:—Held, that the appeal was out of time and irregular, and that it could not be heard. Id.

Where an appeal from an order of a county court annulling an adjudication was duly entered with the registrar of appeals within twenty-one days from the date of the order appealed from, but a copy of the appeal notice was not sent to the registrar of the court appealed from until seven days afterwards, such registrar being also the trustee in the bankruptcy:—Held, that the appeal was out of time, and that an affidavit explaining the reason of the delay was not admissible. Donnithorne, Ex parte, Green, In re, 40 L. T. 660; 27 W. R. 824.

When an act is required by a statute or a rule of court to be done "forthwith," the word "forthwith" must be construed with regard to the object of the provision and the circumstances of the case. The London agents of the country solicitors of an appellant from an order made by a county court in bankruptcy entered the appeal with the registrar of appeals in London, on Friday, the 5th August, the last possible day, but did not post a copy of the appeal notice to the country solicitors until the following day, and it was not received by them until Monday, the 8th August, and on that day they sent a copy of the notice to the registrar of the county court:—Held, that the copy of the notice had not been sent to the registrar of the county court "forthwith" on entering the appeal as required by rule 144, and that consequently the appeal was out of time. Lamb, Ex parte, Southam, In re, 19 Ch. D. 169; 51 L. J., Ch. 207; 45 L. T. 639; 30 W. R. 126—C. A. Affirming 45 L. T. 446; 30 W. R. 64.

Where the registrar of the county court from which an appeal is brought did not in fact receive notice of an appeal until three days after the time for appealing had elapsed:—Held, that the notice not having been sent "forthwith," the appeal was out of time and could not be heard. Lyon, Ex parte, Lyon, In re, 45 L. T. 768.

— County Court Office closed.—An order of a county court was made on the 17th December. Notice of appeal was entered in London on the 22nd December. On the five following days the county court office was closed, and in consequence the county court registrar did not receive a copy of the appeal notice till the 28th. The respondents' country solicitors, however, received notice of the appeal on the 23rd December:—Held, that the copy notice had been sent to the county court registrar "forthwith" within the meaning of r. 144 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870. Williams, Ex parte, Jones, In re, 46 L. T. 242—C. A. Reversing 46 L. T. 237; 30 W. R. 416.

— When Time begins to run.—In construing r. 143 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, the words "decision" and "order" mean the same thing; and the twenty-one days within which an appeal from a county court to the chief judge must be brought are to be reckoned from the date of the settling and signing of the order. Cochrane, Ex parte, Sendall, In re, 9 Ch. D. 698; 48 L. J., Bk. 31; 38 L. T. 820; 26 W. R. 818.

The decision in Garrard, Ex parte (5 Ch. D. 61) does not apply to the case of an appeal from a county court to the chief judge in bankruptcy. Id.

The twenty-one days within which an appeal from a county court to the chief judge must be brought, are to be reckoned from the day when the decision of the county court was pronounced. Whitton, Ex parte, Greaves, In re, 13 Ch. D. 881; 49 L. J., Bk. 31; 42 L. T. 63; 28 W. R. 432.

To Court of Appeal—Before Judicature Acts.—Notice of an appeal must be given within twenty-one days from the day on which the order appealed from was pronounced, not from the day on which it was drawn up. Hinton, Ex parte, Hinton, In re, 19 L. R., Eq. 266; 44 L. J., Bk. 36; 31 L. T. 852; 23 W. R. 488.

— Since Judicature Acts.—Since the Judicature Acts the time for appealing to the Court of Appeal from orders made by the chief judge in bankruptcy is regulated by the Rules of Court. 1875. Viney, Ex parte, Gilbert, In re, 4 Ch. D. 794; 46 L. J., Bk. 80; 36 L. T. 43; 25 W. R. 364—C. A.

Therefore, in calculating the twenty-one days allowed for appealing, Sundays are not to be excluded, and the material date is, not that of entering the appeal with the registrar, but that of service of the notice of appeal on the respondent. Ib.

Rule 143 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, and the Bankruptcy Order of the 26th of May, 1873, do not now apply to appeals from the chief judge to the Court of Appeal. Ib.

An order, which was a refusal of an application, was made by the London Bankruptcy Court on the 10th of March. An appeal was entered with the registrar of appeals on the 4th of April, and on the same day notice was served on the respondent. The registrar's office had been entirely closed for the Easter Vacation from the 30th of March to the 3rd of April, both inclusive:—Held, that, notwithstanding the closing of the office, the notice of appeal might have been served on the respondent, and that, as it had not been served within twenty-one days, the appeal was too late. Saffery, Ex parte, Lambert, In re, 5 Ch. D. 365; 46 L. J., Bk. 89; 36 L. T. 532; 25 W. R. 572—C. A.

The time for appealing to the Court of Appeal from decisions of the London Court of Bankruptcy is now regulated entirely by the Rules of Court, 1875, and not by the Bankruptcy Rules. Garrard, Ex parte, Lower, In re, 5 Ch. D. 61; 46 L. J., Bk. 70; 37 L. T. 42; 25 W. R. 364—C. A.

Therefore, where the appeal is from an order actually made, the twenty-one days for appealing run from the signing, not from the pronouncing, of the order. Ib.

Extension of Time.—The court has jurisdiction to give leave to appeal after the expiration of the twenty-one days within which, under r. 143 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, the notice of appeal is to be given. Kireton Coal Company, Ex parte, Phillips, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 730; 42 L. J., Bk. 11; 27 L. T. 670; 20 W. R. 1026.

When an appellant had not given notice of appeal until the last day allowed for the purpose, the court gave the respondent leave to present a cross appeal, though the time for appealing had expired. Ib.

— "Person. Aggrieved."—A third person who is aggrieved by an adjudication of bankruptcy, by reason of the date of an act of bankruptcy on which the adjudication purports to be founded, is, after the expiration of the time limited for appealing, entitled, ex debito justitiæ, to an extension of the time for appealing, if he applies promptly after he becomes aware of the date of the act of bankruptcy which affects his rights. Tucker, Ex parte, Tucker, In re, 12 Ch. D. 308; 48 L. J., Bk. 118; 28 W. R. 219—C. A.

The limit of time for bringing an appeal fixed by r. 143 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, applies equally to all "persons aggrieved," whether parties to the order or not. An order of adjudication, duly made, and not appealed against for twenty-one days, is good against all the world. Johnson, In re, Wigg, Ex parte, 12 Ch. D. 905; 48 L. J., Bk. 119; 40 L. T. 528; 27 W. R. 804.

— Annulling Adjudication.—Notice of an appeal from the refusal to annul an adjudication must be served on the trustee as well as on the petitioning creditor. And if notice of the appeal is served on the petitioning creditor in time, but is not served in time on the trustee, the appeal must be dismissed. The time for appealing will not be extended in such a case. Ward, Ex parte, Ward, In re, 15 Ch. D. 292; 43 L. T. 183; 29 W. R. 206—C. A.

— Mistake of Registrar's Clerk.—A mistake of the registrar's clerk, misleading the appellant's solicitor as to the time for bringing an appeal, is no ground for extending the time to appeal. Gilbert, In re, 4 Ch. D. 794; 36 L. T. 43; 25 W. R. 364—C. A.

2. WHO MAY APPEAL.

Creditor—Proof of Debt.—A creditor whose debt was not objected to at a meeting for the choice of assignees, although not formally proved, may appeal from a decision come to at the meeting, provided his debt is proved before the hearing of the appeal. Barnett, Ex parte, 4 L. R., Ch. 68; 19 L. T. 406; 17 W. R. 88.

Registration—Creditors not before Registrar.—Creditors who have not appeared before the registrar on the application for registration, or before the chief judge, on an appeal from the order for registration, have a locus standi to appeal from the order of the chief judge. Walter, Ex parte, Webb, In re, 2 Ch. D. 326; 45 L. J., Bk. 105; 34 L. T. 701; 24 W. R. 834—C. A.

Adjudication—Bill of Sale Holder.—An adjudication was made, founded upon the execution by the debtor of a bill of sale which was held to be an act of bankruptcy:—Held, that the holder of the bill of sale was entitled to appeal from the adjudication. Ellis, Ex parte, 2 Ch. D. 797; 45 L. J., Bk. 159; 34 L. T. 705—C. A.

Adjudication—Trustees for Benefit of Creditors.—The act of bankruptcy upon which an adjudication was founded was the execution by the debtor of a deed of assignment to trustees for the benefit of his creditors:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to appeal against the adjudication as persons aggrieved within s. 71 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Sadler, Ex parte, Whelan, In re, 48 L. J., Bk. 43; 39 L. T. 361; 27 W. R. 156.

Adjudication—Partners.—A joint adjudication was made against three partners. Two of them appealed. The third did not appeal within the twenty-one days allowed by the general rules:—Held, that he might be heard on the appeal, but on the terms of presenting a separate petition of appeal, and making the usual deposit to meet costs. Also, that as the case of the three partners was the same, the adjudication must be annulled against all three. Hayward, Ex parte, 6 L. R., Ch. 546; 40 L. J., Bk. 49; 24 L. T. 782; 19 W. R. 833.

Persons affected.]—Any person affected by an order of a county court judge made in bankruptcy (as, for instance, the solicitor of a trustee), may appeal therefrom to the chief judge. Hunt, Ex parte, Winn, In re, 19 W. R. 714.

By virtue of ss. 10 and 11 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, an adjudication of bankruptcy is, so long as it stands, conclusive as against a third person (e. g., the holder of a bill of sale executed by the bankrupt), that the act of bankruptcy, on which the adjudication was professedly founded, was in fact committed, and that the title of the trustee relates back to that act of bankruptcy. But a third person, whose title to property is affected by the adjudication, is under s. 71 a "person aggrieved" by it, and is entitled to appeal from it. Whether the limit of twenty-one days for bringing an appeal, fixed by rule 143 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, applies to a third person, quære. Learyd, Ex parte, Foulds, In re, 10 Ch. D. 3; 48 L. J., Bk. 17; 39 L. T. 525; 27 W. R. 277—C. A.

A person who alleges himself to be a creditor under a bankruptcy, but who has omitted for several years to prove his debt in the regular way, is not a "person aggrieved," within the meaning of s. 71 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, by the refusal to make an order, the result of which, if made, would be to increase the assets available for the creditors, and is, therefore, not entitled to appeal from the refusal. Ditton, Ex parte, Woods, In re, 11 Ch. D. 56; 40 L. T. 297; 27 W. R. 401—C. A.

When the court has refused to act on a report by the comptroller in bankruptcy that the trustee in a bankruptcy has been guilty of a misfeasance, neglect or omission, by which the estate has sustained a loss which the trustee ought to make good, neither the bankrupt nor any of his creditors is entitled to appeal from the refusal. Sidebotham, Ex parte, Sidebotham, In re, 14 Ch. D. 458; 49 L. J., Bk. 41; 42 L. T. 783; 28 W. R. 715—C. A.

The comptroller alone is entitled to appeal. Ib.

If the trustee has been guilty of a misfeasance, either the bankrupt or any of the creditors is entitled to make an application of his own to the court under s. 20, and, if the person so applying is dissatisfied with the order made, he has a right to appeal from it. Ib.

—Two Petitions—First Petitioner.]—When two petitions are presented against the same person, and he is adjudicated on the second, the first petitioner is not a "person aggrieved" by the adjudication, within the meaning of s. 71, and has no locus standi to appeal from it, Mason, Ex parte, White, In re, 14 Ch. D. 71; 49 L. J., Bk. 56; 42 L. T. 884; 28 W. R. 749—C. A.

Receiver before Appointment of Trustee.]—After the presentation of a bankruptcy petition and the appointment of a receiver, but before the appointment of a trustee, an order was made that the receiver should deliver up to the applicants some bills of exchange which had come into his hands, on the ground that they did not form part of the debtor's estate. Notice of the application had been addressed to the receiver, the debtors, and the petitioning creditor. Notice of appeal was given in the name of the receiver alone:—Held, that the notice must be amended by naming the debtors and the petitioning creditor also as appellants. Chalmers, Ex parte, Sawers, In re, 11 Ch. D. 911; 41 L. T. 263—C. A.

3. FROM AND TO WHOM.

From Registrar.]—Where the lord chancellor has ordered any pending business to be disposed of by the registrar, an appeal will lie from the decision of such registrar to the Court of Appeal in Chancery. Blair, Ex parte, Mackie, In re, 5 L. R., Ch. 482; 39 L. J., Bk. 45; 22 L. T. 287; 18 W. R. 615.

The chief judge will not entertain an application made by way of appeal on the subject of a registrar's decision; there must be an adjournment by the registrar for his opinion. Nicholson, In re, 18 W. R. 250.

An appeal from the registrar to the judge, under rule 295, is not an appeal within the rule of practice, that a successful appellant is not generally entitled to the costs of the appeal; it is rather an application to the judge to set right an irregularity committed by the registrar. Thorne, Ex parte, Butlin, In re, 42 L. J., Bk. 60.

An appeal from the decision of a registrar sitting as judge cannot be heard by a county court judge, but must be to the chief judge in bankruptcy or the lords justices of appeal as the case may be. Nicholson, Ex parte, Marsden, In re, 34 L. T. 592.

An appeal from the registrar of a county court, sitting as registrar, must be before the judge of his court in the first instance. Sidey, Ex parte, Sidey, In re, 24 L. T. 143.

—Notice of Appeal.]—Notice of an appeal from a registrar acting as chief judge ought not (even if it is ex parte) to be addressed to or served on the registrar. Izard, Ex parte, Meir, In re, 20 Ch. D. 703; 61 L. J., Ch. 939; 47 L. T. 212; 30 W. R. 861—C. A.

From County Court.]—No appeal lies to the chief judge in bankruptcy from an order made by a county court for the trial of issues of fact before itself, when the order is such as the county court has jurisdiction to make. Anderson, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 473; 39 L. J., Bk. 32; 22 L. T. 361; 18 W. R. 715.

When pending proceedings in a district Court of Bankruptcy have been transferred by the lord chancellor to a county court, an appeal from a decision of the county court judge under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, lies, in the first instance, to the chief judge in bankruptcy, not to the Court of Appeal in Chancery. Ib.

But under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, where pending proceedings in a district court in bankruptcy have been transferred by the lord chancellor to a county court, an appeal from a decision of the county court judge lies to the Court of Appeal in Chancery, not to the chief judge in bankruptcy. Palmer, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 470; 39 L. J., Bk. 48; 22 L. T. 323; 18 W. R. 587.

An appeal lies to the chief judge in bankruptcy from an order made by a county court judge, under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 16. Dempsey, Ex parte, 8 L. R., Ch. 676; 42 L. J., Bk. 93 ; 28 L. T. 860 ; 21 W. R. 800. Affirming S. C., sub nom. Strachan, Ex parte, Dempsey, In re, 21 W. R. 523.

— Decision on Facts of Particular Case.]

—A shipbroker introduced a purchaser to a ship-builder who purchased a ship, and the broker received a commission. The purchaser afterwards purchased other ships. The broker claimed commission on the second sale also. It was a question of fact whether the broker was employed in the second sale; but he alleged a custom by which he was entitled to commission whether he was employed or not. The county court judge found that on the evidence the broker had been employed, and assessed his claim. The chief judge refused to interfere with the decision as to facts arrived at by a county court judge sitting as a jury:—Held, that there was no evidence to go to a jury that the broker was employed, and that the custom was not proved. Humphrys, In re, Chatteris, Ex parte, 22 W. R. 289—L. J.

Under former Statutes.]—The effect of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, transferring the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Debtors Court to the Court of Bankruptcy, is to give the same right of appeal in insolvency cases as is given in bankruptcy cases. Perkins, Ex parte, 34 L. J., Bk. 37 ; 11 Jur., N. S. 895 ; 12 L. T. 784 ; 13 W. R. 1001.

Trover had been brought by assignees to recover from a mortgagee goods alleged to be in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt ; the assignees applied to the commissioner for an order for a sale of the goods, as in Heslop, Ex parte (1 De G., Mac. & G. 477). The commissioner declined to make the order on an ex parte application, and gave the assignees leave to serve the defendant in the action with notice of the application. On his attending by counsel, and objecting to the order being made, the commissioner refused the application, with costs:—Held, that the proper course of the assignees was to have appealed from the refusal to make the order on an ex parte application. Barlow, Ex parte, 2 De G., Mac. & G. 921 ; 22 L. J., Bk. 15.

A commissioner has no jurisdiction to annul his adjudication of bankruptcy, on the application of the bankrupt, except where the bankrupt shews cause against the adjudication under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 104. After the advertisement of the adjudication, the bankrupt must appeal to the superior court. Carter, Ex parte, 22 L. J., Bk. 55 ; 17 Jur. 515—H. L.

The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to review the decision of a commissioner refusing to grant an adjudication. Crabb, Ex parte, 25 L. J., Bk. 45 ; 2 Jur., N. S. 628—L. J.

A decision of a commissioner who declines to receive an affidavit, upon which an application for registration under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 200, is founded, on the ground of the insufficiency of the affidavit, is not the subject of appeal. Anon., 11 Jur., N. S. 69 ; 11 L. T. 466 ; 13 W. R. 302.

The Court of Appeal will not interfere with the discretion of a commissioner as to the admissibility of evidence at a private meeting. Maw, Ex parte, 11 Jur., N. S. 69 ; 11 L. T. 466 ; 13 W. R. 302.

Where a mortgagee submitted the question of the validity of his security to the jurisdiction of the commissioner on an application of the petitioning creditor to set it aside:—Held, that the commissioner, in deciding the question, was acting judicially, and not as an arbitrator, and that his decision was subject to appeal. Bland, Ex parte, 6 De G., Mac. & G. 757.

4. APPEAL TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

An application for leave to appeal to the House of Lords against an order in bankruptcy must be made, if not immediately, at all events within a reasonable time. Marcus, Ex parte, 26 L. J., Bk. 15 ; 3 Jur., N. S. 602—L. J.

An application to the Lord Chancellor to certify for an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal in Bankruptcy, to be presented to the House of Lords, is properly made ex parte, and the Lord Chancellor may, at his discretion, so certify. Kempson, Ex parte, 12 L. T. 43 ; 13 W. R. 446.

Notwithstanding the repeal of s. 18 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, the discretionary power of the Lords Justices as to appeals to the House of Lords remains. Newton, In re, 31 L. J., Bk. 81 ; 8 Jur., N. S. 495 ; 6 L. T. 314 ; 10 W. R. 547.

There is no right of appeal by common law to the House of Lords. Id.

Where the court, differing from the commissioner, and holding the petitioning creditor's debt to be sufficient, referred back to him the question of the validity of the adjudication, an application for leave to appeal to the House of Lords from the decision as to the sufficiency of the debt was held premature, and was ordered to stand over till the commissioner should have given his decision. Griffiths, Ex parte, 3 De G., Mac. & G. 174 ; 22 L. J., Bk. 50 ; 17 Jur. 655.

An order having been made in July, 1861, granting a bankrupt his discharge, with a condition as to his after-acquired property, the Lords Justices refused an application by the bankrupt for leave to appeal to the House of Lords, and determined to rehear the case themselves, directing that a new deposit of 20*l.* should be made. After the case had been so reheard, an order was made, varying the former order, by suspending it for a certain time, giving the bankrupt protection in the meantime, and an unconditional discharge at its termination. Drinkwater, Ex parte, 32 L. J., Bk. 20—L. J.

Where the court of appeal considered that a point of law, upon which leave to appeal to the House of Lords was asked for, was one of considerable importance, but that it could be as effectually raised in an action, the leave was refused, on the ground of the great expense and delay of such an appeal. Calthrop, Ex parte, 3 L. R., Ch. 252 ; 18 L. T. 194.

Leave to appeal to the House of Lords having been granted to a bankrupt against a decree of the Lord Chancellor, whereby he reversed an order of a commissioner dismissing the petition for adjudication, upon a representation by the petitioning creditor that the bankrupt had recently made an assignment of all his property to a relative, with a view of avoiding payment of the very debt on which the petition was founded, it was ordered that security be given by the assignees of the deed, otherwise the stay of proceedings, which had been ordered, pending the appeal before the Lord Chancellor, could not be continued, but the advertisement must issue at the expiration of a week. Williams, Ex parte, 10 L. T. 363.

Under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71.]—The Court of Appeal will not grant leave for an appeal to the House of Lords under s. 71 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, unless it can certify that the decision sought to be appealed involves a question of law or of equity of sufficient difficulty or importance to require the decision of the House of Lords. Attwater, Ex parte, Turner, In re, 5 Ch. D. 27; 46 L. J., Bk. 31; 35 L. T. 917; 25 W. R. 328—C. A.

Appeal to House of Lords not allowed in the case of a small debt on the ground that it would determine the right to larger sums. Butcher, Ex parte, Meldrum, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 595; 43 L. J., Bk. 98; 30 L. T. 482; 22 W. R. 721.

In determining under s. 71 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, whether leave should be granted to appeal to the House of Lords, the court will be guided by the same principles as under s. 18 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1849. Jackson, Ex parte, Bouca, In re, 14 Ch. D. 725; 43 L. T. 272—C. A.

Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused, on the ground that the appeal would be from the discretion of the court. East and West India Dock Company, Ex parte, Clarke, In re, 17 Ch. D. 759; 50 L. J., Ch. 789; 45 L. T. 6; 30 W. R. 22—C. A.

5. IN WHAT CASES.

Disclaimer by Leave of Court—Appeal after Execution of Disclaimer.]—After unconditional leave has been given by the court to a trustee in bankruptcy to disclaim a lease of the bankrupt, and the trustee has executed a disclaimer, it is too late for the lessor to appeal from the order even for the purpose of getting conditions imposed on the trustee. The Court of Appeal has then no power to impose conditions. If the lessor desires to appeal from such an order, he ought to apply when it is made for a stay of proceedings under it. Ditton, Ex parte (3 Ch. D. 459) followed. Sadler, Ex parte, Hawes, In re, 19 Ch. D. 122; 51 L. J., Ch. 201; 30 W. R. 173—C. A.

Interpleader Order in Bankruptcy.]—Any order in interpleader made by the chief judge in bankruptcy can be appealed from. Streeter, Ex parte, Morris, In re, 19 Ch. D. 216; 45 L. T. 634; 30 W. R. 127—C. A.

6. PRACTICE ON APPEAL.

Notice of Appeal.]—On the application of a trustee in bankruptcy, the registrar of a county court declared two bills of sale which the bankrupt had executed void against the trustee. On appeals by the two grantees, the chief judge affirmed the decision as to the first bill of sale, but held that the second bill of sale was valid as against the trustee. The first grantee gave notice of appeal, addressed to the trustee and to the second grantee. The trustee gave no original notice of appeal, but served notice on both the grantees that, on the hearing of the first grantee's appeal, he should contend that the decision of the chief judge as to the second bill of sale ought to be varied in his favour:—Held, that this was a good notice under Rules of Court, 1875, Ord. LVIII. r. 6. Payne, Ex parte, Cross, In re, 11 Ch. D. 539; 40 L. T. 296; 27 W. R. 368.

The effect of Rule 144 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, which prescribes that four days' notice of an appeal shall be given, is merely that the appeal motion shall not be heard until the four days have elapsed. Wood, In re, Lückes, Ex parte, 7 L. R., Ch. 302; 41 L. J., Bk. 21; 26 L. T. 113; 20 W. R. 403.

Before notice of appeal can be given, an order must be drawn up to which the appeal can attach, though the appeal is from a refusal to make an order asked for by the appellant. Sykes, Ex parte, 19 W. R. 563.

Debtor not shewing Cause against Petition.]—When a debtor gives no notice under r. 36 of his intention to shew cause against a bankruptcy petition, and the petition is consequently heard in his absence, and the court refuses to make an adjudication, if the petitioning creditor desires to appeal against the refusal he must serve notice of the appeal on the debtor. Warburg, Ex parte, Whalley, In re, 24 Ch. D. 364; 49 L. T. 243—C. A.

Substituted Service.]—In a proper case the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to make an order for substituted service of a notice of appeal, though no express provision to that effect is contained in the rules of court. Id.

Cross Appeal—When Required.]—When an appeal is brought from part of an order the whole case is not open to the respondent; but if he wishes to complain of another part of the order he must present a cross appeal. Kiveton Coal Company, Ex parte, Phillips, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 730; 42 L. J., Bk. 11; 27 L. T. 670; 20 W. R. 1026.

Payment of Deposit at or before Time of Entering—Formal Defect or Irregularity.]—Rule 2 of November, 1878, has not altered the requirement of rule 145 of 1870, that the deposit on an appeal from a county court shall be paid "at or before the time of entering" the appeal:—Sensible, however, that the payment would be in time if it was made at the earliest possible moment after the entry of the appeal. Rosenthal, Ex parte, Dickinson, In re, 20 Ch. D. 315; 51 L. J., Ch. 736; 47 L. T. 266; 30 W. R. 667—C. A. Affirming 51 L. J., Ch. 559; 46 L. T. 320; 30 W. R. 492.

An appeal was entered on the 17th February, but the deposit was not paid till the 6th March:—Held, that this was not a formal defect or an irregularity which could be cured under the power given to the court by sect. 82, and that the appeal could not be entertained. Id.

Having regard to rule 2 of November, 1878, the proper practice now is for the registrar, before entering an appeal, to give a direction to the Bank of England to receive the deposit on the appeal, and, after receiving a certificate from the bank that the money has been paid, to enter the appeal. Id.

— Certificate that Money deposited before

Entry.—The practice laid down in Rosenthal, Ex parte (supra), that before entering an appeal in bankruptcy the registrar ought now to give a direction to the Bank of England to receive the deposit payable on the entry, and not to enter the appeal until he receives from the bank a certificate that the money has been paid, applies to appeals from the chief judge to the Court of Appeal, as well as to appeal from a county court to the chief judge. Luxon, Ex parte, Pidsley, In re, 20 Ch. D. 701; 51 L. J. Ch. 928; 47 L. T. 211; 31 W. R. 71—C. A.

A notice of appeal from an order made by the chief judge on the 24th April was taken to the office of the registrar of appeals on the 28th April. The registrar's clerk entered the appeal, and gave a direction to the bank to receive the deposit. The money was paid to the bank on the 8th May. The certificate of the bank of the payment was then taken to the registrar's office, but the clerk made no further entry of the appeal.—Held, that the clerk had made a mistake in entering the appeal before receiving the bank's certificate of the payment of the deposit, but that as there had been no default on the part of the appellant, the appeal could be entertained. Ib.

Increasing Deposit.—After an appeal has been entered with the registrar, and the ordinary deposit of 20l. has been made by the appellant, it is too late for the respondent to apply to have the amount of the deposit increased. Lovering, Ex parte, Thorpe, In re, 15 L. R., Eq. 291; 42 L. J., Bk. 39; 21 W. R. 380.

Notwithstanding Rule 145 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, the Court of Appeal can, under Ord. 58, r. 15, require such security as it thinks fit to be given for the costs of a bankruptcy appeal. Isaacs, Ex parte, Baum, In re, 9 Ch. D. 271; 47 L. J., Bk. 111; 38 L. T. 924; 26 W. R. 890—C. A.

Order made to increase the amount of the deposit on a bankruptcy appeal from 20l. to 70l., on the ground of the insolvency of the appellant. Ib.

An undischarged debtor will not be ordered personally to pay the costs of his unsuccessful appeal beyond the deposit. Baum, Ex parte, Baum, In re, 7 Ch. D. 719; 47 L. J., Bk. 48; 38 L. T. 367; 26 W. R. 568—C. A.

Locus Standi—Appeal by Trustee removed before Hearing—Refusal of New Trustees to prosecute Appeal—Costs.—The trustee in a bankruptcy presented an appeal against the admission of a proof. Before the appeal came on for hearing the appellant had been removed from his office, and a new trustee appointed, who declined to prosecute the appeal.—Held, that the appellant had no locus standi, but that the appeal must stand over for a fortnight to give the creditors an opportunity of prosecuting it. At the end of the fortnight no creditor had adopted the appeal.—Held, that the appeal must be dismissed, and that the respondent was entitled to have his costs paid out of the deposit, but that no personal order for costs could be made against the appellant. Sheard, Ex parte, Pooley, In re (No. 2), 16 Ch. D. 110; 44 L. T. 260—C. A.

Fresh Evidence, when allowed.—The 32nd of the General Orders in Bankruptcy, of 6th

November, 1861, providing that no new evidence shall be received on any appeal, unless the Court of Appeal shall, on the hearing thereof, so direct, applies to evidence upon the matters in issue, and not to evidence as to what took place in the court below. Page, Ex parte, 1 De G., J. & S. 283; 32 L. J., Bk. 14; 9 Jur., N. S. 8; 7 L. T. 408.

In the former case, some ground must be shewn for the admission of the new evidence Ib.

Where an application had been made to the Court of Appeal to allow further evidence to be admitted, and the affidavits had been filed, subject to such permission, and read by the respondents, the matter was ordered to stand over, with liberty to the respondents to answer the affidavits, without prejudice to the question of their admissibility. Robertshaw, Ex parte, 10 L. T. 254.

Where an application is made to the Court of Appeal to set aside an adjudication, the court has jurisdiction to allow further evidence to be adduced. Miller, In re, 32 L. J., Bk. 45; 7 L. T. 657; 11 W. R. 80—L. J.

When fresh evidence in a matter sent back to a district court for further consideration has been permitted, and it appears that the witnesses reside in London, the court will order that fresh evidence be taken before one of the commissioners in London. Hill, Ex parte, 7 L. T. 659—L. J.

The court will not receive fresh evidence not before the commissioner unless under special circumstances. Holford, Ex parte, 11 Jur., N. S. 69; 11 L. T. 465.

The court will refuse to permit fresh evidence to be used on an appeal if the party tendering it had the opportunity of using it in the court below, but omitted to do so. Isaac, Ex parte, De Vecchi, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 58; 40 L. J., Bk. 19; 22 L. T. 523; 19 W. R. 38.

When additional evidence was necessary to enable the Court of Appeal to dispose of a case satisfactorily, such evidence was taken vivâ voce on the hearing of the appeal. Keighley, Ex parte, Wike, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 667; 44 L. J., Bk. 13.

Upon an appeal from the decision of a county court the chief judge will not shut out evidence not before the court below, where the proposed evidence has been filed and notice given in ample time to allow the effect of such proposed evidence to be fully considered and answered by the other side. Wigg, Ex parte, Johnson, In re, 12 Ch. D. 905; 48 L. J., Bk. 119; 40 L. T. 528; 27 W. R. 804.

Evidence taken before, but not used upon the original hearing, admitted upon the hearing of an appeal. Harris, Ex parte, James, In re, 19 L. R., Eq. 253; 44 L. J., Bk. 31; 31 L. T. 621; 23 W. R. 536.

New Case raised on Appeal.—An appellant is not entitled to raise upon his appeal a new case inconsistent with that which he originally raised in the primary court, even though the evidence taken in that court supports the new case. Reddish, Ex parte, Walton, In re, 5 Ch. D. 882; 37 L. T. 237; 25 W. R. 741—C. A.

Costs of Appeal.—In appeals from orders made by county courts in bankruptcy since the 1st of November, 1875, a successful appellant will, as a general rule, be entitled to his costs of appeal. Masters, Ex parte, Winson, In re, 1 Ch. D. 113; 45 L. J., Bk. 18; 33 L. T. 613; 24 W. R. 113.

A successful appellant from a decision of the county court, will not be allowed costs of appeal. Cherry, In re, Matthews, Ex parte, 40 L. J., Bk. 90; 25 L. T. 276; 19 W. R. 1005. Affirmed on appeal, 7 L. R., Ch. 24; 25 L. T. 646; 20 W. R. 136—L. J. See preceding case, contra.

— New Evidence.—When a party appeals, and, subsequently, further evidence is adduced which causes him to abandon his appeal, no costs will be given to either side. Weir, Ex parte, Aird, In re, 21 W. R. 785.

— New Grounds.—When an appellant succeeds only upon a ground not raised in the court of first instance, he will have to pay the costs of the original hearing. Harris, Ex parte, James, In re, 19 L. R., Eq. 253; 44 L. J., Bk. 31; 31 L. T. 621; 23 W. R. 536.

— Cross Appeals.—When an appeal and a cross appeal both fail, the appellants pay costs of the appeal as if no cross appeal had been presented, and the respondents only pay any extra costs which the cross appeal may have caused. Ogle, Ex parte, Smith, Ex parte, Pilling, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 711; 42 L. J., Bk. 99; 21 W. R. 938.

— Non-appearance of Appellant.—When, on an appeal from an order of adjudication being called on for hearing, no one appears on behalf of the appellant, the court will dismiss the appeal with costs without requiring the respondent to prove that he has been served with notice of the appeal. Lowe, Ex parte, 7 Ch. D. 160; 47 L. J., Bk. 24; 37 L. T. 583; 26 W. R. 229—C. A.

— Shorthand Writer's Notes.—The charge for a copy of a shorthand writer's notes of the proceedings in a county court may be allowed as part of the costs of an appeal. Sauyer, Ex parte, Bunden, In re, 1 Ch. D. 698; 45 L. J., Bk. 56; 33 L. T. 759; 24 W. R. 375.

— Trustee Respondent.—A trustee in bankruptcy who is respondent to a successful appeal will not be ordered to pay costs personally. Stapleton, Ex parte, Nathan, In re, 10 Ch. D. 586; 40 L. T. 14; 27 W. R. 327—C. A.

— One Respondent made to pay another Respondent's Costs.—The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to order one respondent to pay the costs incurred by a co-respondent. Wollheim, In re, 11 W. R. 128—L. J.

Rehearing by Court of Appeal.—See PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE (Rehearing), col. 1450.

XXV. EVIDENCE IN BANKRUPTCY.

1. PROOF OF BANKRUPTCY.

Under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 232.—This section applies to all cases against a bankrupt, both criminal as well as civil. Reg. v. Levi, 1 L. & C., C. C. 597; 10 Cox, C. C. 110; 34 L. J., M. C. 174; 12 L. T. 502; 13 W. R. 724.

Proof by Gazette.—The production of a copy of the London Gazette purporting to be printed by authority, containing an advertisement of an adjudication of bankruptcy, is sufficient proof of the adjudication under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 240. Reg. v. Raudnitz, 11 Cox, C. C. 360; 21 L. T. 621.

The goods of M. having been seized and sold under an execution, notice was duly served on the sheriff of a petition in bankruptcy against him; this petition was preferred in a county court against him as a gentleman residing within the district of that court, and not residing or carrying on business in the London district, and alleged an act of bankruptcy which would render even a non-trader liable to be made bankrupt; no opposition was offered, and he was adjudged bankrupt and a trustee appointed. In an interpleader issue between the trustee and the execution creditor, to try whether the former was entitled to the proceeds of the sale as trustee of a bankrupt trader:—Held, by the majority of the court, that the trustee might rely on the copy adjudication in the Gazette as conclusive evidence of the bankruptcy, and also give evidence that he was a trader in London in order to shew that the goods were the goods of a bankrupt trader within 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 87. Recell v. Blake, 7 L. R., C. P. 300; 41 L. J., C. P. 129; 26 L. T. 578; 20 W. R. 756.

— Cuttings from the Gazette.—A petition in bankruptcy having been presented against the prisoner in the D. County Court, the court made an order that the publication of a notice of the petition in the London Gazette should be deemed service of the petition on the prisoner. The prisoner did not appear according to this notice, and there was no evidence that it had come to his knowledge. The prisoner was adjudicated bankrupt in his absence, and divers proceedings in the bankruptcy took place. Subsequently thereto the prisoner was arrested, and afterwards examined in court touching his affairs by the trustee in the bankruptcy, and the result was that he was indicted and convicted for various offences under the Bankruptcy Act. On the trial, in proof of the publication of the order of the county court in the Gazette, the file of the proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court was produced, containing a cutting from the Gazette of the advertisement of the order of the county court and notice to appear:—Held, that this cutting from the Gazette was improperly received as evidence of the publication of the notice in the London Gazette, and that the conviction could not be sustained. Reg. v. Lowe, 15 Cox, C. C. 286; 52 L. J., M. C. 122; 48 L. T. 763; 47 J. P. 535.

— Married Woman.—The London Gazette containing the advertisement of the bankruptcy is rightly admitted as conclusive evidence of the bankruptcy as against the bankrupt, although a married woman, the prescribed period to take proceedings to annul the bankruptcy having elapsed, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 233. Reg. v. Robinson, 1 L. R., C. C. 80; 36 L. J., M. C. 78; 16 L. T. 605; 15 W. R. 966; 10 Cox, C. C. 467.

Examinations of a bankrupt, taken compulsorily before the commissioner in bankruptcy, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, are rightly admitted against him on the trial of an indictment for embezzling property with intent to defraud creditors. Ib.

File of Proceedings.—The file of proceedings in bankruptcy is not a record, but may be questioned. Bacon, Ex parte, Bond, In re, 17 Ch. D. 447; 44 L. T. 834; 29 W. R. 574—C. A.

In other Cases.—In an action, not by a person claiming under assignees of a bankrupt against a third party, the proceedings in bankruptcy must be taken as conclusive, if either admitted or proved; and the validity of an order for sale under which a plaintiff claims property of the bankrupt, or of a debt, before and as a proof of which he has obtained it, cannot be disputed. Mackley v. Pattender, 2 F. & F. 61.

A certificate under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 126, was evidence, as against the bankrupt, as a valid bankruptcy, without proof of the petitioning creditor's debt, &c. Fyson v. Chambers, 9 M. & W. 461.

A fiat not prosecuted was admissible in an action brought by virtue of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 8, to recover money paid by a bankrupt, although not entered of record in the Court of Bankruptcy. Belcher v. Sambourne, 6 Q. B. 414; 13 L. J., Q. B. 297; 8 Jur. 858.

A fiat was sufficiently proved by shewing that it was under the hand of a Master in Chancery, without proving his appointment to sign fiats under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 56, s. 12. Marshall v. Lamb, D. & M. 315; 5 Q. B. 115; 13 L. J., Q. B. 75; 7 Jur. 850.

Office copies of proceedings in a bankruptcy which had been annulled, ordered to be delivered to a creditor for the purpose of being used by him on a trial abroad. Sybrandt, Ex parte, 3 De G. & J. 487; 28 L. J., Bk. 14; 5 Jur., N. S. 1190.

In order to prove his title as creditors' assignee, the plaintiff put in evidence a certificate, dated before action, certifying his proper appointment before action, signed by the registrar for the commissioner, and sealed with the seal of the Court of Bankruptcy:—Held, that the certificate so sealed was conclusive, and that the defendant could not go into evidence to shew that there was no signature by the commissioner or his deputy until after action. Kelly v. Morray, 35 L. J., C. P. 287; 14 W. R. 939.

Where in an indictment against a trader for fraudulently obtaining goods on credit, the act of bankruptcy relied on was the filing a petition in the insolvent debtors' court under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 35, and the only evidence offered was a copy of the petition, duly signed and certified by the proper officer, in accordance with 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 239, but the time of filing such petition was only shewn by an indorsement on the back of the copy, such indorsement not being certified in any way, or referred to by the petition:—Held, that although the petition to, and adjudication of, the Court of Bankruptcy were proved, yet that it was also necessary to prove the act of bankruptcy, and that the evidence was not sufficient for that purpose. Reg. v. Lande, Dears. C. C. 567; 25 L. J., M. C. 14; 1 Jur., N. S. 1176.

Who estopped from disputing Bankruptcy.—In an action for goods against the person who sold them, an advertisement of the defendant describing them as the goods of the bankrupt, precludes him from disputing the bankruptcy. Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 342.

In an action of trover by the assignees of a bankrupt, the defendant's attorney admitted that the party had been duly declared bankrupt:—Held, that the defendant was thereby precluded from objecting to any of the proceedings under the commission, unless he had given notice to dispute it. Perring v. Tucker, 3 M. & P. 557.

If a person, against whom a commission issues, acquiesces in it so far as to take a part in the sale of his own effects under the commission, he will not afterwards be allowed to question it. Clarke v. Clarke, 6 Esp. 61.

But a bankrupt who assists in the sale of his own goods under the commission, for the purpose of protecting his property, and seeing that it is sold to the best advantage, is not thereby estopped from disputing the validity of the commission. Hearne v. Rogers, 4 M. & R. 486; 9 B. & C. 577.

Neither is he so estopped by giving notice to his lessors of a farm that he is a bankrupt, and is willing to deliver up the lease, which they accept, his assignees not being parties or privies to the transaction. Ib.

2. NOTICE TO DISPUTE BANKRUPTCY.

A notice to dispute the bankruptcy is too general. Trimley v. Unwin, 6 B. & C. 537; 9 D. & R. 548. See Porter v. Walker, 1 Scott, N. R. 568.

Notice of disputing the petitioning creditor's debt, the trading, or the act of bankruptcy, must be given, although under the new rules of pleading the denial of the bankruptcy may appear upon the record. Moon v. Raphael, 2 Scott, 489; 2 Bing. N. C. 310; 7 C. & P. 115; 1 Hodges, 289.

In the absence of a notice to dispute the petitioning creditor's debt, the debt upon the proceedings must be taken for all purposes of the action to be admitted. Hernemann v. Barber, 14 C. B. 583; 23 L. J., C. P. 145; 18 Jur. 790.

Practice.—Where a defendant, in an action brought against him by an assignee of a bankrupt, pleads the general issue, without giving notice of his intention to dispute the bankruptcy, he may have leave to withdraw such plea, and plead de novo, with the notice required by the statute. Gardner v. Slack, 6 Moore, 489; S. P., Lawrence v. Crowder, 1 M. & P. 511.

In an action by assignees of a bankrupt, the defendant gave notice to dispute the trading and act of bankruptcy. At the trial, the judge nonsuited them on the ground that the petitioning creditor's debt upon the proceedings was contracted at a period when the bankrupt had ceased to be a trader. The court set aside the nonsuit, holding that the objection was not open to the defendant under the notice to dispute the trading and act of bankruptcy. A judge at chambers having allowed the defendant to amend his notice, by adding thereto that he intended at the trial to dispute the petitioning creditor's debt,—the court refused to allow the assignees to discontinue without payment of costs. Hernemann v. Barber, 15 C. B. 774; 3 C. L. R. 239, 241.

Omitting to give Notice—Effect.—A party omitting to give notice to dispute the requisites admits them, but not the effect of the commission in point of law. Phillips v. Hopwood, 1 B. & Ad. 321, 619.

3. COMPELLING ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES.

Powers of Commissioners.—A commissioner has power to summon parties to give evidence before him, although there are no facts in dispute, and the difference on which he is called to adjudicate turns on a question of law. Watson v. Whitmore, 14 L. J., Ex. 41; 8 Jur. 964.

Where the official assignee improperly issues a summons for the attendance of a party before a commissioner, it is the duty of that party to attend, and state the circumstances to the commissioner, in order that he may allow the costs of attendance, if he thinks the complaint well founded; but, if the party refuses to attend, and a warrant is subsequently issued for his apprehension, under which he is taken, he cannot maintain an action for malicious arrest. Ib.

Where a party summoned to attend before a commissioner in a district court of bankruptcy, and refusing to attend, on the ground that his expenses were not tendered in pursuance of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 35, was arrested under a warrant issued by the commissioner:—Held, in an action for false imprisonment against the solicitor to the fiat, who applied for the warrant, that the warrant was a justification to him, though the commissioner stated, at the time of the application, that he was in doubt whether the warrant ought to issue, and that the parties applying must take it upon their own responsibility. Cooper v. Harding, 7 Q. B. 928; 9 Jur. 777.

Where a party, who refused to attend and give evidence before a district court of bankruptcy, was arrested by the messenger on a warrant issued by the commissioner, and, on his afterwards submitting to be examined, was ordered by the commissioner to be discharged out of custody on payment of the costs incurred in bringing him up, and a memorandum to that effect, not under the seal of the commissioner, was indorsed on the warrant:—Held, first, that the operation of the warrant, as a legal cause of detainer, was expended either by the party's being brought before the commissioner, or on his submitting to be examined. Watson v. Bodell, 14 M. & W. 37; 14 L. J., Ex. 281; 9 Jur. 626.

Held, secondly, that the commissioner had no jurisdiction to make the subsequent order for the detention of the party until the costs were paid; and that the order was, consequently, no justification to the messenger for that detention. Ib.

Where a party, who has been summoned to attend, in order to be examined, and to produce a deed, fails to comply with the exigency of the summons, a warrant by the commissioners, directing him to be arrested and brought before them to be examined and produce the document, is good, although the document is one which was not in the party's possession, and over which he had no control. Wright v. Maude, 2 D., N. S. 517; 10 M. & W. 527; 12 L. J., Ex. 22; 6 Jur. 953.

Where a party, who has been duly summoned to attend at a given hour, finds on his arrival that the commissioners are engaged on other business, he is bound to wait until they are either ready to examine him or dispense with his attendance. Ib.

A party bought land of a trader, and afterwards the trader was adjudicated bankrupt. A person holding the purchase-deed for the purchaser, after the adjudication, was summoned, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 120, before a county court judge, to produce the deed, who ordered it to be impounded and the property to be delivered up to the assignees to be sold for the benefit of the creditors. On appeal, the Lord Chancellor discharged the order, and ordered that the assignees should pay the costs. Cole, Ex parte, 32 L. J., Bk. 11; 9 Jur., N. S. 33; 7 L. T. 406; 11 W. R. 127.

Liquidation Proceedings.—The trustee in a liquidation sought to impeach a transaction entered into by the liquidating debtor with F. on the ground that it was a fraud upon the creditors, and issued a summons for the examination of F. under s. 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had jurisdiction to order the examination for the purpose of discovery, irrespective of any consideration as to whether the Court of Bankruptcy would entertain subsequent proceedings arising out of such examination. Eckersley, Ex parte. Lewtas, In re, 48 L. T. 832.

Discovery of Bankrupt's Property—Summoning Witnesses for Examination—Application by Creditor.—A creditor who applies to the court under s. 96 for leave to summon witnesses for examination as to a bankrupt, his trade dealings or property, is bound to shew a prima facie probability that some benefit will result to the estate or to the creditors from the proposed examination. Nicholson, Ex parte. Willson, In re, 14 Ch. D. 243; 49 L. J., Bk. 68; 43 L. T. 266; 28 W. R. 936—C. A.

Judicial Discretion of Registrar—Appeal.—Where the registrar in the exercise of his judicial discretion has refused such an application, the Court of Appeal will not readily interfere. Ib.

Opposition by Trustee—Filing of Affidavits.—The trustee in the bankruptcy has no interest in the matter except for the purpose of saying whether he is willing to conduct the examination himself, and, semble, he ought not to file affidavits in opposition to the application. Ib.

Service of Subpœnas.—It is in the discretion of the judge to appoint by whom subpœnas issued out of the court under rr. 58 and 167 may be served. Bolland, Ex parte. Holden, In re, 19 L. R., Eq. 131; 44 L. J., Bk. 9; 31 L. T. 443; 24 W. R. 24.

Upon a question of practice between the trustee of a bankrupt's estate and the high bailiff of the court as to the person entitled to serve a subpœna upon a witness under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 96, the judge of the county court ruled that the high bailiff of the court, and not the solicitor of the trustee, was the proper person to make the service:—Held, that the judge of the county court had rightly exercised his discretion, and that there was no ground for interfering with his decision. Ib.

4. RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF WITNESSES.

Obligation to answer Questions—What Questions material.—Commissioners are authorized to examine a witness concerning the person, trade, dealings, estate, and effects of a bankrupt, and, incidentally to this power, they may examine him also respecting other individuals, through whom they may be likely to obtain information on those points; and, therefore, where a witness was asked questions as to when and where he last saw the bankrupt's wife:—Held, that such questions were legal and material, and that the commissioners were justified in committing him for giving unsatisfactory answers to these questions. Vogel, Ex parte, 2 B. & A. 219.

Held, also, that the true criterion by which to judge as to the propriety of the commitment, was to consider all the questions and answers collectively, and then to say whether the whole examination was satisfactory or not; and, therefore, where the commissioners in their warrant set out several questions, to some of which, taken alone, the answers were satisfactory:—Held, also, that this was no objection to a warrant committing the party "till he should full answer make to the questions so put to him as aforesaid." Id.

Where a bankrupt has sold goods to a party for a price considerably lower than what he gave for them, the purchaser, when summoned before the commissioners for examination, is bound to answer the question, "To whom did you subsequently sell these goods?" for it materially concerns the estate of the bankrupt to ascertain whether the sale by him was bonâ fide. Falk, In re, 2 Deac. & Chit. 415.

On a question as to the legality of the commitment of a witness, all the questions and answers must be looked at as forming one examination; and a witness cannot be committed for not answering as to his belief of the intention of the bankrupt, unless other parts of his examination shew such belief to be material with reference to the person, trade, dealing, or estate of the bankrupt. Baxter, Ex parte, 7 B. & C. 673; 1 M. & R. 572.

A commitment must be for not satisfactorily answering a material question; and it is not sufficient that the witness, throughout his examination, was unwilling to make a full disclosure. Id.

Where a party was examined with a view to ascertain whether the bankruptcy had been concerted between him and the bankrupt, and how the stock of the latter had been disposed of, and was asked with what intention he believed the bankrupt had come to him on a certain day before the docket was struck; to which he answered, that he did not know the bankrupt's intention, and did not know what to say as to his belief:—Held, that the question was not material, and that, therefore, although the answer might not be satisfactory, the commissioners had not authority to commit the party. Id.

A witness who was being examined under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 216, was asked where the bankrupt's father was residing. The witness, who was the father's solicitor, declined to answer, and stated that "the place of residence of my client came to my knowledge in my professional capacity, and in the course and in consequence of the professional employment in which I was engaged on his behalf, and in no other way:—Held, that the witness had not made a case for excusing himself from answering on the ground of professional privilege. Campbell, Ex parte, Cathart, In re, 5 L. R., Ch. 703; 23 L. T. 289; 18 W. R. 1056.

Held, also, that the question was one which was authorized by the act. Id.

Answer tending to Criminate.—Commissioners have no right to ask questions, the answers to which may subject the witness to fine or other criminal punishment. Smith v. Beadnell, 1 Camp. 30.

Where a witness refuses to answer a question put to him on the ground that his answer might tend to criminate himself, his mere statement of his belief that his answer will have that effect is not enough to excuse him from answering, but the court must be satisfied from the circumstances of the case, and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called upon to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to him from his being compelled to answer. But, if it is once made to appear that the witness is in danger, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question. Subject, however, to that reservation, the judge is bound to insist on the witness answering, unless he is satisfied that the answer will tend to place him in peril. Heg. v. Boyes (1 B. & S. 311) approved and followed. Reynolds, Ex parte, Reynolds, In re, 20 Ch. D. 294; 51 L. J., Ch. 756; 46 L. T. 508; 30 W. R. 651; 46 J. P. 533—C. A. Affirming 46 L. T. 143.

A witness summoned for examination, under s. 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, as to the property of a bankrupt, is entitled to refuse to answer a question on the ground that his answer would tend to criminate himself. Scholefield, Ex parte, Firth, In re, 6 Ch. D. 230; 46 L. J., Bk. 112; 37 L. T. 281; 26 W. R. 9—C. A.

Bankrupt must Answer.—The bankrupt himself, however, being under a personal obligation to make a full disclosure of his property to his creditors, is not entitled to any such protection, but must answer all questions put to him about his property, whatever the consequences to himself may be. Id.

What Answers Satisfactory.—That a man cannot positively recollect a fact, but should rather believe the affirmative, is a full and satisfactory answer by a witness. Miller's case, 2 W. Bl. 881; 3 Wils. 427.

Production of Documents.—The commissioners may compel the production of a book, to enable them to read the entries. Isaac v. Impey, 10 B. & C. 442; 4 C. & P. 120; 5 M. & R. 377; S. P., Isaac, Ex parte, 3 Y. & J. 38.

They have no authority to commit a witness for refusing to read an entry in a book which he produces. Id.

A witness being required to read certain entries in a book to which, during his examination, he had referred, but which he had not been called upon to produce, refused to read the entries, whereupon he was committed for refusing to answer the said question:—Held, that the warrant was bad in substance and in form; a request to read not being a question. Id.

In determining whether an order for the production of documents should be made under s. 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the court has to exercise a discretion. From the examination of a person summoned for examination under s. 96, at the instance of the trustee of a bankrupt, it appeared that a policy of insurance on the life of the bankrupt's wife, which had been effected by her before her marriage with the bankrupt, and which had been after the marriage assigned by the husband and wife to trustees, on trust for the wife for her separate use, had after the bankruptcy been assigned by way of mortgage, by a deed to which the bankrupt and his wife were parties; that the mortgage had been afterwards transferred to the witness; and that the wife had subsequently executed a deed assigning the equity of redemption to him:—Held, that the witness must produce the mortgage deed, the deed of transfer, and the deed of assignment. Tatton, Ex parte, Thorp, In re, 17 Ch. D. 512; 50 L. J., Ch. 792; 45 L. T. 89—C. A.

Under the trusts of a deed executed in 1834, a debt was due to Y. & Co. In 1838, H. entered into partnership with Y., and a partnership deed was executed. After various changes in the firm, B. & Co., the liquidating debtors, became the successors in business of Y. & Co., and, in an action for the administration of the trusts of the deed of 1834, the trustee of B. & Co. claimed the debt due under that instrument. In order to prove his title, the trustee summoned the surviving executor of Y., who died in 1841, for examination under s. 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and it appeared from his examination that the partnership deed of 1838 was under his control, but in the possession of his solicitor:—Held, that S. was not bound to produce the deed of 1838, unless there was prima facie evidence that the debt formed part of the property of the debtors. Smith, Ex parte, Bevan, In re, 45 L. T. 447.

—Solicitor's Lien.—A solicitor is not, on the ground of his lien on documents of a bankrupt in respect of professional services before the bankruptcy, entitled to refuse to produce such documents for examination by the trustee. Toleman and England, In re, Bramble, Ex parte, 13 Ch. D. 885; 42 L. T. 413; 28 W. R. 676.

Jurisdiction to order Account.—Under ss. 96 and 97 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the Court of Bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to order a witness to furnish an account in writing (not on oath) of money transactions between himself and the bankrupt, or property of the bankrupt received by him. Reynolds, Ex parte, Reynolds, In re, 21 Ch. D. 601; 52 L. J., Ch. 223; 47 L. T. 495; 31 W. R. 187—C. A.

Right to Costs.—A witness summoned for examination under s. 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, is not entitled to the costs of employing a solicitor or counsel. Waddell, Ex parte, Lutscher, In re, 6 Ch. D. 328; 36 L. T. 345; 26 W. R. 9—C. A.

The managing director of a company in which a liquidating debtor had held some shares, which had been forfeited, was summoned by the trustee in the liquidation under s. 96 for examination, with the view of obtaining information for the purpose of impeaching the validity of the forfeiture. He attended at the time appointed, and two counsel were present on his behalf, but, as the trustee's counsel did not attend, the examination was adjourned sine die, with costs to be paid by the trustee:—Held, that the witness was only entitled to the ordinary allowance for his expenses, and not to the costs of his solicitor or the fees paid to his counsel. Id.

Right to Copy of Depositions.—The court has a discretion whether to give a copy of the shorthand notes of the deposition of a witness examined under s. 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, but where a creditor had been so examined he was allowed a copy. Pratt, Ex parte, Hayman, In re, 21 Ch. D. 439; 52 L. J., Ch. 120; 47 L. T. 368; 31 W. R. 189—C. A.

5. DEPOSITIONS AND EXAMINATIONS.

Depositions—When Admissible as Evidence.—The depositions are conclusive evidence, so as not to admit evidence of fraud in the concoction of any of the requisites to support the commission. Young v. Timmins, 1 Tyr. 15; 1 C. & J. 148.

The depositions are conclusive evidence in a case where the bankrupt might have sued, if no bankruptcy had ensued, though the conversion which gave the right of action took place after the act of bankruptcy. For v. Mahoney, 2 C. & J. 325; 2 Tyr. 285.

It is only in actions by a bankrupt's own assignees for a debt or demand for which he might have sued, that the depositions are made evidence. Musket v. Drummond, 10 B. & C. 153; 5 M. & R. 210.

In an action by assignees, where there are some counts or causes of action on which the bankrupt might have sued, and others on which he could not, the proceedings under the commission are admissible in evidence, if the assignees elect to proceed only on those counts which the bankrupt might have sustained. Jones v. Fort, M. & M. 196.

A deposition of a witness, taken in the Court of Bankruptcy for one purpose, and filed, may be used against him as an admission in any other proceeding in the matter of the same bankruptcy. Hall, Ex parte, Cooper, In re, 19 Ch. D. 580; 51 L. J., Ch. 556; 46 L. T. 549—C. A.

—Application to Use—Copy.—But when a party to an application in the Court of Bankruptcy gives notice to his opponent of his intention to use as evidence on the hearing of the application a deposition which is on the file, though it was originally taken for another purpose, he ought not to serve his opponent with a copy of it, and if he does so, he will not, though successful on the application, be allowed the costs of the copy thus served. Id.

Effect as Evidence.—Where a bill of exchange for 1,600*l.* was deposited with A. by a bankrupt, as an indemnity to a third person against a bond which he had executed to the petitioning creditor under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, and A. refused to deliver up the bill on the demand of the assignees of the bankrupt, although they shewed him the bond in a cancelled state, and he afterwards obtained 800*l.* on the bill:—Held, in trover by the assignees for the bill, that the obtaining money on the bill was an actual conversion of the bill, for which the bankrupt, if no bankruptcy had intervened, might have sued, and therefore that the case was within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 92, and the depositions under the fiat were conclusive evidence of the bankruptcy. Alsager v. Close, 10 M. & W. 576; 12 L. J., Ex. 50.

In all actions by assignees of a bankrupt, which the bankrupt himself might have maintained, if no bankruptcy had occurred, the depositions taken before the commissioners are conclusive evidence of the trading, &c., although at the time of bankruptcy the cause of action may not have been complete. Kitchener v. Power, 4 N. & M. 710; 3 A. & E. 232; 1 H. & W. 174.

A bankrupt sold goods before his bankruptcy to the defendant for cash, but after they were delivered he refused to pay for them, and claimed to set off against the value the amount of some remaining acceptances of the bankrupt in his hands. The assignees, treating the purchase as a fraud, sued the defendant in trover, alleging the conversion to be after the bankruptcy. Notice to dispute the act of bankruptcy and petitioning creditor's debt having been given:—Held, that the depositions were conclusive evidence of these facts. Id.

Where a petitioning creditor, having ascertained that an agent in his service could prove an act of bankruptcy, sent him for that purpose to be examined on the opening of the fiat:—Held, that the deposition then made was evidence of the act of bankruptcy as against such creditor in an action against him by the assignees, in which the act of bankruptcy was put in issue. Garder v. Moulit, 10 A. & E. 464; 2 P. & D. 403; 3 Jur. 1190.

Examinations of Bankrupt.]—If plaintiffs put in evidence an examination of the defendant before the commissioners of bankrupts, his admissions against himself are evidence against him, but his statements in his own favour are not evidence for him. Groom v. Richardson, 5 Jur. 1061.

Statements made by a legatee in his balance-sheet, or in his examination under his bankruptcy, will not constitute an acknowledgment of the debt within the Statute of Limitations, but such statements are evidence to shew the character of the advances made to the legatee by the testator, namely, whether made as gifts or as loans. Courtney v. Williams, 3 Harc, 539; 13 L. J., Ch. 461.

The plaintiffs in an action, in support of a part of their case, put in the examination and cross-examination of the defendant himself, taken under a commission of bankrupt issued against A., and the defendant rested his chief defence on another part of this same examination, which he insisted should be read, and which he himself could not have produced in evidence on his part. It was objected by the plaintiffs, that this evidence for the defendant could not be received; first, because it arose upon an improper question put before the commissioner, and one which he ought not to have allowed; and, secondly, because, even if it were a proper question before the commissioner, it was here secondary evidence of a deed duly executed, which had not been shewn to have been destroyed, or to be in the possession of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the defendant had a right to insist on the whole of the bankrupt's examination being read, and that the judge was right in not entirely withdrawing from the jury that part of the examination to which objection was raised, but leaving it for so much of their consideration as it was worth. Goss v. Quinton, 3 M. & G. 825; 4 Scott, N. R. 471; 12 L. J., C. P. 173; 7 Jur. 901.

XXVI. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST ASSIGNEES AND TRUSTEES.

1. BY OFFICIAL ASSIGNEES.

The provision in 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 67, for the non-abatement of suits by the death or removal of assignees, parties thereto, included official assignees. Lloyd v. Waring, 8 Jur. 1134.

2. INSTITUTING.

A plaintiff becoming insolvent after issue joined, the defendant, by leave of a judge given under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 142 (the plaintiff's assignees not giving security for costs), pleaded a plea of the plaintiff's insolvency, withdrawing his former pleas. The plaintiff, confessing the plea, and giving notice to tax his costs under Reg. Gen., T. T., 16 Vict. r. 23:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to costs under the rule if the plea of insolvency stood, but the court allowed the defendant to withdraw that plea, and to substitute his former pleas again, and go on with the action. Plummer v. Hedge, 24 L. J., Q. B. 24.

The circumstance of an action having been brought by assignees of a bankrupt, without first obtaining the leave of the Court of Bankruptcy, pursuant to 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 153, gives the court in which the action is brought no power to stay proceedings on motion. Lee v. Sangster, 2 C. B., N. S. 1; 26 L. J., C. P. 156; 3 Jur., N. S. 156.

Nor can the absence of such leave be pleaded as a defence to the action. Id.

Neither is it a ground of objection on the part of the defendant, that the name of the official assignee has been used without his consent. Id.

The 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 142, applies only to actions pending at the time when an insolvency occurs. Stanton v. Collier, 3 El. & Bl. 274; 23 L. J., Q. B. 116; 18 Jur., N. S. 650.

Proceedings in an action, by assignees of a bankrupt, were allowed to be amended by making the official assignee a plaintiff with the other assignees. Baker v. Neaver or Neave, 1 D. P. C. 616; 1 C. & M. 112; 3 Tyr. 233.

A defendant, in an action by assignees, cannot plead the pendency of a former action brought against him by the bankrupt for the same cause of action; for the assignees have no power to proceed with the former action. Biggs v. Coz, 7 D. & R. 409; 4 B. & C. 930.

3. LIMITATION.

The right construction of s. 159 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, appears to be, that if the assignee does an act directed by the statute but does it erroneously, he is protected; but if he does the act as the result of his ownership of that which was the bankrupt's property, and not by the direction of the statute, it is not done in pursuance of the statute, and he is responsible for it. Edge v. Parker, 8 B. & C. 697.

Where assignees entered the premises of a third person to seize goods, which were the property of the bankrupt, it is not necessary that an action against them should be brought within three months after the fact committed; the act of the assignees not being done in pursuance of the statute. Ib.

The section does not apply to actions against assignees, who only act in the disposition and distribution of the property of the bankrupt, and not under any power conferred on them by law, or for any special purpose under the act; for the act done applies to acts done for the purpose of taking possession of the bankrupt's property by the commissioners or messenger acting under their warrant. Therefore, trover for a chariot seized by assignees on the premises of the bankrupt is maintainable, although the action was not commenced by the owner against the assignees within three months after the seizure. Carruthers v. Payne, 2 M. & P. 420; 5 Bing. 270.

The official assignee was not within the protection of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 44. Knight v. Twyquant, 2 Gale, 187; 2 M. & W. 101.

4. PARTIES.

Where one of two partners is a bankrupt, the order, authorizing the assignees to sue in their own names, and in that of the solvent partner, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 89, may be a general order applicable to all actions and suits, and not a special order for each action or suit. —, Ex parte, 2 Deac. 387; 3 Mont. & Ayr. 219; 1 Jur. 213.

Three persons having been appointed and acted as assignees, two of them paid each half of his bill to the solicitor:—Held, that the two could not maintain a joint action against the third for his proportion of the money paid, but must each bring a separate action. Brand v. Boulcott, 3 B. & P. 235.

Assignees under a joint commission against two partners may recover, in the same action, debts due to the partners jointly and debts due to them separately. Graham v. Mulcaster, 4 Bing. 115; 12 Moore, 327.

But otherwise, if it is proved that one alone had committed an act of bankruptcy; neither are they entitled to recover the separate property of that one under such commission. Hogg v. Bridges, 2 Moore, 122; 8 Taunt. 200.

The payment of money to the defendant's use by a solvent partner, out of his separate property after the bankruptcy of his partner, in pursuance of a contract made before the bankruptcy, may be sued for in the name of the solvent partner only, without joining the assignees of the bankrupt partner. Thacker v. Shepherd, 2 Chit. 652.

Assignees of a bankrupt partner and a solvent partner opened an account at their bankers, and paid in 900*l.* to discharge a debt on an old account, which carried interest. The solvent partner then became bankrupt:—Held, that the assignees of the two could not recover this sum. Woodbridge v. Swann, 4 B. & Ad. 633; 1 N. & M. 725.

Where one member of a partnership becomes bankrupt, the solvent partner may use the names of the assignees of the bankrupt in bringing actions against the debtors of the firm. Whitehead v. Hughes, 2 C. & M. 318; 4 Tyr. 92.

The assignees are entitled to an indemnity against the costs, when they apply for it. Ib.

Assignees of A., a bankrupt, and also of B., a bankrupt, under separate commissions, cannot recover in the same action a joint debt due from the defendant to both the bankrupts, and also separate debts due to each; and if in such an action, the jury has assessed the damages severally, on the separate counts, the court will arrest the judgment on those counts which demand the debts due to each bankrupt separately. Hancock v. Haywood, 3 T. R. 433. And see Stone v. Macnair, 1 Moore, 126; 7 Taunt. 432; 4 Price, 48.

But where plaintiffs sued as assignees of A. and B., and also as assignees of C., for a joint demand due to all the bankrupts, such declaration was good, on motion in arrest of judgment after verdict. Streetfield v. Halliday, 3 T. R. 779.

Where A. and B. were partners, and A. committed an act of bankruptcy, and afterwards, but before the bankruptcy of B., the sheriff seized goods which belonged to A. and B., under an execution against them:—Held, that the assignees of A. and B. under a joint commission could not, in an action brought by them as such, recover A.'s share of the property. Hogg v. Bridges, 8 Taunt. 200; 2 Moore, 122.

A., B. and C., having been appointed assignees under three separate commissions of bankrupt, cannot sue as joint assignees, but must state their several and respective interests in the declaration. Ray v. Davies, 2 Moore, 3.

In an action of contract by assignees, the non-joinder of another assignee is a ground of non-suit, and the proper mode of taking advantage of the non-joinder is by a traverse that they are assignees, and not by a plea in abatement. Jones v. Smith, 1 Ex. 831; 5 D. & L. 728; 18 L. J., Ex. 145.

5. FORM OF REMEDY.

In Contract or Tort.—Assignees cannot at first affirm the act of a creditor interfering with the bankrupt's effects as a contract, and afterwards disaffirm it as a tort; although such act, if disaffirmed in the first instance, would have amounted to a conversion of the bankrupt's goods, and would have rendered the creditor liable to the assignees in trover. Brewer v. Sparrow, 1 M. & R. 2; 7 B. & C. 310; 3 P. L. 180. Lythgoe v. Vernon, 5 H. & N. 180.

Trover will not lie by assignees against a person who had wrongfully continued the bankrupt's business, although bona fide for the benefit of the creditors, where, by accepting the proceeds, they had either affirmed his acts as their agent, or had received them as a satisfaction for the wrongful act. Ib.

S. was indebted to the defendant, an attorney, who had a lien on a lease relating to premises belonging to S. as a security for his debt. A commission of bankruptcy issued against S., and an assignee being appointed, the defendant acted as solicitor to the commission: a petition was presented to supersede the commission, on the ground that there was no valid petitioning creditor's debt, and the defendant, with notice of that fact, joined the assignee in an assignment of the lease to a purchaser: out of the purchase-money the assignee paid the defendant the debt due from the bankrupt, and also a part of the amount of his bill as solicitor to the commission; the defendant also received, by the authority of the assignee, certain sums of money accruing from the rents of the premises, in part liquidation of the debts due to him; after these facts occurred, the commission was superseded, and assignees were appointed under a new fiat:—Held, that they could recover the sums received by the defendant in an action for money had and received; for by parting with the lease the defendant was guilty of a conversion, and the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to waive the tort and sue in assumpsit; and that as to the rents received by the defendant, it was money received to the use of the assignees after notice of an act of bankruptcy, and as the first assignee was not assignee de jure, his assent to the payments made no difference. Clark v. Gilbert, 2 Scott, 520; 2 Bing. N. C. 343; 1 Hodges, 347.

The defendant demised to E. and W. a fulling mill for fourteen years. The lease, after reciting that the machinery had been valued at a certain sum, contained covenants, that, at the end or other sooner determination of the term, the machinery should be again valued by two different persons, chosen by the lessees and the lessor; and that, if such second valuation should amount to less than the first, the difference should be paid by the lessees to the lessor, but if it should be greater, the surplus should be paid by the lessor to the lessees. During the existence of the lease the lessees became bankrupt, and the assignees declined to take the lease; but they required the defendant to appoint a person to value the machinery; and, on his refusal to do so, appointed one themselves, who valued the machinery then in the mill (most of which had been brought in by the bankrupts) at a sum exceeding the original valuation. The assignees then delivered possession of the premises to the defendant, and demanded of him the difference between the two valuations, which he refused to pay:—Held, that the assignees (having demanded the machinery) were entitled to recover it in trover; and that their remedy was not by an action on the covenants, which had been determined by the bankruptcy, and by their refusal to take the lease. Fairburn v. Eastwood, 6 M. & W. 679.

If A. fraudulently procures a bill from B. and afterwards becomes bankrupt, and his assignees receive the money for the bill, B. may recover it from them in an action for money had and received. Harrison v. Walker, Peake, 111. And see Willis v. Freeman, 12 East, 656; Gladstone v. Hadwen, 1 M. & S. 517; 2 Rose, 131; Milward v. Forbes, 4 Esp. 171; and Haswell v. Hunt, 5 T. R. 231.

6. ON CONTRACTS OF BANKRUPT.

In an action by assignees of a bankrupt against the defendant for not delivering railway shares pursuant to a contract made with the bankrupt, the plaintiffs having in their declaration averred that the bankrupt, before his bankruptcy, and his assignees since, were always ready and willing to accept and to pay for the shares; the defendant took issue upon the averment:—Held, that the plea was sustained by proof that, before the time fixed for the performance of the contract, the bankrupt was in a state of total incapacity to pay the price agreed on, and his effects produced no assets to the assignees. Lawrence v. Knowles, 7 Scott, 381; 5 Bing. N. C. 399; 2 Arn. 43.

Where an order or one entire piece of work was given to a tradesman after the committing an act of bankruptcy, but before the fiat, and the work being only partly performed at the time of the fiat, the official assignee advanced money out of the estate to the bankrupt to complete it, subsequently to which the creditor's assignees were appointed:—Held, that this was evidence, whence it might be inferred that the assignees had adopted the contract, and employed the bankrupt as their agent in its completion, so as to entitle the official and creditors' assignees to sue jointly for the whole amount. Whitmore v. Gilmore, 12 M. & W. 808; 13 L. J., Ex. 201; 8 Jur. 672.

Action by the assignees of a bankrupt. The declaration stated, that the bankrupt before his bankruptcy agreed to buy from the defendant 2,000 quarters of screened Odessa linseed, at the rate of 30s. 10d. per quarter, free on board at Odessa, the shipment to be made on board the buyer's vessel on arrival at Odessa, which vessel was to be forthwith chartered for them, and the amount of invoice was to be paid, on handing over the same and the bill of lading to the buyers in London, in ready money, less two and a half per cent. discount; that the bankrupt despatched a vessel to Odessa, chartered by him, which arrived at Odessa within a reasonable time; that the vessel arrived at Odessa after his bankruptcy, and within a reasonable time after such arrival was ready and willing to receive the linseed on board, and that the master of the vessel was ready and willing to deliver to the defendant bills of lading for the linseed, of which the defendant had notice, and was requested by the master to deliver the linseed on board the vessel. That the defendant refused to deliver the linseed on board, by reason whereof the plaintiffs, as assignees, had sustained damage. The declaration then went on to allege that, although the defendant had notice of the bankruptcy, and that the plaintiffs, being appointed his assignees, were within a reasonable time ready and willing, and offered to pay for the linseed, and requested the defendant to hand over to them bills of lading for the linseed in London, or to deliver the linseed to the assignees in London, yet the defendant refused so to do. Plea, that the assignees did not within a reasonable time after the bankruptcy, and the arrival of the vessel at Odessa, give notice to the defendant of their intention to adopt the contract for the purchase of the linseed, and to abide by the terms thereof: Held, per Parke, B., Gurney, B., and Rolfe, B.; Lord Abinger, C. B., dissentiente; that the declaration disclosed a good cause of action, and that the assignees were entitled to recover. Gibson v. Carruthers, 8 M. & W. 321; 11 L. J., Ex. 138.

Held, also, that the matters contained in the plea formed no answer to the action. Id.

Action to recover an average loss on a policy of insurance on goods from the Havannah to a market in Europe, at 60s. per cent. premium, to return 23s. 9d. per cent. if the risk ended in the United Kingdom, and less if at other places in the north of Europe. Plea, bankruptcy of the plaintiff before action. Replication, that before he became bankrupt he sold the goods and transferred the policy, and his right and interest to recover for the loss of the goods, to F. and delivered the policy to him. Rejoinder, that the cargo was delivered and the risk thereon ended in England before his bankruptcy; and that the right to have a return of premium was not transferred before the bankruptcy:—Held, that the two causes of action, being separate and totally distinct from each other, though arising upon the same instrument, the bankrupt was entitled to sue for an average loss as trustee for his vendee, that being a cause of action in which he had no beneficial interest at the time of his bankruptcy. Boddington v. Castelli (in error), 1 El. & Bl. 879; 17 Jur. 781—Ex. Ch.

Assignees suing upon a contract made with the bankrupt are entitled to all the legal and equitable rights, and no other, which the bankrupt would have had if the action had been brought by him on the day of his bankruptcy. Valpy v. Oakley, 16 Q. B. 941; 20 L. J., Q. B. 380; 16 Jur. 38.

A. contracted to deliver to B. iron, to be paid for by bills. The bills were accordingly accepted by B., but upon maturity were dishonoured, and afterwards B. became bankrupt:—Held, in an action by the assignees of B. against A. for non-delivery of the goods, that they were entitled to recover only such damages as could have been recovered by B. if the action had been brought by him on the day of his bankruptcy, and therefore only the difference between the contract and the market prices of the iron. Ib.

S., being indebted to the defendants, who had acted as his solicitors, in a sum of money, they, before his bankruptcy, received certain sums belonging to S. from his agent, and applied them in discharge of their claims upon him. S. having afterwards become bankrupt, and his assignees having brought an action against the defendants to recover this money as money received to their use, the judge told the jury, that, if the defendants, before the bankruptcy, actually received the money to the use of the bankrupt, they held it, after the bankruptcy, to the use of the assignees, who were entitled to succeed on the plea of non-assumpsit:—Held, that this was a misdirection, and that there ought to be a new trial, unless it was clear that the jury was not misled, and that it was afterwards explained away. Pennell v. Aston, 14 M. & W. 415; 14 L. J., Ex. 309.

B., being indebted to the defendant in 500*l.* for the price of goods sold to him, and being pressed for part payment of the debt, handed to the defendant a bill of exchange drawn by himself for 600*l.*, which the defendant agreed to discount on the terms of retaining to his own use the sum of 100*l.* and the discount, and paying over the difference to B.; he, however, retained the bill, and paid no part of the proceeds over to B. B. shortly afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that his assignees were entitled to recover from the defendant the full amount of the bill, minus the 100*l.*, and such discount as the jury should find to be receivable by the defendant. Alder v. Keighley, 15 M. & W. 117; 15 L. J., Ex. 100.

A., drawer of an accommodation bill, a few days before its maturity, handed over money to B., the acceptor, for the purpose of meeting the bill. A fiat having been issued against A. between the day of such deposit and the maturity and payment of the bill:—Held, that the money having been handed over to B. in pursuance of a binding contract upon a good consideration, viz.

an implied contract of indemnity, the bankruptcy of A. was no revocation of B.'s authority to apply the money in satisfaction of the bill, and consequently that A.'s assignees could not recover it back from him. Yates v. Hoppe, 9 C. B. 541; 19 L. J., C. P. 180; 14 Jur. 372.

A custom of exchanging acceptances existed between a bankrupt and other houses, through the agency of B.; notes were sent by A. to B., but never exchanged, as bankruptcy intervened, and they were stolen from B., and never formed any item in any settlement of the accounts between B. and the assignees:—Held, that A. could not recover the value of the notes from the assignees. Watson, Ex parte, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 685; 4 Deac. & Chit. 45.

M. and the Scotch bank mutually exchanged their notes at stated times. M. became bankrupt, his agent B. having notes of the Scotch bank in his hands. The assignees subsequently allowed B. to retain these notes in his account with them, he having claims against M.:—Held, that the Scotch bank could recover these notes against the assignees. Bank of Scotland, In re, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 644; 4 Deac. & Chit. 32.

7. FOR CONVERSION OF BANKRUPT'S PROPERTY.

Action.]—In an action by assignees against a sheriff, for a conversion of the bankrupt's goods, seized under a fi. fa. against E. and D., it appeared that, immediately before the seizure, the bankrupt told the officer that the goods were the property of C., and immediately afterwards he contradicted that statement, and said they were the goods of D. The jury found that the goods were in reality the bankrupt's, but, also, that he represented the goods to the officer as the goods of C., so as to induce the officer, by that false representation, to seize them:—Held, that under a plea of not possessed, this finding did not estop the bankrupt, and his assignees, from complaining of the seizure of the goods as their own. Freeman v. Cook, 2 Ex. 654; 18 L. J., Ex. 114; 12 Jur. 777.

B. bought goods at the shop of A., after notice that A. had committed an act of bankruptcy, by absconding, and claimed to set off against the price a debt due to him from A. A fiat having afterwards issued against A., his assignees sent in an invoice, and demanded payment of the goods so bought by B.:—Held, that the assignees did not thereby so affirm the sale as to disentitle them to maintain an action for the goods upon a subsequent demand and refusal. Valpy v. Sanders, 5 C. B. 887; 17 L. J., C. P. 249; 12 Jur. 483.

A., by a deed dated the 28th September, 1845, conveyed goods to B., absolutely, subject to a proviso that if he should pay to B. the sum secured on the 22nd of March, 1850, or any earlier day, after receiving from B. fourteen days' notice, and should pay the interest meanwhile half-yearly, then the conveyance should be void. By the deed, it was also agreed that until a default in payment of the principal, as before specified, or until default in payment of the interest after notice to pay, A. should be allowed to hold and enjoy the goods. No notice for earlier payment was given to A. pursuant to the power contained in the deed, nor any notice for payment of the interest, and he continued in possession of the goods until the 18th of December, 1849, when he became bankrupt, and his assignees then took possession of the goods, and sold them on the 19th of February, 1850. B. had previously assigned the goods to the plaintiff:—Held, that although the right to the possession of the goods was vested in A. until the 22nd of March, 1850 (defeasible by non-payment of the principal and interest, according to the provisions of the deed), yet that the sale of the goods before that day put an end to the term, and that the assignees had thereby been guilty of a conversion, for which the plaintiff was entitled to maintain trover. Fenn v. Bittleston, 7 Ex. 152; 21 L. J., Ex. 41.

Where assignees declare in trover for property of the bankrupt converted since the bankruptcy, the conversion after the bankruptcy is a material allegation, and must be proved under the general issue. Edwards v. Hooper, 11 M. & W. 363; 12 L. J., Ex. 304; 7 Jur. 378.

The assignees of two bankrupt partners declared in trover for property which had belonged to the bankrupts, alleging a possession in themselves as assignees, and a conversion since the bankruptcy. A separate fiat had first issued against one partner, under which the property was seized by the sheriff and sold; subsequently to which a joint fiat was issued against both:—Held, that the assignees could not recover in trover against the sheriff for an undivided moiety of the whole as the property of the partner against whom the separate fiat had issued. Ib.

Assignees are not entitled to waive a sale of the goods as a conversion, and rely on a subsequent demand and refusal. Ib.

In trover for goods: at the trial it appeared that the plaintiff was in possession of the goods, which he claimed as his property, under an assignment to him from O. The defendant seized the goods in the plaintiff's possession, claiming them under an assignment from O. to him, made whilst O. was in apparent ownership of the goods, but of a later date than the assignment to the plaintiff. This was the conversion. The defence was that the assignment by O. to the plaintiff was fraudulent as against the defendant. This was left to the jury, who found for the plaintiff. The defendant also offered, as a defence, to prove that O. had become bankrupt before the plaintiff took possession, and that the goods were in his order and disposition, and therefore vested in his assignees before the conversion. The judge refused to permit this defence. On a motion for a new trial:—Held, that the judge did right; for that the plaintiff being in possession, and the defendant being a wrongdoer, not claiming in any way under the assignees, the defendant could not set up the ius tertii as a defence in trover. Jeffries v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 El. & Bl. 802; 25 L. J., Q. B. 107; 2 Jur., N. S. 230.

A. having become bankrupt, his goods were sold by order of his assignees. Some goods of his in B.'s hands at the time of the bankruptcy, and on which B. claimed a lien, were also included in the sale; but this was done by B.'s order, and the assignees refused to authorize it. The assignees afterwards signed a memorandum that all the goods included in the sale were the property of the bankrupt, to exempt them from auction duty:—Held, that this was no adoption of the sale, so as to prevent the assignees from maintaining trover against B. for the goods. Blenden v. Hancock, M. & M. 465.

A., the partner of B., was also in partnership with C. A., being indebted to the firm of A. & B., indorsed to A. & B. a bill belonging to the firm of A. & C., and immediately afterwards indorsed it in the names of A. & B. to D., a creditor of A. & B., who received the amount at maturity. A. & C. afterwards became bankrupts; their assignees cannot maintain trover against B. Jones v. Yates, 4 M. & R. 613; 9 B. & C. 532.

Nor can such assignees maintain an action against B. for money taken by A. from the funds of A. & C. and applied to the use of A. & B. Ib.

Pleadings.—In trover by the owner of the goods against assignees, the defence that the goods were at the time of the bankruptcy in the order and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the true owner, and that the title to the goods vested in the assignees by virtue of an order made by the Court of Bankruptcy, is admissible under the plea of not possessed, although the order was applied for and made after action. Heslop v. Baker, 8 Ex. 411; 22 L. J., Ex. 333.

In trover by assignees of H. & L., bankrupts, against the sheriff, the defendant pleaded, that H. & L., being indebted to S., he sued out a fi. fa., directed to defendant as sheriff, and thereupon, after H. & L. became bankrupt, and before the fiat, he took the goods in execution, and that afterwards a fiat issued, under which the plaintiffs were appointed assignees, and, as such, entitled to the possession of the goods, which possession is the possession of the assignees in the declaration mentioned:—Held, first, that the defence might be given in evidence, either under the plea of not possessed, or not guilty. Unwin v. St. Quintin, 2 D., N. S. 790; 11 M. & W. 277; 12 L. J., Ex. 209.

To trover by the assignees for goods the defendant pleaded that the bankrupt being indebted to him before the bankruptcy he had sued him, and recovered judgment against him, and sued out execution thereon; and that the sheriff seized the goods, and sold them under the writ, which was the conversion complained of:—Held, on special demurrer, that the plea was bad as amounting to the general issue. Young v. Cooper, 6 Ex. 259; 20 L. J., Ex. 136.

To a declaration by assignees of a bankrupt to recover damages for goods, chattels, and fixtures alleged to be in his possession at the time of his bankruptcy, and to have been since converted by the defendants, they pleaded that before the bankruptcy the bankrupt assigned the goods to them by deed, and that before the bankruptcy they took possession of them, and kept and retained such possession afterwards; the plaintiffs replied that the defendants did not take possession of the goods before the bankruptcy: issue was joined thereon, and a verdict found for the plaintiffs upon it:—Held, that the issue was immaterial, because the assignment by deed conveyed the property in the goods to the defendants, and the continued possession of the assignor only amounted to evidence of fraud. Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C., M. & R. 782; 5 Tyr. 309.

Damages.—A sheriff seized goods belonging to a bankrupt, and, after keeping them for a considerable period, and after trover brought against him by the assignees, he delivered up the goods to them:—Held, that the assignees were not entitled to proceed in the action, and to recover as damages a quarter's rent which had been paid for the house where the goods were kept whilst in the possession of the sheriff, or the costs of keeping their messenger on the premises during the same period. Moon v. Raphael, 2 Scott, 489; 2 Bing. N. C. 310; 7 C. & P. 115; 1 Hodges, 289.

Goods were seized under fi. fa., issued upon a judgment on a warrant of attorney, after an act of bankruptcy committed by the debtor, against whom a fiat issued before the goods were sold. The assignees gave the sheriff notice not to sell, and he brought the parties before a judge by an interpleader order. The judge directed that the goods should be sold, and the money brought into court, to abide the event of an issue to be tried between the execution creditor and the assignees. The latter made no objection, and did not suggest any other mode of disposing of the goods, which were accordingly sold by the sheriff's auctioneer. The execution creditor subsequently abandoned all claim to the goods; and the proceeds of the sale were paid out of court to the assignees:—Held, that the assignees were not entitled, as matter of law, to recover in trover against the execution creditor the difference between the produce of the sale and the value of the goods at the time of the seizure; and that it was no misdirection in the judge to state to the jury, that, if they thought that the sale was bona fide, they might consider the produce of it as the measure of damages. Whitmore v. Black, 13 M. & W. 507; 2 D. & L. 445.

8. WHERE DEBT INCURRED BY FRAUD.

In an action against liquidating debtors and their trustee, to recover advances of money obtained from the plaintiffs by the debtors through false and fraudulent representations before the liquidation, the plaintiffs claimed, inter alia, a declaration that they were entitled to prove for the amount of the advances, and interest at 5 per cent. to the date of the liquidation, either against the joint estate of the liquidating debtors or against the separate estate as the plaintiffs might elect:—Held, on demurrer by the trustee, that, as the plaintiffs might in this action obtain some relief against him, the claim was good. Hale v. Boustead, 8 Q. B. D. 453; 51 L. J., Q. B. 255; 46 L. T. 533; 30 W. R. 677; 46 J. P. 342.

9. PLEADINGS.

Counts for money lent and money paid by the assignee of a bankrupt, may be joined with counts for money had and received to the assignee's use, and upon an account stated with him as assignee. Richardson v. Griffin, 5 M. & S. 294; 2 Chit. 325.

In an action by assignees of a bankrupt, it need not be stated in the declaration that they sue "as assignees;" it is enough if it sufficiently appears that they are assignees. Ferguson v. Mitchell, 2 C., M. & R. 687; 4 D. P. C. 513.

Plaintiffs declared as assignees of a bankrupt, concluding as follows: "Wherefore the plaintiffs, assignees as aforesaid,—instead of 'as' assignees as aforesaid,—say they are injured:—"Held good, on special demurrer, as the words "assignees as aforesaid," might be rejected as surplusage. Cobbett v. Cochrane, 1 M. & Scott, 55; 8 Bing. 17.

A declaration in scire facias by assignees of a bankrupt, stating that he became a bankrupt within the meaning of the statutes relating to bankrupts, and that his goods and effects were afterwards in due manner assigned to the plaintiffs, is sufficiently certain, without alleging that the party was declared a bankrupt. Winter v. Kretchman, 2 T. R. 45.

The assignees under a joint commission against A. and B., in suing on a separate contract entered into with A., may describe themselves generally as the assignees of A., without noticing the name of B. Stonehouse v. De Silva, 3 Camp. 399; 2 Rose, 142; S. P., Harcey v. Morgan, 2 Stark. 17.

A defendant received money to the use of A. and B. as assignees. B. was afterwards removed, and A. became the sole assignee, the money still remaining in the hands of the defendant: A. may well declare as for money had and received to his own use as assignee, without mentioning B. at all. Stewart v. Lee, M. & M. 158.

Under a joint commission against two partners, the assignees may declare in the same action for separate as well as joint debts due to the bankrupts. Graham v. Mulcaster, 4 Bing. 115; 12 Moore, 327.

Assignees in an action against the vendee of goods sold by the bankrupt after the commission, need not name themselves assignees in the declaration; secus, if on a contract made by the bankrupt before the commission. Evans v. Mann, Cowp. 569.

10. INTERROGATORIES.

In trover by assignees of a bankrupt, the defendant cannot deliver interrogatories for the purpose of compelling the assignees to state upon oath what act or acts of bankruptcy they intend to rely upon in support of their title. Edwards v. Wakefield, 6 El. & El. 462; 2 Jur., N. S. 762.

11. EVIDENCE.

Where in an action by assignees the bankrupt was not called as a witness, but a witness was examined as to certain statements of the bankrupt with respect to his affairs:—Held, that the evidence was admissible. Belcher v. Brake, 2 C. & K. 658.

In an action against assignees for the conversion of goods seized by them as the property of the bankrupt, it appeared that the plaintiff claimed the goods by virtue of an alleged sale by the bankrupt to him a short time before his bankruptcy; and it was proposed on cross-examination to ask a witness who was present at the alleged sale, whether he himself would have acted upon the transaction by delivering the goods to the plaintiff:—Semble, that the question might be put. Morgan v. Whitmore, 6 Ex. 716; 20 L. J., Ex. 289.

Certain documents, purporting to be a receipt of and a delivery order for the goods, in the handwriting of the bankrupt, and dated as of the day of the sale, were delivered to a witness by the bankrupt, and after his bankruptcy, and about a month after the alleged sale. There was no evidence independently of the documents themselves that they existed before the bankruptcy:—Held, that the documents were admissible as evidence of their existence at the time they bore date. Ib.

Trover of A., against the assignees of H., for seizing goods of A. The plaintiff gave evidence, that prior to the bankruptcy the person in possession, and apparently the owner, had assigned them to C., who had, for valuable consideration, assigned them to the plaintiff. The plaintiff had put a person in possession of the goods, but C. continued to carry on the business in the house where they were. On the part of the defendants, it was suggested that the transaction was colourable, and that the goods belonged to the bankrupt H. Before any evidence was offered of any connection between the plaintiff and H., one of the witnesses for the defence was asked whether he remembered C. making a claim to the goods after the bankruptcy. The question was disallowed:—Held, that the question ought to have been allowed. Ford v. Elliott, 4 Ex. 78; 18 L. J., Ex. 447.

An admission by a bankrupt in his balance-sheet will not take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations as against his assignees. Pott v. Clegg, 16 M. & W. 321; 16 L. J., Ex. 210; 11 Jur. 289.

An admission in an unsigned letter, written and sent by direction of the assignees of a bankrupt by an accountant employed by them to wind up the affairs of the bankrupt's estate, will not take a debt of the bankrupt out of the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

A statement by a bankrupt in his balance-sheet of a debt due by him is not evidence as against his assignees of the debt being due. Ib.

12. COSTS.

The official assignee is entitled to be indemnified against the costs of an action brought in his name without his authority. Laws v. Bott, 16 M. & W. 300; 4 D. & L. 559; 16 L. J., Ex. 279.

An official assignee is liable to the costs of defending an action brought against him and the creditors' assignee, if he joined in retaining the attorney. Sydney v. Belcher, 2 M. & Rob. 325.

An action, by direction of a commissioner, was brought, with the assent of the creditors, to try a disputed point. The action failed, and some creditors objected to the allowance of the assignees' costs, on the ground that the commissioner had no jurisdiction to order the action to be brought, as not being an action within 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 153, but the Lords Justices ordered the costs to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate, on the ground that the objection ought to have been made earlier, that is, before the result of the action was known. Edmondson, Ex parte, 31 L. J., Bk. 32; 6 L. T. 234.

An official assignee of a district court of bankruptcy having given his assent to the bringing of an action in his name jointly with that of the trade assignee for the recovery of part of the bankrupt's estate, and the action proving unsuccessful, the trade assignee, having paid the costs, is entitled to sue the official assignee for contri-

13. PRACTICE.

Assignees seeking to set aside a judgment against a bankrupt for irregularity must come within the same time after their appointment as the bankrupt must have done after he had notice of the irregularity. Alcock v. Sutcliffe, 1 B. C. Rep. 313; 4 D. & L. 612.

Assignees applying to set aside proceedings on the ground of irregularity must come to the court within a reasonable time after notice of the irregularity. Butterworth v. Williams, 4 D. & L. 82; S. P., Amadio v. Showell, 1 B. C. Rep. 305.

Judgment was signed, and execution issued against the defendant, on the 29th of February, at which time notice was given to the sheriff that the judgment would be disputed; a fiat issued on the 15th of March; the official assignee was appointed on the 4th and the other assignees on the 12th of April; and the motion to set aside the judgment was made, on the part of the assignees, on the 25th of April:—Held, that it was made in time. Brooks v. Hodson, 2 D. & L. 256; 8 Scott, N. R. 223; 7 M. & G. 529; 13 L. J., C. P. 203.

In an action against the creditors' and official assignees of a bankrupt, for trespass, and for the conversion of fixtures by sale, the action will not, at nisi prius, be stayed as against the official assignee under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 41, which refers only to claims for money paid into the Bank of England before issue. Vansittart v. James, 1 F. & F. 156.

XXVII. INSOLVENT DEBTORS AND DEBTORS TO SMALL AMOUNTS.

1. STATUTES.

By 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, the court for relief of insolvent debtors in England was established; that statute repealed the previous acts, 1 Geo. 4, c. 119; 3 Geo. 4, c. 123; 5 Geo. 4, c. 61. The act was continued by 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 38; 2 Will. 4, c. 44; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 47, and subsequently by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, until the year 1861, when it was abolished by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 1, and its jurisdiction transferred to the Court of Bankruptcy. See Perkins, Ex parte, 34 L. J., Bk. 37; 11 Jur., N. S. 895; 12 L. T. 784; 13 W. R. 1001.

The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, amended by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, enabled persons not being traders within the meaning of the statutes relating to bankrupts, or being traders within the meaning of those statutes, but owing debts amounting on the whole to less than 300l., to be petitioners for protection from process, by presenting a petition in a form prescribed, to any court or district court of bankruptcy within the district in which the petitioners resided twelve calendar months, without notice being given to their creditors, or in the London Gazette, or any newspaper.

The jurisdiction in these matters was transferred to the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and to the county courts, by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 102, and was vested in them by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 3.

2. PERSONS ENTITLED TO BENEFIT.

Infants.—Where an infant tenant in tail took the benefit of the 49 Geo. 3. c. 115, his estate tail did not pass to his assignees, because he could not be legally in custody for debt. Burton v. Haworth, 5 Madd. 50.

Married Women.—A married woman in execution with her husband, for a debt contracted by her before her marriage, was not entitled to be discharged under 1 Geo. 4, c. 119, as she was not capable of executing a warrant of attorney, and complying with the other terms required by s. 25. Deacon, Ex parte, 5 B. & A. 759. And see Chalk v. Deacon, 6 Moore, 128.

Outlaws.—A prisoner in custody on a capias utlagatum, for non-payment of damages and costs, might be discharged under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, without a previous reversal of his outlawry. Hamlin v. Crossley, 8 A. & E. 677; 3 N. & P. 543; 1 W., W. & H. 502.

3. ASSIGNMENT.

Warrant of Attorney to Provisional Assignee.

—The judgment confessed by an insolvent under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 87, operated to protect him from the ordinary remedy of a creditor by action, but did not extinguish the remedy by distress. Phillips v. Sherrville, 6 Q. B. 944; 14 L. J., Q. B. 144; 9 Jur. 179.

The 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 57, requiring an insolvent debtor to execute a warrant of attorney to authorize the entering up judgment against him, and empowering the Insolvent Court to permit execution to be taken out if the insolvent died leaving assets, did not give power to enter up judgment after the death of the insolvent; and the court set aside a judgment entered up on it after the death of the insolvent. Harden v. Forryth, 4 P. & D. 547; 1 Q. B. 177; 5 Jur. 576; 1 Arn. & Hodges, 269.

Where a judgment was entered up upon a warrant of attorney, the property of the insolvent did not vest in the assignees, but was only a charge, and could not be realized without suit. Seymour v. Lucas, 8 W. R. 599.

Provisional Assignee.—The provisional assignee of an insolvent debtor might sell his reversionary interest without an order of the court, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 42. Sturgis v. Evans, 2 H. & C. 964; 9 L. T. 774; 12 W. R. 436.

A provisional assignee is entitled to charge against the estate of an insolvent all costs and charges properly incurred by him for the purpose of realizing or administering the estate, but is not justified in incurring costs for the purpose of realizing the estate at any time at which he had in his hands property of the insolvent sufficient to satisfy his creditors and pay the costs then due. Perkins, Ex parte, 34 L. J., Bk. 37; 11 Jur., N. S. 895; 12 L. T. 784; 13 W. R. 1001.

Vesting Order.—The assignee of an insolvent debtor on his acceptance of the appointment, had vested in him all the estate of the insolvent, from the date of the vesting order. Forke v. Brown, 10 M. & W. 78; 2 D., N. S. 283.

The effect of 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, was to vest in the assignee all the property of the insolvent, but subject to all equities to which it would be liable in the hands of the insolvent. Atkinson, In re, 2 De G., M. & G. 140; 16 Jur. 1003.

The vesting order of the Insolvent Debtors' Court, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 37, had the same legal operation as the assignment to the provisional assignee had, for which it was substituted. Woodland v. Fuller, 3 P. & D. 570; 4 Jur. 743; 11 A. & E. 859.

Revesting of Property in Debtor.—By virtue of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 44, upon the discharge out of custody, by the consent or default of his detaining creditor, of an insolvent debtor, as to whose estate and effects a vesting order had been made by the Insolvent Debtors' Court the right of property in his estate, money and effects was at once, and without any further order of the Insolvent Court, divested out of the assignees of the estate, and revested in the debtor. Grange v. Trickett, 2 El. & Bl. 395; 21 L. J., Q. B. 26; 16 Jur. 287.

If a vesting order was made in the case of a prisoner who petitioned the court, his discharge, by default of the detaining creditor, without any adjudication being made, did not of itself render void the vesting order. Kernot v. Pittis, 2 El. & Bl. 421; 23 L. J., Q. B. 33; 17 Jur. 933.—Ex. Ch.; S. P., Tidway v. Jones, 1 Kay & Johnson, 691; 24 L. J., Ch. 507.

Copyholds.—The clauses of the act which provided that, in case the insolvent shall be entitled to any copyhold or customary estate, the assignment to or certified copy of the appointment of the assignee shall be entered on the court roll of the manor, and that the assignee shall, with all convenient speed, make sale of all the estate and effects of the insolvent, were not mandatory, but were directory only. Cole v. Coles, 6 Hare, 517.

Estates Tail.—In 1825, an insolvent was entitled to an equitable estate tail in remainder in real estate, and he then executed an assignment of all his property to his assignees in insolvency. In 1826, he became entitled to the estate tail in possession. In 1831, he became bankrupt, when he and the commissioners in bankruptcy executed a disentailing deed of the real estate, and it was conveyed to the assignees in bankruptcy. The insolvent died in 1844, leaving issue capable of inheriting the estate under the original entail, if not barred:—Held, that 4 Geo. 4, c. 119, s. 4, and the assignment of 1825, affected only such extent of interest in the real estate as the insolvent was then, at law or in equity, able to convey without a fine or recovery, or would have been so if there had been no insolvency; and that, as the insolvent could not then have so conveyed this estate tail, the assignee in insolvency was only entitled to the estate during the life of the insolvent. Sturgis v. Morse, 2 De G., F. & J. 223; 29 L. J., Ch. 766; 6 Jur., N. S. 766.

Ecclesiastical Livings.—A sequestration obtained by the assignees of an insolvent incumbent operated only from the time of publication, and did not entitle the assignees to the arrears of composition for tithes due before publication. Waite v. Bishop, 1 C., M. & R. 505; 3 D. P. C. 234; 5 Tyr. 90.

Leases.—A lease made to a person who took the benefit of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, remained vested in him until taken to by the assignees, or given up to the landlord. Bishop v. Bedford Charity (Trustees), 1 El. & El. 697; 29 L. J., Q. B. 53; 6 Jur., N. S. 220—Ex. Ch.

Pensions.—An annuity granted to a commissioner of bankruptcy under 1 & 2 Will 4, c. 56, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, passed to his assignee under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 56. Spooner v. Payne, 4 Ex. 138; 18 L. J., Ex. 401; S. C. in Chancery, 1 De G., M. & G. 383; 21 L. J., Ch. 791; 16 Jur. 367.

A pension during his Majesty's pleasure, granted by order in council for past services as advocate of the Admiralty, and charged on the navy estimates, might be appropriated under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 29, with the consent of the Lords of the Admiralty, for payment of creditors. Battine, Ex parte, 4 B. & Ad. 690; 1 N. & M. 579.

Honours.—Diplomas conferring degrees and honours and certificates from medical institutions and practitioners did not pass to the provisional assignee by the vesting order. Kernot v. Catlin, 2 El. & Bl. 790.

Trust Property.—Under 1 Geo. 4, c. 119, nothing passed to the assignee in which the insolvent was not beneficially interested. Sims v. Thomas, 12 A. & E. 536; 4 P. & D. 233; 4 Jur. 1181; S. P., Strachan v. Thomas, 4 P. & D. 229; 4 Jur. 1183.

Things in Action—Negligence of Attorney.—A., being sued by B., retained C., an attorney, to defend him. By C.'s negligence, a judgment was obtained against A., upon which he (being then in custody) was charged in execution for a large sum, and was put to expense in endeavouring to procure his release, and to reverse the judgment by writ of error.—Held, that this was not a cause of action which passed to A.'s assignees upon his insolvency. Wetherell v. Julius, 10 C. B. 267; 19 L. J., C. P. 367; 14 Jur. 700.

But where a beneficed clergyman brought an action against his attorneys for having, through their negligence and want of skill, permitted a writ of sequestrari facias to remain in force against him longer than was necessary, whereby he during that time lost the rent, tithes, and profits of his living:—Held, that this was a cause of action which passed to A.'s assignees upon his insolvency. Id.

—Contract.—A declaration stated that the plaintiff and R. were in possession of documents and information to prove that the defendant was entitled to property, of which he was not aware, and proposed to give him all the documents and information in their possession on his agreeing to pay them each one-fifth of the property if it should actually come into his possession; to which the defendant assented; and thereupon an agreement was signed between the parties, whereby the defendant agreed, that if by the documents and information he should actually become possessed of any property not in his possession, and that he did not know of, he would pay to each one-fifth of the value of the property recovered; that if the defendant did not become possessed of any property he should not be called upon to pay any money; and that if he did not think proper to proceed to recover the property he would return the papers, and thereupon the agreement should be cancelled. A plea, that after making the promise, the plaintiff petitioned the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and that a vesting order was made, whereby all his property vested in the assignee, was a bar to the action, as the plaintiff's interest in the contract was valuable property, which vested in the assignee without his interfering to claim it. Sprye v. Porter, 7 El. & Bl. 58; 26 L. J., Q. B. 64; 3 Jur., N. S. 330.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff was a printer, and that the sheriff seized his goods under a fi. fa. issued by the defendant, and that in consideration of the defendant withdrawing the execution, the plaintiff agreed to deliver to him, as a security, a printing-machine, which he was to be at liberty to remove, with a power to the plaintiff to redeem it on payment of 150*l.* within fourteen days; and alleged as a breach that, although within fourteen days the plaintiff offered to pay 150*l.*, the defendant refused to redeliver the printing-machine, whereby he lost great profits which he would have made by its use, and his whole trade and business were ruined and stopped, and he became insolvent. The defendant pleaded that after the accruing of the causes of action, the plaintiff became insolvent, and his estate and effects were vested in the provisional assignee:—Held, that this plea was good, without averring that the assignee had interfered. Stanton v. Collier, 3 El. & Bl. 274; 2 C. L. R. 1151; 23 L. J., Q. B. 116; 18 Jur. 650.

Held, also, that the cause of action stated in the declaration was an entire cause of action, which touched the personal estate of the insolvent, and therefore passed to the assignee. Id.

Excepted Articles.—Under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 37, it was not a condition on the non-vesting in the assignee of privileged articles of the insolvent, not exceeding the value of 20*l.*, that those articles should be specified by him in his schedule. Willmer v. Jacklin, 1 B. & S. 641; 31 L. J., Q. B. 1; 8 Jur., N. S. 96; 5 L. T. 252; 10 W. R. 12.

An insolvent seeking to except his wearing apparel, bedding, and other necessities, and his working tools and implements, under the value of 20*l.*, from the operation of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 9, must in his schedule have specified each article and its value. Taylor v. Roberts, 1 H. & N. 96.

It was not enough to state generally the character of the goods, and a gross sum as their value. Id.

No action would lie against a sheriff for taking in execution under a fi. fa. the bedding and other articles of an insolvent debtor who had petitioned under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96; but if the goods were protected from seizure, the remedy was by application to the court for an order to the sheriff to restore them. Rideal v. Fort, 11 Ex. 847; 25 L. J., Ex. 204.

Fraudulent Preference and Conveyance.—A transfer made by debtor upon apprehension of arrest was not fraudulent and void as voluntary. Corbould v. Broadhurst, 1 M. & Rob. 189.

In order to shew that a conveyance of property by an insolvent to his creditors was not a voluntary and fraudulent conveyance, it was sufficient to prove that it was given by the insolvent in consequence of a bona fide demand made on him by the creditor for payment; and it was not necessary to give evidence of any more direct pressure upon him for that purpose. Morgan or Mogg v. Baker, 4 M. & W. 349; 1 H. & H. 461; 2 Jur. 1068; S. P., Arnell v. Bean, 1 M. & Scott, 151; 8 Bing. 87.

A debtor in embarrassed circumstances gave to a favoured creditor (within three months before the commencement of imprisonment) a warrant of attorney, under which the creditor afterwards entered up judgment, and seized the debtor's goods. The debtor subsequently petitioned the Insolvent Court, and was declared insolvent, and an assignee was appointed:—Held, that the warrant of attorney was voidable as against the assignee, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 59, but that the assignee could not treat the seizing and selling of the goods as an act of conversion committed against himself, as assignee, and proceed upon it as in trover against the execution creditor. Young v. Billiter, 8 H. L. Cas. 682; 30 L. J., Q. B. 153; 7 Jur., N. S. 269; S. C., in Ex. Ch., 6 El. & Bl. 1; 25 L. J., Q. B. 169; 2 Jur., N. S. 438.

4. OPERATION OF DISCHARGE.

Debts and Liabilities.—Under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 69, the words "debts growing due," meant debts ascertained and payable in futuro. Spelton v. Mott, 5 Ex. 231; 19 L. J., Ex. 243.

The adjudication of the commissioner under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 90, discharged the insolvent from all debts due or growing due at the time of the petition to creditors, or to persons claiming to be creditors. Berry v. Irwin, 8 C. B. 532; 7 D. & L. 282; 19 L. J., C. P. 110.

Breach of Trust.—The discharge of an insolvent extended to a breach of trust, although the amount due in respect of it might not be ascertained except by a decree made subsequently to the discharge. Thompson v. Finch, 8 De G., Mac. & G. 560.

Contingent Liabilities.—A contingent debt was not barred by a discharge. Hawker v. Hallowell, 8 De G., Mac. & G. 318; 25 L. J., Ch. 357; 2 Jur., N. S. 627.

Where A. purchased of B. his business of an attorney, the purchase-money to be paid by two instalments, and the conveyance contained a proviso, giving A. the power, within a limited time, either of completing the purchase or giving B. notice of his abandonment of the contract, in which case B. was to repay 50% of the purchase-money:—Held, that B.'s discharge, before the expiration of the time limited for giving such notice, was no answer to an action to recover back the 50% after such notice given, for that it was not a contingency capable of valuation at the time of the insolvency. Brown v. Fleetwood, 5 M. & W. 19; 7 D. P. C. 387; 2 H. & H. 6; 3 Jur. 289.

Premiums on Insurance.—A party who covenanted to pay the premiums on a policy of insurance upon his life, effected before his discharge, and to keep the same on foot, was not discharged from such covenant by the operation of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 90. Fletcher v. Turk, 13 L. J., Q. B. 43; 8 Jur. 186; S. P., Bennett v.

Burton, 4 P. & D. 313; 12 A. & E. 657; 4 Jur. 1085. See Allard v. Kimberley, 12 M. & W. 410 1 D. & L. 635; 13 L. J., Ex. 107.

Surety for Annuity.—A surety upon an annuity bond, who had become insolvent, and obtained a final order for protection, was not protected thereby from being afterwards sued upon his bond, on default of the grantor, for instalments accrued subsequently to the filing of such petition; for the liability of the surety on the bond, before default of his principal, was not a debt of the surety, within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 10; and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 25, applied only to the liability of the grantor of an annuity, and not to the liability of his surety. Thompson v. Whatley, 16 Q. B. 189; 20 L. J., Q. B. 86; 15 Jur. 575.

Liability to Surety who pays after Discharge.—A discharge of the principal did not exonerate him from the claim of a surety on a bond, in respect of payments subsequently made under it by the latter. Emery v. Clark, 2 C. B., N. S. 582.

The discharge of an insolvent debtor was no release of a debt created by the payment by a surety, after the discharge, of a bill of exchange, the consideration for which was inserted in the schedule as a debt for money lent due to the payee. Litten v. Dalton, 17 C. B., N. S. 178.

Unliquidated Damages.—The discharge of an insolvent did not operate to release him from a claim for unliquidated damages for not redelivering mining shares pursuant to a contract for that purpose. Owen v. Routh, 14 C. B. 327; 2 C. L. R. 365; 23 L. J., C. P. 105; 18 Jur. 356.

Fine on Conviction.—A prisoner was not discharged from a fine on a conviction for perjury. Rea v. Norris, 4 Burr. 2142.

Debt due by Wife.—To an action against husband and wife for a debt due from the wife before coverture, the husband's discharge was a good plea. Lockwood v. Salter, 5 B. & Ad. 303; 2 N. & M. 255.

Discharge of Wife before Marriage.—The discharge of a wife before marriage was a bar to an action against husband and wife in respect of one of the scheduled debts. Storr v. Lee, 9 A. & E. 868; 1 P. & D. 633.

Right of Distress.—A landlord's remedy of distress for rent due before the commencement of a tenant's imprisonment, was not extinguished by the tenant's petition and discharge, though the amount of rent was inserted in his schedule as a debt due to the landlord, and the distress was not made until after the discharge. Phillips v. Sherville, 6 Q. B. 944; 14 L. J., Q. B. 144; 9 Jur. 179.

Debt discharged cannot be Set-off.—Although a discharge did not operate as a complete extinguishment of a scheduled debt, the creditor was not entitled to plead such debt by way of set-off to an action against him by the insolvent for a demand accruing subsequently to his discharge. Francis v. Dodsworth, 4 C. B. 202; 17 L. J., C. P. 185.

Errors in Schedule of Debts.—Wrong Amount.]

—An insolvent debtor inserted a creditor in his schedule, but, by mistake and without fraud, stated the debt to be 3*l.*, whereas, in fact, it was 7*l.*:—Held, that, inasmuch as the creditor was thereby deprived of the benefit of the notice to be given to creditors for 5*l.* and upwards, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 71, this was not a case within the protection of the 93rd section, and the debtor's discharge was no bar to an action for this debt. Hoyles v. Blore, 14 M. & W. 387; 15 L. J., Ex. 28.

To a plea of set-off, the plaintiff, as to 19*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*, replied a discharge from a debt of 19*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*, and averred, that he subscribed a schedule containing a full and true description of the debt of 19*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*; and upon this averment issue was taken. The schedule, however, when produced in evidence, contained a debt of 6*l.* 10*s.* due to the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a verdict, inasmuch as there was no explanation of the difference between the amount of the debt inserted and of the debt claimed. Maile v. Bays, 2 D. & L. 964; 14 L. J., Q. B. 231; 9 Jur. 1108.

—Omission of one of two Debts.—A party who owed another two distinct debts was discharged as an insolvent debtor, having inserted only one of those debts in his schedule:—Held, that he was not discharged from the other debt, and might be sued for it. Leonard v. Baker, 15 M. & W. 202; 15 L. J., Ex. 177; 10 Jur. 226; S. P., Tyers v. Stunt, 7 Scott, 349.

—Error not Fraudulent.—In February, 1846, the defendant executed a warrant of attorney to secure to the plaintiff 100*l.*, upon which judgment was entered up, and execution levied to the amount of 50*l.* In August, 1847, the defendant obtained an order for protection under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and in his schedule the consideration for the warrant of attorney was stated to be about 70*l.*, and the balance due upon it about 50*l.* In October, 1854, the plaintiff caused another fi. fa. to be issued to levy 70*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.*, which he alleged to be the balance remaining due upon the judgment. Upon application to set aside this writ:—Held, that the order for protection must be considered as valid until set aside, and that the issuing of execution was a violation of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 21, unless the amount of the debt was inaccurately stated in the schedule by "culpable negligence, fraud or evil intention" on the part of the defendant. Brook v. Chaplin, 4 El. & Bl. 835; 24 L. J., Q. B. 188; 1 Jur., N. S. 590.

—Wrong Description of Creditors.—A party, having become security for another person to the plaintiffs, became insolvent, and obtained his discharge. In the list of creditors in his schedule, he described the plaintiffs as Birchring and Parmeter, brewers, Runham, Norfolk, their names and description being Bircham & Parmeter, brewers, Reepham, Norfolk. Runham is a small village thirty-five miles distant from Reepham, and in another post delivery. The plaintiffs never received any notice whatever of the insolvency:—Held, that the inaccuracy was such as to amount to a substantial misdescription; that therefore there was no full and true description of the plaintiffs in the schedule as required by the act, and that the debtor was not discharged from the debt. Bircham v. Walker, 1 L. T. 191—Ex. Ch.

An insolvent in his schedule described a debt as being due to "Messrs. Brown & Janson, bankers, 32, Clement's-lane, City;" the correct address of Messrs. Brown and Janson was No. 32, Abchurch-lane, and the notice of the hearing had been duly served at that place:—Held, although Messrs. Brown denied having received it, that the description in the schedule was a sufficient compliance with the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 69. Brown v. Thompson, 17 C. B. 245; 25 L. J., C. P. 55.

—Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes.—Omission of Holder's Name.—The discharge of an insolvent debtor from a debt, in respect of which he had accepted a bill of exchange, was no discharge as to the bill in the hands of a third person, unless the holder's name was inserted in the schedule, or stated therein that he was unknown. Beck v. Beverly, 11 M. & W. 845; S. P., Lambert v. Smith, 11 C. B. 358; 2 L., M & P. 446; 20 L. J., C. P. 195.

—Misdescription of Bill.—A debtor was protected from payment of a bill if he described it substantially in his schedule, though inaccurately as to amount or length of time for which it was drawn, provided such misdescription was not intentional or fraudulent. Booth v. Coldman, 1 El. & El. 414; 28 L. J., Q. B. 137; 5 Jur., N. S. 844.

A debtor entered in his schedule a bill of exchange as follows: "Mr. Worman, 129, Sloane-street, Chelsea, attorney's clerk. Bill of exchange for 45*l.*, drawn by S. O'G. for (my use), and accepted by me; dated about November, 1858, at six months." The bill was dated the 30th October, 1858, and was drawn by the debtor, and accepted by S. O'G.:—Held, that the bill was sufficiently described to discharge the debtor in an action on the bill. Romilio v. Halahan, 1 B. & S. 279; 2 F. & F. 418; 30 L. J., Q. B. 231; 8 Jur., N. S. 11; 4 L. T. 402; 9 W. R. 737.

—Omission with Consent of Creditor.—One who petitioned for protection under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, omitted a debt from his schedule, with the knowledge and consent, and through the contrivance and procurement of the party to whom it was owing; the debt was barred. Wilkin v. Manning, 9 Ex. 575; 2 C. L. R. 563; 23 L. J., Ex. 174; 18 Jur. 271.

—Giving new Security for discharged Debt.—A defendant mortgaged to B. premises as a security for money lent, and B. obtained a judgment against him for the principal and interest. The mortgage debt was afterwards assigned to the plaintiff in trust. The defendant took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, and the mortgage debt and judgment were inserted in his schedule. In order to get rid of the judgment he afterwards agreed with the plaintiff to pay a part of the principal and interest due on the mortgage, and to join with a surety in a bond for payment of the remainder by instalments. The money having been paid, and the bond given, satisfaction of the judgment was entered up. The plaintiff sued the defendant on the bond, and the jury found that in making the agreement the defendant's intention was to purchase the plaintiff's interest in the mortgaged premises and get rid of the judgment:—Held, that the transaction was not a new contract, or security for payment of a debt, in respect of which the defendant had been discharged, within 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 91. Ambrose v. Cook, 2 H. & N. 73; 26 L. J., Ex. 278.

A new security given to a creditor by an insolvent petitioner under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, upon his agreeing not to oppose the granting of the final order for protection, could not be enforced, although the commissioner required the insolvent to make an arrangement with the creditor, and adjourned the petition for that express purpose, and intimated that no final order would be made, unless such an arrangement were effected, and was privy to and consented to the new security being delivered on account of the old debt. Humphreys v. Welling, 32 L. J., Ex. 33; 6 L. T. 250.

5. PROTECTION FROM PROCESS.

Interim Order.—An interim order for protection extended to an attachment for non-payment into the Court of Chancery of a sum of money by a defaulting trustee. Wyllie v. Green, 1 De G. & J. 410; 26 L. J., Ch. 839; 3 Jur., N. S. 1046.

And protected only such property of an insolvent as would pass to and be distributed by his assignees. Purry v. Jones, 1 C. B., N. S. 399; 26 L. J., C. P. 36; 2 Jur., N. S. 1190.

An interim order protected the insolvent from arrest on a ca. sa. upon a judgment against him for a debt contracted since the filing of his petition, although the final order did not. Wallinger v. Gurney, 11 C. B., N. S. 182; 31 L. J., C. P. 55; 8 Jur., N. S. 513; 8 W. R. 81.

Final Order.—The final order was only a bar to actions brought in respect of debts mentioned in the schedule. Phillips v. Pickford, 1 L., M. & P. 134; 9 C. B. 459; 19 L. J., C. P. 171; 14 Jur. 272.

A final order obtained by an insolvent constituted an absolute bar to an action for the debt as to which it was a protection. Jacobs v. Hyde, Platell v. Bevil, 2 Ex. 508; 6 D. & L. 2; 17 L. J., Ex. 249; 12 Jur. 564; overruling Toomer v. Gingell, 3 C. B. 322; 4 D. & L. 182; 15 L. J., C. P. 255.

A final order constituted an absolute bar to the actions in respect of which it was a protection, though not in terms an order for distribution as well as for protection. Markin v. Aldrich, 11 C. B., N. S. 599; 5 L. T. 747; 10 W. R. 212.

The acts did not authorize the assignees to take profits of a benefice, there being no provision therein equivalent to 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 55. Id.

After Verdict and before Judgment.—An insolvent, against whom a verdict for damages, in an action of tort, had been returned, but judgment not entered at the time of the filing of his petition, was not protected by his final order from being taken in execution under process in respect of such verdict. Beavan v. Walker, 12 C. B. 480; 21 L. J., C. P. 161; 16 Jur. 547.

After Judgment and before Execution.—Where the goods of an insolvent had been seized under a fi. fa. issued upon a judgment signed against him, and between the date of the judgment and the writ he had obtained an order for protection and distribution, the court, upon motion, set aside the writ on terms. Turner v. Pulman, 2 Ex. 508.

6. RIGHTS OF INSOLVENTS AFTER DISCHARGE.

Surplus of Estate.—A debtor, who had been discharged under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, made an assignment of all his interest in the surplus of his assets after payment of his debts under the insolvency. He was afterwards again insolvent, and was discharged under the Insolvent Debtors' Act:—Held, that the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction to decide as between the assignee in insolvency and the assignee of the surplus, on their respective rights to the surplus, and a declaration was made accordingly in a suit instituted by the latter against the former assignee, and directing that the latter should be at liberty to apply to the insolvent court to give effect to the declaration, and that the amount received on such application should be paid to the credit of the chancery suit. Cook v. Sturgis, 3 De G. & J. 506; 28 L. J., Ch. 345; 5 Jur., N. S. 475.

Making an order for vesting the surplus of an insolvent's estate, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 92, was a judicial and not a ministerial act. Reg. v. Law, 7 El. & Bl. 366; S. C., nom. Cook, Ex parte, 29 L. J., Q. B. 68; 6 Jur., N. S. 224.

A devisee of an insolvent debtor who had taken the benefit of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and who had obtained a release in full from all his creditors, was entitled to sustain a bill in equity in respect of surplus real property, which had been conveyed by the official assignee, without going through the process of applying to the insolvent court for an order re-vesting the property in the assignee of the insolvent. Wearing v. Ellis, 6 De G., Mac. & G. 596; 26 L. J., Ch. 15; 2 Jur., N. S. 1147. See Dyson v. Hornby, 7 De G., Mac. & G. 1.

An insolvent debtor, all the claims against whom have been satisfied, is not debarred from suing for relief in chancery (in a matter which the commissioners in bankruptcy are incompetent to try), on the ground that he has not obtained a re-vesting order in insolvency, when he could only have obtained that order upon such terms as would have been destructive of his rights. Troup v. Ricardo, 10 Jur., N. S. 1161; 11 L. T. 399; 13 W. R. 147.

7. EFFECT OF 32 & 33 VICT. C. 83.

In 1836, C. took the benefit of the Insolvent Act (7 Geo. 4, c. 57) and obtained his discharge, having executed a warrant of attorney upon which judgment was entered up. Two creditors' assignees were then appointed, one being W., a creditor. C. subsequently became three times insolvent, and in July, 1864, he became bankrupt under the Act of 1849, and obtained his certificate. He died in January, 1880. C. had married the only daughter of a man who died possessed of very considerable property a few months after his first insolvency, whereupon he became entitled, in right of his wife, to that money, which came into his possession on her death in 1877. W., the survivor of the two creditors' assignees under the first insolvency, and himself a creditor, now applied for leave to prove his debt in an action to administer C.'s estate:—Held, that, under the act to provide for the winding up of the business of the insol-

H BANKRUPTCY OR SEQUESTRATION.

erty of a deceased debtor has been under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 41, the title of e, under the sequestration, is made out f of the act and warrant, in the manner cribed by s. 48, whether the property of the ceased debtor was subject to Scotch bankrupt laws or not. Miller v. Ker, 1 C. & K. 38.

Property of a deceased debtor, who, at the time of his death, resided, or had a dwelling-house, or carried on business in Scotland, and was at the time owner of heritable or movable estates in Scotland, is liable to 2 & 3 Vict. c. 41; and it is not necessary that the deceased debtor should have been a trader; and the amount of his heritable or movable estate in Scotland at the time of his death is immaterial. Id.

A., who had a warrant of protection under 2 &
3 Vict. c. 41, s. 17, was arrested whilst in London, at the suit of a creditor (for a debt within the meaning of the section), upon a judge's order, made under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 3, upon an affidavit that he was about to leave England and go to Scotland:—Held, that the going to Scotland was not a fuga within 2 & 3 Vict. c. 41, s. 17, which meant an attempt to escape from the dominions of Great Britain, and that he was entitled to be discharged. M'Gregor v. Fiskin, 5 D.
186.

A renewed warrant of protection from imprisonment under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 41, might be signed either by the sheriff or sheriff's substitute.
Jones v. Anstruther, 1 Ex. 867; 18 L. J., Ex.
131.

The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 41, provided for two distinct species of warrants to be granted by the lord ordinary, one for the protection of the debtor from arrest, the other for his liberation when in custody. Thus, a warrant which recited that the lord ordinary had considered the petition of A., and sequestered his estates, and declared them to belong to his creditors, and appointed the creditors to hold two meetings at a certain time and place, to elect interim factors and trustees, and remitted to sheriff to proceed according to the statute, and "granted a warrant of protection to A. against arrest or imprisonment for civil debt until the meeting of the creditors for the election of a trustee," was a warrant of protection only, and therefore a party in custody at the time the warrant was obtained was not entitled under it to his discharge. M'Gregor v. Fiskin, 2 Ex. 226; 5 D. & L. 722.

A defendant was arrested on a ca. sa. upon a judgment obtained against him here, and was discharged by order of a judge, on the ground that he had at the time of the arrest obtained his protection from process under a Scotch sequestration. Upon a motion to rescind that order, and for leave to issue another ca. sa.:—Held, that it was not competent to the court to inquire into the trading upon which the sequestration was founded, although fraud was suggested. O'Brien
v. Don, 1 C. B., N. S. 702; 26 L. J., C. P. 96;
3 Jur., N. S. 318.

By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 79, s. 47, the warrant granting protection shall protect the debtor from arrest in Great Britain and Ireland, and her Majesty's other dominions, for civil debts contracted previous to the sequestration; but such warrant shall not be of any effect against the execution of a warrant of apprehension in meditatione fugæ:
—Held, that the exception was not confined to the warrant in meditatione fugæ peculiar to Scotland, but extended to analogous process in other parts of the Queen's dominions. Therefore a Scotch debtor, who has obtained a warrant of protection and then comes to England, is liable to be arrested on a capias when he is about to leave this country for New Zealand. Dutton v.
Hally, 2 B. & S. 748; 31 L. J., Q. B. 297.

A sequestration issued against a debtor in Scotland, where he resided and carried on business, and creditors (also residing in Scotland) proved and received dividends under the sequestration. The debtor did not obtain any order of discharge, and more than six years from the payment of the last dividend he petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy in London for protection, having in the meantime carried on business in England; and a proposal for payment of a composition secured by inspectorship trusts was assented to,
and confirmed according to the Bankrupt Act, 1849:—Held, that the Statute of Limitations was a valid objection to the claim of the Scotch creditors to be paid a composition on the unpaid portion of their debt under the inspectorship, the sequestration being held not to create a trust of subsequently-acquired property for the purpose of taking the debts provable under it out of the statute. Kidd, Ex parte, 3 De G., F. & J. 640;
7 Jur., N. S. 613; 4 L. T. 244.

Bankruptcy—English Rule of Waring, Ex parte
(19 Ves. 345; 2 Rose, 182), inconsistent with Scotch Bankruptcy System.]—The rule of the English bankruptcy system fixed by Waring,
Ex parte (19 Ves. 345; 2 Rose, 182), and as extended in subsequent cases, has not been adopted in Scotland, and is inconsistent with Scotch bankruptcy law. Royal Bank of Scotland v.
Commercial Bank of Scotland, 7 App. Cas. 366; 47 L. T. 360; 31 W. R. 49—H. L. (Sc.)

Lien—Bills accepted against Goods—Bank- ruptcy of both Drawer and Acceptor during Currency of Bills.]—In Scotch practice, where B. accepts bills drawn by A. against goods left in B.'s hands as security, if both become bankrupt, the bill-holder can rank on the estate of each for the amount of the bills to the effect of recovering full payment; but B.'s estate is entitled to be indemnified for any dividends which his estate may be required to pay in respect of the bills,

vered the policy to him. Rejoinder, that the cargo was delivered and the risk thereon ended in England before his bankruptcy; and that the right to have a return of premium was not transferred before the bankruptcy:—Held, that the two causes of action, being separate and totally distinct from each other, though arising upon the same instrument, the bankrupt was entitled to sue for an average loss as trustee for his vendee, that being a cause of action in which he had no beneficial interest at the time of his bankruptcy. Boddington v. Castelli (in error), 1 El. & Bl. 879; 17 Jur. 781—Ex. Ch.

Assignees suing upon a contract made with the bankrupt are entitled to all the legal and equitable rights, and no other, which the bankrupt would have had if the action had been brought by him on the day of his bankruptcy. Valpy v. Oakley, 16 Q. B. 941; 20 L. J., Q. B. 380; 16 Jur. 38.

A. contracted to deliver to B. iron, to be paid for by bills. The bills were accordingly accepted by B., but upon maturity were dishonoured, and afterwards B. became bankrupt:—Held, in an action by the assignees of B. against A. for non-delivery of the goods, that they were entitled to recover only such damages as could have been recovered by B. if the action had been brought by him on the day of his bankruptcy, and therefore only the difference between the contract and the market prices of the iron. Ib.

S., being indebted to the defendants, who had acted as his solicitors, in a sum of money, they, before his bankruptcy, received certain sums belonging to S. from his agent, and applied them in discharge of their claims upon him. S. having afterwards become bankrupt, and his assignees having brought an action against the defendants to recover this money as money received to their use, the judge told the jury, that, if the defendants, before the bankruptcy, actually received the money to the use of the bankrupt, they held it, after the bankruptcy, to the use of the assignees, who were entitled to succeed on the plea of non-assumpsit:—Held, that this was a misdirection, and that there ought to be a new trial, unless it was clear that the jury was not misled, and that it was afterwards explained away. Pennell v. Aston, 14 M. & W. 415; 14 L. J., Ex. 309.

B., being indebted to the defendant in 500*l.* for the price of goods sold to him, and being pressed for part payment of the debt, handed to the defendant a bill of exchange drawn by himself for 600*l.*, which the defendant agreed to discount on the terms of retaining to his own use the sum of 100*l.* and the discount, and paying over the difference to B.; he, however, retained the bill, and paid no part of the proceeds over to B. B. shortly afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that his assignees were entitled to recover from the defendant the full amount of the bill, minus the 100*l.*, and such discount as the jury should find to be receivable by the defendant. Alder v. Keighley, 15 M. & W. 117; 15 L. J., Ex. 100.

A., drawer of an accommodation bill, a few days before its maturity, handed over money to B., the acceptor, for the purpose of meeting the bill. A fiat having been issued against A. between the day of such deposit and the maturity and payment of the bill:—Held, that the money having been handed over to B. in pursuance of a binding contract upon a good consideration, viz.

an implied contract of indemnity, the bankruptcy of A. was no revocation of B.'s authority to apply the money in satisfaction of the bill, and consequently that A.'s assignees could not recover it back from him. Yates v. Hoppe, 9 C. B. 541; 19 L. J., C. P. 180; 14 Jur. 372.

A custom of exchanging acceptances existed between a bankrupt and other houses, through the agency of B.; notes were sent by A. to B., but never exchanged, as bankruptcy intervened, and they were stolen from B., and never formed any item in any settlement of the accounts between B. and the assignees:—Held, that A. could not recover the value of the notes from the assignees. Watson, Ex parte, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 685; 4 Deac. & Chit. 45.

M. and the Scotch bank mutually exchanged their notes at stated times. M. became bankrupt, his agent B. having notes of the Scotch bank in his hands. The assignees subsequently allowed B. to retain these notes in his account with them, he having claims against M.:—Held, that the Scotch bank could recover these notes against the assignees. Bank of Scotland, In re, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 644; 4 Deac. & Chit. 32.

7. FOR CONVERSION OF BANKRUPT'S PROPERTY.

Action.—In an action by assignees against a sheriff, for a conversion of the bankrupt's goods, seized under a fi. fa. against E. and D., it appeared that, immediately before the seizure, the bankrupt told the officer that the goods were the property of C., and immediately afterwards he contradicted that statement, and said they were the goods of D. The jury found that the goods were in reality the bankrupt's, but, also, that he represented the goods to the officer as the goods of C., so as to induce the officer, by that false representation, to seize them:—Held, that under a plea of not possessed, this finding did not estop the bankrupt, and his assignees, from complaining of the seizure of the goods as their own. Freeman v. Cook, 2 Ex. 654; 18 L. J., Ex. 114; 12 Jur. 777.

B. bought goods at the shop of A., after notice that A. had committed an act of bankruptcy, by absconding, and claimed to set off against the price a debt due to him from A. A fiat having afterwards issued against A., his assignees sent in an invoice, and demanded payment of the goods so bought by B.:—Held, that the assignees did not thereby so affirm the sale as to disentitle them to maintain an action for the goods upon a subsequent demand and refusal. Valpy v. Sanders, 5 C. B. 887; 17 L. J., C. P. 249; 12 Jur. 483.

A., by a deed dated the 28th September, 1845, conveyed goods to B., absolutely, subject to a proviso that if he should pay to B. the sum secured on the 22nd of March, 1850, or any earlier day, after receiving from B. fourteen days' notice, and should pay the interest meanwhile half-yearly, then the conveyance should be void. By the deed, it was also agreed that until a default in payment of the principal, as before specified, or until default in payment of the interest after notice to pay, A. should be allowed to hold and enjoy the goods. No notice for earlier payment was given to A. pursuant to the power contained in the deed, nor any notice for payment of the interest, and he continued in possession of the goods until the 13th of December, 1849, when he became bankrupt, and his assignees then took possession of the goods, and sold them on the 19th of February, 1850. B. had previously assigned the goods to the plaintiff:—Held, that although the right to the possession of the goods was vested in A. until the 22nd of March, 1850 (defeasible by non-payment of the principal and interest, according to the provisions of the deed), yet that the sale of the goods before that day put an end to the term, and that the assignees had thereby been guilty of a conversion, for which the plaintiff was entitled to maintain trover. Fenn v. Bittleston, 7 Ex. 152; 21 L. J., Ex. 41.

Where assignees declare in trover for property of the bankrupt converted since the bankruptcy, the conversion after the bankruptcy is a material allegation, and must be proved under the general issue. Edwards v. Hooper, 11 M. & W. 363; 12 L. J., Ex. 304; 7 Jur. 378.

The assignees of two bankrupt partners declared in trover for property which had belonged to the bankrupts, alleging a possession in themselves as assignees, and a conversion since the bankruptcy. A separate fiat had first issued against one partner, under which the property was seized by the sheriff and sold; subsequently to which a joint fiat was issued against both:—Held, that the assignees could not recover in trover against the sheriff for an undivided moiety of the whole as the property of the partner against whom the separate fiat had issued. Id.

Assignees are not entitled to waive a sale of the goods as a conversion, and rely on a subsequent demand and refusal. Id.

In trover for goods: at the trial it appeared that the plaintiff was in possession of the goods, which he claimed as his property, under an assignment to him from O. The defendant seized the goods in the plaintiff's possession, claiming them under an assignment from O. to him, made whilst O. was in apparent ownership of the goods, but of a later date than the assignment to the plaintiff. This was the conversion. The defence was that the assignment by O. to the plaintiff was fraudulent as against the defendant. This was left to the jury, who found for the plaintiff. The defendant also offered, as a defence, to prove that O. had become bankrupt before the plaintiff took possession, and that the goods were in his order and disposition, and therefore vested in his assignees before the conversion. The judge refused to permit this defence. On a motion for a new trial:—Held, that the judge did right; for that the plaintiff being in possession, and the defendant being a wrongdoer, not claiming in any way under the assignees, the defendant could not set up the jus tertii as a defence in trover. Jeffries v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 El. & Bl. 802; 25 L. J., Q. B. 107; 2 Jur., N. S. 230.

A. having become bankrupt, his goods were sold by order of his assignees. Some goods of his in B.'s hands at the time of the bankruptcy, and on which B. claimed a lien, were also included in the sale; but this was done by B.'s order, and the assignees refused to authorize it. The assignees afterwards signed a memorandum that all the goods included in the sale were the property of the bankrupt, to exempt them from auction duty:—Held, that this was no adoption of the sale, so as to prevent the assignees from maintaining trover against B. for the goods. Bleaden v. Hancock, M. & M. 465.

A., the partner of B., was also in partnership with C. A., being indebted to the firm of A. & B., indorsed to A. & B. a bill belonging to the firm of A. & C., and immediately afterwards indorsed it in the names of A. & B. to D., a creditor of A. & B., who received the amount at maturity. A. & C. afterwards became bankrupts; their assignees cannot maintain trover against B. Jones v. Yates, 4 M. & R. 613; 9 B. & C. 532.

Nor can such assignees maintain an action against B. for money taken by A. from the funds of A. & C. and applied to the use of A. & B. Id.

Pleadings.—In trover by the owner of the goods against assignees, the defence that the goods were at the time of the bankruptcy in the order and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the true owner, and that the title to the goods vested in the assignees by virtue of an order made by the Court of Bankruptcy, is admissible under the plea of not possessed, although the order was applied for and made after action. Heslop v. Baker, 8 Ex. 411; 22 L. J., Ex. 333.

In trover by assignees of H. & L., bankrupts, against the sheriff, the defendant pleaded, that H. & L., being indebted to S., he sued out a fi. fa., directed to defendant as sheriff, and thereupon, after H. & L. became bankrupt, and before the fiat, he took the goods in execution, and that afterwards a fiat issued, under which the plaintiffs were appointed assignees, and, as such, entitled to the possession of the goods, which possession is the possession of the assignees in the declaration mentioned:—Held, first, that the defence might be given in evidence, either under the plea of not possessed, or not guilty. Unwin v. St. Quintin, 2 D., N. S. 790; 11 M. & W. 277; 12 L. J., Ex. 209.

To trover by the assignees for goods the defendant pleaded that the bankrupt being indebted to him before the bankruptcy he had sued him, and recovered judgment against him, and sued out execution thereon; and that the sheriff seized the goods, and sold them under the writ, which was the conversion complained of:—Held, on special demurrer, that the plea was bad as amounting to the general issue. Young v. Cooper, 6 Ex. 259; 20 L. J., Ex. 136.

To a declaration by assignees of a bankrupt to recover damages for goods, chattels, and fixtures alleged to be in his possession at the time of his bankruptcy, and to have been since converted by the defendants, they pleaded that before the bankruptcy the bankrupt assigned the goods to them by deed, and that before the bankruptcy they took possession of them, and kept and retained such possession afterwards; the plaintiffs replied that the defendants did not take possession of the goods before the bankruptcy: issue was joined thereon, and a verdict found for the plaintiffs upon it:—Held, that the issue was immaterial, because the assignment by deed conveyed the property in the goods to the defendants, and the continued possession of the assignor only amounted to evidence of fraud. Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C., M. & R. 782; 5 Tyr. 309.

Damages.—A sheriff seized goods belonging to a bankrupt, and, after keeping them for a considerable period, and after trover brought against him by the assignees, he delivered up the goods to them:—Held, that the assignees were not entitled to proceed in the action, and to recover as damages a quarter's rent which had been paid for the house where the goods were kept whilst in the possession of the sheriff, or the costs of keeping their messenger on the premises during the same period. Moon v. Raphael, 2 Scott, 489; 2 Bing. N. C. 310; 7 C. & P. 115; 1 Hodges, 289.

Goods were seized under fi. fa., issued upon a judgment on a warrant of attorney, after an act of bankruptcy committed by the debtor, against whom a fiat issued before the goods were sold. The assignees gave the sheriff notice not to sell, and he brought the parties before a judge by an interpleader order. The judge directed that the goods should be sold, and the money brought into court, to abide the event of an issue to be tried between the execution creditor and the assignees. The latter made no objection, and did not suggest any other mode of disposing of the goods, which were accordingly sold by the sheriff's auctioneer. The execution creditor subsequently abandoned all claim to the goods; and the proceeds of the sale were paid out of court to the assignees:—Held, that the assignees were not entitled, as matter of law, to recover in trover against the execution creditor the difference between the produce of the sale and the value of the goods at the time of the seizure; and that it was no misdirection in the judge to state to the jury, that, if they thought that the sale was bonâ fide, they might consider the produce of it as the measure of damages. Whitmore v. Black, 13 M. & W. 507; 2 D. & L. 445.

8. WHERE DEBT INCURRED BY FRAUD.

In an action against liquidating debtors and their trustee, to recover advances of money obtained from the plaintiffs by the debtors through false and fraudulent representations before the liquidation, the plaintiffs claimed, inter alia, a declaration that they were entitled to prove for the amount of the advances, and interest at 5 per cent. to the date of the liquidation, either against the joint estate of the liquidating debtors or against the separate estate as the plaintiffs might elect:—Held, on demurrer by the trustee, that, as the plaintiffs might in this action obtain some relief against him, the claim was good. Hale v. Boustead, 8 Q. B. D. 453; 51 L. J., Q. B. 255; 46 L. T. 533; 30 W. R. 677; 46 J. P. 342.

9. PLEADINGS.

Counts for money lent and money paid by the assignee of a bankrupt, may be joined with counts for money had and received to the assignee's use, and upon an account stated with him as assignee. Richardson v. Griffin, 5 M. & S. 294; 2 Chit. 325.

In an action by assignees of a bankrupt, it need not be stated in the declaration that they sue "as assignees;" it is enough if it sufficiently appears that they are assignees. Ferguson v. Mitchell, 2 C., M. & R. 687; 4 D. P. C. 513.

Plaintiffs declared as assignees of a bankrupt, concluding as follows: "Wherefore the plaintiffs, assignees as aforesaid,—instead of 'as' assignees as aforesaid,—say they are injured:—"Held good, on special demurrer, as the words "assignees as aforesaid," might be rejected as surplusage. Cobbett v. Cockrane, 1 M. & Scott, 55; 8 Bing. 17.

A declaration in scire facias by assignees of a bankrupt, stating that he became a bankrupt within the meaning of the statutes relating to bankrupts, and that his goods and effects were afterwards in due manner assigned to the plaintiffs, is sufficiently certain, without alleging that the party was declared a bankrupt. Winter v. Kretchman, 2 T. R. 45.

The assignees under a joint commission against A. and B., in suing on a separate contract entered into with A., may describe themselves generally as the assignees of A., without noticing the name of B. Stonehouse v. De Silex, 3 Camp. 399; 2 Rose, 142; S. P., Harvey v. Morgan, 2 Stark. 17.

A defendant received money to the use of A. and B. as assignees. B. was afterwards removed, and A. became the sole assignee, the money still remaining in the hands of the defendant: A. may well declare as for money had and received to his own use as assignee, without mentioning B. at all. Stewart v. Lee, M. & M. 158.

Under a joint commission against two partners, the assignees may declare in the same action for separate as well as joint debts due to the bankrupts. Graham v. Mulcaster, 4 Bing. 115; 12 Moore, 327.

Assignees in an action against the vendee of goods sold by the bankrupt after the commission, need not name themselves assignees in the declaration; secus, if on a contract made by the bankrupt before the commission. Evans v. Mann, Cowp. 569.

10. INTERROGATORIES.

In trover by assignees of a bankrupt, the defendant cannot deliver interrogatories for the purpose of compelling the assignees to state upon oath what act or acts of bankruptcy they intend to rely upon in support of their title. Edwards v. Wakefield, 6 El. & El. 462; 2 Jur. N. S. 762.

11. EVIDENCE.

Where in an action by assignees the bankrupt was not called as a witness, but a witness was examined as to certain statements of the bankrupt with respect to his affairs:—Held, that the evidence was admissible. Belcher v. Brake, 2 C. & K. 658.

In an action against assignees for the conversion of goods seized by them as the property of the bankrupt, it appeared that the plaintiff claimed the goods by virtue of an alleged sale by the bankrupt to him a short time before his bankruptcy; and it was proposed on cross-examination to ask a witness who was present at the alleged sale, whether he himself would have acted upon the transaction by delivering the goods to the plaintiff:—Semble, that the question might be put. Morgan v. Whitmore, 6 Ex. 716; 20 L. J., Ex. 289.

Certain documents, purporting to be a receipt of and a delivery order for the goods, in the handwriting of the bankrupt, and dated as of the day of the sale, were delivered to a witness by the bankrupt, and after his bankruptcy, and about a month after the alleged sale. There was no evidence independently of the documents themselves that they existed before the bankruptcy:—Held, that the documents were admissible as evidence of their existence at the time they bore date. Ib.

Trover of A., against the assignees of H., for seizing goods of A. The plaintiff gave evidence, that prior to the bankruptcy the person in possession, and apparently the owner, had assigned them to C., who had, for valuable consideration, assigned them to the plaintiff. The plaintiff had put a person in possession of the goods, but C. continued to carry on the business in the house where they were. On the part of the defendants, it was suggested that the transaction was colourable, and that the goods belonged to the bankrupt H. Before any evidence was offered of any connection between the plaintiff and H., one of the witnesses for the defence was asked whether he remembered C. making a claim to the goods after the bankruptcy. The question was disallowed:—Held, that the question ought to have been allowed. Ford v. Elliott, 4 Ex. 78; 18 L. J., Ex. 447.

An admission by a bankrupt in his balance-sheet will not take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations as against his assignees. Pott v. Clegg, 16 M. & W. 321; 16 L. J., Ex. 210; 11 Jur. 289.

An admission in an unsigned letter, written and sent by direction of the assignees of a bankrupt by an accountant employed by them to wind up the affairs of the bankrupt's estate, will not take a debt of the bankrupt out of the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

A statement by a bankrupt in his balance-sheet of a debt due by him is not evidence as against his assignees of the debt being due. Ib.

12. COSTS.

The official assignee is entitled to be indemnified against the costs of an action brought in his name without his authority. Laws v. Bott, 16 M. & W. 300; 4 D. & L. 559; 16 L. J., Ex. 279.

An official assignee is liable to the costs of defending an action brought against him and the creditors' assignee, if he joined in retaining the attorney. Sydney v. Belcher, 2 M. & Rob. 325.

An action, by direction of a commissioner, was brought, with the assent of the creditors, to try a disputed point. The action failed, and some creditors objected to the allowance of the assignees' costs, on the ground that the commissioner had no jurisdiction to order the action to be brought, as not being an action within 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 153, but the Lords Justices ordered the costs to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate, on the ground that the objection ought to have been made earlier, that is, before the result of the action was known. Edmondson, Ex parte, 31 L. J., Bk. 32; 6 L. T. 234.

An official assignee of a district court of bankruptcy having given his assent to the bringing of an action in his name jointly with that of the trade assignee for the recovery of part of the bankrupt's estate, and the action proving unsuccessful, the trade assignee, having paid the costs, is entitled to sue the official assignee for contri-

13. PRACTICE.

Assignees seeking to set aside a judgment against a bankrupt for irregularity must come within the same time after their appointment as the bankrupt must have done after he had notice of the irregularity. Alcock v. Sutcliffe, 1 B. C. Rep. 313; 4 D. & L. 612.

Assignees applying to set aside proceedings on the ground of irregularity must come to the court within a reasonable time after notice of the irregularity. Butterworth v. Williams, 4 D. & L. 82; S. P., Amadio v. Showell, 1 B. C. Rep. 305.

Judgment was signed, and execution issued against the defendant, on the 29th of February, at which time notice was given to the sheriff that the judgment would be disputed; a fiat issued on the 15th of March; the official assignee was appointed on the 4th and the other assignees on the 12th of April; and the motion to set aside the judgment was made, on the part of the assignees, on the 25th of April:—Held, that it was made in time. Brooks v. Hodson, 2 D. & L. 256; 8 Scott, N. R. 223; 7 M. & G. 529; 13 L. J., C. P. 203.

In an action against the creditors' and official assignees of a bankrupt, for trespass, and for the conversion of fixtures by sale, the action will not, at nisi prius, be stayed as against the official assignee under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 41, which refers only to claims for money paid into the Bank of England before issue. Vansittart v. James, 1 F. & F. 156.

XXVII. INSOLVENT DEBTORS AND DEBTORS TO SMALL AMOUNTS.

1. STATUTES.

By 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, the court for relief of insolvent debtors in England was established; that statute repealed the previous acts, 1 Geo. 4, c. 119; 3 Geo. 4, c. 123; 5 Geo. 4, c. 61. The act was continued by 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 38; 2 Will. 4, c. 44; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 47, and subsequently by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, until the year 1861, when it was abolished by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 1, and its jurisdiction transferred to the Court of Bankruptcy. See Perkins, Ex parte, 34 L. J., Bk. 37; 11 Jur., N. S. 895; 12 L. T. 784; 13 W. R. 1001.

The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, amended by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, enabled persons not being traders within the meaning of the statutes relating to bankrupts, or being traders within the meaning of those statutes, but owing debts amounting on the whole to less than 300l., to be petitioners for protection from process, by presenting a petition in a form prescribed, to any court or district court of bankruptcy within the district in which the petitioners resided twelve calendar months, without notice being given to their creditors, or in the London Gazette, or any newspaper.

The jurisdiction in these matters was transferred to the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and to the county courts, by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 102, and was vested in them by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 3.

do so. London Engineering and Iron Ship-building Company v. Cowan, 16 L. T. 573.

When Charged with Contempt of Court.]—A barrister, who was also an attorney of the supreme court of a colony, and a suitor in the court, wrote a letter, as such suitor, to the chief justice, reflecting on the administration of justice in the court, and amounting to a contempt of court, whereupon the court suspended him from pleading in the court:—Held, that although courts of justice have power to remove their officers when guilty of crime or moral delinquency, rendering them unfit to be intrusted with a professional status, yet, inasmuch as the offence was committed by him in his capacity as a suitor, and not as an officer of the court, punishment by fine or imprisonment was the appropriate punishment, and the order suspending him from practising in the court was reversed. Wallace, In re, 1 L. R., P. C. 283; 36 L. J., P. C. C. 9; 15 W. R. 533; 4 Moore, P. C. C., N. S. 140.

A barrister, engaged in his professional duty before the supreme court at Hong Kong, was, without notice of the alleged contempt, or rule to shew cause, and without being heard in defence, by an order of that court, fined and adjudged to have been guilty of several contempts of court in disrespectfully addressing the chief justice while conducting a cause. Such order, upon a reference by the crown to the judicial committee, was set aside, and the fine ordered to be remitted, first, on the ground that the order was bad, inasmuch as the offences charged were not of themselves such contempts of court as legally constituted an offence; and, secondly, that, even if they had been so, no distinct charge of the several alleged offences was stated, and no opportunity given to the party accused of being heard, before passing sentence. Pollard, In re, 2 L. R., P. C. 106; 5 Moore, P. C. C., N. S. 111.

Freedom of Speech.]—An action will not lie against a barrister for words spoken by him as counsel in a cause pertinent to the matter in issue. Hodgson v. Scarlett, 1 B. & A. 232.

But although counsel in the discharge of their duty are privileged to utter matter injurious to individuals, the subsequent publication of such matter is unlawful. Flint v. Pike, 6 D. & R. 528; 4 B. & C. 473. Compare Munster v. Lamb, 11 Q. B. D. 588; 52 L. J., Q. B. 726; 49 L. T. 252; 32 W. R. 248; 47 J. P. 805—C. A.

A party in a matter before the court had kept a sum of money, which, by his contract, he ought not to have kept. Counsel, in reference to this matter, used the language, "This gentleman has defrauded us," and was interrupted by the court before he had finished his sentence:—Held, first, that the words were not actionable. Needam v. Douling, 15 L. J., C. P. 9.

Held, secondly, that they were not irrelevant to the matter before the court. Id.

Abuse of.]—A barrister may be punished for contempt of court, even for language professedly used in the discharge of his functions as advocate. Pater, Ex parte, 5 B. & S. 299; 9 Cox. C. C. 544; 33 L. J., M. C. 142; 10 Jur., N. S. 972; 10 L. T. 376.

Where, on a trial for felony at the Middlesex quarter sessions, the counsel for the prisoner, whose mode of conducting the case had been remarked upon by the foreman of the jury, in his address to the jury uttered words which reflected upon the foreman, and being required by the judge to withdraw them, refused, and was thereupon adjudged guilty of contempt and fined; upon motion for a certiorari to remove the order:—Held, that as the words used might have been, and were by the judge adjudged to have been, used to insult the juror, there was no excess of jurisdiction, and the Court of Queen's Bench could not interfere. Id.

In Actions brought against them.]—No action lies against a barrister for misconduct in the management of a cause. Fell v. Brown, Peake, 96.

Nor to recover a fee given to him to argue a cause which he did not attend. Turner v. Philpotts, Peake, 122.

Scemle, an action cannot be maintained against a certificated special pleader for negligence or unskilful advice in the course of his profession. Perring v. Rebutter, 2 M. & Rob. 429.

An action against a barrister for negligence or non-attendance on a trial, is not maintainable. Mulligan v. McDonogh, 5 Ir. Jur., N. S. 101; 2 L. T. 136.

As to Venue.]—Serjeants and barristers, when they sue, are entitled to lay and retain the venue in Middlesex. Sparke v. Stokes, 3 Dougl. 355.

Even though the cause of action arose in another county. Speiman's case, 1 Wils. 159; 1 W. Bl. 19.

But when a barrister is a defendant, he has no privilege whatever respecting the venue. Id.

Action by a barrister and wife for an assault on the wife: the venue, which was laid in Middlesex, had been changed by defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff could not restore it by virtue of his privilege as a barrister. Newton v. Harland, 4 Bing. N. C. 406; 6 Scott, 186; 6 D. P. C. 630.

A plaintiff, who has been called to the bar since the commencement of an action, cannot claim his privilege in order to have the venue in the action brought back from York to Middlesex. Id.

Immunity from Arrest whilst engaged on Professional Business.]—A barrister is privileged from arrest whilst in attendance on the courts, and therefore will be discharged if arrested on the circuit. Hippesley, In re, 1 H. Bl. 636.

He is privileged from arrest while he is on his return from court. Luntly v. Nathaniel, 2 D. P. C. 51; 1 C. & M. 579; S. P., Newton v. Harland, 8 Scott, 70.

A barrister who has been actually engaged at petty sessions, but without a previous retainer, for a party in a case of summary conviction, where counsel are allowed, is not privileged from arrest redeundo. Newton v. Constable, 1 G. & D. 408; 9 D. P. C. 933; 2 Q. B. 157; 6 Jur. 317.

A barrister who had been attending in the hall of the Four Courts, Dublin, and had there received a brief in a cause set down for hearing upon that day, but which, prior to his receiving the brief, had been postponed till the next day, was arrested, while returning homewards, on the same day:—Held, that he was entitled to be discharged, on the ground of privilege. Rubenstein v. —, 10 Ir. C. L. R. 386.

A barrister of the Oxford circuit had attended court as a barrister at the Abingdon and Oxford assizes. The latter assizes concluded on the 25th of July, and the commission-day at the next town (Worcester) was the 27th of July. The barrister being taken on a ca. sa. at Oxford on the 26th of July, was entitled to be discharged as being a barrister on the circuit. Oxfordshire (Sheriff), In re, 2 C. & K. 200.

The fact that he had no brief at Abingdon or Oxford, was immaterial with respect to his discharge. Ib.

The fact that he was not in the habit of attending the Worcester assizes, or that he made no affidavit that he intended to go on the circuit, was also immaterial to his discharge. Ib.

A barrister of the home circuit had attended the assizes at Hertford and at Chelmsford, which latter assizes had ended on Friday, the 6th of March. On Monday, the 9th of March, the commission-day at the next town (Maidstone), but before the commission was opened there, he was arrested at his own house, six miles from London, on a capias utlagatum, he having retainers in case at Maidstone:—Held, entitled to be discharged as being a barrister on the circuit. Kent (Sheriff), In re, 2 C. & K. 197; 15 L. J., Q. B. 268.

III. RIGHT TO APPEAR BY.

Counsel must be instructed by a Solicitor.—There is no rule of law requiring that counsel appearing in court for a party who pleads in person should be instructed by an attorney. Doe d. Bennett v. Hale, 15 Q. B. 171; 19 L. J., Q. B. 353; 14 Jur. 830.

But the usage which has prevailed at the bar, that counsel, unless in some excepted cases, should take their instructions from attorneys only, is beneficial, and ought to be maintained. Ib.

Undergraduate Summoned before University Authorities.—The Vice-Chancellor and heads of colleges in the University of Cambridge have authority to make a decree, that every tradesman with whom any person in statu pupillari should contract a debt exceeding 5*l.* should be required to send notice thereof, at the end of every quarter, to the college tutor of the person so indebted, on pain of being punished by discommuning, or otherwise, as to the Vice-Chancellor and heads of colleges should seem fit. A tradesman resident in Cambridge was summoned before the Vice-Chancellor and heads of colleges, to answer a complaint of having violated this decree:—Held, that he was not entitled to appear by counsel or attorney, this not being a judicial proceeding. Death, Ex parte, 21 L. J., Q. B. 337; 17 Jur. 112; 18 Q. B. 647.

Person Summoned before Magistrates.—A magistrate convicted B. for an offence under the Copyright of Designs Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, adjudged him to pay a penalty, and, he not having paid it, afterwards summoned him to shew cause why he should not be further dealt with according to law. B. did not appear to the summons personally, but his counsel and attorney appeared. The magistrate refused to hear the case in his absence, and issued a warrant for his apprehension, reciting the summons and his neglect to appear, and directing his apprehension to answer to the complaint, and be further dealt with according to law. B., under this warrant, was apprehended and imprisoned. The conviction was afterwards quashed, and he brought an action against the magistrate:—Held, first, that he was not protected by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 2, the summons to appear after the conviction not being the summons spoken of in that section, the non-appearance to which was to prevent the maintenance of an action; and, secondly, that, even if the summons had been within the section, the appearance to it by counsel and attorney was sufficient, and the action was therefore maintainable. Bessell v. Wilson, 1 El. & Bl. 489.

Right of Wife to be Heard on Behalf of her Husband.—The wife of a plaintiff in an action has no right to appear and conduct the case of her husband at nisi prius. Cobbett v. Hudson, 15 Q. B. 988; 14 Jur. 982.

But in an application directly concerning liberty, as a motion for a habeas corpus, the wife may be heard on behalf of her husband. Ib.

Party Conducting his own Case.—Right to give Evidence.—The 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 2, does not abridge the former right of a party to a suit to act as his own advocate, and a judge at nisi prius has no authority to prevent a party to a cause addressing the jury as his own advocate, and afterwards giving evidence as a witness in support of his own case; but such a course of proceeding is most objectionable. Cobbett v. Hudson, 1 El. & Bl. 11; 22 L. J., Q. B. 11; 17 Jur. 488.

A person who conducts a cause as advocate cannot be examined as a witness therein; and if he is so examined, the court will grant a new trial on that ground. Dunn v. Parkwood; 1 B. C. Rep. 312; 11 Jur. 242; S. P., Stones v. Bacon, 4 D. & L. 393; 1 B. C. Rep. 248; 16 L. J., Q. B. 32; 11 Jur. 44.

A plaintiff, who was a barrister, was not allowed to be heard on his own case after counsel had addressed the court. Newton v. Chaplin, 10 C. B. 356; 19 L. J., C. P. 374; 14 Jur. 1121.

A barrister, party in an action, civil or criminal, is in the same position as any other party. Ib.

Where there are several Defendants.—Several charged in one indictment with different illegal acts severed in their defence, and, being convicted and sentenced to different punishments, brought separate writs of error:—Held, that they were entitled to appear by separate counsel, and that such counsel were severally entitled to reply. O'Connell v. Reg. (in error), 11 C. & F. 115; 9 Jur. 25.

Where defendants at a trial appear by different counsel, it is a matter for the discretion of the judge, to be exercised on all the circumstances of the case, whether more than one ought to be allowed to address the jury. Nicholson v. Styles or Brooke, 2 Ex. 213; 17 L. J., Ex. 229; 12 Jur. 681.

IV. AUTHORITY TO BIND CLIENT.

By Compromises or Arrangements.—The court will not enforce by attachment an agreement of compromise made by counsel on behalf of his client, if it is at all doubtful whether the client is bound to perform the agreement. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 1 C. B., N. S. 364; 26 L. J., C. P. 97; 3 Jur., N. S. 85.

Nor will a court of equity enforce the compromise by a specific performance. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 2 De G. & J. 381; 27 L. J., Ch. 491; 1 Jur., N. S. 774.

Where there had been a conference between a party to an action and his counsel and attorney, as to the terms of compromising such action, and there was evidence that the client had authorized his counsel to do the best for him he could, and the counsel afterwards settled such action in court whilst the client was actually present, the court refused to set aside the order of nisi prius made according to the terms of such settlement, notwithstanding the client made an affidavit that the action was settled without his authority, and that, although present in court, he did not understand what was going on. Chambers v. Mason, 5 C. B., N. S. 59; 28 L. J., C. P. 10; 5 Jur., N. S. 148.

But where a jury had given excessive damages, and the court was reluctant to interfere to set aside the verdict, but recommended a compromise, counsel had authority to consent to such a compromise in the absence of their clients, such consent being clearly within their ordinary authority. Thomas v. Harris, 27 L. J., Ex. 353.

It is within the general authority of counsel retained to conduct a cause to consent to the withdrawal of a juror, and the compromise being within the counsel's apparent authority is binding on the client, notwithstanding he may have dissented, unless his dissent was brought to the knowledge of the opposite party at the time. Strauss v. Francis, 1 L. R., Q. B. 379; 35 L. J., Q. B. 133; 12 Jur., N. S. 486; 14 L. T. 322; 14 W. R. 634.

An order was made by consent in the presence of the defendant, his solicitor, and counsel. Upon an application by the defendant to set aside the order on the grounds that he had never consented to it; that his counsel had no authority to do so; that he had not himself understood it; and that so soon as he did understand it he repudiated it; the court, being of opinion that the defendant had understood the order at the time it was made, refused to set it aside. Holt v. Jesse, 3 Ch. D. 177; 46 L. J., Ch. 254; 24 W. R. 879.

The general authority, both of counsel and solicitor, extends to the entering a stet processus, and a compromise by stet processus announced by counsel in open court in the presence of his client must be repudiated openly and at once by the client, or it cannot be set aside. Rumsey v. King, 33 L. T. 728.

— As to Costs.—It was agreed that the trial of an indictment at the sessions should be postponed, the defendant agreeing to pay the costs of the day. The costs were taxed; and, at the subsequent sessions, the counsel for the prosecution asked if there was any objection to the amount. The defendant's counsel said there was not, except as to 1*l.* 9*s.* The attorney for the prosecution said he would give up that sum, and the defendant's attorney said he would give a cheque for the residue. After this, the defendant was applied to for payment, and he said his attorney, who received his rents, would arrange it:—Held, that the indorsement on the brief was an agreement, and, also, that on this evidence the plaintiff could recover the amount of the taxed costs, minus 1*l.* 9*s.* Porter v. Cooper, 1 C., M. & R. 387; 6 C. & P. 354; 4 Tyr. 456.

— As to Nonsuit.—The counsel of a party in an action has power at the trial to agree to a nonsuit, notwithstanding that his client objects to his so doing. Lynch v. Coel, 12 L. T. 548; 13 W. R. 846.

By Admissions.—A statement made by counsel upon his address to the jury, but in the hearing of his client, is binding on the client if he makes no objection. Colledge v. Horn, 3 Bing. 119; 10 Moore, 431.

Where a party appears by counsel before the court or a judge at chambers in any stage of a cause, and counsel makes an admission of a fact, though unsupported by affidavit, the court will regard such statement as presumably true, and will admit it in evidence when offered by the other side. Haller v. Worman, 3 L. T. 741; 9 W. R. 348.

In an action to recover possession of papers, the defendant took out a summons to change the venue, and appeared by counsel to support the application. In the course of the proceedings counsel admitted that the client had the papers:—Held, that this admission was rightly received at the trial of the cause, as a statement made by counsel in discharge of his functions as counsel relevant to the matter at issue, and made for the purpose of influencing the judge to take a step in favour of his client. Id.

When counsel makes before the court or a judge a statement, or does an act in the presence of the attorney on the record, or any authorized person who represents him, and the statement or the act is not repudiated by the attorney or his representative, that amounts to an assent to or adoption of it, and it becomes the statement or act of the attorney. Id.

Counsel Withdrawing from Case in Favour of Client.—When a party appears in court by counsel, and the case is on, and the counsel has been fully seised of it, his authority cannot be revoked by his client so as to give the client a right himself to address the court. But if counsel is not so seised, as where, upon a motion, the hearing has proceeded no further than the reading of affidavits, and the counsel has addressed no arguments to the court, he may at the instance of his client be permitted to withdraw and the client himself may be heard. Reg. v. Maybury, 11 L. T. 566.

Counsel Retained but not Briefed.—A counsel, to whom a retainer has been given, no brief having been delivered, cannot withdraw the record. Doe d. Crake v. Brown, 5 C. & P. 315.

Evidence of Counsel as to Proceedings formerly conducted by Him.—A party to a cause cannot object to his counsel in a former transaction, out of which the action arose, stating the condition of a document at the time it was produced by the opposite party. Brown v. Foster, 1 H. & N. 736; 26 L. J., Ex. 249; 3 Jur., N. S. 245.

Where, therefore, in an action for false imprisonment, the question was whether the plaintiff had been guilty of embezzlement, and this depended on whether an entry in his employer's books, stating the receipt of the money he was charged with embezzling, was inserted by him before or after he was taken before the justices:—Held, that the counsel who attended for the plaintiff might be called, on the part of the defendant, to shew that the book did not then contain the entry in question. Ib.

Agreement made by Counsel without Authority and out of Court.]—A communication to or by the counsel of A., from or to the attorney of B., respecting the proceedings in a cause between A. and B., which takes place out of court, is not binding upon A. Richardson v. Peto, 1 M. & G. 96; 9 D. P. C. 73.

Where, therefore, pending a rule nisi, the attorney served with the rule inferred from a conversation out of court with the counsel who had moved the rule, that the latter would forbear to move to make it absolute for a certain time, and the rule was made absolute by that counsel within the time mentioned, the court refused to re-open the rule. Ib.

How Compromise enforced.]—To support an action against a party, founded on an undertaking entered into by him (after having appeared and pleaded to an indictment for an assault) to do an act in consideration of the prosecutor consenting to a nominal fine only being imposed on him, the indorsement to that effect of the terms of the agreement between the parties on the brief signed by the counsel on both sides is not sufficient to be left to the jury, without proving the assent of the defendant. Elworthy v. Bird, 13 Price, 222; 9 Moore, 430; 2 Bing. 258; Tam. 38.

V. FEES.

Right to.]—A barrister cannot sue for his fees upon any implied contract for payment. Hobart v. Butler, 9 Ir. C. L. R. 127—Ex.

But they are recoverable by an express contract. Ib. S. P., Egan v. Kensington Union (Guardians), 3 Q. B. 935, n.; 3 G. & D. 204.

An attorney has no implied authority to bind his client, by an undertaking to a barrister that the client will pay him, if he receipts, for the purpose of taxation, fees then due. Ib.

A subsequent receipt out of court by the client of taxed costs, which include those fees, will not, without more, make him liable to the barrister for money had and received. Ib.

The master having reduced counsel's fees, on taxation between party and party, not because the amount was excessive, but because the fee had been increased at the instance of the counsel, the court referred it back to the master to review his taxation as to those items. O'Brien v. Cantuelli, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 221.

It would be illegal for the bar, as a body, to fix a minimum fee for any particular class of business; but any individual member of the bar may decline to take a fee less than a certain amount. Ib.

—When Paid by Client to Solicitor.]—The court will not interfere to compel an attorney in a cause to pay counsel's fees which are unpaid, even though it is alleged that the attorney has received from the client the money to pay them with. Angell, In re, 29 L. J., C. P. 227; 6 Jur., N. S. 1373.

Conveyancing counsel, having been employed by a solicitor in the ordinary way, received from the solicitor a part of his fees. The client had in fact paid to the solicitor the whole of his bill of costs:—Held, that the counsel could not recover the balance from the client. Mostyn v. Mostyn, Barry, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 457; 39 L. J., Ch. 780; 22 L. T. 461; 18 W. R. 657.

The fact of the payment by the client to the solicitor was immaterial, as a solicitor cannot pledge his client's credit to counsel, and the part payment therefore by him could not constitute a promise by the client to pay. Ib.

—And Solicitor subsequently becoming Bankrupt.]—A barrister was allowed to prove for fees in bankruptcy where the solicitor had actually received them before his bankruptcy. Hall, In re, 2 Jur., N. S. 1076.

On a Commission.]—A barrister has a lien for fees on a commission. Smith v. Hallen, 2 F. & F. 678.

Retainers.]—According to the ordinary practice of the court, retainer fees for both the leading and junior counsel are allowed on taxation. The Neera, 5 P. D. 118; 42 L. T. 743; 28 W. R. 816.

—Taxation.]—A retainer, on behalf of a defendant, was left at the Dublin residence of a Queen's counsel, then absent in London, attending Parliament. The cause being in the special jury list of causes for trial on Monday, the 23rd June, the plaintiff's attorney, not knowing of the defendant's retainer, sent a brief to London to the Queen's counsel, who, in ignorance of the previous retainer, sent a reply that he would be in court on the following Wednesday morning. The cause was unexpectedly called on Monday, and a postponement having been refused, was proceeded with, and concluded the following day. Counsel did not arrive until after its termination on Tuesday, and he was in court the following morning, and subsequently returned the defendant's retaining fee. The plaintiff having obtained a verdict, the master allowed the above brief and fee, on taxation, against the defendant:—Held, on a motion to review the taxation, that these items had been properly allowed, inasmuch as at the time of the delivery of the brief there was a bona fide intention on the part of the plaintiff's attorney that the Queen's counsel should attend the trial on behalf of the plaintiff, and a reasonable probability of his being able to do so; and that the fact of his not having attended did not alter the case. Taylor v. Clarke, 13 Ir. C. L. R. 571.

The master, in taxation between party and party, should only allow the usual and accustomed fee payable on each particular class of business, though a larger fee had been paid to counsel. O'Brien v. Cantuelli, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 221.

Refreshers.]—The taxing officer having disallowed refresher fees to counsel, in a case where the hearing commenced in the afternoon of one day, and was concluded at noon of the next, but the time occupied was less than one day's time, the court refused to interfere with his discretion. The Neera, 5 P. D. 118; 42 L. T. 743; 28 W. R. 816.

When the trial of an action commences on one day and is concluded on the next day, refreshers to counsel will not be allowed unless the trial occupied in the whole more than one day's sitting, i.e., six hours. Brown v. Sewell, 16 Ch. D. 617; 44 L. T. 41; 29 W. R. 295.

Master's Decision as to Counsel's Fees.—The Taxing-Master's decision as to the amount of counsel's fees will not be interfered with unless a gross mistake is made. Id.

Amount of—what Allowable.—See COSTS.

Receipt for.—It is not necessary to affix a receipt stamp on a brief where counsel signs his name, acknowledging the payment of the fee. Beavan, In re, 23 L. J., Ch. 536—L. J.

Promises to Pay.—A promise made by a client to pay money to a counsel for his advocacy, whether made before, or during, or after the litigation, has no binding effect. Kennedy v. Brown, 13 C. B., N. S. 677; 32 L. J., C. P. 137; 9 Jur., N. S. 119; 7 L. T. 626; 11 W. R. 284.

The relation of counsel and client renders the parties mutually incapable of making any contract of hiring and service concerning advocacy in litigation. Id.

A conveyance of a large estate by a client to a barrister, who had been successfully engaged for her in recovering the estate, in consideration of his services, was set aside for undue influence:—Held, that such a deed could not be supported, either on a previous contract to pay her 20,000*l.* or as executed in performance of a moral obligation. Brown v. Kennedy, 33 Beav. 133; 33 L. J., Ch. 71; 9 Jur., N. S. 1163; 9 L. T. 302. Affirmed on appeal, 33 L. J., Ch. 342; 10 Jur., N. S. 141; 9 L. T., 736; 12 W. R. 360; 4 De G., J. & S. 217.

Special Contract with Client—Action for Breach not Maintainable.—A barrister and his client are mutually incapable of entering into a binding contract of hiring with respect to the services of the former as an advocate. This incapacity of contract is reciprocal, and is an answer to any action brought, whether by client or advocate, upon such an alleged agreement. The principle is of universal application in all cases where the relation of counsel and client exists; it extends to an alleged engagement by counsel to give exclusive attention to the defence of a prisoner standing his trial upon a criminal charge; and to a case in which the client has entered into an express agreement with the barrister to pay special fees named by the barrister, for his exclusive attendance, in excess of the fees which would be ordinarily payable to counsel for the contemplated services. Brown v. Kennedy, ante, followed, and applied to the case of an action against a barrister for breach of contract. Robertson v. McDonough, 14 Cox, C. C. 469; 6 L. R., Ir. 433.

Clerks'.—Fees to counsel's clerks are mere gratuities, for which they have no legal demand. Cotton, Ex parte, 9 Beav. 107; 10 Jur. 84. See Theed v. Beere, 28 L. J., Ch. 782; 5 Jur., N. S. 381.

But see Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Order LXV., r. 51.

VI. PRACTICE IN COURT.

As to Motions.—As a general rule, no counsel will be heard to move twice on the same day. Hollis v. Hoscason, 19 L. J., Ex. 269; 14 Jur. 463.

An application by counsel on the part of the crown to set down a cause for argument, does not count as a motion so as to prevent his moving another case on that day. Lewis v. Rogers, 16 Jur. 1024—Ex.

Upon special paper days counsel cannot bring on a contested motion when called upon to move for his argument. Palmer v. Wagstaffe, 22 L. J., Ex. 295; 17 Jur. 581.

It is the practice of the Bail Court, on the last day of term, that the junior barrister seated on the back row should be called upon to move first, both on the first and second rounds of motion. Anon., 2 D., N. S. 929; 7 Jur. 399.

The practice of the Bail Court on the last day of term is, to commence by calling on the bar in the back rows twice round, not alone in motions of course and rules nisi, but in all motions whatsoever. Anon., 7 Jur., 725.

When a Party to the Proceedings.—A barrister who is a party to an appeal in the House of Lords, must elect to conduct his own case or to have it conducted by counsel. New Brunswick and Canada Railway and Land Company v. Conybeare, 9 H. L. Cas. 711.

I. PROOF OF BASTARDY.

1. ABSENCE OR NON-ACCESS.

Presumption in Favour of Legitimacy—How Rebutted.—Husband and wife, after living together for ten years, and having one child, agreed to separate. They accordingly afterwards lived apart, but within such distance as afforded them opportunities of sexual intercourse, the husband not being impotent:—Held, that the presumption of law in favour of the legitimacy of a child begotten and born of the wife during the separation may be rebutted, not only by evidence to shew that the husband had not sexual intercourse with her, but also by evidence of their conduct; such as that the wife was living in adultery, that she concealed the birth of the child from the husband, and declared to him that she never had such child; that the husband disclaimed all knowledge of the child, and acted, up to his death, as if no such child was in existence; and also, that the wife's paramour aided in concealing the child, reared and educated it as his own, and left it all his property by his will. Morris v. Davies, 5 C. & F. 163; 1 Jur. 911.

When husband and wife have been in such a situation that access may have taken place, the presumption of law is in favour of the issue, but may be rebutted on strong evidence. If access is proved, no inquiry can be made whether the husband or any other person be the parent. Lord Coke's doctrine of "inter quatuor maria" is exploded. Ib.

On a trial as to the legitimacy of children begotten when the husband and wife were living separate, the fact that they had opportunities of access is not conclusive of the legitimacy; but the presumption of intercourse may be rebutted by circumstances. Reg. v. Mansfield, 1 Q. B. 441; 1 G. & D. 7; 5 Jur. 505.

If there was an opportunity of access, but the wife was notoriously living in adultery, it does not necessarily follow that a child begotten while such opportunity existed was not the husband's. Ib.

A child born of a married woman is, in the first instance, presumed to be legitimate. The presumption, thus established by law, is not to be rebutted by circumstances which only create doubt and suspicion, but it may be wholly removed by shewing that the husband was—first, incompetent; secondly, entirely absent, so as to have no intercourse or communication of any kind with the mother; thirdly, entirely absent at the period during which the child must, in the course of nature, have been begotten; fourthly, only present under such circumstances as afford clear and satisfactory proof that there was no sexual intercourse. Such evidence as this puts an end to the question, and establishes the illegitimacy of a child of a married woman. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 9 Beav. 552.

It is, however, very difficult to conclude against the legitimacy in cases where there is no disability, and where some society or communication is continued between husband and wife during the time in question, so as to have afforded opportunities of sexual intercourse; and in cases where such opportunities have occurred, and in which any one of two or more men may have been the father, whatever probabilities may exist, no evidence can be admitted to shew that any man, other than the husband, may have been, or probably was, the father of the wife's child. Throughout the investigation the presumption in favour of legitimacy is to have its weight and influence, and the evidence against it ought to be strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive. Ib.

The presumption of law arising from the fact of husband and wife sleeping together, is irresistible as to the legitimacy of a child of the wife, unless there is clear and satisfactory evidence that some physical incapacity existed. Legge v. Edmonds, 25 L. J., Ch. 125.

Where such physical incapacity is satisfactorily made out according to the opinions of the medical witnesses, evidence of the adultery of the wife is still an important ingredient in determining the legitimacy of the child; because, if the wife were of irreproachable character, it would go far to modify the opinion as to the husband's incapacity. Ib.

A child of a married woman must be presumed to be the child of the husband, unless it is proved beyond all reasonable or serious doubt that no sexual intercourse could have taken place at the time within which the husband could be the father. The onus probandi lies entirely on the part of those who wish to shew the illegitimacy. Plowes v. Bossey, 31 L. J., Ch. 681; 8 Jur., N. S. 352; 10 W. R. 332.

A. was summoned under 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 3, for wilfully refusing to maintain his child. He and his wife had lived separately for about three years before the birth of the child, though in the same town; she led a disreputable and profligate life, and he always avoided her, and she had been seen as a prostitute in company with several men, and the child was born in gaol. The justices dismissed the summons, holding that the legal presumption that the husband was the father of the child was rebutted by this evidence:—Held, that they came to a right conclusion. Sibbet v. Ainsley, 3 L. T. 583.

If the jury is satisfied that intercourse took place between the husband and wife at such times as in the course of nature to account for the birth of the child, such child must be taken to be the husband's child, although during the same period other men may have had intercourse with the mother. Wright v. Holdgate, 3 C. & K. 158.

Non-Access.—Where a husband, after a long absence, did not rejoin his wife till the 24th November, 1849, and when she, nevertheless, produced a full-grown child on the 18th May, 1850:—Held, that he could not have been the father. Heathcote's Divorce Bill, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 535.

Non-access of the husband need not be proved during the whole period of the wife's pregnancy: it is sufficient if the circumstances of the case shew a natural impossibility that the husband could be the father, as where he had access only a fortnight before the birth. Rex v. Luff, 8 East, 193.

If a husband is found to have gone beyond seas above two years before the birth of a child borne by his wife, she remaining at home, the conclusion is irresistible that such child is a bastard. Rex v. Maidstone, 12 East, 550.

But the illegitimacy of a child born of a married woman is established beyond all dispute, by evidence of her living in adultery at the time when the child was begotten, and of her husband then residing in another part of the kingdom, so as to make access impossible. Saye and Sele (Barony), 1 H. L. Cas. 507.

2. EVIDENCE OF MOTHER OR FATHER.

Of Mother.—On a question of legitimacy, it appeared that the child had been born three months after the marriage. It was suggested that the wife had not seen the husband until immediately before the marriage, and that at the period of conception he was married to another person. In cross-examination of the mother it was proposed to ask her, "How long she had known her husband before her marriage?" This question was objected to, but the court allowed her to be asked, "When did you first become acquainted with your husband?" and she answered, twelve months before her marriage; the court would not permit this subject to be further pursued. Anon. v. Anon., 22 Beav. 481; 23 Beav. 273.

The declaration of a mother is not admissible to prove non-access on the part of her husband; but where non-access has been established aliunde, the declaration of the wife is admissible to prove the paternity of the child. Legge v. Edmonds, 25 L. J., Ch. 125.

The mother of a child wrote a letter to the alleged father, declaring that he was the father of her child, which was born three months after the death of her husband. It did not appear that this letter was ever received by the person to whom it was addressed, nor even that she had ever voluntarily parted with the possession of it:—Held, that the letter was not admissible as evidence of the conduct of the mother. Id.

On an issue to try the legitimacy of a party born of a married woman, since dead, declarations by her that he was not the son of her husband, but of another man, are not admissible; nor are such declarations of the husband admissible. Cope v. Cope, 5 C. & P. 604; 1 M. & Rob. 269.

A woman cannot give evidence of the non-access of her husband, to bastardize her issue, though he is dead at the time of her examination as a witness. Rex v. Kea, 11 East, 132; S. P., Goodright d. Sterens v. Moss, Cowp. 591.

But the mother is a competent witness to prove the illegitimacy of her children. Rex v. Bramley, 6 T. R. 330; S. P., Standen v. Standen, 6 T. R. 331; Peake, 32.

Of Father.—On the trial of an issue as to the legitimacy of a child born of a married woman, the evidence of the husband is not admissible for the purpose of proving access, or for the purpose of proving any collateral fact which would tend to shew that he had opportunities of access. Wright v. Holdgate, 3 C. & K. 158.

Nor is evidence of expressions of feeling by the wife towards the husband admissible. Id.

Description of Child on Baptismal Register.]

—But a baptismal register, in which the party is described as the illegitimate son of his mother, is admissible on the trial of such an issue. Cope v. Cope, 5 C. & P. 604; 1 M. & Rob. 269.

II. AFFILIATION.

1. JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES.

To issue Summons.—If a woman goes to, and lodges at a place for the purpose of applying to the magistrates there, for an order of affiliation, intending to leave the place as soon as she has got the order, she having at the time no other residence, and not having gone for any fraudulent or improper purpose, she is resident at the place within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2, which requires that application for such an order must be made to justices acting for the petty sessional division within which the woman resides. Reg. v. Hughes, Dears. & B. C. C. 188; 26 L. J., M. C. 133; 3 Jur., N. S. 448.

A summons was issued by a justice to the putative father of a bastard child upon an application made by the mother before the birth of the child. No written deposition was made at the time of the application. The parties appeared at the petty sessions according to the exigency of the summons, and the case was heard without objection, when the father swore wilfully and falsely as to a material fact:—Held, that the appearance at the petty sessions and the hearing without objection raised, cured the defect in the application for the summons, if there was any, and the justices had jurisdiction to hear the parties before them, and that the father was rightly convicted of perjury. Reg. v. Fletcher, 1 L. R., C. C. 320; 40 L. J., M. C. 123; 24 L. T. 742; 19 W. R. 781; 12 Cox, C. C. 77.

A woman, who has no settled place of residence, may make application to the justices of the division in which for the time being she happens to be for a summons. Lawrence v. Inghire, 20 L. T. 391.

If there is any corroboration whatever of the woman's testimony, the effect of such corroboration is for the justices alone, and the court will not interfere with their decision upon it. Id.

A woman having applied on two occasions for an order of affiliation to justices of the petty sessional division in which she had been residing with her parents, and had been refused after a hearing on the merits, took lodgings in a neighbouring borough, "because," as she deposed, "people said if she came there, she would have a better chance;" and when she had been there nearly a month, she applied to the borough justices and obtained an order of affiliation:—Held, that the object of the woman's removal was to obtain a new tribunal, and, therefore, that she did not reside within the borough so as to give the borough justices jurisdiction, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2. Reg. v. Myott, 32 L. J. M. C. 138; 7 L. T. 785; 11 W. R. 424.

—After lapse of more than Twelve Months.]

—A single woman, having been delivered of a bastard child, within twelve months obtained a summons upon the putative father; but he having absconded, it was not served. More than twelve months after the birth, the justice who issued the summons died; and the putative father having returned, she applied to another justice, and a summons was issued and served, and the justices made an order of maintenance, which recited the preceding facts:—Held, that the second justice had no power, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2, to issue a summons, and therefore the order was bad. Reg. v. Pickford, 1 B. & S. 77; 30 L. J., M. C. 133; 7 Jur., N. S. 568; 4 L. T. 210; 9 W. R. 634.

The mother of a bastard child, born on the 20th March, 1868, applied to a justice on the 18th April, 1868, for a summons against the putative father. A summons was issued on the same day, but never served, as he could not be found by the process-server to whom the summons was given. On the 14th January, 1870, about a fortnight after the mother had found out his address, she applied for and obtained another summons, which was served on him, and he appeared thereto, and, being examined on oath, committed the perjury assigned.—Held, that the justices had jurisdiction to hear the complaints, although at the time of service of the summons more than twelve months had elapsed from the birth of the child. Reg. v. Chugg, 11 Cox, C. C. 558; 22 L. T. 556.

To make Orders.]—On an application by a mother of a bastard child for an order of maintenance, it appeared that the father had contracted to pay the mother 5s. per week for the support of the child, and had paid her in advance sufficient to maintain the child for two years; he also paid her 10l., in consideration of which she agreed to release him from all payments in respect of the child. The magistrate was of opinion that he had no discretion in the matter, and made an order:—Held, that the payment by the father in advance, and the agreement by the mother, were no bar to the jurisdiction of the justices to make an order, but that they ought to take them into consideration with the other circumstances, and exercise their discretion as to making the order. Follitt v. Koetzow, 2 El. & El. 730; 29 L. J., M. C. 128; 6 Jur., N. S. 651; 2 L. T. 178; 8 W. R. 432.

A person having been summoned before justices was adjudged to be the putative father of a bastard child, and ordered to provide for its maintenance, according to the Bastardy Law Amendment Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, s. 3. The child was born in Cornwall. The father was an Irishman, and the mother an Englishwoman, and the connexion which resulted in the birth of the child took place in Ireland. The summons was duly served on the father:—Held, that, the child having become chargeable in England, the justices had jurisdiction, and the order was good. Hampton v. Rickard, 43 L. J., M. C. 133; 30 L. T. 636.

— On Second Application after Conviction of one of Defendant's Witnesses for Perjury.]—Where, after a bastardy summons has been dismissed on the merits, one of the defendant's witnesses is convicted of perjury in the evidence given by him on that summons, justices have jurisdiction to make a bastardy order on a second summons. Reg. v. Gawnt, 2 L. R., Q. B. 466; 36 L. J., M. C. 89; 16 L. T. 379; 15 W. R. 1172; 8 B. & S. 365.

— Child Born on the High Seas.]—According to the rule that a ship on the high seas is part of the territory of the state to which she belongs, a bastard of which a woman has been delivered on board an English ship is to be deemed born in England, and the mother is entitled to an order of affiliation against the putative father resident in England. Marshall v. Murgatroyd, 6 L. R., Q. B. 31; 40 L. J., M. C. 7; 23 L. T. 393; 19 W. R. 72.

— After Death of Mother.]—The evidence of the mother of a bastard child, who is an applicant for an affiliation order against the putative father, is necessary at the hearing of the summons before justices sitting in petty sessions under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 101, s. 3. Reg. v. Armistage, 7 L. R., Q. B. 773; 42 L. J., M. C. 15; 27 L. T. 41; 20 W. R. 1015.

Therefore, if the mother dies after making her application for a summons, and before the hearing of the summons at petty sessions, the justices have no jurisdiction to make an order thereon. Id.

Semble, it may be otherwise on the hearing of an appeal against an affiliation order under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 6, if the mother dies after the hearing of a summons at petty sessions, and if she has been examined in the presence of the putative father and might have been cross-examined by him at the petty sessions. Id.

When Mother is a Married Woman.]—An order may be made upon the putative father for maintenance of a bastard child born of a married woman, though the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2, speaks only of any single woman. Reg. v. Collingwood, 12 Q. B. 681; 3 New Sess. Cas. 252; 17 L. J., M. C. 138; 12 Jur. 750.

And although the mother is a married woman, living apart from her husband. Grimes, Ex parte, 22 L. J., M. C. 153; nom. Reg. v. Pilkington, 2 El. & Bl. 546; 17 Jur. 554.

When Mother Married after Birth of Child.]—The 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, s. 3, enacts, that "any single woman who may be with child, or who may be delivered of a bastard child, may either before the birth or at any time within twelve months from the birth of such child . . . make application for a summons against the putative father:—Held, that no such application can be made when the mother has married since the birth of the child, and is at the time of the application living with her husband. Stacey v. Lintell, 4 Q. B. D. 291; 48 L. J., M. C. 108; 40 L. T. 553; 27 W. R. 551.

A bastardy order under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, cannot be made where the mother has married since the birth of the child, and is at the time of the application living with her husband, although she took out a summons against the putative father before her marriage, and was prevented from serving it by his default. Tozer v. Lake, 4 C. P. D. 322.

The justices have a discretion under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, to order weekly payments for the maintenance of a bastard child for a less period than the maximum period given by s. 5 of the act, and consequently, where the justices made an order for weekly payments until the child attained the age of sixteen or the mother married, such order was held not to be in force after the marriage of the mother. Pearson v. Heys, 7 Q. B. D. 260; 50 L. J., M. C. 124; 45 L. T. 680; 30 W. R. 156; 45 J. P. 730.

An order obtained by a single woman for the maintenance of a bastard child can be enforced against the putative father after the marriage of the mother. Sotheron v. Scott, 6 Q. B. D. 518; 50 L. J., M. C. 56; 44 L. T. 522; 29 W. R. 666; 45 J. P. 423.

— Though Husband capable of Maintaining.—An order obtained by a single woman for the maintenance of a bastard child can be enforced against the putative father after the marriage of the mother although her husband is able to maintain the child. Hardy v. Atherston, 7 Q. B. D. 264; 50 L. J., M. C. 105; 44 L. T. 776; 29 W. R. 788; 45 J. P. 683.

— Order until the Child attains Thirteen or Mother Marries—Power to make second Order after Death of Husband.—Upon the hearing of an affiliation summons the justices made an order under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, for the payment of a weekly sum until the child should attain the age of thirteen years or die, or the mother should marry. The mother married, and her husband died before the child attained the age of thirteen. The mother took out a fresh summons upon which the justices made an order for payment of a weekly allowance.—Held (Hawkins, J., doubting), that the matter was res judicata, and the second order was bad. Williams v. Davies, 11 Q. B. D. 74; 52 L. J., M. C. 87; 47 J. P. 581.

— Subsequent Agreement to release Father—Enforcement of Order.—An order had been obtained by the respondent ordering the appellant to contribute to the support of her bastard child. Subsequently to the making of the order, the respondent, in consideration of a sum of money, agreed to release and indemnify the appellant for ever from all actions, suits, and proceedings in respect of the child.—Held, that this agreement was no bar to the jurisdiction of the justices to enforce the order on the application of the mother. Griffiths v. Evans, 46 L. T. 417; 30 W. R. 427.

— Arrears—Discretion of Justices to Enforce Payment.—By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 5, all money payable under a bastardy order "shall be due and payable to the mother of the bastard child in respect of such time and so long as she lives . . ." By 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, s. 4, if it be made to appear to any one justice that any sum to be paid in pursuance of such order has not been paid, such justice may, by warrant, cause the putative father to be brought up before any two justices, and in case he neglect or refuse payment they may, by warrant, direct the sum to be recovered by distress, and may detain him until the return to the warrant of distress; but if on the return, or by admission, it appear that no sufficient distress can be had, they may, if they see fit, cause him to be committed.—Held, by Grove, J., that the enforcement by the justices of the payment of sums due under such order is discretionary; by Huddleston, B., that the justices are bound to enforce it. Davies v. Evans, 9 Q. B. D. 238; 51 L. J., M. C. 132; 46 L. T. 418; 30 W. R. 548; 46 J. P. 471.

Although under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3, not more than thirteen weeks' arrears of the weekly payments accruing due after the making of an order of affiliation can be recovered, yet there is no such limit with reference to the sums ordered to be paid with respect to the period anterior to the period of making such order. Reg. v. Curme, Faber, Ex parte, 18 L. T. 559.

A. applied to justices, in 1863, for a summons against B. as the father of her bastard child, born within two months. B. having absconded, he was not served, but having returned in 1868 he was duly served, and upon the hearing the justices made an order, and directed that he should pay 2s. 6d. per week from the date of the woman's application in 1863, amounting to the sum of 18l. 18s.—Held, that they were justified in so doing, and that the order was good. Ib.

— Appeal to Quarter Sessions when no Bar to Proceedings before Justices.—Upon the hearing of an appeal to quarter sessions against an order of affiliation, it appeared that the respondent and her witnesses were not present, having mistaken the day of hearing, and her counsel applied for an adjournment till the following morning, offering to pay the costs of the day. The appellant having declined to accede to this proposal, the sessions directed the case to proceed, and quashed the order, no evidence having been adduced on the part of the respondent.—Held, that the order of quarter sessions was not a decision upon the merits, and that fresh proceedings in respect of the same matter might be taken before justices. Reg. v. May, or Essex JJ., 5 Q. B. D. 382; 49 L. J., M. C. 67; 28 W. R. 918; 42 L. T. 772, sub nom. Reg. v. Phillips.

35 & 36 Vict. c. 65—Bastardy Act—Time of coming into Operation of.—The 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, s. 3, provides for an application for an order of affiliation by any single woman who may be delivered of a bastard child "after the passing of this act." The act, which came into immediate operation, received the royal assent on the 10th of August, 1872.—Held, that an order of affiliation might be made under the act in respect of a child born at any time of the day, on the 10th of August, 1872, inasmuch as the act in contemplation of law for this purpose came into effect from the commencement of the day on which it received the royal assent. Tomlinson v. Bullock, 4 Q. B. D. 230; 48 L. J., M. C. 95; 40 L. T. 459; 27 W. R. 552.

2. SECOND APPLICATION.

— When it can be made.—Where justices in petty sessions have heard an application for an order of affiliation, and refused to make an order, on the ground that the evidence of the mother was not corroborated in some material particular, the mother is not barred from making a second application within the period limited by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2. Reg. v. Machen or Matchen, 3 New Sess. Cas. 629; 14 Q. B. 74; 18 L. J., M. C. 213; S. P., Reg. v. Gloucestershire (Justices), White, In re, 13 Jur. 765.

Where an application for an order is dismissed not upon its merits, the woman is not barred from making another application. Reg. v. Harrington, 9 L. T. 721; 12 W. R. 420.

A dismissal upon the ground of there being no sufficient corroborative evidence is not a dismissal upon the merits. Ib.

The mother of a bastard child applied to the justices at a petty sessional division of W., in the county of O., for an order on the putative father, which was refused. She subsequently removed into the county of B., and there made a second application, when the justices made an order. Against this order the putative father appealed, but it was confirmed by the quarter sessions:—Held, that the petty sessions had jurisdiction on such second application, and were bound to hear the complaint; and that the order of the quarter sessions in confirmation was correct, it not appearing that the former application was dismissed on the merits; and that the court could not review either the decision of the justices or of the quarter sessions. Reg. v. Buckinghamshire (Justices), 3 New Sess. Cas. 500; 18 L. J., M. C. 113; 13 Jur. 1053.

Held, also, that if evidence had been adduced that the former application had been dismissed on the merits, it would have been a good answer. Id.

Order on first Application must be Abandoned.—A woman applied at a petty sessions for an order. The case was adjourned, and an order made at the adjourned petty sessions on the putative father, who appealed to the quarter sessions. Before those sessions were held, the attorney for the mother gave notice of abandoning his order, and tendered to the appellant's attorney a sum for costs, which he accepted, supposing the sum to be offered in discharge only of the costs of the adjournment, and the sum being in fact much below the whole amount of costs. The residue being unpaid, the mother's attorney requested the justices in petty sessions to rehear the case for the purpose of making another order. On their refusal a motion for a mandamus refused, because the abandonment had not been completed by replacing the appellant in his original situation, and therefore the order was still in force. Reg. v. Hinchcliff, 10 Q. B. 356; 16 L. J., M. C. 78; 11 Jur. 514.

When really forming Part of Original Application.—A woman, having been delivered of a bastard child, applied, within twelve months of the birth, to a justice for a summons upon the putative father. She (not being on oath) stated that she had learned that the putative father was in America, upon which the justice, without directly refusing the application, declined to issue a summons then. More than twelve months from the application she discovered that the putative father was in England; upon which she obtained and served a summons from the same justice, and the justices, upon this application, made an order of maintenance upon him. The summons professed to be on a renewed application:—Held, that the order was good, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, Sched. No. 42; the whole proceeding being in effect founded on the original application, and it not being necessary that the summons should issue at the time when the application is made. Potts v. Cambridge, 8 El. & Bl. 847; 27 L. J., M. C. 62; 4 Jur., N. S. 72.

A was indicted for disobeying an order of justices, adjudging him to be the putative father of a bastard child, dated the 6th May. A previous order had been made on the 1st January, but, in consequence of errors and omissions on the face of it, it was a bad order, and the magistrates, who had made the order, executed a supersedeas of it:—Held, that, as the first order was a nullity, the magistrates had jurisdiction to entertain a second application, and make a new order. Reg.

v. Brippy, 3 New Sess. Cas. 591; 2 C. & K. 962; T. & M. 109; 1 Den. C. C. 416; 18 L. J., M. C. 157; 13 Jur. 520.

An application was made for a bastardy summons. It was heard and dismissed on an objection to the form of the summons, without discussion of the merits. A second summons was issued without any new application, and an order made upon the putative father:—Held, that the order was properly made on the original application, as the dismissal of the first summons on the objection to the form of the summons did not exhaust the application. Reg. v. Lancashire (Justices), 29 L. T. 886; 22 W. R. 329.

Evidence of Order having been made on Original Application.—Under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2, an application was made by a woman for an order on a person whom she alleged to be the father of a bastard child, of which she had been delivered within twelve calendar months before the application. An objection was made, that an order had been antecedently made on the same complaint, and it was the duty of the applicant to shew that the previous order had been quashed, but not on the merits, in order to entitle her to apply again under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 4. No evidence was tendered to shew that such prior order existed, but the justices decided, nevertheless, that the complainant was bound to prove that the order was quashed for a defect in form; and, on her failing in such proof, they refused to hear the application:—Held, that the justices were not at liberty to assume the existence of the former order, and that a mandamus should issue, commanding them to hear the complaint. Reg. v. Bridgman, or Reg. v. Suffolk (Justices), 2 New Sess. Cas. 232; 15 L. J., M. C. 44; 10 Jur. 159, 738.

A former decision upon the merits in favour of a putative father is an answer to an application by the mother of a bastard child for an order of maintenance; but the petty sessions and the quarter sessions, on appeal, have jurisdiction to inquire whether or not such former decision was in point of fact come to, and if the proof in their estimation fails, to make the order, and the court will not interfere to review their decision, being upon a question of fact within their jurisdiction. Reg. v. Robinson, 6 D. & L. 295.

3. SUMMONS TO APPEAR.

Within what Time Application for, must be made.—An application for a summons for an order of affiliation, must be made within twelve calendar months after the birth of the child (unless money has been paid for its maintenance within that period); and when such summons has been heard and dismissed, no other summons can issue founded upon the same application. Reg. v. Thomas, 8 L. T. 466.

On the 26th March, 1860, A. applied for a summons against B. in respect of a child born on the 15th November, 1859. This summons was heard on the 30th April, and was dismissed on the ground of the want of sufficient corroborative evidence. Subsequently, in December, 1862, another summons was issued, and upon the hearing on the 26th an order was made. The order itself purported to be founded upon the application made on the 26th of March, 1860:—Held, that the order was bad, for that the application of the 26th March, 1860, was spent by the hearing and judgment on the 30th April, and that being so, there was no application to support the order within twelve months of the birth of the child. Ib.

Service—Sufficiency of.]—The summons must be left at his present place of abode, if he has any at the time of the service; at his last place of abode, if he has none. Reg. v. Evans, 4 New Sess. Cas. 191; 1 L., M. & P. 357; 19 L. J., M. C. 151.

Proof of the proper service of the summons is essential to give the justices jurisdiction. Ib.

If the summons is left at a place which the person leaving it believes to be the last place of abode of the party summoned, and gives evidence of such service of the summons before the justices at petty sessions, the latter have prima facie jurisdiction to make the order of maintenance, but the party summoned is at liberty to shew that the summons was not served at his last place of abode, and if the fact is proved, the court will grant a certiorari to bring the order up to quash it, as being made without jurisdiction. Ib.

A summons duly issued by a justice against a putative father of an English bastard child was served on him in Scotland, where he had gone to reside. He did not attend before the justices in petty sessions. On proof of this service in Scotland, and that it was in sufficient time to have enabled him to attend; the justices heard the case, and made an affiliation and maintenance order. The order having been brought up by certiorari:—Held, that service out of England and Wales was not due service, and the order was quashed. Reg. v. Lightfoot, 6 El. & Bl. 822; 25 L. J., M. C. 115; 2 Jur., N. S. 786; 4 W. R. 655.

A person, expecting proceedings against him as the putative father of a bastard child, left his father's house on the 13th July, and went to reside with a farmer in another county, whom he assisted in his farm, having, as he deposed, no intention of returning to reside with his father:—Held, that service of a summons at his father's house on the 29th July was a good service at his last place of abode, within 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3. Reg. v. Higham, 7 El. & Bl. 557; 26 L. J., M. C. 116; 3 Jur., N. S. 691.

An affiliation summons against H. was served at the house of his father. An attorney appeared to the summons before the justices for the petty sessional division of B., in the county, representing himself to be authorized to appear for H. In fact, he was retained and paid by H.'s father; he examined and cross-examined witnesses. An order was drawn up purporting to be made on the complaint of the mother, "residing at M. within this county," and to be made as on a contested summons, the defendant appearing by attorney. M. was not only in the county, but in the petty sessional division of B., as was well known to everyone; but nothing was said about it. H. deposed that, a few days before a summons was served, he, anticipating annoyance from the woman, left his father's house, which had up to that time been his abode, without any intention to return, and was not informed of the proceedings before the justices. A rule to quash the order having been obtained, on the ground that the attorney was not authorized to appear, and that the order did not mention that M. was within the division:—Held, that the court would infer that H., leaving his abode avowedly for a temporary motive, did intend to return when the motive ceased, notwithstanding his deposition to the contrary; and that, such being taken to be the fact, the summons was duly served; and that, all proper to be proved in an unopposed summons having in fact appeared before the justices, and the state of proof being such as would justify them in drawing up an order, stating M. to be in the division of B., the omissions and mistakes were amendable under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 7. Ib.

Under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3, justices have jurisdiction to make an order of bastardy upon the putative father, on proof that the summons mentioned in s. 2 was left at his last place of abode, notwithstanding he was abroad at the time of the service and never heard of it. Reg. v. Damarell, 3 L. R., Q. B. 50; 37 L. J., M. C. 21; 8 B. & S. 659.

—Affidavit denying Service, but not denying Truth of Charge.]—D. had left England and proceeded to America; a few days after his departure a summons in bastardy was left at his last place of abode in England, and an order of affiliation was subsequently made upon him; the order recited that he had been duly served with the summons. Two years afterwards he returned to England, and applied for a certiorari, upon an affidavit which disclosed these facts, but did not deny the truth of the charge:—Held, that the proceedings were regular on the face of them; and as there was no affidavit of merits, the court would not interfere. Davis, Ex parte. 1 B. C. C. 191; 22 L. J., M. C. 143; 17 Jur. 577; S. P., Reg. v. Brown, 1 L. T. 29.

4. CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE.

Sufficiency of.]—As to sufficiency of evidence to corroborate the mother in a material particular, see Reg. v. Pearcey, 17 Q. B. 902; 21 L. J., M. C. 129.

On the hearing of an affiliation summons, evidence was given of acts of familiarity on the part of the alleged father towards the mother having occurred several months before the child could have been begotten, and that in consequence he had been forbidden the house by her parents. It was also proved that the woman was a person of weak intellect. No corroborative evidence in direct relation to the actual begetting of the child was given:—Held, that the evidence given was in point of law admissible as corroborating the woman's statement. The effect of it on the question of paternity was for the consideration of the justices, who were entitled to act upon it if they thought it did materially corroborate her. Cole v. Manning, 2 Q. B. D. 611; 46 L. J., M. C. 175; 35 L. T. 941.

—Of Non-Access of Husband.]—Upon a complaint by a married woman who was living apart from her husband, charging a third party with being the father of a bastard child of which she had been delivered, evidence having been given which justified the magistrates in presuming non-access of the husband:—Held, that it was no ground of objection to their decision that they allowed the wife to be asked a question tending to prove non-access of the husband, the magistrates certifying that they found non-access independently of her evidence. Yates v. Chippindale, 11 C. B., N. S. 512.

— Of Connexion with Others.—If, upon the hearing of a bastardy summons against A., the mother denies that B. has had connexion with her at a particular time, evidence may be given to shew that B. had such connexion with her, supposing that the effect of such evidence is not merely to contradict her, but also to shew that B. might by means of that connexion have been the father of the child; such evidence being material to the issue. Garbutt v. Simpson, 32 L. J., M. C. 186; 8 L. T. 423; 11 W. R. 751.

By Putative Father.—The alleged putative father is a competent witness. Reg. v. Lightfoot, 6 El. & Bl. 822; 25 L. J., M. C. 115; 2 Jur., N. S. 786.

A summons was issued on the application of a mother of a bastard child, against the putative father, more than twelve months after the birth of the child. The summons stated that the mother alleged that the defendant was the father of the child, and that he had paid money for its maintenance within twelve months after its birth. The justice had granted the summons upon the mere statement of the mother (not upon oath). The putative father appeared at the petty sessions, and made no objection to the proceedings, and the case was gone into upon the merits, when he swore that he had not paid any money for the maintenance of the child. He was thereupon indicted for perjury and convicted.—Held, first, that a proceeding against the putative father of a bastard child is not a proceeding in pœnam to punish for a crime, but is a civil suit. Reg. v. Berry, 1 Bell, C. C. 46; 28 L. J., M. C. 86; 5 Jur., N. S. 320; 32 L. T., O. S. 323; 7 W. R. 229; S. P., Galliard v. Larton, 2 B. & S. 363; 31 L. J., M. C. 123; 8 Jur., N. S. 642.

Held, secondly, that evidence of the payment of money by the putative father within the twelve months was material on the hearing of the summons; and that such payment was corroborate evidence of paternity. Id.

Held, thirdly, that assuming there ought to have been evidence on oath of the payment of the money before the summons issued, yet the putative father had submitted to the jurisdiction of the petty sessions, and waived any irregularity there might be in the process; and when he had thus submitted himself to its jurisdiction, the court had jurisdiction to hear and decide the suit. Id.

Payments made by a Putative Father within Twelve Months of Birth.—On an application against a father of a bastard child, more than twelve months after its birth, it is not necessary that the testimony of the mother that the father paid money for its maintenance within twelve months after its birth should be corroborated. Hodges v. Bennett, 5 H. & N. 625; 29 L. J., M. C. 224; 2 L. T. 190; 8 W. R. 463.

— No Proof of—Waiver of Irregularity.—A summons was issued, on the application of the mother of a bastard child, against the putative father, more than twelve months after the birth of the child. The summons was regular in form, but no proof had been given to the summoning justice that the defendant had paid any money for the maintenance of the child within the twelve months next after its birth. No objection to the proceedings was made at the hearing of the summons before the petty sessions, and the defendant was afterwards convicted of perjury in the evidence that he then gave:—Held, that the fact that no proof had been given to the summoning justice of payment of money within the time limited was a mere matter of process which might be waived; that the party had waived it, and therefore the justices at petty sessions had jurisdiction. Reg. v. Simmons, 1 Bell, C. C. 168; 28 L. J., M. C. 183; 5 Jur., N. S. 578; 33 L. T., O. S. 153; 7 W. R. 439.

5. FORM AND SUFFICIENCY OF ORDERS.

Under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65.—By the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 65), s. 4, justices may make an order on the putative father of a bastard child for the payment to the mother of a sum of money weekly "for the maintenance and education of the child; . . . and if the application be made . . . within two calendar months after the birth of the child, such weekly sum may, if the justices think fit, be calculated from the birth of the child:—"—Held, that an order of maintenance made under the above act, but which was in the form in the schedule to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, directing the payment to be made to the mother, without any provision for its application to the maintenance and education of the child, was invalid, and must be quashed. Reg. v. Padbury, 5 Q. B. D. 126; 49 L. J., M. C. 55; 28 W. R. 182; 44 J. P. 361.

Semble, that an order of maintenance under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, s. 4, may be made so as to operate from the date of the application for a summons. Id.

Under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10—Must Show Jurisdiction.—The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, provides for the validity of proceedings in bastardy, if set forth, according to the forms in the schedule, or to the like tenor or effect. An order recited that application had been made for a summons to a justice of the peace "usually acting in this division:—"—Held, that as, by the statute, the words "in" and "for" are used synonymously, the jurisdiction of the justice who issued the summons sufficiently appeared on the face of the order. Reg. v. Milner, 2 New Sess. Cas. 54; 3 D. & L. 128; 14 L. J., M. C. 157; 10 Jur. 334.

An order under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3, did not state that the place of residence of the mother was in the sessional division for which the justices acted; but the summons, which was in evidence before the justices, stated that fact. The order having been removed by certiorari for the purpose of quashing it, the court amended it, in pursuance of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 7, there being sufficient ground in proof before the justices to have authorized the drawing up of the order free from the omission. Reg. v. Higham, 7 El. & Bl. 557; 26 L. J., M. C. 116; 3 Jur., N. S. 691.

The caption of an order adjudicating a party to be the father of the bastard child, stated that it was made at a petty session of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the riding, &c., holden, &c., before us, the Rev. F. S., clerk, and T. P., esq., her Majesty's justices of the peace for the riding, and a majority of the justices now present. The order was signed by F. S. and T. P. :—Held, on motion to quash the order, which had been brought up by a certiorari, that it must be taken in effect to state that F. S. and T. P. were justices of the peace, and a majority of those present. Boytton, Ex parte, 1 L., M. & P. 12.

— Must shew that Evidence was on Oath. ]

—Where an order of two justices on a putative father of a bastard child, made under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, omitted to state that the evidence of the mother was given on oath, but followed in substance the form in schedule No. 8 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, passed for the purpose of curing defects of form under the former act :—Held, that it was no objection to the order that it did not state the evidence to be given on oath, and that the court would not intend that the blank in the form given was to be filled up with the words "on oath." Reg. v. Cheshire (Justices), 3 D. & L. 337; 2 New Sess. Cas. 161; 15 L. J., M. C. 3; 10 Jur. 311.

An order commencing "Whereas S. (the putative father) having been duly served with the summons, &c., and now appearing in pursuance thereof," proceeded as follows :—"And it being now proved to us, in the presence, &c., of the attorney attending on behalf of S. (that the child was born a bastard), and we having, in the presence, &c., of the attorney, &c., heard the evidence of (the mother), and no evidence having been tendered on behalf of S.;" it then adjudged S. to be the putative father :—Sufficient, since 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10. Reg. v. Shipperbottom, 10 Q. B. 514; 2 New Sess. Cas. 641; 16 L. J., M. C. 113; 11 Jur. 520.

The form of order given in the schedule to that act does not require it to be set out that the evidence was given on oath. Ib.

— And that Evidence was taken in the Presence of Defendant or his Solicitor. ]—An order for the payment of expenses of the maintenance of an illegitimate child, whether the defendant appears in person or by attorney to answer the complaint of the woman before the justices, should state on the face of it that the evidence was given in the presence and hearing of the defendant, or of his attorney, as the case may be; and if, after appearance, there is any special reason for omitting that statement, it should be suggested on the face of the order. Reg. v. Grafton (Duke), Bann, Ex parte, 3 New Sess. Cas. 157; 2 B. C. Rep. 242; 5 D. & L. 568; 17 L. J., M. C. 125; 12 Jur. 539.

Where, in an order drawn up on a printed form, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, it was stated that the putative father appeared before the justices in pursuance of the summons, but the words "in the presence and hearing of the," &c. (after the statement of the proof being given, and the evidence received) were struck out :—Held, that the order was bad, and that the court would not presume, these words being struck out, that the proof and evidence were nevertheless received and given in the presence and hearing of the putative father, or of his attorney. Ib.

— As to Evidence tendered by Defendant. ]

—A case from the quarter sessions set out a bastardy order under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 1, which omitted the following words in form 8 : "And having also heard all the evidence tendered by the defendant;" and found that no evidence was in fact tendered by the defendant. The case also set out the evidence which was given to corroborate that of the mother :—Held, first, that the order was good, without alleging that no evidence was tendered by the defendant. Reg. v. Pearcey, 17 Q. B. 902; 21 L. J., M. C. 129; 16 Jur. 193.

Held, secondly, that whether the evidence corroborated that of the mother, was a question for the justices; and therefore, unless it was incapable of doing so, the court would not quash the order. Ib.

— Amount ordered to be Paid. ]—A woman was delivered of a bastard child on the 27th of May, 1870. On the 11th of August she applied for a summons against the putative father, which, on coming on to be heard, was withdrawn. On the 11th of April, 1871, she applied for another summons, which was heard on the 25th of April, when an order was made adjudging the person to be the father of the child, and to pay to the mother 2s. 6d. per week, from the 11th of August, 1870, until the child should attain thirteen years. The order having been removed by certiorari :—Held, that as the adjudication was wrong in point of substance, the order could not be amended under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 7. Reg. v. Tomlinson, 8 L. R., Q. B. 12; 42 L. J., M. C. 1; 27 L. T. 544; 21 W. R. 170.

A single woman made application on the 22nd of May, 1872, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, for a summons in bastardy against K. The child was born on the 26th of July. The Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, passed on the 10th of August, which repealed ss. 2 and 3 of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, and itself applies only to a child born after the 10th of August. On the 3rd of September the summons was issued; on the 11th of September K. appeared to the summons, and an order was made adjudging him to be the putative father, and ordering him to pay 3s. a week for its maintenance from the birth till it should attain the age of thirteen. On the 24th of April, 1873, the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1873, was passed, and by s. 8, all orders made before the passing of that act upon the father of a bastard child born before the 10th of August, 1872, for any payment in respect of such child, which would have been valid if the act of 1872 had not passed, shall be and shall be deemed to have been valid to all intents :—Held, that the order must be quashed, for that it was not made valid by s. 8, as it was for 3s. a week, whereas 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3, only authorized an order for 2s. 6d., and the order would therefore not have been valid if the act of 1872 had not passed. Reg. v. Kay, 8 L. R., Q. B. 324.

An order of maintenance ordered a person, as putative father, to pay a weekly sum for the maintenance of a bastard child, from the birth of the child. As the application for the order was not made until more than two months after the birth, the order was clearly bad as to the period between the date of the birth and the time of applying for the order. Notice of abandonment of all claim under the order for payment anterior to the date of the order had been served on the putative father :—Held, that the order was valid, and might be enforced against the putative father, in respect of the weekly payments which became due after the date of the application to the magistrates. Reg. v. Green, 2 L., M. & P.

130; nom. Coley, Ex parte, 15 Jur. 128; 20 L. J., M. C. 168.

— As to Complaint being made within Twelve Months.—A bastard child was born on the 10th May, 1850, and a summons, dated the 23rd July, 1851, was served upon the putative father, which stated that the application had been made "within twelve calendar months from the date hereof." The hearing of this summons was adjourned from time to time till the 11th September, 1851, when an order was made which, after reciting that the mother "did on the 28th October, 1850, having been delivered of a bastard child within twelve calendar months prior thereto, make application," &c.; that the hearing was adjourned to the 11th September, 1851; and that it was proved that the child was, on the 10th May, 1850, born a bastard; adjudged H. to be the putative father, and ordered him to pay 2s. 6d. per week from the 28th October, 1850, the day upon which such application was made as aforesaid:—Held, that it sufficiently appeared upon the face of the order, that the complaint had been made within twelve months from the birth, and that the statement in the summons that the child was born within twelve months of its date was immaterial. Harrison, Ex parte, 16 Jur. 726.

— Made Forty Days after Summons.—Held, also, that the order was good, although the justices had directed payment from the time of the application, a period of more than thirteen weeks; and that the order was not vitiated by reason of its having been made more than forty days after the service of the summons, the delay being occasioned by the adjournments. Id.

An order must shew upon the face of it that it was applied for within forty days after the service of the summons on the putative father of the child. Reg. v. Rose or Bailey, 2 New Sess. Cas. 166; 3 D. & L. 359; 15 L. J., M. C. 6.

— Appearing to be made at Petty Sessions which did not Exist.—An order having the following caption—"At a petty sessions of, &c., holden in and for the petty sessional division of H., in the county of H. aforesaid,"—set forth an application by a woman "residing at N., within this division," to a justice "acting for this division." The justices who made the order were resident in the township of H.; they usually acted for divers townships in the neighbourhood, including the townships of N. and H.; and there was a petty sessional division called "the B. division," within which several petty sessions were held, and one of them at H. The quarter sessions determined, that, by the words "a petty session holden in and for the petty sessional division of H.," they understood the "petty sessions holden in and for the petty sessional division of B. holden at H."—Held, that the order appeared to be made at a petty sessional division which did not exist, and was therefore bad. Reg. v. Whittles, 3 New Sess. Cas. 397; 13 Q. B. 248; 18 L. J., M. C. 96; 13 Jur. 403. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 10, as to what the term "petty sessional division" includes.

— Second Order when First incorrectly drawn up.—When two justices had adjudicated a person to be the father of a bastard child, but by mistake the order first drawn up and signed did not correctly embody the terms of such adjudication, and no step had been taken to enforce the order beyond serving it on the father who treated it as a nullity:—Held, that the same justices were entitled to cause a second order to be drawn up, and enforced, embodying correctly the terms of their adjudication, notwithstanding that the first order had not been quashed, and notwithstanding that there had been no fresh summons or hearing, or tender of costs. Reg. v. Lanyon, 27 L. T. 355.

Before 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10.—An order of bastardy, stated to be as well upon the oath of the wife, as otherwise, was good; for it would be presumed that the non-access of the husband was proved by competent witnesses on oath other than the wife; or, if proved by her also, that the judgment of the justices was founded on the other proof. Reg. v. Luffe, 8 East, 193.

An order made under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 72, upon the oath of the mother, and upon evidence in corroboration thereof, without stating it to be of some material particular, was bad. Reg. v. Reed, 1 P. & D. 413; 9 A. & E. 619; 2 W., W. & H. 94.

An order of bastardy made twelve years after the death of the child, whereby the putative father (who had in the meantime absconded) was adjudged to pay two several sums, one for the bygone maintenance, and the other for the costs, was void in toto. Addis, In re, 2 D. & R. 167; 1 B. & C. 87.

6. APPEAL AGAINST ORDERS. *

Notice of Appeal—Sufficiency.—A verbal notice of appeal given to the mother, by the clerk of the attorney of the putative father, in the presence and by the direction of the latter, is a sufficient notice of appeal. Reg. v. Huntingdonshire (Justices), 4 New Sess. Cas. 101; 1 L., M. & P. 78; 19 L. J., M. C. 127.

— Service.—A service of notice of appeal need not be made personally on the mother, if left at the usual place of her residence. Reg. v. Cheshire (Justices), 1 B. C. Rep. 164; 15 L. J., M. C. 114; 10 Jur. 808.

— Within what Time.—The twenty-four hours within which notice of appeal must be given to the mother begin to run from the time of the oral adjudication and order of the justices in petty sessions, and not from the time of the formal drawing up and signature thereof. Johnson, Ex parte, 3 B. & S. 947; 32 L. J., M. C. 193; 9 Jur., N. S. 1128; 8 L. T. 275; 11 W. R. 620.

Where, therefore, at petty sessions holden on the 17th of February, the justices adjudged a person to be the putative father of a bastard child, and ordered him to pay a weekly sum for its maintenance, and a formal order, as of the 17th of February, was afterwards drawn up, and signed by one of the justices on the 1st of March, and by the others on the 3rd of March; and a verbal notice of appeal was given immediately on the adjudication, but a written notice was also given on the 2nd of March, and recognizances entered on the 4th of March:—Held, that the recognizances were too late and the appeal could not be heard. Ib.

Held, also, that the irregularity in signing the order was not such as to vitiate it. Ib.

An order of maintenance was made at five o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday. At 10 o'clock on Monday morning notice of appeal was served on the mother:—Held, that the notice was given in sufficient time, as the twenty-four hours prescribed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 4, within which notice of appeal is to be given, must be reckoned exclusively of Sunday. Reg. v. Middlesex (Justices), 3 New Sess. Cas. 152; 5 D. & L. 580; 2 B. C. Rep. 271; 17 L. J., M. C. 111; 12 Jur. 434.

— When not Given.—A justice of the peace, before whom a putative father appears to give security to prosecute an appeal against an order for the maintenance of a bastard child, is not to decide whether notice of appeal has or has not been given. The want of notice of appeal is an objection that may be taken at the sessions, which is the proper tribunal to inquire into and determine the fact. Carter, Ex parte, 3 C. L. R. 293; 24 L. J., M. C. 72; 1 Jur., N. S. 89.

Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.—An appeal against an order in bastardy may be brought, either on the conditions prescribed by the Bastardy Acts or on those prescribed by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879. The 54th section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, in applying that act to "an appeal from an order in bastardy," amongst other things, does not apply the appeal sections of that act exclusively of previously-existing appeal sections in the Bastardy Acts, but applies the act generally to orders in bastardy, so as to remove doubts whether they are "orders or convictions." Reg. v. Montgomeryshire (Justices), 51 L. J., M. C. 95; 46 J. P. 517.

Recognizances—Notice of entering into—When Made.—A recognizance was entered into on the 14th, which was a Saturday, but the notice was not actually served until the 31st, though sent by a messenger on the 19th, who, on that day, and on the 21st, 23rd, and 28th ineffectually attempted to serve it personally:—Held, that the service was too late. Reg. v. Worcestershire (Justices), 2 New Sess. Cas. 331; 1 B. C. Rep. 102; 15 L. J., M. C. 99; 10 Jur. 882.

8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 3, requires notice of entering into recognizances to try a bastardy appeal to be forthwith given to the mother of the child, and it also provides that the sending such notice by post shall be sufficient:—Held, that the sessions were right in refusing to hear an appeal, where an interval of seventeen days had been suffered to elapse between the entering into the recognizances and serving the notice on the mother, although it was shewn that the delay that had occurred was owing solely to the appellant having sought to effect a personal service on the mother. Lowe, Ex parte, 3 D. & L. 737; S. P., Reg. v. Cheshire (Justices), 11 Jur. 170.

To give the justices at sessions jurisdiction to hear an appeal against an order of bastardy, it is necessary that it should be proved before them that the notice of recognizance was given as provided for by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 3; but if they have any evidence before them of the fact of such notice having been duly given, and decide thereupon, the court will not review their decision. Reg. v. Gloucestershire (Justices), 1 B. C. Rep. 291; 16 L. J., M. C. 57; 11 Jur. 674.

An order of maintenance was made on the 9th of April, and on the 13th the appellant entered into recognizances, but the notice was not served on the respondent till the 22nd of June. On the 29th, the respondent's attorney undertook to admit due service of the notice. At the trial it was objected, that the notice of the recognizances was not served forthwith, but the quarter sessions overruled the objection and quashed the order. The court refused a certiorari to bring up the order of sessions to be quashed, on the ground that the admission was evidence that the notice had been served in time. Ib.

— On Death of Mother.—Upon an appeal against an order being called on for hearing, and proof required of the appellant having complied with the requisitions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 3, it appeared that the necessary recognizance had been entered into by the appellant, and notice sent to the mother of the bastard child, by the post, addressed to the place at which she resided when the order was made; but on the part of the respondent it was proved, that when the notice was so sent by the post, the mother was dead. The sessions having refused to hear the appeal on the ground that the statute had not been sufficiently complied with in respect of the sending such notice:—Held, that the appellant was to be excused for the default occasioned by the death, the duty of sending the notice being one cast upon him by law, and its performance becoming impossible by the act of God, and therefore that the sessions were bound to hear the appeal. Reg. v. Leicestershire (Justices), 4 New Sess. Cas. 124; 15 Q. B. 88; 19 L. J., M. C. 209; 14 Jur. 550.

— Contents of Notice.—The notice of recognizance need not state the conditions of the recognizance. Reg. v. Holbourn, 3 New Sess. Cas. 725; 14 Q. B. 421.

An order of sessions, whereby after reciting that an appeal has been entered by the putative father against an order of maintenance, the sessions refuse to allow the appeal, for insufficiency of the notice of recognizance, and confirm the order of maintenance, with costs, is bad by reason of the improper confirmation. Ib.

B. having been adjudicated the putative father of twin bastard children, two orders of affiliation were drawn up and served. He gave notice of appeal, and entered into two recognizances, and subsequently gave notice to the mother, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 3, that he had entered into a recognizance to try an appeal against an order of affiliation made, whereby he was adjudged to be the putative father of two bastard children:—Held, that such notice was sufficient, inasmuch as it must be taken to have given reasonable information to the mother that B. had entered into recognizances to try appeals against the two orders. Reg. v. Leeds (Recorder), 1 B. C. C. 50; 21 L. J., M. C. 71; 16 Jur. 451.

Grounds of Appeal.—Grounds of appeal are not required to be given by the statute. Reg. v. Derbyshire (Justices), 1 New Sess. Cas. 461; 9 Jur. 181.

To what Sessions.]—The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 71, s. 2, enacts, that the adjourned sessions in Middlesex shall be general sessions of the peace, and shall have power to try and determine all appeals, and all other powers which belong to the general quarter sessions:—Held, that the jurisdiction thus given was optional only, and that the putative father was not bound to appeal to those sessions, but might wait and appeal to the general quarter sessions. Reg. v. Middlesex (Justices), 5 D. & L. 580; 3 New Sess. Cas. 152; 2 B. C. Rep. 271; 17 L. J., M. C. 111; 12 Jur. 434.

Within what Time—Mandamus.]—At a sessions held in January, the justices confirmed an order in bastardy, subject at the option of the appellant to a case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench, or to a mandamus. The appellant elected not to bring up the case, but in Easter Term applied for a mandamus:—Held, that the application was not made too late. Reg. v. Cheshire (Justices), 1 B. C. Rep. 164; 15 L. J., M. C. 114; 10 Jur. 808.

Hearing Appeal.]—Upon an appeal to the sessions against an order of affiliation, the respondents are to begin by supporting their order as in all other cases. Reg. v. Knill, 12 East, 50. And see Re v. Newberry, 4 T. R. 475; Nolan, 25.

Appeal against an order of maintenance; the appellant raised a preliminary objection to the jurisdiction of the petty sessions to make the order, and upon its being overruled, declined proceeding further with the case:—Held, that the sessions were justified in confirming the order, without hearing further evidence, notwithstanding 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 6. Reg. v. Robinson, 6 D. & L. 295.

Evidence on.]—On an appeal by the putative father, the quarter sessions may confirm the order without corroborative evidence, if the appellant, after taking an unsuccessful objection in point of law, does not dispute the facts. Reg. v. Buckinghamshire (Justices), 3 New Sess. Cas. 500; 18 L. J., M. C. 113; 13 Jur. 1053.

—Of Mother.]—On an appeal to the sessions by a putative father against an order of maintenance, the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 6, requires the justices, on the trial of any such appeal, to hear the evidence of the mother:—Held, that the proof that notice of appeal had been given to her was part of the trial of the appeal, and that therefore she might be called as a witness to prove that fact. Reg. v. Middlesex (Justices), 3 New Sess. Cas. 152; 5 D. & L. 580; 2 B. C. Rep. 271; 17 L. J., M. C. 111; 12 Jur. 434.

Finality of Decision on.]—When on appeal to quarter sessions an order of affiliation is quashed on the ground of the insufficiency of the corroborative evidence, as required by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 6, the order of quarter sessions is a decision on the merits, and is final, and fresh proceedings cannot be taken before justices. Reg. v. Glynn, 7 L. R., Q. B. 16; 41 L. J., M. C. 58; 26 L. T. 61; 20 W. R. 94, sub nom. Reg. v. Flintshire (Justices).

See further, JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

7. ENFORCING ORDERS.

By Warrant.]—The jurisdiction given to a justice of the peace by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3, at any time after the expiration of one month from making an order for the maintenance of a bastard child, to grant a warrant against the putative father, for the purpose of enforcing payment under the order, is not suspended by an appeal to the quarter sessions by the putative father against the order, and the confirmation of the order by the sessions subject to a special case. Kendall v. Wilkinson, 4 El. & Bl. 680; 24 L. J., M. C. 89; 1 Jur., N. S. 538.

A justice issued a warrant directed to a constable, commanding him to apprehend G., who had been adjudged to be the putative father of a bastard child, and to convey him to prison under an order for the payment of money to the mother of the child. A police officer arrested him, but at the time of doing so the warrant was not in his possession:—Held, that the arrest was illegal, as the officer ought to have had the warrant ready to be produced at the time of the arrest, if required. Galliard v. Laxton, 2 B. & S. 363; 9 Cox, C. C. 127; 31 L. J., M. C. 123; 8 Jur., N. S. 642; 5 L. T. 835; 10 W. R. 353.

If an order of justices was made commanding a soldier in the Queen's service to pay a certain sum weekly for the maintenance of a bastard child, the soldier might be indicted for refusing to obey the order, and was not protected from punishment by s. 52 of the Mutiny Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 10, as such disobedience was a criminal matter, and criminal matters were expressly excepted from the operation of that section. Reg. v. Ferrall, T. & M. 390; 2 Den. C. C. 51; 20 L. J., M. C. 39; 15 Jur. 42. But since this decision the Annual Mutiny Act contained a provision that soldiers should not be liable to be taken out of the service for the misdemeanor of refusing to comply with orders of bastardy or for not maintaining their bastard children. See now 44 & 45 Vict. c. 58.

After Marriage of Mother.]—An order obtained by a single woman for the maintenance of a bastard child can be enforced against the putative father after the marriage of the mother. Sotheron v. Scott, 6 Q. B. D. 518; 50 L. J., M. C. 56; 44 L. T. 522; 29 W. R. 666; 45 J. P. 423.

—Though Husband capable of Maintaining.]—An order obtained by a single woman for the maintenance of a bastard child can be enforced against the putative father after the marriage of the mother, although her husband is able to maintain the child. Hardy v. Atherton, 7 Q. B. D. 264; 50 L. J., M. C. 105; 44 L. T. 776; 29 W. R. 788; 45 J. P. 683.

When Father Abroad.]—A putative father of a bastard child, born abroad, of a foreign mother, cannot be forced, by an order of justices, to pay to the mother a weekly sum of money for the maintenance of the child. Reg. v. Blane, 3 New Sess. Cas. 597; 13 Q. B. 769; 18 L. J., M. C. 216; 13 Jur. 854.

8. EFFECT OF ORDER IN EVIDENCE.

In ejectment, the question being as to the legitimacy of the plaintiff, his mother, who was a witness, stated, on cross-examination, that she "was never before the magistrate about the child; that she never said the child was born before marriage; that she never affiliated the child:—Held, that an order of affiliation made by magistrates, who were dead, was admissible for the purpose of contradicting the witness. Watson v. Little, 5 H. & N. 472; 29 L. J., Ex. 267; 2 L. T. 223; 8 W. R. 420.

III. LIABILITY OF PUTATIVE FATHER.

1. ON ORDER OF AFFILIATION.—See ante, II.

2. INDEPENDENTLY OF STATUTORY ORDER.

After adopting Child.—A father of a bastard child, if he has adopted it as his own, though no order has been made on him, is liable for nursing and necessaries. Hesketh v. Gowing, 5 Esp. 131.

Contract to Maintain.—A person bound himself to pay an annuity to an unmarried woman, by whom he had had several children, on condition that he should not require their custody or management:—Held, that there was a sufficiently valuable consideration to support the bond as a specialty debt. Plaskett, In re, 30 L. J., Ch. 606; 4 L. T. 544; 9 W. R. 628.

A reputed father of an illegitimate child promised to pay the mother an annuity if she would maintain the child, and keep secret their connexion:—Held, that the maintenance of the child was a sufficient consideration to sustain assumption. Jennings v. Brown, 9 M. & W. 496; 12 L. J., Ex. 86.

The father of an illegitimate child promised the mother that if she would abstain from affiliating the child he would pay her 2s. 6d. per week for its maintenance. The mother did so abstain, and suffered the time limited by the statute for obtaining an order of affiliation to expire:—Held, that the promise bound the father, and that an action lay, the consideration having been executed. Linnegar v. Hood, 5 C. B. 437; 17 L. J., C. P. 106.

A reputed father of an illegitimate child wrote to the mother: "As I always promised that you and your child should never want, I will allow you 100l. a year for your life and little Gunna's, to be paid quarterly into the bank wherever you live. Of course if I hear of your behaving ill, or bringing up the child improperly, I will stop the allowance to you":—Held, that the annuity was promised in respect of an executory consideration, the future bringing up of the child properly, which was sufficient to support an assumption, and that the promisee having executed her part of the contract the promise to pay was binding on the father. Hicks v. Gregory, 8 C. B. 378; 19 L. J., C. P. 81; 13 Jur. 1030.

The father and mother of an illegitimate child entered into the following agreement:—"Agreement between L., and G. single woman, respecting the maintenance of an illegitimate female child. L. agrees to pay 45l. to the child as follows: 12l. to be paid down, and the remaining 33l. in four equal payments in four years; the first of such payments, 8l. 5s., to be made on the 30th December, 1846, and every succeeding 30th December till the period of four years do expire. But if the child should die before the four years expire, the payments to cease at such decease." The 12l. were to be paid at the time, and the agreement was placed in the hands of the attesting witness. The mother, having afterwards heard that the father had got possession of the agreement, obtained against him an affiliation order for payment of a weekly sum, which was duly paid. Subsequently, the mother married, and joined with her husband in an action against the father for necessaries supplied to the child by her before her marriage, and for necessaries supplied by her and her husband after their marriage:—Held, that if the meaning of the agreement was, that the father would make the stipulated payments if the mother would support the child, then the agreement was without consideration, but if the meaning of it was, that the mother would undertake the sole maintenance without affiliating the child, in which case there would be a good consideration, then the agreement had not been performed. Crowhurst v. Laverack, 8 Ex. 208; 22 L. J., Ex. 57.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff was the mother of two illegitimate children, of whom the defendant was the father; that she, having relinquished all immoral intercourse with him, had at his request undertaken the care and nurture of the children, and that in consideration of the premises she would at his request continue to take charge of the children, and to supply them with such things as should be necessary for their use and benefit; he promised her to pay her 50l. a year for and during a time not yet expired:—Held, that the declaration disclosed a sufficient consideration for the promise. Smith v. Roche, 6 C. B., N. S. 223; 28 L. J., C. P. 237; 5 Jur., N. S. 918.

A plea that after the promise and before any part of the money claimed began to accrue or became due or payable, one of the children died, is no answer. Id.

Conditional.—In an action on a contract to pay a woman a weekly sum for the support of a bastard child of hers by the defendant, on condition of her not molesting him; plea, that she molested him by charging him, falsely and maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, with being the father of another bastard child, and getting an order upon him as putative father (which had been quashed on appeal):—Held, that to find a verdict in favour of the defendant, the jury must be satisfied that the charge was falsely and fraudulently made, and that they must decide that question on the evidence before them, without any regard to the decision of the magistrate. Lane v. Pantton, 3 F. & F. 125.

Refusal by Father to continue Payments.—If the father of an illegitimate child has consented to pay an annual sum for its support, he must continue to do so, or provide for the child at his own expense, or give the most distinct notice of his intention to discontinue the payment of such annual sum. Cameron v. Baker, 1 C. & P. 268; S. P., Nicholls v. Allen, 3 C. & P. 36. See Mortimore v. Wright, 6 M. & W. 482.

Where a putative father made various payments for maintenance, and then refused to continue its support until the mother obtained an order of affiliation:—Held, that no action would lie by the mother for arrears of maintenance. Furriillio v. Crouther, 7 D. & R. 612.

How far Necessary to be in Writing.—

A contract to support a child (six years old) "till it should be able to do for itself," is within the Statute of Frauds, and requires to be in writing. Farrington v. Donohoe, 1 Ir. C. L. R. 675; 14 W. R. 922.

The father of seven illegitimate children agreed with the mother verbally to pay her 300*l.* per annum by equal quarterly instalments for so long as she should maintain and educate the children. At the time of the making of the promise the eldest child was about fourteen years old:—Held, that this agreement was not one "not to be performed within a year from the making thereof," within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds, s. 4, and was therefore binding, though made by parol only. Knowlman v. Bluett, 9 L. R., Ex. 1; 43 L. J., Ex. 29; 29 L. T. 462; 22 W. R. 77. Affirmed on appeal, 9 L. R., Ex. 307; 43 L. J., Ex. 15; 22 W. R. 758—Ex. Ch.

— Effect of subsequent Bankruptcy of Father.—[Bankruptcy is no discharge of a promise to allow a weekly sum for the support of an illegitimate child. Millen v. Whittenbury, 1 Camp. 428. And see St. Martin v. Warren, 1 B. & A. 491; 2 Stark. 188.

— Mother releasing Father from past Liability.—[To an action for the maintenance of illegitimate children, the defendant pleaded a deed whereby the plaintiff (the mother), in consideration of 50*l.*, released the defendant from past claims, and covenanted to maintain the children thereafter without his assistance:—Held, that the plea was bad in law; first, because there might have been subsequently to the deed a binding contract for maintenance for new and valuable consideration—e.g. maintenance in a more expensive manner than the mother was by the covenant bound to provide; and, secondly, because the deed could not be relied upon for the purpose of avoiding circuitry of action, inasmuch as regarding it as a covenant not to sue, the damages recovered in the present action, and those recoverable in a counter action for breach of the covenant, would not necessarily be identical. Magee v. Farrell, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 579—Ex. Ch.

— From future Liability.—[An order had been obtained by the respondent ordering the appellant to contribute to the support of her bastard child. Subsequently to the making of the order, the respondent, in consideration of a sum of money, agreed to release and indemnify the appellant for ever from all actions, suits and proceedings in respect of the child:—Held, that this agreement was no bar to the jurisdiction of the justices to enforce the order on the application of the mother. Griffiths v. Evans, 46 L. T. 417; 30 W. R. 427.

— To Support Two Children—Death of One.—[The father of two illegitimate children executed a bond, conditioned for the payment of an annuity for the support of them and their mother during their joint natural lives; or in case of the death of the children, during the natural life of the mother. One of the children having died:—Held, that the executor of the obligor was liable on the bond for the arrears of the annuity accruing after the death of that child. James v. Talent, 1 D. & R. 548; 5 B. & A. 889.

Expenses incurred by Mother during Confinement.—[A woman who, at the request of her seducer, has taken lodgings, and laid out money in necessaries for her confinement and the support of her child, is entitled to sue him for money paid; and her letters to him not answered are admissible as evidence against him. Gore v. Hawsey, 3 F. & F. 509.

Past Cohabitation with Mother—Subsequent Promise by Father.—[A declaration in an action by a woman against a man, averring that he seduced and debauched her, and induced her to cohabit with him, whereby she had been injured in her character, and deprived of the means of procuring an honest livelihood; and that the two agreed to discontinue the immoral connexion and live apart; and that he as a compensation for the injury, and in consideration of the premises, undertook to pay her a yearly sum towards her maintenance, which he had failed to do, is bad, as disclosing no legal consideration for the undertaking. Beaumont v. Reeve, 8 Q. B. 483; 15 L. J., Q. B. 141; 10 Jur. 284.

IV. RIGHT TO INHERIT.

Generally.—[A bastard is not a child within the meaning of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, s. 2, and can therefore maintain no action under that statute. Dickinson v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 2 H. & C. 735; 33 L. J., Ex. 91.

It is a rule that a bastard cannot take as the issue of a particular person, until it has acquired the reputation of being the child of that person, which cannot be before birth. Earle v. Wilson, 17 Ves. 531.

Under a devise by a married man, having no legitimate children, "to the children which I may have by A., and living at my decease," natural children, who had acquired the reputation of being his children by her before the date of the will, are entitled. Williamson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. 422.

Marriage with Mother after Birth of Child—French Law—Right of Child under English Will.—[A domiciled Englishman, being the putative father of an illegitimate child born in France of a French woman, and afterwards becoming domiciled in France, cannot, on his subsequent marriage with the mother of the child, legitimize the child under the French law, so as to enable it to share in a bequest to his children contained in the will of a person in England. Wright, In re, 2 Kay & J. 595; 25 L. J., Ch. 621; 2 Jur. N. S. 465.

The reasons for this are, first, that marriage, being a personal contract, is, like other personal contracts, regulated by the law of the domicile of the party; secondly, that the law of the domicile of the putative father attached to the child at its birth, and by that law its bastardy was indelible; thirdly, that by the law of France a bastard cannot afterwards be made legitimate if, at the time of its conception, the parents were incapable of contracting to legitimize the child after its birth, and a domiciled Englishman could not bind himself by such contract; and fourthly, that by the law of France a bastard can never be made legitimate if it is uncertain who was the father; and a domiciled Englishman, by the law of this country, cannot, for civil purposes be more than the putative father of a bastard child. Ib.

— Scotch Law.—A child born in Scotland, of parents domiciled there, but not married till after his birth, though legitimate by the law of Scotland, cannot take real estates in England as heir. Doe d. Burtchistle v. Vardill, 2 Scott, N. R. 828; 6 Bing. N. C. 385; West, 500; nom. Birtchistle v. Vardill, 9 Bligh, 32; 7 C. & F. 895; 4 Jur. 1076; S. C. in K. B., 8 D. & R. 185; 2 B. & C. 438.

A domiciled Scotchman had a son born in Scotland before marriage, and afterwards married the mother in Scotland. The son died seised of land in England, leaving his father surviving:—Held, that the father did not inherit from the son. Don, In re, 4 Drew, 193; 27 L. J., Ch. 98; 3 Jur., N. S. 1192.

By the law of Scotland, legitimation per subsequens matrimonium operates only from the time of the marriage, not from the time of the birth. Shedden v. Patrick, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 535.

V. CUSTODY OF CHILD.

Right of Mother to.—The mother of an illegitimate child is entitled to the custody of the child in preference to the father, though from his circumstances he may be better able to educate it. Knee, Ex parte, 1 N. R. 148.

And if the putative father obtains possession of the child from the mother by fraud, the court will order it to be restored to the mother. Rea v. Soper, 5 T. R. 278; S. P., Rea v. Moseley, 5 East, 224, n.

The court will grant a habeas corpus to bring up the body of a bastard child, within the age of nurture, for the purpose of restoring it to the custody of the mother, from whose quiet possession it has been taken, at one time by fraud, and afterwards by force; and this without prejudice to the question of guardianship, which belongs to the Lord Chancellor representing the Queen in Chancery. Rea v. Hopkins, 7 East, 579; 3 Smith, 577.

A woman placed her illegitimate female child soon after its birth with N. and wife, who were labouring people, intending to pay them for it. She fell into ill-health and was unable to continue her payments, but N. and wife continued to maintain the child till it was nearly seven years old. The mother then applied to have the child delivered to her, which N. and wife refused. She therefore applied for a writ of habeas corpus, which was refused by North, J., but granted by a divisional court. N. and wife appealed. The mother, who was a kept mistress, did not propose that the child should live with her, but with a respectable married sister, whose husband was in a station superior to that of N.:—Held, that the appeal must be dismissed, for that the mother of an illegitimate infant has a natural right to its custody, which will be regarded by the court. Reg. v. Nash, Carey, In re, 10 Q. B. D. 454; 52 L. J., Q. B. 442; 48 L. T. 447; 31 W. R. 420—C. A.

When Child allowed to Elect.—The mother of an illegitimate child between eleven and twelve years of age obtained a habeas corpus to compel the putative father to bring her before the court. The child being brought up, the court declared her entitled to exercise her own discretion as to whither she would go, and would not allow her mother to take her against her will. Lloyd, In re, 3 M. & G. 547; 4 Scott, N. R. 200; 5 Jur. 1198.

Maintenance of Child—Liability of Parish for.—Where a bastard child is born, for whose sustenance the parents neglect to provide necessities, the parish officers are obliged to do it, without an order of justices for that purpose. Hays v. Bryant, 1 H. Bl. 253.

Money belonging to Mother—Duty of Personal Representatives.—There is no obligation upon the personal representatives of the mother of a bastard child to expend the money or property which belonged to the mother, in the maintenance of such child. Ruttinger v. Temple, 4 B. & S. 491; 33 L. J., Q. B. 1; 9 Jur., N. S. 1239; 9 L. T. 256; 12 W. R. 9.

I. UNDER JUDICATURE ACT.

Abolition.]—By the Rules of the Supreme Court, Ord. LVIII. r. 1 (1875), bills of exceptions are abolished.

II. BEFORE JUDICATURE ACT.*1. WHEN IT LIES.

It lies on a non-suit, and to the judge of the common law county court. Strother v. Hutchinson, 4 Bing. N. C. 83 ; 5 Scott, 346 ; 6 D. P. C. 238 ; 3 Hodges, 294 ; 2 Jur. 16.

A bill of exceptions lies upon the reception of improper evidence on a trial at bar. Rouse v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 266 ; 8 B. & C. 765.

On Execution of Writ of Inquiry.]—Quære whether a bill of exceptions lies for misdirection of a judge on the execution of a writ of inquiry. Price v. Green, 16 M. & W. 346.

In Criminal Cases.]—A bill of exceptions cannot be tendered by a prosecutor or a defendant in a criminal case, whether it is for a felony or a misdemeanor, because the Statute of Westminster is confined to civil causes. Reg. v. Alleyne, Dears. C. C. 505, 509 ; 1 Jur., N. S. 373 ; S. P., Reg. v. Eadaile, 1 F. & F. 214.

Upon a trial for felony, a bill of exceptions cannot be taken by the prisoner. Hayes, In re, 3 J. & L. 568 (Irish).

A bill of exceptions does not lie in a criminal case, whether felony or misdemeanor ; and although there might be no objection to the court sealing a bill of exceptions, yet judgment should be passed at once, and no appeal exists in respect of such ruling. Reg. v. Jelly, 10 Cox, C. C. 553.

To Quarter Sessions.]—A bill of exceptions does not lie to the court of quarter sessions. Roe v. Preston, 2 Stra. 1040.

2. PRACTICE AS TO.

A bill of exceptions is in the nature of a writ of error, and consequently cannot be determined in the court in which it is executed. Davenport v. Tyrrell, 1 W. Bl. 679 ; Lofft, 84.

On the trial of a writ of right, the grand assize found a general verdict for the tenant, accompanying it with the following statement in writing :—" It is the unanimous verdict of the grand assize that the defendant has not made out her pedigree ; that the tenant had entered into and was in the actual possession of the estates devised by the will of T. J. Selby, before and at the time of levying the fine in 1784 ; and that he had taken and used and was then known by the name of William Selby ;" a name he was required by the will to assume, as the condition upon which he was to take the estate on failure of the right heir presenting himself:—Held, that this written statement could not properly be introduced into the bill of exceptions, it being a statement of that which the grand assize was not called upon by law to find. Davies v. Loundes, 1 Scott, N. R. 328; 1 M. & G. 473.

A bill of exceptions tendered to the direction given by the judge to the jury, set forth the pleadings and evidence, and then referred to a lease, part of which was inserted by way of extract. The judgment of the court on the bill of exceptions having been brought up by writ of error to the House of Lords, the counsel for the plaintiff in error was not at liberty to read a part of the lease not extracted into the bill of exceptions. Galway v. Baker, 5 C. & F. 157.

If a bill of exceptions is tendered to a judge in the course of a trial at nisi prius, the facts still go to the jury, but a demurrer to evidence stops the cause. Miller v. Warre, 1 C. & P. 237, 240, n.; 7 D. & R. 1; 4 B. & C. 538.

Where an indorsement to a foreign bill of exchange turned out to be forged, and a question arose as to the proof of the identity of the indorser, if evidence is objected to as being insufficient for that purpose, the proper course for taking advantage of the objection is by demurring to the evidence and not by bill of exceptions. Bulkeley v. Butler, 3 D. & R. 625; 2 B. & C. 434.

If a plaintiff intends to bring a writ of error on the ground of misdirection in point of law, he should not submit to be non-suited, but appear and put the judge to express such opinion by way of direction to the jury, and thereupon tender a bill of exceptions. Doe d. Tolson v. Fisher, 2 Bligh, N. S. 9.

Upon an exception taken in a bill of exceptions in which the whole evidence was set out, that the evidence for the defendant was sufficient to entitle him to a verdict, and to bar the plaintiff's claim:—Held, that a court of error might look to the whole evidence on both sides, to see whether the verdict for the plaintiff was sustained by the evidence. Vines v. Reading Corporation, 1 Y. & J. 4; 12 Moore, 201; 4 Bing. 8.

Misdirection, and not non-direction, is the subject of a bill of exceptions. Gregory v. Cotterill, 5 El. & Bl. 571; 25 L. J., Q. B. 33; 2 Jur., N. S. 16; S. P., Anderson v. Fitzgerald, 17 Jur., 995; 4 H. L. Cas. 484.

Where evidence is rejected by a judge, the counsel relying on the evidence ought to make a formal tender of it to the judge, and request him to put it on his notes, and in the event of his refusal, tender a bill of exceptions, or counsel will not be allowed to raise before the court any questions arising out of such evidence, if the notes do not shew the point to have been raised at the trial. Gibbs v. Pike, 9 M. & W. 351; 1 D., N. S. 409; 12 L. J., Ex. 257; 6 Jur. 465.

If the judge directs a nonsuit, and the plaintiff does not appear when called, the plaintiff cannot tender a bill of exceptions and bring a writ of error, assigning for error that the judge improperly directed the nonsuit. Corsar v. Reid, 2 L. M. & P. 646; 21 L. J., Q. B. 18; 16 Jur. 57.

If a judge leaves as a fact for the jury to determine any matter which he should decide as a point of law, the counsel should interpose and tender a bill of exceptions; otherwise if, in the opinion of the court, the jury decides the question left to them correctly in point of law, the judge's misdirection is no ground for a new trial. Doe d. Strickland v. Strickland, 19 L. J., C. P. 89.

Where a judge, in summing up, expresses an erroneous opinion on a point of law, adverted to for the collateral purpose of explaining other evidence, that is not a misdirection in respect of which a bill of exceptions can be tendered, and, therefore, a new trial will not be granted as of right, but only in the event of a failure of justice. Black v. Jones, 6 Ex. 213.

Evidence of foreign law was tendered on the trial of an issue before a jury. It was objected to on the ground that as the issue did not in terms raise any question of foreign law, the evidence was a surprise on the party against whom it was produced. The evidence was admitted, and the objection of surprise was put on the record as one of the heads of a bill of exceptions. The evidence was really inadmissible, on the ground that the lex fori was that by which alone the issue could be decided; but no notice of this ground of objection was taken in the bill of exceptions:—Held, that the court of error could not look beyond the bill of exceptions, but must decide on that alone, and that the objection of surprise was not sufficient to exclude the evidence. Bain v. Whitehaven and Furness Junction Railway Company, 3 H. L. Cas. 1; S. P., Irish Society v. Derry (Bishop), 12 C. & F. 641.

The court cannot go behind a bill of exceptions on the record to ascertain what the objections made at the trial really were. Whaley v. Carlisle, 17 Ir. C. L. R. 792.

An objection was taken, that documents tendered in evidence were not admissible for a particular purpose. The court decided that they were admissible. An exception was taken to this decision:—Held, that if the documents were admissible on any ground, the exception could not be sustained. Irish Society v. Derry (Bishop), 12 C. & F. 641.

3. FORM.

A bill of exceptions which sets forth what a judge was asked to direct, and alleges that he refused to give such direction, is informal and bad. Anderson v. Fitzgerald, 4 H. L. Cas. 484; 17 Jur. 995.

A bill of exceptions should state what directions the judge gave, as it is misdirection, and not non-direction, which is the subject of an exception. Id.

Where exceptions are taken to the direction of a judge, it is not enough to state in the bill of exceptions that he declined to direct the jury in the way suggested, without shewing what his direction was. McAlpine v. Mangnall, 3 C. B. 496; 15 L. J., C. P. 298.

Where exceptions are not properly taken (as where they appear upon the record after the finding of the jury), the court of error cannot give judgment thereon. Armstrong v. Lewis, 4 M. & Scott, 1; 2 C. & M. 274; S. P., London Grand Junction Railway Company v. Freeman, 2 Scott, N. R. 720, n.

4. SIGNING AND SEALING.

An information having been tried at the assizes, the defendant tendered a bill of exceptions to the judge, and on the day after the trial supplied him with a sketch of the exceptions. On the 3rd November, the defendant furnished the prosecutor with a draft of the exceptions for his approval. On the 5th November, the draft being still in the hands of the prosecutor, the defendant moved for a rule to restrain the prosecutor from proceeding on his judgment until one week after the bill of exceptions had been sealed. On the 7th November (the 5th day of the term), the prosecutor signed judgment:—Held, that the defendant had been sufficiently prompt in his proceedings, and that he was entitled to a reasonable time to seal the bill of exceptions and to sue out a writ of error; and the court refused to compel him to pay the costs of the application, but directed them to be costs in the cause, or to impose a term upon him to enter the fact upon the record, that the bill of exceptions was sealed after judgment signed. Reg. v. Rowley, 2 D., N. S. 335.

A bill of exceptions was tendered to a judge's direction, and under 55 Geo. 3, c. 42, s. 7 (Scotland), was signed by him at the time of the trial. The draft thus prepared was some months afterwards more formally drawn up, and was tendered to him for signature. He refused to sign, unless a sentence explaining his direction was introduced into the bill, and the party excepting finally consented to its introduction. The bill of exceptions, with this explanation forming part of it, was presented to the court:—Held, that the introduction of this explanation was highly irregular; but that being on the record, the court below and the House of Lords on appeal could only look to the record, and could neither receive an affidavit of the facts, nor examine the draft of the exceptions, originally prepared and signed. Glasgow (Earl) v. Hurlet and Campsie Alum Company, 3 H. L. Ca. 25.

The court in banc has no jurisdiction to inquire into the propriety of an amendment made by the judge at nisi prius in a bill of exceptions after he has sealed it. Mercy Docks and Harbour Board v. Penhallow, 7 H. & N. 341; 30 L. J., Ex. 272; 8 Jur., N. S. 486; 5 L. T. 112—Ex. Ch.

Where defendants in error severed in pleading, and pleaded, in addition to the joinder in error respectively, that there was no record of the bill of exceptions, that the chief justice did not seal the bill of exceptions, and that he did not acknowledge his seal, the court ordered the respective pleas pleaded by each, except the joinder in error, to be struck out, with costs. Fishmongers' Company v. Robertson, 6 C. B. 896; 18 L. J., C. P. 55.

If the judge dies before sealing a bill of exceptions to his ruling, it is not competent for any other judge to seal it, nor for the executors of the deceased judge to affix their testator's seal to it. In such a case the court can only grant a new trial. Nind v. Arthur, 7 D. & L. 252; S. P., Newton v. Boodle, 4 D. & L. 664; 3 C. B. 795; 16 L. J., C. P. 135; 11 Jur. 148.

Although, when a bill of exceptions has been tendered, but in consequence of the death of the judge has not been formally sealed, the only available course is to move for a new trial, yet the motion must be made within reasonable time, or good cause shewn for delay; and therefore where three terms had elapsed from the date of the death, and the only reasons for the delay were want of funds, and a change of attorneys, an application for a new trial was refused. Thomason v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 28 L. T. 819.

A cause was tried before Lord Truro, when chief justice, and a bill of exceptions tendered, and the draft submitted to his lordship; but, in consequence of his elevation to the woolsack, and subsequent illness, all hope of getting it settled and sealed being at an end, the court directed a new trial. Benett v. Peninsular and Oriental Steamboat Company, 16 C. B. 29.

A judge will refuse to sign a bill of exceptions where he dissents from the view taken by the parties of the sense in which he used the words addressed to the jury. In such case the remedy is to move for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. After a bill of exceptions tendered, the court will not entertain a motion for a new trial on a point of law. Att.-Gen. v. Sillim, 9 L. T. 261.

5. ABANDONING OR STAYING.

A party bringing a writ of error, and removing the record before he has obtained a judge's seal to a bill of exceptions tendered by him at the trial, on the ground of the rejection of evidence offered by him, waives the bill of exceptions. Dillon v. Doe d. Parker, 1 Bing. 17; 11 Price, 110.

A defendant sent to the plaintiff a copy of a bill of exceptions, in order to his concurring in the statement of facts, and at the same time sued out a writ of error:—Held, that the plaintiff had no right to retain the bill of exceptions, on the ground that the defendant had waived it by suing out a writ of error. Willans v. Taylor, 6 Bing. 512; 4 M. & P. 257.

A defendant tendered a bill of exceptions, and afterwards brought error. The bill of exceptions not having been ready when the writ of error was returned, the court, in consideration of the circumstances, allowed it to be tacked to the record afterwards. Taylor v. Willans, 2 B. & Ad. 846.

A party who moves for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, is not bound to abandon a bill of exceptions tendered by him at the trial to the ruling of the judge on a matter of law. Salisbury (Marquis) v. Gladstone, 5 Jur., N. S. 369. See Doe d. Roberts v. Roberts, 2 Chit. 272; Allen v. Hayward, 7 Q. B. 960.

If a party tenders a bill of exceptions, he cannot move for a new trial on a point which might have been included among the grounds of exception, unless the bill of exceptions is first abandoned. Adams v. Andrews, 15 Q. B. 1001; 20 L. J., Q. B. 39; 15 Jur. 149.

Where a defendant residing out of the jurisdiction, against whom a judgment had been obtained, under which nothing had been realized, tendered a bill of exceptions, the court, at the instance of the plaintiff, stayed the proceedings until security for costs of the bill of exceptions and in error had been given by the defendant, without interfering with the plaintiff's liberty to proceed on his judgment. Hill v. Fox, 3 H. & N. 547; 27 L. J., Ex. 416.

Such order does not stay the sealing of the bill of exceptions. Id.

6. AMENDING.

A bill of exceptions may be amended after it is sealed. Richardson v. Mellish, 3 Bing. 334.

And the court in banc has no jurisdiction to inquire into the propriety of an amendment made by the judge at nisi prius in a bill of exceptions after he has sealed it. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Penhallow, 7 H. & N. 341; 30 L. J., Ex. 272; 8 Jur., N. S. 486; 5 L. T. 112.

Where a bill of exceptions stated the direction of the judge to the jury, and thereupon the jury gave their verdict for the plaintiff, whereupon the counsel for the defendant did except:—Held, that an amendment might be made after the judge's seal had been affixed, by stating the exceptions to be made before the verdict was delivered. Culley v. Doe d. Taylerson, 3 P. & D. 539; 11 A. & E. 1008.

I. FORM AND OPERATION OF.

1. GENERALLY.

Particular Words not Necessary.—No particular words are necessary to make an instrument a note. It is sufficient if a promise can be fairly implied. Brooks v. Elkins, 2 Gale, 200; 2 M. & W. 74; S. P., Bull. N. P. 272.

The following instrument:—"Port of London Sea, Fire and Life Assurance Company. To the cashier,—Fifty-three days after date, credit P. & Co., or order, with the sum of 500l., claimed, per Cleopatra, in cash, on account of this corporation. (Signed) A. C. (the drawer), Managing Director," the words "credit in cash" meaning pay, is a bill or note. Eddison v. Collingridge, 9 C. B. 570; 19 L. J., C. P. 268; 14 Jur. 869; S. P., Allen v. Sea, Fire and Life Assurance Company, 9 C. B. 574; 14 Jur. 870, n.

For Value Received.—It is not essential that a bill or note should import to be for value received. White v. Ledwich, 4 Dougl. 247; Creswell v. Crisp, 2 D. P. C. 653; 2 C., M. & R. 634; Hatch v. Trayer, 3 P. & D. 408; 11 A. & E. 702.

"Pay to B. or order, 315l. value received," subscribed by the drawer, may be alleged to be a bill for value received by the drawer. Grant v. Da Costa, 3 M. & S. 351.

A bill drawn by J. S. to his own order, value received, means value received by the drawee. Higmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S. 65; 2 Chit. 333.

Payable to Maker's own Order.—A note made by several persons payable to "our and each of our order," and indorsed by one, is good, within 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. Absalom v. Marks, 11 Q. B. 19; 17 L. J., Q. B. 7; 11 Jur. 1016.

A note payable to the maker's own order is not a note within 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. Brown v. De Winton, Gay v. Lander, 6 C. B. 336; 6 D. & L. 62; 17 L. J., C. P. 281; 12 Jur. 678; S. P., Flight v. Maclean, 16 M. & W. 51; 16 L. J., Ex. 23; Wood v. Mytton, 10 Q. B. 805; 11 Jur., N. S. 967; Hooper v. Williams, 2 Ex. 13; 17 L. J., Ex. 315; 12 Jur. 270.

But such maker may, by indorsing it, give a right of action to the indorsee; and where the indorsement is in blank, and the note is circulated, it is in effect a note payable to bearer. Id.

The indorsement in such a case is not a new drawing, so as to render a fresh stamp necessary. Id.

Drawn and Accepted by same Person.—Although bills of exchange, drawn and accepted by the same parties, may be in strictness promissory notes rather than bills, yet where the intention to give and receive such documents as instruments capable of being negotiated in the market as bills of exchange is clear, both the holders and the parties may treat them accordingly. Willans v. Ayers, 3 App. Cas. 133; 47 L. J., P. C. 1; 37 L. T. 732.

Without Drawer's Signature.—An instrument in the following form: "Three months after date pay to my order 11l. 10s. for value received," directed to C., accepted by him, payable at a bank, and transmitted to B., with the intent that he should place his name to it as drawer, is not a bill, or note, or a security for the payment of money, or a writing the value of which exceeds 10*l.* within 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 1 (the Carriers Act). Stoeniger v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 3 El. & Bl. 549; 2 C. L. R. 1595; 23 L. J., Q. B. 293; 18 Jur. 605.

No an instrument in the following form, "Four months after date pay to my order 300*l.* for value received," addressed to and formally accepted by the party, but having no date and no drawer's name, is neither a bill nor a note. McCall v. Taylor, 19 C. B., N. S. 301; 34 L. J., C. P. 365; 11 Jur., N. S. 529; 12 L. T. 461; 13 W. R. 840.

Bona fide Holder may Fill up.—Where an instrument in the form of a bill of exchange is accepted, with a blank space for the drawer's name, a bona fide holder, or his personal representative, is entitled to fill up the blank as drawer, and thus make the instrument a complete bill of exchange. Dutch v. O'Leary, 5 L. R., Ir. 92.

— Even after Death of Acceptor.—A bill of exchange accepted for valuable consideration, with the drawer's name left blank, may be completed by the drawer's name being added after the death of the acceptor. Carter v. White, 20 Ch. D. 225; 51 L. J., Ch. 465; 46 L. T. 236; 30 W. R. 466.

Debenture Bonds.—A company issued instruments called "debenture bonds," executed under seal and bearing a stamp sufficient for a bond, by which the company bound itself to pay the amount to the bearer simply. One of the objects of the company, stated in their memorandum of association, was, "the borrowing of money and the issue of transferable or other bonds or mortgage debentures;" and the directors had specific powers to issue bonds, obligations or mortgage debentures upon such terms and conditions as they might think fit, and (as a distinct power) to make, draw, accept, or indorse any promissory note, bill of exchange, or other negotiable instrument. The instruments, which were irregularly issued, had found their way into the hands of purchasers for value without notice of any irregularity:—Held, that the purchasers were entitled to prove on them, on the winding up of the company, in their own names. Imperial Land Company of Marseilles, In re, Colborne, Ex parte, 11 L. R., Eq. 478; 40 L. J., Ch. 93; 23 L. T. 515; 19 W. R. 223.

Held, that the fact that in one case the purchase was made after the commencement of the voluntary winding-up, but without notice of it, did not affect the purchasers' position. Ib.

Held, also, that such instruments were promissory notes which passed to the bearer free from any equities which might have attached to them as between the company and the original holders. Ib.

A company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), issued a debenture under the seal of the company, and countersigned by two of the directors and the secretary. By it the company promised, subject to conditions indorsed, to pay to the bearer the sum of 100*l.* upon the 1st of May, 1872, or upon any earlier day upon which it should be entitled to be paid off or redeemed according to the conditions. By the conditions the company contracted not only to pay the money, but also to cause a portion of the debentures to be drawn in a stipulated manner. Of late years a custom of trade had prevailed to treat such bonds as negotiable instruments:—Held, that the debenture was not a negotiable instrument, and that therefore, where it had been stolen from the owner, no action could be maintained upon it against the company by a person who claimed through the thief. Crouch v. Crédit Foncier Company, 8 L. R., Q. B. 374; 42 L. J., Q. B. 183; 29 L. T. 259; 21 W. R. 946.

Deposit Notes.—A deposit note for money, like a deposit note for goods, passes by delivery, and requires no assignment. Woodham v. Anglo-Australian and Universal Family Life Assurance Company, 3 Giff. 238; 8 Jur., N. S. 148; 5 L. T. 629.

Seaman's Advance Note.—A seaman's advance note is not a promissory note nor an order for payment of money. Reg. v. Howie, 11 Cox, C. C. 320.

Mortgage of.—Bills of exchange are not proper subjects of mortgage, and are prima facie presumed to be given in part payment as they become due. Hills v. Parker, 14 L. T. 107—H. L.

2. PAYABLE AT ALL EVENTS.

On Contingency—Generally.—A bill or note payable on a contingency is absolutely void. Palmer v. Pratt, 9 Moore, 358; 2 Bing. 185; S. P., Carlos v. Fancourt, 5 T. R. 432.

Even though accepted. Ralli v. Sarell, D. & R., N. P. C. 33.

An instrument, by which money is payable on a contingency, cannot be given in evidence as a note, on the counts for money lent, or on the account stated, though sued on between the original parties, and expressing value to have been received. Morgan v. Jones, 4 Tyr. 21; 1 C. & J. 162.

The contingency, in order to vitiate a bill or note as such, must be apparent on the face of the instrument. Richards v. Richards, 2 B. & Ad. 447.

The happening of the contingency on which the payment of the instrument is dependent will not cure the defect. Hill v. Halford, 2 B. & P. 413.

So, a note, promising to pay "on the sale or produce, immediately when sold, of the White Hart, St. Albans, Herts, and the goods, value received," cannot be declared upon as a note, though the White Hart and the goods were sold. Ib.

A note to pay when the circumstances of the drawer will admit, without detriment to himself or family, creates no debt. Tootell, Ex parte, 4 Ves. 372.

The following instrument is payable on a contingency, and therefore not a note:—"Twelve months after date I promise to pay A. and B. 500*l.*, to be held by them as collateral security for any moneys now owing to them by C., which they may be unable to recover on realising the securities they now hold, and others which may be placed in their hands by him." Robins v.

May, 3 P. & D. 147; 11 A. & E. 213; 3 Jur. 1188.

An order to pay "14l. 3s. out of the fifth payment, when it should be due, and should be allowed by J. S.," is no bill. Haydock v. Lynch, 2 Ld. Raym. 1563.

An instrument whereby the defendant promised to pay to the plaintiff, or order, a sum certain by instalments; but it was declared, "that it was thereby considered and fully intended by the receiver, as well as the giver of that note of hand, that all installed payments thereupon whatsoever, from and immediately after the decease of the plaintiff, should cease and become null and void to all intents and purposes against the executors," is not a note, being payable only on a contingency. Worley v. Harrison, 5 N. & M. 173; 3 A. & E. 669; 1 H. & W. 426.

An order for a sum "payable ninety days after sight, or when realized," is not a bill, as the latter alternative makes the sum payable on a contingency. Alexander v. Thomas, 16 Q. B. 333; 20 L. J., Q. B. 207; 15 Jur. 173.

— On Receipt of Prize-money.—But a note given to pay 8l. on receipt of prize-money, is a negotiable note. Evans v. Underwood, 1 Wils. 262.

— To Infant on Coming of Age.—A note given to an infant payable when he comes of age is good, if it specifies the particular day. Goss v. Nelson, 1 Burr. 226; 1 Ld. Ken. 498.

— On Condition.—An order or a promise to pay money, "provided the terms mentioned in certain letters written by the drawer were complied with," is not a bill or note. Kingston v. Long, Bayl. Bills, 13; 4 Dougl. 9.

A note in the name of two, but signed by one only, promising to pay "on the death of G. H., provided he leaves either of us sufficient to pay the said sum, or if we shall be otherwise able to pay," is not negotiable. Roberts v. Peake, 1 Burr. 323. See Leeds v. Lancashire, 2 Camp. 205.

"I promise to pay to D. or bearer, on demand, 16l. at sight, by giving up clothes and papers," was sued on as a note.—Held, that if the jury thought that the clothes and papers had been previously given up by the payee to the maker, it was a good note, as the words in that case would only import the value received. Dixon v. Nuttall, 1 C., M. & R. 307; 6 C. & P. 320; 4 Tyr. 1013.

— "As per Memorandum of Agreement."—But an instrument as follows:—"I promise to pay to Mr. S., or his order, at three months after date, 100l. as per memorandum of agreement," is a note. Jury v. Barker, El. Bl. & El. 459; 27 L. J., Q. B. 255; 4 Jur., N. S. 587.

— As to Date of Payment.—A note to pay to A., or order, six weeks after the death of the maker's father, is a negotiable note, for there is no contingency whereby it may never become payable, but it is only uncertain as to the time, which is the case of all bills payable at so many days after sight. Coleman v. Cooke, 2 Str. 1202; S. C. (in error), Willes, 393.

But a note to pay money within so many days after the maker should marry is not negotable. Beardsley v. Baldwin, 2 Stra. 1151; 7 Mod. 417.

Payable out of a Particular Fund.—The following instrument, "Douglas, Isle of Man, 13th July, 1865. On the first day of August next, please to pay Messrs. G., or order, 600l. on account of moneys advanced by me for the Isle of Man Slate and Flag Company. (Signed) J. J. To Messrs. W. and H., official liquidators of the company," is a bill of exchange, as the amount mentioned in it is not directed to be paid out of any particular fund. Griffin v. Weatherby, 3 L. R., Q. B. 753; 37 L. J., Q. B. 280; 18 L. T. 881; 17 W. R. 8; 9 B. & S. 726.

A bill or note, drawn on a particular fund, and not payable generally, is not valid. Dawkes v. Deloraine (Earl), 2 W. Bl. 782; 3 Wils. 207.

An instrument in this form, "Out of my half-pay, which will become due the 1st January, pay to Stevens 15l.," and addressed to a navy agent, is not a bill. Stevens v. Hill, 5 Esp. 247.

A. & Co. being indebted to S., gave him an unstamped letter or order directed to B. & Co., requiring them to pay him 200l. out of moneys which would become payable from B. & Co. to them on the completion of a certain contract. A. & Co. became insolvent and the trustee under their liquidation disputed the validity of the letter:—Held, that the order operated as a bill of exchange, and being unstamped, was not receivable in evidence. Shellard, Ex parte, Adams and Kirby, In re, 17 L. R., Eq. 109; 43 L. J., Bk. 3; 29 L. T. 621; 22 W. R. 152.

An instrument by which A. promises to pay to the bearer 50l., "being the portion of a value, as under, deposited in security for the payment thereof," may be declared upon as a note. Hausoul-lie v. Hartinck, 7 T. R. 733. And see Collis v. Emmett, 1 H. Bl. 313.

An order or promise to pay money "in good East India bonds," or "in cash or Bank of England notes," is in neither case a bill or note. Anon., Bull. N. P. 272; S. P., Ineson, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 225; Re v. Wilcox, Bayl. Bills, 8; Davidson, Ex parte, Buck, 31.

M., by deed, assigned to the plaintiff a ninth part of his share in the residue of the estate of H., deceased. By an order of the 29th of July, 1842, in a suit in Chancery, of Powell v. Norwood, the Vice-Chancellor ordered the defendant in that suit to retain 250l., being part of the produce of M.'s share of the residuary estate of H., to be paid to such person as the defendant and M. should jointly direct. It was afterwards agreed between the parties that 50l., to be considered as part of the 250l., should be paid by the defendant to the solicitors for M. and the plaintiff. An action having been brought to recover this 50l., he tendered in evidence the following document:—To the executors of H., deceased: Powell v. Norwood. Gentlemen,—We do hereby authorize and require you to pay to Mr. Powell, or his order, 250l., being the amount directed by the order of the 29th of July last to be paid to our order. We are your very obedient servants, J. M. Dec. 16th, 1842." This document was signed by J. M. only, and was unstamped:—Held, that it was not a bill, and that it was admissible without a stamp. Russell v. Powell, 14 M. & W. 418; 14 L. J., Ex. 269.

Definite Sum.—An instrument, by which a party promises to pay 65l., "and also all other sums which may be due." is too indefinite to be a note. Smith v. Nightingale, 2 Stark. 375.

A note payable to the representatives of S. three months after his decease, "first deducting thereout any interest or money which S. might owe the maker on any account," is a note for the payment of a definite sum at all events. Barlow v. Broadhurst, 4 Moore, 471.

A. having given his daughter, on her marriage, the stock of a public-house, amounting in value to 1,200*l.*, she and her husband signed the following instrument:—"On demand, we promise to pay to A. or his order for value received in stock, this being intended to stand against me, M. (the daughter), as a set-off for that sum left me in my father's will above my sister Ann's share:—"Held, that this was not a note. Clarke v. Percival, 2 B. & Ad. 661.

A promissory note made on the 25th April, 1872, to pay 170*l.*, with interest at 5 per cent., as follows: The first payment, to wit, 40*l.* or more, to be made on the 1st February, 1873, and 5*l.* on the first day of each month following, until the note and interest should be fully satisfied; and upon default in payment of any of the instalments, the full amount then remaining due is to be forthwith payable,—is a valid note. Cooke v. Horn, 29 L. T. 369.

The following instrument is an agreement, and not a note:—"I agree to pay the plaintiff, or order, 695*l.*, at four instalments, viz., the first on &c., being 200*l.*; the second on &c., being 150*l.*; the third on &c., being 150*l.*; the fourth on &c., being 100*l.*: the remainder 95*l.* to go as a set-off for an order of R. to G., and the remainder of his debt from D. to him." Davies v. Wilkinson, 2 P. & D. 256; 10 A. & E. 98; 3 Jur. 405.

So a paper in the following form:—"I owe Mrs. E. 6*l.*, which is to be paid by instalments, for rent. Signed, R. J. M.," is not a note, as no time is stipulated for the payment of the instalments. Moffat v. Edwards, Car. & M. 16.

A paper consisting of a promise to "pay A., or order, 13*l.* for value received, together with interest at 5*l.* per cent. per annum, and all fines according to rule," is not a note, on account of the introduction of the last words. Airey v. Fearnsides, 4 M. & W. 168; 2 Jur. 596.

"On demand, I promise to pay Mr. S. 50*l.*, in consideration of his foregoing and forbearing an action for damages, ascertained by consent to amount to that sum, by reason of the injuries sustained by his wife in respect of my non-repair of a footway," is a note. Shelton v. James, 1 C. & K. 136; 5 Q. B. 199; D. & M. 331; 13 L. J., Q. B. 90; 7 Jur. 1130.

An instrument in the following terms: "I undertake to pay to R. L. 6*l.* 4*s.* for a suit of, ordered by D. P.," is not a note, but good as a guarantee, as the consideration can be collected by necessary inference from the instrument itself. Jarvis v. Wilkins, 7 M. & W. 410; 5 Jur. 9.

Certainty of Payee.—A bill or note payable to the order of a person is payable to himself. Smith v. McClure, 5 East, 476; 2 Smith, 43.

And a note payable to A. without the words, or bearer, or order, is valid. Smith v. Kendall, 6 T. R. 123; 1 Esp. 231.

To constitute a bill, the payee must be a person capable of being ascertained at the time the instrument is drawn. Yates v. Nash, 8 C. B., N. S. 581; 29 L. J., C. P. 307; 6 Jur., N. S. 1343; 2 L. T. 430; 8 W. R. 764.

Therefore a bill payable "to the order of the treasurer for the time being" of a benevolent institution, is null and void. Id.

A document as follows: "On demand, we jointly and severally promise to pay to Messrs. W. P. & M., or to their order, or the major part of them, 100*l.*," is a note upon which the three payees may maintain an action. Watson v. Evans, 1 H. & C. 662; 32 L. J., Ex. 137.

— Trustees.—"On demand, I promise to pay to the trustees of the Wesleyan Chapel, Harrogate, or their treasurer for the time being, 100*l.*," is a good note, for there is no uncertainty in the payees, as the trustees alone are to be considered as payees, and their treasurer as their agent merely to receive payment. Holmes v. Jacques, 1 L. R., Q. B. 376; 35 L. J., Q. B. 130; 12 Jur., N. S. 486; 14 L. T. 252.

— "A. or B. and C."—A note whereby the maker promised to pay to A. or to B. and C. a sum therein specified, is not a note. An action cannot be maintained upon such an instrument, even by the payee against the maker, although it is stated on the face of the note to be given for value received. Blanchenhagen v. Blundell, 2 B. & A. 417. And see Morgan v. Jones, 1 Tyr. 21; 1 C. & J. 162.

"Nine months after date, I promise to pay to the secretary for the time being of the Indian Laudable and Mutual Insurance Society, or order, company's rupees twenty thousand." In an action upon this instrument, as upon a note, after the nine months, by the person who was secretary then and also at the time of making the instrument:—Held, that the instrument was not a note, the payee being uncertain at the time of making it. Cowie v. Stirling, 6 El. & Bl. 333; 25 L. J., Q. B. 335; 2 Jur., N. S. 663—Ex. Ch.; S. C. nom. Storm v. Stirling, in Q. B., 3 El. & Bl. 832; 23 L. J., Q. B. 298; 17 Jur. 788, affirmed.

By Instalments.—A note, payable by instalments, is assignable within 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. Oridge v. Sherbone, 11 M. & W. 374; 12 L. J., Ex. 313; 7 Jur. 402.

And the maker is entitled to three days of grace, on the falling due of each instalment. Id.

But if such a note is subject to a condition, that, on default in payment of the first instalment, the whole shall become payable, and default is made, an indorser is liable for the whole amount. Carlton v. Keenaly, 12 M. & W. 139; 1 D. & L. 331; 13 L. J., Ex. 64.

A non-transferable note, payable in two instalments, or, on default in the former, at once, is within 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9, s. 1, and the maker has three days' grace. Miller v. Biddle, 11 Jur., N. S. 980; 13 L. T. 334; 14 W. R. 110.

In an action on a bill payable by instalments, it appeared that the action was commenced on the last day of grace, but as there was no plea to that effect, a nonsuit was refused. Gaskin v. Davis, 2 F. & F. 294. See Padwick v. Turner, 11 Q. B. 124.

3. DISTINCTION BETWEEN NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS AND AGREEMENTS.

What Constitutes a Negotiable Instrument.—An instrument in the following terms: "Received of Mr. B. 100*l.*, which I promise to pay on demand, with lawful interest. J. D. is a note. Green v. Davies, 6 D. & R. 306; 4 B. & C. 235; 1 C. & P. 451; S. P., Ashby v. Ashby, 3 M. & P. 186.

So this instrument: "W. W. lent to J. R. 19l. 19s. 11d., to receive five per cent. for the same 19l. 19s. 11d.; to pay on demand to W. W., giving J. R. six months' notice for the same," is a note and not an agreement. Walker v. Roberts, Car. & M. 590.

"Memorandum, Aug. 25, 1837. I, Benj. Payne, had 5l. 5s. for one month, of my mother, from this date, to be paid to her by me, Benj. Payne," is a note. Shrivel v. Payne, 8 D. P. C. 441; 4 Jur. 485.

An instrument in this form: "John Mason, 14th Feb., 1836, borrowed of Mary Ann Mason, his sister, 14l., in cash, as per loan, in promise of payment, of which I am truly thankful for, and shall never be forgotten by me, John Mason, your affectionate brother. 14l.," is a note. Ellis v. Mason, 7 D. P. C. 598; 2 W., W. & H. 70; 3 Jur. 406.

Semble, that an instrument in the following terms is a note:—"I have received the imperfect books, which, together with the cash overpaid on the settlement of your account, amounts to 80l. 7s., which sum I will pay in two years." Wheatley v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 533; 2 Gale, 140.

So a paper, "I O U eighty-five pounds, to be paid May the 5th," is a note. Waithman v. Elsee, 1 C. & K. 35.

T. made a note in the following terms: "On demand I promise to pay H., or order, 500l., for value received, with interest; and I have lodged with H. the counterpart leases signed by D., for ground let by me to them as a collateral security for the 500l. and interest."—Held, that this might be sued on as a note, and read in evidence, though stamped as a note only. Fancourt v. Thorne, 9 Q. B. 312; 15 L. J., Q. B. 344; 10 Jur. 639.

What an Agreement.]—An instrument, acknowledging the receipt of drafts for the payment of money, and promising to repay the money, is an agreement and not a note. Williamson v. Bennett, 2 Camp. 417; S. P., Scholey v. Walsby, Peake, 24.

"I have received 20l., which I borrowed of you, and I have to be accountable for the said sum with interest," is an agreement, and not a note. Horne v. Redfearn, 4 Bing. N. C. 433; 6 Scott, 260; 2 Jur. 376.

An instrument whereby B. acknowledges a loan of money, and promises re-payment, and engages to pay an unliquidated demand out of the interest, and to pay the principal and the remainder of the interest to the lender, his executors, administrators and assigns, is not a note, and it is properly stamped with an agreement stamp. Bolton v. Dugdale, 1 N. & M. 412; 4 B. & Ad. 619.

A bill, expressing the terms of an agreement between a landlord and an in-coming tenant, is not admissible in evidence without an agreement stamp. Nicholson v. Smith, 3 Stark. 128.

An agreement, between the plaintiff and defendant, for the sale of a lease, concluding with the following clause, signed by both parties:—"The (plaintiff) doth, at the same time and place, lend to the (defendant) 84l. in cash, to be repaid by instalments," is not a note. Mitchell, v. Westover, 14 Jur. 816; S. P., Follett v. Moore, 4 Ex. 410.

An action was brought upon the following instrument as a note:—"Market Rasen, July 1st, 1836. Borrowed and received of the Lincoln and Lindsey Banking Company 100l., which we jointly and severally promise to pay to M. C. and W. W. (trustees of the banking company), or their order, on demand, with lawful interest for the same. Witness, T. S., sen., T. S., jun., T. D." The following indorsement was written on the back of the note at the time of making:—"The within note is given for securing floating advances from the Lincoln and Lindsey Banking Company to the within-named T. S., sen., with lawful interest for the same from the respective times when such advances have been or may be made, together with commission, stamps, postages, and all usual charges and disbursements, not exceeding in the whole, at any one time, 100l., within mentioned. Witness, T. S., sen., T. S., jun., T. D.:"—Held, that the instrument and indorsement required an agreement stamp. Cholmley v. Darley, 14 M. & W. 344; 14 L. J., Ex. 328.

Acknowledgments or Memorandums merely.]

—A document in the following form: "I have this day received a bill of exchange, which I hold as your attorney, to recover the value from the parties, or to make such other arrangement for your benefit as may appear to me in my professional capacity reasonable and proper," is a mere acknowledgment of the duty which the party took upon himself to perform, and therefore admissible without a stamp. Longdon v. Wilson, 7 B. & C. 640; 2 M. & R. 10.

A paper stating that the party signing it has received certain bills in his hands, which he has "to get discounted, or return on demand," does not require an agreement stamp. Mullett v. Hutchinson, 1 M. & R. 522; 7 B. & C. 639; 3 C. & P. 92.

"Mem. Mr. S. has this day deposited with me 500l. on the sale of 10,300l., 3l. per cent. Spanish, to be returned on demand," is a memorandum of the deposit of money to be returned, and not a note. Sibree v. Tripp, 15 M. & W. 23; 15 L. J., Ex. 318.

A document in this form: "Borrowed, this day, of J. H., 100l. for one or two months, cheque 100l. On the Naval Bank. J. D.," is a mere acknowledgment, and does not require a stamp, either as an agreement or a note. Thyne v. Dewdney, 21 L. J., Q. B. 278.

The following document is admissible in evidence without either a note or an agreement stamp: "I, J. D., have this day borrowed of J. C. 300l. at 4l. per hundred, payable yearly." Cory v. Davis, 14 C. B., N. S. 370.

The following document, "Nottingham, August 3, 1844. Borrowed of Mr. J. W. 200l., to account for on behalf of the Alliance Club, at — months' notice, if required," is not a note. White v. North, 3 Ex. 689; 18 L. J., Ex. 316.

Nor is a similar instrument with the blank filled up with the word "two," a note. Id.

Nor is the following instrument a note:—"Drury v. Vaughan. In consideration of W. D. not taking any further proceedings in the actions, I undertake with W. D. that I will pay him 3l. 5s. every quarter of a year from this day, until the whole of the principal now due from J. and V. to Mr. Drury—26l. 1s., with lawful interest, be paid and satisfied; the first of such quarterly payments to become due on the 30th of October next. It is understood that this undertaking is not to be a release or discharge of the note signed by Messrs. Vaughan to W. Drury, but as an additional security for the above-mentioned amount now due on such note, with the interest." Drury v. Macaulay, 16 M. & W. 146; 16 L. J., Ex. 31.

W. & Sons wrote to a person to whom they had supplied type as follows, viz.:—"Dear Sir,—We authorize you to pay on our account, to the order of G., 6,000*l.* at the following periods, deducting the amount from the quarterly accounts furnished to you and to E. & S., viz. 11th November, 1843, 1,000*l.* W. & Sons." Underneath which the person, to whom it was addressed, wrote thus, viz.:—"To W. S.,—Having received the foregoing authority from W. & Sons, I undertake to make you the payments above stated. A. S.:—"Held, that the first letter did not require to be stamped as a note or bill. Hamilton v. Spottinwoode, 4 Ex. 200; 18 L. J. Ex. 393.

I O U.]—An I O U is neither a note nor a receipt, and may be received in evidence to prove an acknowledgment of a debt, without any stamp. Childers v. Boulnois, D. & R. N. P. C. 8; S. P., Fisher v. Leslie, 1 Esp. 426.

An acknowledgment in this form: "Sept. 15, 1824, Mr. T. has left in my hands 200*l.* J. A.," does not require a stamp. Tomkins v. Ashby, 6 B. & C. 541; 9 D. & R. 543.

A memorandum, "I owe J. G. 200*l.*, value received. J. C.," does not require a stamp. Gould v. Coombes, 1 C. B. 543; 14 L. J., C. P. 175; 9 Jur. 494.

"1839, Nov. 1.—I O U 45*l.* 13*s.*, which I borrowed of Mrs. M.; and to pay her five per cent. till paid. R. T.," does not require a stamp, either as a note or as an agreement. Melanotte v. Teasdale, 13 M. & W. 216; 13 L. J., Ex. 358; S. P., Taylor v. Steele, 16 M. & W. 665; 16 L. J., Ex. 177; 11 Jur. 806; Smith v. Smith, 1 F. & F. 539.

Warrant annexed to Debenture.]—A debenture issued by a company under its common seal, in the following form:—"The Governor and Company of C. promise to pay to —, 500*l.*, value received; and, to pay to the holder of the warrants annexed, on presentment as they shall fall due, interest on the 500*l.* at 5*l.* per cent." The form of the warrants annexed was as follows:—"The Governor and Company of Copper Miners in England. Warrant for 12*l.* 10*s.*, for half a year's interest on debenture No. 5252, due 15th January, 1849. W. I., secretary." And as they became due they were cut off, and presented at the company's office for payment:—"Held, that the warrant was not a bill or a note, and did not require a stamp. Enthoven v. Hoyle, 13 C. B. 375; 21 L. J., C. P. 100; 16 Jur. 272—Ex. Ch.

More Request to Pay.]—A paper in these words: "Mr. L., please to let the bearer have 7*l.*, and place it to my account, and you will oblige your humble servant, R. S.," is not a bill. Little v. Slackford, M. & M. 171.

4. WHETHER BILLS OR NOTES.

Generally.]—If it is ambiguous whether an instrument is a bill or a note, the person who receives it may treat it as against the maker as either. Edis v. Bury, 6 B. & C. 433; 9 D. & R. 492; 2 C. & P. 559.

An instrument which is in the form of a note, but which is in addition addressed to a third party, who accepts it, is a note. Id.

And may be declared on as such. Block v. Bell, 1 M. & Rob. 149.

The directors of a bank at Calcutta, under the authority of the deed of settlement of the bank, signed and issued instruments in the following form:—"Union Bank Post Bill, Calcutta, July 1. 1847. Company's rupees, 10,000. At sixty days after sight of this our first bill of exchange, we promise to pay on account of the proprietors of the Union Bank of Calcutta to the order of C. L. & Co. the sum of Company's rupees 10,000, value received." These instruments were discounted in London, and dishonoured after acceptance at Calcutta:—"Held, in an action by an indorsee against a shareholder of the bank, that these instruments were bills of exchange. Forbes v. Marshall, 11 Ex. 166; 24 L. J., Ex. 305.

Seemingly that such instruments may be declared on, either as notes or bills. Id.

An instrument in the form of a bill, drawn upon a bank, by the manager of one of its branch banks, by order of the directors, may be declared upon as a note. Miller v. Thompson, 3 M. & G. 576; 4 Scott, N. R. 204; 1 D., N. S. 199.

An instrument purporting on the face of it to be a bill drawn by A., payable to the plaintiff or order, was accepted by B., and handed to the plaintiff in satisfaction of a claim for rent due to her from A. In the place where the direction to the drawee is usually found, the name and address of the payee were inserted. The whole instrument (except the drawer's name) was in the handwriting of B.:—"Held, that the payee was entitled to recover upon it, as a note. Fielder v. Marshall, 9 C. B., N. S. 606; 30 L. J., C. P. 158; 7 Jur., N. S. 777; 3 L. T. 858.

An instrument in the following form: "Two months after date, I promise to pay to T. R. L., or order, 99*l.* 15*s.* H. Oliver." Underneath was written, on the left hand of the instrument, "J. E. Oliver." Across it was written "Accepted: payable S. & Co., bankers, London, E. Oliver." "E. Oliver" was signed by J. E. Oliver,—may be sued upon as a bill drawn by H. Oliver upon, and accepted by J. E. Oliver. Lloyd v. Oliver, 18 Q. B. 471; 21 L. J., Q. B. 307; 16 Jur. 833.

Such an instrument would be as good as a bill as against the drawer, even before acceptance. Id.

An instrument in the form of a bill, except that the word "at" is substituted for "to" before the name of the drawee, is a bill, and not a note. Shuttleworth v. Stephens, 1 Camp. 407.

Particularly where "at" is written so as to be scarcely legible, for the purpose of deceit. Allan v. Mawson, 4 Camp. 115.

Omission of Drawer's Name.]—It is not absolutely essential that the drawee's name should be mentioned on the bill by the drawer, if there is a place of payment fixed, and the drawee accepts the bill in such form, by writing his name thereon, which will be an adoption of the bill on his part. Gray v. Milner, 3 Moore, 90; 8 Taunt. 739; 2 Stark. 336.

Description of Instrument in Indictment for Forgery.—An instrument payable to the order of A., and directed “at Messrs. P. & Co., Bankers,” may be described in an indictment for forgery as a bill. Reg. v. Smith, 2 M. C. C. 295.

A writing directed to A. & Co., requiring them to pay the bearer on demand a sum of money therein specified, is not, on an indictment for forgery, a bill. Reg. v. Curry, 2 M. C. C. 218.

An instrument drawn by A. upon B., requiring him to pay to the order of C. a certain sum, at a certain time, “without acceptance,” is a bill, and may be so described in an indictment for forgery. Reg. v. Kinnear, 2 M. & Rob. 117.

See further, CRIMINAL LAW.

Extrinsic Evidence—Facts connected with making—Stamp.—Action for 500*l.* upon a promissory note in the following form: “Witness, John Hutley, Rivenhall, October 2, 1860. Three months’ notice I promise to pay Mr. Jonathan Hutley interest 5*l.* per cent. per annum for 500*l.* value received. Dan Marshall, Charles Marshall. [5*s.* stamp.] 500*l.*” It was admitted that upon the 2nd October 500*l.* was advanced by Jonathan Hutley to Dan Marshall, and that Charles Marshall, the defendant, signed as surety for his brother:—Held, a good promissory note for 500*l.* Hutley v. Marshall, 46 L. T. 186—C. A.

—Figures differing from Words.—Where the words in the body of a note are ambiguous, the figures at the bottom of the note and the stamp may be looked at in construing them. Id.

5. QUALIFYING STIPULATIONS.

Indorsed on Note.—A stipulation indorsed on a note by the payee, is not to be taken as part of that instrument, without evidence that it was written at the time the note was made. Stone v. Metcalfe, 4 Camp. 217; 1 Stark. 53.

A note promising to pay J. F. or order a sum certain, the amount of the purchase-money of a quantity of fir, belonging to H., with an indorsement thereon at the time of making the note, that it was given on condition that it should be void if any dispute should arise between H. and W. respecting the fir, is not a note within 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. Hartley v. Wilkinson, 4 M. & S. 25; 1 Camp. 127.

In pursuance of an agreement made in consideration of the postponement of the trial of a cause, the defendant and his attorney gave a joint and several note, which the agreement stipulated should be held as a security for any damages to be recovered, and to be given up if the defendant obtained a verdict. Immediately after the note was signed, an indorsement, not signed by the parties, was made upon it, stating that the note was given upon the condition mentioned in the agreement:—Held, that the indorsement formed no part of the note, therefore there was no contingency in the terms of it, and that it was consequently admissible in evidence stamped as a note. Brill v. Crick, 1 Gale, 441; S. C., Brill v. Cock, 1 M. & W. 232.

To an action by a payee against one of two makers of a note, he pleaded that he made the note jointly with E., for his accommodation, and as his surety only, to secure payment of a loan made by the plaintiff to E., and that at the time of the note being signed by the defendant and

E., a memorandum was by agreement between the plaintiff, E., and the defendant indorsed upon the note, and signed by E., in the following words: “Memorandum, this note is to be paid off within three years from date;” and that the plaintiff did not compel payment of the note within the period of three years, which elapsed before the action:—Held, that this plea afforded no defence. Lawrence v. Walmaley, 12 C. B., N. S. 812.

Avoidance of Statute of Limitations by.—A note was given more than six years before action, with a memorandum indorsed on the back, by the payee, to the effect that they undertook that no demand should be made for payment during the life of the maker. An action being brought, within six years after the death of the maker against his executor, he pleaded the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that the payee was entitled to recover, if not upon the note itself, at all events, on a count setting forth the effect of the arrangement. Watkins v. Figg, 11 W. R. 258.

“Accepted on myself, payable everywhere,” written in Margin.—The words “accepted on myself, payable everywhere,” written in the margin of a note payable at a specified time after sight by the maker at the time of making it, constitute no part of the original instrument, and need not be noticed in the declaration. Splitgerber v. Kohn, 1 Stark. 125.

Making Instrument an Agreement.—An instrument in the form of a joint and several note, signed by three, is indorsed with a memorandum made at the time of signature, which states that it is taken as a security for all the balances, to the amount of the sum within specified, which one of the three might happen to owe to the payee; that it shall be in force for six months, and that no money shall be liable to be called for sooner in any case. In an action against one of the sureties, the payee cannot declare on this instrument as a note, payable either on demand or at six months after date. Between these parties the instrument is an agreement, and must be stamped and declared upon as such. Leeds v. Lancashire, 2 Camp. 205.

As to Deposit of Title-Deeds—Mortgage Stamp.—An instrument, which in other respects was a note, and had been properly stamped as such before making, contained in the body of it a memorandum that the maker had deposited title-deeds with the payee, as a collateral security. After it was made, it was stamped with a mortgage stamp, on payment of the penalty:—Held, that this was an assignable note, and that it might be sued on by an indorsee, though the mortgage stamp was put on after the making, and though there was no assignment stamp. Wise v. Charlton, 4 A. & E. 786; 6 N. & M. 364; 2 H. & W. 49.

Words qualifying Acceptance—Question of Fact.—Upon a bill, dated 8th September, 1856, drawn on B. & Co., payable in London, at four months after date, an acceptance was written as follows: “Accepted. Payable at Messrs. Overend, Gurney & Co., London. No. 1756. Due 11 Decr. 1856. B. & Co.” The words before the signature were written in red ink, and in a hand differing from the signature:—Held, that if it was a question of law, the bill must be taken to have been accepted according to its tenor; and that if it was a question of fact, there was evidence that the words "Due 11 Decr. 1856" were not intended to qualify the acceptance. Funshawe v. Peet, 2 H. & N. 1; 26 L. J., Ex. 314.

6. PARTIES TO WHOM PAYABLE.

Title of Holder to.—The title of a creditor to a negotiable security given to him on account of a pre-existing debt, and received by him bonâ fide and without notice of any infirmity of title on the part of the debtor, is indefeasible, whether that security is payable at a future time or on demand. Currie v. Misa, 10 L. R., Ex. 153; 44 L. J., Ex. 94; 23 W. R. 450—Ex. Ch. Affirmed in Dom. Proc., 1 App. Cas. 544; 45 L. J., Q. B. 852; 35 L. T. 414; 24 W. R. 1049.

Father and Son having same Name.—Proof of a note payable to A. generally is primâ facie evidence of a promise to A. the father, and not A. the son, the names being the same; and A. the son, although styled in the declaration A. the younger, bringing the action, and being in the possession of the note, is entitled to recover upon it. Sweeting v. Fowler, 1 Stark. 106.

In an action on a note payable to J. H., and indorsed by J. H., to the plaintiff, it appeared that there were two persons of the same name, father and son, and there was no evidence to shew to which of them the note had been given, but it appeared that the indorsement was in the handwriting of the son:—Held, that although, primâ facie, the presumption would be that the father was meant, that presumption was rebutted by the son's indorsement. Stebbing v. Spicer, 8 C. B. 827; 19 L. J., C. P. 24.

Executors.—In an action on a note payable "to the executors of the late W. B.," the proof that they are the executors of W. B. is the production of the probate of his will, and the reading in evidence so much of it as shews that he appointed them his executors. Hamilton v. Aston, 1 C. & K. 679.

Identity of Holder.—A plaintiff suing upon a note, which purports to be payable to a person of a different name, may shew by evidence that he was the person intended. Willis v. Barrett, 2 Stark. 29.

A letter written by the drawer to the payee of a bill, expressing his apprehension that it would be dishonoured, coupled with the fact that the place to which the bill is directed is the usual residence of the drawer, when in England, is evidence from which a jury may infer the identity of the drawer and drawee. Roach v. Ostler, 1 M. & R. 120.

Identity of Indorser—Foreign Bill—Forgery.—Where a foreign bill was drawn by A. upon, and accepted by B., payable to the order of C., and a person representing himself to be C. indorsed the bill to D. for value, and the alleged indorsement turned out to be forged:—Held, that in an action by indorsee against acceptor, it was unnecessary to give positive proof of the identity of the indorser, as the person to whom the bill was really payable; primâ facie evidence being sufficient for that purpose. Bulkeley v. Butler, 3 D. & R. 625; 2 B. & C. 434.

7. FICTITIOUS PAYEES.

Bill Payable to—Void.—A bill payable to a fictitious person or order is completely void. Bennett v. Furnell, 1 Camp. 130.

An indorsee of a bill payable to a fictitious payee cannot recover against the acceptor. Id.

Such a bill is not a bill payable to bearer. Were v. Taylor, 1 Camp. 131, cited.

When Fact is known to all Parties concerned in drawing Bill.—Where a bill was drawn by the defendant and others, on the defendant alone, in favour of a fictitious person (which was known to all the parties concerned in drawing the bill), and the defendant received the value of it from the second indorser:—Held, that a bonâ fide holder for a valuable consideration might recover the amount of it, in an action against the acceptor, for money paid, or money received. Tatlock v. Harris, 3 T. R. 174.

If a bill is drawn in favour of a fictitious payee, and that circumstance is known as well to the acceptor as the drawer, and the name of such payee is indorsed on the bill as indorsing it to the drawer, who indorses it to an innocent indorsee for a valuable consideration, the latter may recover on it against the acceptor, as on a bill payable to bearer. Gibson v. Minet (in error), 1 H. Bl. 569; 3 T. R. 481; 2 Bro. P. C. 48. And see Collis v. Emmett, 1 H. Bl. 313.

A person discounting a bill payable to a fictitious payee, for the benefit of the drawers, and with knowledge of the transaction, cannot recover against the acceptor. Hunter v. Jeffery, Peake's Add. Cas. 146.

Evidence to prove such Knowledge.—A. drew a bill upon B., payable to a fictitious payee or order, and indorsed in the name of such payee, which B. accepted. In an action by an innocent indorsee, for a valuable consideration, against B. in order to draw an inference, either that B. at the time of his acceptance knew the name of the payee to be fictitious, or that B. had given an authority to A. to draw the bill, by having given a general authority to A. to draw bills on B. payable to fictitious persons, evidence is admissible of irregular and suspicious transactions and circumstances relating to other bills drawn by A. on B. payable to fictitious payees and accepted by B., though none of these transactions or circumstances have any efficient relation to the bill in question, and though none of them prove that B. accepted any of those other bills with a knowledge that the payees mentioned in them were fictitious. Gibson v. Hunter (in error), 6 Bro. P. C. 255; 2 H. Bl. 288.

Evidence to shew that Payee is Fictitious Person.—In an action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill payable to A. or order, he may give in evidence, that the person who indorsed to the plaintiff was not the real payee, though of the same name, and though there was no addition to the name of the payee on the bill. Mead v. Young, 4 T. R. 28.

And so where a bill is drawn in the name of a fictitious person, payable to the order of the drawer, the acceptor is considered as undertaking to pay to the order of the person who signed as the drawer; and, therefore, an indorsee may adduce evidence to show that the signatures of the supposed drawer to the bill and to the first indorsement are in the same handwriting. Cooper v. Meyer, 10 B. & C. 469.

Acceptor estopped from disputing Validity of Bill.—A bill purporting to be drawn by a really existing firm, payable to their order, and to be indorsed by them, was negotiated by the acceptor, with that indorsement upon it. The drawing and indorsement were forgeries:—Held, that, if the bill was accepted and negotiated by the acceptor, with knowledge of the forgery, he was estopped to deny the indorsement, as well as the drawing. Beeman v. Duck, 11 M. & W. 251; 12 L. J., Ex. 198.

But, semble, where the name of the real party, as the drawer, is forged, a party who accepts in ignorance of the forgery is estopped to deny the drawing only, but not the indorsement, although in the same handwriting. Ib.

An acceptor supra protest of a bill for the honour of the drawer, is, like the drawer himself, estopped from denying that the bill is a valid bill, and consequently, it is not competent to set up as a defence to an action against him by an indorsee, that the payee is a fictitious person, and that he was ignorant of that fact at the time when he accepted the bill. Phillips v. In Thurn, 18 C. B., N. S. 694; 11 Jur., N. S. 489; 12 L. T. 457; 13 W. R. 750.

8. INTERPRETATION OF.

Where a note stated that J. S. promised to pay to A., or order, a certain sum, and was signed J. S., or else J. G.:—Held, not a note of J. G. Ferris v. Bond, 4 B. & A. 679.

A note whereby a party promises "to pay or cause to be paid 130*l.*" is a note. Lorell v. Hill, 6 C. & P. 238.

An order to pay so many "pound," instead of "pounds," is a bill or note. Res v. Post, Bayl. Bills, 8.

A bill for twenty-five, seventeen shillings, and three pence, is a bill for twenty-five pounds, seventeen shillings, and three pence. Phipps v. Tanner, 5 C. & P. 488.

A bill drawn in Ireland for 25*l.* 18*s.* sterling, payable in England, meant English money. Taylor v. Booth, 1 C. & P. 286.

A foreign bill is accepted for the payment of 100*l.* sterling: the omission of the word "sterling" is not a material variance. Glossop v. Jacob, 1 Stark. 69; 4 Camp. 227.

A note in these words, "Borrowed of J. S. 10*l.*, which I promise not to pay," the word "not" may be rejected, as a man cannot be allowed to say, I am a cheat, and have defrauded. Russel v. Lanstaffe, Bayl. Bills, 6.

A note payable on demand, with interest, is a note payable immediately. Norton v. Ellam, 2 M. & W. 461; 1 Jur. 433.

A bill payable at sight is not to be considered as a bill payable on demand. Anson v. Thomas, Bayl. Bills, 79; S. C., nom. Janson v. Thomas, 3 Dougl. 421. See Dixon v. Nuttall, 1 C., M. & R. 307; 6 C. & P. 320; 4 Tyr. 1013.

An indorsee may recover against the acceptor of a bill dated on a Sunday, when there is no evidence that the bill was accepted on that day. Begbie v. Levy, 1 Tyr. 130; 1 C. & J. 180.

A bill must, in the absence of evidence to raise a presumption to the contrary, be taken to have been drawn on the day on which it bears date. Anderson v. Weston, 8 Scott, 583; 4 Jur. 105.

In an action on a note, it was proved that the note was made and given to the holder in January, 1855, it bore date "1st January, 1854," but across it at the time it was delivered by the maker, "Due 4th March, 1855." In fact, the date of 1854 was a mistake for 1855:—Held, that the memorandum that the note was due on 4th March, 1855, was equivalent to a correction of the error in the date, and being made before the note was issued, operated as a correction. Fitch v. Jones, 5 El. & Bl. 238; 24 L. J., Q. B. 293; 1 Jur., N. S. 854.

9. DRAWN, INDORSED, OR ACCEPTED ON SPECIAL ACCOUNT.

Against Special Goods—Right of Drawer to have Proceeds of Sale applied to Retirement of Bill.—By the custom of Liverpool cotton brokers (and semble also as a general proposition), a drawer of a bill drawn against certain specified goods deposited with the acceptor, is entitled, as against the latter, to have the proceeds of such goods applied, in the first instance in retiring the bill, before any part of such proceeds can be applied in discharge of what may be due from the drawer to the acceptor upon the general account between them. Inman v. Clara, Johns, 769; 5 Jur., N. S. 89; 32 L. T., O. S. 353; S. P., London and Westminster Bank, Ex parte, 3 L. T. 484.

The drawer may transfer this right to a party discounting the bill, who may maintain a suit in equity to have the proceeds of the goods in the hands of the acceptor applied accordingly. Ib.

But a party discounting the bill would have no equity to maintain a suit for this purpose in the absence of such a transfer. Ib.

If goods are consigned by merchants in India to merchants in England, they are subject to the general lien which the merchants in England may have for any balance against the merchants in India, though the bills of lading were accompanied by bills of exchange in favour of a third firm of merchants. And a realization of the cargo by the consignees does not make them liable to pay the bills of exchange annexed to the bills of lading, unless by some act of their own they have made themselves liable. Frith v. Forbes, 31 L. J., Ch. 793; 7 L. T. 261; 10 W. R. 658. Affirmed on appeal, 8 Jur., N. S. 1115; 11 W. R. 4.—L. J.

T., carrying on business on his own account in America, and being also a partner in the firm of T. & Co. in England, drew bills on T. & Co., which he employed T. & B., another American firm, to sell for him, undertaking to provide T. & Co. with remittances to meet them at maturity. T. & B., in accordance with their usual course of dealing with T., indorsed the bills and sold them, giving to T. bills on their agent in England for the amount. T. being on the eve of insolvency, sent the bills so received from T. & B. to the English firm of T. & Co., with instructions to accept the bills drawn by himself, and to hold the remittance for the purpose of meeting the payment thereof on the receipt of the remittance. T. & Co. accepted the bills drawn by T., and, disregarding the instructions, handed the bills of T. & B. to L., in accordance with a previous promise made to him, in order to enable him to meet some liabilities incurred by him on behalf of T. & Co. :—Held, that these bills were specifically appropriated by T. to meeting the bills drawn by him; that T. & Co. had received the remittances as agents of T., who had remitted them in a character distinct from the partnership in the firm of T. & Co.; consequently T. & Co. had no other authority to apply the remittances to any other purpose than that directed, and L., who had notice of the specific appropriation, was bound to account to T. & B. for the proceeds. Thayer v. Lister, 30 L. J., Ch. 427; 4 L. T. 50.

The indorsee of a bill has a lien upon property deposited with the drawer as security. Perfect, Ex parte, 1 Mont. 25.

— Bankruptcy of Payee.—M., in March, 1859, consigned oats to the correspondents of the plaintiffs at Melbourne for sale, the proceeds to be remitted to the plaintiffs, and against this consignment the plaintiffs accepted, in favour of M., a bill at four months for 600*l.*, it being agreed that the plaintiffs should be repaid that sum out of the proceeds of the sale of the oats; any deficiency to be made good by M., who was also to pay interest to the plaintiffs on the 600*l.*, from the time the bill became due till the arrival in this country of the proceeds of the oats. In June, 1859, M. became bankrupt, the plaintiffs' acceptance remaining in his hands unnegotiated. His assignees took possession of the bill, and paid it into the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, for the estate of M., and the bill was presented to the plaintiffs' bankers at maturity, and paid by them, the plaintiffs being in ignorance of the fact of its having remained in M.'s hands unnegotiated. The account sales of the shipment were received from Melbourne in 1860, shewing that M.'s estate had been overpaid to the extent of 269*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* :—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover back that money from the assignees. De Pass v. Bell, 10 C. B., N. S. 517.

10. SALE OF BILLS.

Responsibility of Vendor.—A vendor of a bill impliedly warrants that it is of the kind and description that it purports on the face of it to be. Gompertz v. Bartlett, 2 El. & Bl. 849; 2 C. L. R. 395; 23 L. J., Q. B. 65; 18 Jur. 266.

A vendor of a bill, though not a party to the bill, is responsible for the genuineness of the instrument; and if the name of one of the parties is a forgery, and the bill becomes valueless, the vendee is entitled to recover the price. Gurney v. Womersley, 4 El. & Bl. 139; 3 C. L. R. 3; 24 L. J., Q. B. 46; 1 Jur., N. S. 328.

For special Purpose—Misapplication of Proceeds of Sale.—Where bills are remitted for sale, and the proceeds directed to be applied to a specific purpose, the property in the bills remains in the remitter until the purpose for which they were remitted is satisfied. And where the money realized by the sale is wrongfully applied by the agent the remitter is entitled to recover the value of the bills from the purchaser of them, who has notice of the purpose for which they were remitted, and the misapplication of the proceeds by the agent. Mutytoll Seal v. Dent, 8 Moore, P. C. C. 319.

II. STAMPING.

1. INLAND BILLS AND NOTES.

Description of Instruments.—A note payable to bearer, generally, is in law payable on demand. Whitlock v. Underwood, 3 D. & R. 356; 2 B. & C. 157.

But a note payable to A., generally, is not one payable to bearer on demand, but a note payable otherwise than to bearer on demand. Cheetham v. Butler, 5 B. & Ad. 837; 2 N. & M. 453; S. P. Dixon v. Chambers, 1 C., M. & R. 845; 5 Tyr. 502; 1 Gale, 14.

A joint and several note was made by several parties concerned in a joint undertaking, for the purpose of securing the repayment of a loan of money; and one of the parties signed it some days after the party who borrowed the money:—Held, that the note did not require an additional stamp, if the last signature was put before the money was advanced, or if the party last signing had promised to sign the note before the advancement of the money, notwithstanding it might not have been signed till afterwards. White, Ex parte, 2 Deac. & Chit. 334.

If a note is signed by A., and subsequently by B. as a surety for A., unless such signature of B. is in virtue of a previous agreement, it will be void without an additional stamp. Clerk v. Blackstock, Holt, 474.

Whether Document is Debenture or Promissory Note.—An instrument issued by a company incorporated under the Joint Stock Companies Acts, 1856 and 1862, purporting upon the face of it to be a "debenture," with coupons for the payment of interest half-yearly attached to it, and containing an engagement on the part of the company to pay "the amount of this indenture" to A. B. or order on a given day, with interest at 5 per cent., is under the Stamp Act, 1870, chargeable with a debenture-stamp of 2*s.* 6*d.*, and not with a promissory-note stamp. British India Steam Navigation Company v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 7 Q. B. D. 165.

Date of Instrument.—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a bill must be taken to have been issued at the time it bears date. Anderson v. Weston, 6 Bing. N. C. 296; 8 Scott, 583; 4 Jur. 105.

A bill, purporting to be payable two months after date, was properly stamped with the duty imposed on bills payable at two months after date, though issued before the day on which it bore date. Williamson v. Garratt, 2 N. & M. 49; S. C., nom. Williams v. Jarrett, 5 B. & Ad. 32; S. P. Whistler v. Forster, 14 C. B., N. S. 248; 32 L. J., C. P. 161; 8 L. T. 317; 11 W. R. 648; Bunyard v. Smith, 34 L. J., Q. B. 217; 11 Jur., N. S. 874.

A bill drawn on the 21st December for 30*l.* payable at two months after date, on a 2*s.* stamp, and altered on the same day, before acceptance, to the 31st December, did not require a 2*s.* 6*d.* stamp within 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, the word "date," as used in that statute, meaning the period of payment expressed on the face of the bill. Upston v. Marshall, 3 D. & R. 198; 2 B. & C. 10.

But a note payable two months after sight required a stamp appropriate to a note payable more than sixty days after sight, or two months after date, as the two months began to run not from the day of the date, but on the presentment for sight. Sturdy v. Henderson, 4 B. & A. 592.

Reservation of Interest.—A note for 200*l.* with lawful interest reserved from a day prior to the date, requires a stamp applicable to a note for 200*l.* only. Wills v. Noott, 4 Tyr. 726.

So a note for the payment of 30*l.* at three months after date, with interest from the date, only required a stamp applicable to a note not exceeding 30*l.* Preussing v. Ing, 4 B. & A. 204.

Payable out of a Particular Fund, which may not be Available.—A consignor of goods sent to the consignee the following order: "Please to pay to N. on account of G. & Co. the proceeds of a shipment of twelve bales of goods, value about 2,000*l.*, consigned by me to you." The consignee, in a letter by way of answer, agreed to do so:—Held, that neither of these two instruments required such a stamp as the above statute imposes on bills, drafts, or orders, for the payment of money. Jones v. Simpson, 3 D. & R. 545; 2 B. & C. 318.

Where C. was directed by a letter from B. to pay out of the proceeds of his goods, unsold, in his, C.'s, hands, a certain sum of money to D., which C. consented to do by letter to D. (which letter was stamped with an agreement stamp), and these letters being given in evidence to prove that the money was paid by order of B.:—Held, that they did not amount to an agreement between B. & C. and, consequently, that the stamp was improper, and that the order itself for payment should be stamped, as being an order for the payment of money out of a fund, which might or might not be available. Firbank v. Bell, 1 B. & A. 36.

A letter written from A. to B., requesting him to pay C. & Co., or their order, 600*l.* out of the first proceeds of a stock of gunpowder, then in the hands of B., and to charge the same to the account of A., although followed by a subsequent correspondence between the parties, requires a stamp, as an order for the payment of money within the provisions of the above statute; and consequently, an agreement stamp affixed on payment of a penalty is improper. Butts v. Swan, 4 Moore, 484; 2 B. & B. 78.

A. gave to B. the following document addressed to C., who was indebted to A. on a contract: "I hereby authorize you to pay to B. 365*l.*, being the amount of my contract at the new workhouse, B. having advanced me that sum:—Held, that it did not require to be stamped as an order for payment of money out of a particular fund. Diplock v. Hammond, 2 Eq. R., 738; 23 L. J., Ch. 550.

An order signed by A., addressed to his bankers, directing them, out of the balance due to him on the final arrangement of his account, to pay to B. a certain sum, and which order was forthwith placed in the hands of B., who, accompanied by A., immediately proceeded to the banking-house, and delivered it to the bankers, is an instrument requiring a bill stamp. Parsons v. Middleton, 6 Hare, 261.

Held, also, that although the intention of A. and B. was, that the order should be forthwith delivered to the bankers, yet the fact that the order was, according to the agreement, delivered by A. to B. (the payee), brought it within the provisions of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, applicable to an instrument of that character. Id.

Mortgagees of two estates, in possession of the rents and profits of only one of them, advanced a further sum to the mortgagor upon the same securities; but the rents and profits of the one estate not being sufficient to keep down the interest on the entire mortgage, the mortgagor wrote the following order to M., who in fact was the tenant of the other estate, which consisted merely of a prebend, rectory, tithes and glebe lands: "Please to remit to Messrs. H., W. & T. 700*l.*, and charge it in account with me in settling for the present year's tithes of the prebend of L." H., W. & T., the solicitors of the mortgagees, sent that order in a letter to M., whom they treated as the receiver of the mortgagor, and stated, that if the 700*l.* was remitted, they would not require to be put in possession of the receipt of the tithes. M., in his answer, not setting the parties right as to his being tenant of the tithes, said that he had not the money at that time, but held out a prospect of paying it in the course of nine days. In the meantime, he received the tithes which were about to become due, and applied them in payment of a debt, which he alleged to be due to him from the mortgagor. Upon a bill in equity by the mortgagees against M. for payment of the 700*l.*, and for an account:—Held, that the order from the mortgagor upon M. was such an order as required a stamp, and the want of which was a fatal objection. Braybrooke (Lord) v. Meredith, 13 Sim. 271; 12 L. J., Ch. 289; 7 Jur. 144.

L. being indebted to the plaintiff, and about to sell his property by auction, gave an order in writing signed by him and addressed to the auctioneer, "to pay to the plaintiff, out of the produce of the sale of his goods and furniture, 200*l.*, and interest from the 23rd June last, due to the plaintiff on warrant of attorney; and also 110*l.* due to the plaintiff for goods sold, for which several sums the receipt of the plaintiff was to be the auctioneer's discharge:—Held, that this order required an inland bill stamp. Emly v. Collins, 6 M. & S. 144.

But where A. being indebted to B., and B. to C., B. by letter requested A. to pay C. the balance due to him (B.), and stated that C.'s receipt should be a sufficient discharge:—Held, that this was not a bill of exchange, or requiring a stamp as such. Crowfoot v. Gurney, 2 M. & Scott, 473; 9 Bing. 372.

A note written by a creditor at the foot of an account, requesting the debtor to pay that account to A., and which the creditor delivered to A. for the purpose of his getting in the money of the creditor, is not a bill of exchange or order for payment of money within 55 Geo. 3, c. 184. Norris v. Solomon, 2 M. & Rob. 267.

The following letter, sent to the holder of the fund out of which payment is to be made does not require a bill stamp:—"We now authorize you to pay to R. & Co. (having revoked the former order in their favour), after you have paid yourselves the balance we owe you, from the net proceeds of our shipments to your foreign establishments to the present date, one half of the remainder of the proceeds of the shipments, provided the same shall not exceed 5,000*l.* H. & J."—since it neither required payment to bearer or order, nor was delivered to the payee or any person on his behalf. Hutchinson v.

Heyworth, 1 P. & D. 266 ; 9 A. & E. 375 ; W., W. & D. 730.

Stamping after Execution.—There is so strong a presumption that a note was made on or after the date of the stamp impressed upon it that a verdict obtained upon the oath of an interested party, that the note was made previously to such date, was set aside as against the weight of evidence, although the note purported to be dated the day on which it was so sworn to have been made, and there was no evidence except the stamp to shew that such date was not the true date. Jones v. Coppinger, 18 W. R. 701.

A. put his name as acceptor upon a blank bill stamp, before 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 97, by which new stamps were substituted for those previously in use. After the day appointed for that act to come into operation, the other particulars requisite to constitute the paper a bill of exchange were added:—Held, that it was not a perfect bill at the time the acceptance was written upon it, and therefore that the old stamp was insufficient. Abrahams v. Skinner, 4 P. & D. 358 ; 12 A. & E. 763 ; 5 Jur. 97.

A bill for 25*l.* was written on a threepenny receipt stamp. After 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, which altered the stamp duty on receipts, the bill was restamped with a threepenny bill stamp, by authority of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, upon payment of the penalty:—Held, that the Commissioners had power, under 37 Geo. 3, c. 136, s. 5, to restamp the bill. Hiser v. Grout, 5 H. & N. 35 ; 29 L. J., Ex. 20 ; 1 L. T. 44 ; 8 W. R. 79.

Where a bill in equity was filed for the administration of an estate, and in proof of a debt notes insufficiently stamped were offered in evidence, and on objection taken to the reception of them, the proper stamp duty, with the penalty, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 28, was tendered to the registrar:—Held, that the notes could not be received, nor the deficient amount of duty. Stubbin v. Fisher, 9 Jur., N. S. 38 ; 7 L. T. 63.

Inappropriate Stamp.—A note written on a receipt stamp of the same amount as the necessary note stamp under the same stamp act was admitted in evidence. Aitcheson v. Sharland, 1 Esp. 292.

Seemingly, a note stamped as an agreement, with a stamp of equal value to the proper note stamp, is admissible in evidence, unless it is shewn that it was stamped after it was written. Wheatley v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 593 ; 2 Gale, 140 ; S. P., Wilson v. Vysar, 4 Taunt. 288 ; Ruff v. Webb, 1 Esp. 129.

— Previous to 37 Geo. 3, c. 136.—The proper stamp for a note of 45*l.* was 1*s.* 6*d.* composed of three different sums applicable to different funds, under three acts of parliament. But such a note on a 2*s.* stamp composed of three different sums applicable to the same funds, though in larger proportions to each than was required, was valid. Taylor v. Hague, 2 East, 414.

A note written upon a stamp of greater value than the proper stamp required could not be received in evidence, though the stamp was applicable to the same kind of instrument. Farr v. Price, 1 East, 55.

So, a note drawn before 37 Geo. 3, c. 136, upon a receipt stamp of equal value with that required for a note, was not available in law. Chamberlain v. Porter, 1 N. R. 30.

33 & 34 Vict. c. 97—Exemption under.—A draft drawn for the amount of bills of exchange, purchased for transmission abroad, which amount by the usage of bill brokers is due on the first foreign post-day next after the purchase, and which draft was dated as of that day, is an order for the payment of money on demand, and under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, falls within the description in the schedule to that act, "bill of exchange, payable on demand," and is sufficiently stamped with a penny stamp. Misa v. Currie, 1 App. Cas. 554 ; 45 L. J., Ex. 852 ; 35 L. T. 414 ; 24 W. R. 1049.

Such a draft or order made by a person who has sold the bills, and addressed to the purchaser of them, constitutes a valuable consideration for a cheque given by the purchaser of the bills. Ib.

It does so, though the bills sold may be dishonoured when due. Ib.

Unavailability for Want of Stamp.—The enactment of 31 Geo. 3, c. 25, s. 19, that no bill, draft or order shall be given in evidence, or available in law, unless the paper be lawfully stamped, is incorporated in 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, by s. 8. Field v. Woods, 7 A. & E. 114 ; 6 D. P. C. 23 ; 2 N. & P. 117 ; W., W. & D. 482 ; 1 Jur. 496.

An unstamped bill drawn in England, but purporting to be drawn abroad, came into the hands of an indorsee for value without notice, who brought an action upon it against the acceptor:—Held, that the indorsee could not recover, as the acceptor was not estopped from shewing that the bill was void for want of a stamp, although cognizant of this fact when he made the acceptance. Steadman v. Duhamel, 1 C. B. 888 ; 14 L. J., C. P. 270.

Although a note without a stamp cannot be received in evidence as a security, or to prove the loan of money, it may be looked at by the jury with a view to ascertain a collateral fact. Gregory v. Fraser, 3 Camp. 454.

It is no defence to an action by an indorsee of a note or bill, that it was not stamped at the time of making it, if it has a proper stamp when produced at the trial. Wright v. Riley, Peake, 173. But see Green v. Davies, 6 D. & R. 306 ; 4 B. & C. 235.

A party who admitted his handwriting to a bill is not thereby precluded from objecting to the sufficiency of the stamp. Vane v. Whittingham, 2 D., N. S. 757 ; 7 Jur. 95.

Judgment by Default on Unstamped Instrument—Effect of.—The plaintiff sued on a note for 34*l.* 10*s.*, and the defendants, who were makers of the note, allowed judgment to go by default, and a writ of inquiry issued thereupon. On the trial it was found that the note was insufficiently stamped, and the under-sheriff withdrew it from the consideration of the jury. The jury found, nevertheless, for the plaintiff to the whole amount ; and the court afterwards, on application to set aside the verdict and send down another writ of inquiry, refused the rule. Watson v. Glover, 12 L. J., C. P. 184 ; 7 Jur. 68.

Evidence to prove Debt for which Note was given.—Though a note has not the proper stamp, so that it cannot be given in evidence, the plaintiff may go into evidence of the debt for which it was given. Wilson v. Kennedy, 1 Esp. 245; S. P., Brown v. Watts, 1 Taunt. 353; Tyte v. Jones, 1 East, 58, n.

A receipt for interest on the back of a note without a stamp, and which cannot therefore be given in evidence, is evidence to go to the jury, from which they may presume that, from the payment of so much for interest, there was a principal sum in proportion due. Manley v. Peel, 5 Esp. 121.

When fraud has been committed by giving a cheque, which the party knows will not be honoured, the cheque, though otherwise inadmissible for want of a stamp, may be given in evidence to prove the fraud. Keable v. Payne, 3 N. & P. 531; 8 A. & E. 555.

In an action for a debt, the defendant pleaded never indebted, and payment. The plaintiff gave in evidence, a memorandum, in which the defendant admitted the debt; but the inference arising from the same memorandum was, that the debt had been paid by a bill, given at the time to the plaintiff by the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff might, in order to rebut that inference, and negative by anticipation the plea of payment, give in evidence the bill referred to, though on an insufficient stamp. Smart v. Nokes, 6 M. & G. 911; 7 Scott, N. R. 786; 13 L. J., C. P. 79; 8 Jur. 44.

Want or Insufficiency of Stamp when Available by Plea.—In an action on a bill by indorsee against acceptor, he pleaded pleas, denying the acceptance, the drawing and the indorsement, and also a plea founded on 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 97, s. 17, that the bill was written on paper improperly stamped with an old die; the court struck out the last plea. Dawson v. Macdonald, 2 M. & W. 26; 2 Gale, 215.

To an action on a bill a plea that the bill was not duly stamped, is bad. Haward v. Smith, 4 Bing. N. C. 684; 6 Scott, 438; 1 Arn. 257.

Quære, whether the stamp laws can be pleaded in bar of an action on a note or bill; but at all events they can only be so pleaded in cases where the instrument cannot be made good by being stamped before the trial. Bradley v. Bardsley, 14 M. & W. 873; 3 D. & L. 476; 15 L. J., Ex. 115.

To an action by indorsee against acceptor, he pleaded that the bill was accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, and without consideration; that it was negotiated by the drawer for his own use, and paid to him when it became due; and that afterwards it was reissued by him without a fresh stamp, and indorsed with notice:—Held, first, that the plea was not bad for duplicity, but contained one defence only, viz. the reissuing of the bill under the circumstances without a fresh stamp. Lazarus v. Cowie, 2 G. & D. 407; 2 Q. B. 459; 11 L. J., Q. B. 310; 6 Jur. 854.

Held, secondly, that the reissuing the bill without a fresh stamp was a good defence; inasmuch as, being an accommodation bill, which had been satisfied by the drawer, who was the party ultimately liable upon it, it was no longer a negotiable instrument, and could not be put into circulation again without a fresh stamp, as required by 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 19. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that it was a defence that did not arise only on the evidence, but might well be pleaded, inasmuch as s. 19 inflicts a penalty on reissuing a bill after it has been paid, and a bill reissued contrary to such prohibition becomes void. Ib.

Indorsement.—A note, indorsed as follows:—"I hereby assign this draft, and all benefit of the money secured thereby, to J. G., of &c., and order the within-named T. T. H. (the maker of the note) to pay him the amount and all interest in respect thereof. (Signed) H. O. R.:"—Held, that this indorsement did not require a stamp. Richards v. Frankum, 9 C. & P. 221.

2. FOREIGN BILLS.

What constitutes, so as not to require an English Stamp.—Where the body of a bill was written, and the acceptance of it made in England; yet if it was afterwards transmitted to the drawer abroad for his signature, and it was there drawn, the bill was a foreign bill; and, consequently, did not require an English stamp. Boehm v. Campbell, Gow, 56.

A., in Jamaica, drew a bill on B., in London, on a Jamaica stamp, leaving the payee's name in blank; C. got possession of the bill, and inserted his own name as payee, without any other authority than a letter from B., promising to accept it; but having the address torn off, and containing nothing to shew to whom it was addressed:—Held, that though the bill might not require an English stamp, the letter, had it been sufficient, being a separate contract, would require a stamp. Crutchley v. Mann, 1 Marsh, 29; 5 Taunt. 529.

A bill drawn in England upon a person abroad, but accepted by him, payable in England, was an inland bill, and required a stamp as such. Amner v. Clark, 2 C., M. & R. 468; 1 Gale, 191; 5 Tyr. 942.

Where partners resident in Ireland signed and indorsed a copper-plate impression of a bill, leaving blanks for the date, sum, time when payable, and name of the drawee, and transmitted it to B., in England, for his use, who filled up the blanks and negotiated it:—Held, that this was to be considered a bill by relation from the time of the signing and indorsing in Ireland, and consequently, that an English stamp was not necessary. Snaith v. Mingay, 1 M. & S. 87.

Where a bill, drawn in blank in a foreign country, was sent by the drawer to his agent in London to be accepted by a customer of the drawer as a mode of payment for goods, and the agent, without any authority from the drawer, filled it up and induced a customer of the drawer to accept it, and afterwards, in fraud of the drawer, indorsed it to the plaintiff for value:—Held, that the bill being drawn partly abroad and partly in this country did not require a stamp. Barker v. Sterne, 9 Ex. 684; 2 C. L. R. 1020; 23 L. J., Ex. 201.

In an action upon a bill purporting to have been drawn by A., resident abroad, upon B., resident in England; the plaintiff having proved that it was seen abroad immediately after the date of it:—Held, that it was not necessary, in order to shew that it was a foreign bill, also to prove that the bill was then in an unaccepted state. Dempilliers v. Holden, 2 H. & W. 394.

J. was indebted to the plaintiffs, and was also a creditor of the Isle of Man Slate and Flag Company, being wound up, and the defendant was the official liquidator. J. signed the following document: "Isle of Man, July 15, 1865. On 1st of August next, please to pay to Messrs. (the plaintiffs) or order 600l., on account of moneys advanced by me to the Isle of Man Slate and Flag Company. To Mr. (the defendant), official liquidator of the company." This document, which was unstamped when produced at the trial, was sent by J. to the plaintiffs in England, and they forwarded a copy to the defendant, who was also in England, requesting to know whether he would honour the order, and he replied he would when funds came into his hands about the 15th of August. Funds did come into his hands soon after that time, but owing to a dispute as to the amount remaining due to J. nothing was paid:—Held, that the order, on the face of it, was not an order to pay out of a particular fund, but a bill of exchange; but, being drawn in the Isle of Man, it was a foreign bill for stamp purposes, and therefore need not be stamped except as required by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, ss. 3 and 5, viz., when "presented for payment, indorsed, transferred, or otherwise negotiated in the United Kingdom;" that it had not been dealt with in any of these ways, and was therefore admissible without a stamp. Griffin v. Weatherby, 3 L. R., Q. B. 753; 37 L. J., Q. B. 280; 18 L. T. 881; 17 W. R. 8; 9 B. & S. 726.

Presumption as to Date of Stamping.]—In an action on a foreign bill of exchange, the required stamp was upon the bill at the time of the trial, but no evidence was given to shew that it was on the bill at the time when it was indorsed to the plaintiff:—Held, that it must be presumed to have been so, the contrary not having been shewn by the defendant. Bradlaugh v. De Rin, 3 L. R., C. P. 286; 37 L. J., C. P. 146; 16 W. R. 1128.

Alteration made in Bill.]—A bill, drawn for one sum in Paris, and accepted for a smaller sum in England, was altered to correspond with the acceptance: it was not shewn where the alteration was made:—Held, that no stamp was necessary. Hamelin v. Bruck, 9 Q. B. 306; 15 L. J., Q. B. 343; 10 Jur. 1094.

Admissibility in Evidence of.]—Where the admissibility of a bill purporting to be a foreign bill, and stamped accordingly, was objected to on the ground, that, though it purported to be drawn abroad, it was in fact an inland bill, drawn in London, and evidence was offered to prove that fact:—Held, that the judge ought to have received the evidence in that stage of the cause, and decided upon the admissibility of the instrument, and not to have received the evidence afterwards, as part of the defendant's case, and submitted it to the jury. Bartlett v. Smith, 11 M. & W. 483; 12 L. J., Ex. 287; 7 Jur. 448.

By the Stamp Act, 1870, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 97, ss. 24, 51, 54, a foreign bill, in order to be admissible in evidence, requires only that the proper stamp should have been duly affixed. Although not cancelled, if the holder proves that the proper stamp was affixed before the bill came into his possession, the burden of proof that it was not duly stamped is thrown upon the person objecting to its admission. Marc v. Rouy, 31 L. T. 372; 23 W. R. 89.

Seem, that such an objection can be raised only by plea. Id.

Evidence as to.]—In an action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill, which upon the face of it purported to be a foreign bill:—Held, that the acceptor was not estopped from shewing, that, though dated abroad, the bill was in fact drawn in London; although it was proved that this was done at his express request, and that the plaintiff, who took the bill for value, was not cognizant of the circumstances. Steadman v. Duhamel, 1 C. B. 888; 14 L. J., C. P. 270.

To prove that a bill, purporting to be drawn abroad, was in point of fact drawn in England, and was therefore void for want of a stamp, it was not sufficient barely to shew that the drawer was in England at the time the bill bore date. Abraham v. Du Bois, 4 Camp. 269; S. P., Birie v. Moreau, 2 C. & P. 376.

3. CANCELLATION OF STAMPS.

The duty of cancelling the stamp on a foreign bill lies equally on the holder and transferee, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, s. 5. Poolcy v. Brown, 11 C. B., N. S. 566; 31 L. J., C. P. 134; 8 Jur., N. S. 938; 5 L. T. 750; 10 W. R. 345. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 91, s. 33.

Where a party had bought a parcel of foreign bills, with their stamps uncanceled, both he and the seller being ignorant of the defect at that time:—Held, that he could not recover back the money paid for them on discovering the defect, as upon failure of consideration, the parties being in pari delicto. Id.

A foreign bill bearing a stamp, defaced by the person who affixed it prior to the indorsement to the plaintiff, but the defacement having no date, is inadmissible in evidence. Gilmore v. Whitmarsh, 2 F. & F. 295.

The cancellation by stamping of an adhesive stamp on a bill is clearly sufficient. Viale v. Michael, 30 L. T. 453.

Seem, that the cancellation may be made in open court at any time before verdict—Per Blackburn, J. Id.

III. PARTIES TO.

1. AGENTS.

What Sufficient to give Authority to.]—A. & B. & S. M., in 1832, assigned their stock-in-trade to trustees, who were to carry on the business in the name of S. M. alone, for the benefit of creditors. S. M. was employed by them as their agent to carry on the business accordingly. S. M., while conducting such business, carried on also a separate business of his own up to 1834. The plaintiff had been in the habit of discounting bills for the old firm of A. & B. & S. M., and after the assignment to the trustees, had been accustomed to discount bills, indorsed in the name of S. M. for him in his private business, and other his private purposes, the proceeds of which S. M. applied sometimes for carrying on the assigned business, and sometimes for his own private purposes. After he had ceased to carry on his private business, he indorsed bills in the name of S. M., which the plaintiff discounted. S. M. applied the proceeds indiscriminately to his private purposes and to carry on the assigned business. In an action on the bills against the trustees :—Held, that the signature of S. M. to the bills was prima facie their signature. Furze v. Sharwood, 2 Q. B. 388 ; 2 G. & D. 116 ; 6 Jur. 554.

A bailliff of a farming establishment, through whose hands all payments and receipts take place, has no implied authority to pledge the credit of his employer by drawing and indorsing bills in the name of the latter. Davidson v. Stanley, 3 Scott, N. R. 49 ; 2 M. & G. 721.

In the absence of all direct evidence of authority, the nature of the employment of such bailliff does not furnish any ground for inferring the existence of such an authority upon slight, or upon any other than clear and distinct, evidence of assent or acquiescence. Ib.

Where, therefore, it is sought to charge a party by the acceptance or indorsement of a bill by an agent, by reason of the latter having similarly drawn and indorsed bills on former occasions, it must be distinctly shewn that the principal knew or had the means of knowing that fact. Ib.

A. employed B. to manage his business, and to carry it on in the name of B. & Co., the drawing and accepting bills were incidental to the carrying on of such a business, but it was stipulated between them that B. should not draw or accept bills. B. having accepted a bill in the name of B. & Co. :—Held, that A. was liable on the bill in the hands of an indorsee, who took it without any knowledge of A. and B. or the business. Edmunds v. Bushell, 1 L. R., Q. B. 97 ; 35 L. J., Q. B. ; 12 Jur., N. S. 332.

Where two persons were joint agents of the Royal Veteran Battalion, but were not otherwise connected in business, and were in the habit of accepting bills, by means of a clerk, in this form, "for agents of the R. V. B., J. G. :"—Held, no answer to a joint action against them by an indorsee, to shew that it was accepted for the private advantage of one without the knowledge of the other, although the indorsee might, if he had inquired of the clerk who accepted it, have ascertained that such was the fact. Sanderson v. Brooksbank, 4 C. & P. 286.

Extent of Authority.]—The authority of an agent to receive payment by an acceptance of a bill drawn in blank does not carry with it an authority to the agent to draw a bill payable to his own order. Hogarth v. Wherley, 10 L. R., C. P. 630 ; 44 L. J., C. P. 330 ; 32 L. T. 800.

The plaintiff supplied the defendant with goods ordered through M., the traveller of the plaintiff, and the defendant by way of payment accepted a bill drawn by M. upon the plaintiff, and made payable to his own order. M. absconded, having cashed the bill, and its value did not reach the plaintiff, who sued the defendant for the price of the goods. It was proved in support of the plea of payment that M. had, on a prior occasion, taken payment by a bill drawn in blank and accepted by the defendant, which the plaintiff had afterwards filled up and cashed, and also that the plaintiff had written a letter to M., which was shewn to the defendant, in which he intimated a wish to draw upon him for an amount due :—Held, that neither the previous dealing, nor the letter of the plaintiff to M., was evidence of an authority to M. to draw a bill in his own favour. Ib.

An authority given to A., to draw bills in the name of B., may be exercised by the clerks of A. Sutton, Ex parte, 2 Cox, 84.

P. & C., foreign correspondents of H., G. & Co., remitted to them a bill upon the defendant for 300*l.* inclosed in a letter, advising them that it was sent to meet a draft on H., G. & Co. of the same amount. Before the arrival of the letter, G. (who alone constituted the firm of H., G. & Co.) had absconded, having previously addressed a letter to L., authorizing him, for and in the name of H., G. & Co., to indorse any bill or bills which might be remitted to them, and to dispose of them in a particular way :—Held, that the last-mentioned letter did not authorize L. to indorse the bill in question, inasmuch as that bill never became the property of H., G. & Co., the condition upon which it was sent to them not being capable of fulfilment. Fearn v. Filica, 8 Scott, N. R. 241 ; 7 M. & G. 513 ; 14 L. J., C. P. 15.

Personal Liability of.]—If an agent for A. draws a bill upon B. in favour of C., though he directs B. to place the amount to A.'s debit, he will be personally liable to C. if the bill is not paid, though C. knew he was only agent for A., unless he uses proper words to prevent such liability. Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 M. & S. 345.

A bill was drawn on the consignees of a cargo of coals shipped to R. by a broker at N., who had effected the purchase there. That bill was returned to the payees, the coal-owners, unaccepted, on account of the date being too short. The broker having directed the payees to prepare another bill at a longer date, they did so, and sent it to his counting-house in N. for his signature. The broker had, in the meantime, left N. in pecuniary embarrassment ; and his brother, the defendant, had come to the counting-house to investigate his affairs. The defendant, in the absence of his brother, and at the request and for the convenience of the plaintiffs, signed the bill they had prepared, without qualification of his liability :—Held, that he was personally liable. Sowerby v. Butcher, 2 C. & M. 368 ; 4 Tyr. 320.

A bill directed as follows : "To Messrs. Jackson and Shepherd, joint managers of the Royal Mutual Marine Insurance Association," was accepted thus : "Accepted, J. J., W. S. as joint managers of the Royal Mutual Marine Association :"—Held, that they were personally liable, and that the introduction of the word "as" before the words "joint managers," made no difference with respect to such liability. Jones v. Jackson, 22 L. T. 828.

A promissory note in this form : "On demand we promise to pay Mr. James Allan 200*l.*, value received for the Second Gateshead Provident Benefit Building Society, and interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly," signed thus : "G. M., C. D. G., J. M., trustees : T. N., secretary :"—Held, that the trustees were personally liable on the note. Allan v. Miller, 22 L. T. 825.

B. acted as agent in Malta for A., for the purpose of buying and remitting to him in England bills on England, on account of money received by B. in Malta. In the course of his agency he purchased bills in Malta, and indorsed them to A. without any reservation in the indorsement as to his liability :—Held, that in the absence of special circumstances, shewing that any liability was intended by the general mercantile law which must be taken to be in force in Malta, B. was not liable to A. upon the bills being dishonoured. Castrique v. Buttigieg, 10 Moore, P. C. C. 94.

The executor and surviving partner of B. engaged his brother to wind up the partnership business. B.'s brother, using and signing the name of the firm, drew a bill upon a debtor to the firm, who accepted it, but, the bill not being paid, an action was brought against B.'s brother:—Held, that he could not be made liable without some proof that he had no authority to draw the bill for his employer, or that he had not acted bonâ fide. Wilson v. Barthrop, 2 M. & W. 863; M. & H. 81; 1 Jur. 949.

The defendants, merchants in London, received orders from St. Petersburg for a quantity of Havannah sugars; that order was revoked, and another given for Brazil sugars, for the amount of which the defendants were to draw on the plaintiff, G.'s agent at Hamburg, by a bill at three months. The plaintiff accepted the bill; wrote to G. for instructions, because the defendants had been accredited for Havannah sugars and not Brazil; and then to the defendants, to say, that he had accepted the bill under their guarantee for the present, as he had not received the accreditive. G. then wrote to the plaintiff, giving him credit for the Brazil sugar, and requesting him to release the defendants from their guarantee. G. failed before the acceptance became due:—Held, that the plaintiff was liable to the defendants on this acceptance, notwithstanding the defendants, after G.'s failure, wrote to the plaintiff, "We have received from G. the assurance that he has arranged with you the needful for the protection of the draft. We reserve to ourselves any advantage from the insurance of the goods: if you have written to G., that you have not honoured the draft, we cannot consider your acceptance as valid in any way than on account of G." Lohmann v. Rougemont, 6 Bing. N. C. 253; 8 Scott, 520.

The following note was signed by the secretary of an incorporated company:—"1,500*l*. On demand I promise to pay Messrs. Alexander & Co., or order, the sum of 1,500*l*., with legal interest thereon until paid, value received, the 16th of August, 1865. For Mistley Thorpe and Walton Railway Company.—John Sizer, secretary:—Held, that the secretary was not personally liable to be sued thereon. Alexander v. Sizer, 4 L. R., Ex. 102; 38 L. J., Ex. 59; 20 L. T. 38.

V. D., of Constantinople, a consignee of coals from his brother S. D., of Cardiff, accepted a bill of his brother's in the following form:—"Four months after date pay to my order the sum of 500*l*. sterling, value received in coals and advance per Eskdale s.s.:"—Held, that there being uncontradicted evidence that he was a mere agent selling the coal on commission, the statement on the face of the bill that value had been received in coal was not sufficient to shew that he had such a legal interest as would make the coal applicable to the satisfaction of a judgment recovered against him by the holders. Hood v. Stallybrass, 3 App. Cas. 880; 38 L. T. 826; 27 W. R. 1—P. C.

Liability of Principal.—If A. permits B. to draw bills in his name, he is liable as drawer to ignorant indorsees, although he had neither any interest nor knew of the particular bills drawn; but he is not liable to a payee having knowledge of the transaction. Smith v. Strange, Peake's

Add. Cas. 116; S. C., Curtis v. Barre, Peake's Add. Cas. 119.

If a principal authorizes an agent to accept a bill, such principal is liable as acceptor, though wrongfully described by his agent in the acceptance. Lindus v. Bradwell, 5 C. B. 583; 17 L. J., C. P. 12; 12 Jur. 230.

Agent employing Agent.—Where an agent is authorized to indorse the name of his principal, he may do so by the instrumentality of a third party. Lord v. Hall, 2 C. & K. 698.

Evidence as to Authority.—In an action against a party as acceptor of a bill accepted in his name by another person, when evidence has been given of a general authority in that person to accept bills in the defendant's name an admission by the defendant of liability on another bill so accepted is good evidence confirmatory of the former. Llewellyn v. Winckworth, 13 M. & W. 598; 14 L. J., Ex. 329.

From the fact that the defendants' confidential clerk had been accustomed to draw cheques for them; that in one instance, at least, they had authorized him to indorse; and in two other instances had received money obtained by his indorsing in their name, a jury is warranted in inferring that the clerk had a general authority to indorse. Preacott v. Flynn, 9 Bing. 19; 2 M. & Scott, 18.

Acting under Powers of Attorney.—Where one gives a power of attorney to another, to demand and receive all moneys due to him, on any account whatsoever, and to use all means for the recovery thereof, and to appoint attorneys for the purpose of bringing actions, and to revoke the same, "and to do all other business;" the latter words must be understood, with reference to the former, as meaning all business appertaining thereto, and although the attorney may receive moneys due in autre droit to the principal, yet he cannot indorse a bill for him, which comes to his hands under the power. Hay v. Goldsmidt, 2 Smith, 79.

A power of attorney giving the agent full powers as to the management of certain specified real property, with general words extending those powers to all the property of the principal of every description, and in conclusion authorizing the agent to do all lawful acts concerning all the principal's business and affairs of what nature or kind soever, does not authorize the agent to indorse bills of exchange in the name of his principal. Esdale v. La Nauze, 1 Y. & C. 394.

A power of attorney having been given by the payee of notes to agents, empowering them to sell, indorse and assign, they, under the power, indorsed the notes to a bank, by way of security for a loan to them. The agents failed:—Held, that the transaction was valid, and that the payee could not recover from the bank. Bank of Bengal v. McLeod, 5 Moore, Ind. App. 1; 7 Moore, P. C. C. 35; 13 Jur. 945; S. P., Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, 5 Moore, Ind. App. 27.

Per Procuration.—An indorsee of a bill accepted by procuration is bound to use due caution, and should not only see the power of the agent to accept, but also inquire into the propriety of his accepting that particular bill; and if he does not, and it was improperly accepted, he cannot recover against the acceptor. Attwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278; 1 M. & R. 66.

An acceptance or an indorsement expressed to be per procuration, is a notice to the indorsee that the party so accepting or indorsing professes to act under an authority from some principal, and imposes upon the indorsee the duty of ascertaining that the party so accepting or indorsing is acting within the terms of such authority. Alexander v. Mackenzie, 6 C. B. 766; 18 L. J., C. P. 94; 13 Jur. 346.

Where a bill upon the face of it purports to be accepted per procuration, that circumstance is notice to any party who takes the bill, that the acceptor has but a limited authority; and the holder cannot maintain an action against the principal if the authority has been exceeded. Stagg v. Elliott, 12 C. B., N. S. 373; 31 L. J., C. P. 260; 9 Jur., N. S. 153; 6 L. T. 433; 10 W. R. 647.

Declaration by an executor of B. upon a bill purporting to be drawn by A., and accepted by the defendant, and indorsed by A. to B. A., who was possessed of goods, being the stock-in-trade upon his premises, died intestate, and indebted to the defendant and other persons; and it was arranged between B. and the defendant, who were two of his next of kin, that the defendant should take possession of the goods, and accept a bill for their value, purporting to be drawn and indorsed by A. The goods were accordingly delivered to the defendant, and the bill was drawn and indorsed to the plaintiff by procuration in the name of A., and accepted by the defendant:—Held, that he could not be allowed to set up as a defence that the bill was not indorsed by A. Ashpittel v. Bryan, 3 B. & S. 474; 3 F. & F. 183; 33 L. J., Q. B. 328; 9 Jur., N. S. 791; 11 L. T. 221; 12 W. R. 1082. Affirmed on appeal, 5 B. & S. 723—Ex. Ch.

A person who accepts a bill by procuration, having no authority so to do, is liable to an action of tort, by an ulterior indorsee, for falsely, fraudulently and deceitfully representing that he was so authorized, although he may have thought at the time that he had authority, or that his act would be recognized or ratified by the drawee. Polhill v. Walter, 3 B. & Ad. 114.

An averment in a declaration that A. B. & Co. accepted a bill is supported by evidence that the bill was accepted by C. D., their authorized agent, thus, "for A. B. & Co., C. D." Hays v. Haseltine, 2 Camp. 604.

Pleading—Variance.—In an action on a bill alleged to have been drawn on the defendant, and accepted for him by A. as his agent, the bill, on being produced, appeared to be drawn on the director of a mining company, of which the defendant was one, and which company had given a general authority to A. to accept bills on its behalf:—Held, no variance. Firth v. Buckingham, 2 D., N. S., 555; 6 Jur. 956.

2. CORPORATIONS.

Acceptors of Bill at less than Six Months.—By the provisions of several statutes for the protection of the Bank of England, before the passing of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 32, it was enacted, that "it shall not be lawful for any body corporate to borrow, owe, or take up any money on their bills or notes payable on demand, or at any less time than six months from the borrowing thereof:—"

Held, that a corporation not established for trading purposes could not become acceptors of a bill payable at a less period than six months from the date. Broughton v. Manchester Waterworks, 3 B. & A. 1.

Action against.—An action may be maintained on a bill against a trading corporation, whose power of drawing and accepting bills is recognized by statute. Murray v. E. I. Company, 5 B. & A. 204.

Powers of Directors of.—The directors of a mining association cannot bind the members by accepting a bill, unless they are authorized to do so by the deed or instrument of co-partnership, by the necessity of such a power to the carrying on of the business, by the usage of similar establishments, or by the express assent of the party sought to be charged. Dickinson v. Valpy, 5 M. & R. 126; 10 B. & C. 128.

Directors of a cemetery company were by their act of incorporation empowered to make contracts and bargains touching the undertaking, and to do and transact all other matters and things requisite to be done and transacted for the direction and management of the affairs of the company:—Held, that they had no power to accept or indorse bills for the purposes of the undertaking. Harmer v. Steel (in error), 4 Ex. 1; 19 L. J., Ex. 34—Ex. Ch.; S. C., in court below, 14 M. & W. 831; 3 D. & L. 506; 15 L. J., Ex. 217. See also Brown v. Byers, 16 M. & W. 252; 16 L. J., Ex. 112.

Railway Company.—A railway company, incorporated by a special act of parliament containing the usual clauses in such acts, cannot accept bills of exchange. Bateman v. Mid Wales Railway Company, 35 L. J., C. P. 205; 12 Jur., N. S. 453.

3. COLONIAL BROKERS.

In an action against a colonial broker on a bill, as to his authority to accept:—Held, that the jury might be asked, of their own knowledge as commercial men, whether colonial brokers did business by means of bills of exchange; and evidence being given to shew that they did not, but the witnesses admitting that they did so sometimes, though it was not usual, the question left to the jury was, whether it was not one mode by which they carried on business. Schweitzer v. Long, 3 F. & F. 687.

4. CHURCHWARDENS.

A. & B. signed a formal note, by which they promised "as churchwardens and overseers," to pay to C. or order a sum of money with interest; which sum was in fact the amount of a loan made by C. for the use of the parish. A. and B. are personally liable upon such note. Crow v. Petit, 3 N. & M. 456; S. C., Rew v. Pettet, 1 A. & E. 196. See Furnival v. Coombs, 6 Scott, N. R. 522.

5. PERSONS UNDER INFLUENCE OF DRINK, AND LUNATICS.

In an action by indorsee against a prior indorser, it is a good plea that when he indorsed the bill, he was so intoxicated and under the influence of liquor, and thereby so entirely deprived of the use of his reason, as to be unable to understand the nature or effect of the indorsement; and that the plaintiff, at the time of the indorsement, was aware of his being in that state. Gore v. Gibson, 13 M. & W. 623; 14 L. J., Ex. 151; 9 Jur. 140.

A maker of a note, sued by an indorsee, was allowed to plead that the indorser was a lunatic at the time of the indorsement. Alcock v. Alcock, 3 M. & G. 268. But see Molton v. Camroux, 4 Ex. 17; Beavan v. McDonnell, 9 Ex. 309.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Liability of Executor.—A note, given to a creditor by one of the executors in the name of the testator's firm, while the executor was carrying on the business pursuant to directions in the will, but was ignorant that the estate was insolvent, is personally binding on the executors. Lucas v. Williams, 3 Giff. 150; 8 Jur., N. S. 207.

Executors carried on their testator's trade in that character, and in the ordinary course of the business accepted a bill, describing themselves in it simply as executors of their testator:—Held, that neither these circumstances, nor the form of the acceptance, relieved the estate of one of the executors, who died in the lifetime of the other, from the ordinary equitable liability upon the bill. Liverpool Borough Bank v. Walker, 4 De G. & J. 24.

When an executor had continued the testator's business in pursuance of the will, and had in so doing, and according to the ordinary course of business pursued by the testator, given a promissory note for goods supplied to the testator himself:—Held, that the executor could not obtain in a creditors' suit for the administration of the testator's estate, an injunction to restrain the creditor to whom the note had been given from proceeding upon it at law, although there might have been an understanding that the executor was not to be personally liable, and that the creditor was to look only to the testator's assets for payment, and although the money produced by the executor's trading had been paid into court under an order in the suit. Such relief, if to be obtained, must be sought in a distinct suit. Lucas v. Williams, 4 De G., F. & J. 436.

Payee of Note making the Maker his Executor.]

—Where the payee of a note appoints the maker his executor, the debt is discharged, and no action can be maintained on the note even by a person to whom the executor has indorsed it. Freakley v. Fox, 9 B. & C. 130; 4 M. & R. 18.

A creditor, by becoming executor of his debtor, does not extinguish the debt, although he cannot sue himself for it; and therefore, when the debt is secured by a negotiable instrument, such as a note, the executor may transfer it, so as to give a right of action on it to the transferee. Lowe v. Penkett, 16 C. B. 400; 24 L. J., C. P. 196; 1 Jur., N. S. 1049.

Forgery of Name of one out of four Executrices as Indorsement on Bill.—A bill was payable to "Mrs. E. I., widow, M. I., spinster, A. M. I., spinster, and A. M., the wife of E. B., or order, the executrices of the late J. I." W. was indicted for forging "a certain indorsement of the bill, which indorsement is as follows, that is to say, 'A. M. I.'" It was objected that the bill was only negotiable on the indorsement of all the payees, and, therefore, that this was not a forged indorsement of the bill. He was convicted, and the judges held the conviction right. Reg. v. Winterbottom, 2 C. & K. 37; 1 Den. C. C. 41. It has been so held in America, Smith v. Whiting, 9 Mass. Rep. 320. It has also been there held that a note may be transferred by one of several administrators, Sanders v. Blane, 6 J. J. Marsh, 446: and by one of several executors, as a collateral security for a judgment against the estate; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 9 Cowen, 34.

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Note Payable to Feme Sole—Subsequent Marriage.—Where a note is payable to a feme sole, or order, and she marries, it becomes her husband's property, and she cannot indorse it while she is covert. Connor v. Martin, 3 Wils. 5.

Indorsement of Bill by Wife—With Husband's Consent.—But an indorsement with her husband's assent, of a bill drawn by her, is binding upon him, and will pass the interest in the bill to the indorsee, so as to enable him to sue the acceptor. Prestwick v. Marshall, 5 M. & P. 513; 7 Bing. 565; 4 C. & P. 594.

—Without Husband's Consent.]—Though a note was given to a married woman, knowing her to be such, with intent that she should indorse it to the plaintiff, in payment of a debt which she owed him (in the course of carrying on a trade in her own name, by the consent of her husband), yet the property in the note vested in the husband by the delivery to the wife, and no interest passed by her indorsement to the plaintiff. Barlow v. Bishop, 1 East, 432; 3 Esp. 266.

Indorsement by Husband alone.—So a note payable to a woman who is married at the time of the making, passes by the indorsement of the husband alone during the coverture. Mason v. Morgan, 2 A. & E. 30; 4 N. & M. 46.

Indorsement or Acceptance by Wife—When Agent for Husband.—Where, in an action on a bill by an indorsee, it is pleaded by the acceptor that the drawer is a married woman, the plaintiff may shew in his replication that she drew and indorsed the bill with the authority of her husband, without its being deemed a departure. Prince v. Brunatt, 3 D. P. C. 382; 1 Scott. 342; 1 Bing. N. C. 435.

A defendant, who carried on business on his own account, and in partnership, gave a general power of attorney to his wife and partners to act for him and in his name, and to his use, and to indorse bills, and generally to act for him while abroad. He gave another power to his wife alone, to act for him and on his behalf, and to pay and accept such bills as should be drawn by his agents and correspondents as occasion should require. One of the partners drew a bill on the defendant for money to supply the partnership concerns, the defendant having received while abroad money on the partnership account, and the wife accepted the bill for her husband:—Held, first, that the partner could not be called the defendant's agent; and therefore that the wife had not power to accept the bill. Attwood v. Munnings, 1 M. & R. 66; 7 B. & C. 278.

Held, secondly, that she had not power to accept a bill for partnership transactions, but only bills on his account. Id.

The fact that a wife constantly manages her husband's business, is no evidence of an authority to accept bills for him, although there is also evidence that the proceeds of the bills have been received by the husband, or applied, with his knowledge, to his benefit. Goldstone v. Tovey, 6 Bing. N. C. 98; 6 Scott, 394; 3 Jur. 1175.

A bill addressed to William B. was accepted by his wife, by writing across it her own name, Mary B. There was no evidence of any express authority in the wife so to accept the bill; but, on its being presented to the husband after it became due, he said he knew all about it, that the bill was a millinery bill (for which the husband appeared to be liable), and that he would pay it very shortly:—Held, that he was liable as acceptor. Lindus v. Bradwell, 5 C. B. 583; 17 L. J., C. P. 121; 12 Jur. 230.

It is not competent to the acceptor of a bill made payable to the order of a wife to say that the latter has no power to indorse, when he himself has, by his acceptance of the bill so drawn, asserted that she has such power, and notwithstanding the acceptor may in such case be compelled to pay the bill twice. the husband's property in the bill not being changed by the indorsement by the wife, unauthorized by her husband. Smith v. Marack, 6 C. B. 486; 6 D. & L. 363; 18 L. J., C. P. 65; 12 Jur. 1050.

Upon an issue as to the indorsement of a note by S., it was proved that his wife had the general management of his business; that she was in the habit of drawing, accepting and indorsing bills and notes in his name; and that the name of S. was indorsed upon the note by his daughter, by the direction and in the presence of her mother, by whom the note was afterwards handed to the plaintiff:—Held, that it was a question of fact for the jury, whether the indorsement so made was within the scope of the wife's authority, and that the evidence warranted them in concluding that it was. Lord v. Hall, 8 C. B. 627; 19 L. J., C. P. 47.

Liability of Wife's Separate Estate.—A woman, married since the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, joined her husband in signing a joint and several promissory note for money lent to him. The husband became bankrupt:—Held, that her separate estate was liable for the amount due on the note, and that it was not necessary to make any trustees for the wife parties to the action. Davies v. Jenkins, 6 Ch. D. 728; 46 L. J., Ch. 761; 26 W. R. 260.

A married woman holding herself out as a feme sole, or as a person whose separate property would repay advances to her, gave to her amanuensis negotiable instruments bearing her name, to enable him to raise money on them:—Held, that her separate estate was liable to make good the amount to the person who discounted them. McHenry v. Davies, 10 L. R., Eq. 88; 39 L. J., Ch. 866; 22 L. T. 643; 18 W. R. 855.

A wife, having property settled to her own use during coverture, made a promissory note jointly with her husband and another person. The husband died before action brought:—Held, that she was not liable. Roberts v. Watkins, 46 L. J., Q. B. 552; 36 L. T. 799.

Non-reduction into Possession by Husband.—

Where a note is given to a married woman during coverture, and the husband does not do any act during his life to reduce it into possession, the right to the note survives to her. Gaters v. Madeley, 6 M. & W. 423; 4 Jur. 724.

To an action by the executors of M., deceased, on a note payable to him in his lifetime, the defendant pleaded that the note was made payable to the wife of M., and in her name, with the consent of her husband, and not otherwise, and that he did not in her lifetime, she having died in the lifetime of her husband, do any act to reduce the note into possession, nor did he ever reduce it into possession:—Held, good in substance. Howard v. Oakes, 3 Ex. 136; 6 D. & L. 231; 18 L. J., Ex. 485. See Halifax v. Lyle, 6 D. & L. 424; 3 Ex. 446.

A feme sole, payee of a note, payable with interest, married, and her husband survived her:—Held, that, in an action on the note by her administrator, the note did not become the property of the husband, but passed to her administrator, though the husband had received the interest during her life, for that he did not thereby reduce the chose in action into possession. Hart v. Stephens, 6 Q. B. 937; 14 L. J., Q. B. 148; 9 Jur. 225.

In an action by payee against maker, a plea that, when the note was made, the payee was the wife of B., and that he elected to take the note in his marital right, and caused the payee to indorse, and she by his authority indorsed the note, and B. delivered it so indorsed to F.; and that after the note became due, and before action, B. died, and that the note came to the payee's possession by delivery from F., is bad, because it does not clearly shew such a reduction of the note into possession by the husband as disentitled the wife to sue upon it after his death. Scarpellini v. Atcheson, 7 Q. B. 864; 14 L. J., Q. B. 333; 9 Jur. 827.

Note passed to Wife dum sola, in Fraud of Husband's Marital Rights.—

To a count by husband and wife upon a note passed to the wife dum sola, the defendant pleaded that the note was passed in fraud of his marriage, and therefore void. The plaintiffs replied, upon equitable grounds, that the husband married before the note became due, upon the faith that it would be duly paid, and without notice of the fraud:—Held, that the note was void ab initio upon grounds of public policy, and was not set up by the mere fact of the marriage of the payee before its maturity. Lee v. Hayes, 17 Ir. C. L. R. 394.

Seemle, that if the defence had been unsustainable at law, the equities being equal the legal right to recover upon the note would have turned the scale in favour of the plaintiffs. Id.

Seemle, that in a court of equity the plaintiffs would fail, because the equities being in the other respects equal, the defendant's equity would be preferred as prior in point of time. Id.

When a married woman has property settled to her separate use during her life, with a power of appointment by deed or will over the corpus, although she exercises such power by her will, the corpus, after her death, will not be liable for a note given by her in her life. Shattock v. Shattock, 2 L. R., Eq. 182; 35 L. J., Ch. 509; 12 Jur., N. S. 405; 14 W. R. 600.

Action by—Husband and Wife.]—Husband and wife may sue on a note made to her during coverture. Philliskirk v. Pluckwell, 2 M. & S. 393.

—Husband alone.]—Where a bill is payable to a feme sole, who intermarries before it becomes due, the husband may sue in his own name, without joining the wife, although the latter has not indorsed the bill. McNeilage v. Holloway, 1 B. & A. 218; S. P., Burrough v. Moss, 10 B. & C. 558.

Forgery of Wife's Name by Husband.]—A bill, payable to the order of a married woman, was remitted to her in respect of her separate estate. Her husband got possession of it without her knowledge, forged her name on the back, then indorsed his own name, and gave the bill to P. to get it discounted, stating that she had indorsed it. P. got it discounted, and in order to do so, was obliged himself to indorse it. He then paid the proceeds to the husband. The acceptor, in consequence of a notice from the wife, refused to pay the holder, who thereupon had recourse to P., who paid the holder. A suit having been instituted in equity by the wife, to establish her title to the bill, and to restrain P. from suing the acceptor:—Held, that P. was to be treated as a purchaser of the bill for value. Dawson v. Prince, 2 De G. & J. 41; 27 L. J., Ch. 169; 4 Jur., N. S. 497.

Held, also, that assuming P. to have notice that the bill was drawn in respect of the wife's separate estate, yet, as there was nothing to excite suspicion of the forgery, he was justified in relying on the husband's statement that the bill had been indorsed by her, and was not bound to inquire further as to the genuineness of her signature, and that there was, therefore, no equity to restrain him from the assertion of the legal title which he had acquired by the husband's indorsement. Id.

Pleading Coverture.]—To an action on a note against maker he pleaded that, at the time of making the note, the plaintiff was the wife of A.; that the consideration for the note was the loan of money of A., advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant without A.'s authority and against his will; that the plaintiff took the note, and holds the same without the authority and against the will of A., and that he never had any property in or right to the note:—Held, an informal plea of coverture, and therefore a bad plea in bar. Guyard v. Sutton, 3 C. B. 153; 15 L. J., C. P. 225; 10 Jur. 459.

8. INFANTS.

In an action against acceptor by an indorsee, it is no defence that the drawers who had drawn the bill payable to themselves, and of course indorsed it, were infants when it was drawn. Taylor v. Croker, 4 Esp. 187.

The infancy of the payee is no answer in an action by the indorsee against the drawer. Grey v. Cooper, 3 Dougl. 65; 1 Selw. N. P. 306.

An infant cannot accept a negotiable bill even for necessities. Williamson v. Watts, 1 Camp. 522.

A person is liable as acceptor of a bill which was drawn while he was an infant, but was accepted by him after he came of age. Stevens v.

Jackson, 2 Rose. 285; 1 Marsh. 469; 6 Taunt. 106; 4 Camp. 164.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff drew a bill, which the defendant accepted. A plea that the defendant accepted the bill whilst he was an infant, being at the time of its acceptance without a date; that the plaintiff afterwards altered the bill by writing a date thereon, and that there never was any licence or ratification given by the defendant to such alteration, after he attained twenty-one, is a good plea, and discloses only a single defence—infancy. Harrison v. Cotgreave, 5 D. & L. 159; 4 C. B. 562; 16 L. J., C. P. 198.

An indorsement by an infant, though he is not capable of making a new contract, transfers the property in the bill, his indorsement being a condition of the contract. Lebel v. Tucker, 8 B. & S. 833.

Evidence as to Age—At Date of Acceptance.]

—A declaration by indorser against acceptor stated that the bill was drawn on the 20th of September, 1847, payable four months after date; and that the defendant then accepted the bill. Plea, infancy of the defendant. It was proved that he became of age on the 24th of December, 1847:—Held, that this was no evidence of his being an infant at the time of his accepting the bill. Harrison v. Clifton, 17 L. J., Ex. 233.

Action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill at four months' date. Pleas, that he did not accept, and that he was an infant when he accepted. Proof, that the acceptance to the bill was his writing, that he came of age one day before the maturity of the bill, and resided in the same town as the drawer and indorser:—Held, evidence for the jury, from which they might infer that the bill was accepted during his minority. Roberts v. Bethell, 12 C. B. 778; 22 L. J., C. P. 69; 16 Jur. 1087.

9. LIQUIDATORS.

The four liquidators of a company passed a resolution that one of them should have power to accept bills of exchange. They afterwards resolved that bills to the amount of 7,500*l.*, which had been accepted to the credit of C., should be renewed. Fresh bills were accordingly drawn and accepted by one liquidator:—Held, that the acceptances were invalid. London and Mediterranean Bank, In re, Agra and Masterman's Bank, Ex parte, 6 L. R., Ch. 206; 24 L. T. 376; 19 W. R. 486.

10. JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.

General Principle.]—A railway company, incorporated by a special act of parliament containing the usual clauses inserted in such statutes, cannot accept bills of exchange. Bateman v. Mid-Wales Railway Company, 1 L. R. C. P. 499; 35 L. J., C. P. 205; 12 Jur., N. S. 453; 14 W. R. 672.

Under the Companies Act of 1862, s. 47, a company, not otherwise having this power, has not power to accept bills of exchange. Peruvian Railway Company v. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Company, 2 L. R., Ch. 617; 36 L. J., Ch. 864; 15 W. R. 1002.

Limited—Liability of Directors.]—A bill drawn on a company, limited, by a shareholder in that company, was accepted, "W. Ellis, secretary, by order of the Royal Surrey Gardens Company, Limited." This acceptance was in fact written by order of certain directors of the company. At the time when the bill became due the company was insolvent. In an action by a second indorsee (who did not shew that either he or the first indorsee had given value to the drawer) against the directors who authorized the acceptance, alleging in one count that they accepted the bill, and in another charging them with falsely representing that they had authority on behalf of the company to accept it:—Held, first, that the directors were not liable as acceptors. Eastwood v. Bain, 3 H. & N. 738; 28 L. J., Ex. 74; 7 W. R. 90.

Held, secondly, that assuming there had been a false representation, the plaintiff not having proved that he thereby sustained damage, the directors were entitled to a verdict. Ib.

A note was signed by three persons describing themselves as directors of a company incorporated, with limited liability, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, and was countersigned by a person who described himself as secretary of the company, in the following form, "London, December 31, 1856: three months after date we jointly promise to pay S., or order, 600*l.*, for value received in stock, on account of the London and Birmingham Hardware Company, Limited":—Held, that the directors who signed it were not personally liable upon the note. Lindus v. Melrose, 3 H. & N. 177; 27 L. J., Ex. 326; 4 Jur., N. S. 488—Ex. Ch.

But a note, signed by four persons describing themselves as "directors of the Financial Insurance Company (Limited)" and countersigned "C. G. G., Manager, London, 28th July, 1866, three months after date we promise to pay the English Joint Stock Bank (Limited), or order, 1,000*l.* value received," is binding on the directors who sign it. Courtauld v. Sanders, 16 L. T. 562; 15 W. R. 906.

A person advanced money for purposes of a company in which he was a shareholder, and received a promissory note: "We, the directors of the Isle of Man Slate and Flag Company Limited, do promise to pay to John Dutton 1,600*l.*, with interest at the rate of 6*l.* per cent. per annum until paid." It bore the seal of the company, and was signed by four directors. The lender had stated that he would lend the money to the directors only:—Held, that the directors who had signed the note were personally liable upon it. Dutton v. Marsh, 6 L. R., Q. B. 361; 40 L. J., Q. B. 175; 24 L. T. 470; 19 W. R. 754.

A resolution to wind up a banking company voluntarily was confirmed on the 22nd, and advertised in the London Gazette on the 26th of November. On the 24th of the same month one of the directors, who had been appointed one of the liquidators, accepted, as director, a bill of exchange on the bank. This bill was afterwards indorsed for value to a person who had no notice that the bank was in liquidation:—Held, that the bill was not a bill of the company, and therefore that the holder could not prove against the company for the amount. London and Mediterranean Bank, In re, Bolognesi, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 567; 40 L. J., Ch. 26; 18 W. R. 976.

A bill of exchange to pay to the drawer's order at three months after date 137*l.* 10*s.* value received in account (fire policy, No. 597), was directed to Henry Connah, Esq., general agent of L'Unione Compagnia D'Assicurazione Generale (Firenze), 8 York Street, Manchester, who wrote upon it: "Accepted, payable at 8, York Street, Manchester, on behalf of the company. H. Connah." In an action against him on this bill:—Held, that he was personally liable as acceptor. Herald v. Connah, 34 L. T. 885.

— Powers of Directors.—The articles of association of a company contained no provisions as to the issue of negotiable instruments, but the objects of the company were such that a power to issue them was to be implied. The directors gave to H. for value an instrument under the seal of the company, headed "debenture," and stamped as a deed, by which the company "undertakes to pay to the order of J. H., on 1st July, 1867, 1,000*l.* with interest half-yearly, on presentation of the annexed interest warrants:"—Held, that the indorsee and transferee for value of this instrument was entitled to prove on it against the company free from equities between H. and the company. Per Wood, L. J., scilicet, that the instrument was a promissory note, but, if not, the company was bound by their promise, publicly held out by the instrument, that they would pay to the order of H., and could not set up against a transferee equities between themselves and H. Per Selwyn, L. J., the instrument was a promissory note. General Estates Company, In re, City Bank, Ex parte, 3 L. R., Ch. 758; 16 W. R. 919.

The directors of a general trading company, part of whose business was to accept bills of exchange, and whose articles conferred the most extensive powers of management on the directors, passed a resolution authorizing the chairman to accept bills drawn on the company by L., upon L.'s depositing securities to a certain amount. The chairman accordingly accepted the bills, and L. deposited some securities, but not nearly to the specified amount. The directors by resolution affirmed the transaction, but it did not appear that they knew that the requisite amount of securities had not been deposited. The bills were entered in the books of the company, and treated as binding on them. On the company being wound up, a bonâ fide holder of some of the bills claimed to prove:—Held, that the proof ought to be admitted, for that the bills were binding on the company, as they had been accepted modo et formâ by the authority of the board of directors, and the provision as to the deposit of securities was a collateral matter, into the observance of which a holder of the bills was not bound to inquire. Land Credit Company of Ireland, In re, O'cand, Gurney & Co., Ex parte, 4 L. R., Ch. 460; 39 L. J., Ch. 27; 20 L. T., N. S. 641; 17 W. R. 689.

A bill directed to a company was accepted thus: "Accepted, payable at Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., C. M., directors of the Great Snowdon Mountain Copper Company Limited," such acceptance being countersigned by the secretary. The directors were in fact authorized to accept bills. In an action against C. and M. personally:—Held, that the acceptance complied with the requirements of the Companies Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 47, and bound the company. Okell v. Charles, 34 L. T. 822—C. A.

— Acceptance of Bill by Secretary—Misdescription of Company.—A. directed a bill to a company of limited liability by the name of the Saltash Watermen's Steam Packet Company, its full name being the Saltash Watermen's Steam Packet Company, Limited. J. M., who was secretary to the company, wrote across it, "Accepted, payable at Messrs. B. & Co., J. M., secretary to the company." The bill was not honoured:—Held, that the secretary was personally liable to A. on the bill, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 43, by reason of the omission of the word "limited" to the name of the company. Penrose v. Martyr, El. Bl. & El. 499; 28 L. J., Q. B. 28; 5 Jur., N. S. 362.

Registered—Powers of Directors to bind Company.—By the deed of settlement of a company, registered under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110 (repealed by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 205), it was provided that it should not be lawful for the directors to contract any debts in conducting the affairs of the company, beyond 100*l.*, at any one time, except in the case of the purchase-money for a newspaper, of which the board of directors might leave unpaid any part not exceeding 1,000*l.*, and might issue a promissory note or accept a bill of exchange on behalf of the company for such balance:—Held, that the substance of the authority was, that the directors might contract a debt to the amount of 1,000*l.*, and secure it by a negotiable instrument; and that the directors, having contracted a debt to that amount, were not precluded from giving security for it, with its legal accretions, by several notes or bills, instead of a single note or bill. Thompson v. Wesleyan Newspaper Association, 8 C. B. 849; 19 L. J., C. P. 114.

A declaration alleged that the defendants were a company, having obtained a certificate of complete registration under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110 (repealed by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 205); that P. and L., being two directors, made their note, and thereby promised, on behalf of the company, to pay the plaintiff, or order, 32*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, the balance of an account due to him from the company, three months after date, which note was signed by P. & L., and made by them, and in their names, on behalf of the company; and thereupon the company, in consideration of the premises, promised the plaintiff to pay him the note:—Held, that the declaration was insufficient, and did not shew any authority in P. & L. to bind the company. Thompson v. Universal Salvage Company, 5 D. & L. 380; 1 Ex. 694; 17 L. J., Ex. 118.

Under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 45 (repealed by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 205), if a bill drawn upon a company regulated by that act is accepted by two of the directors, the acceptance is void as against the company, if not expressed to be accepted by such director on behalf of such company, though the clause does not contain any words of nullification. Halford v. Cameron's Coalbrookdale, &c., Railway Company, 16 Q. B. 442; 20 L. J., Q. B. 160; 15 Jur. 335; S. P., Edwards v. Cameron's Coalbrookdale, &c., Railway Company, 16 Q. B. 446, n.; 6 Ex. 269.

But where a bill drawn upon the company by its corporate name and sealed with its seal, having the name of the company circumscribed, was accepted by two persons styling themselves directors, appointed to accept the bill, and the acceptance was countersigned by the company's secretary:—Held, that such acceptance was sufficiently express. Ib.

The following instrument was signed by two directors of a registered company under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110 (repealed by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 205), and sealed with the seal of the company: "Three months after date, we, two of the directors of the Ark Life Assurance Society, by and on behalf of the society, promise to pay to Mr. May, or order, 67*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, value received." There was no counter signature by the secretary of the company:—Held, a note binding on the company, and not on the parties who signed it. Aggs v. Nicholson, 1 H. & N. 165; 25 L. J., Ex. 348.

Instrument not Drawn in Accordance with Deed of Settlement.—An instrument issued by a company completely registered pursuant to 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, in this form: "Sea, Fire, Life Assurance Company. To the cashier, Thirty days after date, credit Mrs. A., or order, with 311*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* claims per Susan King, in cash, on account of this corporation," and signed by two of the directors of the company, is a note, and binding on the company, notwithstanding it may not have been drawn strictly pursuant to the provisions of the deed of settlement, so as to be binding upon the shareholders. Allen v. Sea, Fire and Life Assurance Company, 9 C. B. 574; 19 L. J., C. P. 305; 14 Jur. 869, n.

A deed of settlement of a company under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, contained a clause that "the directors shall, and they are authorized to make and issue, indorse and accept, in the name of and on account of the company, such bills of exchange and notes as they may think expedient, provided that the total amount of such bills and notes due at any one time shall not exceed 100,000*l.*; and all such bills and notes, and no other, shall be so made and issued, indorsed or accepted, as to be binding on the company and on the shareholders, and each of them, to the extent of the shares held by them in the capital of the company, and no further or otherwise":—Held, that this clause afforded no answer to an action on a bill accepted by the company, in the form prescribed by s. 45. Gordon v. Sea, Fire and Life Assurance Society, 1 H. & N. 599; 26 L. J., Ex. 202; 3 Jur., N. S. 188.

Or within Scope of Company's Business.—A bill drawn on behalf of a company, though in the form prescribed in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 45, does not bind the company, and is not available in the hands even of a bona fide holder, if the bill is drawn for any purpose not within the scope of the business of the company, and not such as the directors have power by the deed of settlement to bind the company by bills in respect of. Balfour v. Ernest, 5 C. B., N. S. 601; 28 L. J., C. P. 170; 5 Jur., N. S. 439; 32 L. T., O. S. 295; 7 W. R. 207.

Proviso in Deed of Settlement restricting Liability of Shareholders upon Bills—Void.—A proviso in a deed of a company under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, restricting the liability of the shareholders upon bills of exchange, which the directors have by the deed authority to draw and accept, is repugnant and void as regards the public; and a bill drawn under such authority binds, even in the hands of a holder with notice of the deed, both the company and the individual shareholders to its full extent. State Fire Insurance Company, Ex parte, Meredith, In re, 32 L. J., Ch. 300; 9 Jur., N. S. 298; 8 L. T. 146; 11 W. R. 416.

Unregistered or Unincorporated Companies—Powers of Directors.]—The Union Bank of Calcutta was a partnership carrying on the business of banking there; and by its deed of settlement it was provided that the business of the company should be to issue notes payable to bearer on demand, to discount bills and notes, and to lend money on the security of personal property or of cash accounts. It was further provided, that no note should be issued to an extent exceeding twenty-five lacs of rupees, and that no notes or bills should be issued, nor bills or notes discounted, nor money lent, otherwise than of the description and in the manner above mentioned. An action was brought against a shareholder of the bank, on certain instruments which were in the following form:—

"No. 445. Union Bank Post Bill.

Calcutta, 1st July, 1847.

Company's rupees, 10,000.

At sixty days after sight this our first bill of exchange, second and third of the same tenor and date not paid, we promise to pay on account of the proprietors of the Union Bank of Calcutta, to the order of Messrs. Cockerell, Larpent & Co., the sum of Co.'s rupees, 10,000, value received.

J. RENIER, } Directors."
W. P. GRANT, }

Held, that the two directors had power to bind the shareholders by these instruments, and that the co-partnership was sufficiently described in the instruments by the name of "the Proprietors of the Union Bank of Calcutta," although their proper name was the "Union Bank of Calcutta." Forbes v. Marshall, 11 Ex. 166; 24 L. J., Ex. 305.

The defendants agreed by deed to form themselves into a mining company; that B. should be the resident director or manager; that he should employ workmen, provide all needful implements, materials and machinery, and so direct the mine as most effectually to promote the interests of the company; that he should transmit to the secretary his accounts monthly of the sums paid for wages, salaries, materials and otherwise, together with a statement of all debts and liabilities due from the company; provided always, that he should not expend or engage the credit of the company for any sum exceeding 50*l*. in any one month, without the express authority in writing of the managing directors:—Held, that under this deed B. had no authority to bind the company by the acceptance of bills of exchange. Brown v. Byers, 16 M. & W. 252; 16 L. J., Ex. 112.

Liability of Directors.]—An action was brought against a defendant on a note signed by himself and other directors, as follows:—"We, the directors of the Royal Bank of Australia, for ourselves and the other shareholders of the company, jointly and severally promise to pay G. H. W., or bearer, on the 19th of February, 1860, at the Union Bank of London, 200*l*. for value received, on account of the company":—Held, that he was personally liable on the note. Penkiri v. Connell, 5 Ex. 381; 19 L. J., Ex. 305.

Directors of a joint-stock newspaper company gave the plaintiff the following note, in part payment for the purchase of a newspaper, which the company had agreed to purchase of him:—"On demand, we jointly and severally promise to pay Mr. H., or order, 250*l*. value received, for and on behalf of the Wesleyan Newspaper Association." Signed by the directors:—Held, that the words jointly and severally were equivalent to jointly and personally; and that the directors were therefore personally liable on the note. Healey v. Story, 3 Ex. 3; 18 L. J., Ex. 8.

Manager Signing but not as Acceptor—Liability of.]—Declaration on a bill made by R. P., directed to A., B., C., D., E., and F., and accepted by them. Pleas by A., B. and C.: that R. P. did not make the bill, and that A., B. and C. did not accept. Judgment by default against D., E. and F. The bill produced at the trial was drawn upon the directors of the I.S. company, and accepted "for the company" by D. and E., signing as directors. F. signed his name with theirs, as manager; all the defendants were shareholders, and all but F. were directors. The jury found that F., as manager, was not an acceptor of the bill: it was not put to them to say (nor did counsel desire that they should be asked), whether or not D. and E. had authority to bind the company by acceptances. Verdict for the plaintiffs:—Held, that F. was not, in point of law, liable as an acceptor, either by his having actually signed his name with those of D. and E., or by their having accepted the bill as directors of a company in which he held shares, and that the plaintiffs had failed on both issues. Bult v. Morrell, 12 A. & E. 745.

Acceptance of one Trustee for five.]—Indorsee against three persons as acceptors of a bill drawn on "E. M. and others, trustees of Clarence Temperance Hall, Liverpool," and accepted thus—"Accepted, E. M." The three with E. M. and another, were the five trustees of a body of persons associated together for the purpose of building the Temperance Hall. E. M. had authority from all the trustees to accept the bill on their behalf:—Held, that they were bound by the acceptance, though it did not shew on the face of it that E. M. intended to accept not individually, but for himself and four others. Jenkins v. Morris, 16 M. & W. 877.

Acceptance by Purser.]—A bill directed to "J. D., purser, West Downs Mining Company," was accepted by him as follows:—"J. D., per proc. West Downs Mining Company." J. D. was a member of the company which was not incorporated:—Held, that J. D. was personally liable on his acceptance. Nicholas v. Diamond, 9 Ex. 154; 23 L. J., Ex. 1.

An order to pay to the drawer's order at three months after date a sum of money "for value received in machinery supplied the adventurers in Hayter and Holne Moor Mines," was delivered to Mr. W. Charles. W. Charles wrote upon it, "Accepted for the company, W. Charles, purser":—Held, that this made W. Charles personally liable as the acceptor. Mare v. Charles, 5 El. & Bl. 978; 25 L. J., Q. B. 119; 2 Jur., N. S. 234.

Acceptance by Secretary of Benefit Building Society.]—A secretary of a benefit building society signing a note in the following form: "Midland Counties Building Society, No. 3, Birmingham, 1st September, 1856. One month after demand, we jointly and severally promise to pay J. B. 120*l*. with interest thereon after the rate 6*l*. per cent. per annum (payable half-yearly), for value received. W. H., S. B., directors;

W. F., secretary," is personally liable on the note. Hottumley v. Fisher, 1 H. & C. 211; 31 L. J. Ex. 417; 8 Jur., N. S. 895; 6 L. T. 688; 10 W. R. 669; S. P., Price v. Taylor, 5 H. & N. 540; 29 L. J. Ex. 331; 6 Jur., N. S. 402; 2 L. T. 221; 8 W. R. 419.

Negotiation by Liquidators.—The holders of dishonoured bills of an insolvent company, being also the acceptors of other bills not arrived at maturity which are in the possession of the official liquidator of the company, are not entitled under the Companies Act of 1862 to have their acceptances retained by the official liquidator, and not negatived until due, when a right of set-off would arise. Commercial Bank Corporation of India and the East, In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 333.

Holders of dishonoured acceptances of a company which is being wound up cannot, either at law or in equity, set off the present liability of the company upon such acceptances against a future liability of themselves on other bills accepted by them, and which the company holds. Nor does set-off in bankruptcy apply to such a case. Id.

11. JOINT OR SEVERAL.

Joint and Several.—A note beginning, "I promise to pay," and signed by two, is joint and several. Clerk v. Blackstock, Holt. 474; S. P., March v. Ward, Peake, 130. But see Ridd v. Moggridge, 2 H. & N. 568.

A joint and several note, although it contains two promises in the alternative, is one contract and one instrument. Gardner v. Walsh, 5 El. & Bl. 83; 24 L. J., Q. B. 285; 1 Jur., N. S. 828.

A note in these words, "I, J. C., promise to pay J. F., or his order, 50l., with interest, at six months' notice. (Signed) J. C., or else H. B.," is no note as against H. B. Ferns v. Bond, 4 B. & A. 679.

A bill, drawn in this form—"Pay to our order," signed in the name of two persons and Co., and accepted, may be declared upon by the indorsee as a bill drawn by an aggregate firm; and if proved that the firm consists of only one person, yet it is not a variance. Bass v. Clive, 4 M. & S. 13; 4 Camp. 78.

Joint or Several.—A declaration that the defendant and another made their note, by which they jointly "or" severally promised to pay, is good. Rees v. Abbott, Cowp. 832.

Joint.—Messrs. J. C., R. M., J. P. and T. S., carrying on business as bankers, a note in the following form, was signed by R. M.:—"I promise to pay the bearer, on demand, five pounds; value received. For J. C., R. M., J. P. and T. S.—R. M."—Held, that the holder of this note had not a separate right of action against the party so signing, but that the firm was liable. Buckley, Ex parte, 14 M. & W. 469; 14 L. J., Ex. 341; S. P., Galway (Lord) v. Matthew, 10 East, 264; 1 Camp. 403.

A note, which appears on the face of it to be the separate note of A. only, cannot be declared on as the joint note of A. and B., though given to secure a debt for which A. and B. were jointly liable. Stiffin v. Walker, 3 Camp. 308; S. P., Emly v. Lye, 15 East, 7.

Directors of an unregistered joint-stock company called "The Royal Bank of Australia," issued promissory notes at five years' date, in the following form:—"We, directors of the Royal Bank of Australia, for ourselves and the other shareholders of the company, jointly and severally promise to pay 200l. for value received on account of the company." (Signed by three directors.) In an action upon the note against two directors, one of whom had signed the note, and four shareholders:—Held, that this note bound the shareholders jointly, inasmuch as it clearly expressed an intention that they should be jointly bound; though it professed to bind them separately also, which it could not do. MacLae v. Sutherland, 3 El. & Bl. 1; 2 C. L. R. 1320; 23 L. J., Q. B. 229; 18 Jur. 942; S. P. & S. C. nom. Galloway, In re, 18 Jur. 888.

A., B. & C. drew a cheque for 500l. on a banking company, C. being a surety for A. & B.:—Held, that this was a joint debt and could not be treated as a joint and several debt. Other v. Iveson, 3 Drew. 177; 24 L. J., Ch. 654.

Two Payees not Partners—Indorsement by One only.—If a bill is drawn by two, payable to "us or our order," and subscribed by both, though not in partnership, they make themselves partners by the form of the bill, to the effect of making an indorsement by one of them valid. Carriek v. Vickery, 2 Dougl. 653, n.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill, payable to two persons not partners, and, when accepted, indorsed by one of those persons in the name of both; the defendant cannot dispute the regularity of this indorsement. Jones v. Radford, 1 Camp. 83, n.

On Representation, or on Faith of others Joining.—When a person signs a note on a representation that others are to join, and one afterwards refuses to sign, the payee cannot recover against the person who signed it, unless the jury is satisfied that such person, knowing the facts, and being aware of his rights, consented to waive his objection. Leaf v. Gibbs, 4 C. & P. 466.

A. agreed to join his brother in a note for his accommodation, provided B. would also join. A. accordingly signed an instrument in the form of a note, a blank being left for the name of the payee. B. refused to join, and afterwards A.'s brother delivered the imperfect instrument to C. for value, representing that he had authority to deal with it, and C.'s name was inserted as payee:—Held, that C. could not recover on this note against A. Awde v. Dixon, 6 Ex. 869; 20 L. J., Ex. 295.

A., as surety to a firm, signed a joint and several bill, on the faith that B. would join as a co-surety. B. never signed it; but A. was afterwards compelled to pay it by proceedings at law at the suit of an indorsee. One of the firm died, and the others became bankrupt:—Held, that the firm were not entitled to avail themselves of the bill, and were liable to repay the amount and the costs of the proceedings, both at law and in equity. Rice v. Gordon, 11 Beav. 265.

Payment by One.—An acknowledgment by one of several drawers of a joint and several note does not (since 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 14), take it out of the Statute of Limitations as against the others. Cockrill v. Sparke, 1 H. & C. 699;

32 L. J., Ex. 118; 9 Jur., N. S. 307; 7 L. T. 752.

A payment by one of several makers of a joint and several note may be pleaded by any one of the parties as a payment by himself. Beaumont v. Greathead, 3 D. & L. 631; 2 C. B. 454; 15 L. J., C. P. 130.

Pleadings in Actions on.]—Action by A. and B., payees of a joint and several note, against C., one of the makers. A plea, that the note was made by B., C. and another, and that C., in case A. and B. were to recover from him the amount of the note, would be entitled to call on B. for contribution, is a bad plea, as being no answer to the action upon the several contract by C. Beecham v. Smith, El. Bl. & El. 442; 27 L. J., Q. B. 257; 4 Jur., N. S. 1018.

Semble, per Lord Campbell, C. J., that even if the plea had been good, a replication that A. & B. made the note only as sureties for third parties, would have been a good answer. Id.

A declaration against a party, as maker of a note, is supported by the production of a joint and several note made by him and another person. Bulbeck v. Jones, 5 Jur., N. S. 1317.

In an action against one of several makers of a joint note, or one of several drawers of a joint bill, if it is stated as a several one made by one alone, the objection can only be taken by a plea in abatement. Evans v. Lewis, 1 B. & A. 226.

A joint and several note of A. and three others may be set off against a claim of A. in an action by him against the payee upon a money demand. Owen v. Wilkinson, 5 C. B., N. S. 526; 28 L. J., C. P. 3; 5 Jur., N. S. 102.

What Constitutes a Variance.]—The non-joinder of one of two joint drawers of a bill, is no variance in an action by an indorsee against the other. Wilson v. Reddall, Gow, 161.

Where a declaration stated a bill to be drawn upon and accepted by three persons, and it was proved to have been drawn upon and accepted by the three jointly with a fourth.—Held, that this was no variance. Mountstephen v. Brooke, 1 B. & A. 224.

12. PARTNERS.

Acceptance in Name of Firm.]—A partner has no implied authority by law to bind his co-partners by his acceptance of a bill except by an acceptance in the true style of the partnership. Kirk v. Blurton, 9 M. & W. 284; 12 L. J., Ex. 117.

Therefore, where a firm consisted of J. B. and C. H., the partnership name being J. B. only, and C. H. accepted a bill in the name of J. B. & Co.:—Held, that J. B. was not bound thereby. Id.

Where Thomas Seymour and Sarah Ayres carried on business in the name of "Seymour and Ayres," and Seymour signed a note "Thomas Seymour and Sarah Ayres":—Held, that this was a sufficient signature in the name of the firm, and was binding upon Ayres. Norton v. Seymour, 3 C. B. 792; 16 L. J., C. P. 100; 11 Jur. 312.

A., who was a cheesemonger at Woolwich, carried on at Woolwich the hosiery trade in partnership with C., but in his own name. C. accepted, in the name of A., a bill drawn for goods supplied to the partnership, and which was addressed to A. at Woolwich:—Held, that the acceptance was binding on A., although the bill was not addressed to the place where the partnership business was carried on. Stephens v. Reynolds, 5 H. & N. 513; 2 F. & F. 147; 29 L. J., Ex. 278; 2 L. T. 222.

Effect of Misdescription is for Jury.]

—Where a partner accustomed to issue notes on behalf of the firm, indorsed a particular note in a name differing from that of the partnership, and not previously used by them, which note was objected to on that account, in an action upon it by an indorsee, the proper question for the jury is whether the name used, though inaccurate, substantially describes the firm, or whether it so far varies that the indorser must be taken to have issued the note on his own account and not in the exercise of his general authority as partner. Faith v. Richmond, 11 A. & E. 339; 3 P. & D. 187.

Effect of Person holding Himself out as being Partner.]—A. employed B. to manage his business, and to carry it on in the name of B. & Co.;

the drawing and accepting bills were incidental to the carrying on of such business, but it was stipulated between them that B. should not draw or accept bills. B. having accepted a bill in the name of B. & Co.:—Held, that A. was liable on the bill in the hands of an indorsee, who took it without any knowledge of A. and B. or the business. Edmunds v. Bushell, 1 L. R., Q. B. 97; 12 Jur., N. S. 332.

Goods having been ordered by E., were invoiced to E. & Son, and a bill was drawn for the price on E. & Son. The bill was accepted in the handwriting of the son, in the name of E. & Son. The son was not a partner, and it was alleged that he accepted the bill only as his father's amanuensis:—Held, that if the son had so conducted himself that the drawer might reasonably have believed, and did believe, that he was a partner, he was liable on the bill. Gurney v. Evans, 3 H. & N. 122; 27 L. J., Ex. 166.

Authority to Draw, Accept, or Indorse.]—S. & S., trading in that name, becoming embarrassed, executed a deed, to which they were parties of the first part, certain of the creditors, as trustees, of the second part, and the general scheduled creditors (among whom the trustees were named) of the third part. The deed assigned their property to the trustees, and empowered the trustees to carry on the business, under the name of the Stanton Iron Company, to execute all contracts and instruments necessary to carry it on, to divide the net income to be taken among the creditors, in rateable proportions (such income to be deemed the property of S. & S.), with power to the majority of the creditors, assembled at a meeting, to make rules for conducting the business, or to put an end to it altogether; and after the debts had been discharged, the property was to be re-transferred by the trustees to S. & S. Two of the creditors, C. & W., were named among the trustees; C. never acted; W. acted for six weeks, and then resigned. Some time afterwards the other trustees, who continued to carry on the business, became indebted to H., and gave him bills, accepted by themselves "per proc. the Stanton Iron Company."—Held, that there was no partnership created by the deed, and that, consequently C. and W. could not be sued on the bills as partners in the company. Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Cas. 268; 9 C. B., N. S. 847; 30 L. J., C. P. 125; 7 Jur., N. S. 165.

Held, also, that they could not be sued for goods sold and delivered, there being no distinction upon the question of liability between the bills and the consideration for which they were given. Ib.

Four mercantile firms, each of whom carried on a separate trading business of its own, agreed to carry on jointly a particular trade which had been theretofore carried on by the Adanson Fibre Company, one of the four firms, alone. The agreement between the four firms provided that the business should be carried on under the style of the Adanson Fibre Company, who were to keep separate books for the purpose, and that each party to the agreement should be liable in respect of the business in proportion to his share in the undertaking, and in the event of being under cash advance he should receive interest for the same; but it was "understood and agreed, that the finance of the business be carried on by acceptances of the several parties interested as may from time to time be arranged." The association was known to the members as the Adanson Fibre Company, but its name and existence were kept secret. In order to raise money for the purposes of the business bills of exchange drawn by M., one of the firms, upon each of the other three, were accepted by them, and were discounted by bankers, the money thus obtained being applied to the purposes of the joint business. The bankers were ignorant of the existence of the association. An order was afterwards made to wind up the association, as an unregistered partnership consisting of more than seven members:—Held, that only those of the firms whose names appeared upon the bills of exchange were liable in respect of them, and that consequently the holders of the bills could not prove upon them in the winding-up. Adanson Fibre Company, In re, Miles's Claim, 9 L. R., Ch. 635; 43 L. J., Ch. 732; 31 L. T. 9; 22 W. R. 889. Reversing 30 L. T. 776.

The acceptor of a bill drawn in the name of a firm, without the authority of one of its members, to the order of the firm, is not estopped from disputing the indorsement on the ground that the same member of the firm did not give his authority. Garland v. Jacob, 8 L. R., Ex. 216; 28 L. T. 877; 21 W. R. 868—Ex. Ch.

B., a member of the firm of W. and B., attorneys and solicitors, drew and indorsed for value to the plaintiff in the partnership name, a bill of exchange payable to the order of W. and B., which the defendant accepted without consideration. The indorsement was in respect of an entirely private matter of business between B. and the plaintiff, unconnected with partnership purposes; B. had no authority from W. either to draw or indorse the bill. In an action by the indorsee against the acceptor, he having traversed the indorsement:—Held, that he was not estopped from shewing that there had been no indorsement in fact by the firm. Ib.

A partner has no implied authority to bind his firm by issuing acceptances in blank. Hogarth v. Latham, 3 Q. B. D. 643; 47 L. J., Q. B. 339; 39 L. T. 75; 26 W. R. 388—C. A.

F., of the firm of L. & Co., gave an acceptance purporting to be made by the firm, with a blank for the name of the drawer. C. gave it to H. for value. H. filled up the bill, putting the name of his firm, H. & Co., as drawers, and indorsed it to himself, knowing when he did so that F. had no authority to accept the bill:—Held, that L. & Co. were not liable on the bill at the suit of H. Ib.

Semble, that a bona fide holder for value to whom the bill had come in a perfect state would have been entitled to sue. Ib.

The defendants were partners for the purpose of working a coal mine. Two of them conducted the business of the colliery. The firm being in debt, and two actions having been brought against them, the managing partners borrowed of the plaintiff, upon the credit of the firm, money for the purpose of settling these actions, and accepted, in the name of the firm, a bill drawn by him on them. The partnership deed contained a clause, that if any partner should for his own use, or for any other purpose than the immediate use of the partnership, draw, accept, or indorse any bill of exchange in the name of the firm, the others might determine his interest in the partnership:—Held, that the managing partners had authority to bind the partnership by borrowing the money, and accepting the bill. Brown v. Kidger, 3 H. & N. 853; 28 L. J., Ex. 66.

Two partners carried on business as brokers, under an agreement that they were to get orders on commission and divide the expenses. One of them travelled for orders, and having incurred expenses, drew a bill for the first time in the partnership name, to raise funds to execute an order. The other partner accepted it, but before it was issued countermanded the authority to negotiate it, and it was negotiated without his knowledge:—Held, that the mere partnership did not render him liable upon it. Yates v. Dalton, 28 L. J., Ex. 69.

A bill accepted in the name of a firm, in the hands of a bona fide holder, is valid against the firm, although the partner who accepted had no authority to do so and his doing so was fraudulent. Wiseman v. Easton, 8 L. T. 637.

— In Case of Firm of Solicitors.—The implied authority of one partner to bind another by a note or bill is confined to partnerships for the purpose of trade. Hedley v. Bainbridge, 3 Q. B. 316; 2 G. & D. 483; 6 Jur. 853.

One of two attorneys in partnership has no implied authority to bind his partner by a note in the name of the firm, though given for their debt, as for money handed to the firm by a client to be laid out on mortgage. Ib.

L., a partner in a firm carrying on the business of solicitors, gave, without the knowledge of his partners, a note in the joint name of the firm, as security for a sum of money advanced to him by C., and applied the money to his own private use. The partners filed a bill in equity against C. and L. for the delivery up of the note:—Held, that the note was not binding on the partners, either as between them and L., or as between them and C. Smith v. Coleman, 7 Jur. 1052. See also SOLICITOR.

— Drawing post-dated Cheque.—A post-dated cheque, put into circulation with the express intention of its being held over till a subsequent day, is for all practical purposes a bill of exchange; and, therefore, one member of a firm of attorneys cannot bind the firm by drawing a post-dated cheque in the name of the firm without authority for purposes unconnected with the partnership business. Forster v. Mackreth, 2 L. R., Ex. 163; 36 L. J., Ex. 94; 16 L. T. 23; 15 W. R. 747.

Liability of Retiring Partner.—A party who had been a member of a trading firm, non-resident, and in general not taking any ostensible part in its affairs, retiring, but giving no notice of his retirement, is liable for bills afterwards discounted to the managing partner in the ordinary way, and for the purposes of the firm. Western Bank of Scotland v. Needell, 1 F. & F. 464.

Authority of new Firm to bind old Firm.—A new firm has not authority to bind the old firm without the authority of the retiring members, by acceptances in its name for the debts of the old firm; but when such an acceptance has been given in renewal of a bill given by the old firm, the liability of the retiring members on the old bill remains. Spenceley v. Greenwood, 1 F. & F. 297.

Acceptance by Partner "for Company and Self."—A bill drawn upon and addressed to the Milford Spinning Company as the drawees was accepted by F. Malcolmson, one of the partners, "for the Milford Spinning Company and self."—Held, that the acceptance did not entitle the drawer to be paid out of the separate estate of F. Malcolmson in a suit for administration of his assets. Malcolmson v. Malcolmson, 1 Ir. L. R., Ch. D. 228.

Given or taken in Fraud of Partnership.—Where, to an action upon an acceptance purporting to be in the name of the firm, and given in their ordinary style and description, they deny the acceptance, and prove that the acceptance was given by one partner in fraud of the firm, such proof does not call upon the holder to shew that he gave consideration for the bill, unless the evidence of the defendant affects him with knowledge of the fraud. Musgrave v. Drake, D. & M. 347; 5 Q. B. 185; 13 L. J., Q. B. 16; 7 Jur. 1015.

In an action by indorsee against members of a firm on a bill accepted in the name of the firm, upon its being proved that the acceptance was by one of the partners in fraud of the partnership and contrary to the partnership articles, the onus is cast on the holder of the bill, of shewing that he gave value. Hogg v. Sheen, 18 C. B., N. S. 426; 34 L. J., C. P. 153; 11 Jur., N. S. 244; 12 L. T. 709; 13 W. R. 383.

A bill drawn by a partner in the name of his firm, indorsed by him also in such name to himself, and discounted at his private bankers, for his own account, cannot be proved against the joint estate of the firm, unless he had authority from partners to act as he did, with regard to the bill, or unless the proceeds have actually been applied to partnership purposes, and the firm is indebted to his private account to an amount to cover the amount of the bill. Darlington and Stockton Banking Company, Ex parte, Riches. In re, 34 L. J., Bk. 10; 11 Jur., N. S. 122; 12 L. T. 372; 13 W. R. 335.

Liability of Partner accepting Individually.

—One who individually accepts a bill, addressed to a firm of which he is a member, is individually liable thereon. Owen v. Van Ester, 10 C. B. 318; 20 L. J., C. P. 61.

Non-Liability of Partner where the Name of the Firm is an Individual.

—If the name of a partnership firm be merely the name of an individual partner, proof that he signed such name to a bill of exchange is not enough to make the firm liable on the bill. To establish the liability, the holder of the bill must further prove that the signature was put to it by the authority and for the purposes of the firm. Yorkshire Banking Company v. Beatson (1); Leeds and County Banking Company v. Beatson (2), 4 C. P. D. 204; 48 L. J., C. P. 428; 40 L. T. 654; 27 W. R. 911.

Evidence to shew Authority of Partner.—If a bill or note is drawn, accepted or indorsed, by one of two persons who are partners in a business which is not a trade (e.g. as attorneys), in the name of the firm, and the partner, who did not write the name of the firm, by his plea denies the drawing, acceptance, or indorsement, the plaintiff must give evidence of the authority of the other partner to draw, accept or indorse in the name of the firm; but in the case of a commercial firm this is not necessary, as there is a general authority. Levy v. Pyne, Car. & M. 453.

One who takes from a member of a trading firm, in satisfaction of his separate debt, a negotiable security in the name of the partnership, is bound to shew that it was accepted or indorsed with the concurrence of the other parties. Leverson v. Lane, 13 C. B., N. S. 278; 31 L. J., C. P. 10; 9 Jur., N. S. 670; 7 L. T. 326; 11 W. R. 74.

Pleadings in Actions against.—In an action against two as acceptors of a bill drawn on them, C. pleaded that he and the other defendant were partners, and as such had accepted bills for partnership purposes; that the other defendant accepted the bill in question in the name of the co-partnership, in fraud of him, C., and not for the partnership, but for his own private purposes, and without the consent of C., and that there never was any consideration of value received by C. for the acceptance or the payment thereof; and that the plaintiff, at the times of drawing and accepting the bill, had notice of all the premises:—Held, that, as the plea alleged notice to the plaintiff at the very time when the bill was accepted, the implied authority of his co-partner to bind C. by the acceptance did not exist as to the particular bill, and that the plea contained no confession of the acceptance in fact, and was therefore bad as an argumentative traverse of the acceptance by C. alleged in the declaration. Jones v. Corbett, 2 Q. B. 828; 2 G. & D. 308; 6 Jur. 778.

A plea by one of the three partners sued upon a bill that it was accepted in violation of the terms of the partnership deed, and for a private debt of one of the partners, amounts to an argumentative denial of the acceptance. Grant v. Enthoven, 1 Ex. 382; 17 L. J., Ex. 70.

IV. FOREIGN BILLS AND NOTES.

Drawn in Sets.—An indorsee of a foreign bill, drawn in sets, cannot maintain an action for the other sets against an intermediate indorser who has them not. Pinard v. Klockmann, 3 B. & S. 388; 32 L. J., Q. B. 82; 9 Jur., N. S. 599; 7 L. T. 625; 11 W. R. 260.

A foreign bill was made in four parts by A., and was indorsed by the payee to B., who indorsed to the defendants, who indorsed to C., who indorsed to the plaintiff. The first of the four parts only came into the possession of the plaintiff, and he having lost that part brought an action against the defendants for not delivering over the other part. Only the first part had ever come into the possession of the defendants, nor were they able to obtain possession of the others:—Held, that no action would lie against them, as there was no obligation upon them to hand the other parts to the plaintiff. Id.

By an agreement under seal, the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff a sum of money by instalments, and the plaintiff agreed to deliver up to the defendant certain bills of exchange mentioned in a schedule, provided that if the plaintiff should not, before the last instalment became due, deliver to the defendant the bills mentioned, the payment should be postponed until their delivery. The bills were foreign bills drawn on the defendant in sets of three:—Held, that the plaintiff did not perform his contract by delivering to the defendant one part of each of the bills so drawn. Kearney v. West Granada Gold and Silver Mining Company, 1 H. & N. 412; 26 L. J., Ex. 15.

A drawee (who was also payee) of a foreign bill drawn in three parts, accepted and indorsed one part to a creditor, to remain in his hands until some other security was given for it; and afterwards accepted and indorsed another part for value to a third person. The acceptor substituted another security for the part first accepted, whereupon it was given up to him:—Held, that the holder of the part secondly accepted was entitled to recover on the bill against the acceptor. Holdsworth v. Hunter, 10 B. & C. 449; 5 M. & R. 393.

Held, also, that the acceptor would have been liable on the part secondly accepted, even if the first part had been indorsed and circulated unconditionally. Id.

Suing on.—A holder may recover in an English court on a bill drawn in France on a French stamp, though, in consequence of its not being in the form required by the French code, he had failed in an action which he had brought on it in France. Wynne v. Jackson, 2 Russ. 351.

As by the law of France an indorsement in blank does not transfer any property in a bill, the holder of a bill drawn in that country, and indorsed there in blank, cannot recover against the acceptor in the courts of this country. Trimbe v. Vignier, 1 Bing. N. C. 151; 4 M. & Scott, 695; 6 C. & P. 25.

A bill payable in France, though drawn in England, is a foreign bill, and notice of dishonour according to the French law is sufficient. Hirschfeld v. Smith, 1 L. R., C. P. 340; 35 L. J., C. P. 177; 12 Jur., N. L. 523.

A merchant resident in Norway, and not a

British subject, drew in Norway his bill at four months on E. in this country, and after indorsing it to the order of D., sent it by post to D. in London, who indorsed it to the plaintiff in London:—Held, that there was not a cause of action which arose in this country, nor a breach of a contract made within it, and that therefore the plaintiff could not sue the foreign merchant in this country on the bill under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, ss. 18, 19. Sichel v. Borch, 2 H. & C. 954; 33 L. J., Ex. 179.

If the remitter of a foreign bill receives credit from the drawer till foreign post day, and the payee gives the remitter full consideration, but the remitter does not pay the drawer, the payee may maintain his action against the drawer, although the drawer has never received any consideration. Munroe v. Bordier, 8 C. B. 862; 19 L. J., C. P. 133.

H. W. & Co., American merchants, were indebted to P. & Co., of Paris, and C. & Co., of London, and being pressed for payment by P. & Co., remitted funds to C. & Co., which paid and overpaid them, with a direction to remit the balance to P. & Co. in Paris. In order so to do, C. & Co. bought in London, in the ordinary course of business, a bill on Paris, drawn by M. & Co. to the order of C. & Co., to be remitted at once to Paris, but to be paid for by C. & Co. on the next foreign post day. The bill was so remitted, but before the next foreign post day, C. & Co. failed, and thereupon M. & Co. refused to pay the bill. P. & Co. were afterwards paid by H., W. & Co. in full. In an action by P. & Co., on behalf of H., W. & Co., against M. & Co., on the bill:—Held, that P. & Co. were entitled to recover; for if the action was to be considered personally theirs, they were holders for value of the bill; and if not theirs, but really the action of H., W. & Co., C. & Co. were only correspondents of H., W. & Co. to remit the bill, and not their agents to pledge their credit for the price of the bill. Poirier v. Morris, 2 El. & Bl. 89; 22 L. J., Q. B. 313; 17 Jur. 1116.

A bill drawn, accepted and payable in England, was indorsed in France according to English law, but not according to the law of France. The drawer, who was the indorser, and the indorsee were, when the bill was made and indorsed, subjects of France, resident and domiciled there:—Held, that the contract of the acceptor must be governed by the law of England, and therefore the indorsee could maintain an action in England against the acceptor. Lebel v. Tucker, 3 L. R., Q. B. 77; 37 L. J., Q. B. 46; 17 L. T. 244; 16 W. R. 338; 8 B. & S. 830.

But a bill was drawn in France upon and accepted in London, and indorsed in France, but not so as to convey to the indorsee according to the French law any property in or right to sue upon the bill there in his own name:—Held, that the acceptor was not liable to an action in this country at the suit of the indorsee. Bradlaugh v. De Rin, 3 L. R., C. P. 538; 37 L. J., C. P. 318; 18 L. T. 904; 16 W. R. 1128.

Notes.—A foreign note is transferable in England by an indorsement, by virtue of 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. Bentley v. Northouse, M. & M. 66; S. P. Miln v. Graham, 1 B. & C. 192; 2 D. & R. 293; Splitgerber v. Kohn, 1 Stark. 125.

A note payable to the bearer, made in England, is transferable by delivery in a foreign country.

De la Chaumette v. Bank of England, 2 B. & Ad. 385.

Stamping.]—See ante, II.

V. ALTERATION OF.

1. WHEN CONSIDERED AS ISSUED.

So as to require fresh Stamp.]—Before it is negotiated, an instrument altered from a note to a bill is valid without a fresh stamp. Webber v. Maddocks, 3 Camp. 1.

In a joint and several note by three, after two had signed, the third, before he signed, caused the words "on account of club held at Mr. Daniel Duffell's," to be introduced "after value received:"—Held, that as the note was not complete until the third signed it, the alteration did not render a fresh stamp necessary. Wright v. Inshaw or Kinshaw, 1 D. N. S. 802; 6 Jur. 857. See Aude v. Dixon, 6 Ex. 869; 20 L. J., Ex. 295.

One having made and signed a promissory note handed it to a third person, the payee being present; but before it was given to the payee, it was altered by the consent of all parties:—Held, that this giving it to the third person was not an issuing of it, and that it did not require a new stamp. Sherrington v. Jermyn, 3 C. & P. 374.

An alteration of a bill or note, so as to make a new stamp necessary, is not material, until it is in the hands of some one who is entitled to claim payment, even though it is accepted and indorsed. Downes v. Richardson, 5 B. & A. 674; 1 D. & R. 332.

Accommodation Acceptances.]—An accommodation bill is not issued until it is in the hands of some person who is entitled to treat it as a security available in law. Id.

An accommodation bill, payable to the drawer's own order, cannot be altered after acceptance and an attempt to negotiate it, though before it is actually negotiated. Calvert v. Roberts, 3 Camp. 343.

If accommodation acceptances are exchanged, after an alteration in the date, made with the consent of all parties, but without a fresh stamp, it is sufficient to render the bills invalid. Cardwell v. Martin, 9 East, 190; 1 Camp. 79, 180.

An accommodation bill altered in its date before negotiation, with the consent of the parties, does not require a new stamp; and therefore, if it is in the hands of a bona fide holder for a valuable consideration, the acceptor, who has assented to such alteration before the bill became due, cannot avail himself of such an objection. Downes v. Richardson, 1 D. & R. 332; 5 B. & A. 674.

2. WHEN MATERIAL.

Generally.]—To make a bill or note void, the alteration must be in a material part, as in the sum or date. Trapp v. Spearman, 3 Esp. 57.

But the insertion of words in a bill which do not affect the responsibility of the parties will not vitiate it. Marson v. Petit, 1 Camp. 82, n.

The addition to a note of words which cannot prejudice any person does not destroy its validity. Aldous v. Cornwall, 3 L. R., Q. B. 573; 37 L. J., Q. B. 201; 9 B. & S. 607.

The words "on demand" were added to a note without the knowledge of the maker, after it had been delivered to the payee:—Held, that the maker was not discharged from his obligation to pay it, as the words only added what the law would have supplied or intended. Id.

Where the words "or order" have been added by the drawer subsequently to his indorsement; it neither vitiates the bill nor makes a new stamp necessary. Kershaw v. Cox, 2 Esp. 246.

Rectifying Form of Instrument.]—A bill of exchange was intended to be drawn by the defendant, and given to the plaintiff in renewal of a former bill, but by mistake the name of the plaintiff appeared as drawer. To an action on the bill, the defendant pleaded that the name of the plaintiff appeared as the drawer thereof. The plaintiff filed a replication stating that the plaintiff's name was inserted in the bill by mistake; and the defendant joined issue upon this replication. Before trial the plaintiff instituted a suit in equity to rectify the bill by striking out her name. A demurrer by the defendant to her bill of complaint was overruled. Druff v. Parker, 5 L. R., Eq. 131; 37 L. J., Ch. 241; 18 L. T., 46; 16 W. R. 557.

As to Place where Payable.]—In an action by payee against acceptor, it appeared that the bill had originally been accepted, payable at his own house in King's-road, Chelsea; but six weeks after the delivery of the bill to the plaintiff, the acceptor, at the request of the plaintiff, altered the description, by making it payable "at Bland's, Great Surrey-street, Blackfriars:"—Held, that this alteration was immaterial. Walter v. Cubley, 2 C. & M. 151; 4 Tyr. 87.

So, an alteration by the payee, by making the bill payable at a particular place, after acceptance and whilst it remained in his hands, is immaterial. Jacobs v. Hart, 6 M. & S. 142; 2 Stark. 45; S. P., Stevens v. Lloyd, M. & M. 292.

A bill having been accepted generally, the drawer added the words, "payable at Mr. B.'s, Chiswell-street," without the consent or knowledge of the acceptor:—Held, a material alteration, and that it discharged the acceptor. Cowie v. Halsall, 4 B. & A. 197; 3 Stark. 36.

So also since the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78. Mackintosh v. Haydon, R. & M. 362; S. P., Desbrouse v. Wetherby, 1 M. & Rob. 438; 6 C. & P. 758; Taylor v. Mosley, Id. 437; Calvert v. Baker, 4 M. & W. 417; 7 D. P. C. 17.

So where a bill was altered without the privity of the acceptor after it was in circulation, by the addition to the acceptance in the common form of the words "payable at the Bull Inn, Aldgate," and afterwards indorsed to the plaintiff for value, who took it bona fide and without knowledge of the alteration:—Held, a material alteration, which discharged the acceptor. Burchfield v. Moore, 3 El. & Bl. 683; 2 C. L. R. 1308; 22 L. J., Q. B. 261; 18 Jur. 727.

The giving an acceptance in blank on a stamped piece of paper to a person for a valuable consideration, it being arranged that he should fill it up with a sum agreed upon covered by the stamp, conveys no authority to him except to draw a bill on it with a general acceptance; and his inserting a particular place of payment before the signature of the acceptor is equivalent to a material alteration, and vitiates the acceptance. Hanbury v. Lowett, 18 L. T. 366; 16 W. R. 795.

Amount.—A bill was drawn in Paris for cent vingt-quatre livres sterling et deux pence upon, and was accepted by B. in London, for 122l. 0s. 2d., and returned without altering the words in the body of the bill. When produced at the trial, the word "quatre" had a line drawn through it, and it was altered to make it conformable to the acceptance:—Held, that the alteration did not vacate the bill, inasmuch as it appeared to have been made with the consent of the acceptor, and in accordance with the original intention of the parties. Hamelin v. Bruck, 9 Q. B. 306; 15 L. J., Q. B. 343; 10 Jur. 1094.

The law of France requires indorsements on bills to be special and to state a date and a consideration. The holder of a bill payable in France and indorsed in blank, turned the blank into special indorsements, by inserting the requisite words above each name on the back of the bill. He also, by writing on the face of the bill, professed to fix the rate of exchange at which the bill was payable:—Held, such a material alteration of the rights and liabilities of the parties to the contract as avoided the bill in the hands of the holder. Hirschfeld v. Smith, 1 L. R., C. P. 340; 35 L. J., C. P. 177; 12 Jur., N. S. 523; 1 H. & R. 284.

As to Interest.—A note was payable six months after date, "with lawful interest." After it had been signed, without the assent of the maker, but with the assent of the holder, there were added in the corner of the note, the words "interest at six per cent. per annum:—Held, that this addition materially altered the contract, and that the holder could not recover on the note against the maker. Warrington v. Early, 2 El. & Bl. 763; 23 L. J., Ex. 47; 18 Jur. 42.

As to Parties.—Where the bill was originally addressed "Messrs. J. C. & Co.," but the words "and Co." were obliterated, and the word "and" inserted, so that the address was "Messrs. J. & C.," and it did not appear when the alteration was made:—Held immaterial, though made after acceptance, as it made no difference in the liability of the parties. Farquhar v. Southey, M. & M. 14; 2 C. & P. 497.

If an accommodation bill is drawn payable to "bearer," and after acceptance the words "or order" are added, the bill is not thereby vitiated, and it may be sued upon without any fresh stamp. Attwood v. Griffin, 2 C. & P. 368; R. & M. 425.

On the day before an acceptance became due, the name of the acceptor was erased, and a renewed bill was indorsed on the back, but no new stamp was affixed:—Held, that the jury could not look at the indorsement for the purpose of ascertaining whether the acceptance was struck out with the drawer's assent. Sweeting v. Halse, 4 M. & R. 287; 9 B. & C. 365.

To a declaration on a bill accepted payable to the order of L., and by him indorsed to the defendant, and by the defendant to the plaintiff, a plea that the bill was, after the indorsement by the defendant, materially altered without his consent by the insertion of S.'s name as an indorsee prior to the defendant's indorsement, was bad, as the alteration did not vary the nature of the instrument, but was a mere correction of a mistake which gave the instrument the effect which it was intended to have. London and Provincial Bank v. Roberts, 22 W. R. 402.

Action against A. on a joint and several note made by A., B. and C. Plea, that the note, at the time when it was first made was made by B. and A. only, and that, after it was made by B. and A., and after the note was completely issued and negotiated, that is to say, by B. and A., the plaintiff altered it in a material part by causing C. to sign it as a joint and several maker, and that this was not in correction of any mistake, nor to further any intention of the parties existing when the note was first made by A., or first issued and negotiated. At the trial, it appeared that B., being indebted to the plaintiff, agreed to get two sureties, A. and C., to join her in a joint and several note to the plaintiff. B. and A. signed the note together, and gave it to the plaintiff. The evidence tended to shew that, when A. signed it, the plaintiff and B. both intended that C. should afterwards sign, but that A. was not informed of this. A. had the verdict. On a rule for a new trial:—Held, that the addition of C.'s name was a material alteration, and if made after the note was issued, would avoid it. But the court, without deciding whether the note was in point of law issued, supposing the plaintiff and B. did not suppose it complete, though A. did, granted a new trial, with leave to amend the plea, that the question might be raised distinctly. Gardner v. Walsh, 5 El. & Bl. 83; 24 L. J., Q. B. 285; 1 Jur., N. S. 828.

An additional signature to a note, placed there some years after the date of the note, which was payable on demand is not an alteration rendering the note void, but an addition in the nature of an indorsement, although on the face of the note. Yates, Ex parte, 2 De G. & J. 191; 27 L. J., Bk. 9; 4 Jur., N. S. 649.

Date and Time of Payment.—The alteration of a bill by the drawee, after it has been drawn and indorsed, and before it is accepted, postponing the time of payment, vitiates the bill. Outhwaite v. Luntley, 4 Camp. 179.

So, an alteration of the date, after acceptance, whereby the payment would be accelerated, avoids the instrument; and no action can be afterwards brought upon it, even by an innocent holder for a valuable consideration. Master v. Miller, 4 T. R. 320. Affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, 2 H. Bl. 141; 1 Anst. 225; 5 T. R. 637.

A bill which, after delivery by the drawer to the payee, is post-dated by the son of the payee, at the acceptor's request, without any communication with the drawer, is void. Walter v. Hastings, 2 Chit. 121; 1 Stark. 215; 4 Camp. 223.

If, upon a bill being presented for acceptance, the drawee alters it as to the time of payment, and accepts it so altered, he vacates the bill as against the drawers and indorsers; but if the holder acquiesces in such alteration and acceptance, it is a good bill as between the holder and acceptor. Paton v. Winter, 1 Taunt. 420.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor, where after the acceptance the word "date" had been inserted in the place of "sight," in which form it had originally been drawn:—Held, that the acceptor being thereby discharged, the plaintiff could not recover at all; for, as the acceptor was liable only by virtue of the instrument, that being vitiated, his liability was at an end. Long v. Moore, 3 Esp. 155, n.

Where a bill was dated by mistake, in January, 1822, instead of January, 1823, and the agent of the drawer and acceptor, to whom it had been given to be delivered to the indorsee, corrected the mistake, by altering the figure 2 into a 3, without their knowledge or consent:—Held, that such alteration did not vacate the bill. Brutt v. Picard, R. & M. 37.

A bill at three months drawn by A., and accepted by B., for A.'s accommodation, was indorsed and sent by post by A. to C. for value. C. returned the bill, insisting upon having one at two months instead. A. thereupon altered the bill by making it payable at two instead of three months, and again sent it to C. There was no evidence that B. knew of the alteration at the time, but there was evidence to shew that he subsequently assented to its being treated as a two months' bill:—Held, that the bill was well declared on as a two months' bill, and that it was not avoided by the alteration. Tarleton v. Shingler, 7 C. B. 812.

An alteration in the date of a bill of exchange, payable at a specified period after date, is a material alteration; and where the bill is declared upon with its altered date, the defence is available to the acceptor under a traverse of the acceptance. Hirschman v. Budd, 8 L. R., Ex. 171; 42 L. J., Ex. 113; 28 L. T. 602; 21 W. R. 582.

Erasure of Number.—In an action against the Bank of England for the non-payment of notes payable to bearer which had been regularly issued by the bank, it appeared that the notes had been bona fide purchased by the plaintiff for value, but that before the plaintiff took them the notes had been altered by erasing the numbers upon them, and substituting others, with the object of preventing the notes from being traced, as payment had been stopped and a notice issued specifying their numbers:—Held, that although the alteration did not vary the contract, it was material in the sense of altering the notes in an essential part, and that therefore the notes were vitiated, so that the plaintiff could not recover in his action on them against the bank. Suffell v. Bank of England, 9 Q. B. D. 555; 51 L. J., Q. B. 401; 47 L. T. 146; 30 W. R. 932; 46 J. P. 500—C. A.

Number and Date.—A Bank of England note, which had been materially altered in number and date, was paid to the plaintiffs' bank for value by the defendant, both parties believing the note to be good. The plaintiffs paid away the note, which was afterwards presented at the Bank of England, where the alteration was perceived and payment was refused. The note was returned to the plaintiffs as a bad one, and, after a fortnight spent in tracing the note to the defendant, the plaintiffs demanded payment of it from him, and on the 21st of July, 1882, sued him for the amount. On the 18th of August, 1882, the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), received the royal assent. By s. 64, where a bill or acceptance is materially altered, without the assent of all parties liable on the bill, the bill is avoided except as against a party who has himself made the alteration, and subsequent indorsers. Provided that where a bill has been materially altered, but the alteration is "not apparent," and the bill is in the hands of a holder in due course, such holder may avail himself of the bill as if it had not been altered, and may enforce payment of it according to its original tenor. By s. 89 the provisions of this act relating to bills of exchange apply, "with the necessary modifications," to promissory notes:—Held, that the doctrine as to notice of infirmity in bills and notes was inapplicable to a forged Bank of England note, and that the delay in giving notice of the alteration to the defendant was no ground of defence; that before the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, the Bank of England was not liable on the altered note (Suffell v. Bank of England, 9 Q. B. D. 555), which was therefore worthless; that s. 64 was not retrospective, and that even if it were so, the "necessary modifications" referred to in s. 89 would exclude Bank of England notes altogether from the operation of s. 64, and that even if the proviso of s. 64 would otherwise have affected the altered bank note, the alteration was "apparent," as the Bank of England could at once discern and point out to the holder of the note that it had been materially altered, although the alteration was not obvious to everybody; and, consequently, that the plaintiffs, having received from the defendant a worthless note on which no one could be sued, were entitled to recover in the action for money had and received. Leeds Bank v. Walker, 11 Q. B. D. 84; 52 L. J., Q. B. 590; 47 J. P. 502.

— So as to require fresh Stamp.—An alteration in the date of a bill, with the assent of the acceptor, before its negotiation by the drawer, is not such a reissuing of the bill as to render a new stamp necessary. Leykarriff v. Ashford, 12 Moore, 281.

Where the date has been altered after the bill is due, but before it is negotiated, it is invalid without a fresh stamp. Bowman v. Nicholl, 5 T. R. 537; 1 Esp. 81.

A bill drawn on the first of August, at two months, by A. on B., payable to the order of the drawer, and accepted and re-delivered by B., as a security for a debt, and kept by A. for twenty days, cannot be altered in its legal effect by bringing forward the date to the 21st, without a new stamp, though by the consent of the acceptor, and before indorsement and delivery to a third person; the alteration not being made to correct a mistake in the original form of the bill, which was drawn conformably to the original intention of the parties, and available in that form. Bathe v. Taylor, 15 East, 412. And see three following cases, and Cole v. Parkin, 72 East, 471.

In Pursuance of the Intention of the Parties—Original.—Where a note made by the defendant was altered by him after delivery of it to the plaintiff, by the insertion of the words "or order," and it appeared that the alteration was in pursuance of the original intention of the parties:—Held, that it did not make a new stamp necessary. Byrom v. Thompson, 3 P. & D. 71; 11 A. & E. 31; 3 Jur. 1121.

— Subsequent.—A note for 100*l.*, payable to the plaintiff or order, and originally expressed to be for value received generally, being altered the next day, upon the suggestion of one of the parties, by the addition of the words "for the goodwill of the lease and trade of Mr. K., deceased," requires a new stamp; such words being material, and not having been originally intended to be inserted, and omitted by mistake. Knill v. Williams, 10 East, 431.

A note to pay 250*l.*, and 3*l.* per cent. interest, was, after several years, altered, by consent of the parties, to 2½ per cent. :—Held, that it was thereby made void. Sutton v. Toomer, 7 B. & C. 416; 1 M. & R. 125.

Where a joint note, signed by the directors of a company, was afterwards altered by the secretary into a joint and several note, without the knowledge or authority of the directors, of whom the defendant was one, and in answer to a letter from the holders, informing the defendant of the dishonour of the joint and separate note of himself and the other directors who were parties to it, he said that their letter should have his earliest attention :—Held, that this did not amount to an assent to the alteration of the note by the defendant, and that he was not bound thereby. Perring v. Hone, 12 Moore, 135; 4 Bing. 28.

By Erasure of Names.—Where a drawer of a bill, accepted payable at B. & Co.'s, after keeping it three or four years, indorsed it to the plaintiff, erasing the name of B. & Co., and substituting E. & Co., without the knowledge of the acceptor, B. & Co. having failed since the acceptance :—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover against the acceptor. Tidmarsh v. Grover, 1 M. & S. 735.

The holder of two joint and several notes of A. & B., one of which only is due, receives from A. a sum exceeding the amount of the note which is due, and exceeding A.'s moiety of the two sums for which he is liable on both notes, and gives up the note which is due, and erases A.'s name from the other note :—A. is discharged, and thereby B. also. Nicholson v. Revill, 6 N. & M. 192; 4 A. & E. 675; 1 H. & W. 756.

In an action by payee against maker of a joint and several note, he cannot, under a plea that he did not make the note, avail himself of the defence that he signed it as a surety, on the understanding that six others should also sign as sureties, and that the name of one of them who had so signed was removed from the note after it was made. Mason v. Bradley, 1 D. & L. 380; 11 M. & W. 590; 12 L. J., Ex. 425; 7 Jur. 496.

3. OTHER MATTERS RELATING TO.

Bill rendered Void by—Original Debt—How Affected.—Where the buyer of goods paid for them by his own acceptance, and after the bill had been accepted the seller altered the date of it, and thereby vitiated it :—Held, that by so doing he did not preclude himself from suing for the original debt; and consequently that he might recover for the goods sold. Atkinson v. Hawdon, 4 N. & M. 409; 2 A. & E. 628; 1 H. & W. 77.

Where a note had been altered without having a new stamp, it was held evidence of the terms on which the money had been originally lent. Sutton v. Toomer, 7 B. & C. 416; 1 M. & R. 125.

The holder of a bill for 18*l.*, which had been dishonoured, agreed to take 8*l.* in cash and another bill for 10*l.* from the drawer. The drawer accordingly drew another bill upon the same acceptor for that amount; while in the hands of the drawer, the acceptor, without the knowledge of the drawer, altered the date and vitiated the bill :—Held, that the latter bill being a nullity, the first was not discharged, and that the drawer was liable upon it. Stoman v. Cox, 1 C., M. & R. 471; 5 Tyr. 174.

How Plead.—Action by indorsee against acceptor; a plea, that before the bill became due, and whilst it was in full force and effect, the date of it was altered by the drawer, whereby it became void, is bad, because it does not allege the alteration to have been made after acceptance. Langton v. Lazarus, 5 M. & W. 629.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill (not stated to be payable at any particular place), it is a good defence under a plea that the defendant did not accept the bill declared on, that, after he had accepted it generally, it was altered without his knowledge, by the addition of a memorandum making it payable at a banker's. Culvert v. Baker, 4 M. & W. 417; 7 D. P. C. 17; 1 H. & H. 404; 2 Jur. 1020.

Semble, that this decision can only be supported where the alteration in the instrument declared on is of such a nature as to constitute a substantial variance from the declaration, or shew that the document has not been properly stamped. Mason v. Bradley, supra.

An alteration in a bill, which does not render a new stamp necessary, cannot be given in evidence under non acceptit; but the fact must be specially pleaded. Parry v. Nicholson, 2 D. & L. 640; 13 M. & W. 778; 14 L. J., Ex. 119.

Where a plaintiff declares on an altered bill, the defendant, on a plea denying the acceptance, may shew a material alteration since he accepted it. Cock v. Corwell, 2 C., M. & R. 291; 4 D. P. C. 187; 1 Gale, 177; 5 Tyr. 1077.

To a declaration on a note, dated 15th of April, 1845, the defendants pleaded, that at the time the note was signed by them they promised to pay the sum therein mentioned, without specifying any time for payment; that after the note was made and issued and was complete and delivered to the plaintiff, the note was, by consent of the defendants, but without being restamped, altered by the plaintiff in a material part by making the same payable on or before the 15th of April, 1845. Replication, that, before and at the time of making and issuing and completing the note, and before the alteration was made, it was meant and intended by the plaintiff and the defendants, that the notes should be payable on the 15th of April, 1845, but by mistake the note was made and issued and complete without specifying any time for payment; and that the alteration was made for the purpose and with the intent of correcting the mistake. Rejoinder, that, before and at the time of making the note, it was not meant and intended that the note should be payable on the 15th of April, 1845 :—Held, that the rejoinder was bad, for putting in issue the intention of the parties before as well as at the time of making the note. Bradley v. Bardsley, 3 D. & L. 476; 14 M. & W. 873; 15 L. J., Ex. 115.

Held, also, that the plea was bad, for not shewing that the alteration was made under circumstances which rendered the note invalid unless restamped. Id.

To an action on a note the defendant pleaded, that, before making the note, M. drew his bill, dated the 11th April, 1840, and directed it to S., requiring him to pay to his order 200*l.*, three months after date; that S., at the request of

M., accepted the bill for his accommodation, and that the defendant subsequently indorsed the bill also for the accommodation of M.; that afterwards, the date of the bill was altered to another date, namely, the 21st April, 1840, without the knowledge or consent of the defendant, and that he remained ignorant of the alteration until the making of the note; that, after the alteration, the bill was paid to the plaintiff, who held it until it became payable; that, on the 22nd August, 1840, the plaintiff applied to the defendant for payment of the amount as indorser; and the defendant, believing that he was liable to pay, and the bill was in the same state as when he had indorsed it, and being ignorant of the alterations, agreed, in consideration of his supposed liability on the bill and for no other consideration whatever, to make and deliver note, and that the defendant made and delivered the note under the mistaken belief that he was liable to pay the bill, and that he never had any other consideration for the note:—Held, a good defence to the action, and that the defendant was not bound to negative his means of knowledge of the facts relieving him from his liability on the bill. Bell v. Gardiner, 1 D., N. S. 683; 4 Scott, N. R. 621; 4 M. & G. 11.

Evidence as to.]—In an action by payee against maker, the note, on being produced, appeared to have been altered; the words "or order," having been substituted for "or other." An attesting witness, who had prepared the note, stated that he could not say whether the alteration was in his handwriting or not, but that he ought to have drawn the note originally with the words "or order;" the defendant had paid two years' interest on the note:—Held, that this was reasonable evidence from which it might be inferred that the alteration had taken place with his consent. Cariss v. Tattersall, 2 M. & G. 890; 3 Scott, N. R. 257.

Upon an issue of non acceptavit the bill when produced appeared to have been altered in its date:—Held, that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to give some evidence of the circumstances under which this alteration took place. Clifford v. Parker, 2 M. & G. 909; 3 Scott, N. R. 233.

Where, after a bill has been accepted, and before it is delivered to the drawer, an alteration is made by a third party in the date, it is for the jury to say, judging from all the circumstances, whether such third party made the alteration with the acceptor's consent, or as his agent; and in either case the acceptor will be liable. Whitfield v. Collingwood, 1 C. & K. 325.

Where the defence is that the bill has been altered, the defendant cannot go into evidence to shew that other bills have been likewise altered. Thompson v. Moseley, 5 C. & P. 501.

On the day before an acceptance became due, the name of the acceptor was erased, and a renewed bill was indorsed on the back, but no new stamp was affixed:—Held, that the jury could not look at the indorsement for the purpose of ascertaining whether the acceptance was struck out with the drawer's assent. Sweeting v. Halse, 4 M. & R. 287; 9 B. & C. 365.

— Onus probandi.]—Where a party sues on an instrument which, on the face of it, appears to have been altered, it is for him to shew that the alteration has not been improperly made. Henman v. Dickenson, 5 Bing. 183; 2 M. & P. 289.

If a bill has been altered or obliterated in any material part, and the alteration is such that it may, by possibility, have been made after the bill was completed, the plaintiff ought to be non-suited, unless he gives some evidence to shew that the alteration or obliteration was made before the bill was completed. In the absence of such evidence in such a case, it ought not to be left to the jury to say, upon a mere inspection of the bill, whether the alteration was made before the bill was completed. Knight v. Clements, 8 A. & E. 215; 3 N. & P. 375; 1 W., W. & H. 280; 2 Jur. 395; S. P., Bishop v. Chambre, 3 C. & P. 55; M. & M. 116.

In an action by indorsee against indorser, the pleas denied the indorsements, the presentment at maturity, and notice of dishonour, and alleged the want of consideration. At the trial the bill appeared on the face of it to have been altered from the 15th to the 10th of December:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff was not bound to explain the alteration of the bill, because the making of the bill was admitted on the record. Sibley v. Fisher, 2 N. & P. 430; 7 A. & E. 444; W., W. & D. 711; 1 Jur. 866.

VI. CHEQUES.

1. GENERALLY.

Stamping.]—The capital of a benefit building society was divided into shares. When the members wished to draw out any amount standing to their credit in respect of their shares, a form of draft was forwarded to them by the accountant of the society. This form contained a request on demand to pay to bearer the sum withdrawn. These drafts were signed by the members, and afterwards paid by the society:—Held, liable to stamp duty, not being within the exemption contained in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4, and 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 37. Att.-Gen. v. Gilpin, 6 L. R., Ex. 193; 40 L. J., Ex. 134; 19 W. R. 1027.

Not an Assignment.]—A cheque is not an equitable assignment of the drawer's balance at his bankers. Hopkinson v. Forster, 19 L. R., Eq. 74; 23 W. R. 301.

A cheque is not an assignment by the drawer to the payee of a debt or a chose in action within the meaning of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, subs. 6. Schroeder v. Central Bank of London, 34 L. T. 735; 24 W. R. 710.

Therefore the payee of a cheque has no right of action for its dishonour against the banker on whom it is drawn. Id.

Place of Issue.]—A cheque was sufficiently dated to satisfy the exemption clause in 9 Geo. 4, c. 49, s. 15, if it bore date, "Dorchester Old Bank," and there was in fact a bank so called in the town of Dorchester, and there was no proof that the cheque was drawn elsewhere than at Dorchester. Strickland v. Mansfield, 8 Q. B. 675; 10 Jur. 287.

A cheque was drawn in the following form:—"Oct. 12, 1847. Messrs. Knapp & Co., bankers, Abingdon, Pay to Messrs. Hicks, or bearer, 117l. 17s. Thomas Sharps:"—Held, that the place where the same was issued did not sufficiently appear thereon to satisfy the exemption in 9 Geo. 4, c. 49, s. 15. and therefore that the instrument was inadmissible in evidence without a stamp. Bopart v. Hicks, 3 Ex. 1; 18 L. J., Ex. 33; 12 Jur. 923.

A cheque drawn by a committee of a railway company was not dated as drawn at any place, but was headed with the name of the railway:—Held, that this did not indicate any place so as to satisfy the terms of the clause exempting cheques from duty; but that the cheque was void. Ward (Lord) v. Oxford Railway Company, 2 De G., Mac. & G. 750; 22 L. J., Ch. 905.

Title of Holder.—The holder without indorsement of a draft payable to order, though taken by him bonâ fide, and for value, has no better title than the person from whom he took it; and such holder is affected by fraud, of which he has notice before he obtains the formal indorsement. Whistler v. Forster, 14 C. B., N. S. 248; 32 L. J., C. P. 161; 8 L. T. 317; 11 W. R. 648.

The plaintiff having lost a cheque five days after it bore date, which was taken by the defendants for value, but under such circumstances as ought to have excited their suspicion:—Held, that the plaintiff might have maintained an action for money had and received against them for the amount of it, though he gave no evidence of how he lost it, or how it got out of his possession. Down v. Halling, 6 D. & R. 455; 4 B. & C. 330; 2 C. & P. 11.

A tradesman, having in the course of business received a cheque, which had been stolen from the payee, and given the difference to a stranger, who presented it in payment of an article purchased, brought an action against the drawer for the amount:—Held, in the absence of fraud and negligence on his part, that the action was maintainable. Lee v. Newson, D. & R. N. P. C. 50.

Overdue Cheque.—A cheque, overdue, stands on the same footing as a bill or note put into circulation after its date has expired, and the holder must shew title in his immediate payer before he can retain the proceeds. Down v. Halling, 6 D. & R. 455; 4 B. & C. 330; 2 C. & P. 11.

The plaintiff was, by means of a fraud, induced to draw and pay away two cheques on his banker, amounting to 1,330*l.* Six days after the date of the cheques, the defendants, acting bonâ fide, gave cash for them to a third person (who had not given value for them), presented the cheques, and obtained payment. In an action by the plaintiff to recover back this money:—Held, that the cheques could not be treated as bills overdue, and therefore taken by the defendants at their peril, but that the real question was, whether they had acted bonâ fide and with due caution. Rothschild v. Corney, 9 B. & C. 388; 4 M. & R. 411; Danson & Lloyd, 325.

Quære, whether one who takes an overdue cheque takes it subject to the equities, as in the case of an overdue bill of exchange. Serrell v. Derbyshire, &c. Railway Company, 9 C. B. 811. See also London and County Banking Company v. Groome, post, col. 1636.

Negotiability.—A cheque payable to bearer is negotiable, and the holder may sue an indorser thereon. Keene v. Beard, 8 C. B., N. S. 372;

29 L. J., C. P. 287; 6 Jur., N. S. 1248; 2 L. T. 240; 8 W. R. 469.

Delivery.—A defendant, wanting money, desired T., a discount agent, to procure him 160*l.* on discount. T. asked for security, and the defendant gave his cheque for 160*l.* payable to T., or bearer, saying that T. must get him the money by "hook or by crook." T. then said he would see a friend, and try to get the defendant the money, and he afterwards obtained the money from the plaintiff, handed him the cheque, paid over the money to the defendant, and at the same time received 15*l.* from the defendant for discount, of which he kept 7*l.*, and paid 8*l.* to the plaintiff. The defendant afterwards requested time for payment of the cheque, and T. without referring to the plaintiff, gave time. The defendant, requiring still further delay, wrote to T., "Tell your friend I want his money till Christmas, and am willing to pay for the accommodation. Let me know what he will do for me." During these transactions T. did not mention any lender by name to the defendant. In an action on the cheque:—Held, that a jury was warranted in finding a delivery of the cheque by the defendant to the plaintiff. Samuel v. Green, 10 Q. B. 262; 16 L. J., Q. B. 239; 11 Jur. 607.

The mere circumstance of a cheque being made payable to a person, and his receipt of the money, is not evidence that the drawer gave it to him. Lloyd v. Sandilands, Gow, 13.

Where the drawers of a cheque issued it nine months after it bore date, upon a consideration which afterwards failed:—Held, that, as between them and the persons to whom they delivered it, they could not be permitted to object to this circumstance in an action brought by a subsequent holder for a valuable consideration and without notice. Boehm v. Sterling, 7 T. R. 423; 2 Esp. 575.

Consideration.—Action by the holders against the drawer of a cheque. Plea, that he made the draft for the accommodation of C., and that there never was any consideration for it, or for its transfer by C. to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs were trustees of a bank, and they employed R. as their agent to manage one branch of the concern. C., in whose favour the cheque was drawn, had an account with the branch, which was considerably overdrawn. It was the practice of the bank to send round an inspector to all their banks once every quarter, to examine their agents' accounts; and in order to prevent its being discovered that C. was in debt to the bank, R. was in the habit of taking cheques from C. before the quarter-day approached, which he placed to his credit on the account, but upon an express undertaking that they were not to be presented, but returned to C. after the quarter-day was past. The cheque had been obtained from the defendant for this purpose by C., R. being aware of it, in consideration of a counter-cheque from C. for the same amount:—Held, that neither of the averments in the plea was sustained, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Bosanquet v. Corser, 8 M. & W. 142; 9 C. & P. 664; 5 Jur. 369.

Where a party, by means of a false pretence or a promise or condition which he does not fulfil, procures another party to give him a cheque or note or an acceptance in favour of a third person, to whom he pays it, and who receives it bonâ fide for value, the giver remains liable on the cheque, note or acceptance; because his acceptance imports value and liability primâ facie, and he can only relieve himself from his promise to pay the holder by shewing that he is not a holder for value, or that he received the instrument with notice or not bonâ fide. Watson v. Russell, 3 B. & S. 34; 31 L. J., Q. B. 304; 9 Jur., N. S. 249; affirmed on appeal, 11 L. T. 641; 13 W. R. 231—Ex. Ch.

2. CROSSING.

With Name of Banker.—Crossing a cheque payable to bearer with the name of a banker, whether made by the drawer or the bearer, does not affect the negotiability of the cheque. Carlton v. Ireland, 5 El. & Bl. 765; 25 L. J., Q. B. 113; 2 Jur., N. S. 39; S. P., Bellamy v. Marjoribanks, 7 Ex. 389; 21 L. J., Ex. 70; 16 Jur. 106.

An individual who receives a crossed cheque bonâ fide and gives value for it, is entitled to retain the amount received through his bankers from the bankers on whom it is drawn. Id.

The use and object of crossing a cheque is as a protection and safeguard to the owner of the cheque, by securing payment to a banker, in order that it may be easily traced to whose use the money was received. Id.

A crossed cheque within 19 & 20 Vict. c. 25, was a cheque that had a crossing on it at the time of presentment, and therefore the banker on whom the cheque was drawn, and to whom it was presented with the crossing obliterated, was justified in paying it to the holder, though he was not a banker. Simmons v. Taylor, 4 C. B., N. S. 463; 27 L. J., C. P. 248; 4 Jur., N. S. 412—Ex. Ch.

In Blank.—A cheque crossed in blank, being given in payment of a bill of exchange, was duly paid by the holder into his bankers, who, two days afterwards, presented it for payment, when it was returned dishonoured:—Held, in an action on the bill, that the plea alleging that the cheque had not been presented within a reasonable time could not be sustained, as the crossing of the cheque was a direction to the holder to pay it only through a banker, and he (the holder) had done all that was required of him to comply with that request, by paying it into his bankers within a reasonable time, and could not be held responsible for any delay that afterwards took place. Stringfield v. Lanczari, 16 L. T. 361.

Exemption of Banker from Liability.—39 & 40 Vict. c. 81.—By s. 12 of the Crossed Cheques Acts, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 81), it is enacted, "a person taking a cheque crossed generally or specially bearing in either case the words 'not negotiable,' shall not have and shall not be capable of giving a better title to the cheque than that which the person from whom he took it had. But a banker, who has in good faith and without negligence received payment for a customer of a cheque crossed generally or specially to himself, shall not, in case the title to the cheque proves defective, incur any liability to the true owner of the cheque by reason only of having received such payment:—"Held, that the cheque mentioned in the latter part of that section is not limited to the cheque described in the former part as one bearing upon it the words "not negotiable;" and that, therefore, a banker, who in good faith and without negligence in due course of collection receives payment for a customer of a cheque crossed generally, but having a forged indorsement, is protected by such 12th section from liability to the true owner of the cheque for having placed the amount of such payment to the credit of his customer, notwithstanding such cheque has not the words "not negotiable" upon it. Mathiesson v. London and County Banking Company, 5 C. P. D. 7; 48 L. J., C. P. 529; 41 L. T. 35; 27 W. R. 838.

Before this enactment, the payee of a cheque drawn on the Union Bank of London, payable to him or his order, indorsed his name on it and crossed it with two lines, and the name of his bankers, the London and County Bank. The cheque was stolen, and ultimately came into the hands of a bonâ fide holder for value, who paid it into his bankers, the London and Westminster Bank. They presented it to the Union Bank, who notwithstanding the crossing paid the amount. In an action by the payee to recover the amount from the Union Bank:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover for the breach of the duty imposed upon the Union Bank of London by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 79, s. 2, that provision not being directly for the protection of payees; nor for conversion of the cheque, since the statutes had not affected the negotiability of crossed cheques, and that both the property and possession had therefore passed to the bonâ fide holder for value. Smith v. Union Bank of London, 1 Q. B. D. 31; 45 L. J., Q. B. 149; 33 L. T. 557; 24 W. R. 194—C. A. See new Act of 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 81).

3. PAYMENT.

Provisional or Conclusive.—The branch bank of the Bank of England at Newcastle discounted a bill of exchange drawn by P., who was a customer of the branch bank, upon H. & Co., and accepted by them payable at the bank of L. & Co., also bankers at Newcastle. According to the practice prevailing among bankers at Newcastle, the branch bank, on the morning when the bill became due, took it to L. & Co., who marked it for payment, and gave a credit note, indicating that it with other moneys was in order for payment and would be paid. About 2 P.M. on the same day, a clerk of the branch bank, in accordance with the practice, took all the cheques which had been received, drawn on L. & Co., together with the credit note, to the bank of L. & Co. The credit note was admitted into the total amount, and a cheque upon the branch bank was in accordance with the practice handed by L. & Co. to the clerk for the amount of the balance due to the branch bank. At 3 P.M. the banks at Newcastle close to the public, but it is the practice for the bankers who keep accounts with the branch bank to attend at such bank, before it finally closes for the day at 4 P.M., for the purpose of having the day's accounts investigated, and of rectifying any mistakes or errors which may have arisen in the course of the day, and finding and striking the final balances between them. When the bank of L. & Co. closed at 3 o'clock it was ascertained that H. & Co. had stopped payment, and that their balance was not sufficient to meet the bill. Notice was at once and before 4 P.M. given to the branch bank that the bill had been paid in error, and they were requested to take it back. Before such notice was received, the account of L. & Co. had been debited with the amount in the accounts of the branch bank:—Held, that it not being shewn that the giving the cheque was provisional only, and subject to rectification upon going over the accounts later in the day, such giving the cheque by L. & Co. amounted to payment of the bill to the branch of the Bank of England, and that P. was entitled to have credit with them for the amount of the bill. Pollard v. Bank of England, 6 L. R., Q. B. 623; 40 L. J., Q. B. 233; 25 L. T. 415; 19 W. R. 1168.

Title to Goods.—The right of property does not pass upon a sale of goods paid for by the purchaser's cheque—subsequently dishonoured—if the purchaser had not, at the time of drawing and giving the cheque, reasonable grounds for believing that there were funds to meet it as an instrument payable the instant after it was drawn. Loughnan v. Barry, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 538.

When cattle were sold and paid for by the purchaser's cheque, which was subsequently dishonoured:—Held, in an action by the vendor for conversion, and for money had and received, that the proper question for the jury was—not whether the purchaser had reasonable grounds for believing, and did in fact believe, that the cheque would be honoured—but whether, at the time the cheque was drawn, he had reasonable grounds for believing that there were funds to meet it. Id.

On a sale of goods for ready money, if the purchaser gives in payment his cheque which he then knows he has not funds in the bank to meet, this amounts to a false representation of a material fact, which vitiates the sale and entitles the seller to rescind the contract, even though the purchaser at the time believed, and had reasonable ground for believing, that the cheque would be paid. Loughnan v. Barry, 6 Ir. R., C. L. 457.

Indorsement by Agent per proc.—An indorsement of a cheque payable to order, purporting to be by the agent of the person to whose order the cheque is payable, is within 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, s. 19, affording protection to bankers, a sufficient authority to the banker to pay the amount of such cheque, though the person who indorsed the cheque had no authority to indorse. Charles v. Blackwell, 2 C. P. D. 151; 46 L. J., C. P. 368; 36 L. T. 195; 25 W. R. 472.—C. A. Affirming the judgment of the Common Pleas Division, 1 C. P. D. 548; 45 L. J., C. P. 542; 35 L. T. 162; 24 W. R. 737.

S. K., an agent of S. & Co., having authority to sell goods for them and to receive payment by cash or cheque, but not having authority to indorse cheques, received from the defendants, in payment for goods supplied, a cheque on their bankers, drawn payable to S. & Co., or order. S. K. indorsed it "S. & Co., per S. K. agent," received the money from the bankers, and misappropriated part of it. The bankers returned the cheque to the defendants, and the amount was allowed in account by the defendants:—Held, that such payment by the bankers was within the protection of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, s. 19; and that S. & Co. could not maintain an action against the defendants, either for the price of the goods or for the cheque. Id.

When Statute of Limitations begins to run.—

The plaintiff having agreed to lend the defendant a sum of money, gave him a cheque for the amount, which the defendant paid into his bankers, receiving credit for it. The cheque was not paid by the plaintiff's bankers till some days later. In an action for the money so lent:—Held, that the Statute of Limitations only ran from the time of the payment of the cheque by the plaintiff's bankers. Garden v. Bruce, 3 L. R., C. P., 300; 37 L. J., C. P. 112; 18 L. T. 544; 16 W. R. 366.

Payable so many Days after Sight—Writ issued before Time elapsed.—A creditor to whom a draft on a banker, payable at so many days after sight, is sent in payment of a debt, such order being accepted by the banker, commits an abuse of the process of the court if he issues a writ for the debt before the expiration of the days, at the same time retaining the draft. Stuart v. Curce, 5 C. B., N. S. 737; 28 L. J., C. P. 193; 5 Jur., N. S. 650.

Banker giving up Bills for Cheque—Negligence.—A banker in London receiving bills from his correspondents in the country to whom they had been indorsed, to present for payment, is not guilty of negligence in giving up such bills to the acceptor upon receiving a cheque upon a banker for the amount, although it turns out that such cheque is dishonoured. Russell v. Hankey, 6 T. R. 12.

Taken without Inquiry subject to Equities.—T. C. undertook to discount bills for J. R. H., and in return for the bills gave cheques to J. R. H., upon the understanding that they were not to be presented until there were funds in T. C.'s bank to meet them. Part of these bills were subsequently handed back by T. C.'s bankers, and security was given by T. C. and J. R. H. to cover the whole amount of them. J. R. H. had meanwhile deposited the cheques with his brother G. W. H. as security for money advanced. On T. C.'s bankruptcy G. W. H. sought to prove for the full amount of the cheques. The cheques had been presented and dishonoured:—Held, that G. W. H. having taken the cheques without proper inquiry, took them subject to all the equities attaching to them, and could not prove in respect of them. Hughes, Ex parte, Cobb, In re, 43 L. T. 577.

Paying in to Customer's Account.—When a customer pays to his bankers a cheque drawn upon them by another customer, he must, in order to make them liable at all events, demand payment, or request that the amount may be placed to his credit. Boyd v. Emmerson, 4 N. & M. 99; 2 A. & E. 184.

An assent, on the part of the banker, to such a demand or request, would raise an implied promise to pay or give credit for the amount. Id.

When a customer pays into his bankers, in the ordinary way, a cheque drawn upon them by another of their customers, the bankers are entitled to the same time for ascertaining whether the cheque will be paid, and giving notice of dishonour (in case it is resolved by them not to pay the cheque) as in the case where a cheque is drawn upon other bankers. Id.

A. & B. are respectively customers of C., a banker. A. goes to C.'s bank at a quarter before one on Monday, and gives C.'s managing clerk directions as to the payment of a bill, and, whilst the clerk is making a memorandum of those directions, lays on the counter a cheque drawn by B. on C., and says, "Place this to my account" or "credit." No intimation as to whether the cheque would or would not be paid was given to the clerk. The clerk did not debit B. with the amount or place it to A.'s credit, or cancel the cheque. B. having overdrawn his account, inquiries were made on Tuesday, the result of which was that C. resolved not to pay the cheque. The cheque, with notice of dishonour, was sent A., at his residence, by seven o'clock P.M. on Tuesday:—Held, sufficient notice of dishonour. Ib.

— Of Cheque to Bankers—Holders for Value.—When a customer pays a cheque to his bankers with the intention that the amount of it shall be at once placed to his credit, and the bankers carry the amount to his credit accordingly, they become immediately holders of the cheque for value, even though the customer's account is not overdrawn. Richdale, Ex parte, Palmer, In re, 19 Ch. D. 409; 51 L. J., Ch. 462; 46 L. T. 116; 30 W. R. 262—C. A.

Altering Signature by Drawer after Payment.—A drawer of a cheque, after it had been paid and returned to him cancelled by the bank, darkened the signature, so as to give it the appearance of a forgery. He then took it to the bank, and represented it to be a forgery. He also stated that it had been forged by the plaintiff. The bank thereupon gave the plaintiff into custody:—Held, that a plea of justification setting out these facts did not constitute a defence to an action for false imprisonment: that to support the plea the commission of a felony must be shewn; that the alteration of his own cheque by the drawer, although a cheat on the bank, was not a forgery, and that therefore no felony had been committed. Brittain v. Bank of London, 3 F. & F. 465; 8 L. T. 382; 11 W. R. 569.

Proof of Payment—What is.—The steward of a manor appointed C. his deputy to admit a person to a copyhold of the manor which he had purchased; and C. also acted as his solicitor in the purchase. Ten days after admittance the purchaser gave C. a cheque for a sum made up of the lord's fine, the steward's fees, and C.'s professional charges, and this cheque was, at C.'s request, crossed with the name of C.'s bankers. On presentment the cheque was paid by the purchaser's bankers to C.'s bankers, but they retained the money to balance his overdrawn account. In an action by the lord against the purchaser for the fine:—Held, that there was evidence to support a plea of payment, and that payment by the crossed cheque was a mode of payment which discharged the purchaser as soon as the cheque was cashed. Bridges v. Garrett, 5 L. R., C. P. 451; 39 L. J., C. P. 251; 22 L. T. 448; 18 W. R. 815—Ex. Ch.

Under the Railways Clauses Act, 1863, s. 12, where a railway forms a junction with another railway, the company with whose railway the junction is made is empowered to erect such signals and conveniences incident to the junction as may be necessary for the prevention of danger to or interference with the traffic at or near the junction; and the expenses of erecting and maintaining such signals and conveniences are at the end of each half-year to be repaid by the company making the junction. To prove payment, the plaintiff's secretary stated that he, on the 25th of February, sent to the persons who did the work a cheque for the amount of their bill, and got from them by return of post (on the 26th) a receipt, and the cashier of the latter stated that he received the cheque at 9 A.M. on the 26th as payment, and sent a receipt:—Held (Bovill, C. J., dissentiente), that the receipt was admissible, with the other facts, to prove payment on the morning of the 26th of February (the action having been brought on that day), without shewing that the cheque was honoured. Carmarthen and Cardigan Railway Company v. Manchester and Milford Railway Company, 8 L. R., C. P. 685; 42 L. J., C. P. 262.

In an action by assignees, proof that a cheque for a certain sum in the defendant's favour was drawn by the bankrupts upon their bankers, and that the amount was placed by their bankers to the defendant's credit, is no evidence to go to the jury of a loan of money to the defendants by the bankrupts. Graham v. Cox, 2 C. & K. 702.

A defendant having money of the plaintiff's in his hands, drew on his banker in favour of the plaintiff a cheque, which was paid to the plaintiff at the bank:—Held, evidence of payment, without proof that the plaintiff had received the cheque from the defendant. Mumford v. Harper, 16 M. & W. 825; 16 L. J., Ex. 182.

In proof of a new petitioning creditor's debt under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 18, the plaintiff produced cancelled cheques drawn by the bankrupt upon L. & Co., and proved by a clerk, who spoke from his recollection, that, at the time of these cheques being drawn, the bankrupt's account with L. & Co. was greatly overdrawn:—Held, that the cheques were prima facie evidence of payment of the debt due from L. & Co. to the bankrupt, and not of a loan to him, and were, therefore, insufficient to prove the petitioning creditor's debt. Fletcher v. Manning, 12 M. & W. 571; 13 L. J., Ex. 150.

To prove a payment it is enough to put in a cheque shewn to have been in circulation. Thompson v. Pitman, 1 F. & F. 339.

Revival of Debt—When Payment Stopped.—When a cheque has been given in satisfaction of a debt, but payment of the draft has been stopped before it has been cashed, the debt and the position of the parties are just the same as though such cheque had never been given, and the debt revives and is capable of being attached under a garnishee order. Cohen v. Hale, 3 Q. B. D. 371; 47 L. J., Q. B. 496; 39 L. T. 35; 26 W. R. 680.

4. CASHING OVER THE COUNTER.

When Property Passes by.—C. presented, on behalf of his employer, a cheque at a banking house. The cashier counted out the amount in notes, gold and silver, and placed it on the counter. C. took it, and counted it, and was in the act of counting it a second time, when the cashier (having discovered that the drawer's account was overdrawn) demanded the money back, and upon C.'s refusal, detained him, and took it from him by force:—Held, that the property in the notes and money had passed from the bankers to the bearer of the cheque, and that the payment was complete and could not be revoked. (Chambers v. Miller, 13 C. B., N. S. 125; 32 L. J., C. P. 30; 9 Jur., N. S. 626; 7 L. T. 856; 11 W. R. 236; & C., a' nisi prius, 3 F. & F. 202.)

Refusal to Cash—Forgery.—[Detinue for a cheque, plea, that the defendant received the cheque from the plaintiff to present to and collect it from the bank on which it was drawn; that he presented it, but payment was refused by the manager, who kept the cheque, alleging that the name of the drawer was forged:—Held, a good defence, for if the cheque was forged the detention was rightful, and if genuine the defendant lost control over it by no wrongful act, and the plaintiff's remedy was against the bank. Brown v. Livingstone, 8 U. C. L. J. 124.]

Where Bank has several Branches.—[A banking company carried on business by means of branches at various places, amongst others, at G. and B. The company was one, but each branch kept separate accounts, had separate customers, and in all respects transacted business like a separate bank. A holder of a cheque drawn on the G. branch, by a person who kept an account there, got cash for it at the B. branch. The cheque was without laches forwarded by the B. branch to the G. branch. When it was cashed, the balance in the G. branch to the credit of the drawer exceeded the amount of the cheque; but when it arrived at G., that balance had been paid away, and the cheque was dishonoured; the company having sued the holder of the cheque, to whom the amount had been so paid, for money had and received, on the ground of failure of consideration:—Held, that the company was entitled to recover, as the B. branch could not be considered as honouring the cheque, or as purchasing it, but as taking it from the holder on his credit, as the company might have done a cheque drawn on any other bank, the circumstance that the banks at G. and B. were branches of the same company being for this purpose immaterial. Woodland v. Fear, 7 El. & Bl. 519; 26 L. J., Q. B. 202; 3 Jur., N. S. 587; & P., Brown v. London and North Western Railway Company, 4 B. & S. 330, 337.]

5. DATE OF.

Post-dating.—[A draft payable to order is not rendered void by being post-dated; the provisions of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 13, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 20, being applicable only to drafts payable to bearer. Whistler v. Forster, 14 C. B., N. S. 248; 32 L. J., C. P. 161; 8 L. T. 317; 11 W. R. 648.]

A cheque drawn payable to A. or bearer, and post-dated, was indorsed to a party, who took it without notice of its having been post-dated:—Held, that he was entitled to recover thereon. Austin v. Bunyard, 34 L. J., Q. B. 217; 11 Jur., N. S. 874; 12 L. T. 452; 13 W. R. 773.]

A post-dated cheque given and received, with the intention that it should be held over and not presented for payment until the day on which it was dated, is not distinguishable from a bill of exchange, and therefore, in the absence of express authority, one partner of a firm of attorneys cannot bind his co-partner by drawing a post-dated cheque in the name of the firm. Forster

v. Mackreth, 2 L. R., Ex. 163; 36 L. J., Ex. 94; 16 L. T. 23; 15 W. R. 747.]

A stamped cheque, payable to bearer, but post-dated, is admissible in an action brought, after the date of the cheque, by the holder, although he took with knowledge of the post-dating, since, under the Stamp Act, 1870, the test of admissibility is whether the instrument appears, when tendered in evidence, to be sufficiently stamped. Gatty v. Fry, 2 Ex. D. 265; 46 L. J., Ex. 605; 36 L. T. 182; 25 W. R. 305.]

Before the Stamp Act, 1870, there was nothing in the statutes to invalidate a post-dated cheque payable to order on demand; and in determining what is the requisite stamp to make such an instrument admissible in evidence the instrument alone is to be looked at. And, therefore, a post-dated cheque payable to order is available in the hands of a person who takes it with knowledge that it was post-dated; and is admissible in evidence with only a penny stamp. Bull v. O'Sullivan, 6 L. R., Q. B. 209; 40 L. J., Q. B. 141; 24 L. T. 130.]

Custom of the City of London as to.—[It is a custom of bankers in the city of London not to pay a cheque marked "post-dated":—Held, that this custom is part of the contract between a London banker and his customers, and therefore a customer could not maintain an action against his banker for refusing payment of a cheque so marked. Emanuel v. Roberts, 9 B. & S. 121; 17 L. T. 646.]

A post-dated cheque payable to order is not illegal. Id.

Need not be specially Pleaded.—[The post-dating of a cheque need not be specially pleaded. Field v. Woods, 2 N. & P. 117; W., W. & D. 482; 7 A. & E. 114; 6 D. P. C. 23; 8 C. & P. 52; 1 Jur. 496.]

Question for Judge.—[It was for the judge to determine, as a collateral issue, whether it was post-dated or not. Dunford v. Curlewis, 1 F. & F. 702.]

Payable at future Date.—[M., being in Spain, by his agent in London, purchased bills of L., a London merchant. The purchase was made on the 11th of February, 1873, and the bills were to be paid for on the 14th of February, which was the next foreign post day after the sale. On the 13th of February, L.'s bankers having pressed him to reduce his balance, he handed to them a document directing M. to pay to the bankers, or bearer, the price of the bills. Such document was dated the day after that on which it was delivered, and was stamped with a penny stamp. On the 14th of February, M.'s agent drew a cheque on M.'s bankers for the price of the bills, payable to L. or bearer, and handed it to L.'s bankers, and received in exchange the document of the 14th of February. L. subsequently failed, and the bills were dishonoured. In an action by L.'s bankers against M. on the cheque:—Held, that the document of the 13th of February was a valid document, and was not void under the Stamp Act, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, as being a bill of exchange payable at a future date, and wanting a sufficient stamp. Miss v. Currie, 1 App. Cas. 534; 45 L. J., Q. B. 852; 35 L. T. 414; 24 W. R. 1049—H. L.]

Held, also, that the surrender of such document was a good consideration for the cheque, and that the bankers were entitled to recover on it. Id.

Alteration of.]—A person intrusted with a cheque by the payee to pay into a bank absconded with it, and after altering the date from the 2nd of March to the 26th of March, passed it to the plaintiff for value. The cheque was not paid, and the plaintiff, who had not been guilty of any negligence in taking the cheque, sued the drawer:—Held, that the alteration was material, and invalidated the cheque; and that the circumstances that the plaintiff had not been guilty of negligence in taking it was immaterial. Vance v. Louthier, 1 Ex. D. 176; 45 L. J., Ex. 200; 34 L. T. 286; 24 W. R. 372.

6. PRESENTMENT FOR PAYMENT.

Must be made with due Diligence.]—A cheque should be presented with due diligence to the bankers on whom drawn; but a banker in London who receives a cheque by the general post, is not bound to present it for payment until the following day. Ricksford v. Ridge, 2 Camp. 537.

The holder of a cheque is bound to present it for payment on the day following that on which he receives it; but if he pays it to his bankers before the time at which the bankers, by presenting it at the clearing-house, might obtain payment, the drawer is not discharged by their omitting so to present it, although, according to the custom of London, it may be imperative upon the bankers, as between them and their customers, so to present it. Boddington v. Schlenker, 1 N. & M. 541; 4 B. & Ad. 752.

The not presenting a draft upon the same day on which it is received is not laches. Medcalf v. Hall, 3 Dougl. 113.

The holder of a cheque is, in general, bound to present it for payment not later than the day following that on which he receives it, whether the presentment is made by himself or through his bankers. Alexander v. Burchfield, 7 M. & G. 1061; 3 Scott, N. R. 555; 4 B. & M. 75.

But the time for presentment may be extended by the assent of the drawees, express or implied. Id.

The plaintiffs sold horses to the defendant on the 10th of March, 1840, and in payment the defendant gave a cheque on his bankers, which the plaintiffs crossed to their own bankers, and paid in to them on the 11th of the same month. The defendant's bankers did not use the clearing-house in Lombard-street, and accordingly the plaintiffs' bankers presented that cheque to the defendant's bankers on the 12th, whereas, otherwise, they would have presented it at the clearing-house on the evening of the 11th. The defendant's bankers had stopped payment on the 12th:—Held, that the bankers of the plaintiffs had acted in strict accordance with the rules of mercantile law; but that the plaintiffs themselves had been guilty of laches in not paying the cheque to their bankers on the 10th, if they received it within banking hours. Id.

The holder of a cheque ought to present it for payment within a reasonable time, and it is a question for the jury, on an issue of due presentment, whether this rule has been complied with. Serle v. Norton, 2 M. & Rob. 401.

Where a cheque drawn on a country banker, dated 19th March, was not presented until 6th April, and no cause was assigned for the delay, but the drawer had not sustained loss by the non-presentment at an earlier period, the drawer was held liable to be sued on the cheque. Id.

C., the payee of a cheque drawn on Monday, the 4th June, on a bank at Falmouth, paid it on Tuesday, the 5th, to the credit of his account in a bank at Truro, which was about ten miles from Falmouth. On Tuesday, the 5th, the Truro bank, having no agent at Falmouth, sent the cheque to B. & Co., their London agents, who received it on Wednesday, the 6th, and handed it through the clearing-house to the London agents of the Falmouth bank; they forwarded it to the Falmouth bank, who received it on Thursday, the 7th, and debited the drawer's account with the amount and cancelled the cheque, and by post of the same day wrote to their London agents to pay it on their account. On the morning of that day their London agents stopped payment, and the London agents of the Truro bank wrote to the Falmouth bank requesting them to return the cheque or pay it. On Friday, the 8th, the Falmouth bank wrote, refusing to do either, and on the following day stopped payment. On Saturday, the 9th, the Truro bank gave C. notice of dishonour:—Held, that the Truro bank was entitled to debit C. with the amount of the cheque, inasmuch as, first, they were not bound to send the cheque direct to the Falmouth bank, and therefore it was presented in due time; and, secondly, notice of dishonour was given to C. in due time. Prideaux v. Criddle, 4 L. R., Q. B. 455; 38 L. J., Q. B. 232; 20 L. T. 695; 10 B. & S. 515.

Of Country Cheques.]—When a cheque, drawn upon one country bank, is paid by the holder into his account with another country bank, situate at a distance from the former, there is no legal obligation on the latter to send off the cheque to the former by the first post. Hare v. Henty, 10 C. B., N. S. 65; 30 L. J., C. P. 302; 7 Jur., N. S. 523; 4 L. T. 363; 9 W. R. 738.

Where country banks have not adopted the system of the country banks' clearing-house in London, the course with respect to presentment of cheques paid in to the accounts of customers is this—the bank, into which the cheque drawn on another country bank is paid, is not bound to send it off for presentment until the next day after that on which the banker receives it; he may send it to an agent resident in the town on which it is drawn; this agent, receiving it on the same day, would not be bound to present it at the bank on which it is drawn before the next day after that on which he receives it. Id.

This is the general rule in all cases, both as between parties to the cheque, and as between banker and customer, unless, from the particular circumstances, a contract or duty can be inferred, on the part of the banker, either to present earlier, or postpone the presentment later. Id.

A., a banker at Worthing, received from B., a customer, a cheque drawn upon C., a banker, at Lewes (distant about eighteen miles from Worthing), on the morning of Friday, the 8th of July, and sent it that evening by post to his London correspondent D., for presentment through "the country clearing-house," recently established, but in pretty general use among the country bankers. D.'s clerk handed the cheque at the clearing-house on the morning of Saturday, the Effect of Delay.]—Where the drawees of a cheque continue solvent, and have effects of the drawer in their hands, the holder does not lose his right of action against the drawer by any delay in presenting the cheque for payment. Robinson v. Hauckford, 9 Q. B. 52; 15 L. J., Q. B. 377; 10 Jur. 964.

As between the drawer of a cheque and the holder, no time, within six years, is unreasonable for presentment to the banker for payment, unless some loss to the drawer is occasioned by the delay. Laws v. Rand, 3 C. B., N. S. 442; 27 L. J., C. P. 76; 4 Jur., N. S. 74.

Cheque payable at two places.]—The holder of a banker's note, payable at two places, has a right to present it at either, and if payment is refused at one, there is no laches if it is proved, that, if payment had been demanded at the other, which was more convenient, the note would have been paid. Beeching v. Gower, Holt, 313.

Forwarding by Post.]—Forwarding a cheque by post may be a good presentment. Bailey v. Bodenham, 16 C. B., N. S. 288; 33 L. J., C. P. 252; 10 Jur., N. S. 821; 10 L. T. 422; 12 W. R. 865.

Custom of London—Presentment dispensed with.]—By the practice of the London bankers, if one banker, who holds a cheque drawn on another banker, presents it after four o'clock, if it is not then paid, but a mark is put on it to shew that the drawee has assets, and that it will be paid; cheques so marked have a priority, and are exchanged or paid next day at noon at the clearing-house:—Held, that a cheque presented after four, and so marked, and carried to the clearing-house next day, but not paid, no clerk from the drawee's house attending, need not be presented for payment at the banking house of the drawee. Robson v. Bennett, 2 Taunt. 388.

Such a marking under this practice amounts to an acceptance, payable next day at the clearing-house. Ib.

A person receiving a cheque is equally justified in lodging it with his own banker to obtain payment, as he would be in paying it away in the course of trade. Ib.

Proof of.]—The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Mayor's court, London, as drawer of two cheques upon the Huddersfield branch of the Midland Banking Company. In answer to a rule for a prohibition, it was sworn that the cheques were drawn and indorsed by the payee to the plaintiff in London; that the drawer had no effects in the hands of the Midland Banking Company, and that he had long since had notice from the bank that cheques drawn by him would not be paid unless previously provided for:—Held, that, there being no obligation on the plaintiff to prove presentment and dishonour, there was no ground for a prohibition. Wirth v. Austin, 10 L. R., C. P. 689; 32 L. T. 669.

7. HONOURING.

Of Directors of Public Companies.]—Bankers who have funds of a company (formed under the Companies Act, 1862) in their hands may (acting bonâ fide) lawfully honour the cheques of the directors of the company, signed according to a form sent by them to the bankers, without being bound previously to inquire whether the persons assuming to sign as directors have been duly appointed to that office, in conformity with the provisions of the memorandum and articles of association of the company. Mahony v. East Holyford Mining Company, 7 L. R., H. L. 869; 33 L. T. 383; 9 Ir. R., C. L. 306.

Duty of Bankers.]—The banker of a public registered company is not bound to inquire whether the persons drawing cheques, as directors, against the company's banking account, were legally appointed directors, or authorized to draw cheques, if there was nothing on the face of the transactions calculated to excite suspicion, or inconsistent with the company's articles of association. East Holyford Mining Company v. National Bank, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 508. Affirmed supra—H. L.

A banker is bound by law to pay a cheque drawn by a customer within a reasonable time, after the banker has received sufficient funds belonging to the customer; and the latter may maintain an action of tort against the banker, for refusing payment of a cheque under such circumstances, although he has not thereby sustained any actual damage. Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & Ad. 415.

Cheque of Executor.]—In order to hold a banker justified in refusing to pay a cheque of his customer, the customer being an executor, and drawing a cheque as executor, there must be a misapplication of the money intended by the executor so as to constitute a breach of trust, and the banker must be cognizant of that intention. Gray v. Johnston, 3 L. R., H. L. 1; 16 W. R. 842.

The existence of a personal benefit to the banker, designed or stipulated for, as a consequence of the payment, would be strong evidence that the banker was privy to the breach of trust. Ib.

Bankers had acted as such to J., who carried on business with his son-in-law under the style of J. & M., but whose accounts with them were kept in his own name alone, and were unsettled at his death. He left a will, bequeathing all his property to the use of his wife for life, and after her death to be divided among their children as she might think fit; part of the property consisted of life policies which were put into the hands of the bankers, together with the probate of J.'s will, and they received the amount of the policies, made up their accounts, and, after deducting their own unsettled claims, declared a certain sum to remain due from themselves to the executrix. She continued her husband's business with his late partner under the style of J. & M., and a new account was opened with the bankers in the name of the new firm, and she, as executrix, drew a cheque for the amount stated to be due to her, and paid it into the bankers to be credited to the firm of J. & M., and it was so credited and paid out, with other money, on account of cheques drawn by the new firm:—Held, that these circumstances were not, in themselves, sufficient to shew that a breach of trust had been committed, and that the bankers knew of the intention to commit it, so as to render them liable to replace the money.

Id.

Guarantee that Cheque will be Honoured—Liability of Guarantor.]—If a cheque drawn upon any person is sent by another to know if it is good, before he will receive it, and such person says it will be honoured, as he is indebted to the drawer of it; though the cheque turns out to be void, as being post-dated, the holder may, nevertheless, recover, on the ground of the sum due to the drawer of the cheque being so appropriated. Arden v. Rourney, 5 Esp. 254.

Notice of Dishonour.]—In an action by the holder against the drawer of a dishonoured cheque, notice of dishonour is excused by want of effects at the time when the drawer would reasonably expect the cheque to be presented for payment, provided the drawer had no reasonable expectation that it would be paid. The want of effects which will excuse notice of dishonour need not be a want of any effects; it is sufficient if there are no effects sufficient for the payment of the cheque. Carew v. Duckworth, 4 L. R., Ex. 313; 38 L. J., Ex. 149; 20 L. T. 882; 17 W. R. 927.

A holder of a cheque is not bound to give notice of its dishonour to the drawer, for the purpose of charging the person from whom he received it: he does enough if he presents it with due diligence to the bankers on whom it is drawn, and gives due notice of dishonour to those only against whom he seeks a remedy. Rickford v. Ridge, 2 Camp. 537.

Want of notice of the dishonour of a cheque is sufficiently excused, prima facie, by alleging that the banker had no effects of the drawer, and had received no consideration for payment of the cheque, and that the drawer had sustained no damage by reason of his having no notice of dishonour. Kemble v. Mills, 2 Scott, N. R. 121; 1 M. & G. 757; 9 D. P. C. 446; 1 Drink. 22.

C., the payee of a cheque drawn on Monday, the 4th June, on a bank at Falmouth, paid it on Tuesday, the 5th, to the credit of his account in a bank at Truro, which was about ten miles from Falmouth. On Tuesday, the 5th, the Truro bank, having no agent at Falmouth, sent the cheque to B. & Co., their London agents, who received it on Wednesday, the 6th, and handed it through the clearing-house to the London agents of the Falmouth bank; they forwarded it to the Falmouth bank, who received it on Thursday, the 7th, and debited the drawer's account with the amount and cancelled the cheque, and by post of the same day wrote to their London agents to pay it on their account. On the morning of that day their London agents stopped payment, and the London agents of the Truro bank wrote to the Falmouth bank requesting them to return the cheque or pay it. On Friday, the 8th, the Falmouth bank wrote, refusing to do either, and on the following day stopped payment. On Saturday, the 9th, the Truro bank gave C. notice of dishonour:—Held, that the Truro bank was entitled to debit C. with the amount of the cheque, inasmuch as, first, they were not bound to send the cheque direct to the Falmouth bank, and therefore it was presented in due time; and secondly, notice of dishonour was given to C. in due time. Pri- deaux v. Criddle, 4 L. R., Q. B. 455; 38 L. J., Q. B. 232; 20 L. T. 695; 10 B. & S. 515.

Damages recoverable—Proof of.]—In an action by a trader against his banker for dishonouring his cheques, having funds to meet them, substantial damages may be recovered, without proof of any actual damage. Rolin v. Steward, 14 C. B. 595; 2 C. L. R. 959; 23 L. J., C. P. 148; 18 Jur. 536.

Evidence—As to Mode of Business between Banker and Customer.]—Bankers took up acceptances of a customer for 1,900*l.*, drawn against and attached to bills of lading of a consignment of rum, on receiving an undertaking from the customer's brokers to pay over to them 1,900*l.* out of the produce of the sale. The bankers debited the customer with the 1,900*l.* in his pass book. Before the sale of the rum, 200*l.* having been paid into the bank to his credit, he drew a cheque for the amount, which the bankers dishonoured. Before the advance, the customer had received a general notice not to overdraw his account. In an action for not honouring the cheque, evidence being given that the bankers, on previous similar transactions, had not treated the advances as brought into account, and that it was not the usage of bankers to do so:—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to say whether, in the absence of formal notice to the customer, the previous course of dealing did not continue to exist. Cumming v. Shand, 5 H. & N. 95; 29 L. J., Ex. 129.

—As to Bank having sufficient Funds in hand to meet Cheque.]—A bank agreed with the plaintiffs that they would cash their cheques and discount their bills in consideration of keeping a balance of 100*l.* at the bank. On a Saturday morning the balance was slightly below the 100*l.*, but in the course of the day the plaintiffs paid in a cheque for 150*l.*, this, however, was after the walking clerk had gone to the clearing-house. On the Monday morning, before the walking clerk had returned from the clearing-house, a cheque drawn by the plaintiffs for 17*l.* 10*s.* was presented for payment by the person in whose favour it had been drawn, but was returned to him indorsed, "effects not cleared." Somewhere about this time, but whether before or after the cheque was presented was not proved, one of the plaintiffs came to the bank and called for the pass-book of the firm, and saw an entry crediting them with 150*l.* (cash):—Held, in an action against the bank for not cashing the cheque, that these facts shewed some evidence to go to the jury that the bank was in possession of funds, and therefore that a nonsuit ought to be set aside and the case sent back for trial. Bransby v. East London Bank, 14 L. T. 463; 14 W. R. 652.

8. LOST OR DESTROYED.

Will not support Promise to give New Cheque.]—The non-payment and probable loss of a cheque on his bankers, which A. had signed and delivered to B., is not a consideration to support a promise by A. to give a new cheque for the same amount to C., to whom it was alleged that B. had sent the lost cheque. Johns v. Mason, 9 Hare 29; 20 L. J., Ch. 305; 15 Jur. 390.

Remedies of Loser.—A. paid to the credit of his account with a banking company a cheque drawn by B. The cheque was lost, and B. having refused to give another, leave was given to the official manager of the banking company to file a claim to compel him to do so, on being indemnified. Rhodes v. Morse, 14 Jur. 800.

A cheque of the accountant-general was alleged to have been accidentally destroyed. The court, though not satisfied with the evidence of its destruction, directed the issue of a new cheque, on the ground that the other cheque, being more than a year old, would not be paid, if presented. Taylor v. Scriven, 1 Beav. 571.

—Owner guilty of Negligence.—Negligence in the custody of a draft or in its transmission by post will not disentitle the owner of it to recover the draft or its proceeds from one who has wrongfully obtained possession of it. Arnold v. Cheque Bank; Arnold v. City Bank, 1 C. P. D. 578; 45 L. J., C. P. 562; 34 L. T. 729; 24 W. R. 759.

Negligence, to amount to an estoppel, must be in the transaction itself, and be the proximate cause of leading the third party into mistake, and also must be the neglect of some duty which is owing to such third party or to the general public. Id.

The plaintiffs, merchants at New York, desiring to transmit 1,000*l.* to W. & Co., of Bradford, purchased of S. & Co., in New York, a draft for that amount drawn by S. & Co. on Smith, Payne, & Co., London, payable to the order of the plaintiffs on demand. The plaintiffs indorsed the draft specially to W. & Co. or order, and inclosed it in a letter addressed to them, which was placed in a letter-box in their office to be posted in the usual way. The letter was stolen by one Hecht, a clerk in the employ of the plaintiffs, who forged an indorsement of W. & Co., and procured the defendants, bankers, in London, to present the draft and obtain the money, which was placed by them to the account of a person acting in concert with Hecht, upon whose cheques the money was almost immediately drawn out. In an action for money had and received, the defendants, in order to shew that the negligence of the plaintiffs in the custody and transmission of the draft afforded facilities for the fraud, and so estopped them from suing for the money, tendered evidence that it was an usual and an almost invariable practice amongst merchants sending large remittances from abroad to send, besides the letter containing the remittance, a letter of advice by the same or the next mail. This evidence was rejected, on the ground that the alleged negligence was collateral only to the transaction giving rise to the action:—Held, that the plaintiffs' right to the draft, and to sue for its proceeds in the hands of the defendants as money received to their use, was not affected by the felonious act of Hecht; and that the evidence tendered was properly rejected. Id.

9. GIFT OF.

Must be Complete.—A father, on his return from a journey, placed a cheque for 900*l.* in the hands of his infant son, nine months old, and said to his mother and nurse, "I give this to baby; it is for himself, and I am going to put it away for him, and will give him a great deal more along with it. Never mind if he tears it, it is his own, and he may do what he likes with it." He then locked up the cheque in an iron safe, and died suddenly a few days afterwards. The father, at the date of the transaction, was contemplating an alteration of his will, so as to give 1,000*l.* to the infant, who was otherwise unprovided for:—Held, that there was neither a perfect gift to, nor a valid declaration of trust in favour of, the infant. Jones v. Lock, 35 L. J., Ch. 117; 11 Jur., N. S. 913; 14 W. R. 149.

A cheque was given by A. to B., and presented without delay. The bankers had sufficient assets of A., but refused payment because they doubted the signature. The next day A. died, the cheque not having been paid:—Held, a complete gift, inter vivos, of the amount of the cheque. Bromley v. Brunton, 6 L. R., Eq. 275; 37 L. J., Ch. 902; 18 L. T. 628; 16 W. R. 1006.

Invalid within Statute of Mortmain.—A lady gave a cheque for 5,000*l.* to the surgeon who attended her, to be laid out in the erection, establishment, and support of a hospital. The money was invested by the surgeon in consols in the name of himself and another as trustees, and both immediately afterwards executed a deed of trust declaring the objects of the gift. The declaration of trust was not made known to the donor, who died a few days after its execution:—Held, that the object of the gift did not exclude the acquisition of land; and that the donor, having died within twelve months after the execution of the deed, the gift was invalid under 9 Geo. 2, c. 36. Hawkins v. Allen, 10 L. R., Eq. 246; 40 L. J., Ch. 23; 23 L. T. 465; 18 W. R. 748.

Belonging to Wife's separate Estate.—A wife received a banker's draft for the amount of a legacy given to her separate use. She gave the draft to her husband, who paid it into his current account, and on the same day placed it upon a deposit account in his own name, and then shewed his wife the deposit note. He died very shortly after. The widow gave evidence that she never intended to give up the control of this money:—Held, that the executors of the husband must pay her this sum. Green v. Carill, 4 Ch. D. 882; 46 L. J., Ch. 477.

To Trustee—Cestui que trust not sufficiently ascertained.—A lady drew a cheque for 500*l.* upon her son-in-law (who was not a banker, but who had moneys of hers in his hands), in favour of her daughter Jane, his wife. Afterwards she told him to hold the money in trust for Jane during her life, and afterwards for the children of Jane. The lady died shortly afterwards, and the money was claimed on behalf of the wife and children:—Held, that the objects of the gift were not sufficiently ascertained, and that the 500*l.* must be treated as assets of the deceased. Hughes v. Stubbs, 11 Jur., N. S. 913; 13 L. T. 492; S. P., Roberts v. Roberts, 11 Jur., N. S. 992.

As a Donatio Mortis Causa.—See WILL.

10. WHEN FORGED.

As to Amount.—Where a cheque was so carelessly drawn as to be easily altered by the holder to a larger sum, so that the bankers, when they paid it, could not distinguish the alteration:—Held, that the loss must fall on the drawer, as it was caused by his negligence. Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253; 12 Moore, 484. See Swan, Ex parte, 7 C. B., N. S. 400; S. C., 7 H. & N. 603; and on appeal, 2 H. & C. 175.

A customer drew upon his banker a cheque for 3*l.*, and paid it away. The amount of the cheque was altered by the holder to 200*l.*, in such a manner that no one, in the ordinary course of business, could have observed it, and presented, and the 200*l.* paid by the banker:—Held, that the banker was liable to the customer for the difference between the amount of the genuine and the altered cheque. Hall v. Fuller, 8 D. & R. 464; 5 B. & C. 750.

In an action by the payee against the makers of a cheque, in which they pleaded that they did not make the cheque, their signatures were admitted, but it was opened for them that they were directors of a company, of which the payee was secretary, who kept blank cheques, with their signatures to them, in a book, and that the cheque in question was one filled up by the payee without authority. The judge intimated that this was a forgery, even though the wholsom which the cheque was drawn for was due to the payee. Flower v. Shaw, 2 C. & K. 703.

So filling in a blank cheque with a larger sum than that authorized by the drawer, is a forgery. Reg. v. Wilson, 1 Den. C. C. 284; 2 C. & K. 527; 17 L. J., M. C. 82.

Form and Amount.]—If trustees under a paving act sign cheques drawn by the clerk of the person who is clerk of the trust, those cheques being drawn so as to be alterable from small sums to larger, the trustees cannot charge the clerk to the trust with negligence if they are altered, it being their duty not to sign cheques drawn in such a manner; nor can they charge him with his clerk's misconduct, which would have been prevented had the trustees done their duty in the way in which the clerk to the trust had fair reason to expect they would. Whitmore v. Wilks, 3 C. & P. 364.

As to Signature.]—A declaration alleged that A. drew a cheque upon a banking company, requiring the bank to pay to S. and K., or their order, 190*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.*, the bank having at the time funds of A. to meet it; that L. forged the signature of S. and K. as an indorsement on the back of the cheque, and presented it for payment to the bank; that the forged document was manifestly not in the handwriting of S. and K. or either of them, and was manifestly in the handwriting of L.; and that the respective handwritings of S. and K. and L. were well known to the servants and agents of the bank at their office when it was presented for payment; that the bank wrongfully cashed the cheque, and paid A.'s money to the amount of 190*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.* to L.; and which was so paid to L. by the gross negligence of the bank:—Held, that as the allegations shewed that the instrument was a draft for money payable to order, within 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, s. 19, and that it purported to have been indorsed by S. & K., accordingly the bank was protected by that statute, and the action was not maintainable. Hare v. Copland, 13 Ir. C. L. R. 426.

Payment of a forged draft is no payment as between the person paying and the person whose name is forged. Orr v. Union Bank of Scotland, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 513; 2 C. L. R. 1566.

Cheque signed in Fictitious Name.]—The prisoner, Robert Martin, in payment for a pony and cart purchased by him from the prosecutor, drew a cheque in the name of William Martin in the presence of the prosecutor upon a bank at which he, the prisoner, had no account, and gave it to the prosecutor as his own cheque drawn in his own name. At the time he drew the cheque the prisoner knew that it would be, as in fact it was, dishonoured. The prosecutor received the cheque in the belief that it was drawn in the prisoner's own name:—Held, by Cockburn, C. J., Lush, J., Huddleston, B., Lindley and Hawkins, J.J., that the prisoner was not guilty of the offence of forgery. The resolution in Dwan's case (1 Lea. C. C. 59): "In all forgeries the instrument supposed to be forged must be a false instrument in itself; and if a person give a note entirely as his own, his subscribing it by a fictitious name will not make it a forgery, the credit there being wholly given to himself, without any regard to the name, or any relation to a third person," followed and approved. Reg. v. Martin, 5 Q. B. D. 34; 49 L. J., M. C. 11; 41 L. T. 531; 28 W. R. 232; 44 J. P. 74; 14 Cox, C. C. 375.

Of Indorsement—Negligence of Bankers.]—The plaintiff drew a cheque on his bankers, M. & Co., payable to order, crossed it London and County Bank, and sent it for value to the payee, from whom it was stolen and his indorsement forged. It was ultimately passed to the defendant, who took it bonâ fide in ignorance of the forgery. The defendant gave it to his country bankers, and their London agents, the London and Joint Stock Bank, presented and received payment for it from M. & Co., who either did not perceive or disregarded the crossing London and County Bank. On hearing it was paid, the defendant gave value for it to a customer. Meanwhile the plaintiff, at the payee's request, had sent him a second cheque for the same amount, which also was paid by M. & Co., and the plaintiff's account was debited with both cheques. The plaintiff having brought an action for the amount of the first cheque, for money had and received by the defendant, the jury found that all the parties concerned, except the defendant, namely, the plaintiff, M. & Co., and the payee, had been guilty of negligence with regard to the payment of the first cheque:—Held, that the first cheque had been paid by M. & Co., improperly, and without authority, because they had paid it to the wrong bankers, and that the plaintiff could maintain this action against the defendant who had acquired no title to the cheque. Bobbett v. Pinkett, 1 Ex. D. 368; 35 L. J., Ex. 555; 34 L. T. 851; 24 W. R. 711.

Conversion of Stolen Cheque with Forged Indorsement—Negligence no Defence.]—To a statement of claim alleging that a cheque payable to the order of the plaintiffs was stolen from them, and the indorsement of their name forged upon it, and that it subsequently came into the possession of the defendant, who converted it to his own use, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiffs knowingly employed as clerk a man who had been convicted of embezzlement, and was a notorious thief; that the clerk was allowed access to the rooms where the plaintiffs' letters and cheques were kept, and was empowered and permitted to receive and open the said letters and cheques, and to witness the mode in which the plaintiffs indorsed their cheques; that the clerk was frequently paid his wages by the duly-indorsed cheques of the plaintiffs, and sometimes employed by the plaintiffs to indorse cheques payable to their order; that the cheque in question was taken or stolen by the clerk, who thereupon forged the indorsement, and then procured one E., who had no notice of the forgery and theft, to cash the cheque; that the defendant received the same, with other cheques from E., without notice of the forgery and theft, and in the ordinary course of business gave full value therefor; that, by their carelessness and wilful neglect in dealing with their letters and cheques, the plaintiffs did not discover the forgery and theft for a considerable time; and after such discovery did not take any steps to prevent the negotiation of the cheque, and by such carelessness and neglect caused the defendant to become a bona fide holder for value of the cheque without notice of the forgery and theft:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea was bad. Patent Safety Gun Cotton Co. v. Wilson, 49 L. J., C. P. 713—C. A.

Protection of Banker paying Cheque purporting to be duly indorsed does not extend to third person.]—Though the banker on whom a cheque is drawn which is payable to order, is protected by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, s. 19, from proving it to be indorsed by the person to whose order it is made payable, if it purports to be so indorsed, yet a third person who cashes such cheque is not so protected, and if the indorsement of the name of the payee to whose order it was made payable is a forgery, such third person will be liable to refund to the drawer the money which he received on the cheque when it was honoured by the banker on whom it was drawn. Ogden v. Benas, 9 L. R., C. P. 513; 43 L. J., C. P. 259; 30 L. T. 683; 22 W. R. 805.

Fraud—Pleas of.]—To a declaration on a cheque the defendant pleaded that he was induced to sign the cheque by the fraud of the plaintiff:—Held, that the plea imported an allegation that the defendant, on discovering the fraud, disaffirmed the contract, and that the defendant was not entitled to a verdict on a traverse of the plea, it appearing that he had not disaffirmed the contract. Daves v. Harness, 10 L. R., C. P. 166; 44 L. J., C. P. 194; 32 L. T. 159; 23 W. R. 398.

Production of, for Comparison of Hand-writing.]—The court will not order the production of cheques alleged by the defendant to be forgeries for the sake of comparing the hand-writing with a document, about the genuineness of which the parties are at issue. Wilson v. Thornbury, 17 L. R., Eq. 517; 43 L. J., Ch. 356; 22 W. R. 509.

11. ACTIONS ON.

Suing Banker for.]—The holder of a cheque cannot sue the banker for refusing payment, in the absence of proof that it was accepted by the banker, or charged against the drawer. National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 7 Canada, L. J., N. S. 44—Supreme Court, U. S.

A cheque is not an assignment by the drawer to the payee of a debt or a chose in action within the meaning of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 6. Schroeder v. Central Bank of London, 34 L. T. 735; 24 W. R. 710.

Therefore the payee of a cheque has no right of action for its dishonour against the banker on whom it is drawn. Id.

By Bearer.]—The bearer of a cheque is the person entitled to the money, and he may transfer it to any other person, and whoever has possession of it, as bearer, is entitled to maintain an action on it. Ancona v. Marks, 7 H. & N. 696.

By Holder against Maker.]—An action of debt will lie against the maker of a cheque, by the payee to whom the maker has delivered it. Simpkins v. Potheary, 5 Ex. 253; 1 L. M. & P. 249; 19 L. J., Ex. 242; 14 Jur. 464.

Venue.]—In an action upon a cheque, the venue could not be changed upon the common affidavit. Webb v. Inwards, 5 C. B. 483.

Summary Proceedings.]—Summary proceedings under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, may be taken on a cheque. Eyre v. Waller, 5 H. & N. 460; 29 L. J., Ex. 246; 6 Jur., N. S. 512; 2 L. T. 253; 8 W. R. 450. S. P., Rochford v. Daniel, 1 F. & F. 602.

Against Executor on Cheque drawn by Testator.]—The plea of non assumpsit is admissible in an action against an executor on a cheque drawn by his testator. Rollston v. Dixon, 2 D. & L. 892; 14 L. J., Ex. 304.

Production of, when Admitted on the Pleadings.]—In an action on a cheque, plea that it was given for money lost in gaming and issue thereon:—Held, that the plea admitting giving the cheque, it was not necessary to produce it in the plaintiff's case, nor for the purpose of aiding that of the defendant's case, notice to produce not having been given. Read v. Gamble, 10 A. & E. 597, n.

VII. TRANSFER AND INDORSEMENT.

1. BY INDORSEMENT.

a. Generally.

What amounts to.]—The writing of his name by an indorser on the face of a bill is a good indorsement. Young v. Glover, 3 Jur., N. S. 637.

If a note, payable to the order of A., is backed by B. with his name, at the request of A., and then she places her name on the back under B.'s, but afterwards erases her name, and places it above B.'s, this is not such an indorsement of the note by B. to A. as makes him liable as indorser to her. Lecan v. Kirkman, 6 Jur. N. S. 17.

A defendant, intending to become surety to the plaintiffs for money to be advanced by them to B., wrote his name on the back of a blank bill stamp; after which B. wrote his name across it as acceptor, and then handed it to the plaintiffs, who filled it up as a bill of exchange payable to their own order:—Held, that although the defendant could not be sued as indorser, he was nevertheless liable as drawer of a bill payable to bearer, or according to the tenor and effect thereof, of a bill payable to the plaintiffs' order.

Matthews v. Blossome, 33 L. J., Q. B. 209; 10 Jur., N. S. 998; 10 L. T. 415; 12 W. R. 795.

In order to constitute a valid indorsement of a bill as against the indorser, there must be a writing of the name of the holder, and a manual delivery by him of the bill with the intention, not only to pass the property in it, but to guarantee the payment if the acceptor makes default; and evidence of facts shewing the absence of this intention is admissible under a traverse of the indorsement. Denton v. Peters, 5 L. R., Q. B. 475; 23 L. T. 281.

Of French Bills.—On the trial of an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill, it was proved that the indorsement was made in France in blank, and there was evidence by a French advocate that an indorsement in blank operated only as a procuration, and left the title in the bill to the party so indorsing, but it was agreed that the whole of the Code de Commerce should be considered as in evidence:—Held, that according to the true construction of that code, the person to whom a bill is indorsed in blank is entitled to sue in France in his own name, subject, however, to any defence which could be made against his immediate indorser, and that therefore the indorsement, though made in France and in blank, and operating only as a procuration, did not alone prevent the plaintiff from suing the acceptor in this country. Bradlaugh v. De Rin, 5 L. R., C. P. 473; 39 L. J., C. P. 254; 22 L. T. 623; 18 W. R. 931—Ex. Ch.

By Partners without Authority.—A party who had had professional transactions with A. and B., who were attorneys in partnership, accepted a bill of exchange drawn in their joint names, for the accommodation of B. alone, who, without the knowledge or concurrence of A., indorsed it in the name of the partnership firm, for a valuable consideration, to one who, upon its being dishonoured by the acceptor, sued her for the amount. Upon a plea denying the indorsement by A. and B.:—Held, that the facts established such plea. Garland v. Jacomb, 26 L. T. 849.

A partner has no implied authority to bind his firm by issuing acceptances in blank. Hogarth v. Latham, 3 Q. B. D. 643; 47 L. J., Q. B. 339; 39 L. T. 75; 26 W. R. 388—C. A.

F., of the firm of L. & Co., gave an acceptance purporting to be made by the firm, with a blank for the name of the drawer. C. gave it to H. for value. H. filled up the bill, putting the name of his firm, H. & Co., as drawers, and indorsed it to himself, knowing when he did so that F. had no authority to accept the bill:—Held, that L. & Co. were not liable on the bill at the suit of H. Id.

Semble, that a bonâ fide holder for value to whom the bill had come in a perfect state would have been entitled to sue. Id.

Right of Holder who is prior Indorser of Bill to Sue intermediate Indorser—Circuity of Action.—The plaintiffs having supplied goods to E., drew two bills of exchange upon him for the price. E. accepted the bills, and the plaintiffs indorsed them to the defendant, who, in pursuance of a verbal agreement to become surety for E., in respect of the price of the goods, re-indorsed them to the plaintiffs, who, as indorsees of the bills, sued the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiffs could set up the verbal agreement to shew that the defendant could not have sued them as prior indorsers, and that as no circuity of action would result, the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain their action. Wilkinson v. Unwin, 7 Q. B. D. 636; 50 L. J., Q. B. 338; 46 L. T. 123; 29 W. R. 458—C. A.

In Pencil.—An indorsement written on a note with a blacklead pencil, instead of ink, is a writing in law, and gives the indorsee a right to recover upon the note. Geary v. Physic, 7 D. & R. 653; 5 B. & C. 234.

Forged Indorsement, Ratification of.—The defendant's name was forged, by one Jones, to a joint and several note for 20*l.*, dated the 7th of November, 1869, and purporting to be made in favour of the plaintiff, by the defendant and Jones. While the note was current the defendant signed the following memorandum, in order to prevent the prosecution of the forger, at the same time denying that the signature to the note was his or written by his authority:—"I hold myself responsible for a bill dated the 7th of November, 1869, for 20*l.*, bearing my signature and Richard Jones', in favour of Mr. Brook." At the trial of an action against the defendant on the note, the judge ruled that this memorandum was a ratification, and directed the jury that the only question for them was, whether the defendant signed it. It being admitted that he did, a verdict was entered for the plaintiff:—Held (per Kelly, C. B., Channell and Pigott, BB., Martin, B., dissentiente), a misdirection:—Per Kelly, C. B., Channell and Pigott, BB., that the memorandum could not be construed as a ratification, inasmuch as the act it professed to ratify was illegal and void and incapable of ratification; but that it was, in fact, an agreement by the defendant to treat the note as his own in consideration that the plaintiff would forbear to prosecute Jones, and was therefore void as founded on an illegal consideration. Brook v. Hook, 6 L. R. Ex. 89; 40 L. J., Ex. 50; 24 L. T. 34; 19 W. R. 508.

When Authority to Indorse will be inferred.—A bill drawn, payable to A., or order, is not transferable without the indorsement of the payee, and an authority from him to whom he delivers the bill, to indorse it in his name, is not to be inferred from the mere act of delivery. Harrop v. Fisher, 10 C. B., N. S. 196; 30 L. J., C. P. 283; 7 Jur., N. S. 1058; 9 W. R. 667.

The liability of an indorser to his immediate indorsee arises out of a contract between them, and this contract in no instance consists exclusively in the writing popularly called an indorsement which is necessary to the existence of the contract, but arises out of the written indorsement itself, the delivery of the bill to the indorsee, and the intention with which the delivery was made and accepted, as evidenced by the words either spoken or written by the parties, and the circumstances, such as the usage of the place, and the course of dealing between the parties under which the delivery takes place. Castrique v. Buttigieg, 10 Moore, P. C. C. 94.

B. acted as agent in Malta for A., for the purpose of buying and remitting to him in England bills on England, on account of money received by B. in Malta. In the course of his agency he purchased bills in Malta, and indorsed them to A. without any reservation in the indorsement as to his liability:—Held, that in the absence of special circumstances shewing that any liability was intended by the general mercantile law which must be taken to be in force in Malta, that B. was not liable to A. upon the bills being dishonoured. Ib.

A. & B. carried on business in partnership. The firm being indebted to C., A. (who acted as C.'s agent), with the concurrence of B., indorsed a bill in the name of the firm, and placed it amongst the securities which he held for C., but no communication of the fact was made to C.:—Held, a good indorsement by A. & B. to C. Lysaght v. Bryant, 9 C. B. 46; 19 L. J., C. P. 160.

Contract arising from Transfer or Indorsement.—The contract which a person transferring for value the property in a bill makes with the transferee, is that he warrants that the bill, having been accepted, shall, on being presented at the time it becomes due, be paid; that is, he engages as surety for the due performance by the acceptor of the obligations which the latter takes upon himself by the acceptance. Rouquette v. Overmann, 10 L. R., Q. B. 525; 44 L. J., Q. B. 221; 33 L. T. 333.

The liability of the transferor, therefore, is to be measured by that of the acceptor, whose surety he is; and as the obligations of the acceptor are to be determined by the lex loci of performance, so also must be the obligations of the surety. Ib. See next case.

A bill was drawn and indorsed in England upon French subjects resident in Paris, and was accepted by them in Paris. The bill on the face of it was payable on the 5th October, 1870; before that date the Emperor of the French, in consequence of the war with Germany, enlarged the time for the payment and protesting of current bills of exchange for one month; and the time was afterwards enlarged from time to time by the Government of France for the time being. By these enlargements of time the bill did not become payable till the 5th of September, 1871. On that day the bill was presented to the acceptors and payment refused; and it was duly protested, and due notice of dishonour given to all the parties:—Held, that the indorsers were liable on the bill at the suit of their indorsee for value. Ib.

Governed by Lex Loci Contractus.—The rights and liabilities of the indorser and indorsee of a bill depend upon the law of the place where the contract of indorsement is made. Horne v. Rouquette, 3 Q. B. D. 514; 39 L. T. 219; 26 W. R. 894—C. A. See preceding case.

On the trial of an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill, it was proved that the indorsement was made in France in blank, and there was evidence by a French advocate that an indorsement in blank operated only as a procuration, and left the title in the bill to the party so indorsing, but it was agreed that the whole of the Code de Commerce should be considered as in evidence:—Held, that according to the true construction of that code, the person to whom a bill is indorsed in blank is entitled to sue in France in his own name, subject, however, to any defence which could be made against his immediate indorser, and that therefore the indorsement, though made in France and in blank, and operating only as a procuration, did not alone prevent the plaintiff from suing the acceptor in this country. Bradlaugh v. De Rin, 5 L. R., C. P. 473; 39 L. J., C. P. 254; 22 L. T. 623; 18 W. R. 931—Ex. Ch.

Indorsement, Effect of—Surety entitled to Benefit of Securities.—The indorser is a surety for the payment to the holder, and, having paid it, is entitled to the benefit of any securities to cover it deposited with the holder by the acceptor. He is so entitled whether at the time of his indorsement he knew, or did not know, of the deposit of those securities. The surety's right in this respect in no way depends on contract, but is the result of the equity of indemnification attendant on the suretyship. Duncan, Fox, & Company v. North and South Wales Bank, 6 App. Cas. 1; 50 L. J., Ch. 355; 43 L. T. 706; 29 W. R. 763.

S. C. R., one of the partners of S. R. & Sons, in December, 1874, deposited with the N. & S. W. Bank the title deeds of two of his own freehold properties, and signed a memorandum acknowledging them to be deposited as securities for what the N. & S. W. Bank might advance to the firm in the way of discounts. In November, 1875, D. & Co. sold to R. & Sons a cargo of corn to be paid for in cash. Cash was paid only for part. R. & Sons offered a bill of exchange for the rest, which was declined. D. & Co. were customers of the N. & S. W. Bank. R. & Sons said if D. & Co. would inquire of those bankers they would find it would be all right with the R. bills. The bank manager refused to discount the bill without the indorsement of D. & Co., but said that he believed D. & Co. would incur no more than a nominal liability by putting their names on the bill. D. & Co. thereupon consented to take the bill, indorsed it in the ordinary way, and it was discounted by the bank and carried to their credit. In January, 1876, R. & Sons stopped payment. The bill became due in February, and was dishonoured. D. & Co., who then became acquainted with the fact that securities had been deposited with the bankers to cover advances on R. & Sons' bills, brought an action against the N. & S. W. Bank to have the benefit, so far as they would go, of the securities deposited in December, 1874, claiming to be sureties to the bankers for what was due upon the bill:—Held, that D. & Co. were sureties on the bill, and that as such they were entitled to the benefit of these securities. Ib.

Re-indorsement to Original Payee.—A. having declared on a note against B., made by C. to A., and by him indorsed to B., and by him again indorsed to A., and having obtained a verdict, the judgment was arrested. Bishop v. Hayward, 4 T. R. 470.

Action by Indorsee—Pleading—Claim.—The allegation of the indorsement of a bill, in an action by indorsee against acceptor, does not necessarily mean such an indorsement as will give a right of action against the indorser, but only such an indorsement as gives the plaintiff a title to the bill. Smith v. Johnson, 3 H. & N. 222; 27 L. J., Ex. 363.

Where, therefore, the drawers of a bill indorsed it to a registered company, and the officer of the company delivered the bill to the plaintiff for value, bearing the indorsement of two directors of the company "per procuration:"—Held, in an action by the plaintiff against the acceptor, that whether or not the indorsement was such as to give a right of action by the plaintiff against the company, there was such an indorsement as entitled the plaintiff to a verdict on a traverse of the allegation of the indorsement of the bill by the company to the plaintiff. Id.

Action by indorsees against indorser of a bill drawn by W. & Co. on H., indorsed by W. & Co. to the defendant, and by him to the plaintiffs. Plea, that W. & Co. are the plaintiffs, that they are the drawers, and the persons to whose order it was payable, and the persons who indorsed to the defendant, and who are liable to him as such indorsers in event of payment of the bill by him. Replication, that, at the time of the drawing, H. was indebted to the plaintiffs in the amount of the bill, and thereupon it was agreed between the plaintiffs and H., that in consideration that H. would procure the defendant to indorse and become surety as indorsee to the plaintiffs they would give time to H. for payment of the debt; that the parties, in pursuance of this agreement, drew and indorsed the bill, and the defendant, for the accommodation of H., indorsed it to the plaintiffs, with the intent of thereby becoming surety as indorser to the plaintiffs; that H. delivered the bill so indorsed to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs gave time to H.; and that no part of the debt had been paid to them:—Held, first, that the facts disclosed in the replication shewed a sufficient title in the plaintiffs to sue the defendant on his indorsement to them, notwithstanding their previous indorsement to him. Wilders v. Stevens, 15 M. & W. 208; 15 L. J., Ex. 108.

Held, secondly, that the replication shewed a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise to pay the plaintiffs the amount of the bill. Id.

Held, thirdly, that it was not a departure from the declaration. Id.

— When Replication a Departure from Declaration.—Declaration on a note payable to the order of M., indorsed by M. to the defendant, and by him to the plaintiff. Plea, that M., the payee and the indorser to the defendant, is the same person as the plaintiff. Replication, that the maker was indebted to the plaintiff, and that it was thereupon agreed between them, that in consideration that the plaintiff would give time for payment of the debt, the maker would make it, and would procure the defendant to indorse it, by way of guarantee, to which the defendant agreed; and that the plaintiff gave time to the maker, and in pursuance of the agreement, and without consideration or value whatever in that behalf, and for the purpose and in order that the defendant might, in pursuance of the agreement, indorse the note to the plaintiff, first indorsed the same to the defendant:—Held, that the replication was not a departure from the declaration. Morris v. Walker, 15 Q. B. 589; 19 L. J., Q. B. 401; 14 Jur. 851.

A count stated that S. made his bill, and directed it to Mrs. W., and thereby required her to pay to his order 10*l.*, and that S. indorsed the bill to the defendant, who indorsed to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded that S. was the plaintiff, and that he and no other person was the drawer, and the person to whose order the same was payable, and the person who indorsed the same to the defendant, and was liable to the defendant as such indorser, in the event of payment of the bill by the defendant. Replication, that the defendant indorsed to the plaintiff for the accommodation of Mrs. W., and in order to secure a debt of 10*l.* due from her to the plaintiff, which debt was still unpaid; that there never was consideration or value for the indorsement by the plaintiff to the defendant, but that the bill was so indorsed by the defendant to the plaintiff for the purpose of the defendant becoming surety, as such indorser, for the payment of the debt due from Mrs. W.:—Held, that the replication was not a departure. Smith v. Marsack, 6 C. B. 486; 6 D. & L. 363; 18 L. J., C. P. 65; 12 Jur. 1050.

b. In Blank.

Effect of subsequent Indorsement by Indorser.]

—Where the payee of a bill indorses it in blank, and delivers it to B., and B. writes above A.'s indorsement, "pay the contents to C.," B. is not liable to C. as an indorser of the bill. Vincent v. Horlock, 1 Camp. 442.

But, after an indorsement by the payee in blank, no subsequent indorsee can restrain its negotiability by a special indorsement. Smith v. Clarke, Peake, 225; 1 Esp. 180. And see Peacock v. Rhodes, 2 Dougl. 611; Sigourney v. Lloyd, 8 B. & C. 622.

A bill, having been indorsed in blank, was afterwards indorsed by the defendant specially to Barber & Walker & Co. The plaintiffs, who carried on business under the firms of Barber & Walker & Co., and The Eastwood Company, indorsed the bill by the name of The Eastwood Company. The bill was duly presented, but payment refused for want of an indorsement by Barber & Walker & Co.:—Held, that the bill having been indorsed in blank, its negotiability could not afterwards be restrained by a special indorsement; and that the presentment was such as to render the defendant liable on his indorsement. Walker v. McDonald, 2 Ex. 527; 17 L. J., Ex. 377.

Conversion to Special.—A person may convert a blank indorsement into a special indorsement in his own favour. Clark v. Piggott, 1 Salk. 126; 12 Mod. 193. See Hirschfeld v. Smith, 1 L. R., C. P. 353, per Erie, C. J.

Transferred by Indorsee—Position of Transferee.—Where a bill is indorsed in blank, and is transferred by the indorsee by delivery only, without any fresh indorsement, the transferee takes as against the acceptor any title which the intermediate indorsee possessed. Fairclough v. Pacia, 9 Ex. 690; 2 C. L. R. 1099; 23 L. J., Ex. 215.

A bill accepted on the terms of the sale and return of goods, a portion of which only had been sold, was indorsed by the drawer for a valuable consideration before it became due to B. & Co. After it became due B. & Co. transferred it to the plaintiff by delivery; and at the time of the transfer the name of the firm of B. & Co. was erased from the back of the bill:—Held, that the transfer by delivery from B. & Co. passed their title in the bill to the plaintiff; and that the agreement between the drawer and the acceptor was no answer to an action on the bill. Id.

If a bill indorsed in blank is parted with by the holder as upon payment for the acceptor, but taken by the person taking it with the intention of becoming holder, the latter is not the less, for the misunderstanding, holder, as against all except the prior holder. Lyon v. Maxwell, 18 L. T. 28; 16 W. R. 437.

Pledgings.—To a declaration on a bill, the defendant pleaded, that he indorsed and delivered it in blank to C. for the special purpose of getting it discounted for him; and that the plaintiff, jointly with W., discounted it; and that C., in consideration of such discounting, delivered it to the plaintiff and W. jointly, and not to the plaintiff solely or apart from W., and that there was no consideration for the indorsement to the plaintiff solely:—Held bad, for not shewing that the plaintiff had no right to sue alone upon the bill. Wood v. Connop, 5 Q. B. 292; D. & M. 223; 13 L. J., Q. B. 57; 8 Jur. 174.

A declaration that the defendant made his bill and directed it to B., and required him to pay to the defendant's order, and indorsed the bill to the plaintiffs. The bill was drawn by F., and indorsed by the defendant in blank, and having been delivered by the defendant to F., was by him taken to a bank, of which the plaintiffs were the managers, where it was received by them in renewal of another bill discounted by them, and drawn and indorsed by the same parties:—Held, first, that proof of the defendant being the indorser of the bill did not support the averment that he was the maker. Burmester v. Hogarth, 11 M. & W. 97; 12 L. J., Ex. 178.

Held, secondly, assuming that an indorser might be treated as a drawer, still the indorsement, being in blank, was equivalent to drawing a new bill payable to bearer, and therefore the bill was misdescribed. Ib.

c. Conditional or Restrictive.

Generally.—Quære, whether a negotiable bill can by any words of restriction be rendered not negotiable. Eddie v. East India Company, 1 W. Bl. 295; 2 Burr. 1216.

A bill payable to A. or order, and indorsed personally to B., may be afterwards indorsed by B. to another. Ib.

A bill payable to order, and become negotiable, may be indorsed over, without the word "order" to the indorsement. Ib.

What is Restrictive.—A bill being drawn by A. on B., payable to C. or order, and indorsed by C. in these words—"the within must be credited to D., value in account," D. being indebted to B., and the bill being sent to B., and accepted by him; and he having given D. notice that he had received it, and placed it to C.'s account, this is such a special indorsement as restrains the negotiability of the bill. And if afterwards a forged indorsement, purporting to be by D., to pay to E. or order, is written upon it, and the bill is discounted, the person discounting it shall stand to the loss. Archer v. Bank of England, 2 Dougl. 637. And see Robertson v. Kensington, 4 Taunt. 30.

But where a bill was indorsed by the drawer in this form, "pay the contents to A., being part of the consideration in a deed of assignment, executed by A. to the indorser and others," it is not a limited indorsement. Potts v. Reed, 6 Esp. 57. And see Haussoüillier v. Hartsinck, 7 T. R. 733.

"Pay to A. or his order for my use," is a restrictive indorsement; and the indorsee of A.

must hold the proceeds to the use of the restrictive indorser. Sigourney v. Lloyd, 8 B. & C. 622; 3 M. & R. 58; S. C., Lloyd v. Sigourney, 3 M. & P. 229; 3 Y. & J. 220; 5 Bing. 525.

An indorsement thus, "Pay J. S. or order, value in account with H. C. D.," is not a restrictive indorsement. Buckley v. Jackson, 3 L. R., Ex. 135; 18 L. T. 886.

Effect of.—The drawer and payee of a bill, after it became due, indorsed it to B., on condition that he would take up bills discounted by the payee: B. did not take them up, but transferred the bill to C.:—Held, that he might recover against the acceptor. Wright v. Hay, 2 Stark. 398.

A special indorsement does not transfer property in bills of exchange till delivery. Rez v. Lambton, 5 Price, 428.

A bill drawn by M. under the name of M. & Co., upon and accepted by J. & Co., payable six months after sight to the order of M., and by M. indorsed to B., and by B. indorsed to C., "Value in account with the Oriental Bank," and by C. indorsed to S. Action by S., as indorsee, against M. as drawer, upon the bill being dishonoured: Demurrer, that the indorsement preceding that to S. was restrictive:—Held, that there was nothing upon the indorsement by B. to preclude C., the restricted indorsee, from making an assignment of the bill, so as to give the subsequent indorsee a right of action for the benefit of the restraining indorser or cestui que trust, as the case might be. Murrow v. Stuart, 8 Moore, P. C. C. 267.

Bills were drawn on the 12th May, by a house in Lisbon on a house in London, payable thirty days after sight, and indorsed to A. in London. A. indorsed them, without any qualification, to B. at Paris; B., without presenting them for acceptance, put them in circulation, and on the 22nd August, they were presented at Lisbon for acceptance, and dishonoured. In an action by B. against A.:—Held, that A. was bound by his unqualified indorsement, and could not offer evidence to shew that he was acting merely as B.'s agent. Goupy v. Harden, 2 Marsh. 454; 7 Taunt. 159; Holt, 342.

Where the plaintiffs drew a bill on S., which he accepted, and they indorsed it to the defendant, who re-indorsed it to the plaintiffs, in pursuance of an agreement (without consideration) that he should do so, as a security for the payment of it by the acceptor, and for the purpose of rendering the bill more negotiable: on demurrer to a declaration against the defendant upon the bill, in the usual form, containing an averment, that, at the time of the drawing of the bill, and of the indorsement by the defendant to the plaintiffs, it had been agreed between them that the name of the defendant should be indorsed on the bill as a security to the plaintiffs for the due payment thereof by the acceptor, and that the bill was so indorsed by the defendant under such agreement, and for such purpose only; and that the plaintiffs took and received the bill in satisfaction of such debt of the acceptor, upon the faith that the defendant would indorse the same as such security, and that the indorsement by the plaintiffs was made without any consideration, and for the purpose only of procuring the indorsement of the defendant, and making the bill negotiable, and an averment that the bill was presented to the acceptor, and that he refused to pay it; that notice of such refusal was given to the defendant, and he thereby became liable to pay, and being so liable, promised accordingly:—Held, that the declaration was bad, as, if the action was founded on the bill, the plaintiffs could only recover according to the custom of merchants; and that, by such custom, they, as indorsers and drawers, would be liable to pay its amount to the defendant; and that, if the action could be considered as founded on the special contract, it could not be maintained, as there was no consideration for the defendant's indorsement. Britten v. Webb, 3 D. & R. 650; 2 B. & C. 483.

A bill was indorsed by the payee to the Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Company, who indorsed it, and added to their indorsement the following memorandum:—"In need, S. P. & Co." After several other indorsements, the bill was indorsed in blank to the bank of Liverpool, who indorsed it in blank to the plaintiff, who indorsed it specially—"Pay Messrs. Terney & Farley or order," who indorsed it in blank by writing thereon—"Thomas Terney & Farley." After passing through several other hands, the bill when due was duly presented at S. & Co., London, bankers, where it was made payable by the acceptance, and was dishonoured, the answer being "no advice." On the same day it was presented at S. P. & Co.'s, London, bankers, where it was by the memorandum to be paid in case of need. S. P. & Co. refused to pay it, solely on the ground of the irregularity of Terney & Farley's indorsement. The custom of London bankers was admitted to be to refuse all bills, even their own acceptances, where there is a letter wrong in any indorsement. The bill was returned with due notice to the plaintiff, who gave due notice of dishonour to the Liverpool bank. At the Liverpool bank the irregularity was pointed out to the plaintiff, who, by their recommendation, sent the bill to Terney & Farley, who lived in Ireland, to rectify the mistake, and the bill, with the proper indorsement on it, was then sent up to London, and again presented at S. P. & Co.'s, who then refused to pay it as being out of time:—Held, that the bank of Liverpool was liable to the plaintiff on the bill. Leonard v. Wilson, 2 C. & M. 589; 4 Tyr. 415.

Sans Recours.—The meaning and purpose of an indorsement without recourse examined and adjudged. Dumont v. Williamson, 2 U. C. L. J., N. S. 219; 17 L. T. 71—Supreme Court of Cincinnati. See Lewis v. McKee, 2 L. R., Ex. 37.

When a note is sold in the market, the vendor and vendee being upon equal terms, having each the same knowledge of the parties to the instrument, and there is no concealment or misrepresentation by the vendor, who indorses it "without recourse," he is not liable to the vendee, if the name of one of the parties is forged. Id.

He is not liable on any supposed contract growing out of his indorsement, as it is but a transfer of the note, without the usual guarantee; nor can he be held liable at all unless fraud, concealment, or misrepresentation is proved, or the note is given in payment of a prior indebtedness. Id.

Upon Payment supra Protest.—A person who takes up a bill supra protest for the benefit of a particular party to the bill, succeeds to the title of the person from whom, not for whom, he receives it, and has all the title of such person to sue upon the bill, except that he discharges all the parties subsequent to the one for whose honour he takes it up, and that he cannot himself indorse it over. Swan, Ex parte, 6 L. R. Eq. 344; 18 L. T. 230; 16 W. R. 560.

Evidence—To Qualify Right to Indorse.—Indorsee against acceptors. Declaration, that the bills were indorsed to the treasurer of the Treasury Royal of Portugal, and that C., being treasurer, indorsed the bills to the plaintiff. Plea: that the treasurer, at the time when he indorsed was not such treasurer as was designated or intended by the prior indorsements, but was minister of another and hostile government, and had no title to indorse the bills; and that O. and J., being bankers at P., entered into an agreement with D. M., King of Portugal, and his government, for negotiating and raising a loan; that they procured the bills to be drawn for the purpose of remitting it, and indorsed them to the order of the treasurer of the Royal Treasury of Portugal, thereby intending to make them payable to the order of such person as should be treasurer of the Royal Treasury of Portugal, as the minister of D. M., and not of any person appointed by a government adverse to that of D. M.; that the bills were sent to and duly received by C., being treasurer of the Royal Treasury of Portugal, as minister of D. M.; that D. P. subverted the government of D. M., whereupon C. ceased to exercise the functions of treasurer; that D. P. took forcible possession of the bills; and that C., fraudulently and in collusion with D. P., indorsed them:—Held, that, inasmuch as C. was treasurer of the Royal Treasury of Portugal at the time of the indorsement by O. and J., he acquired the legal title to them; that there was nothing in the form of the indorsement which could be construed to re-vest the title in O. and J., or restrain C. from indorsing over, in case he ceased to hold the office; and that parol evidence was inadmissible to defeat his title or qualify his right to indorse. Soarez v. Glyn, 8 Q. B. 24; 14 L. J., Q. B. 313; 9 Jur. 881—Ex. Ch.

As to Qualification of Indorsement.—In an action by indorsee against acceptor, he, under a traverse of the indorsement, may prove that the drawer wrote his name on the bill and delivered it to the plaintiff, upon condition of other bills being given up to the drawer, and that the condition had not been complied with. Bill v. Ingestre (Lord), 12 Q. B. 317; 19 L. J., Q. B. 71.

Bill given in consideration of Promise which is not fulfilled.—If A., by means of a false pretence, or a promise or condition which he does not fulfil, procures B. to give him a note, cheque or an acceptance in favour of C., to whom he pays it, and who receives it bona fide for value, B. remains liable on his acceptance, and can only relieve himself from his promise to pay C. by shewing that C. is not holder for value, or that he received the instrument with notice, or not bona fide. Watson v. Russell, 3 B. & S. 34; 31 L. J., Q. B. 304; 9 Jur., N. S. 249. Affirmed on appeal, 34 L. J., Q. B. 93; 11 L. T. 641; 13 W. R. 231—Ex. Ch.

d. Striking out Indorsement.

Where a drawer of a bill payable to his own order, and indorsed by him to T., and by T. to B. upon the bill being dishonoured, paid the amount to B., who struck out his own and T.'s indorsement, and returned it to the drawer, and the drawer afterwards passed it to the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover against the acceptor. Callow v. Lawrence, 3 M. & Scott, 95; S. P., Hubbard v. Jackson, 4 Bing. 390; 1 M. & P. 11; 3 C. & P. 134.

An indorsement on a bill, not stated in the declaration, may be struck out after the bill has been read in evidence, and after an objection has been made on account of the variance. Mayer v. Jadis, 1 M. & Rob. 247.

e. Proof of Indorsement.

Generally.—Action by indorsee against acceptor, averring an indorsement by drawer to M., and by M. to the plaintiff. Plea, traversing the indorsement. The jury found that the drawer wrote his name on the bill and handed it to M., that M. might get it discounted, which was not done; and that the plaintiff received it from M. when overdue, and without consideration:—Held, that there was no indorsement by the drawer to M., and that the acceptor was entitled to have the verdict entered for him on the issue as to that indorsement, the plaintiff not being a bonâ fide holder. Lloyd v. Howard, 15 Q. B. 995; 20 L. J., Q. B. 1; 15 Jur. 218.

Semble, per Lord Campbell, C. J., that if the plaintiff had been a bonâ fide holder before maturity, the acceptor would have been precluded, as against him, from requiring further proof of a prior indorsement than the proof of handwriting; and that on this supposition the issue as to M.'s indorsement ought to have been found for the plaintiff. Id.

Action by indorsee against acceptor. Pleas denying the indorsement, and alleging fraud, and that the plaintiff gave no consideration for the bill. On the trial, he rested his case on proof of the handwriting of the indorser. The defendant gave evidence to support the other pleas, which it failed to do, but supported the plea denying the indorsement:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to give other evidence to confirm his primâ facie case. Jacobs v. Turlinton, 11 Q. B. 421; 17 L. J., Q. B. 194; 12 Jur. 517.

A plea denying the indorsement puts in issue not only the fact of the signature, but also a delivery with intent to transfer the bill. Marston v. Allen, 1 D., N. S. 442; 8 M. & W. 494.

In an action against acceptor of a bill indorsed by A., the drawer and payee, to B., B. to C., and C. to the plaintiff, who appears to be a bonâ fide holder, the acceptor, under a plea that A. did not indorse to B., cannot offer evidence that A. delivered the bill to B. for a specific purpose, and not to be negotiated, and that B. fraudulently negotiated it. Hayes v. Caulfield, 5 Q. B. 81.

As to Date.—Where an indorsement of a bill bore no date:—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to determine, from the circumstances attending the transfer of the bill, the time at which the indorsement was made. Anderson v. Weston, 6 Bing. N. C. 296; 4 Jur. 105.

Indorsement by Procuration.—The acceptance of a bill admits merely the drawing, but not the indorsement of the drawer. Therefore, if a bill is drawn and indorsed by procuration, in an action by the indorsee against the acceptor, the indorsement by procuration must be proved, if traversed. Robinson v. Yarrow, 1 Moore, 150; 7 Taunt. 455. And see Macferson v. Thoytes, Peake, 20.

A declaration by indorsee against acceptor averred that the bill had been indorsed to certain persons trading under the firm of H. & F.; and that they had indorsed the bill by procuration of D. to C., from whom the plaintiff derived title: it appeared that the firm of H. & F. had ceased to exist for ten years prior to the indorsement, but that a new firm of H. & Co. had been established; and that D., one of the members, was in the habit of indorsing bills by procuration in the name of H. & F., but that all other transactions were carried on in the name of H. & Co. only:—Held, that as between an innocent indorsee and the acceptor there was sufficient evidence to satisfy the allegation in the declaration. Williamson v. Johnson, 2 D. & R. 231; 1 B. & C. 146.

By Showing that Indorser is same person as Drawer.—In an action against acceptor of a bill, purporting to be drawn and indorsed by A., proof that it was indorsed by the same person who drew it is sufficient, though that person is shown not to be A. Smith v. Moneypenny, 2 M. & Rob. 317.

Pleading—Defence—Denial of Indorsement.]

—To an action against acceptor of a bill indorsed by drawer to the plaintiff, he pleaded that he accepted it on account of a debt due from him to the drawer; that the drawer indorsed it in blank, and delivered it to the plaintiff as agent for R., for the purpose that the plaintiff should deliver it to R. in payment of a debt due from the drawer to R.; that the plaintiff gave no consideration for it, and wrongfully retained it, in breach of his duty as R.'s agent; that R. claimed to be entitled, and dissented from the plaintiff's suing:—Held, that the plea amounted to a constructive denial of the indorsement to the plaintiff, and was good after verdict. Adams v. Jones, 4 P. & D. 174; 12 A. & E. 455.

To an action on a bill drawn by the governor and company of copper miners, and indorsed to the plaintiff, and accepted by the defendant, he pleaded that the governor and company of copper miners was a body corporate, that the bill was made by the corporate name and style, and that it was indorsed by writing and signing, and not under the common seal of the body, nor by any person having authority to do so:—Held, on special demurrer, a bad plea, as amounting to an argumentative denial of the indorsement. Halifax v. Lyle, 6 D. & L. 424; 3 Ex. 446. See Howard v. Oakes, 6 D. & L. 231; 3 Ex. 136.

2. BY DELIVERY.

Generally.—A party cannot sue on a bill in which he has no interest, and of which he has no possession. Emmett v. Tottenham, 8 Ex. 884; 22 L. J., Ex. 281; 17 Jur. 509.

To Agent.—An action is maintainable by a person as the holder of a negotiable instrument, notwithstanding he has no real interest in it, and never was the actual holder. If it has been indorsed and delivered to some person professing to act as his agent, although without his knowledge, and he subsequently adopts the acts of the assumed agent, that is sufficient title, although such adoption is after action brought in his name, and without his knowledge. Ancova v. Marks, 7 H. & N. 686; 31 L. J., Ex. 163; 8 Jur., N. S. 516; 5 L. T. 753; 10 W. R. 251.

A., the holder of three negotiable instruments, to which the defendant was a party, indorsed them to the plaintiff and delivered them to G. and T., a firm of attorneys, with instructions to sue the defendant on them in the name of the plaintiff, which G. and T., assuming to act for the plaintiff, accordingly did. The plaintiff knew nothing of these proceedings until after action, when he adopted and ratified them:—Held, that the action was well brought in the plaintiff's name. Ib.

If in an action on a bill given for goods sold, it is proved that the bill was fetched away by the plaintiff's servant from the house of a third person after the commencement of the action, and only a short time before the trial, such evidence will not make it necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he, at the time of action, was the holder of the bill, and entitled to sue upon it. Burden v. Halton, 4 Bing. 454; 1 M. & P. 223; 3 C. & P. 174.

Where a bill is indorsed in blank, it is competent to the holder to hand it over to a third person to sue upon it on his behalf. Law v. Parnell, 7 C. B., N. S. 282; 29 L. J., C. P. 17; 6 Jur., N. S. 172; 1 L. T. 32; 8 W. R. 6.

A manager of an association established under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and also carrying on the business of a deposit and discount bank bonâ fide, received from a customer a bill indorsed in blank:—Held, that it was competent to him to sue upon it in his own name only, without the indorsement of the bank, although he was a partner and shareholder in the concern; it being a part of his duty as manager to keep possession of, and to realize the securities which came to his hands in that character. Ib.

A member of a money club having obtained from it a loan, gave two sureties a note for the amount and interest, and expenses, payable to the order of the then treasurer. He having ceased to be treasurer, indorsed the note in blank, and delivered it to the attorney of the club in the presence of another member, who forthwith instructed the attorney to sue in his name upon it. The action was brought against him and the sureties. They pleaded a denial of the indorsement, payment, and an equitable plea of set-off. The plaintiff had a verdict for the amount of the note:—Held, that there was evidence of an indorsement, and that the question of partnership was not admissible under these pleas. Jenkins v. Tongue, 29 L. J., Ex. 147.

By Letter.]—The rules of the French post office permit a person who has posted a letter to recover it at any time before it is despatched from the office where it is posted, on complying with certain forms. Therefore, where a letter containing bills of exchange, indorsed to the person to whom the letter was addressed, was posted in a French post office:—Held, that the property in the bills did not pass to the indorsee till the letter had left the office where it was

Presumption as to who is Holder.]—In an action on a bill by drawer against acceptor, in order to rebut the presumption arising from the plaintiff's possession of the bill, that he was the holder, the defendant offered in evidence a draft of a declaration delivered in 1829, in an action on a bill of the same date and amount, and drawn and accepted by the same parties, in which action the plaintiff and another sued as assignees of a bankrupt:—Held, insufficient to call upon the plaintiff to shew how he became possessed of the bill in his individual character. Dabbs v. Humphrey, 4 M. & Scott, 285; 10 Bing. 446.

Testamentary Gift.]—The payee of certain promissory notes, who was upwards of seventy-nine years of age, brought them to his nephew B., saying, "I give you these notes," adding that B. should have them at his death, but that the latter would like to be master of them as long as he lived. The notes not being indorsed were then indorsed by the payee in the presence of one witness in the following way: "I bequeath — pay the within contents to B. or his order at my death." Six months afterwards the testator died, and in a suit to administer his estate:—Held, that B. had no right to the notes or the moneys thereby secured; the evidence shewing that the transaction amounted to no more than an attempted testamentary gift, which failed. Patterson, In re, Mitchell v. Smith, 4 De G., J. & S. 422.

Gift or Loan.]—W., the uncle of H.'s wife, declined to accede to a request made by G., a friend of H., that he would lend H. 1,000*l.* towards the payment of certain election expenses, but stated to G. that he would give H. 500*l.* and deduct that amount from a legacy which he intended to leave H.'s family. He accordingly sent H. a cheque for 500*l.* H. acknowledged the receipt of this by letter, saying, that he would repay it. H. afterwards gave to W. a promissory note for the 500*l.* with interest at 1*l.* per cent. W. died, and a suit was instituted to restrain proceedings at law which W.'s executors had taken against H. upon his promissory note. He deposed that the promissory note had been given at his own suggestion, and only for the purpose of securing to W. the interest during his life; but one of W.'s executors stated, that W. had told him he would have to get in the debt:—Held, upon the evidence, that although the 500*l.* was in the first instance intended by W. as a gift, it was accepted by H. only as a loan, and was subsequently so treated by both parties in giving and taking the promissory note. It requires the assent of the minds of both parties to the making of a gift as well as to the making of a contract. And in this case the transaction being open to the parties at the time of the promissory note being given, to make it either a loan or a gift, the giving of the note was conclusive evidence that both parties treated it as a loan. Hill v. Wilson, 8 L. R., Ch. 888; 42 L. J., Ch. 817; 29 L. T. 238; 21 W. R. 757.

Without Indorsement.—One who receives a bill unindorsed (though for value) acquires no better title under it than the person from whom he receives it himself has. Whistler v. Foster, 14 C. B., N. S. 248; 32 L. J., C. P. 161; 8 L. T. 317; 11 W. R. 648.

Where, therefore, A. had fraudulently obtained a bill (or cheque payable to order) from B., and handed it to C. in satisfaction of a bona fide debt, but without indorsing it:—Held, that C. could not acquire a legal title to sue upon the instrument, by obtaining A.'s indorsement after he had received notice of the fraud. Ib.

A declaration stating that A. drew his bill on the defendant, who accepted the same, and that A. indorsed it to B., who delivered it to the plaintiffs, is bad, for the bill, being payable to order, required an indorsement before a third party could be entitled to sue, and bare delivery would not give such right. Cunliffe v. Whitehead, 3 Bing. N. C. 829; 5 Scott, 31; 6 D. P. C. 63; 3 Hodges, 182.

A bill payable to the order of the drawer, and by him delivered to the plaintiff, cannot be treated as a note drawn in favour of the plaintiff; but an indorsement must be averred as well as a delivery. Prevot v. Abbott, 5 Taunt. 786.

A note payable on demand with interest, drawn by A. in favour of B. as a security for a debt, was by him indorsed to C. for the same purpose; after the indorsement, it passed backwards and forwards between B. & C. several times; and previously to its being ultimately deposited with C. he received an intimation from B. not to negotiate it, as he should want it when he settled accounts with A.:—Held, that C. could not, after a settlement of accounts between A. and B., without a delivery of the note, recover on it against A. Roberts v. Eden, 1 B. & P. 398.

S. drew a bill on the defendant (which the latter accepted for the accommodation of the former), and indorsed it to the plaintiff as his agent, in which character the plaintiff paid it away on account of the drawer, for wine contracted to be purchased for him. Subsequently, the wine contract being rescinded, the holder of the bill refused to give it up until he had been paid 150*l.*, which he alleged to be due to him from the drawer. The plaintiff engaged to pay it, received the bill, and sued the defendant as the acceptor:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover, although it was insisted that he had a lien on it to the amount he had promised to pay to the holder on its being delivered up to him. Hallett v. Davis, 1 M. & P. 79.

3. DISCOUNTING OR DEPOSITING.

Discounting.—There is a distinction between the discount and deposit of bills, depending not on the mere fact of indorsement, but the intention to make an absolute transfer, giving full power to go against all parties on the bills, or merely to enable the person with whom they are deposited to receive the amount from the other parties. Two good, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 229.

A bill remitted, indorsed merely to enable the person receiving it to raise money to meet future advances, is while retained a mere deposit applicable to the demands of the remitter, subject to the right under the indorsement of constituting a third person a creditor, by negotiating it. Ib.

Evidence as to.—The burden being cast upon a defendant, sued as indorser, when the indorsement has been prima facie proved, of showing that the delivery to the plaintiff was not with the intention of constituting an indorsement, but simply by way of deposit or security, he does not show this merely by proving that the bill was given by drawer and acceptor to the plaintiff, as security to the plaintiff for a loan of the amount or discount, half of which loan the defendant, by arrangement with the plaintiff, was to advance to him; even although the plaintiff so far admitted the arrangement as to claim only the moiety of the amount of the bill, such an arrangement not being inconsistent with an absolute indorsement nor necessarily tending to disprove it. Attenborough v. Clarke, 27 L. J., Ex. 138.

Discounting.—A mere discount of a bill, without the indorsement of the party who receives the money, does not give the holder of the bill any claim against such party. Roberts, Ex parte, 2 Cox 171.

If a defendant, having promised to pay over to the plaintiff the amount of a bill delivered to him to get discounted, pays it away in discharge of a debt of his own; he is liable to the plaintiff as having discounted the bill. Oughton v. West, 2 Stark. 321.

A person receiving a bill to get it discounted, has no authority to deal with it otherwise than for discount, and a deposit of it along with other bills, with a bill broker as a security for advances, the broker having notice that it was delivered for discount, is beyond the scope of the authority, and passes no property. Herachfeld v. Brown, 3 F. & F. 219.

A drawer of a bill which had been accepted wrote his name across the back of the bill and delivered it to A. to get discounted; who, instead, while the bill was running, deposited it with B. as security for money advanced to himself, without fraud on the part of B.:—Held, that this was a valid indorsement by the drawer to B. Palmer or Barber v. Richards, 2 L., M. & P. 1; 5 Ex. 63; 20 L. J., Ex. 135; 15 Jur. 41.

If the holder of a bill receives from the drawer a second bill to get discounted, in order to provide for the first, there is a sufficient transfer to him of the second to enable him to retain the proceeds. Walsh v. Tyler, 2 Stark. 288.

Where a party discounts bills with a banker, and receives in part of the discount other bills, not indorsed by the banker, which bills turn out to be bad, the banker is not liable. Fyddell v. Clark, 1 Esp. 447.

4. TO WHAT EXTENT NEGOTIABLE.

Till Discharged.—A bill is negotiable ad infinitum until it has been paid by or discharged on behalf of the acceptor. Callow v. Lawrence, 3 M. & S. 95.

A bill or note cannot be indorsed or negotiated after it has been once paid, if such indorsement or negotiation would make any of the parties liable who would otherwise be discharged. Beck v. Robley, 1 H. Bl. 89, n. See Bartrum v. Caddy, 1 P. & D. 207; 9 A. & E. 275; 1 W., W. & H. 724.

The drawer of a bill payable to his own order after settling with the acceptor, and giving him a receipt in full of all demands, cannot, afterwards, by indorsing the bill, give a title against the acceptor. Thorogood v. Clarke, 2 Stark. 251.

Nothing will discharge either drawer or acceptor but payment according to the law merchant, i.e., payment when due or payment for the purpose of discharging and satisfying the bill. Attenborough v. Mackenzie, 25 L. J., Ex. 244.

Therefore, if the acceptor discounts a bill for the drawer, and then re-transfers it, the latter will be liable upon it to a bona fide holder; and the transfer to the acceptor upon discount will operate as an indorsement, although at the time the drawer does not intend to transfer by way of indorsement, being under the impression that the bill is discharged by coming into the hands of the acceptor; nor will the payment of the amount less the discount be deemed a payment of the bill by the acceptor. Ib.

When Paid before Due.—The drawer of a bill, before it became due, agreed with the acceptor, that on his giving a mortgage security for the amount, he, the drawer, should deliver up to him the bill as discharged and fully satisfied. The acceptor accordingly executed the mortgage, and received back the bill, uncanceled:—Held, that the drawer was liable on the bill to a party to whom the acceptor afterwards indorsed it for value before it became due. Morley v. Culverwell, 7 M. & W. 174; 1 H. & W. 13; 4 Jur. 1163.

— By Drawer in Default of Acceptor.—If a bill is paid and afterwards indorsed before it becomes due, it is a valid instrument in the hands of a bona fide indorsee. Burbridge v. Manners, 3 Camp. 194.

A bill which has been paid by the drawer in default of payment by the acceptor, may afterwards be re-issued by the drawer, and the acceptor will be still liable to pay it. Hubbard v. Jackson, 1 M. & P. 11; 4 Bing. 390; 3 C. & P. 134.

Consideration for Transfer, how far necessary.]

—A., the drawer of a bill, gave it to B., unindorsed, to present it for payment. B. did so, and got it noted. Afterwards A. indorsed the bill, and gave it to B. to obtain payment:—Held, that this indorsement was sufficient to enable B. to recover in an action against the acceptor, notwithstanding A. said, upon the trial, that B. was indebted to him, and that he did not give him any authority to bring the action. Adams v. Oakes, 6 C. & P. 70.

The right of action upon a bill, accepted for value, may be transferred by indorsement without value, as by way of gift. Heydon v. Thompson, 3 N. & M. 319; 1 A. & E. 210.

Bill Insufficiently Stamped.—The defendant, the indorsee of a note, which was not negotiable by reason of its not being payable to order, indorsed it to the plaintiff in payment for goods; the plaintiff neglected to present the note when it became due, and it remained unpaid:—Held, that the plaintiff could, notwithstanding, recover the price of the goods sold from the defendant, as the note not being originally negotiable, the plaintiff had not been guilty of laches in not presenting it, and the transfer did not amount to a new making, for want of a stamp. Plimley v. Westley, 2 Bing. N. C. 249; 2 Scott, 423; 1

Hodges, 824. See Gwinnett v. Herbert, 5 A. & E. 436; 2 H. & W. 194.

The payee of a bill indorsed it specially to the plaintiff, and immediately after the special indorsement the defendant indorsed the bill, and then the plaintiff indorsed it:—Held, that the defendant's indorsement was an equivalent to a new drawing by the defendant, and that he was liable to be sued upon the bill by the plaintiff:—Held, also, that a fresh stamp was not necessary. Penny v. Innes, 1 C., M. & R. 439; 5 Tyr. 107.

Transfer without Authority.—A bill was drawn by A., and accepted by B., for the purpose of being discounted, and having the proceeds applied in the payment of other bills accepted by B., but the other bills, before they became due, were paid by B., who directed A. to hold the first-mentioned bill for his (B.'s) use, and not to part with it without his authority; A., however, for his own purposes, indorsed it to C. for a valuable consideration, having first informed the latter that it belonged to B., and that he (A.) had no authority to part with it:—Held, that the property in the bill was in B., the acceptor, and that he might maintain trover for the bill against C. Evans v. Kymer, 1 B. & Ad. 528.

Acceptor Discounting Bill—Rights against Drawer.—If an acceptor of a bill discounts it, he may re-issue it so as to charge the drawer. Attenborough v. Mackenzie, 25 L. J., Ex. 244.

5. WHEN ISSUED IN BLANK.

As to Name of Payee.—A bill drawn and issued in blank for the name of the payee, may be filled up by a bona fide holder, with his own name, and it will bind the drawer. Crutchley v. Clarence, 2 M. & S. 90.

If he can shew that he came regularly to the possession of it. Crutchley v. Mann, 2 Marsh. 29; 5 Taunt. 529.

If a bona fide holder of a bill, accepted, payable to — or order, inserts his own name as payee, and indorses the same, the bill may be declared on in that form. Attwood v. Griffin, R. & M. 425; 2 C. & P. 368.

As to Amount.—An indorsement written on a blank note, will afterwards bind the indorser for any sum and time of payment, which the person to whom he intrusts the note chooses to insert in it. Russel v. Langstaffe, 2 Dougl. 514; S. P. Edie v. East India Company, 2 Burr. 1216; 1 W. Bl. 297.

6. ACCOMMODATION BILLS.

Where a note payable on demand has been indorsed for the accommodation of the maker, in order to be deposited with his creditor, to secure a debt due, if the maker of the note pays the debt, and the bill is re-delivered to him, it is no longer negotiable. Bartrum v. Cuddy, 1 P. & D. 207; 9 A. & E. 275; 1 W., W. & H. 724.

It is a good defence to an action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill, that it was accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, without consideration, and that it was indorsed over by the drawer after it had been paid by him at its maturity. Parr v. Jewell, 16 C. B. 684—Ex. Ch.

An indorsee for value of an accommodation bill, without notice that it is one of that description, may, notwithstanding notice subsequently acquired, release the drawer without releasing the acceptor. Graham, Ex parte, 5 De G., Mac. & G. 356.

The holder of bills, accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, after they had become due, entered into an agreement with the drawer, that, in consideration of his giving to him a freehold mortgage for these bills and other debts, he would deliver up the bills to be cancelled, and give up his claim on all parties. The mortgage security was given accordingly. At the time of the agreement the holder knew that the acceptances were accommodation acceptances. In an action by the holder against the acceptor:—Held, that he was discharged and had a defence on equitable grounds. Ewin v. Lancaster, 6 B. & S. 571.

The knowledge of a director that bills indorsed for value to his company were bills which had been accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, the director not having been concerned on behalf of his company in the transaction in which the bills were indorsed to them, does not affect the company with notice of the fact of their being accommodation bills. Peruvian Railways Company v. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Company, 2 L. R., Ch. 617; 36 L. J., Ch. 864; 15 W. R. 1002.

7. RETIRING FROM CIRCULATION.

The word "retire," in reference to a bill, is susceptible of various meanings according as it is applied to various circumstances; if the acceptor retires the bill at maturity he takes it entirely from circulation, and it is in effect paid; but if an indorser retires it, he merely withdraws it from circulation in so far as he himself is concerned, and may hold it with the same remedies as he would have had if he had been called upon in due course and had paid the amount to his immediate indorsee, and this latter is the ordinary meaning of the word "retire." Elsam v. Denny, 15 C. B. 87; 23 L. J., C. P. 190; 18 Jur. 981.

8. AFTER MATURITY.

Equities affecting Transfer of Overdue Bills.]

—P. having money at his banking account belonging to O. purchased with it, and other money of his own standing to the same account, some overdue bills. Very shortly afterwards he sold them at an advanced price to a company, of which he was the sole director, and he paid himself the price out of the assets of the company:—Held, first, that the company was not affected by constructive notice of the fraud committed by P. European Bank, In re, Oriental Commercial Bank, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 358; 39 L. J., Ch. 588; 22 L. T. 422; 18 W. R. 474.

Held, secondly, that the company acquired no title to the bills, so far as purchased by the moneys belonging to O., as the equity of O. attached to the bills. Id.

Held, also, that the payment for the bills must be taken as made rateably out of the moneys of P. and O. Id.

By the general rule, any person receiving a negotiable instrument after it is due is deemed to have taken it upon the credit of the person from whom he receives it, and subject to all the objections and equities to which it was liable in the hands of the person from whom he takes it. Taylor v. Mayther, 3 T. R. 83, n.

An indorsee of an overdue note is liable in an action against the maker to all equities arising out of the note transaction itself, but not to a set-off in respect of a debt due from the indorser to the maker of the note arising out of collateral matters. Burrough v. Moss, 10 B. & C. 559; 5 M. & R. 296.

An indorsee of an overdue bill or note takes it subject to all the equities arising out of the bill or note transaction itself, but not subject to any collateral claim existing between the earlier parties to it. Therefore, to an action by an indorsee of an overdue note against the payee, a distinct debt due to the payee from a former indorsee cannot be set off, although the indorsee had notice of such set-off at the time of the indorsement to him. Whitehead v. Walker, 10 M. & W. 696; 12 L. J., Ex. 24; 7 Jur. 330.

Where it appeared by parol evidence that the holder had paid the balance remaining due on a bill to a previous holder after maturity, not on the account of the acceptor or drawer, but in order to acquire an interest in the bill as purchaser:—Held, that it might be indorsed, so as to give the indorsee all the rights which the previous holder had before the indorsement, and such indorsee might therefore recover from the drawer the balance unpaid by him. Graves v. Key, 3 B. & Ad. 313.

The indorsee or transferee for value of a bill after dishonour has a right to recover against the acceptor, whether the bill was given for value or not, unless there is an equity attached to the bill itself, amounting to a discharge of it; and the right of set-off is not an equity which attaches to the bill. Suan, Ex parte, 6 L. R., Eq. 344; 18 L. T. 230; 16 W. R. 560.

So, if the holder of a note, made without consideration, himself gave a full consideration for it, yet if he took it after it was due from an indorser who had given none, he cannot sue upon it. Tinson v. Francois, 1 Camp. 19.

Note Payable on Demand.]—But a note, payable on demand, cannot be treated as overdue, so as to affect an indorsee with any equities against the indorser, merely because it is indorsed a number of years after its date, and no interest had been paid on it for several years before such indorsement. Brooks v. Mitchell, 9 M. & W. 15.

Accommodation Bill.]—Where an acceptor of an accommodation bill was sued by an indorsee, five years after the bill had become due, and no notice of dishonour had been given to any parties to the bill:—Held, that as the plaintiff did not call the party for whose accommodation the bill was given, the jury might fairly presume that the bill, when it became due, was in the hands of the party for whose accommodation it was given, and indorsed afterwards. Bounsall v. Harrison, 1 M. & W. 611; 2 Gale, 113.

It is not, of itself, a defence to an action by the indorsee of a bill, to plead that it was accepted for the accommodation of the drawer without consideration, and was indorsed over after it became due. Charles v. Marsden, 1 Taunt. 224.

Even if that fact appears to have been known to the plaintiff. Smith v. Knox, 3 Esp. 46.

Assignment of overdue Bills, which is subject to special Agreement.]—The holder in America of two bills of the same tenor, having transmitted them to his agents here to present them for acceptance, and receive the money when due, and pay over a part of it to the plaintiff, while the bill so remained in his agents' hands, agreed with the defendant, the indorser (who had lent his indorsement on each to the drawer, from whom the holder received them), that upon payment of one of the bills he should be exonerated from both. In the meantime, the bills having been presented for acceptance by the agents, were dishonoured; and after the dishonour, the agents, not knowing of such agreement between their principal and the indorser, assigned one of the dishonoured bills to the plaintiff, who was informed of the dishonour, and who received it liable to all its infirmities, but without notice of such agreement:—Held, that the bill so received by the plaintiff was bound by the agreement; and that the defendant, having afterwards taken up and discharged the other bill, which had remained in the hands of the same agents, was discharged from both. Crossley v. Ham, 13 East, 498.

On making a bill it was agreed between the drawer and the acceptor that the latter should deposit with the drawer some canvas as a collateral security for the payment of the bill, with power to the drawer to sell the canvas and apply the proceeds in the discharge of the bill if it was not paid at maturity:—Held, that this agreement created an equity attaching to the bill in the hands of a party to whom the bill was indorsed when it was overdue; and that as the drawer after the indorsement had sold the canvas and retained the proceeds, the indorsee was debarred from recovering on the bill for so much as the canvas realized on the sale. Holmes v. Kidd, 3 H. & N. 891; 28 L. J., Ex. 112; 5 Jur., N. S. 295; 33 L. T., O. S. 207; 7 W. R. 108—Ex. Ch.

The right of an indorsee of an overdue bill to sue the acceptor is not defeated by the existence of a debt due from the drawer to the acceptor and notice by the latter to the drawer, before indorsement, of his election to set off the amount against the bill; nor is the indorsee of such overdue bill affected by the existence of a right of set-off as between the acceptor and the drawer, although the bill was indorsed without value, and for the purpose of defeating such set-off. Oulds v. Harrison, 10 Ex. 572; 3 C. L. R. 353; 24 L. J., Ex. 66.

Declaration—What a variance.]—In an action by indorsee of a bill, if the declaration states the indorsement to have been made before the bill became due, and it appears to have been made after the bill was due, this is not a material variance. Young v. Wright, 1 Camp. 139.

Plea—That Notes were Overdue when Indorsed.]—To an action by indorsees against maker of several notes, one of which was payable at three months' date, and the others on demand, he pleaded that before the indorsement of any of them to the plaintiffs, and whilst L. (who indorsed to them) was holder, L. was indebted to the defendant and to D. as executors, in a sum exceeding the amount of the notes, for money lent by their testator, in which sum the defendant was beneficially interested as residuary legatee; and that, before the indorsement of the notes to the plaintiffs, and while L. was holder, it was agreed between him and the defendant, and D., that the amount of the notes should be set off, and allowed to him out of the moneys due from him to them, and that the defendant and L. should mutually be discharged from that amount; and that they remained in the possession of L. until he indorsed them to the plaintiffs, without the consent or fault of the defendant, and L. indorsed them to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs took them after they had been so satisfied:—Held, that the plea was bad, for not shewing distinctly that the notes were overdue when indorsed by L. to the plaintiffs. Cripps v. Davis, 12 M. & W. 159; 13 L. J., Ex. 217.

Evidence of Payment.]—Where a note has been indorsed to the plaintiff after it became due, who sues the maker upon it, the latter is entitled to go into evidence to shew that the note was paid as between him and the original payee from whom the plaintiff received it. Brown v. Davies, 3 T. R. 80. But see Hubbard v. Jackson, 4 Bing. 390; 1 M. & P. 11; 3 C. & P. 134.

9. WITH NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF ACTION.

The position laid down in some books, that the holder of a bill of exchange who has brought an action on it cannot transfer it to another indorsee for value so as to enable him to sue, if the indorsee had notice of the pendency of the former action, is not sustainable. Deuters v. Townsend, 5 B. & S. 613; 33 L. J., Q. B. 301; 10 Jur., N. S. 1072; 10 L. T. 602; 12 W. R. 1002.

An indorsee, without notice that a prior action is depending thereon, may, notwithstanding the pendency of such action, commence an action against the same defendant. Columbies v. Slim, 2 Chit. 637.

10. AFTER DEATH OR BANKRUPTCY OF PARTIES.

After Death.]—A. indorsed a note, but did not deliver it. After his death, his executor delivered the note to the plaintiff:—Held, that he had no title to sue on the note. Bromage v. Lloyd, 1 Ex. 32; 5 D. & L. 123; 16 L. J., Ex. 257.

The indorsee of a bill, payable sixty-five days after date, which was issued by the drawer, and indorsed by the payee, who died before the day when it bore date, may make title through such indorsement to recover on the bill against the drawer. Pasmore v. North, 13 East, 517.

A note payable to A. or his order may be indorsed by his administratrix. Raulinson v. Stone, 3 Wils. 1.

Indorsement by Agent to Principal, after Death of Principal.]—Where an agent, having money in his hands belonging to his principal, bought a bill with it, which he indorsed specially to the latter, who was dead at the time of the indorsement, but of which circumstance the agent was ignorant:—Held, that the property in the bill passed to the administrator of the principal; and, consequently, that he might sue on it in his own character as such. Murray v. East India Company, 5 B. & A. 204.

After Bankruptcy.—In an action by indorsee against acceptor, he cannot defend himself on the ground of the drawer's bankruptcy at the time of such indorsement. Arden v. Watkins, 8 East, 322.

In an action by a bonâ fide indorsee against acceptor, he is estopped from pleading that the drawer and first indorser was an uncertificated bankrupt when the acceptance was given. Braithwaite v. Gardiner, 8 Q. B. 473; 15 L. J., Q. B. 187; 10 Jur. 591; S. P., Pitt v. Chappelow, 8 M. & W. 616; Drayton v. Dale, 2 B. & C. 293; 3 D. & R. 534.

In an action by a holder of a note, indorsed generally by the payee, to a plea that the payee indorsed it after he became bankrupt, the plaintiff replied, that he bonâ fide took and received the note before the payee became bankrupt, and not by way of fraudulent preference. The payee indorsed the note in blank before he became bankrupt, to a person who delivered it after the bankruptcy to the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the verdict. Green v. Steer, 1 G. & D. 499; 1 Q. B. 707.

A note, drawn for the accommodation of A., was transferred by him to B. and C., without indorsement, for valuable consideration, and afterwards he became bankrupt, and died intestate:—Held, that B. and C. might recover against the drawer, the note having been indorsed, several years after it was due, by B. to B. and C., B. having for that purpose procured letters of administration to the effects of A. Watkins v. Maule, 2 J. & W. 243.

There is no difference between an indorsement of a note by the party and one of his personal representatives. Id.

A bill was delivered by the defendant to two partners, and after the bankruptcy of one, indorsed by the other to the plaintiff:—Held, that no interest could pass to the assignees, and a verdict was taken for the plaintiff, with liberty to the defendant to move the point whether a party, without knowledge of a trust, can acquire an interest beyond that of the trustee. Ramsbottom v. Cator, 1 Stark. 228.

11. OF STOLEN, LOST, OR FRAUDULENTLY OBTAINED BILLS.

In hands of bonâ fide holder for value.—Where a bill which has been lost or fraudulently obtained subsequently comes into the hands of a holder for value, such holder is entitled to recover, unless he took the bill under such circumstances as shew mala fides on his part. Goodman v. Harcey, 6 N. & M. 372; 4 A. & E. 870.

A party taking a negotiable instrument bonâ fide, and for full value, is entitled to recover on it, though it has been stolen, and he took it negligently. Raphael v. Bank of England, 17 C. B. 161; 25 L. J., C. P. 33.

A. drew a bill on the plaintiff, and induced him to accept it, by sending with it a forged bill of lading. A. then indorsed the bill to the defendant, for value, without notice of the forgery. The plaintiff filed a bill in equity against the indorsee to restrain him from suing him, and prayed that the bill might be delivered up to be cancelled:—Held, that the fraud practised on the acceptor was no defence against the indorsee for value. Thiedemann v. Goldschmidt, 1 De G., F. & J. 4; 1 L. T. 50; 8 W. R. 14.

Fraud being a good defence to an action on a bill of exchange, there is no ground for seeking relief in equity. Id.

When the indorsement of a bill is obtained by a fraudulent misrepresentation as to the actual character of the document—as, e.g., that it is not a bill, but a guarantee—and the indorser signs his name under that belief and without any negligence, his signature is not binding. Foster v. Mackinnon, 4 L. R., C. P. 704; 38 L. J., C. P. 310; 20 L. T. 887; 17 W. R. 1105.

In an action by a bonâ fide holder for value of a bill against the indorser, the judge directed the jury that if his signature was obtained upon a fraudulent representation that the instrument was a guarantee, and he signed it without knowing that it was a bill, and under the belief that it was a guarantee, and if he was not guilty of any negligence in so signing, he was entitled to the verdict:—Held, a right direction. Id.

To an action by indorsee of a bill drawn by K. and accepted by the defendant, he pleaded that K. was a trader in Ireland accustomed to consign goods to him by carrier, as his commission agent at Liverpool, and that the usual course of business was as follows:—K., on consigning goods from time to time, took a receipt bill of lading for the goods signed by the carrier, and obtained advances of money from the plaintiff, on indorsing to him the bill of lading, and also a bill of exchange, drawn by K. upon the defendant for the amount of such goods; the plaintiff then remitted the bill of exchange to the defendant for acceptance and also the bill of lading indorsed by himself, and thereupon the defendant, on the faith of the bill of lading, and in consideration of such security on the goods, was accustomed to accept such bill of exchange; that, at the time of drawing and indorsing by K. to the plaintiff of the bill of exchange, K. indorsed to the plaintiff a bill of lading, the carrier's signature to which was forged, well knowing the same to be forged, and on the faith thereof obtained the usual advance, to wit, the amount of the bill of exchange; that the defendant, on the remittance to him by the plaintiff of the forged bill of lading, indorsed by him, and of the bill of exchange, accepted the latter at his request, without notice, and so the consideration for his acceptance wholly failed:—Held, that as the plaintiff was an indorsee of the bill for value, and it was not averred that he obtained the acceptance by any fraudulent representation, or that he knew the bill of lading to be forged, the failure of consideration between K. and the defendant was no defence. Robinson v. Reynolds, 1 G. & D. 526; 2 Q. B. 196—Ex. Ch.

Who are bonâ fide holders.—The plaintiff, being drawer and payee of a bill of exchange, handed it to H. to get it discounted. H. offered it for that purpose to the defendant, stating that it was not his, but the plaintiff's bill. The defendant refused to discount it unless indorsed by H. H. said that he had no interest in it, but to facilitate its being cashed he would indorse it; he did indorse it, upon which the defendant took the bill, paid H. only a part of its amount and got it discounted by G.

The plaintiff was obliged to take it up at its maturity, and sued the defendant on it for the balance unpaid to H. A verdict for the defendant was set aside as against the evidence, and a new trial was awarded to try the question, whether the plaintiff was the real owner of the bill at the time it was indorsed, and not whether or not he had at that time been represented to be so by H. Bastable v. Poole, 1 C., M. & R. 411; 5 Tyr. 111.

A. made a note payable to the defendant, who indorsed it for A.'s accommodation, and gave it to B. to get discounted. The latter, in company with C., applied to his bankers (the plaintiffs) to discount it, who requested him to leave it with them to consider of it. They afterwards declined to discount it, and sent it back to B. by the hands of C., who, however, without B.'s authority, subsequently indorsed it, among many other bills, to the same bankers, and then refused to pay B. the proceeds, alleging that there was a balance due to him, on bill transactions, from B. It appeared that on one occasion B. had told the plaintiffs that he had the bill merely for discount:—Held, notwithstanding, that they had acted with due caution under all the circumstances, and were entitled to recover, as it was fair to infer that the plaintiffs believed C. to have had full authority to indorse the bill to them. Cunliffe v. Booth, 3 Bing. N. C. 821; 5 Scott, 17.

W. fraudulently obtained possession of acceptances of B., and he got them discounted and carried to his account by a banking company, to which he was greatly indebted, and of which he was a director and local manager:—Held, under the circumstances, that the bank had notice, and could not be considered bonâ fide holders. Carew, In re, 31 Beav. 39.

In trover for a bill, it appeared that the defendants, who were bankers, had discounted bills for A., who sent the bill in question by his clerk to inquire whether they would discount it and to inform them of an agreement between him and B. with respect to the title. The bankers subsequently placed this bill to the credit of A. At the trial neither side having called the clerk to prove that he delivered the message:—Held, that as the presumption was that the defendants were bonâ fide holders of the bill for value, and also that they acted honestly, it could not be presumed that the clerk had delivered the message, and that therefore the defendants were entitled to the bill. Middleton v. Barned, 4 Ex. 241.

A plaintiff having, without inquiry, and at a heavy discount, taken a bill drawn by a partner in fraud of the firm, from a person who had taken it from the fraudulent drawer with knowledge of the fraud, the bill having upon it a name which made it perfectly good:—Held, that these facts were evidence on which the jury might presume that the plaintiff took the bill malâ fide. Dailey v. De Fries, 11 W. R. 376.

A bill was drawn in favour of a married woman, and sent by her trustees in a letter to her. Her husband surreptitiously obtained possession of the bill, and signed her name to it without her knowledge or concurrence, and having indorsed and discounted it through P., who also indorsed it, he absconded. The wife, before the bill became due, discovered the fraud, and gave notice to the acceptors, who refused to pay at maturity. The discounters recovered against P., who sued the acceptors. The wife filed a bill to restrain this action, and prayed that the acceptors might be ordered to pay the money to her on her separate receipt. Romilly, M. R., decided that no right could be gained under the forged signature; that the payee being a married woman affected the party taking the bill with notice that it was the separate property of the wife; that the holder had a right to retain it, though he must not sue upon it, and that the acceptors must pay the money to the married woman. Upon appeal, held, that P. was a bonâ fide holder for value, and, as such, legally entitled to the bill; that the court would not interfere to defeat his title; and that no blame was attributable to him for not making inquiries other than of the husband as to the wife's signature. Dawson v. Prince, 2 De G. & J. 41; 27 L. J., Ch. 169; 4 Jur., N. S. 497.

Under Suspicious Circumstances.—A person who takes a bill under circumstances calculated to excite suspicion, and, having the means of knowledge, wilfully abstains from making any inquiries, must be considered a holder with notice of the fraud, if any exists. Jones v. Gordon, 2 App. Cas. 616; 37 L. T. 477; 26 W. R. 172.

S. drew bills on G. to the amount of 1,727*l.*, which he accepted. S. and G. were both at the time insolvent and contemplating bankruptcy, and each was aware of the other's position. J. purchased these bills for 200*l.*, knowing at the time that G. was embarrassed, but making no further inquiries. On the bankruptcy of G. he claimed to prove for the full amount:—Held, that his proof should be restricted to the 200*l.* actually paid. Id.

Though since the repeal of the usury laws, the fact of taking a bill at considerable undervalue is not, of itself, sufficient to affect the title of the holder, it is an important element in considering whether the man who gave the undervalue was acting bonâ fide, in ignorance and error, or was assisting in committing a fraud, and avoided making inquiries because they might be injurious to him. Id.

A person who accepts a bill on the faith of a consignment, which he knows to be impeached for fraud, is in no better position than a person who becomes a holder for value of a bill which he knows to be impeached for fraud. Dresser v. Hoare, 7 H. L. Cas. 750; 2 Jur., N. S. 1151.

Non-Inquiry as to.—Where a money changer changed a bank note which had been stolen, and the jury found that he gave full value for it, and took it bonâ fide, not having knowledge at the time that it had been stolen, but that he had the means of knowledge if he had taken care of certain notices delivered to him:—Held, that he was entitled to recover. Raphael v. Bank of England, 17 C. B. 161; 25 L. J., C. P. 33.

Taken after Inquiry.—The holder of a bill, who without any express notice of any circumstance of suspicion, took the bill, not in the ordinary course of business, and, not relying on the security, required evidence of title in the drawer to negotiate the bill which deceived him, has only his remedy against the drawer personally who deceived him, and he can have no better title on the bill than the drawer had. Hatch v. Searles, 2 Sm. & G. 147; 33 L. J., Ch. 467; S. C., affirmed on appeal, 24 L. J., Ch. 22.

Plea that Bill was obtained by Fraud.—A. employed B. to make for him a steel gun, for which he was to pay by two bills. B. delivered a gun with a defect in it, which A. might have seen on examination, and which would have justified him in refusing to receive it. Without examining the gun, he accepted and delivered to B. the bills of exchange. Afterwards B., in a letter to A., stated that the gun was of the best metal all through, and had no weak points that B. was aware of. The gun was tried, and at first answered well, but after repeated trials, burst in consequence of the defect in it. B. having sued A. on one of the bills he pleaded that he was induced to accept the bill by the fraud of B.:—Held, that there was no evidence for the jury in support of the plea. Horsfall v. Thomas, 1 H. & C. 90; 8 Jur., N. S. 721.

To a note payable to the order of A. and indorsed by A. to B., and by B. to the plaintiff, the maker pleaded that the note was obtained from him by D., and others in collusion with him, by fraud; and that there was no consideration for the indorsement by A. to B.; and that the plaintiff had notice of the fraud:—Held, bad, there being nothing to impeach A.'s title to the note. Masters v. Iderson, 8 C. B. 100; 18 L. J., C. P. 348.

A plea that the consideration for the note was the forbearance to prosecute the maker's son upon a charge of felony; not averring that a felony had been committed, or affecting A., the payee, with notice of the alleged illegality of the consideration, is bad. Id.

To an action by indorsee against drawer, he pleaded that a bill similar to the one sued on, and purporting to be accepted by him, was shewn to him by the plaintiff's agent, who was then informed by the defendant that the acceptance was a forgery; but at the agent's request, and without having received any consideration for so doing, the defendant wrote his name as drawee under the forged acceptance; and that subsequently, at the request of the plaintiff's agent, he signed and indorsed over to him the bill which was sued on, and received back the spurious bill; and that, save as aforesaid, he did not receive any consideration for making or indorsing the bill sued on:—Held, that the plea was not an answer, it being consistent with the plea that the plaintiff was the holder of the bill for value. McKenna v. Dowdall, 8 Ir. C. L. R. 70.

Evidence as to Notice of Fraud.—The fact of the knowledge by the solicitor of a bona fide holder, but who has not acted for him in the particular matter, that a bill had been fraudulently accepted, is no evidence that the holder had notice of the fraud at the time of the indorsement. Eyre v. McDowell, 14 Ir. C. L. R. 314.

VIII. ACCEPTANCE.

1. PRESENTMENT.

Necessity of.—If a buyer pays for goods by a bill, which the drawee refuses to accept, and afterwards desires it may be again presented, and it will be honoured, the holder is not bound again to present it, nor to return the bill. Hickling v. Hardey, 1 Moore, 61; 7 Taunt. 312.

A note by which a person promises to pay, ten days after sight, 250*l.*, and 3*l.* per cent. interest, up to the day of acceptance, need not be left for acceptance, the word "acceptance" meaning sight. Sutton v. Toomer, 7 B. & C. 416; 1 M. & R. 125.

Foreign Bill.—But a foreign bill, payable after sight, must be presented for acceptance. Mullick v. Radakissen, 9 Moore, P. C. C. 46; 2 C. L. R. 1664.

Manner of.—The demand for acceptance must be clearly and unequivocally made and refused before an action will lie against the drawer. Cheek v. Roper, 5 Esp. 175.

It is not sufficient to produce a witness who went to a place described as the drawee's house, and was there told by a person unknown to the witness that he would not accept the bill. Id.

It is the regular and usual course of business in commercial transactions to deliver out a bill, left for acceptance, to any person who mentions the amount, and describes any private mark upon it; and if the clerk of the party leaving it, by his conduct enables a stranger to discover the mark or number, in consequence of which the bill is delivered out to him, the party leaving it cannot maintain trover for the bill against the party who so delivered it out. Morrison v. Buchanan, 6 C. & P. 18.

Duty of Agent.—The object of the transmission of a bill from principal to agent being to obtain the acceptance and payment of the bill, or, if not accepted, to guard the rights of the principal against the drawer, the duty of the agent must be measured by these considerations, and the agent ought not to press unduly for acceptance, provided he obtains acceptance or refusal within the time which will preserve the rights of the principal against the drawer. Bank of Van Diemen's Land v. Bank of Victoria, 3 L. R., P. C. 526; 40 L. J., P. C. 28; 19 W. R. 857.

In an action for negligence by a principal against an agent, it appeared that the principal transmitted to the agent a bill for acceptance. The bill was received on a Friday at 1 p.m., and was left with the drawees at 2 p.m., the same day. On Saturday, at 11.30 a.m., the agent called for the bill and as business closed at 12 noon on Saturday, was directed by the drawees to call on Monday. The agent called on Monday and was directed to call on Tuesday. When the agent called on Tuesday the acceptance which had been made on Saturday had been cancelled. The jury found a verdict for the principal but with nominal damages:—Held, that there was no such negligence by the agent as to entitle the principal to substantial damages. Id.

Time of.—The holder of an inland bill, payable after sight, is not bound instantly to transmit the bill for acceptance: he may put it into circulation; or though he does not circulate it, he may take a reasonable time to present it for acceptance. Fry v. Hill, 7 Taunt. 397.

A delay to present, until the fourth day, a bill on London, given within twenty miles thereof, is not unreasonable. Id.

If a bill drawn by a banker in the country on a banker in town, in favour of A., payable after sight, is indorsed by A. to the defendant, who indorses it to the plaintiff seven days after the date of the bill, and the plaintiff delays presenting it for acceptance for four days, it will be left to the jury to say whether the plaintiff has been guilty of unreasonable delay; and in considering this the jury may infer, from the defendant himself having kept the bill so long unaccepted, that it is not the course of business to present such bills for acceptance immediately after the party receives them. Shute v. Robins, 3 C. & P. 80; M. & M. 133.

A party need not present for acceptance on the very day on which he receives a bill. Id.

A bill was drawn in duplicate on the 12th August, at Carbonear, in Newfoundland, payable ninety days after sight, on S. & Co., in England, for the freight of a voyage from Liverpool to Carbonear. The bill was not presented for acceptance to S. & Co. until the 16th November. Carbonear was twenty miles from St. John's, with a daily communication between those places; and from St. John's there was a post-office packet three times a week to England, the average voyage being about eighteen days:—Held, that the jury properly found that the bill was not presented for acceptance within a reasonable time, no circumstances being proved in explanation of the delay. Straker v. Graham, 4 M. & W. 721.

— In case of Foreign Bill.—There is no fixed time when a bill, drawn payable at sight, or a certain time after, should be presented to the drawee, but it must be presented within a reasonable time. Muilman v. D'Equino, 2 H. Bl. 565. And see Darbyshire v. Parker, 6 East, 3; 2 Smith, 195.

The purchaser of a foreign bill, payable at a certain time after sight, which is publicly offered for negotiation, is not bound to send it by the earliest opportunity to the place of its destination. Id.

A foreign bill payable after sight, must be presented for acceptance; and although there is no limited time defined by statute for presentment, and no usage of trade to fix the time, yet such bill must be presented within a reasonable time. Mullick v. Radakissen, 9 Moore, P. C. C. 46; 2 C. L. R. 1664.

What constitutes a reasonable time is a mixed question of law and fact for the determination of the court and the jury. Id.

A bill was drawn in Calcutta, in February, 1848, by L. R. & Co. on D. & Co., at Hong Kong, payable sixty days after sight, and indorsed to M. or order. M. in consequence of the depressed state of the money market at Calcutta, and the unsaleableness of bills on China at that time at Calcutta, kept the bill for five months and nine days, and then sold it to M. R., who did not present it for acceptance at Hong Kong till the 24th October in that year, when D. & Co. refused to accept it:—Held, first, that the presentation of the bill for acceptance was not made within a reasonable time, and that the drawers were discharged. Id.

Held, secondly, that the want of presentment was not excused by reason of the drawers continuing solvent from the date of the bill to the presenting, or that no actual damage was caused to them by the delay. Id.

Bills were drawn on the 12th May, by a house in London, on a house in Lisbon, payable thirty days after sight, and indorsed to A. in London. A. indorsed them, without any qualification, to B. at Paris. B., without presenting them for acceptance, put them in circulation, and on the 22nd August they were presented at Lisbon for acceptance and dishonoured. In an action by B. against A.:—Held, that B. was justified in circulating the bills, and that it was in the option of the holder to present them for acceptance whenever he pleased. Goupy v. Harden, 2 Marsh. 454; 7 Taunt. 159; Holt, 342.

In an action by a holder against the drawer of a bill, addressed to the drawee at Rio de Janeiro, payable at sixty days after sight, it appeared that the holder purchased it in the market, and kept it in his own hands nearly five months before he re-sold it, the rate of exchange having fallen after he had bought it. Before the bill was presented to the drawee at Rio, he had become insolvent:—Held, that the jury was properly directed to consider whether, looking at the situation and interests of both the drawer and holder, there had been unreasonable delay on the part of the holder in forwarding the bill for acceptance, or putting it in circulation; although it was contended that the correct question for the jury was, whether due diligence in forwarding or circulating the bill had been used by the holder, with reference to the interests of the drawer. Mellish v. Rawdon, 2 M. & Scott, 570; 9 Bing. 416.

2. PROTEST AND NOTICE OF REFUSAL.

Notice of Non-Acceptance.—A. draws a bill at thirty days' sight on A.; the drawer is not entitled to notice of non-acceptance. Roach v. Ostler, 1 M. & R. 120.

Protest for Non-Acceptance—Proof of.—In an action against the drawer of a foreign bill, a protest for non-acceptance must be proved. Gale v. Walsh, 5 T. R. 239.

A protest for non-acceptance of a foreign bill is not necessary to be proved in an action by the indorsee against the drawer, if he had no effects, or probability of any effects, in the hands of the drawee, at the time; and it does not appear that there was any fluctuating balance of assets between them unascertained at the time, which might then have afforded probable ground of belief to the drawer that his bill would be honoured. Legge v. Thorpe, 12 East, 171; 2 Camp. 310.

It seems that proof of a protest for non-acceptance of a foreign bill is necessary to enable the payee to recover against the drawer, and that the want of it is not supplied by proof of a notice for non-acceptance, and a subsequent protest for non-payment. But, at any rate, the holder is bound to give notice to the drawer of the non-acceptance. Orr v. Maginnis, 7 East, 359; 3 Smith, 328.

It is sufficient in an action against a drawer on non-acceptance, to prove a presentment to the drawee for acceptance, without shewing that the bill was protested for non-acceptance, or that the drawer had notice of its dishonour. Hickling v. Hardey, 1 Moore, 61; 7 Taunt. 312.

So, of a bill payable after date. Philpott v. Bryant, 1 M. & P. 754; 4 Bing. 717; 3 C. & P. 244.

Where a foreign bill payable after sight is refused acceptance, and an action is brought, in order to charge the drawer, proof of the noting of the bill alone for non-acceptance is not sufficient, without proving that it was also protested for non-acceptance, though there is a subsequent protest for non-payment. Rogers v. Stephens, 2 T. R. 713.

S. & Co., owners of a ship, of which H. was captain, despatched the latter to Miramichi with instructions to purchase a cargo of timber, and draw upon them for the amount. He proceeded to Miramichi accordingly, and there purchased some timber for L. for 154l. 11s. 11d., and drew a bill upon S. & Co. for the amount, at sixty days' sight, in favour of the seller or his order. The bill was dated the 4th September, 1826; and on the 21st November it was duly presented for acceptance, and protested for non-acceptance. The plaintiff was in Liverpool, with the ship under his command, from October, 1826, until April, 1827. It was not proved that the plaintiff received any notice of the dishonour of the bill, either from the then holder, or from the defendant, who had got the cargo. In 1832, the plaintiff was arrested upon this bill at Miramichi, and paid it in order to release himself from the arrest. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for not paying the bill, for not accepting it, and for not indemnifying the plaintiff from all loss sustained by him from having drawn the bill:—Held, first, that the defendant could not insist on the want of proof of notice to the plaintiff of the dishonour of the bill as a defence to the action; secondly, that a promise to indemnify was the promise which the law would in this case imply; and as there was no damnification till 1832, the Statute of Limitations did not apply. Huntley v. Sanderson, 1 C. & M. 467; 3 Tyr. 469.

3. WHAT IS AN ACCEPTANCE.

In Writing.—In an action against an acceptor, it need not be averred in the declaration that the acceptance was in writing. Charlie v. Belshov, 4 M. & P. 275; 6 Bing. 529.

Unsigned.—An unsigned acceptance written on the face of a bill is not made invalid by 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78, s. 2; but it is a question for the jury whether it was intended to operate in its present form, or to be subsequently completed by signature. Dufaur v. Oxenden, 1 M. & Rob. 90.

Writing Name of Drawee across the face of Bill.—Since 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97 (the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856), s. 6, simply writing the name of the drawee across the face of a bill does not constitute a valid acceptance; there must also be upon the face of the bill some word or words indicating an intention on the part of the drawee to be bound by it as acceptor. Hindlaugh v. Blakey, 3 C. P. D. 136; 47 L. J., C. P. 345; 38 L. T. 221; 26 W. R. 480.

Thereupon by 41 Vict. c. 13 (the Bills of Exchange Act, 1878), an Act to declare the law relating to the acceptance of bills of exchange, after reciting that by the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, it is enacted that "no acceptance of any bill of exchange, whether inland or foreign, made after the 31st day of December, 1856, shall be sufficient to bind or charge any person, unless the same be in writing on such bill, or if there be more than one part of such bill on one of the said parts, and signed by the acceptor or some person duly authorized by him," and after reciting that doubts had arisen as to the true effect and intention of the said enactment, and as to whether the signature of the drawee alone can constitute a sufficient acceptance of the bill so as to satisfy the requirements of the said statute, and it is expedient that the meaning of the said enactment should be further declared, it is therefore enacted by s. 1, that "an acceptance of a bill of exchange is not and shall not be deemed to be insufficient under the provisions of the said statute by reason only that such acceptance consists merely of the signature of the drawee written on such bill."

Indorsement by way of collateral Obligation.]

—Sect. 11 of the Mercantile Law Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1856, is in the same terms with s. 6 of the corresponding English act, and enacts that "no acceptance of any bill of exchange . . . shall be sufficient to bind or charge any person unless the same be in writing on such bill . . . and signed by the acceptor or some person duly authorised by him." On the 2nd of March, 1878, in Hindlaugh v. Blakey (3 C. P. D. 136), it was held, that an acceptance by the drawee was null by reason of there being no writing except the signature. On the 16th of April, 1878, the Bills of Exchange Act was passed, which, after reciting the above quoted section of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, and that "it is expedient that the meaning of the said enactment should be further declared," provides, "that an acceptance of a bill of exchange is not and shall not be deemed to be insufficient under the provisions of the said statutes by reason only that such acceptance consists merely of the signature of the drawee written on such bill." A. procured from B. an advance of 1,000l. on a bill of exchange at twelve months for C. and D., his two sons. B. signed the bill as drawer, and addressing it to C. and D., handed it to A., who forwarded it to C. and D. They signed it as acceptors, and sent it back to A., who wrote his own name across the back, and gave it to B. He then forwarded the amount to C. and D. Subsequently C. and D. became bankrupt, and were unable to pay the amount of the bill. A. and B. being both dead, there was no exact evidence why A. put his name on the bill. C. and D. had previous to the date of the bill obtained money from B. on their own security. The trustees of B. claimed from A.'s representative the amount of the bill on the ground that A. indorsed the bill as "joint obligant" with C. and D., "and as co-acceptor with them for payment of its contents:"—Held, first (affirming the decision of the court below, although not upon the same grounds), that A.'s representative was not liable, because A. was not an acceptor within the meaning of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 60, s. 11, or otherwise, in any true and proper sense of the word; and, secondly, that his liability, as insisted upon by B.'s trustees, could only be established by proof of a special contract to be answerable to the drawer for the acceptors, which contract, being different from that which the law merchant would infer from his mere signature as it appeared on the back of the bill, could only be proved by a writing properly signed under, in Scotland, the 6th section of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 60; and in England the 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4, which writing was here absent. Steele v. McKinlay, 5 App. Cas. 754; 43 L. T. 358; 29 W. R. 17—H. L. (Sc.).

Per Lord Watson:—The character in which A. did become a party to the bill was both in fact and law that of an indorser; and in determining his legal position, the fact that his indorsement was written before the bill was delivered to the drawer, and the money advanced by him, was quite immaterial. Ib.

The doctrine deduced from Don v. Watt (26 May, 1812, F. C. vol. xvi. 647) and Watters (7 March, 1818, F. C. vol. xix. 489), by Professor Bell in his Commentaries, vol. i. (7th ed.), p. 425, that in Scotland a signature as an acceptor by a person not a drawee "is held to import a joint undertaking as acceptor of the bill or maker of the note" not approved of: see Lord Watson's opinion. Ib.

Matthews v. Blorsome, 1864 (33 L. J., Q. B. 209), doubted as sound law. Ib.

Macdonald v. Union Bank of Scotland (Court Sess. Cas. 3rd Series, vol. ii. p. 963) approved. Ib.

Effect of Statute passed to meet erroneous Decision.—Held, also, that the Act of 1878 was in effect a declaration by the legislature that the decision in the case of Hindlaugh v. Blakey was erroneous; and as no distinction whatever was made by the terms of the English enactment corresponding with the 11th section of the Scottish Act between one kind of acceptance and another, the effect of that declaration, although in terms confined to an acceptance by the drawee of a bill, was necessarily to displace the whole construction of the English statute on which that decision was founded. Ib.

By Letter.—A merchant abroad, on the 21st of August, 1840, drew upon his London correspondents a bill for 225*l.* at eighteen days' date, payable to the plaintiff. They refused to accept the bill, and, on its being presented for payment on the 11th of September, refused to pay it. On the 13th, the drawer died in insolvent circumstances. On the 15th, the defendants, not being aware of his death or insolvency, wrote to him a letter containing this passage: "Respecting your drafts on us, we have to advise, that we have paid, and are prepared to pay, the following:" mentioning the one in question. In a postscript they added, "We have just been informed that the holders of the bill for 225*l.* had returned it to you. This they had no right to do, as we have already explained to you; they were bound to keep it till the following post day. The bill, we are almost sure, was presented again on Saturday last; therefore we cannot conceive how it can have been sent back before this day. You ought to require proof that this bill had been returned by Friday's mail, otherwise the charge made thereon cannot be demanded of you:"—Held, that the letter contained an absolute promise to pay, which amounted to a valid acceptance of the bill, and that the effect of the letter was not destroyed or altered by the postscript. Billing v. Devaux, 3 M. & G. 565; 4 Scott, N. R. 176; 5 Jur. 1182.

A. having ordered goods of B. & C., a commercial house at Genoa, directed them to draw a bill for the amount upon a banking company in England, of which A. was a customer. A. having given notice of the drawing of this bill to the company, they wrote a letter to A. promising to accept it. The next day, however, the promise was countermanded in a second letter from the company, and by which A. was informed that they would not accept the bill, to which A. assented. After this, A. shewed the letter containing the promise to accept to C., a partner in the house of B. & C. resident in England, but suppressed the fact of his having received the second communication. In an action upon this bill by B. & C., as drawers, against the company, as acceptors:—Held, that the first letter to A. operated as an acceptance, and enured to the benefit of the drawers, and could not, therefore, be affected by what subsequently passed between the company and A. Grant v. Hunt, 1 C. B. 44; 14 L. J., C. P. 106; 9 Jur. 228.

A., in consideration of having commissioned B. to receive certain African bills payable to him, drew a bill upon B. for the amount payable to his own order; B. acknowledged by letter the receipt of the list of the African bills, and assured A. that the bill would meet with due honour from him:—Held, that this was an acceptance by B. Clarke v. Cock, 4 East, 57.

By Acknowledgment.—The defendant's agent in Africa delivered to the plaintiff an instrument in the form of a foreign bill payable at sight. The bill was not addressed to any one, but across it the defendant's agent wrote the word "accepted," and the defendant's name and address. The plaintiff presented the bill to the defendant, and requested its payment, when he denied that he owed the amount, but admitted the signature to be that of his agent. The plaintiff then said, "As you acknowledge the signature, you had better pay the bill." The defendant replied, "I'll pay the bill, but I cannot pay it now; I'll give you a bill at three months." The plaintiff then said, "There is something suspicious about it; it is almost a forgery; you had better pay it at once." The defendant replied, "I'll pay the bill; I cannot pay it now, but I will give my note or bill for it at three months."—Held (assuming the instrument to be a bill), that there was no evidence of an acceptance of it. Reynolds v. Peto, 11 Ex. 418—Ex. Ch.; S. C., in court below, 9 Ex. 410; 2 C. L. R. 491; 23 L. J., Ex. 98; 18 Jur. 472.

Keeping Bill.—Where an acceptance was refused by the defendant, but it remained afterwards for a considerable space of time in his hands, and was ultimately destroyed by him:—Held, that he was not thereby liable as acceptor of the bill. Jenne v. Ward, 1 B. & A. 653; 2 Stark. 326; S. P., Mason v. Barff, 2 B. & A. 26.

Direction in blank.—A bill directed in blank may be accepted by anybody, and be a good bill: but if addressed to a particular person, it cannot be accepted by any other person, except for honour. Davis v. Clarke, 1 C. & K. 177; 6 Q. B. 16; 13 L. J., Q. B. 305; 8 Jur. 688.

Semble, that an instrument drawn in the form of a bill, but without the name of a drawee, is void as a bill of exchange. Peto v. Reynolds, 2 C. L. R. 491; 9 Ex. 410; 23 L. J., Ex. 98; 18 Jur. 472.

Acceptance in blank.—An acceptance in blank is sufficient to charge an acceptor, when the bill is afterwards drawn in pursuance of his authority. The 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78, s. 2, does not affect such an acceptance. Leslie v. Hastings, 1 M. & Rob. 119.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor, it is no objection that the acceptance actually took place before the drawer's name was signed. Molloy v. Delves, 7 Bing. 428; 5 M. & P. 275; 4 C. & P. 492.

A., having signed his name to a blank paper duly stamped, and delivered it to B. for the purpose of drawing a bill in such a manner as B. should think fit, B. drew a bill payable to a fictitious payee or order, and indorsed it over for a valuable consideration to C., who was ignorant of the transaction between A. and the indorser:—Held, that C. might maintain an action against A. as the drawer of a bill payable to bearer. Collis v. Emmett, 1 H. Bl. 313.

An instrument, drawn in the form of a bill, payable to bearer, even if accepted in blank, and afterwards filled up by the drawer, may be declared upon by the indorsee, as a note made by the drawer, and indorsed by the drawee. Armfield v. Allport, 27 L. J., Ex. 42.

A document in the form of a bill of exchange, but accepted with the drawer's name in blank, does not exist as a bill until the drawer's name is inserted, and even then does not create a debt against the parties to it until value has been given for it. Hayward, Ex parte, Jones, Ex parte, 6 L. R., Ch. 546; 40 L. J., Bk. 49; 24 L. T. 782; 19 W. R. 833.

The acceptance of a firm was written across such a document. The firm afterwards made an assignment for the benefit of creditors. After the assignment, and when the document had become to all appearance a complete bill by the insertion of a drawer's name, it passed into the hands of holders for value:—Held, that it did not create a debt capable of supporting an adjudication of bankruptcy against the acceptors. Ib.

— Authority to fill up.—When a bill is accepted and handed over for value, but at the time of acceptance there is no drawer's name on it, any bona fide holder for value is entitled to insert his own name as drawer and to sue the acceptor for the amount of the bill. Harvey v. Cane, 34 L. T. 64; 24 W. R. 400.

C. sent a bill to the defendant with a blank space for the drawer's name. The defendant accepted the bill, and returned it to C., to whom he afterwards wrote, "If you make use of the bill do not forget to retire it." Before the bill became due C. transferred it to the plaintiff for value. The plaintiff inserted his own name as drawer, and sued the defendant:—Held, that he had authority to insert his own name as drawer, and could recover. Ib.

F., of the firm of L. & Co., gave acceptance purporting to be made by the firm, with a blank for the name of the drawer. C. gave it to H. for value. H. filled up the bill, putting the name of his firm, H. & Co., as drawers, and indorsed it to himself, knowing when he did so that F. had no authority to accept the bill:—Held, that L. & Co. were not liable on the bill at the suit of H. Hogarth v. Latham, 3 Q. B. D. 643; 47 L. J., Q. B. 339; 39 L. T. 75; 26 W. R. 388.

Eleanor Scard sued as administratrix of T. Williams on a bill accepted by the defendant. The bill had a blank space left for the drawer's name, and came into possession of Eleanor Scard as administratrix, after it was overdue. She inserted her own name as drawer:—Held, that she was entitled to insert her name as drawer and sue on the bill as administratrix. Scard v. Jackson, 34 L. T. 65, n.

B. gave A. his blank acceptance on a stamped paper, and authorized H. to fill in his name as drawer. H. returned the blank acceptance to B. in the same state in which he received it. B. put it into a drawer of his writing table at his chambers, which was unlocked, and it was lost or stolen. C. afterwards filled in his own name without B.'s authority, and an action was brought on it by an indorsee for value:—Held, that B. was not liable on the bill. Per Bramwell, L. J., on the ground that there was no estoppel between the parties, which prevented B. from setting up the true facts, and if B. had been guilty of negligence it was not the proximate or effective cause of the fraud. Per Brett, L. J., on the ground that after the return of the blank acceptance by H., B. had never authorized any one to fill in a drawer's name, and that he had never issued the acceptance intending it to be used. Bazendale v. Bennett, 3 Q. B. D. 525; 47 L. J., C. P. 624; 26 W. R. 899—C. A.

A person, by giving another a blank acceptance, makes him, as to third parties, his general agent to fill up the bill to the extent the stamp will cover, and he is bound by his acceptance in the hands of an innocent holder for value. Montague v. Perkins, 22 L. J., C. P. 187; 17 Jur. 577.

Therefore, to an action by indorsee for value without notice against acceptor, it is no defence that the acceptance was given in blank to the drawer, and that the bill was not filled up and issued until an unreasonable time (twelve years) after. Ib.

Where value is given for a blank acceptance, the authority to fill it up, being coupled with an interest, is not revoked by death; but where there is no such interest, the authority to fill up and negotiate is terminated by the death of the acceptor. Hatch v. Searles, 2 Sm. & G. 147; 23 L. J., Ch. 467. Affirmed, on appeal, 24 L. J., Ch. 22.

Giving a blank acceptance is only prima facie evidence of an authority to the person to whom it is given to fill up the bill for the amount to which the stamp extends; and where a holder of a bill takes it with notice of a circumstance of suspicion, he can be in no better situation than the drawer or indorser, who had given no value for the bill. Ib.

A. gave a blank acceptance on a bill-stamp, and a person who was quite unknown to the acceptor afterwards wrote his name as drawer and indorser, and it was subsequently filled up as a bill for 500l.:—Held, that it did not lie in the mouth of the acceptor to say that such drawing and indorsing of the bill were irregular. Schultz v. Astley, 2 Bing. N. C. 544; 2 Scott, 815; 1 Hodges, 542; 7 C. & P. 99.

The person to whom an acceptance in blank had been given for valuable consideration, filled it up as a bill of exchange, but added, before the acceptor's signature, words making the acceptance payable at a particular place:—Held, that no authority had been conferred by the giver of the acceptance in blank, to draw such a bill, and that at any rate as between the immediate parties the acceptance was not binding. Hanbury v. Lovett, 18 L. T. 366; 16 W. R. 795.

— Must be filled up within a reasonable

Time.—A., being in execution for a debt, signed a blank note in July, 1846, and delivered it to the attorney for the execution creditor, and was thereupon released. In 1851 he became bankrupt, and obtained his certificate on the 12th of May. On the 20th of October, 1852, the note was filled up, and made payable at one month after date and indorsed to B. To an action upon the note, A. pleaded that he did not make the note, and his certificate under the bankruptcy. The jury found that the note had been filled up within a reasonable time:—Held, that B. was liable, and that the certificate afforded no defence. Temple v. Pullen, 8 Ex. 389; 22 L. J., Ex. 151.

—Ante-dated.—The authority given by a blank acceptance to fill it up for the amount which the stamp will cover, is not lost merely because the drawer, by mistake, antedates the instrument a whole year, even although it is payable some time after date. Armfield v. Allport, 27 L. J., Ex. 42.

Evidence of.—A blank acceptance is not in itself evidence of an authority to a party to whom it is given to borrow the amount on the credit and behalf of the acceptor. King v. Forbes (Viscountess), 3 F. & F. 41.

Operation of Act of Acceptance.—An acceptor cannot, in an action against him by an indorsee, dispute the handwriting of the drawer, and, if he does so by plea, the plaintiff may reply the acceptance by way of estoppel. Sanderson v. Collman, 4 M. & G. 209; 4 Scott, N. R. 638.

An acceptor of a bill payable to the order of the drawer cannot deny the authority of the drawer to draw or to indorse such bill. Halifax v. Lye, 6 D. & L. 424; 3 Ex. 446; 18 L. J., Ex. 197.

Action by an executor of B. upon a bill purporting to be drawn by A., and accepted by the defendant, and indorsed by A. to B. A., who was possessed of goods, being the stock-in-trade upon his premises, died intestate, and indebted to the defendant and other persons; and it was arranged between B. and the defendant, who were two of his next of kin, that the defendant should take possession of the goods, and accept a bill for their value, purporting to be drawn and indorsed by A. The goods were accordingly delivered to the defendant, and the bill declared upon was drawn and indorsed to the plaintiff by procuration in the name of A., and accepted by the defendant:—Held, that the defendant could not be allowed to set up as a defence to the action that the bill was not indorsed by A. Ashpitel v. Bryan, 5 B. & S. 723; 33 L. J., Q. B. 328—Ex. Ch.

General Acceptance.—A bill drawn payable to the plaintiff's order in London, and accepted payable there, is a general acceptance. Fayle v. Bird, 6 B. & C. 531; 9 D. & R. 639; 2 C. & P. 303.

An acceptance in this form: "payable at Messrs. Cunliffe & Co.'s, bankers, London," is a general acceptance, since 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78; it is therefore a frivolous demurrer to a declaration by indorsee against acceptor of such a bill that it was not alleged to have been presented for payment at the bankers mentioned in the acceptance. Skellon v. Halstead, 2 D., N. S. 961; 5 Q. B. 86; D. & M. 616; 13 L. J., Q. B. 177; 6 Jur. 69—Ex. Ch.

In an action against acceptor of a bill, accepted "payable at Messrs. W. & Co.'s bankers, London," the count alleged the acceptance in the precise words, and a presentment at the place mentioned:—Held, no variance, though such acceptance is, by 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78, a general and not a qualified acceptance. Blake v. Bowman or Beaumont, 4 Scott, N. R. 617; 1 D., N. S. 697; 4 M. & G. 7.

Special Acceptance.—If a bill is accepted payable at a particular place, "and not elsewhere," it is a special acceptance within 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78, s. 1. Higgins or Siggers v. Nicholls, 7 D. P. C. 551; 1 W., W. & H. 582; 3 Jur. 340. The word "only" is not necessary to make it special. Id.

Of Bills drawn against Bills of Lading.—A party accepted bills to meet goods consigned to him. The acceptances were made payable "on delivery of the bills of lading." The bills of lading remained, with the bills of exchange, in the possession of the bank who had discounted the latter for the drawers:—Held, on the bankruptcy of the acceptor, that the goods were part of his estate which the bank held as security for their debt, and therefore that the bank could only prove for the amount due on the bills of exchange after deducting the value of the goods. Brett, Ex parte, Howe, In re, 6 L. R. Ch. 838; 40 L. J., Bk. 54; 25 L. T. 252; 19 W. R. 1101.

A bill drawn upon the plaintiff by his correspondent abroad against a bill of lading, was sent through bankers, for presentation and collection. The bank presented the bill to the plaintiff with this memorandum: "The bank holds bill of lading and policy for 251 bales of cotton, per William Cummings." The plaintiff accepted the bill without asking to see the bill of lading, and afterwards retired it before it was due, paid the money, and received the bill of lading, which proved to be a forgery. Upon a bill against the bank to recover back the money so paid upon the bill of exchange:—Held, that the memorandum did not amount to a guarantee by the bank that the so-called bill of lading was genuine; and that the plaintiff had no equity to recover back the money. Leather v. Simpson, 11 L. R. Eq. 398; 40 L. J., Ch. 177; 24 L. T. 286; 19 W. R. 431.

Corn merchants in California agreed to send cargoes of wheat to a miller in England, the reimbursement to be by his acceptance against bill of lading. The corn merchants shipped a cargo, and made out the bill of lading in six parts. Three parts, with corresponding bills of exchange drawn on the miller for the price of the cargo, were indorsed by the corn merchants, and transferred to a Californian bank for valuable consideration. These bills of exchange were, with the bills of lading annexed, accepted by the miller. One indorsed part of the bill of lading was inadvertently sent by the corn dealers to the miller, and by him transferred to an English bank for valuable consideration. The bills of exchange were not met by the miller:—Held, that the corn merchants were entitled to deal as they did with the cargo by transferring the bills of lading; that the English bank could not, under the circumstances, claim as holders of the bill of lading without notice; and that the English bank had no priority. Gilbert v. Guignon, 8 L. R., Ch. 16; 21 W. R. 281.

A bank presented a bill of exchange to the drawees for their acceptance, accompanied by a ticket representing that the bank held bills of lading to cover it. The drawees thereupon accepted the bill, relying on the statement that the bank held bills of lading which both parties thought to be genuine. The bills of lading had been forged by the drawer of the bill of exchange:—Held, that the drawees were not entitled to demand from the bank genuine bills of lading before paying the amount of the bill of exchange. Baxter v. Chapman, 29 L. T. 642.

See also cases under SHIPPING.

For Honour of Drawer.—An acceptor supra protest for the honour of the drawer, is, like the drawer himself, estopped from denying that the bill is a valid bill, and consequently, it is not competent to him to set up as a defence to an action against him by an indorsee, that the payee is a fictitious person, and that he was ignorant of that fact at the time of his acceptance of the bill. Phillips v. Im Thurn, 18 C. B., N. S. 694; 11 Jur., N. S. 489; 12 L. T. 457; 13 W. R. 750.

A person, calling himself P., presented to S., in England, a Spanish bill, professing to be drawn by C. of Lima, on S., payable to the order of R., and indorsed by R. & P. S., having stopped payment, sent to the plaintiff the bill and a letter telling him that no doubt the defendant would intervene for the honour of C., and that with his signature he would perhaps not object to discount the bill; the plaintiff sent the bill and letter to the defendant, who accepted for honour of C., and on the faith thereof the plaintiff discounted the bill. The bill turned out to be a forgery on C., who had not drawn it, and did not know any such persons as R. or P.:—Held, that, as the bill was discounted by the plaintiff on the faith of the defendant's acceptance, he was entitled to recover against him. Phillips v. Im Thurn, 1 L. R., C. P. 463; 35 L. J., C. P. 220; 14 L. T. 406; 14 W. R. 653.

4. CONDITIONAL OR QUALIFIED.

Conditional Acceptance.—A conditional acceptance of a bill is good. Julian v. Sholrooke, 2 Wils. 9.

A conditional acceptance is as effectual as an absolute one, if the condition is complied with. Miln v. Prest, Holt, 181; 4 Camp. 393.

Whether an acceptance is conditional or absolute is a question of law. Sproat v. Matthews, 1 T. R. 182.

If A. accepts a bill payable on a condition to be performed by B., the performance of this condition by C. will not support an action by the holder of the bill against A. Suan v. Cox, 1 Marsh. 176. And see Harrison v. Hannel, 1 Marsh. 349; 5 Taunt. 780.

A bill, drawn 28th November, 1836, payable forty-two months after date, was accepted thus: "Accepted on the condition of its being renewed until November 28th, 1844, without interest, payable by me, at Messrs. Williams and Deacon's, bankers, London:—"—Held, in an action by an indorsee against acceptor, that this was a good acceptance, and that the bill was properly declared on as accepted, payable on 28th November, 1844. Russell v. Phillips, 14 Q. B. 891; 19 L. J., Q. B. 297; 14 Jur. 806.

An acceptance must be to pay in money; and an acceptance to pay by another bill is no acceptance. Ib.

A bill accepted "payable on giving up bill of lading for 76 bags of cloverseed per Amazon, at the London and Westminster Bank, Borough Branch," is a conditional acceptance to this extent, that the holders are only entitled to receive the amount on delivering over to the acceptor the bill of lading, but they are not bound to present the bill on the precise day on which it becomes due. Smith v. Vertue, 9 C. B., N. S. 214; 30 L. J., C. P. 56; 7 Jur., N. S. 395; 3 L. T. 583; 9 W. R. 146.

— Payable at Particular Place.—On the presentment for acceptance of certain bills, the drawee said that he would have accepted them if he had funds (meaning the funds on account of which the bills were drawn); that he had not been able to obtain those funds from France; but that when he did obtain them he would pay the bills:—Held, that this amounted to a conditional acceptance of the bills; and that the defendant, having subsequently become possessed of the funds, was bound to pay the bills. Mendizabal v. Machado, 3 M. & Scott, 841; 6 C. & P. 218.

Before the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78, s. 1, if a person to whom a bill was directed generally, accepted it payable at a particular place, the holder need not have received such a qualified acceptance, but might resort to the drawer as for non-acceptance. Gannon v. Schmoll, 5 Taunt. 344; 1 Marsh. 80.

Because it amounted to a contract to pay at that particular place and nowhere else, and narrowed the general liability of the acceptor. Ib.

Condition annexed by Payee.—If the payee of a bill annexes a condition to his indorsement, the drawee, who afterwards accepts it, is bound by that condition; and if it is not performed, the property in the bill reverts to the payee, and he may recover the contents against the acceptor. Robertson v. Kensington, 4 Taunt. 30. And see Prevot v. Abbott, 5 Taunt. 786.

Holder may insist on Bill being Accepted as Drawn.—The holder of a bill may insist upon the drawee accepting it generally in the very words in which it is drawn, or may protest it for non-acceptance. Boehm v. Garcias, 1 Camp. 425, n. And see 7 East, 387.

Part Acceptance.—A part acceptance is good. Julian v. Sholrooke, 2 Wils. 9.

5. PAYMENT BY BANKERS.

The acceptance of a bill payable at the acceptor's bankers is tantamount to an order to the banker to pay the bill to any person who, according to the law merchant, can give a valid discharge for it, and not merely to the lawful holder; and the banker may debit his customer with such payment. Roberts v. Tucker, 16 Q. B. 500; 20 L. J., Q. B. 270; 15 Jur. 987—Ex. Ch.

But a banker cannot debit his customer with the payment made to one who claims through a forged indorsement of a bill, and so cannot give a valid discharge for the bill, unless there are circumstances amounting to a direction from the customer to the banker to pay the bill without reference to the genuineness of the indorsement, or equivalent to an admission of its genuineness, inducing the banker to alter his position, so as to preclude the customer from shewing it to be forged. Id.

6. CONTRACTS AND UNDERTAKINGS TO ACCEPT.

What sufficient to maintain Action upon.]—Von S. & Co., merchants at Buenos Ayres, entered into a contract with the defendants, merchants in London, to carry on joint exchange operations, the substance of which was, that Von S. & Co. should periodically draw bills on the defendants at ninety days' sight, to be accepted by them, and sell the bills at Buenos Ayres, keeping the defendants out of cash advance, by periodically remitting to them other bills to the same amount on other firms; the profit and loss of these operations to be shared between them. Accordingly Von S. & Co. drew bills in that name on the defendants, and the plaintiffs became purchasers of the bills. Von S. & Co. having become bankrupt, the plaintiffs, as holders of the bills, proved against the estate, and received 40% per cent. on the amount. In an action against the defendants for refusing to accept the bills:—Held, first, that they were not liable as drawers of the bills, as there was no express or implied authority in Von S. & Co. to sign that name as including the defendants. Nicholson v. Ricketts, 2 El. & El. 497; 29 L. J., Q. B. 55; 6 Jur., N. S. 422; 8 W. R. 211.

Held, secondly, that the plaintiffs could not recover against the defendants for money had and received, as the consideration had not wholly failed. Id.

A broker was employed by Von S. & Co. at Buenos Ayres to procure purchasers of the bills; the plaintiffs bought them, on the broker's assurance "that the bills were all in order, he having seen the defendants' letter of credit to Von S. & Co., in virtue of which the bills were drawn:—" Held, that this amounted to no more than a statement that the transaction was regular, and that the bills would probably be accepted, and not to a contract that the bills should be accepted. Id.

An agent and manager of the business of a London firm, who resided in Sweden, gave to a merchant there about to draw bills on that firm an assurance that the bills would be accepted; whereon bills of lading of cargoes of timber were transmitted to the London firm, and bills were drawn against them:—Held, that this assurance, though thus made and acted on, was not, as between the London firm and the foreign merchants, to be treated as equivalent to an acceptance of the bills, so as to vest in the London firm legal rights from the time of such assurance given. Hoare v. Dresser, 7 H. L. Cas. 290; 28 L. J., Ch. 611; 5 Jur., N. S. 371; 33 L. T., O. S. 63; 7 W. R. 374.

By a letter of credit, merchants in London agreed to accept at ninety days' sight the drafts of a merchant at Demerara, on receiving invoices, bills of lading, &c., of certain colonial produce to be remitted; and added, that "on receiving these documents, and no irregularity appearing, they would accept his drafts at the usual date, to the extent of 30,000." In pursuance of this agreement, two several cargoes were remitted in different ships, and shortly afterwards the consignor drew a bill at six months' sight upon the credit of the cargoes remitted, and in the bill directed the same "to be charged to account as advised," without specifying to the account of which cargo it was to be placed, and the consignees refused to accept:—Held, that they were liable upon their agreement in damages for not accepting. Laing v. Barclay, 2 D. & R. 530; 1 B. & C. 398; 3 Stark. 38.

A bill being presented by the indorsee to the drawee for acceptance, the latter on accepting it said, that he expected a remittance from the drawer in a few days, and that as he had a bill of the drawer in his hands, which would be paid, he would take all risks:—Held, that this conversation, together with the bill accepted by the drawee, did not amount to sufficient evidence to entitle the indorsee to recover against the drawee the amount of the bill accepted, on a count for money had and received. Whitwell v. Bennett, 3 B. & P. 559. And see Bishop v. Rowe, 3 M. & S. 362.

On Unfulfilled Condition.]—An agreement to accept a bill on certain conditions, is discharged if the conditions are not complied with. Mason v. Hunt, 1 Dougl. 297.

Non-existing Bill.]—A promise to accept a non-existing foreign bill did not amount to an acceptance; there must be a bill in existence which could be accepted. Bank of Ireland v. Archer, 11 M. & W. 383; 12 L. J., Ex. 353; 7 Jur. 379.

By Three Persons—Bill Drawn on One only—Rights of Holder.]—Where three persons undertake to accept bills for a particular concern, and the drawer draws bills on account of one of them only, which he accepts in the name of the three, a bonâ fide holder who received it from the drawer cannot recover against the other two. Williams v. Thomas, 6 Esp. 18. But see Ridley v. Taylor, 13 East, 182.

7. PROOF OF.

Production of Bill.]—The bare production of a bill, with formal proof of the writing to the acceptance, is primâ facie evidence that the bill was accepted during its currency, and within a reasonable time of the date it bears, such being the regular and usual course of business. Roberts v. Bethell, 12 C. B. 778; 22 L. J., C. P. 69; 16 Jur. 1087.

In an action against acceptor, a notice given by his attorney to the plaintiff to produce all papers relating to a bill described as the bill in question, and said to be "accepted by the defendant," is primâ facie evidence of his acceptance. Hott v. Squire, R. & M. 282.

What is a reasonable time depends on the relative places of abode of the parties to the bill. Id.

Date of Acceptance.]—The date of the acceptance of a bill payable after sight, over the defendant's acceptance, although in a different handwriting, will be presumed to have been written by his authority. Glossop v. Jacob, 4 Camp. 227; 1 Stark. 60.

Evidence that Drawee has Effects of Drawer in his Hands.]—The acceptance of the drawee is prima facie evidence of his having effects of the drawer in his hands. Vere v. Lewis, 3 T. R. 182.

For every bill implies a command to the drawee to pay, and his acceptance is not only an admission of money or effects in his hands sufficient to pay, but is an undertaking by the acceptor, as well with respect to the drawer as the payee, to pay the bill. Parminster v. Symons, 2 Bro. P. C. 43; 1 Wils. 185.

Where the Acceptors are Partners.]—Where the acceptors of a bill are partners, and one partner accepts for the firm, his admission of his acceptance, although not evidence of the partnership against the others who appear and defend, will be good evidence of his acceptance as against the whole aggregate body. Hodgkyn v. Wingerhoed, 2 Phil. Evid. 26.

Bill properly drawn.]—In an action against the drawers of a bill drawn by a firm upon one partner, if it is proved that the bill was accepted by the drawee, this is evidence of its having been regularly drawn. Porthouse v. Parker, 1 Camp. 82.

Evidence inadmissible to shew Drawing or Indorsement a Forgery.]—When a bill is accepted in blank for the purpose of being negotiated, and is afterwards filled in with the name and signature of a person as drawer and indorser, the acceptor cannot, as against a bona fide indorsee for value, adduce evidence to shew that either the drawing or indorsement is a forgery. London and South Western Bank v. Wentworth, 5 Ex. D. 96; 49 L. J., Ex. 657; 42 L. T. 188; 28 W. R. 516.

Handwriting.]—In an action against acceptor, the only proof of his handwriting was that by a banker's clerk, who stated that, two years ago, he saw a person calling himself by the acceptor's name sign a book; that he had never seen him since, but that he thought the handwriting was the same, and had since seen cheques bearing the same signature:—Held, that this was evidence to go to the jury. Warren v. Anderson, 8 Scott, 384.

In an action against an acceptor, no evidence being given in whose hand the acceptance was written:—Held, that the circumstance of the bill having been paid by the drawer, and the amount of it, obtained on discount by the acceptor's wife, having been applied by her in discharge of his debts, was not sufficient to prove that he had sanctioned the acceptance. Goldstone v. Tovey, 6 Bing., N. C. 98; 8 Scott, 394.

In an action on a bill against the acceptor, there was a plea traversing the acceptance. No evidence was offered by the plaintiff on this point, but the bill and a letter were produced at the trial in accordance with a notice by the defendant to produce, in which notice the bill was described as the bill accepted by the defendant, and the letter as being a letter of the defendant's:—Held, that as the jury had an opportunity of comparing the handwriting if they had thought it necessary, there was some evidence of the defendant's handwriting. Scard v. Jackson, 24 W. R. 159.

In an action on a bill against acceptor, to which he pleaded non acceptavit, the following document, signed by his attorney: "I hereby admit that the acceptance to the bill on which this action is brought is in the handwriting of the defendant," is sufficient evidence to go to the jury of his acceptance, without the production of the bill itself. Chaplin v. Lery, 9 Ex. 531; 3 C. L. R. 556; 23 L. J., Ex. 117.

Where, in an action against A., B. & C., on a note, the handwriting of A. & B. was proved, but the only evidence against C. was a signature bearing his name to a joint retainer by him and A. & B., on which the attorney had acted in defending the action, without, however, having seen C., or having any other means of knowing his handwriting:—Held, insufficient. Drew v. Prior, 5 M. & G. 264; 12 L. J., C. P. 144.

Identity.]—In an action against acceptor, it is not necessary, if his handwriting has been proved, to give evidence of his identity. Roden v. Ryde, 4 Q. B. 626; 12 L. J., Q. B. 276; 7 Jur. 554; S. P., Sewell v. Williams, 7 Jur. 554.

In an action by indorsee against maker, he pleaded that he did not make the note. There was an attesting witness, who, on being called at the trial, stated that he saw the signature [Hugh Jones] to the note written by a party whose occupation and residence he described, that he had no communication with him since, and that this was a common name in the neighbourhood where the note was made:—Held, that there was no evidence to go to the jury of the identity of the defendant with the maker of the note. Jones v. Jones, 9 M. & W. 75.

In an action on a bill directed to "Charles Bamer Crawford, East India House," and accepted, "C. B. Crawford," a witness, stated, that the acceptance was in the handwriting of C. B. Crawford, and that he was formerly in the India House; but the witness could not tell whether that person was the defendant:—Held, that the evidence was sufficient, without proof of identity. Greenshields v. Crawford, 1 D., N. S. 439; 9 M. & W. 439; 6 Jur. 303.

8. REVOCATION AND CANCELLATION.

Generally.]—An acceptor may cancel his acceptance before he returns the bill. Cox v. Troy, 1 D. & R. 38; 5 B. & A. 474. But see Thornton v. Dick, 4 Esp. 270.

But where a bill was left for acceptance, and accepted, but the acceptance was afterwards cut off, and the bill returned in that mutilated state:—Held, that the acceptance being once made, it could not be revoked, and that the acceptor was still bound. Trimmer v. Oddie, Bayl. Bills, 161.

If an acceptance is so cancelled, and the bill noted for non-acceptance, the holder cannot afterwards sue upon it as an acceptance. Ben-tinck v. Dorrien, 6 East, 199; 2 Smith, 387.

The acceptance of a bill, though revocable at any time before delivery, is, if unrevoked, complete as soon as written on the bill, and the contract is made in that place where the bill is accepted, not where it is issued. Wilde v. Sheridan, 21 L. J., Q. B. 260; 16 Jur. 426; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Birch, 1 B. C. C. 56.

Bill torn into two pieces—Rights of bona fide Holder.]—A bill was torn into two pieces, and thrown away by the acceptor animo destruendi; the pieces of paper were picked up and fastened annulling it as a bill, or of transmitting it through the post:—Held, that the acceptor was liable to an indorser for value, and without notice. Ingham v. Primrose, 7 C. B., N. S. 82; 26 L. J., C. P. 294; 5 Jur., N. S. 710.

By mistake.]—A bill having been accepted, payable at Ladbroke's, with a direction in writing on it, "in case of need to apply at Boldero's," and having been dishonoured when due at Ladbroke's, and thereupon brought to Boldero, who, thinking that it had been made payable at his house, under that mistake cancelled the acceptance, but presently, observing the mistake, wrote under it, "cancelled by mistake," and signed his initials to it, yet nevertheless paid the bill for the honour of the plaintiff, whose indorsement was on it:—Held, that the plaintiff, on proof of such cancellation by mistake, might recover upon the bill against prior indorsers. Raper v. Birchbeck, 15 East, 17.

A defendant, in discharge of a debt to the plaintiff, indorsed bills to him, which had been drawn and indorsed to the defendant by parties in France, but were accepted by a person in this country, and payable at a banker's here; the plaintiff indorsed them over. On their being presented for payment, the banker's clerk inadvertently cancelled the acceptances, but immediately wrote opposite to them, "cancelled by mistake," and the bills were not, however, paid, there being no effects. The holders then presented them at a house to which they were addressed in case of need, but that house refused payment in consequence of the cancelling, they would otherwise have honoured them. A re-acceptance was obtained from the acceptor, but he did not pay the bills. The plaintiff then took them up and returned them, regularly protested, to the defendant, who applied to the prior indorsers for payment, but they refused. The defendant, who resided abroad, cited the drawers, the intermediate indorsers, and the plaintiff before the Tribunal of Commerce at Lyons, for the purpose of obtaining a guarantee for himself against liability on the bills. That court adjudged him and the other parties, except the plaintiff, discharged from liability, and decreed that the bills should remain to the plaintiff's debit. The plaintiff then carried the cause to a court of appeal in France, which confirmed this decree, assigning as a reason that the cancelling of the acceptances operated as a suspension of legal remedies against the acceptor, and was equivalent to a delay granted him by the holders, with whom the plaintiff was identified, and, consequently, that the other parties to the bills were discharged:—Held, that the French courts had mistaken the law of England as to the effect of the cancellation, and, therefore, that the defendant was still liable at the plaintiff's suit for the debt in respect of which the bills were given, notwithstanding the decree. Novelli v. Rossi, 2 B. & Ad. 757.

A. was holder of a foreign bill, drawn upon B.

himself to be insolvent, ordered C. not to pay the bill; whereupon C. wrote thereon, "Cancelled by mistake, orders not to pay," and the bill was returned in this state to D. at the clearing-house before the settling hour. It is the usage in the trade in London so to cancel bills intended to be paid, and where a cancellation has occurred through mistake to indicate the same by writing on the bill:—Held, that no legal liability was cast upon C., from which a promise could be inferred that he would pay the bill, or return it, without having cancelled or destroyed the acceptance. Warwick v. Rogers, 5 M. & G. 340; 6 Scott, N. H. 1; 13 L. J., C. P. 113.

That the duty cast upon C. was no more than to take due care of the bill, and if he did not choose to pay it to return it uncanceled, unless it had been cancelled by mistake, and in that case to indicate the same by writing on the bill. Id.

That C. did use due care to prevent the acceptance from being defaced. Id.

That the acceptance was an acceptance defaced and cancelled in point of fact, but that it was an acceptance cancelled by mistake. Id.

By Letter.]—S., a merchant at Trieste, in November, 1841, drew upon D. & Co. merchants at Liverpool, several bills in two parts, and requested them to accept and send them to Glyn & Co., their London bankers, and directed that the bills were to be held by them at the disposition of the holders of the seconds. The seconds were negotiated at Trieste, and were addressed at the foot to D. & Co., payable in London, the firsts with Glyn & Co. D. & Co. wrote across the bills a memorandum of acceptance, and transmitted them to Glyn & Co., to be held at the disposition of the holders of the seconds; and by letters, of the 3rd and 8th December, informed S. of what they had done. At the time the firsts were so remitted to D. & Co. S. had sent seconds to F. & Co. at Paris to be discounted, but they declined to discount them; and the seconds were returned to S. on the 8th and 13th December, and were then cancelled by him. On the 4th December, S. wrote to Glyn & Co. requesting them to hand to D. & Co. all the firsts so drawn by him upon them, and handed to Glyn & Co. as before mentioned. He also wrote to D. & Co. to request them to instruct Glyn & Co. to return all the firsts which remained in their hands. On 7th December, S. wrote to D. & Co. that he had annulled the previous instructions to Glyn & Co., and he requested D. & Co. to replace the firsts in the hands of Glyn & Co., to be held as before. On 15th December, Glyn & Co. remitted the bills to D. & Co., pursuant to the letter of the 4th; and D. & Co. on the 16th cancelled the acceptances. On 18th December, D. & Co., after the receipt of the letter of 7th December, wrote as follows:—"As we stated on 16th, the firsts of your drafts, which Glyn & Co. returned to us, were immediately canderived from a valuable consideration, the indorsee having no knowledge of the correspondence, except that S. represented to them that the firsts had been accepted:—Held, in an action by the holder against D. & Co. on these alleged seconds, that their acceptances had been cancelled by the letter on 4th December being acted upon according to the intention of the drawer, and that the subsequent indorsements of the new seconds to the holder conferred no right against D. & Co. Ralli v. Demastous, 6 Ex. 483; 20 L. J., Ex. 278.

By Parol.]—The holder of a bill may discharge the acceptor by parol, but for this purpose, the words must amount to an absolute renunciation or waiver of all claim upon him in respect of the bill. Whalley v. Tricker, 1 Camp. 35.

A liability on a bill may be discharged by parol, whether between immediate or intermediate parties, and the same rule applies to notes. Foster v. Dawber, 6 Ex. 839; 20 L. J., Ex. 385.

Plea of.]—Action on a bill drawn by W. upon and accepted by the defendant, payable to the order of W., and by him indorsed to the plaintiff. A plea, that after the defendant accepted the bill, and before it became due, and before it was indorsed to the plaintiff, W. waived the acceptance, and exonerated and discharged the defendant from the payment, and that no person ever gave or received any consideration for the indorsement, and another plea was in the same terms, except that it concluded with an averment that the bill was indorsed to the plaintiff after it became due, are respectively bad for not shewing that W. was the holder of the bill at the time of the alleged waiver by him. Harmer v. Steele (in error), 4 Ex. 1; 19 L. J., Ex. 34—Ex. Ch.; S. C. (in court below), 14 M. & W. 831; 3 D. & L. 508; 15 L. J., Ex. 217, affirmed.

It is no objection to the negotiability of a bill, that during its currency it has become the property of one of its acceptors. Ib.

But where the liability to sue on a bill, and the right to receive payment, concur in one of three joint acceptors at the time when the bill becomes due, that will operate as a payment and performance of the contract of acceptance as to all the acceptors, so as to prevent any action afterwards being brought upon that contract. Ib.

IX. PRESENTMENT FOR PAYMENT.

1. NECESSITY FOR.

Acceptor without Effects in his Hands.]—Although, on the day before a bill becomes due, the holder applies to the drawee, who informs him that he has no effects of the drawer's in his hands, but that they will probably be supplied before the next day, and on that day the drawer informs him that he will endeavour to provide effects, and will call upon him again, it does not supersede the necessity of a presentment on that day. Pridmore v. Collier, 2 Stark. 57.

Presentment to the acceptor is not excused as between the drawer's indorsee, and the indorsee of such indorsee, by the mere fact that the drawer had not, at the time when the presentment should have been made, any effects in the hands of. A bill drawn by W. C. upon J. C. was accepted by the latter payable at the plaintiffs' bank, and the bill was subsequently indorsed by W. C. to the plaintiffs, and on the day when it became due there were no assets of J. C.'s in the bank:—Held, in an action by the indorsees against the indorser, that it was not necessary to shew a presentment of the bill to the acceptor. Bailey v. Porter, 14 M. & W. 44; 14 L. J., Ex. 244.

—Accommodation Bill.]—Want of effects in the hands of the acceptor excuses the indorsee of an accommodation bill from presenting it for payment, as well as from giving notice of dishonour to the drawer. Terry v. Parker, 1 N. & P. 752; 6 A. & E. 502; W., W. & D. 303.

To Agent in absence of Acceptor.]—If the drawee goes abroad, leaving an agent in England, with power to accept bills, a bill so accepted must, when due, be presented to the agent for payment, if the drawee continues absent. Philips v. Astling, 2 Taunt. 206.

Acceptance for Honour.]—An acceptance for honour is conditional only, and therefore presentment for payment must be made to the drawee at maturity; even in the case of a bill payable after sight. Williams v. Germaine, 7 B. & C. 468; 1 M. & R. 394.

The acceptors of a foreign bill, who, after presentment to the drawee for acceptance, and refusal by them to accept, and protest for non-acceptance, accept the same for the honour of the first indorsers, are not liable on such acceptance, unless there has been a presentment of the bill to the drawee for payment, and a protest for non-payment. Hoare v. Casenove, 16 East, 391.

In Case of Guarantors.]—Where a person, not party to a bill, guarantees the payment by the acceptor, he is not entitled to require proof of the presentment. Hutchcock v. Humphrey, 5 M. & G. 559; 6 Scott, N. R. 540.

So where a party guarantees the payment of a note, if it is not duly honoured and paid by the maker according to its tenor and effect, he is liable on his guarantee if the note is not paid by the maker when due, without any presentment to him for that purpose. Walton v. Mascall, 18 M. & W. 462; 3 D. & L. 410.

Where a holder of a bill duly presents it for payment at the place named in a special acceptance on the bill when indorsed to him, but which turns out to be a forgery, a previous party to the bill is not bound by such presentment, unless it is shewn that the acceptance was on the bill when indorsed by him. There is no presumption as against him that such was the case. Wotton v. Hodd, 2 C. L. R. 848; 18 Jur. 630.

After a bill, to which a forged special acceptance had been added, had been duly presented for payment at the place named in the acceptance, and dishonoured, the defendant, who had drawn and indorsed the bill, admitted that the signatures were his:—Held, no admission of his liability, or of the sufficiency as against him of the presentment. Ib.

Note Payable a Month after Demand.]—On a note payable a month after demand, a presentment for demand is unnecessary. Dodd v. Gill, 3 F. & F. 261.

2. WHEN.

Within Reasonable Time.]—The law with regard to time for the presentation of a note, payable on demand, requires that the presentation for payment should be made within a reasonable time—that is, a period reasonable with reference to the circumstances connected with each particular case. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London and China v. Dickson, 3 L. R., P. C. 574.

Where, therefore, a note, dated the 16th of February, 1864, and indorsed, though made payable on demand, but the payment of which was not contemplated by the makers at any immediate or specific date, was not presented to the payee for payment until the 14th of December in the same year—Held, that as the note was meant to be, to a greater or less extent, a continuing security, the delay in presentation was not unreasonable, and the holders of the note were entitled to recover. Id:

Allowance of Three Days' Grace.]—Three days' grace are allowed on inland and foreign notes, as well as on bills. Brown v. Harraden, 4 T. R. 148. And see Ward v. Honeywood, 1 Dougl. 61.

Three days' grace are allowed on a note payable to A., without adding, "or to his order," "or to bearer." Smith v. Kendall, 6 T. R. 123; 1 Esp. 231.

A presentment for payment on the day before the bill becomes due, allowing days of grace, is premature. Wiffen v. Roberts, 1 Esp. 261.

The three days' grace allowed by the custom of merchants is allowable on bills drawn and payable in Scotland, the limitation of an action on such a bill therefore only begins to run from the third or last day of grace. Ferguson v. Douglas, 6 Bro. P. C. 276.

The maker of a note payable by instalments is entitled to days of grace upon the falling due of each instalment. Oridge v. Sherborne, 11 M. & W. 374.

It would seem that days of grace are allowed on bills payable at sight, see Dixon v. Nuttall, 1 C., M. & R. 307; 6 C. & P. 320; Janson v. Thomas, 3 Dougl. 421; Bayley on Bills, 79.

By Acceptor for Honour after refusal of Acceptance and Protest of Bill payable at sight.]—A bill payable after sight, having been refused acceptance and protested, was accepted eight days after by a person for the honour of the drawer; when at maturity, according to that acceptance, it was presented for payment to the drawee and the acceptor for honour:—Held, these presentments for payment were made at a proper time. Williams v. Germaine, 7 B. & C. 468; 1 M. & R. 394.

Payable so many days after sight.]—A bill, payable sixty days after sight, becomes due sixty days after acceptance, or after protest for non-acceptance. Campbell v. French (in error), 6 T. R. 200; 2 H. Bl. 163.

Notice.]—A holder is entitled to know on the very day on which the bill becomes due whether it is to be paid or dishonoured. Cocks v. Masterman, 4 M. & R. 676; 9 B. & C. 902.

Therefore, where the bankers of the drawee pay the amount to the holder on the day the bill becomes due, and on the following day discover the acceptance to be a forgery, and give the holder notice of the fact, they cannot recover back the amount from the holder. Id.

To an action for goods the defendant pleaded that he transferred to the plaintiff notes by L. & Co., which he accepted on account of the debt, and that he did not, within a reasonable time, present them. Replication, that on the day before the transfer, and without the plaintiff's knowledge, L. & Co. became and were bankrupts, and that they continued such bankrupts, and unable to pay the notes; that before a reasonable time for presentment, the plaintiff discovered the bankruptcy, and that within a reasonable time after such discovery he gave the defendant notice of the premises, and offered to return the notes. Rejoinder, that the plaintiff did not give the notice till after the expiration of a reasonable time for presenting the notes for payment:—Held, that the plaintiff was only bound to give such notice within a reasonable time after he acquired the knowledge, and not necessarily before the expiration of the time for presentment. Robson v. Oliver, 10 Q. B. 704; 16 L. J., Q. B. 437; 11 Jur. 1056.

In the time for the presentment of a bill, the day of presentment is exclusive. Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. 254.

What constitutes Laches.]—Where A. in Yorkshire, on the 26th December, received a bill payable in London, which became due on the 28th, and kept it in his own hands until the 29th, when he sent it by post to his bankers at Lincoln, who duly forwarded it to London for presentment, and the bill was dishonoured:—Held, that by keeping it in his hands until the 29th, he was guilty of laches. Anderton v. Beck, 16 East, 248.

A bill drawn on Leghorn was not presented in due time, owing to the political state of the country at that time, which rendered it impossible to present it:—Held, that it being afterwards presented for payment with due diligence, and refused for want of presentation at the time when it was due, the holder might recover against the antecedent parties. Patience v. Twonley, 2 Smith, 223.

Where a bill payable on demand is taken in payment for goods, it is not necessary to present it the same day on which it is received. Appleton v. Sweetapple, 3 Dougl. 137; Bayl. Bills, 192.

Within what Hours.]—A presentment of a bill at a counting-house (where it is made payable) between six and seven o'clock in the evening, is sufficient. Morgan v. Davison, 1 Stark. 114.

Or at eight in the evening, at the house of a merchant in London. Barclay v. Bailey, 2 Camp. 527.

Or at the same hour, at the office of an attorney, and that in the month of February. Triggs v. Newnham, 10 Moore, 249; 1 C. & P. 631.

A presentment of a bill for payment at a house in London, where it is made payable, at eight o'clock in the evening of the day when it becomes due, is sufficient to charge the drawer, although at that time the house was shut up, and no person there to pay the bill. Wilkins v. Jadis, 2 B. & Ad. 188; 1 M. & Rob. 41.

Within Banking Hours.—The holder of a bill accepted, payable at a banker's, impliedly agrees to present it for payment within the usual banking hours. Parker v. Gordon, 7 East, 385; 3 Smith, 358; 6 Esp. 41; S. P., Jamieson v. Swinton, 2 Taunt. 224; 2 Camp. 373. See also cases under BANK AND BANKER.

After Banking Hours.—But presentment of a bill after the usual hours is sufficient, provided there is somebody at the place, who sees the bill, or gives an answer; otherwise it will not be sufficient. Henry v. Lee, 2 Chit. 124. See also Bynner v. Russell, 7 Moore, 267; 1 Bing. 23; Hill v. Heap, D. & R., N. P. C. 57.

So, a presentment at the banking-house where payable, after banking hours, is sufficient, if a person is stationed at the banking-house, and returns for answer, no orders. Garnett v. Woodcock, 6 M. & S. 44; 1 Stark. 475.

A banker is not bound to pay after banking hours a bill which is accepted payable at his house. The presentment in the evening by the notary's clerk is not a presentment for payment. Whitaker v. Bank of England, 6 C. & P. 700; 1 C., M. & R. 744; 5 Tyr. 268; 1 Gale, 54.

A presentment at a banking-house after banking hours, when the house is shut, is not sufficient to charge the drawer; and no inference is to be drawn from the circumstance of the bill being presented by a notary, that it had been before presented within banking hours. Elford v. Teed, 1 M. & S. 28.

Where a bill was drawn and accepted for the accommodation of the indorser, which was not duly presented for payment when due, by reason that the bill having been accepted, payable at a banking-house, was not presented till after banking hours, when the answer given to the holder was "no effects;" and the indorser applied to the indorsee, after declaration, for further time to make payment of the bill; which declaration alleged the fact, that the bill was duly presented for payment:—Held, that it was evidence of a waiver of the objection, with notice of the fact, of which he had the means of informing himself. Hopley v. Dufresne, 15 East, 275.

3. TO WHOM AND WHERE.

a. Bills of Exchange.

What Sufficient—Generally.—A bill was presented for payment at the door of the house where the drawee was described as living, to a lodger who was coming from the passage of the house into the street. The drawee had removed to another residence, known to the occupier of the house, but not to the lodger; and it was not shewn that he had left funds for payment:—Held, that the presentment was sufficient to maintain the affirmative of an issue raised on the due presentment of the bill in an action against an indorser. Buston or Buckstone v. Jones, 1 M. & G. 83; 1 Scott, N. R. 19.

If a bill is accepted, payable at a particular place, and the acceptor dies before it becomes due, it is sufficient, in an action against the drawer, to prove presentment at the specified place; and it is not necessary to shew presentment at the house of the deceased's representative. Philpott v. Bryant, 1 M. & P. 754; 4 Bing. 717; 3 C. & P. 244.

Presentment of a bill payable at Messrs. A. B. & Co., who are bankers in London, to their clerks at the clearing-house, is sufficient. Reynolds v. Chettle, 2 Camp. 596; S. P., Robson v. Bennett, 2 Taunt. 388.

To Drawer's Order in London.—An acceptance of a bill drawn payable to the drawer's order in London, is a general acceptance; and a special presentment need not be alleged or proved. Faile v. Bird, 6 B. & C. 531; 9 D. & R. 639; 2 C. & P. 303.

Nor need proof of presentment for payment in London, or of excuse for non-presentment in London, be given. Selby v. Eden, 3 Bing. 611; 11 Moore, 511.

Where a bill, drawn with the words, "pay to my order in London," in the body of the bill, and directed to the drawees payable in London, was accepted at J. L. & Co., bankers in London:—Held, that a presentment at J. L. & Co.'s was necessary to charge the drawer, although by the statute such an acceptance is general; and that the circumstance of the drawer having negotiated it after such acceptance made no difference. Gibbs v. Mather, 2 C. & J. 254; 2 Tyr. 189; 8 Bing. 214; 1 M. & Scott, 387—Ex. Ch.

At particular Bank.—An indorsee declared against acceptor, alleging the bill to be "payable at Messrs. C. & Co.'s, bankers, London," and omitting to aver presentment at that place:—Held, that presentment at the particular place was unnecessary, and need not be averred. Halstead v. Skelton, 5 Q. B. 86; D. & M. 665; 2 D., N. S. 961; 13 L. J., Q. B. 177; 7 Jur. 680—Ex. Ch.

Presentation at Place mentioned in Address instead of at Place named in Acceptance.

—A bill was drawn by G. on H., H.'s name in the address being followed by the mention of a particular place; he accepted the bill payable at another place named in the acceptance, not adding "only," nor "not otherwise or elsewhere." G. indorsed to the defendant, who indorsed to the plaintiff, who, at maturity, presented the bill at the place named in the address, but not at the place named in the acceptance:—Held, that he could not sue the defendant on the bill, the presentment being insufficient, 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78, putting an end to the necessity of presentment at the place named in the acceptance as against the acceptor only. Saul v. Jones, 1 El. & El. 59; 28 L. J., Q. B. 37; 5 Jur., N. S. 220; 7 W. R. 47.

Sufficiency of Pleading.—In a declaration on a bill payable by the acceptor at the house of S. P. & S., an averment of presentment at the house of S. P. & S. is sufficient, without averring a presentment to the acceptor, or to S. P. & S. Hawkey v. Borwick, 4 Bing. 135; 12 Moore, 478.

Where an acceptor accepts, payable at a banker's, it is not necessary, since 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78, in an action against the drawer, to allege that the bill was presented to the acceptor in person, if there is an averment that it was duly presented at the banker's. De Bergareche v. Pullin, 3 Bing. 476; 11 Moore, 350.

Where a bill is drawn payable to the order of the drawer, at a particular place, semble, that a declaration against the drawer or indorser alleging a presentment generally, is sufficient after verdict. Lyon v. Holt, 5 M. & W. 250; 2 H. & H. 41.

In an action against an indorser, though it is necessary to prove a presentment at the place pointed out by the acceptance, it is not necessary to allege in the declaration that the bill was accepted at that place; though, if such special acceptance is stated, there must be a corresponding allegation of presentment. Parker v. Ade, 1 D. P. C. 643; S. C., nom. Parker v. Edge, 1 C. & M. 429; S. C., nom. Parke v. Edge, 3 Tyr. 364.

In an action by indorsee against drawer of a bill payable in London, the venue being laid in London, an allegation of presentment is a sufficient allegation of a presentment in London. Boydell v. Harkness, 3 C. B. 168; 4 D. & L. 179; 15 L. J., C. P. 233.

In an action by an indorsee against drawer of a bill accepted by T. & G. at a London bankers', the declaration did not state the acceptance at all, but stated that it was presented to T. & G. for payment, and that they refused to pay. The proof was, presentment of the bill at maturity at the clearing-house to the clerk of the London bankers' named in the acceptance:—Held, that, as the declaration did not state the acceptance, the place fixed by the acceptors was sufficiently proved, and that the London bankers were agents for that purpose to the acceptors. Harris v. Packer, 3 Tyr. 370, n.

Evidence as to.]—In an action on a bill, drawn upon "P. P., No. 6, Budge Row," and accepted by him, an averment that the bill, when due, was presented and shewn to P. P. for payment, is supported by proof that the holder went to 6, Budge Row, to present it, but found the house shut up, and no one there. Hine v. Allely, 4 B. & Ad. 624; 1 N. & M. 433.

Where a bill is addressed to a drawee at his residence, and is accepted by him, payable at a bank, in an action against an indorser, presentment at the bank must be proved; and the want of such presentment is not excused by there being no effects of the acceptor in the bank. Saul v. Jones, 1 El. & Bl. 59; 28 L. J., Q. B. 37; 5 Jur., N. S. 220; 7 W. R. 47.

What a Variance.]—In an action by indorsee against drawer, the declaration stated the bill to have been accepted payable at a banker's in London, and averred a presentment to the acceptor there:—Held, no variance, though by 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78, such acceptance is general only. Wilmott v. Williams, 8 Scott, N. R. 713; 7 M. & G. 1017; 14 L. J., C. P. 33; 8 Jur. 987.

Held, also, that the averment was proved by shewing a presentment at the particular place, without shewing that the acceptor was there. Ib.

b. Promissory Notes.

Place mentioned in Memorandum outside Body of Note.]—A memorandum at the foot, or in the margin, of a note indicating a particular place of payment, forms no part of the contract, though shewn to be contemporaneous with the note itself. Williams v. Waring, 5 M. & R. 9; 10 B. & C. 2; S. P., Exon v. Russell, 4 M. & S. 506; Price v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 200.

At Place named in Note itself.]—A note, promising to pay on demand at a particular place, must be presented, and a demand of payment made at that place, unless the makers discharge the holder from the presentment and demand; and the presentment and demand must be alleged unless a discharge is shewn. Bowes v. Howe (in error), 5 Taunt. 30.

But if the makers (who had become insolvent) shut up and abandoned their shop, that is evidence of a declaration to all the world of their refusal to pay their notes there. Howe v. Bowes, 16 East, 112.

If a note is payable at a particular house, a demand of payment at that house is a demand on the maker. Saunderson v. Judge, 2 H. Bl. 509.

A. makes a note payable to B. or order, with a memorandum upon it that it will be paid at the house of C., who is A.'s banker; in the course of business the note is indorsed to C.; in an action by C. against the indorser, it is not necessary to prove an actual demand on A. Ib.

A note, described in the body of it as "payable on the last day of October. At A. B.'s," must be presented at the place named; and the latter words are not to be treated as a mere memorandum, because separated from the former by a full point. Vander Donckt v. Thellusson, 8 C. B. 812; 19 L. J., C. P. 12; S. P., Emblin v. Dartnell, 12 M. & W. 830; 1 D. & L. 1010; 13 L. J., Ex. 255.

If a particular house is mentioned in the body of a note, a presentment there is necessary even to charge the maker. Sanderson v. Bowes, 14 East, 500; S. P., Roche v. Campbell, 3 Camp. 247.

At either of two Places.]—If a country banker's note is payable both in the country and in town, and the holder only presents it in London, it is no defence that he might, with more convenience, have presented it in the country, where it would have been paid. Beeching v. Gower, Holt, 313.

What Constitutes a Note payable at a particular Place.]—A note in the following form—

"Three months after date, I promise to pay to my own order the sum of 65*l*. J. A. B."

"Payable at Messrs. W. & P.'s."

Indorsed "J. A. B.," is not a note payable at a particular place. Masters v. Baretto, 8 C. B. 433; 2 C. & K. 715; 19 L. J., C. P. 50; 13 Jur. 1124.

The words "payable at Messrs. A. B.," written beneath the body of a note, constitute a memorandum only, and do not form part of the contract, so as to render presentment at the place mentioned necessary. Ib.

A note payable to the order of the maker, and by him indorsed in blank, may be treated as a note payable to bearer, and notwithstanding there is a memorandum at the foot of the note indicating a particular place of payment. Ib.

Payable at Sight.]—An action is not maintainable on the following note:—"I promise to pay to D. or bearer, on demand, 16*l*. at sight;" without a presentment at sight. Dixon v. Nottall, 1 C. & M. & R. 307; 6 C. & P. 320; 4 Tyr. 1013.

A note was in the following form:—"I promise to pay, three months after sight, D. W., or order, 400*l*., with interest:—"Held, that a presentment of a note for payment of the interest was "at sight." Way v. Bassett, 5 Hare, 55; 15 L. J., Ch. 1; 10 Jur. 89.

Sufficiency of Pleading.—A declaration stated that the defendant made his note, and thereby promised to pay to the plaintiff, "by the name and addition of Miss Jessie Hope, at 10, Duncan-street, Edinburgh," 200*l*. That the plaintiff was always ready and willing to receive the sum according to the tenor and effect of the note; of which the defendant had notice. Breach, non-payment:—Held, a note payable at a particular place, and that the declaration was bad for want of an averment of presentment at that place. Spindler v. Grellett, 1 Ex. 384; 5 D. & L. 191; 17 L. J., Ex. 6.

In a declaration against drawer and acceptor of a bill accepted for honour, it is necessary to aver that presentment for payment was made to the drawee. Williams v. Germaine, 7 B. & C. 468; 1 M. & R. 394-403.

Action on a note by payee against the executrix of the maker. Declaration averring the note was payable at a particular place, an excuse for non-presentment there, as there were no assets, is insufficient. Quinn v. Fitzgerald, 1 Ir. C. L. R. 552.

In an action by payee against maker of a note payable at "No. 11, Old Slip," the declaration stated that when the note became due the plaintiff was ready and willing in due manner to present the note at No. 11, Old Slip, for payment, and then and there to demand of the defendant, and demanded payment accordingly; but he was then absent from and not to be found there, and had clandestinely departed and absconded thence, without leaving or having left any effects or any means or provision there for the payment of the note; and the defendant did not pay the note when it became due:—Held, that the declaration failed to disclose a cause of action, by reason of the note not having been presented according to its exigency, and no sufficient legal excuse being shewn for the omission. Sands v. Clarke, 8 C. B. 751; 19 L. J., C. P. 84; 14 Jur. 352.

Evidence as to.—A presentment of a note payable at G., at a banker's at G., the maker being absent from G. when the note became due, is sufficient evidence of a presentment to the maker at G., as alleged in the declaration. Hardy v. Woodroffe, 2 Stark. 319.

In an action against maker of a note, when the fact of presentment is traversed, it is competent to the plaintiff to prove the presentment by an admission of the defendant that the money was due, and that he would pay it by instalments, as such admission is prima facie evidence that all the requisites for rendering the defendant liable on the note have been complied with. Crown v. Worthen, 5 M. & W. 5; 2 H. & H. 12; 3 Jur. 290.

X. NOTICE OF DISHONOUR.

1. NECESSITY FOR.

a. No Effects.

Of Drawer in Hands of Drawee.—Notice of dishonour need not be given to the drawer, when he had no effects in the hands of the drawee, either at the time of drawing the bill, or when it became due. Bickerdike v. Bollman, 1 T. R. 405; S. P.; Clegge v. Cotton, 3 B. & P. 239.

If the drawer has no effects in the hands of the drawee, though the indorser has, the former is not entitled to notice. Walwyn v. St. Quintin, 1 B. & P. 652; 2 Esp. 515.

An indorser who has given no consideration for a bill, and knows that the drawer has no effects in the hands of the drawee, is not entitled to notice of non-payment. Sisson v. Tomlinson, 1 Selw. N. P. 346.

It is no excuse for not giving notice to the indorsee of a bill that the acceptor had no effects. Wilkes v. Jacks, Peake, 202.

Nor that there was an understanding between the drawee and drawer, that the latter should provide for the bill. Staples v. Okines, 1 Esp. 332; S. P., Nicholson v. Gouthit, 2 H. Bl. 609.

When Drawer has reasonable Expectation that Bill will be Honoured.—If the drawer has no effects in the hands of the drawee, and no reasonable grounds to expect that the bill will be honoured, he is not entitled to notice. Legge v. Thorpe, 12 East, 171; 2 Camp. 310; S. P., France v. Lucy, R. & M. 341.

But it is otherwise if the drawer has reasonable expectation of having assets in the hands of the drawee, as by having shipped goods on his own account, which were on their way to the drawee, but without the bill of lading or invoice. Rucker v. Hiller, 16 East, 43; 3 Camp. 217; S. P., Robbins v. Gibson, 3 Camp. 334; 1 M. & S. 188.

A drawer, who has no effects in the hands of the drawee, except that he has supplied him with goods upon credit, which credit does not expire until long after the bill would become due, is not discharged by want of notice of the dishonour. Claridge v. Dalton, 4 M. & S. 226.

Nor is the indorser of a note, when there are no effects in the maker's hands. Corney v. Mendez da Costa, 1 Esp. 302.

Where the drawer had no effects in the hands of the acceptor, from the time of drawing until the bill became due; but, previously to the delivery of the bill, had given some acceptances of his, upon which the acceptor had raised money, part of which acceptances had been returned dishonoured, and others were outstanding:—Held, that the drawer was entitled to notice of its dishonour by the acceptor. Spooner v. Gardiner, R. & M. 84.

Where Drawer has some Effects in Hands of Drawee.—And if the drawer has any effects in the hands of the drawee, at any time between the drawing the bill and its becoming due, he is entitled to notice. Hammond v. Dufrene, 3 Camp. 145.

If the drawer, at the time of presentment, has effects, but is indebted to the drawee to a larger amount, and they, without his privity, have appropriated the effects in their hands to the satisfaction of the debt, he is entitled to notice. Blackham v. Doren, 2 Camp. 503.

Where Drawer has suffered no Injury.—To a statement of defence, in action against an indorser of a bill, setting up the absence of notice of dishonour, the plaintiff replied that neither at the time when the bill was drawn, nor afterwards, nor when it became due and on present-

On Bankruptcy of Acceptor.]—Bankruptcy of the acceptor does not dispense with notice to the drawer. Boulthée v. Stubbs, 18 Ves. 21.

—Of Drawer.]—The holder of a bill, falling due and being dishonoured after the bankruptcy of the drawer, is bound to use due diligence in giving notice to the bankrupt or his assignees of the dishonour. Johnson, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & Chit. 438; 1 Mont. & Ayr. 622.

Where indorsers had full knowledge of the bankruptcy of the drawer, and of the insolvency of the acceptor, before and at the time when the bill became due; and, within a day after notice might (but for a mistake of the holders) in due course have reached them from the holders, communicated such their knowledge to the bankers in Liverpool, with whom they had before discounted the bill, and who had transmitted it to the holders in London:—Held, that it did not dispense with such holders giving notice of the dishonour in due time to the indorsers. Esdale v. Sowerby, 11 East, 114.

A drawer of a bill became bankrupt, and absconded before it was due, but his house remained open, in the possession of the messenger under a commission issued against him, for some time after the bill became due, and before that time the holder of the bill had notice that A. and B. were chosen assignees of the bankrupt's estate. The acceptor also became bankrupt before the bill was due, and when due it was dishonoured. The holder did not give notice of the dishonour to the drawer, or leave it at his house, nor did he make any attempt to give such notice to the assignees of the drawer:—Held, that the drawer was discharged. Rhode, Ex parte, 1 Mont. & Mac. 431; S. C., Rhode v. Proctor, 6 D. & R. 510; 4 B. & C. 517.

Notice of a dishonoured bill to a bankrupt, as drawer, before the choice of assignees, is good. Moline, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 216.

A., the agent in America of B. in England, drew a bill upon him, and indorsed it to C., also residing in America, who indorsed it over. Before the bill became due, A., having reason to believe that B. would fail, lodged property belonging to B. in the hands of C. to answer the bill in case it should be returned, C. undertaking to restore the same whenever it should appear that he was exonerated from the bill: acceptance and payment of the bill were refused, but no notice was given to A.:—Held, that A. was discharged. Clegg v. Cotton, 3 B. & P. 239.

To Guarantor.]—A party who guarantees the payment of a bill or note, if not paid at maturity by the acceptor or maker, is not entitled to notice of dishonour. Walton v. Mascall, 13 M. & W. 72; 2 D. & L. 470; S. P., Hitchcock v. Humfrey, 5 M. & G. 559; 6 Scott, N. R. 540.

Upon a guarantee of the price of goods, to be paid for by a bill, due notice of the non-payment of the bill must be given both to the drawer and person who guarantees, unless both drawer and acceptor are bankrupts when the bill becomes due. Philips v. Astling, 2 Taunt. 206.

W., a broker, sold twenty bags of wool for H. to C., to be paid for by a bill accepted by the latter; and offered to his employer, for an allowance of one per cent., to guarantee half the amount: H. confirmed the sale, and informed him, W., that if he could not procure from C. acceptances of approved houses, they would take his guarantee on the terms proposed: the wool was delivered without the intervention of the broker, and the acceptance of the vendees taken for the amount, payable at a banker's; before the bill was at maturity, the vendees became insolvent, and the vendors resorted to the broker upon his guarantee:—Held, that the latter was liable on such guarantee, though the bill had not been presented for payment, and though there was no proof that it would not have been paid if presented, and supposing it to have been presented and dishonoured, he would not have been entitled to notice of non-payment. Holborrow v. Wilkins, 2 D. & R. 59; 1 B. & C. 10.

Bill or Note specially Payable.]—In an action against the drawer of a bill, payable at a particular place, it is no defence that no notice of the dishonour has been given to the acceptor. Edwards v. Dick, 4 B. & A. 212.

The acceptor of a bill, having made it payable at Messrs. C. & Co.'s, and not having sufficient effects in their hands to pay the bill when it became due, is not entitled to notice of its dishonour, and it is doubtful, whether, in the case of such an acceptance, any notice whatever is necessary. Smith v. Thatcher, 4 B. & A. 200.

And afterwards held, that in an action against the acceptor, on a bill payable at a banker's, it is not necessary to prove notice of non-payment to him. Treacher v. Hinton, 4 B. & A. 413.

So, upon a note payable at a banking-house, it is not necessary to prove that the banker had notice of its dishonour. Pearse v. Pemberthy, 3 Camp. 261.

Ignorance of Place of Residence.]—Ignorance of the place of residence of the drawer is a sufficient answer to an objection arising out of the want of notice of dishonour provided due diligence is used to discover his place of residence. Browning v. Kinnear, Gow, 81. And see Williams v. Germaine, 7 B. & C. 469; 1 M. & R. 394.

Whether the holder has used due diligence to find out the place of residence is a question of fact to be left to the jury. Bateman v. Joseph, 12 East, 433; 2 Camp. 468.

It is not enough to shew that the holder, being ignorant of the drawer's residence, made inquiries upon the subject at the place where the bill was payable. Beveridge v. Burgis, 3 Camp. 262.

But where the ignorance of residence arises from the drawer having, a few days before the bill was due, stated to the holder that he had no regular place of abode, and that he would call and see if the bill was paid by the acceptor, he is not entitled to notice. Phipson v. Kneller, 4 Camp. 285; 1 Stark. 116.

If notice of dishonour sent to the drawer arrives too late through misdirection, it is for the jury to say whether the holder used due diligence to find the drawer's address. Siggers v. Brown, 1 M. & Rob. 520.

An indorsee not knowing the indorser's address, employed his attorney to discover it and give notice of dishonour. The attorney discovered the address one day, consulted his client the second, and gave notice the third:—Held, a valid notice. Firth v. Thrush, 2 M. & R. 359; 8 B. & C. 387.

An indorsee, ignorant of the drawer's address, and so unable to give him notice of dishonour, is bound to make inquiry for the address promptly on the bill being dishonoured, if he means to hold the drawer liable. Chapcott v. Carlewis, 2 M. & Rob. 484.

At the trial of an action by indorsee against drawer, he traversed the notice of dishonour; the bill was not produced, but it appeared that it was drawn on the 16th of May, payable at three months; that on the 22nd August it came to the plaintiff's hands in due course, from London, and not knowing the drawer's address he wrote for it to another indorsee, and on the day he received an answer sent a notice of dishonour to the drawer:—Held, sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding for the plaintiff. Dixon v. Johnson, 1 Jur., N. S. 70.

When notice of dishonour reaches the drawer of a bill too late, having first, by mistake, been sent to a wrong person, and such mistake arose from the indistinctness of the drawer's writing on the bill, he is not discharged. Hewitt v. Thompson, 1 M. & Rob. 541.

Absence from Residence.—The holder of an overdue bill went during business hours to the counting-house of the drawer, for the purpose of giving notice of dishonour, and, finding the counting-house shut, he knocked at the door, and no one answering he came away without leaving any notice:—Held, that these facts did not support an allegation of due notice, but were equivalent to a dispensation with notice, and ought to have been so pleaded. Allen v. Edmundson, 2 Ex. 719; 2 C. & K. 547; 17 L. J., Ex. 291.

Knowledge that Bill will be Dishonoured.—Knowledge of the probability, however strong, that a bill will be dishonoured, cannot operate as a notice of dishonour, or dispense with it. Cawnt v. Thompson, 7 C. B. 400; 6 D. & L. 621; 18 L. J., C. P. 125; 13 Jur. 495.

But knowledge that the bill has been dishonoured, where the drawer is himself the party who is to pay the bill (as executor of the acceptor), does amount to notice. Ib.

Notice that Bill has been Destroyed.—The drawer who before it becomes due receives notice that it was accidentally destroyed, and is called upon to give another in its stead according to 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 17, s. 3, is nevertheless entitled to notice, though the drawee was insolvent. Thackray v. Blackett, 3 Camp. 164.

Several Bills in the Hands of same Owner.—If there are several bills in the hands of the same owner, becoming due on different days, the drawer is entitled to notice as to each, though the drawee was only indebted to him to an amount less than any one of the bills. Ib.

Bill drawn by Firm on one Partner.—Where a bill is drawn by a firm upon one of the partners, who accepts it, notice to the drawers is unnecessary. Porthouse v. Parker, 1 Camp. 82. And see Jacaud v. French, 12 East, 317.

Where Instrument is Imperfect.—A vendee of goods gave in payment an instrument purporting to be a bill, but it was written on a paper which had not affixed to it a sufficient stamp. It was not paid by the acceptor, but the vendor (the indorsee of the bill) did not give any notice of dishonour to the vendee, who was the indorser:—Held, that the instrument being of no value for want of a sufficient stamp, notice of dishonour was unnecessary. Cundy v. Marriott, 1 B. & Ad. 696. See Pimley v. Westley, 2 Bing. N. C. 249; 2 Scott, 423; 1 Hodges, 324.

Drawers and Acceptors having same Bankers.—Persons who were bankers both for drawers and acceptor, and had received the bill from the drawers, and given credit for it in an account current between them, before the bill became due received directions from the acceptor to stop the payment of it at the place of payment, and did so accordingly:—Held, that they were not bound to give notice of this circumstance to the drawers, but upon non-payment of the bill might look to the drawers, notwithstanding they had not given such notice; and that they were not bound to apply the money of the acceptor in their hands in discharge of the bill; but if the drawers had become bankrupt, it would have constituted an item in the account between them and the bankers. Crosse v. Smith, 1 M. & S. 545.

2. BY AND TO WHOM.

By Agent.—The holder may take advantage of a notice of dishonour given by any party who is himself liable to be sued on the bill, and would on paying it be entitled to reimbursement; provided such notice is given in sufficient time to maintain the action if that party was suing on the bill. Harrison v. Ruscoe, 15 M. & W. 231; 15 L. J., Ex. 110; 10 Jur. 142.

A notice of dishonour given by an agent need not state on whose behalf it is given; and if the agent through mistake states it to be given on behalf of a wrong party, this will not avoid the notice, but only place the party giving it in the same situation with respect to him to whom it was given as if the representation relative to the person giving the notice was true. Ib.

A bill was placed in the hands of an agent for the purpose of receiving payment:—Held, that he was sufficiently authorized to give notice of dishonour on behalf of the holder. Rouse v. Tipper, 13 C. B. 249; 22 L. J., C. P. 135; 17 Jur. 440.

To Agent.—Semble, that if a man makes another his agent for the purpose of indorsing the bill, he also makes him his agent for the purpose of receiving notice of dishonour, and that a notice given to him will be good. Firth v. Thrush, 2 M. & R. 359; 8 B. & C. 387.

A foreign bill, which had been protested against the acceptor, was taken by the notary's clerk, with the notary's ticket attached to it, shewing a charge for acting and protesting, to the drawer's place of business, and there presented to the drawer's clerk for payment. The drawer's clerk took it into his hand, said the drawer was out and had left no orders; thereupon the notary's clerk left the usual notice that the bill lay at his office for payment. In an action on the bill against the drawer:—Held, that sufficient notice of dishonour had been given to the drawer. Viale v. Michael, 30 L. T. 453.

To Indorsers.—Indorsers of a bill are entitled to have actual notice of dishonour by drawer and acceptor. Leeds Banking Company, In re, Prange, Ex parte, 1 L. R., Eq. 1; 35 L. J., Ch. 33; 11 Jur., N. S. 920; 13 L. T. 314; 14 W. R. 43.

One who without consideration, but without fraud, indorses a bill in which both the holder and acceptor are fictitious persons, is entitled to notice of dishonour. Leach v. Hewitt, 4 Taunt. 731.

To Indorsees.]—The holder of a bill may, in an action against the drawer, avail himself of a notice of dishonour, given in due time by any party to the bill, who at the time of giving such notice was under liability to him. Lysaght v. Bryant, 9 C. B. 46; 19 L. J., C. P. 160; 2 C. & K. 1016; S. P., Chapman v. Keane, 3 A. & E. 193; 4 N. & M. 607.

A bill was indorsed to a branch of the National Provincial Bank of England, at Portmadoc, who sent it to the Pwllheli branch of the same bank, who indorsed it to the head establishment in London:—Held, that each of the branch banks was to be considered independent indorsees, and each entitled to notice of dishonour. Clode v. Bayley, 12 M. & W. 51; 13 L. J., Ex. 17; 7 Jur. 1092.

To Drawer who has become Bankrupt.]—It is sufficient for the holder of a dishonoured bill to give notice of dishonour to the drawer himself, even though before the dishonour he has been adjudicated a bankrupt, and a trustee of his property has been appointed. Baker, Ex parte, Bellman, In re, 4 Ch. D. 795; 46 L. J., Bk. 60; 36 L. T. 339; 25 W. R. 454—C. A.

To Partner.]—Where a drawer is one of the partners of a firm by which it is accepted, the notice which any one of the partners of the firm receives of its dishonour, is notice sufficient to bind the partner who is the drawer. Hills v. Thorowgood, 2 H. & W. 102; S. P., Porthouse v. Parker, 1 Camp. 82.

To Person not a Party to Bill.]—A person who is a stranger to the transaction by not being a party to a bill or note, is not entitled to notice of dishonour. Swinyard v. Bowles, 5 M. & S. 62; S. P., Warrington v. Furber, 8 East, 242; 6 Esp. 89.

A., residing at New York, having ordered goods of B., residing at Birmingham, sent to B., on account of the goods, a bill drawn by C., in New York, upon D., in London, payable to the order of B., but not indorsed by A. B., through his bankers, presented the bill for acceptance to D., who refused to accept, but no notice of the non-acceptance was given until the day of payment, when the bill was presented for payment, and dishonoured. C., the drawer, became bankrupt before the bill reached B.'s hands, and never had any funds in the hands of D., the drawee, to meet the bill. In an action by B. against his bankers for neglecting to give notice of the non-acceptance:—Held, that A., not having indorsed the bill, was not entitled to notice of dishonour, and remained liable to B. for the amount of the goods; that C., the drawer, never having had any funds in the hands of D., the drawee, was likewise not entitled to notice; and therefore, that B. could not recover the full amount of the bill, but only such damages as he had sustained by being delayed in pursuit of his remedy against the drawer. Van Wart v. Woolley, 5 D. & R. 374; 3 B. & C. 439; R. & M. 4.

To Surety.]—One who has indorsed a bill as surety is entitled to notice of its dishonour although given for the purpose of raising funds for a company in which he (as well as the holder of it) is a shareholder. Maltass v. Siddle, 6 C. B., N. S. 494; 28 L. J., C. P. 257; 5 Jur., N. S. 1169; 33 L. T., O. S. 124; 7 W. R. 449.

3. SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE.

Generally.]—A notice of dishonour should at least inform the party, either by express terms or by necessary implication, that the bill has been dishonoured, and that the holder looks to him for payment of the amount. Solarte v. Palmer, 5 M. & P. 475; 7 Bing. 530; 1 Tyr. 371; 1 C. & J. 417—Ex. Ch.; S. C., 1 Bing. N. C. 194; 1 Scott, 1, in H. L.

Therefore, where the attorney of the holder of a bill, the day after it had been dishonoured, sent a letter to the indorser, stating that a bill for 683*l.*, drawn by J. K. upon D., J. & Co., bearing the indorsement of the person to whom the letter was addressed, had been put into the hands of the attorney by the holder, with directions to take legal measures for the recovery thereof, unless immediately paid to the attorney:—Held, not to be a sufficient notice of the dishonour, to enable the holder to recover against the indorser in an action upon the bill. Ib.

A notice of dishonour should shew directly, or by necessary implication, first, that the bill has been presented; secondly, that it has not been paid; and thirdly, that the party to whom the notice is given is looked to for payment. East v. Smith, 2 B. C. Rep. 23; 4 D. & L. 744; 16 L. J. Q. B. 292; 11 Jur. 412.

After the bill has in fact been dishonoured, a notice of dishonour given by a party to the bill in terms unequivocally asserting the dishonour, is valid, although the party giving the notice had no certain knowledge of the fact of dishonour. Jennings v. Roberts, 4 El. & Bl. 615; 24 L. J., C. P. 102; 1 Jur., N. S. 401.

Holders of a bill, having presented it for payment to the acceptor without effect, gave notice of the dishonour to the drawers, who lived at a distance, but informed them at the same time, that, having reason to believe that a friend of the acceptor's would take it up in a few days, they would, in order to save expense, hold the bill till the latter end of the week, unless they heard from the drawers to the contrary:—Held, that such notice gave the holders a remedy upon the bill against the drawers, though no further notice of non-payment was given to them at the end of the week. Forster v. Jurdison, 16 East, 105.

Form of.]—The holder of a bill, on the day after it became due, called at the office of J., the drawer, and on being told that he was engaged, wrote on a scrap of paper, and sent in to him the following notice: "B.'s acceptance to J., 500*l.*, due 12th January, is unpaid; payment to Roberts & Co. is requested before four o'clock:—Held, that the notice was sufficient. Paul v. Joel, 4 H. & N. 355; 28 L. J., Ex. 143; 5 Jur., N. S. 603; 32 L. T., O. S. 336; 7 W. R. 287—Ex. Ch.

In an action by an indorsee against an indorser of a note, the following letter from the plaintiff to the defendant is an insufficient notice:—"This is to inform you that the bill I took of you, 15*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, is not took up, and 4*s.* 6*d.* expense, and the money I must pay immediately. My son will be in London on Friday morning." Messenger v. Southey, 1 M. & G. 76; 8 D. P. C. 594; 1 Scott, N. R. 180.

A notice of dishonour of a note in the following words:—"Sir, I am desired by Mr. H. to give you notice that a promissory note, dated August the 10th, 1835, made by S. T. for 99l. 18s., payable to your order two months after date, became due yesterday, and has been returned unpaid; and I have to request that you will please remit the amount thereof, with 1s. 6d. noting, free of postage, by return of post," is sufficient. Hedger v. Stevenson, 2 M. & W. 799; M. & H. 176; 1 Jur. 989.

The following is a sufficient notice to the drawer:—"Your bill drawn on T. T., and accepted by him, is this day returned with charges, to which we request your immediate attention." Grugon v. Smith, 2 N. & P. 303; 6 A. & E. 499; W., W. & D. 516.

"The note for 200l., drawn by H. H., dated the 18th July last, payable three months after date, and indorsed by you, became due yesterday, and is returned to me unpaid. I therefore request you will let me have the amount forthwith," is not sufficient notice. Boulton v. Welch, 3 Bing. N. C. 688; 4 Scott, 425; 3 Hodges, 77; 1 Jur. 263.

Noticé by holder to indorser of the dishonour of a bill by acceptor in these terms:—"Messrs. H. are surprised to hear that Messrs. G.'s bill was returned to the holder unpaid," followed by a visit from the indorser to the holder on the same day, in which he expressed his regret, and promised that he would write to the other parties, by whom, or by himself, the bill should be paid, is sufficient to render him liable. Houlditch v. Cauty, 4 Bing. N. C. 411; 6 Scott, 209; 1 Arn. 162.

Notices of dishonour in the following words:—"This is to give you notice, that a bill drawn by you, and accepted by Josiah Bateman, for 47l. 18s. 9d., due July 19th, 1835, is unpaid, and lies due at Mr. Furze's, 65, Fleet Street." "A bill for 29l. 17s. 3d., drawn by Ward on Hunt, due yesterday, is unpaid; and I am sorry to say, the person at whose house it is made payable don't speak very favourably of the acceptor's punctuality. I should like to see you upon it to-day." "William Howard's acceptance for 21l. 4s. 4d., due on Saturday, is unpaid; he has promised to pay it in a week or ten days. I shall be glad to see you upon it as early as possible;" are insufficient. Furze v. Sharwood, 2 G. & D. 116; 2 Q. B. 388; 6 Jur. 554.

But a notice as follows:—"I hereby give you notice, that a bill of exchange for 50l. at three months after date, by A. upon and accepted by B., and indorsed by you, lies at &c., dishonoured," is sufficient, without any further intimation that the plaintiff looked to the defendant for payment. King v. Bickley, 2 Q. B. 419; 6 Jur. 582.

No notice as follows:—"Your draft upon C. for 50l., due 3rd March, is returned to us unpaid, and if not taken up this day, proceedings will be taken against you for the recovery thereof," is sufficient. Robson v. Curlewis, 2 Q. B. 421; 3 G. & D. 69; Car. & M. 378.

The following letter from indorsee to indorser is a good notice:—"We beg to inform you that your indorsement of J. O.'s acceptance of 40l., due the 17th June, 1842, remains due, with interest and expenses, as also other bills, and to which we request your immediate attention. B. & Co." Bailey v. Porter, 14 M. & W. 44; 14 L. J., Ex. 244.

So, "We beg to acquaint you with the non-payment of W. M.'s acceptance to J. W.'s draft of 29th December last, at four months, 50l., amounting with expenses to 50l. 5s. 1d., which remit us in course of post without fail, or pay to Messrs. E." Everard v. Watson, 1 El. & Bl. 801; 22 L. J., Q. B. 222; 17 Jur. 762.

It is sufficient notice of dishonour to the indorser of a note if a person acting for the holder informs him that the note has been presented and dishonoured, though he does not add that the indorser will be looked to for payment, and though at the time of such notice he inquires of the indorser where the maker resides. Chard v. For, 14 Q. B. 200; 13 Jur. 960.

A notice of dishonour given by the holder of a bill need not inform the party addressed that the holder looks to him for payment. Furze v. Sharwood, 2 G. & D. 116; 2 Q. B. 388; 6 Jur. 554; S. P., Miers v. Brown, 11 M. & W. 372; 12 L. J., Ex. 290.

But it must inform him that the bill has been presented to the acceptor. Id.

Mere Demand of Money.—It is not sufficient for the letter merely to demand the money of the drawer, and leave him to infer from that circumstance that the bill has been dishonoured. Hartley v. Case, 6 D. & R. 505; 4 B. & C. 339; 1 C. & P. 555.

Presentment of Bill not Mentioned.—A notice that a bill "has been dishonoured" is sufficient, although it does not state that the bill has been presented. Stocken v. Collins, 9 C. & P. 653.

The words "returned," "dishonoured," and "come back with notarial charges," imply that a bill has been presented and refused payment. Strange v. Price, 2 P. & D. 278; 10 A. & E. 125; 3 Jur. 361.

Unsigned.—The following notice was sent to a drawer:—"5th January, 1847. I am the holder of a bill drawn by you on L. Mendelssohn for 98l. 15s., which became due yesterday, and is unpaid; and I have to state, that, unless the same is paid to me immediately, I shall take proceedings against you without delay for the amount." At the foot was added, "noting, 5s." There was no signature to the notice, but the person who delivered it informed the drawer from whom it came:—"Held, that this notice conveyed sufficient intimation to the drawer that the bill had been presented and dishonoured, and that the holder looked to him for payment." Armstrong v. Christiani, 5 C. B. 687; 17 L. J., C. P. 181.

A bank being indorsee of a bill, a notice of dishonour, headed with the name of the bank, is sufficient, though it has no signature at the foot. Mazwell v. Brain, 10 Jur., N. S. 777; 10 L. T. 301; 12 W. R. 688.

Not Shewing on whose Behalf.—A bill, indorsed in blank, was left by the indorsee at the office of R., an attorney, to be presented by him. On being presented by R. it was dishonoured. R. wrote to the drawer on the following day, describing the bill, and stating that it was dishonoured, and subscribed his name and residence to the letter:—"Held, a sufficient notice of dishonour, though he did not state on whose behalf he applied, or where the bill was lying." Woodthorpe v. Lawes, 2 M. & W. 109; 2 Gale, 193.

that the bill has not been paid. It is sufficient if the fact is stated in such terms that men of business may reasonably infer that it has not been paid. Bain v. Gregory, 14 L. T. 601; 14 W. R. 845.

Foreign Bill—Protest not Mentioned.]—Though a foreign bill must be presented by a notary public and protested, to render the drawer liable, notice to the drawer that the bill has been "duly presented for payment and dishonoured," is sufficient without specific notice of protest. Lowenthal, Ex parte, Lowenthal, In re, 9 L. R. Ch. 591; 43 L. J., Bk. 83; 30 L. T. 668.

Bill dishonoured Abroad.]—When an English bill is dishonoured abroad, it is not always necessary to give the notice of dishonour required by the law of England; the notice of dishonour is such notice as can be reasonably required. Hirachfield v. Smith, 1 L. R., C. P. 340; 35 L. J., C. P. 177; 12 Jur. N. S. 523; 14 L. T. 886; 14 W. R. 435; 1 H. & R. 284.

A bill was drawn in England payable to the drawer's order, directed to and accepted by the drawee in France, payable in France, and was indorsed by the drawer in blank and delivered to the defendant in England, and by him indorsed in blank and delivered to the plaintiff in England, who indorsed and delivered it to B. in France, where it was duly presented and dishonoured:—Held, that, in an action on the bill in England, against an indorser indorsing in England, notice of dishonour good according to the law of France was due notice of dishonour according to the law of England. Id.

Misdescription of Instrument.]—A notice of dishonour is not vitiated by a misdescription of the bill which could not mislead the party receiving the notice in respect of the bill intended. Bromage v. Vaughan, 9 Q. B. 608; 16 L. J., Q. B. 10; 10 Jur. 982.

Therefore, a notice to the drawer describing the bill correctly as to date, amount and parties, but stating it to be payable at the London and Westminster Bank, whereas it was made payable at the London Joint Stock Bank, and there was no evidence that the drawer had been in fact misled thereby, is sufficient. Id.

In an action by first indorsee against drawer, in order to prove notice of dishonour, a letter from the plaintiff to the defendant stating the fact, but erroneously describing the defendant as acceptor and the acceptor as drawer, is a sufficient notice. Mellersh v. Rippen, 7 Ex. 578; 21 L. J., Ex. 222; 16 Jur. 366.

A bill having been dishonoured, a person from the holder went in due time to the residence of the drawer, and there left his own card and address, indorsed "Bill for 30*l.*, drawn by S. on W., dishonoured, lies due as on the other side." The bill was not lying there, but at the residence of the holder, who had other bill transactions with the drawer:—Held, a sufficient notice. Howlands v. Springett, 14 M. & W. 7; 14 L. J., Ex. 227; 9 Jur. 358.

A bill having been drawn upon A. was accepted by him, and was afterwards indorsed by the drawer to the plaintiffs, who indorsed it to the Birmingham and Midland Counties Bank.

the bank, who gave notice to the plaintiffs, one of whom wrote the following letter to the drawer:—"Dear Sir,—To my surprise I have received an intimation from the Birmingham and Midland Counties Bank, that your draft on A. is dishonoured, and I have requested them to proceed on the same:—"Held, that if there was more than one bill to which the letter could apply, it lay upon the defendant to prove that fact, in order to shew its uncertainty. Shelton v. Brattkucite, 7 M. & W. 436; 5 Jur. 28.

To prove notice of dishonour of a bill for 53*l.*, dated 19th of Dec., 1842, evidence was given that a letter was sent to the defendant asking payment of 53*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*, "due on your dishonoured note dated 19th of Dec. last."—Held, sufficient, although the instrument dishonoured was a bill, and not a note, and was for 53*l.*, and not for 53*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*, unless it appeared that there was some other instrument to which the notice could apply; and the proof of the existence of such other instrument lay on the defendant. Stokman v. Parr, 1 C. & K. 41; 11 M. & W. 809; 12 L. J., Ex. 415; 7 Jur. 886.

When in a notice the name of the acceptor was wrongly stated, but the notice was correct in other respects:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the defendant was thereby deceived, and that being found in the negative, that the verdict should be entered for the plaintiff. Harpman v. Child, 1 F. & F. 652.

4. WHERE GIVEN.

Bill indorsed Abroad—Notice given at Indorser's Residence in England.]—Where a bill is indorsed abroad, yet if the usual residence of the indorser is in England, and his absence only temporary, notice of the non-payment of the bill given at his usual place of residence is sufficient. Cromwell v. Hyson, 2 Esp. 511.

By Letter addressed "London" when Bill similarly Dated.]—Where a party drew a bill, dating it generally "London," on a party also resident in London, whose address was stated in the bill:—Held, that proof that a letter, containing notice of dishonour, was put into the post-office, addressed to the drawer at "London," was evidence to go to the jury that he had due notice of dishonour. Clarke v. Sharpe, 3 M. & W. 166; 1 H. & H. 35.

A bill was drawn dated "London," but not otherwise giving the address of the drawer. It was directed to and accepted by "Captain Barron, 27, Savile Row." In an action by an indorsee against the drawer on an issue denying notice of dishonour, the plaintiff proved that he put a letter into the post addressed to the drawer "London." The drawer gave evidence that he had not received the letter, that he was a clerk in the Admiralty and lived at Chelsea, and that this might have been ascertained by inquiry of the acceptor, who was his brother. No such inquiry had ever been made.—Held, that the fact that the holder had sent a letter to the defendant addressed as he had dated the bill was evidence on which a jury would be warranted in finding that due diligence had been used to give notice of dishonour, though no inquiry had been made of the acceptor. Burmeister v. Barron, 17 Q. B. 828; 21 L. J., Q. B. 135; 16 Jur. 314.

To Counting-house.]—Sending a verbal notice of dishonour to a merchant's counting-house is sufficient; and if no person is there in the ordinary hours of business, it is not necessary to leave or send a written one. Goldsmith v. Bland, Bayl. Bills, 224.

A notice given at the counting-house of a merchant or manufacturer, between the hours of six and seven in the evening, is not too late. Bancroft v. Hall, Holt, 476.

Notice to the drawers by sending to their counting-house, during the hours of business, on two successive days, knocking there, and making noise sufficient to be heard by persons within, and waiting there several minutes, the inner door of the counting-house being locked, is sufficient, without leaving a notice in writing, or sending by the post, though some of the drawers live at a small distance from the place. Crosse v. Smith, 1 M. & S. 545.

To House where Defendant Lodged.]—A copy of a letter, containing notice of dishonour of a bill, delivered at the house in which the defendant lodged, is sufficient notice. Stedman v. Gooch, 1 Esp. 4.

— By Letter imperfectly Addressed.]—A holder of a bill having asked the acceptor on the last of the days of grace if he was going to pay the bill, was told by him that the drawer would pay it, and that he had not a shilling. The holder did not formally present the bill to the acceptor, but sent on the same day, by post, a notice to the drawer that the bill was not paid, which notice was addressed to the drawer at "Edwards-street, Hampstead-road;" he had a lodging at 28, Edwards-street, but the notice never reached him. The bill was dated from "London" only:—Held, that there was no impediment to the action, either for a want of a sufficient presentment for payment or a sufficient notice of dishonour. Renwick v. Tighe, 8 W. R. 391.

At Banking-house where Bill made Payable.]—Presentation at the banking-house where a bill was made payable "in case of need" by the indorsers, is not notice of dishonour to the indorsers. Leeds Banking Company, In re, Prange, Ex parte, 1 L. R. Eq. 1; 35 L. J., Ch. 33; 11 Jur., N. S. 920; 13 L. T. 314; 14 W. R. 43.

At Place which Defendant has held out as his Place of Business.]—A bill for the amount of goods supplied to a company by the plaintiff was accepted by the manager for the company, and indorsed by two directors as sureties. The company soon after became embarrassed, and was in the course of being wound up when the bill became due. The bill was dishonoured, and notice of dishonour was sent to the defendant, one of the indorsers, addressed to the office of the company, which did not reach him in due time. The plaintiff made inquiries as to his address, but not at the office of the company. The jury found that he had done all that he reasonably could do for the purpose of finding out the address of the defendant:—Held, that the notice of dishonour was sufficient, as the defendant must be taken to have held out the office of the company as his place of business for that transaction. Berridge v. Fitzgerald, 4 L. R., Q. B. 639; 38 L. J., Q. B., 335; 10 B. & S. 668.

5. TRANSMISSION BY POST.

Inland Bills.—When Postage actually Proved.]

—Notice of dishonour is sufficiently given by proving that a letter was regularly put into the post, informing the party of the fact. Kufh v. Weston, 3 Esp. 54.

And putting a letter in the post-office to the indorser in proper time, informing him that the maker had not paid a note when due, is sufficient evidence of notice to the indorser. Saunderson v. Judge, 2 H. Bl. 509.

In an action by indorsee against drawer, it is enough to shew, to the satisfaction of the jury, that the letter containing the notice of dishonour was posted in such time as that, by the due and usual course of the post, it would be delivered on the proper day. Stocken v. Collin, 7 M. & W. 515; 9 C. & P. 653.

The post-office mark is not conclusive of the time when a letter is posted. Id.

In an action against indorser, issue was joined as to notice of dishonour. A letter containing the notice was put into the post on the day on which the action was commenced, and by the routine of the post-office would reach the defendant between four and five o'clock in the afternoon of that day. No further evidence was given as to the time of notice. The offices of the court were open only till five in the afternoon of the day in question:—Held, that the plaintiff must fail, it lying on him to shew that the right of action was complete before the suit was commenced. Castrique v. Bernabo, 6 Q. B. 498; 14 L. J., Q. B. 3; 9 Jur. 130.

A notice of dishonour posted by the holder on the day on which he is bound to give such notice is good, although by the mistake at the post-office it is not delivered to the party entitled to such notice until some time afterwards. Woodcock v. Houldsworth, 16 M. & W. 124; 16 L. J., Ex. 49; S. P., Dobree v. Eastwood, 3 C. & P. 250.

Where notice of dishonour by the acceptor in London was sent by the post to the holder in Manchester, where the letter was delivered out between eight and nine in the morning, and the post went out for Liverpool, where the drawer lived, between twelve and one, and the holder did not send notice to the drawer by the post either of the same day or the next, but sent it in a letter by a private person on the latter day, who did not deliver it to the drawer till two hours after the post delivery, and only about one hour before the post left Liverpool for London:—Held, that at all events the holder had made the bill his own by his laches, and that he should have written by the post of the next day after notice received by him. Darbishire v. Parker, 6 East, 3; 1 Smith, 195.

— Mistake of Postmaster.]—Where a postmaster agrees to deliver letters in a particular mode, and by mistake omits to deliver one for two days, which contains a returned bill, he is not liable in damages for the amount of the bill, if the plaintiff could give notice of dishonour in time, by sending a special messenger for that purpose, though he might be too late to do so by post. Hordern v. Dalton, 1 C. & P. 181.

—When Postage cannot be directly Proved.]

—But it is not sufficient prima facie evidence of a letter being sent by the post, that it was written by a merchant in his counting-house, and put upon a table for the purpose of being carried thence to the post-office, and that, by the course of business in the counting-house, all letters deposited on this table were carried to the post-office by a porter. Hetherington v. Kemp, 4 Camp. 193. And see Toovy v. Williams, M. & M. 123.

But if the porter had been called, and he had said that although he had no recollection of the letter in question, he invariably carried to the post-office all the letters found upon the table, that might have done; but mere general evidence of the course of business in the counting-house is not sufficient. Ib.

The plaintiff's clerk proved that the letter giving notice of the dishonour of a bill was copied by him on the Monday into a book kept for that purpose; and said, that by the course of business at their house, all letters copied into that book were sent to the post-office in the evening of the day on which they were so copied, but that he himself did not carry the letter in question to the post, it being the duty of one of the other clerks to do so:—Held, not sufficient evidence that the letter was sent. Hawkes v. Salter, 4 Bing. 715; 1 M. & P. 750.

Foreign Bills.—It is sufficient if notice of a bill drawn in England on a person in the East Indies, being dishonoured, is sent to England by the first direct and regular mode of conveyance, whether it is by an English or a foreign ship; the holder is not bound to send such notice by the accidental, though earlier conveyance of a foreign ship, not destined to this country. Mulman v. D'Eugino, 2 H. Bl. 565.

6. WITHIN WHAT TIME.

What is a Reasonable Time.—What will be deemed a reasonable time for notice of dishonour, must depend upon the circumstances of the case, and is a question of law arising out of the facts. Tindal v. Brown, 1 T. R. 167; 2 T. R. 186.

Although it was at one time doubtful whether the question of reasonable notice was not a question of fact to be submitted to the jury under all the circumstances of the case. Hilton v. Shepherd, 6 East, 14, n.; S. P., Hopes v. Alder, 6 East, 16.

The general rule as to what will be a reasonable notice seems to be, that, with respect to persons living in the same town, the notice must be given by the next day. Darbishire v. Parker, 6 East, 3; 1 Smith, 195; S. P., Smith v. Mullett, 2 Camp. 208.

And with regard to persons living at different places, that a party, in order to avoid laches, must give notice by the next post—which does not mean the next possible post, but the next post at which it would be reasonably practicable to give notice. Williams v. Smith, 2 B. & A. 496.

A bill indorsed in blank, and deposited by the holder with his bankers, became due on Saturday, and was presented for payment about two o'clock on that day; payment being refused, the bill was noted and again presented between nine and ten in the evening by a notary: on Monday the bankers informed the holder that the bill was dishonoured, who on Tuesday about noon gave notice to the indorser; the holder lived at Knightsbridge, and the indorser in Tottenham-court Road:—Held, that this notice was sufficient to entitle the holder to recover against the indorser. Hoyes v. Birks, 3 B. & P. 599.

Notice of non-payment given by an indorsee, living in Holborn, to an indorser living at Islington, by nine on the night of the day following the day on which the indorsee knew it, is reasonable notice. Jameson v. Swinton, 2 Taunt. 224; 2 Camp. 373.

The holder of a bill received due notice of dishonour, and wrote a letter the same day to the indorser, stating the fact, but the letter was not received till the following day:—Held, a sufficient notice to the indorser. Poole v. Dicus, 1 Scott, 600; 1 Hodges, 162.

Indorsee of a note, the day after it had been dishonoured, wrote to the payee and indorser, who lived in the same city, a letter containing a notice of dishonour, which letter was put into the twopenny post before 8 P.M. on that day, but was not delivered till the day after, of which it bore the postmark 8 A.M.:—Held, that the notice was not in time. Edmonds v. Cates, 2 Jur. 183.

Upon a bill being dishonoured, A. paid the same for the honour of one of the indorsees, resident abroad, and communicated with him in due course of post, before giving notice of dishonour to the drawer. In an action by A. against the drawer:—Held, that the notice of dishonour was given in time. Goodhall v. Polhill, 1 C. B. 233; 14 L. J., C. P. 146; 9 Jur. 554.

A bill drawn by the defendant was indorsed by him to S. & Co., who carried on business in partnership at Smethwick, four miles from Birmingham, by them to the Birmingham and Midland Counties Bank, and by them to W. It became due on the 17th August, and was dishonoured. On the 18th, W. returned it to the bank at Birmingham, who received it on the 19th. S. had previously given directions at the bank that all communications for his firm should be made to him at Tremadoc, in Carnarvonshire (in which neighbourhood he was engaged in mining concerns). The bank accordingly, on the 20th August, sent notice of dishonour by post to S. at Tremadoc, which he received there on the 21st, and by the post of the 22nd he sent notice to the defendant:—Held, that the notice to S. & Co., and therefore that to the defendant, was duly given. Shelton v. Braithwaite, 8 M. & W. 252.

The holder, in order to charge an earlier party to a bill by notice of dishonour from himself, must send him the notice as promptly as if to his own immediate indorser. Rowe v. Tipper, 22 L. J., C. P. 135; 17 Jur. 440; 13 C. B. 249.

A bill indorsed by A. to B., and by B. to C., became due on Saturday, November 15th, and was presented, and dishonoured. C. gave notice of dishonour to B. on Monday, the 17th, and to A. on the following day; B. having given no notice. In an action by C. against A.:—Held, that the notice was too late. Ib.

The law that one clear day is to be allowed for each step in communications between parties in dealing with bills, cannot be extended, so as to allow any further time for communications between an agent and his principal in reference to any step. Leeds Banking Company, In re, Prange, Ex parte, 1 L. R., Eq. 1; 35 L. J., Ch. 33; 11 Jur., N. S. 920; 13 L. T. 314; 14 W. R. 43.

The holders of a bill, through their agents in London, presented it at the bank at which it was made payable by the acceptor; and it being dishonoured, they further presented it at the bank at which it had been indorsed payable, "in case of need," by indorsers of the bill; there also it was dishonoured. The agents, on the same day, sent the bill by post to the holders in Liverpool, who, on the day but one following, sent it to the indorsers:—Held, that no sufficient notice of dishonour was given in the first instance, and that the actual notice was a day too late. Ib.

A party receiving notice of dishonour need not give notice to the person above him till the next post after the day on which he himself receives the notice, although he might easily give it that day, and there is no post the day following. Grill v. Jeremy, M. & M. 61.

A bill due on the 4th was presented for payment that day by the payees' bankers. On the 5th it was returned dishonoured to the payees, who, in the course of the 6th, sent a letter to the drawer by the twopenny post:—Held, that this was sufficient notice. Scott v. Lifford, 9 East, 347; 1 Camp. 246.

It is sufficient if the letter conveying the notice is proved to have been put into a receiving-house at such an hour, that, according to the course of the post, it would be delivered on the day in which the party was entitled to notice. Hilton v. Fairclough, 2 Camp. 633.

But it is not sufficient where the party received notice on the 20th, and gave notice by letter put into the post on the evening of the 21st, but so late that it was not delivered until the morning of the 22nd. Smith v. Mullett, 2 Camp. 208.

A bill was presented for payment at a banking-house in London, where it was made payable on the 25th, when it was dishonoured; but, under a doubt whether the presentment was not made too early on that day, it was again presented shortly before five o'clock on the 26th, and again dishonoured; it was returned to the indorser in London, on that day, and notice sent of the dishonour by the post of the 27th, into the country, where the indorser lived:—Held, that this was due diligence and due notice of the dishonour. Langdale v. Trimmer, 15 East, 291.

A bill drawn on and accepted by W. and indorsed to S., and by S. indorsed to the plaintiff, was presented to the acceptor for payment at maturity and dishonoured. All the parties to the bill lived in London. The morning after its dishonour the plaintiff, who did not know where the drawer lived, applied to S. for information on the point. S. was from home, but at half-past five in the afternoon, the plaintiff went to him again, and having obtained the address of the drawer, posted his notice of dishonour the same evening, but not till after six o'clock. The consequence was that it was not received that night, as it would have been in the ordinary course of post if posted before six o'clock. In an action by the plaintiff against the drawer, the jury found that he had exercised a reasonable amount of diligence in giving notice of dishonour:—Held, that although it was not given in sufficient time to reach the drawer on the day after the bill had been dishonoured, it was not, under the circumstances, too late. Gladwell v. Turner, 5 L. R., Ex. 59; 39 L. J., Ex. 31; 21 L. T. 674; 18 W. R. 317.

Sunday intervening.—B., the plaintiff's agent at Sunderland, having occasion to remit money to the plaintiff, paid the amount into the defendant's bank at Sunderland, and received a bill indorsed by the defendant, which he, B., indorsed and transmitted to the plaintiff. The bill fell due on Saturday, October 31st, and was dishonoured. On that day the plaintiff wrote to B. a letter, which B. received on the Monday, containing the following:—"I have also to apprise you that the draft for 33l. 14s., due the 1st November [Sunday], has been duly presented this day and returned dishonoured, probably it may be up on Monday; it is drawn on P. & Co.; it will be proper to advise the drawers in case the acceptors do not remit." On the Wednesday following B. gave notice to the defendant of the dishonour:—Held, too late. Miers v. Brown, 11 M. & W. 372; 12 L. J., Ex. 290.

Where a bill was dishonoured on Saturday, in a place where the post went out at half-past nine in the morning:—Held, that it was sufficient notice to send a letter by the following Tuesday morning's post. Hawkes v. Salter, 4 Bing. 715; 1 M. & P. 760.

A bill was presented and dishonoured on the 3rd; on the 4th a letter was written to the plaintiff, informing him of it, which he received on the 6th, being Sunday, and on the Tuesday evening sent notice by the post to the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to open the letter till the Monday morning, and that therefore he had given the defendant notice by the next day's post. Wright v. Shawcross, 2 B. & A. 501, n.

In the Case of Country Banker.—A country banker has an entire day, after receiving notice of the dishonour of a bill payable in London, to transmit the same to his customer, so that notice by the next day's post, though it is not the next post, will be time enough; therefore, where a bill was dishonoured on the 14th, and notice sent by the post to the country bankers on the 15th, which reached them on the morning of the 17th (being Sunday), and they on the next day sent notice by the post to the indorsee, but not before twelve at noon, at which time the post set out for the place where the indorsee resided:—Held, that this notice was within time. Bray v. Hadwen, 5 M. & S. 68.

Where there are numerous Indorsers.—Where a bill passed through the hands of five persons, all of whom lived in London or the neighbourhood, and the bill when due being dishonoured, the holder gave notice on the same day to the fifth indorser, and he on the next day to the fourth, and so in succession to the first; the court was of opinion that due diligence had been used. Hilton v. Shepherd, 6 East, 14, n.

If there are several indorsers, and the last indorsee and holder resorts in the first instance to the first of such indorsers, he is not entitled to as many days as there are indorsers to give notice of dishonour in, but must give it within the same time as he would have been obliged to do it in, if he had resorted at first to his own immediate indorser. Dobree v. Eastwood, 3 C. & P. 250.

It is not enough that the drawer or indorser receives notice in as many days as there are subsequent indorsees, unless it is shewn that each indorser gave notice within a day after receiving it. Marsh v. Marcell, 2 Camp. 210, n.

What an Excuse for Delay.—A bill of exchange drawn in England and payable in Spain, was indorsed in England by the defendant to the plaintiff, who indorsed it to M., residing in Spain. Acceptance having been refused, a delay of twelve days occurred before M. wrote to inform the plaintiff of the dishonour. On receipt from M. of the notice of dishonour, the plaintiff gave immediate notice to the defendant. No notice of dishonour by non-acceptance is required by the law of Spain:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the bill. Horne v. Rouquette, 3 Q. B. D. 514; 39 L. T. 219; 26 W. R. 894—C. A.

— In Case of Jew neglecting to give Notice on Jewish Festival.—As the law of merchants respects the religion of different people, a Hebrew indorsee was held not guilty of laches, who neglected to give notice on the regular day, that day being a festival whereon he was forbidden to attend to secular business. Lindo v. Unsworth, 2 Camp. 602.

— Plaintiff not Knowing Parties to Bill.—The time consumed in making necessary inquiries relative to the parties to a note, is not to be imputed as laches. Thus, where the plaintiff became acquainted with the dishonour on the 5th, and not knowing the parties, notice was not despatched to them till the 16th, the original indorser was still held liable. Baldwin v. Richardson, 2 D. & R. 285; 1 B. & C. 245.

7. WAIVER OF.

Evidence of Acknowledgment of Liability to Pay.—In an action by indorsee against drawer, a letter of his saying, "You know I meant to call upon you immediately after the 24th, with the money. E. G. (the acceptor) is an old and intimate friend of mine," is sufficient evidence of a waiver of presentment and notice of dishonour. Mills v. Gibson, 16 L. J., C. P. 249.

Any acknowledgment by a drawer of his liability to pay, or any promise to pay, the amount, though conditional as to the mode of payment, is evidence to be left to the jury of due notice of dishonour; and, in the case of a foreign bill, of its having been duly protested. Campbell v. Webster, 2 C. B. 258; 15 L. J., C. P. 4; 9 Jur. 992.

On the day after a bill became due, the holder's clerk called upon the drawer, and told him that the bill had been duly presented, and that the acceptor "could not pay it;" to which the drawer replied that "he would see the holder about it:"—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to infer from this conversation that the drawer had due notice of the dishonour. Metcalf v. Richardson, 11 C. B. 1011.

In an action by a second indorsee against drawer, proof that the first indorsee, who had had notice, had consented to a judge's order for staying proceedings against him on payment of debt and costs, and that the drawer had provided the money to pay the amount under that order, is not such evidence of an admission of liability by him as will dispense with proof of notice of dishonour. Hobbes v. Staines, 3 C. & K. 19.

A. drew a bill for 10l. on B., who owed him 20l. The bill was payable on Saturday, the 10th of August. The following Wednesday A. was told by the bankers of C., the holder, that they understood that he, A., had received the money to take up the bill. He said he should keep the money, as B. still owed him 10l., and that he wished the bankers would sue B. on the bill:—Held, evidence to go to the jury that A. had received due notice of dishonour. Jackson v. Collins, 17 L. J., Q. B. 142.

In an action against indorser of a note, payable at twelve months after date, a parol agreement entered into between him and the maker when it was drawn, that it was not to be demanded until estates of the maker had been sold, and that the defendant indorsed such note as a surety only, cannot be received in evidence as a waiver of the notice of its dishonour. Free v. Hawkins, 1 Moore, 535.

The drawer, on being applied to for payment, said, "if the acceptor does not pay, I must; but exhaust all your influence with the acceptor first:" the drawer afterwards directed the applicant to raise the money on the lives of himself and the acceptor:—Held, that this admission was not to be taken as conclusive evidence of the drawer having received or waived notice of dishonour. Hicks v. Beaufort (Duke), 4 Bing. N. C. 229; 5 Scott, 598; 1 Arn. 55; 2 Jur. 255.

The day after a bill had been dishonoured at L., and before the fact of the dishonour could be known at Y., the drawer's clerk called at Y. upon the indorser prior to the holder. A conversation took place as to the bill being likely to come back, and the clerk said, "I suppose there will be no alternative but my taking up the bill, and if you will bring it to S. on Tuesday, I will pay the money." The indorser did not receive either the bill or notice until some days after the Tuesday, and notice of dishonour was not given to the drawer in due time:—Held, that the promise did not dispense with giving due notice of the dishonour to the drawer. Pickin v. Graham, 1 C. & M. 725; 3 Tyr. 923.

The only evidence of a notice of dishonour was a conversation in which the witness said to the drawer, "I think you ought to pay." The drawer said, "I have no other intention, and do not mean to avail myself of the informality of the notice of dishonour:"—Held, to be evidence from which the jury was at liberty to presume due notice of dishonour. Brownell v. Bonney, 4 P. & D. 523; 1 Q. B. 39; 5 Jur. 6.

Notice of dishonour by a maker of a note having been omitted to be given to the indorser, if he writes, in answer to an application for payment, pointing out the hopelessness of suing him, as he had nothing but 7s. 6d. a day, and saying, "Had circumstances been different, you may rest assured no application would have been needed," is not evidence of waiver of notice. Lecann v. Kirkman, 6 Jur., N. S. 17.

A promise to pay the amount of a dishonoured bill made by the indorser to a person applying to him on behalf of the holder, amounts to, and is evidence of, an admission, on the indorser's part, of notice of dishonour. Bartholomew v. Hill, 5 L. T. 756; 10 W. R. 273.

— Application for Time.—In an action by indorsee against drawer, a declaration alleged that the bill was duly presented to the acceptor, that it was dishonoured, and that the drawer had notice. He pleaded that the bill was not presented to the acceptor, and that he had no notice of its dishonour. The bill was presented on the day it became due at the house of the acceptor, and the drawer, to whom it was shewn, said that the acceptor was dead, and that he was his executor, adding a request that it might be allowed to stand over for a few days, and he would see it paid.—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of notice of dishonour to the defendant. Caunt v. Thompson, 7 C. B. 400; 6 D. & L. 621; 18 L. J., C. P. 125; 13 Jur. 495.

An application by the drawer on behalf of the acceptor, for time, is evidence from which a jury may infer that he has authorized an arrangement for renewal, dispensing with notice of dishonour, and after dispensation no notice is necessary. North Staffordshire Loan and Discount Company v. Wythies, 2 F. & F. 563.

An indorser of an overdue bill, who had not notice of dishonour, on being told that the holders were about to take proceedings against him on the bill, and being asked what he was going to do about it, said that he would pay it if they would give him time; this is evidence of a waiver of notice. Woods v. Dean, 3 B. & S. 101; 32 L. J., Q. B. 1; 7 L. T. 561; 11 W. R. 22.

—To Person not Suing upon Bill.—If a party who has not had due notice of dishonour thinks fit to acknowledge his liability, though he does so to a party other than the person who sues upon the bill, that acknowledgment is sufficient to enable the latter to maintain an action on the bill. Raybey v. Gilbert, 6 H. & N. 536; 30 L. J., Ex. 170; 3 L. T. 752; 9 W. R. 386.

A. indorsed a bill to B., who indorsed the same to C. A. had no notice of dishonour. C. brought an action on the bill against A. and B., who allowed judgment to go by default. B. paid the bill and sued A.:—Held, that A., having acknowledged his liability on the bill by suffering judgment by default in an action by C., could not set up the want of a notice of dishonour as an answer to an action by B. Id.

Where Drawer is Bankrupt.—Want of notice to a bankrupt drawer of the dishonour of a bill, may be supplied by evidence of his acknowledgment after the act of bankruptcy, that it would not be paid. Brett v. Levett, 13 East, 213; 1 Rose, 102.

Receipt by drawing Money from Acceptor to meet Bill.—Where the acceptor, a few days before a bill became due, informed the drawer that he should not be able to pay it, and told the drawer he must take it up, and gave him part of the amount to assist him in so doing; and the drawer received the money and promised to take up the bill accordingly:—Held, that in an action by the indorsee against the drawer, the latter might nevertheless set up as a defence that the bill was not duly presented for payment, and that he had not had regular notice of its dishonour. Baker v. Birch, 3 Camp. 107; S. P., Forster v. Jurdison, 16 East, 105.

Receipt by Holder of Part Payment and Second Bill.—Where the holder of a bill, upon its being dishonoured, received part payment, and for the residue another bill, drawn and accepted by persons not parties to the original bill; and afterwards sued the drawer and acceptor upon the original bill:—Held, that it was sufficient for him to prove presentment of the substituted bill to the acceptor for payment, and that it was dishonoured, without proving that he gave notice of the dishonour to the drawer of the substituted bill. Bishop v. Rowe, 3 M. & S. 362.

Conditional Offer to Pay on Discontinuance of Action.—A defendant, having been sued by the plaintiff on a bill of exchange, wrote the following letter to him:—"Without prejudice. I never had any notice of dishonour of this bill, but, if the debt will be accepted without costs, I do not want Mr. Holdsworth to be the loser of it, and I would give a cheque." On the receipt of this letter the plaintiff took out a rule to discontinue the action on payment of costs. The costs were accordingly taxed, but before they were paid another action on the bill was brought. At the trial the letter was admitted as evidence of waiver of notice of dishonour, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff. On a motion to set aside the verdict, on the ground that such evidence was improperly received:—Held, that the letter was a conditional offer to pay the bill on the discontinuance of the action and payment of costs, and that, the condition having been accepted and carried out, it became admissible as evidence of such waiver. Holdsworth v. Dimsdale, 24 L. T. 360; 19 W. R. 798.

Bill obtained by Fraud.—Proof that the drawer knew two days after the maturity of the bill that it was unpaid, and in the hands of a particular indorsee, and objected to pay it on the ground of fraud in the obtaining of it, is evidence to go to a jury that he had received regular notice of dishonour. Wilkins v. Jadis, 2 B. & Ad. 188; 1 M. & Rob. 41.

Mode of Pleading.—Action on two bills by indorsee against his immediate indorser, averring notice of dishonour: the defendant traversed the notice of dishonour. The plaintiff, in order to support the issue, proved that on the day when the first bill became due, the defendant called upon him and told him that he knew neither of the bills would be paid; that it was no use sending him a twopenny post letter the next day to give him notice, as it was not worth the money, and that he would send the plaintiff money in part payment of the bills on a future day:—Held, that this was not evidence of notice of dishonour, but of a dispensation of it, and that it ought to have been so alleged in the declaration. Burch v. Legge, 5 M. & W. 418; 7 D. P. C. 814; 3 Jur. 823.

A count by indorsee against drawer, alleging presentment and dishonour, and due notice thereof to him, is sustained by proof of a subsequent promise by him to pay, notwithstanding it is proved (or admitted) that the due notice of dishonour was not given. And the court will, if necessary, amend the declaration by alleging a waiver of notice. Killby v. Rochussen, 18 C. B., N. S. 357.

A promise to pay by a drawer of a bill after its maturity, is evidence either of due notice of dishonour having been given, or of a waiver of notice; and, if necessary, in such case the court will amend the pleadings. Cordery v. Colvins, 14 C. B., N. S. 374; 32 L. J., C. P. 210; 9 Jur., N. S. 1200; 8 L. T. 245.

8. HOW PROVED.

By Conversation.—If a witness verbally tells the drawer that his bill for 30*l.*, drawn on T., has come back dishonoured, and produces the bill, and points out to the drawer the notary's mark upon it, this is a sufficient notice of dishonour. Phillips v. Gould, 8 C. & P. 355.

An indorsee, three months after a bill became due, demanded payment of the indorser, who first promised to pay it if he would call again with the account, and afterwards said that he had not had regular notice, but as the debt was justly due he would pay it:—Held, that the first conversation, being an absolute promise to pay the bill, was, prima facie, an admission that the bill had been presented to the acceptor for payment in due time, and had been dishonoured, and that due notice had been given of it to the indorser, and superseded the necessity of other proof to satisfy those averments in the declaration. Lundie v. Robertson, 7 East, 231.

A party, sent by the holder of a dishonoured bill, called at the drawer's house the day after it became due, and there saw his wife, and told her that he had brought back the bill that had been dishonoured. She said that she knew nothing about it, but would tell her husband of it when he came home. The party then went away, not leaving any written notice:—Held, sufficient notice of dishonour. Houego v. Cowne, 2 M. & W. 348; M. & H. 54.

A defendant, on being asked if he knew of the dishonour of the bill sued upon, replied, "Yes, I have had a very civil letter from Mr. G. (an indorser), and I will call and arrange it;" this is sufficient evidence of due notice of dishonour having been given. Norris v. Salomonson, 4 Scott, 257; 3 Hodges, 3; 1 Jur. 55.

In an action by indorsee against drawer, the only evidence of notice of dishonour was a statement made by the drawer in conversation with a witness, in which he said, "I have several good defences to the action; in the first place, the letter (containing notice of dishonour) was not sent to me in time." This statement was left to the jury as evidence of due notice of dishonour:—Held, that the jury was not warranted in presuming that due notice had been given. Braithwaite v. Coleman, 4 N. & M. 554; 1 H. & W. 229.

By Letter.—A letter written by the drawer to the holder of a bill, six days after the day on which the drawer should have received notice of dishonour, and containing ambiguous expressions respecting the non-payment of the bill, was properly left to the jury as evidence from which they might or might not infer that notice had been given on the proper day. Booth v. Jacob, 3 N. & M. 351.

—Secondary Evidence of.—The copy of an original letter, giving notice of dishonour, is admissible in evidence, without notice to produce such original letter. Roberts v. Bradshaw, 1 Stark. 28.

A duplicate copy of an original letter giving notice of dishonour, is admissible in evidence, without any notice to produce the original letter. Kine v. Beaumont, 7 Moore, 112; 3 B. & B. 288.

Secondary evidence may be given of a written notice of the dishonour of a bill, without any notice having been given to produce it. Swain v. Lewis, 2 C., M. & R. 261.

Where, in an action by indorsee against drawer, he told a witness he expected to receive by post a notice of its dishonour, and afterwards gave him a letter he received by post, and requested him to negotiate a renewal of the bill; and the letter, which had found its way to the plaintiff's hands, was not produced at the trial:—Held, that the jury was warranted in finding that no notice of dishonour had been given. Bell v. Frankis, 4 M. & G. 446; 5 Scott, N. R. 460.

In an action by indorsee against drawer, proof that he, on the day on which he himself received notice of dishonour from the holder, wrote and sent a letter to the drawer, and proof of notice to produce that letter as containing notice of dishonour, and that the drawer, when applied to by the plaintiff for payment of the bill, objected that it had not been presented to the acceptors in due time, but did not object that he had not had notice of dishonour, are, on default to produce the letter, evidence that it contained a regular notice of dishonour. Curlewis v. Corfield, 1 G. & D. 489; 1 Q. B. 814; 6 Jur. 259.

By Memorandum.—In an action against indorser, a memorandum in writing, made by his wife, of the receipt of notice of dishonour at the place from which the bill was dated (he himself not having been resident there at the time), is admissible, after the death of the wife, to prove that the husband had due notice of dishonour. Wharton v. Wright, 1 C. & K. 585.

Action by Indorsee—Notice given by Clerk of Indorser.—In an action by indorsee against drawer, the declaration stated the dishonour of the bill, in the usual form, of which the defendant had notice. Plea, that he had not notice from the plaintiff of the non-payment of the bill. It was proved, that the indorser received notice of the dishonour from the plaintiff, and that the indorser's clerk, and not the plaintiff, gave notice to the defendant:—Held, sufficient. Newen v. Gill, 8 C. & P. 367.

9. CONSEQUENCE OF NEGLIGENCE.

Discharge of Drawer and Indorser.—Want of due notice of non-acceptance of a bill discharges the drawer and indorser; and if, under ignorance of the circumstances, any indorser should pay, he does not by that act revive the liability of the previous indorser or drawer. Roscow v. Hardy, 12 East, 434; 2 Camp. 458.

The indorser of a bill, which had been dishonoured, and which a subsequent indorsee had made his own by laches, paid the bill and immediately gave notice of its dishonour to the defendant, a prior indorser:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover the amount, although it appeared that the defendant, in case successive notices had been given by all the parties on the bill, could not have received notice of dishonour at an earlier period; for the plaintiff by paying the bill could not place the prior indorsers in a worse situation than they would otherwise have been in. Turner v. Leech, 4 B. & A. 451.

If the indorsee of an inland bill, not due, presents it for acceptance, which is refused, and delays giving notice to his indorser, the indorser will be discharged. Goodal v. Dolley, 1 T. R. 712.

But where the payee having presented a bill for acceptance, which was refused, indorsed it to the plaintiff for value, without giving notice of fused acceptance, of which the drawer received due notice.—Held, that the drawer was not discharged from his liability to the indorsee, by the payee's neglect to give notice of the previous dishonour. O'Keefe v. Dunn, 1 Marsh. 613; 6 Taunt. 305. And see Dunn v. O'Keefe (in error), 5 M. & S. 282.

Where a debtor indorsed a bill of which he was the indorsee, over to his creditor by way of collateral security for his debt, and the creditor did not present it at maturity, nor give the debtor notice of its dishonour when presented.—Held, that the creditor could not recover in an action either on his original debt or upon the bill. Peacock v. Purcell, 14 C. B., N. S. 728; 32 L. J., C. P. 266; 10 Jur., N. S. 178; 8 L. T. 636; 11 W. R. 834.

A, being in insolvent circumstances, B, undertook to be a security for a debt owing from A. to C. by indorsing a note made by A. payable to B. at the house of D.: the note was accordingly so made and indorsed with the knowledge of all parties; just before it became due, B., being informed that D. had no effects of A. in his hands, desired D. to send the note to him, and said he would pay it, B. having then a fund in his hands for that purpose; it was not presented at D.'s house till three days after it was due.—Held, that C. could not maintain an action against B. on the note, due diligence not having been used in presenting the note, as soon as it was due, to D. for payment, and in giving immediate notice to B. of the non-payment by D.; for B. had a right to insist on the strict rule of law respecting the indorser of a note, notwithstanding the particular circumstances of the case. Nicholson v. Gouthit, 2 H. Bl. 609.

—Bankruptcy of Drawer—The drawer absconded, and was made a bankrupt before the bill was due. His house continued open in the possession of the messenger under the commission after the bill was due. The holder knew of the appointment of the drawer's assignees before the bill was due, before which time the acceptor became bankrupt, and the holder neither gave, nor made any attempt to give, notice of the dishonour, either to the drawer or his assignees.—Held, that he was guilty of laches, and that his claim against the drawer was barred, and consequently, that he had no right to prove the bills under the drawer's commission. Rhode v. Proctor, 6 D. & R. 610; 4 B. & C. 517.

and the defendants receiving one-half per cent. for the accommodation. Bills were accepted by the defendants under this arrangement, and the plaintiffs duly provided the defendants with funds exceeding the amount of the acceptances. Before the bills became due, the defendants' bank stopped, and they gave notice to the plaintiffs that they would be unable to meet the bills. The plaintiffs arranged with another house in Liverpool to take up the bills, paying 2½ per cent. commission; they were also obliged to pay to the holders the expenses of protesting the bills at Liverpool and Alexandria; and had also to incur expense in telegraphic communication between Liverpool and Alexandria. In an action against the defendants for breach of the contract contained in their letter of credit.—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the commission and the notarial and telegraphic expenses. Percha v. Royal Bank of Liverpool, 5 L. R., Ex. 92; 39 L. J., Ex. 41; 21 L. T. 830; 18 W. R. 463. And see General South American Company, In re, infra.

Re-Exchange.—A custom as to allowing a fixed percentage by way of liquidated damages in lieu of exchange, re-exchange, and other charges, when bills are returned from the colonies dishonoured, however valid in law, does not apply in the absence of an agreement, express or implied, to allow re-exchange. Williams v. Ayers, 3 App. Cas. 133; 47 L. J., P. C. 1; 37 L. T. 732—P. C.

Where the holders of bills drawn by P. L. & Co. in London on P. L. & Co. in Australia, having no occasion to transfer money from London to Australia, sent them to the latter country, not for the purpose of employing the proceeds there, but of having them remitted to London, the dishonour of such bills does not entitle the holders to recover damages by way of re-exchange. Ib.

The right to re-exchange, in the absence of express agreement arises when the holder of a bill who has contracted for the transfer of funds from one country to another has sustained damages by its dishonour through having to obtain funds in the country where the bill was payable. Ib.

Re-exchange is the measure of those damages. Ib.

The drawer of a bill of exchange in a foreign country accepted in England is entitled, upon inland bill, unless the party goes for interest and costs. Boulager v. Talleyrand, 2 Esp. 550.

After a bill has been protested for non-acceptance, a second protest is gratuitous and unnecessary. De la Torre v. Barclay, 1 Stark. 7.

A party to a bill is not liable for money paid to his use by a person who takes up the bill for his honour, unless a formal protest of payment to his honour has been made before payment of the bill, that being the usual custom of merchants. Vandewall v. Tyrrell, M. & M. 87. See Geralopulo v. Wieler, 10 C. B. 690; 20 L. J., C. P. 105; 15 Jur. 316.

When a person takes up a bill of exchange for the honour of any one whose name is on the bill, he becomes as an indorsee of the bill, and is entitled to all remedies against those whose names are on it. Mertens v. Winnington, 1 Esp. 112.

Bill was drawn on C. & Co., at Liverpool, payable to A. in London; the drawee having refused to accept, it was accepted by B. in London, for the honour of the payee, if regularly protested and refused when due:—Held, in an action against the acceptor for honour, that, by the special form of the acceptance, a presentment for payment to the drawee in Liverpool, a refusal by him, and a protest there, were necessary; and therefore that the bill was properly presented for payment there on the day it became due. Mitchell v. Baring, 10 B. & C. 4; 4 C. & P. 35; M. & M. 381.

—Foreign Bills.—A protest is necessary in the case of the acceptors of a foreign bill for honour. Hoare v. Cazenove, 16 East, 391.

In declaring against an indorser of a foreign bill, the omission of the averment of protest is only matter of form, and cannot be taken advantage of upon general demurrer. Salomons v. Stavelly, 3 Dougl. 298.

Sufficiency of.—Where a bill is paid supra protest for the honour of a party to the bill, it is not necessary that the protest shall have been formally drawn up or extended before the payment, but it is sufficient if the bill has in fact been protested, and a declaration that the payment was for honour made before a notary, and these facts recorded in the notarial registers before the payment was made. Geralopulo v. Wieler, 10 C. B. 690; 20 L. J., C. P. 105; 15 Jur. 316.

Seem, if a foreign bill is regularly protested and noted, the protest may be drawn up in form at any time afterwards. Chaters v. Bell, 4 Esp. 48. And see Selw. N. P. 379.

Notice of.—Notice of protest is not necessary by the English law. Bonar v. Mitchell, 5 Ex. 415; 19 L. J., Ex. 302.

In giving notice of non-payment or non-acceptance to the drawer of a foreign bill, resident abroad, it is sufficient to inform him that the bill has been protested, without sending a copy of the protest. Goodman v. Harvey, 4 A. & E. 870; 6 N. & M. 372; S. P., Cromwell v. Hynson, 2 Esp. 611.

Where a drawer of a foreign bill, at the time of drawing, was in a foreign country, but returned home before it became due, at which time it was dishonoured and protested; but notice of the dishonour only, and not of the protest, was left at the drawer's house:—Held, sufficient. Robins v. Gibson, 1 M. & S. 288; 3 Camp. 334.

In an action by indorsee against payee and indorser of a bill, drawn in England on, and accepted by a French house, both parties being domiciled in England:—Held, that due notice of the dishonour by the acceptor was parcel of the contract; that the bill, being made payable by the acceptor abroad, was a foreign bill, and the lex loci contractus must therefore prevail; and that it was sufficient for the indorsee to shew that he had given the indorser such notice of the dishonour and protest as was required by the law of France. Rothchild v. Currie, 1 Q. B. 43; 4 P. & D. 737; 5 Jur. 865; S. P., Hirschfield v. Smith, 1 L. R., C. P. 340; 35 L. J., C. P. 177; 12 Jur., N. S. 523; 14 L. T. 886; 14 W. R. 455; 1 H. & R. 284.

Evidence to Prove.—In an action against the drawer of a foreign bill, a promise of payment by him after the bill was due, is sufficient evidence of a protest for non-payment, and notice of the dishonour of the bill. Gibbon v. Cuggan, 2 Camp. 188; S. P., Hopes v. Alder, 6 East, 16.

In action against the drawer of a foreign bill, a promise made by him to pay the bill after the drawee refused to accept it, is sufficient evidence to prove the protest and notice of protest, though such promise is subject to a condition which has not been complied with. Campbell v. Webster, 2 C. B. 258; 15 L. J., C. P. 4; 9 Jur. 992.

In an action by payee against drawer, the declaration stated that the latter drew it at "St. Helena, to wit at Westminster," and did not aver a protest either for non-acceptance or non-payment: on the production of the bill, it was dated at St. Helena, and not stamped: on an objection that it was inadmissible as an inland bill, for want of such stamp, and that the plaintiff had given no evidence of a protest for non-acceptance or non-payment:—Held, that as there was evidence of a subsequent promise by the defendant to pay the amount of the bill, coupled with a letter written by the attorney, offering terms of payment, it was a waiver of these objections, although such attorney swore that such offer was made without prejudice. Patterson v. Becher, 6 Moore, 319.

Sufficiency of Pleading.—In an action on a bill by a plaintiff, who had paid it under protest for the honour of one of several indorsers:—Held, sufficient, on special demurrer to a declaration against the drawer, to state that the plaintiff had paid the bill under protest, according to the usage and custom of merchants, without stating that he had paid it to the last indorsee, or that the plaintiff had any title to the bill. Cox v. Earle, 3 B. & A. 430.

XII. LIABILITY OF PARTIES.

1. ACCEPTOR OR MAKER.

Generally—Bills.—No one can be liable as acceptor but the person to whom the bill is addressed, unless an acceptor for honour. Polhill v. Walter, 3 B. & Ad. 114.

If a person other than the drawee writes an acceptance upon the bill in the usual form, he is not liable as an acceptor, but must be sued on his collateral undertaking. Jackson v. Hudson, 2 Camp. 447.

Therefore, where a bill was drawn in the following form: "London, two months after date, pay to my order 157*l.* for value received. F. Jackson. To Mr. J. Irving."—and accepted by Irving, and afterwards specially by Hudson:—Held, that Hudson was not liable as acceptor. Id.

The acceptor of a bill of exchange knows that, by his acceptance, he does an act which will make him liable to indemnify any indorser of it who may afterwards pay it. Duncan, Fox & Company v. North and South Wales Bank, 6 App. Cas. 1; 50 L. J., Ch. 355; 43 L. T. 706; 29 W. R. 763—H. L. (E.).

The acceptor or maker always remains liable, notwithstanding any change in the circumstances of other parties. Anderson v. Cleveland, 13 East, 430, n.

The acceptor is liable to the holder, though the latter has given a discharge to a party to the bill which will not discharge one liable prior to himself. Smith v. Knox, 3 Esp. 46.

—Notes.—The holder of a joint and several note of A. and B. by discharging A. discharges B. also. Nicholson v. Revill, 6 N. & M. 192; 4 A. & E. 675; 1 H. & W. 756.

If one of two makers of a joint and several note gives the holder a mortgage to secure the amount, with a covenant to pay it, the other maker is not thereby discharged, for the remedy on the specialty is not co-extensive with the remedy on the note. Ansell v. Baker, 15 Q. B. 20.

A firm was holder of a joint and several note made by a father and son. The son assigned all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, who were expressed to be parties, and to be named in a schedule, and the deed purported to contain an absolute release of the debts without any reservation of their rights against sureties. One of the trustees was a partner in the firm, and the deed was executed by him and the other trustees, but not by any other creditor. It was also executed by the son, with the privity and concurrence of the father. Upon its execution as an act of bankruptcy, an adjudication was pronounced against the son:—Held, that even assuming the father to have joined in the note as a surety merely, and the partner to have executed the deed as a creditor, and not merely as a trustee, the father's liability was not discharged. Harvey, Ex parte, 4 De G., Mac. & G. 881; 23 L. J., Bk. 26.

Where Bill has been Paid by Drawer.—The drawer or indorser of a dishonoured bill becomes entitled, by paying the amount of it to the holder, to an immediate right of action against the acceptor, although the holder continues to retain the bill as security for costs; and the right of such drawer or indorser to sue the acceptor is not affected by the circumstance that the holder, after receiving the amount and before payment of his costs, has charged the acceptor in execution for the amount of the bill and then released him from custody. Woodward v. Pell, 4 L. R., Q. B. 55; 38 L. J., Q. B. 30; 19 L. T. 557; 17 W. R. 117.

Where Acceptance made in Ignorance of Agreement.—Action by indorsee against acceptor. Plea, that he and S. carried on business at London under the name of M. & S., and at Rio Janeiro under the name of S. & M.; that the defendant carried on the business of the firm in England, and S. at Rio. That the bill was drawn by S. in the name of the firm of S. & M., for a debt due by S. & M. to the plaintiff, and accepted by defendant in the name of the firm of M. & S. That, after the bill was made and indorsed, and before acceptance, the firm of S. & M. at Rio having become insolvent, the plaintiff and the other creditors of S. & M. entered into an agreement with S. & M. at Rio, by which it was stipulated that the holders of bills drawn by S. & M. on M. & S. should be considered as creditors for cash paid, but the respective dividends should be deposited in a bank at Rio until presentation of protests of their bills not having been paid, but, the payment in London being verified, the sums so deposited should be divided among the creditors, which agreement was in course of being acted upon. That defendant accepted the bill in ignorance of this agreement. That the proceedings were according to the law of Brazil, and constituted, according to that law, a discharge of the debt:—Held, that the plea was bad, as not shewing any sufficient discharge of the London house from accepting the bill or release from paying it. Hartley v. Manton, 5 Q. B. 247; D. & M. 410; 13 L. J., Q. B. 61; 8 Jur. 169.

Acceptance as Agent of an Undisclosed Principal.—Evidence cannot be admitted to shew that an acceptor of a bill accepted it as agent for an undisclosed principal. Rayner, Ex parte, 17 W. R. 64—L. J.

To what amount Liable.—An acceptor is liable to the full amount of the bill, as between himself and third persons, but only to the sum for which the acceptance was given as between himself and the drawer. Darrell v. Williams, 2 Stark. 166.

Therefore, in an action brought against him, he may shew that he accepted it for value as to part, and as an accommodation as to the rest. Id.

And a party who takes a bill from the drawer, and knows that it was an accommodation bill, cannot recover from the acceptor more than the amount of the balance as between him and the drawer. Jones v. Hibbert, 2 Stark. 304. And see Solomon v. Turner, 1 Stark. 51.

An indorsee of an accommodation bill, who takes it, knowing it to be such, and advances on it but part of the amount, can only recover as much as he really paid; aliter, where the bill has been regularly drawn, on a fair account, in the course of trade; in such case the indorsee may recover the whole. Wiffen v. Roberts, 1 Esp. 261.

An indorsee having received part of the contents from the drawer, cannot recover more than the residue from the acceptor. Bacon v. Searles, 1 H. Bl. 88. And see Beck v. Robley, 1 H. Bl. 89, n.

If a bill is given in consideration of the defendant entering into partnership with the plaintiff, and the treaty is afterwards broken off, the plaintiff is entitled to recover a verdict on the bill to the amount of the damages he has sustained, and not to the full amount of the bill. Ledger v. Ever, Peake, 216.

Where an indorser paid part of the amount of his use. Prudential v. Farrant, 6 B. & C. 439; 9 D. & R. 603.

A holder of a bill who has received from the drawer sums of money in part payment of it, is not entitled to prove against the estate of the bankrupt acceptor for the full amount of the bill, but only for what remains due of it after deducting all the sums paid in respect of it by the drawer before the proof is tendered, whether such payments were made before or after the bankruptcy. Taylor, Ex parte, 1 De G. & J. 112; 25 L. J., Bk. 58; 3 Jur., N. S. 753.

Bill Brokers—Custom to make themselves Liable to their Bankers.—It being proved to be the common and almost invariable practice of bill brokers in the city of London not to indorse each bill of exchange which they have discounted for a customer when they re-discount it with their bankers, but to give to the bankers a general guarantee for all bills which they re-discount with them:—Held, that when an accommodation bill is drawn and accepted for the purpose of raising money for the drawer and the acceptor, the drawer in discounting the bill with bill brokers in the city of London has an implied authority from the acceptor to deal with them in the ordinary course of their business, and, consequently, that the bill brokers have an implied authority from the acceptor to make themselves liable on the bill under their guarantee to their bankers, and are, in the event of the bankruptcy of the acceptor, entitled to prove against his estate for what they have paid to the bankers in respect of the bill under their guarantee. Bishop, Ex parte, Fos, In re, 15 Ch. D. 400; 50 L. J., Ch. 18; 43 L. T. 165; 29 W. R. 144—C. A.

—Right to Prove for Interest on Amount paid under Guarantee.—Held, also, that the bill brokers are entitled to prove against the estate of the acceptor for interest upon the amount which they have paid under their guarantee. Petre v. Duncombe (2 L. M. & P. 107) and Hitchman v. Stewart (3 Drew. 271) approved and followed. Id.

Action on Promissory Note payable Three Months after Demand—Indorsement of Payment of Interest Evidence of Demand—Effect of Statute of Limitations.—In May, 1857, J. R. gave to R. R. a promissory note for payment of 150*l.* three months after demand, no interest being reserved. J. R. died in 1869, and R. R. in 1878. The note was in R. R.'s possession at his death, and he had indorsed upon it receipts in November, 1857, and August, 1858, each for half a year's interest. It appeared that no other interest had ever been paid. J. R.'s estate being administered by the court, R. R.'s executor claimed to prove on the promissory note:—Held (by Hall, V.-C.), the claim must be allowed for 150*l.*, with interest from May, 1858. But held, on appeal, that the admissions by the payee of the payment of interest were evidence of a demand having been made in 1857 so as to make the 150*l.* immediately payable, and that the Statute of Limitations was a bar to the claim. Rutherford, In re, Brown v. Rutherford, 14 Ch. D. 697; 49 L. J., Ch. 654; 43 L. T. 105; 29 W.

—Stale Demand.—Sembles, that, apart from the Statute of Limitations, the claim ought to have been rejected as a stale demand. Id.

Undertaking to Renew—Liability where Time expired if renewed.—The defendants accepted a bill payable at four months upon a written undertaking that, if at the maturity of the bill they had not been paid certain money due to them on the return of a certain ship, the drawer would renew the bill. More than four months elapsed after the maturity of the bill, and the said money had not been paid to the defendants, but the bill had not been actually renewed:—Held, that the defendants were liable in an action upon the bill. Heiron v. Morgan, 44 L. T. 182.

Acceptance—Liability of Firm when Name of Individual Member and of Firm same.—Where a signature is common to an individual and a firm of which the individual is a member, a bona fide holder for value, without notice whose paper it is, of a bill of exchange with such signature attached, has not an option to sue either the individual or the firm. But there is a presumption that the bill was given for the firm and is binding upon it, at least, where the individual carries on no business separate from the business of the firm of which he is a member: this presumption, however, may be rebutted by proof that the bill was signed not in the name of the partnership but of the individual for his private purpose, and it is immaterial that the bona fide holder took the bill as the bill of the proprietors of the business carried on by the partnership whoever they might be, and not merely as the bill of the individual. B. and M. carried on business in partnership. M. was a dormant partner, and B. was the only ostensible partner, the business being carried on in his name alone. B. entered into accommodation transactions for his private purpose, and, without the authority of M., accepted and indorsed bills of exchange in his own name only. B., in becoming party to these bills, did not intend to bind M., but he considered the bills as private transactions and signed them merely on his own behalf. The plaintiffs became bona fide holders for value of the bills signed by B., and took the bills as the bills of the proprietors of the business carried on by the partnership, and not merely as the bills of B. Besides the business of the partnership B. was not engaged in any business:—Held (affirming the judgment of the Common Pleas Division), that the plaintiffs could not hold M. liable upon the bills accepted and indorsed by B. Yorkshire Banking Company v. Beaton, 5 C. P. D. 109; 49 L. J., C. P. 390; 42 L. T. 435; 28 W. R. 379—C. A.

On discharged Bill in hands of innocent Holder.—The defendant accepted two bills, drawn on him by C., which the latter indorsed and paid into his bankers', who entered the amount as cash to the credit side of C.'s account in their books. The bills having been dishonoured, the bankers entered their amount to the debit side of C.'s account, and shortly afterwards the defendant paid the amount of both bills to C., but did not require them to be delivered up. C.

continued his banking account for three years after the bills became due, and paid in several sums to his credit, sufficient to cover all the items to his debit prior to the date, and including the amount of the bills. C. afterwards became bankrupt, and the bankers proved their debts under his commission without noticing the bills, and a year afterwards sued the defendant as acceptor, having made no previous demand on him in respect of them :—Held, that he was not liable. Field v. Carr, 2 M. & P. 46; 5 Bing. 13.

But in an action against the acceptor, an indorsee for value, who had transferred the bill, which was returned to him after it had become due, may recover, although his indorser before the re-transfer, received satisfaction from the drawer. Buzzard v. Flecknoe, 1 Stark. 333.

Discharge by Non-presentment.]—An acceptor is not discharged by the bill not being presented for payment for three or four years after it becomes due: he is only discharged by payment of the bill, or by a distinct and direct agreement by the holder to discharge him. Farquhar v. Southey, 2 C. & P. 497; M. & M. 14.

An acceptor of a bill payable at his bankers is not discharged from his liability by the neglect of the holder to present the bill for payment at the time it becomes due, even though the bankers failed before the bill was actually presented, which was not until some weeks after it was due, and the acceptor had always, up to the period of their failure, a balance in their hands sufficient to cover the acceptance. Turner v. Hayden, 6 D. & R. 5; 4 B. & C. 1; R. & M. 215; S. P., Rhodes v. Gent, 5 B. & A. 244.

Where a bill payable at bankers in London, which, by reason of being mislaid, was not presented for payment, and the acceptor was some months afterwards informed of its being mislaid, he was held not to be discharged, and the drawer might set off the amount in an action brought against him by the acceptor, although the bankers at whose house the bill was payable failed in the interval, and the acceptor had at all times, up to the failure of the bankers, a balance in their hands sufficient to cover the acceptance. Sebag v. Abitbol, 4 M. & S. 462; 1 Stark. 79.

On Forged Bills.]—The acceptor is liable, even though the bill is forged. Smith v. Chester, 1 T. R. 654.

The acceptor who pays under a forged indorsement by a person who has found a lost bill is liable to the real payee. Cheape v. Harley, 3 T. R. 127.

A bill purported to be drawn by C. & Co., on S., and to be payable to R. S. refused to accept it, the defendant thereupon accepted it for the honour of the drawers, and it was indorsed in the name of R. to the plaintiff, who discounted it. The bill was a forgery, and R., the pretended payee, was a fictitious person :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the amount of the bill. Phillips v. Im Thurn, 1 L. R., C. P. 463; 35 L. J., C. P. 220; 14 L. T. 406; 14 W. R. 653.

A bill of exchange which contained the sum of 14l. in figures in the margin, but no words in the body to denote the amount, was accepted by the defendant and returned to the drawer to be filled in. The drawer fraudulently inserted the words "one hundred and sixty-four" in the body, and altered the marginal figures to that amount and issued the bill :—Held, that the defendant was liable on the bill to the plaintiff, an innocent holder for value. Garrard v. Lewis, 10 Q. B. D. 30; 47 L. T. 408.

The acceptor of a blank acceptance holds out the person to whom it is intrusted as clothed with ostensible authority to fill in the bill as he pleases within the limits of the stamp. Id.

— Figures, Effect of.]—The figures in the margin of a bill are merely an index or summary of the contents of the bill. Id.

After Judgment, Arrest, and Discharge in another Action on same Bill.]—A bill was indorsed to C., who indorsed it in blank. A bank, being the holder of the bill at maturity, commenced actions against the acceptor and C., and signed judgment against the acceptor on the 3rd March. On the 21st March, C. paid the amount due on the bill to the bank, and an order was made to stay proceedings in that action on payment of costs: the costs were taxed, and the amount paid on the 13th April, and the bill was then delivered to C., who being indebted to the plaintiff in a larger amount transferred it to him. On the 29th March the bank charged the acceptor in execution on their judgment, but on the same day discharged him on payment of the costs :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to sue him on the bill, notwithstanding his discharge by the bank; that C.'s right of action on the bill was vested on the 21st March, and that the only effect of non-payment of the costs was that the bank had a lien upon the bill for the amount. Woodward v. Pell, 4 L. R., Q. B. 55; 38 L. J., Q. B. 30; 19 L. T. 557; 17 W. R. 117; 9 B. & S. 994.

On Accommodation Bills.]—Although the holder of a bill had notice when he took it, that the acceptor had only accepted it for the accommodation of the drawer, yet the acceptor is bound to pay it, and nothing can discharge him but payment or a release. Bank of Ireland v. Beresford, 6 Dow. 237.

In an action by the indorsee against the acceptor it is competent to the acceptor to shew that the acceptance was for the accommodation of the plaintiff, and that he has received no consideration from the drawer, and that it was agreed that the bill, when due, should be taken up by the plaintiff. Thompson v. Clubley, 1 M. & W. 212.

A. & Co., bankers in the country, being pressed by B. & Co., bankers in town, to whom they were indebted, to send up any bills they could procure, transmitted for account an accommodation bill, accepted by D.; when the bill became due, the balance was in favour of B. & Co., but the bills were not withdrawn, and afterwards the balance between the houses turned considerably in favour of A. & Co., and was so when B. & Co. became bankrupts :—Held, that A. & Co. were entitled to recover against the acceptor. Attwood v. Crowdie, 1 Stark. 483.

An accommodation note in favour of A. was indorsed to B., with notice of the want of consideration; and upon the insolvency of A., B. accepted a dividend, and covenanted not to sue him :—Held, that, nevertheless, he might sue the maker, although in the event of his recovering the amount from him, A. would again become

The acceptor is not discharged by time given to the drawer. Raggett v. Azmors, 4 Taunt. 730; S. P., Collett v. Haigh, 3 Camp. 281; Aarrison v. Cooke, 3 Camp. 362; Penton v. Parack, 5 Taunt. 192; Price v. Edmunds, 10 B. & C. 578.

To an action upon a bill by indorsee against acceptor, he, being under terms of pleading issuably, pleaded that the bill was drawn by M. at the request and for the accommodation of the defendant, and without consideration or value whatever, and that the bill was indorsed by M. without consideration or value given by the plaintiff for such indorsement to the defendant, or M., or to any other person whomsoever:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to sign judgment. Hester v. Wilson, 4 Ex. 489; 7 D. & L. 221, 19 L. J., Ex. 8, S. P., Sturtevant v. Ferde, 4 Scott, N. R. 668; 4 M. & G. 101.

To a declaration against acceptor of a bill drawn payable to the drawer's order, indorsed by him to B., and by B. to the plaintiff, a plea that he accepted for the accommodation of the drawer and B. without consideration, and on the terms and conditions that the bill should be negotiated for their accommodation only before the bill became due; and that the bill was indorsed to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff became holder, after it became due, is a bad plea, on motion for judgment non obstante veredicto. Carruthers v. West, 11 Q. B. 148; 17 L. J., Q. B. 4, 13 Jur. 79.

A plaintiff accepted a bill for the accommodation of H., who deposited it with the defendant as a security for goods bought of him. H. afterwards paid for the goods; but, he being further indebted to the defendant, the latter refused to restore the bill, and subsequently indorsed it for value to a third person, who sued the plaintiff thereon, and compelled him to pay the amount, with costs:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover from the defendant the amount of the bill on a count for money paid. Blenden v. Charles, 5 M. & P. 14.

A person drew and indorsed a bill for the accommodation of the acceptor, which was dishonoured when due, and he subsequently paid the holder a sum of money in discharge of his liability thereon, without having had notice of dishonour, and without any express request from the acceptor:—Held, that he could not recover the amount from the acceptor as money paid to his use. Steigh v. Steigh, 5 Ex. 514; 19 L. J., Ex. 348.

Bills were accepted by A. for the accommodation of B., who being one of the executors of C., and having considerable sums of money in his hands belonging to C.'s estate, which were deposited in a box in B.'s possession, discounted such bills with the moneys belonging to C.'s estate, by taking out of the box the requisite amount, deducting the discount, and at the same time placing the bills in the box:—Held, that B. could not sever his character of an accommodation holder of the bills from his character of acceptor, so as to enable him and his co-executors to sue as indorsees of the bills for a valuable consideration. — v. Adams, 1 Yonge, 117.

An indorsee agreed with the drawer to give up the bills to be cancelled on a mortgage of real estate being executed as security for the amount of the bills. The mortgage was executed, and without consideration. —Held, that the acceptor was discharged from liability on the bills, and could plead the facts by way of equitable defence to an action by the indorsee against him. Edwin v. Lancaster, 13 L. T. 632, 13 W. R. 857.

— What are.]—W. drew a bill upon the defendant, to whom he was in the habit of consigning goods for sale; the bill was accepted, but neither party at the time knew the state of the account between them. It afterwards appeared that the balance of the account was considerably in favour of the defendant at the time he accepted the bill:—Held, that nevertheless it was not an accommodation bill. Bagnall v. Andrews, 4 M. & P. 839; 7 Bing. 217.

The fact that the name of an acceptor was written across the stamp before the bill was drawn does not reasonably raise an inference that the bill was accepted for the accommodation of the drawer. Harris v. Sterling, 9 Ir. R., C. L. 198.

Evidence that the holder of a bill of exchange had notice, shortly before maturity, that it had been accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, is not evidence that he had such notice at the time of discounting the bill. Id.

A merchant in Bombay bought of a bank bills on their London branch for 25,000*l.*, giving for them 5,000*l.* in cash and 20,000*l.* in bills on a firm in London, consisting of himself and another person. The bank bills were all indorsed to the firm in London, and were all accepted. The merchant's bills were sent to the London branch of the bank and were accepted by the London firm. The bank was wound up, and the merchant and his partner each became insolvent; the London firm holding at the time of the winding up bills to the amount of 19,000*l.*, and the bank having parted with the bills for 20,000*l.*:—Held, that under the circumstances the bills were not accommodation bills, and that the trustees of the London firm were entitled to prove for the 19,000*l.* in the winding-up. London, Bombay and Mediterranean Bank, In re, Cama, Ex parte, 9 L. R., Ch. 686; 49 L. J., Ch. 683; 31 L. T. 234; 22 W. R. 809 (affirming 22 W. R. 471).

Held, also, that the principle as to proving for cross accommodation bills does not apply when the bills are in the hands of third parties. Id.

The trustees of the London firm had sent in a previous claim to prove for 5,000*l.*, taking that amount as the balance between the bills for 25,000*l.* and the bills for 20,000*l.*, and not being aware that the bank had parted with the bills for 20,000*l.* At the time of the previous claim the trustees held securities which had since been realised by them:—Held, that notwithstanding the previous claim made by mistake, the trustees might prove for the 19,000*l.*; and that the claim would be considered as made when the previous claim was made, so that the trustees representing the London firm were not bound to give credit for the money received by realising the security. Id.

— When Holder has received part of Money due on Bill.]—The holder of an accommodation bill who has received part of the money due on the bill from the drawer cannot afterwards, in an action against the acceptor, recover the whole amount of the bill from him, but must give him credit for the amount already received from the drawer. Cook v. Lister, 13 C. B., N. S. 543; 32 L. J., C. P. 121; 9 Jur., N. S. 823; 7 L. T. 712.

— Holder taking cognovit of drawer.—If the holder of an accommodation bill takes a cognovit from the drawer for payment by instalments, he does not thereby discharge the acceptor whether at the time of taking it he knew that it was an accommodation bill or not. Fentum v. Pocock, 5 Taunt. 192; 1 Marsh. 14.

— Bill drawn by Partner.—Where a party accepts bills drawn by one partner on a firm for his private accommodation, upon the understanding that the drawer will provide for the bills when due, no action on the bills lies against the acceptor either by the drawer alone, or by his firm jointly. Sparrow v. Chisman, 4 M. & R. 206; 9 B. & C. 241.

— After abandonment of holder.—A. accepted a bill for the accommodation of B., which B. delivered to C., his creditor, to provide for a bill about to become due; C., before A.'s bill became due, returned it to B., as useless, in order that it might be forwarded to A., and abandoned all claim upon the bill; C. could not, by subsequently obtaining possession of the bill, acquire a right of action against A. Cartwright v. Williams, 2 Stark. 340.

— Contract of Indemnity on.—The contract of the drawer of an accommodation bill with the acceptor is to indemnify him against the bill; and if the drawer provides the acceptor with funds to meet the bill, this is, in law, a performance of that contract, and confers on the acceptor a right to retain the money, not merely against any revocation by the drawer, but also against his assignees in the event of his becoming bankrupt before the bill is paid. Yates v. Hoppe, 9 C. B. 541; 19 L. J., C. P. 180; 14 Jur. 372.

The right of action of a party accepting an accommodation bill, and paying it before it becomes payable, dates, not from the time of the actual payment, but the time it becomes payable. Coppin v. Gray, 1 Y. & C. 205; 11 L. J., Ch. 105.

A. accepted a bill for 25*l.* for the accommodation of F., who was pressed at the time by the defendant, a sheriff's officer, for seven guineas, claimed as being due for possession money. F. was to get the bill discounted by the defendant or elsewhere, and to give A. the surplus above the seven guineas. He deposited it with the defendant as a security for that sum, the defendant knowing the circumstances, and that A. had no value for his acceptance. The defendant indorsed it over and kept the proceeds. The holder sued A., who thereupon paid him the whole amount of the bill.—Held, that A. had no right of action against the defendant as for money paid to his use on a request implied by law; but that his remedy was against F. on an implied contract to indemnify A. for lending him his (A.'s) acceptance. Asprey v. Levy, 16 M. & W. 851.

A party who requests another to lend his acceptance, impliedly engages to take up the bill at maturity, and to indemnify the acceptor against the consequences of non-payment. Rey- nolds v. Doyle, 1 M. & G. 753; 2 Scott, N. R. 45.

— Proof of Fact of Accommodation.—In an action by indorsee against drawer, an issue that the bill was accepted for the accommodation of the drawer is proved by evidence that the bill had been accepted to take up a former acceptance by the same party, given for the accommodation of the drawer, and it is not necessary to plead those facts in extenso. Thomas v. Fenton, 5 D. & L. 28; 2 B. C. Rep. 68; 16 L. J., Q. B. 362; 11 Jur. 633.

In an action against acceptor of an accommodation bill, the following memorandum, with reference to the bill:—"I hereby acknowledge that you have for my accommodation accepted a bill of even date herewith for 25*l.*, payable, &c., and I agree to provide for the same when due," is admissible in evidence without a stamp. Notley v. Webb, 5 C. B. 834.

In an action by acceptor against drawer of an accommodation bill, on his implied contract of indemnity, the plaintiff, in order to prove that a former bill, in renewal of which the bill in respect of which the action was brought was given, had been made payable at a particular place, called a banker's clerk, who, without producing the bank book, stated that he had ascertained the fact from an entry therein in his own handwriting, but that, independently of that entry, he had no recollection whatever of the fact:—Held, that this was not evidence of such fact. Beech v. Jones, 5 C. B. 696.

In an action by drawer against acceptor, a plea that he accepted merely for the drawer's accommodation, and that the drawer did not at any time give any value or consideration for the acceptance, fails, if it appears that, after the bill was accepted (as alleged) for accommodation, the drawer gave a cross acceptance and was obliged to pay the amount, and that the bill accepted was due and unpaid at the time of action brought. Burdon or Burton v. Benton or Penton, 9 Q. B. 843; 16 L. J., Q. B. 353; 11 Jur. 713.

— Payment or Release of.—Payment by an accommodation drawer of a bill is equivalent to payment by an acceptor; a bill re-issued after such payment is, therefore, in law, a new bill and requires a fresh stamp. Lazarus v. Chwie, 3 Q. B. 459; 2 G. & D. 487.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor, he pleaded that he accepted the bill for the drawer's accommodation; that the drawer negotiated it for his own use and paid it at maturity; that it was delivered by the holder to the drawer, who without the consent of the acceptor, and without having it re-stamped, indorsed it to the plaintiff. It appeared on the production of the bill, that the acceptor's name was written on the back, and that there was a memorandum on the face of it denoting the time of its maturity, and it was proved that the bill was delivered by the drawer to the plaintiff after that date:—Held, no evidence to shew that the bill had been negotiated by the drawer, and paid by him at maturity. Jewell v. Parr, 13 C. B. 909; 1 C. L. R. 454; 22 L. J., C. P. 253; 17 Jur. 975.

In an action by indorsee against an accommodation acceptor, it is not a good defence to the further maintenance of the action that after action the drawer paid the amount of the bill and interest to the indorsee under a judge's order in another action by the indorsee against the drawer. Randall v. Moon, 12 C. B. 261; 21 L. J., C. P. 226.

It is a good defence to an action by indorsee against acceptor, that the bill was accepted for the drawer's accommodation, without consideration, and that it was indorsed over by the drawer after it had been paid by him at its maturity. Parr v. Jewell, 16 C. B. 684—Ex. Ch.

An indorsee, for value of an accommodation bill, without notice that is one of that description, may, notwithstanding notice subsequently acquired, release the drawer, without releasing the acceptor. Graham, Ex parte, Black, In re, 5 De G., Mac. & G. 356.

— Costs of defending Actions, when Recoverable.—A plaintiff, having accepted a bill for the defendant's accommodation, defended an action by an indorsee, and finally paid the amount, with the costs of the action. The plaintiff brought an action for money paid; the jury was directed, that, if the defendant requested the plaintiff to undertake the defence (as to which there was some evidence, but no express request proved), the costs were recoverable as money paid to the plaintiff's use:—Held, that the direction was right, and the costs recoverable under the count for money paid. Garrard v. Cottrell, 10 Q. B. 679.

Declaration, that in consideration that the plaintiff would accept, for the defendant's accommodation, a bill, the defendant promised to indemnify the plaintiff from any loss or damage. Breach, that he did not indemnify the plaintiff from loss or damage, and the plaintiff, as acceptor, was obliged and did pay to the holder the amount of the bill, with interest, and the costs of an action brought on the bill; and the plaintiff also incurred costs and expenses in defending and settling the action. First plea, to the claim in respect of the amount of the bill and interest, a set-off. Second plea, to the costs of the action and the costs and expenses incurred by the plaintiff in defending and settling the action, that these costs were incurred at the request of the defendant, concluding with a set-off:—Held, that he might plead a set-off to so much of the claim as was liquidated, and therefore the first plea which was pleaded to a demand which might be recovered in an action for money paid to the use of the plaintiff, was good; but that the second, which was pleaded to a demand in respect of costs incurred, was bad. Crampton v. Walker, 30 L. J., Q. B. 19; 7 Jur., N. S. 43.

Plea of Tender by.—A plea of tender after the day of payment of a bill, and before action, is not good, though the defendant avers that he was always ready to pay from the time of the tender, and that the sum tendered was the whole money then due, owing or payable to the plaintiff in respect of the bill, with interest from the time of the default, for the damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the non-performance of the promise. Hume v. Peplow, 8 East, 168; S. P., Poole v. Crompton, 5 D. P. C. 468; 1 Jur. 23; S. C., nom. Poole v. Tunbridge, 2 M. & W. 223.

An acceptor cannot plead a tender after the day of payment. Dobie v. Larkan, 10 Ex. 776.

Where the maker of a note paid money into the hands of an agent to retire it, and the agent tendered the money to the holder of the note, on condition of having it delivered up; the note being mislaid, this condition was not complied with; and the agent afterwards became bankrupt with the money in his hands:—Held, that the maker was still responsible on the note. Dent v. Dunn, 3 Camp. 296.

2. DRAWER OR INDORSER.

On Non-Acceptance.—If a person, to whom a bill is directed generally, accepts it payable at a particular place, the holder may resort to the drawer as for non-acceptance. Gammon v. Schmoll, 5 Taunt. 344; 1 Marsh. 80.

The acceptance or non-acceptance does not vary the responsibility of an indorser, whose duty it is to pay the bill when due, if the prior parties do not. Tanner v. Bean, 6 D. & R. 338; 4 B. & C. 312.

But the indorsee must endeavour to receive the money from the drawer before he can resort to the indorser. Hull v. Pitfield, 1 Wils. 47.

An indorser is liable upon a bill which is returned for non-acceptance before the expiration of the time limited for payment. Ballingall v. Gloster, 3 East, 481; 4 Esp. 268.

The payee of a bill, having presented it for acceptance, which was refused, without giving notice to the drawer or indorser, indorsed over the bill, and acceptance was again refused to the indorsee:—Held, that he might still recover on the bill against the drawer, notwithstanding the laches of the payee. O'Keefe v. Dunn, 6 Taunt. 305; 1 Marsh. 613. And see Dunn v. O'Keefe (in error), 5 M. & S. 282.

In an action against drawer or indorser of a bill dishonoured by non-payment after being accepted, it is unnecessary to state the acceptance in the declaration. Jones v. Morgan, 2 Camp. 474.

In an action by indorsee against indorser, the declaration stated that S. drew his bill in favour of the defendant; that the defendant indorsed the bill to the plaintiff, and that the acceptor did not pay it, although it was presented for payment, of which the defendant had notice. The defendant pleaded that, after the indorsement to the plaintiff, and before it became due, the plaintiff, being the holder, indorsed it to some person unknown, who presented it to G. for acceptance; that G. refused to accept it, and that the defendant had no notice of the dishonour for non-acceptance:—Held, that the plea was not bad in omitting to state that the plaintiff was not a bona fide indorsee for value, or before the bill became due, or without knowledge of the dishonour for non-acceptance; the defendant not being bound to make these averments. Bartlett v. Benson, 14 M. & W. 733; 3 D. & L. 274; 15 L. J., Ex. 23.

The holder of a bill on non-acceptance, and protest and notice thereon, has an immediate right of action against the drawer, and does not require a fresh right of action on the non-payment of the bill when due. Whithead v. Walker, 9 M. & W. 506.

— When Statute of Limitations begins to run.—The Statute of Limitations, therefore, runs against him from the former and not from the latter period. Id.

Indorsement as Co-Sureties—Liability of Indorsers to equal Contribution inter se.—The or note must in the absence of all evidence to the contrary be determined according to the ordinary principles of the law merchant, whereby a prior indorser must indemnify a subsequent one. But the whole circumstances attendant upon the making, issue, and transference of a bill or note may be legitimately referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the true relation to each other of the parties who put their signatures upon it either as makers or indorsers; and reasonable inferences derived from these facts and circumstances are admitted to the effect of qualifying, altering, or even inverting the relative liabilities which the law merchant would otherwise assign to them. Macdonald v. Whitfield, 8 App. Cas. 733; 52 L. J., P. C. 70; 49 L. T. 466—P. C.

Where the directors of a company mutually agreed with each other to become sureties to the bank for the same debts of the company, and in pursuance of that agreement successively indorsed three promissory notes of the company:—Held, that they were entitled and liable to equal contribution, inter se, and were not liable to indemnify each other successively according to the priority of their indorsements. Reynolds v. Wheeler (10 C. B., N. S. 561) approved. Steele v. McKinlay (5 App. Cas. 754) distinguished. Id.

Drawer of Foreign Bill.—The drawer of a foreign bill is liable immediately upon the refusal of the drawee to accept, before the time for payment has expired. Bright v. Parrier, Bull., N. P. 269; 3 Burr. 1687; S. P., Milford v. Mayor, 1 Dougl. 55.

On Dishonour.—The drawer is only bound to pay within a reasonable time after receiving notice of the bill being dishonoured; therefore, where he received notice the day after the bill became due, a tender on the following day was held to be in time. Walker v. Barnes, 1 Marsh. 36; 7 Taunt. 240.

What Law governs.—If a bill is drawn in one country and payable in another, and is dishonoured, the drawer is liable according to the lex loci contractus, and not the law of the country where the bill is made payable. Allen v. Kemble, 6 Moore, P. C. C. 314; 13 Jur. 287.

But where a bill is drawn generally, the liabilities of the drawer, acceptor, and indorsers, are governed by the laws of the countries in which the drawing, acceptance, and indorsement respectively take place. Id.

Therefore, where A. (resident in Demerara) drew a bill in favour of B. (also resident in Demerara) upon C., resident in Scotland, and C. accepted it, making it payable in London. B. indorsed the bill to D., who afterwards became bankrupt. When C.'s acceptance became due, he indorsed in blank, and delivered to the plaintiff in England, and indorsed by him, and delivered to B. in France. The bill was duly presented in France, and dishonoured. A notice of dishonour was given—good by the law of France, but bad by the law of England:—Held, that the notice of dishonour was good, because due notice is such notice as can be reasonably required under the circumstances, and it is reasonable to hold that notice of dishonour, according to the law of the place where the bill is payable, is reasonable notice for the different countries of the different parties to a bill, unless the particular circumstances of the case are exceptional. Hirckfield v. Smith, 1 L. R., C. P. 340; 35 L. J., C. P. 177; 12 Jur., N. S. 523; 14 L. T. 886; 14 W. R. 455; 1 H. & R. 284.

Adoption of Forged Signature by Silence—Estoppel.—A person who knows that a bank is relying upon his forged signature to a bill, cannot lie by and not divulge the fact until he sees that the position of the bank is altered for the worse. But there is no principle on which his mere silence for a fortnight from the time when he first knew of the forgery, during which the position of the bank was in no way altered or prejudiced, can be held to be an admission or adoption of liability, or an estoppel. The names of A. & B. appeared on a bill as drawers and indorsers to the B. L. Co. The B. L. Co.'s Inverness bank discounted it for C., who signed it as acceptor. They had had no previous dealings with A. or B. Being dishonoured when due, notice to that effect was sent to A. & B., and received late on a Saturday, but they did not communicate with the bank. On the following Monday, being the 14th of April, C. brought to the B. L. Co. a blank bill with A. & B.'s names as drawers and indorsers, apparently in the same handwriting as the previous bill. It was agreed to accept it as a renewal of the previous bill, but for a less amount, the difference being paid in cash by C. Three days before it was due, notice was sent to A. & B., and again when it was dishonoured, and then through the B. L. Co.'s law agent. A fortnight after the first notice the B. L. Co. were informed for the first time that A. & B.'s signatures were forgeries, and they declined to pay the amount in the bill. A. alleged that he called on C. on the 14th of April about the first bill, that C. admitted that he had forged his name, handed him the bill, and solemnly assured him that it had been taken up by cash; and so assured he did not think it necessary to communicate with the bank. He admitted that on that day he drank with C. and borrowed 4l. of him. He denied positively any knowledge of the second bill until he received the bank notices. C. was convicted of the forgery. The B. L. Co. charged A. with pay-

On Accommodation Bills—At Law.]—The acceptor of a bill for the accommodation of the drawer is not discharged by time given to the drawer. Raggett v. Amore, 4 Taunt. 730; S. P., Collett v. Haigh, 3 Camp. 281; Kerrison v. Cooke, 3 Camp. 362; Fentum v. Pocock, 5 Taunt. 192; Price v. Edmunds, 10 B. & C. 578.

Action against maker of a note; plea, that it was a joint and several note, made by the defendant and S., and for his accommodation, and in order that he might get it discounted by the plaintiff; that the defendant had no other value or consideration for making it, and that he made it as a mere surety for S., of which the plaintiff had notice; and that although the note was due in the hands of the plaintiff for six months, yet the defendant had no notice, till the commencement of the action, of its non-payment by S.; and that the plaintiff gave time for payment to S. to the prejudice, and without the knowledge or consent of the defendant—is bad on general demurrer. Clarke v. Wilson, 3 M. & W. 208.

Action upon a note, payable one month after date. A plea, that the note was made by the defendant jointly with J.; that the defendant never had or received consideration for the note, but that the same was made by him as surety for J.; that after the note became due it was agreed between the plaintiff and J., without the consent of the defendant, that time should be given to J., and that time was accordingly given to him, without the consent of the defendant—is bad, as it substitutes one contract for another, sets up a different promise and liability from that which appears on the face of the note, and allows consideration with regard to the principal debt. Smith v. James, 2 El. & Bl. 50, n.; 22 L. J., Q. B. 267, n.; 17 Jur. 1119, n.; S. P., Harrison v. Courtauld, 3 B. & Ad. 36.

In an action by indorsees against the acceptor of a bill, he pleaded as an equitable defence, that he was surety for Messrs. P., the indorsers, and that the indorsees discharged him by giving time to Messrs. P. by a composition deed. According to the terms of the deed, it appeared that, in the event of certain proposals therein mentioned being carried into effect, the indorsees covenanted not to enforce claims against any parties to bills in their hands, who as between themselves and Messrs. P., were not then liable on such bills; but it was provided that the plaintiffs' right against such parties should not be prejudiced in the event of the proposals not being fully carried into effect. The bill was in the plaintiffs' hands when the deed was executed. It was apparent from the terms of the proposals that they knew that the parties to some of the bills in their hands were not liable to Messrs. P., but it was admitted that they had no express notice that the defendant was in that position. The deed remained in full force for two years, when Messrs. P. made default in performing their part of it, and the plaintiffs thereupon brought their action. The jury found that the defendant was, in fact, only an accommodation acceptor, and therefore not liable to Messrs. P.:—Held, that the facts supported the plea, notwithstanding the proviso therein contained, the effect of the deed being to give time to Messrs. P. during the two years which elapsed before they made default, and thus to discharge their sureties from liability. Bailey v. Edwards, 4 B. & S. 761; 34 L. J., Q. B. 41; 11 Jur., N. S. 134; 12 W. R. 337.

B. agreed to advance to C. 650*l.* on security of a mortgage deed, and on a note by C., and two sureties for 150*l.*, part thereof, as a collateral security. The note was drawn on the 7th of December, and was payable on demand, with interest at 4*l.* 10*s.* per cent. during forbearance. About the same time the sum of 153*l.* was paid over to C. for his immediate necessities, and on the 22nd the deed was executed by B., C., his wife, and W., as surety. C., by the deed, covenanted to pay 650*l.* on the 22nd June following, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. In an action on the note by B. against the sureties:—Held, that the remedy on the simple contract was not merged in the deed, the two securities not being co-extensive; and that the covenant in the deed, giving time to the principal debtor, did not operate to discharge the sureties to the note. Boaler v. Mayor, 11 Jur., N. S. 565; 12 L. T. 457; 13 W. R. 775.

— In Equity.]—Indorsees of bills as a security for a floating balance due on the accounts between them and the drawer, had notice that the acceptance was from the drawer; they afterwards entered into an agreement with the latter that the existing debt should be liquidated by the drawer building for them certain ships, and should, in the meantime, be secured by a policy of assurance:—Held, first, that time was thus given to the principal debtor, and that the surety was released in equity, if not at law also. Davies v. Stainbank, 6 De G., Mac. & G. 679.

Held, secondly, that a creditor, who holds a floating guarantee from a surety, cannot, without the surety's consent, give time to the principal debtor as to a portion of the debt, without reserving the creditor's rights against the surety, and yet hold the surety liable for that portion. Id.

Action by payee against maker of a note. Plea, on equitable grounds, that the note was made by the defendant jointly with H. as the surety only of H., and was delivered to the plaintiff, and accepted by him, upon an express agreement that the defendant should be liable thereon as surety only for H., and that the plaintiff at the time the note was made had knowledge of the same having been so made by him as such surety; and that the plaintiff, without the consent of the defendant, gave H. time for the payment of the note:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to judgment, on the ground that the plea sufficiently stated that the relation of principal and surety existed between the defendant and the principal debtor inter se, and that the plaintiff had knowledge of that fact when the note was made and received by him, and when he gave time to the principal debtor. Pooley v. Harradine, 7 El. & Bl. 431; 26 L. J., Q. B. 156; 3 Jur., N. S. 488; 5 W. R. 405.

In an action by payee against maker, a plea, on equitable ground, that the note was the joint and several note of the defendant and T., and was made by the defendant as surety only for T.; that the note was delivered to the plaintiff on the terms that the defendant should be liable as surety only, and was made with notice to and knowledge by the plaintiff that the defendant was surety only; and that afterwards the plaintiff, without the defendant's knowledge or consent, gave time to T., but for which the plaintiff might have obtained payment from T. At the trial it was proved that the plaintiff gave time to T.; and the jury found that the defendant was surety, as between himself and T., and that the plaintiff knew it, but did not agree, nor did the defendant stipulate that he should be treated by the plaintiff as surety or otherwise than as a maker of the note:—Held, that the defendant's right to relief, in equity, arose from the existence of the relation of surety and principal between the defendant and T., and from the plaintiff's knowledge at the time he took the note; that therefore the fact that the plaintiff had not agreed to treat the defendant as surety did not debar the defendant from such relief. Greenough v. McClelland, 2 El. & El. 424; 30 L. J., Q. B. 15; 6 Jur., N. S. 772; 2 L. T. 571; 8 W. R. 612—Ex. Ch.; S. P., Taylor v. Burgess, 5 H. & N. 1; 29 L. J., Ex. 7.

In an action on a note payable on demand, the defendant pleaded as an equitable defence, that he signed the note only to secure a debt due from S. (one of the makers) to the plaintiffs, and that they knowing this, without the defendant's consent, for a good consideration, agreed to give S. time for payment of the note, whereby he had been damaged. The only evidence in support of the plea was, that the principal had repeatedly prepaid the plaintiffs a certain sum as interest in order to obtain forbearance for successive periods of three months:—Held, that this evidence was insufficient to sustain the plea. Rayner v. Fussey, 28 L. J., Ex. 132.

Waiver of Laches.—A letter written by an indorser of a bill who had been applied to for payment, after several days' laches, telling the plaintiff that he would not remit till he had received the bill, and desiring the plaintiff, if he considered the defendant as unsafe, to return the bill to Trevor & Co. (who were prior indorsers on the bill, and also bankers at the defendant's place of residence), was held not to be a waiver of such laches and promise to pay, but that the defendant, on discovering that in law he was discharged, might refuse payment. Borradaile v. Lowe, 4 Taunt. 93.

A holder of a bill before it was due having tendered it for acceptance, which was refused, kept it till due, when it was tendered for payment and refused, and then immediately returned it to the second indorser, who, not knowing of the laches, took up the bill:—Held, that his ignorance, when he paid the bill, of the laches of the former holder, did not entitle him to recover against the first indorser, who set up such defence. Roscow v. Hardy, 12 East, 434; 2 Camp. 458.

XIII. DEFENCES IN ACTIONS ON.

1. NO ORIGINAL LIABILITY.

a. Sufficiency of Consideration.

Given by Widow for Debt due from Husband.]

—It is a sufficient consideration for a note, payable in twelve months, that it was given by a widow for a debt due by her husband, even though before she took out administration. Searle v. Waterworth, 6 D. P. C. 684; 4 M. & W. 9; 1 H. & H. 281; 2 Jur. 745.

And, clearly, in an action against the widow for the amount of the note, she will be liable, unless she shews that there were no assets of her deceased husband. Id.

But where, in an action against the widow on the note, it did not appear on the face of the record that the maker of the note was the wife of the deceased, the Court of Error reversed the judgment, non obstante veredicto, which had been entered on the record. Nelson v. Searle (in error), 4 M. & W. 795; 1 H. & H. 456; 3 Jur. 290.

Given by Married Woman for Debt of Husband.]—A note given by a married woman as a security for advances made to her husband, and which in equity binds her separate estate, is a good consideration for another promissory note given by her after her husband's death for a balance then due, although the former note is barred by the Statute of Limitations. La Touche v. La Touche, 3 H. & C. 576; 34 L. J., Ex. 85; 11 Jur., N. S. 271; 11 L. T. 773; 13 W. R. 563.

Given as Security for Debt of Father.]—The defendant's father owed the plaintiff money for goods sold; and for the price of these goods the defendant made his note in his own name, and gave it to the plaintiff, who was cognizant of all the facts, and that the defendant had received no consideration for the note:—Held, that the circumstances could not be given in evidence under a plea of accommodation bill, and that there was in this case an original liability on the part of the defendant, and that for a good consideration, viz., family affection. Cook v. Long, Car. & M. 510.

Given for Debt of third Party.]—A person who gives another a bill, payable at a future day, for the debt of a third party due to that other, cannot, in an action against him on the bill, set up want of consideration as a defence. Balfour v. Sea Fire Life Assurance Company, 3 C. B., N. S. 300; 27 L. J., C. P. 17; 3 Jur., N. S. 1304.

In Favour of Godchild.]—In a suit, instituted in equity, a note by a testator in renewal of a previous note for which there was no consideration, to secure a sum of money to a godchild, the testator having paid interest on the note:—Held, that the renewed note constituted a debt against the testator's assets in priority to legatees, but not to the prejudice of creditors. Dawson v. Kearton, 3 Sm. & G. 186; 2 Jur., N. S. 113; 25 L. J., Ch. 166.

In Favour of Infant.]—Where a note, expressed to be for value received, was made in favour of an infant aged nine; and in an action against the executors of the maker, no evidence of consideration being given, the judge told the jury, that the note being for value received, imported that a good consideration existed, and that gratitude to the infant's father, or affection to the child, would suffice:—Held, that although the jury might have presumed that a good consideration was given, yet that those pointed out were insufficient. Holliday v. Atkinson, 8 D. & R. 163; 5 B. & C. 501.

—Necessaries supplied to Infant—Representation as to being of full Age.]—In an action on foot of promissory notes bearing interest, one of the makers of the notes pleaded infancy. Reply—1st. That the consideration for the notes consisted of money lent for the purpose of being applied, and afterwards, in fact, expended, in necessaries for such defendant. 2nd. That at the time of the loan, and of the making of the notes, the defendant fraudulently represented himself to be of full age, and therefore induced the plaintiff to advance the money :—Held, on demurrer, that both replies were bad. Bateman v. Kingston, 6 L. R., Ir. 328.

Agreement as to Deposit of Will.—A. died, leaving a will which contained a bequest of 60*l.* to B. The will (which was assumed to be invalid) being in the hands of B. and C., the heir-at-law, being desirous of obtaining possession of it, it was agreed between them that, upon C. giving a note for 60*l.* payable on demand to B., the will should be deposited, together with the note, with O., to be delivered up to C. on his paying the 60*l.* Subsequently a meeting of all the parties interested in the property took place, and C. induced B. to procure the will from O., for the inspection of his (B.'s) attorney, which she did ; and at this meeting a general settlement took place, upon the footing that the will was not a valid instrument, nothing being then said about the note. The will, however, remained in the hands of C.'s attorney :—Held, that there was a sufficient consideration for the note ; and that B. might maintain an action upon it, although it had never been actually delivered to B. with C.'s authority. Smith v. Smith, 13 C. B., N. S. 418 ; 32 L. J., C. P. 149.

Treaty of Marriage.—On a treaty of marriage a promissory note was given in consideration of the marriage, which was afterwards solemnized, and an action was subsequently brought by the indorsee against the makers of the note :—Held, that as the marriage, the consideration for the note, could not be undone, it was not competent to the makers to avoid the note upon the ground of fraud practised during the marriage treaty. Hogan v. Healy, 11 Ir. R., C. L. 119. Reversing 10 Ir. R., C. L. 6.

Subsequent Written Agreement without Consideration.—It is no defence to an action by the administrator of the payee of a note payable on demand, that by a subsequent written agreement the payee agreed that the amount of the note should be paid and entered by quarterly instalments and interest, unless the subsequent agreement is founded on some valid consideration. McManus v. Bark, 5 L. R., Ex. 65 ; 39 L. J., Ex. 65 ; 21 L. T. 676.

Future Services.—To constitute the rendering of future services by a payee a good consideration for a note, there must be some binding contract for such services. Hulse v. Hulse, 17 C. B. 711 ; 25 L. J., C. P. 177.

A., having performed gratuitously services for B., received from him a note, with an understanding that he should accept it not only as a gift for what was paid, but that it should be a remuneration for future services to be rendered as long as B. should require them. A. continued to perform the services until B.'s death, when he sued his executors upon the note :—Held, that as there was no contract binding upon A. to perform future services, there was no consideration for the note. Id.

A., having appointed B. his executor, gave him a note, payable on demand, for 100*l.*, in consideration of the trouble he would have in the office of executor after his death. B. died in A.'s lifetime, not having put the note in suit :—Held, in an action upon it by B.'s executors, that the consideration had totally failed, and the action, therefore, was not maintainable. Solly v. Bird, 6 C. & P. 316 ; S. C., nom. Solly v. Hinde, 2 C. & M. 516 ; 4 Tyr. 305.

For future Payment of Money.—The existence of an agreement by which A. has undertaken, for good consideration, to pay B. a sum of money at a stipulated time, is a good consideration for a promissory note for the same sum given by A. to B., and payable on demand. Upon a dissolution of partnership, an agreement was entered into, which, after reciting that one of the partners had brought 2,000*l.* into the business, provided that the other partner should pay him that sum within three years, with interest at five per cent., in full satisfaction of all his share in the stock, credits, and effects of the partnership, and should indemnify him against the debts of the partnership. Subsequently, a promissory note for the same 2,000*l.*, payable on demand, was given to the retiring partner :—Held, that there was a sufficient consideration for the note. Stott v. Fairlamb, 53 L. J., Q. B. 47 ; 49 L. T. 525—C. A. Reversing 52 L. J., Q. B. 420 ; 48 L. T. 574.

Given by Agent for Debt of Principal.—Trustees under a local act called on the defendant, who was agent of the owner of certain houses, to pay certain expenses chargeable under the act on the owner. The defendant told the trustees that he was not owner, but that B. was, and that B., and not he, the defendant, was liable. The trustees bona fide believing the defendant to be personally liable, threatened to take proceedings against him to enforce payment ; on which he, notwithstanding he knew that he was not really liable, the trustees consenting to take a less amount than their claim by instalments, gave them notes to meet the instalments. The trustees having sued the defendant on the notes :—Held, that there was good consideration for them, and that the trustees were entitled to recover. Cook v. Wright, 1 B. & S. 559 ; 30 L. J., Q. B. 321 ; 4 L. T. 704.

Purchase-money on Sale which goes off.—A plea to an action by payee against maker of a note, payable on demand ; that the note was given as and for the purchase-money to be paid to the plaintiff for land agreed to be sold by the plaintiff to the defendant ; and that no memorandum or note of the contract in writing was signed by the defendant, or any person lawfully authorized by him, and that there was not any consideration or value for the making or payment of the note, except as aforesaid, is bad. Jones v. Jones, 6 M. & W. 84.

Lease not Executed.—A. agreed to execute a lease of premises to B., who was to pay a certain sum for it ; B., who was let into possession, accepted a bill for the consideration-money drawn on him by A. : it is no defence to an action on the bill by A. against B., that the former refused to execute the lease, but his remedy is on the agreement. Moggridge v. Jones, 14 East, 486 ; 3 Camp. 38.

Judgment Debt.—To an action against maker would have been a defence to an action by the plaintiffs and W., it was equally available against the plaintiffs. Astley v. Johnson, 5 H. & N. 137; 39 L. J., Ex. 161; 2 L. T. 406; 3 W. R. 218.

Given on Sale of Goods—Purchaser refusing to accept—Not up to Sample.—A defendant, having some bark to sell, applied to the plaintiffs to find a purchaser. The plaintiffs applied to T., who agreed to purchase the bark if equal to sample. The bark having been shipped, the defendant sent the plaintiffs the invoice, and requested them to accept a bill for the price, which they did, upon the offer of a del credere commission. The bark not being equal to sample, T. refused to accept it, and the plaintiffs having been called upon to pay the bill when due:—Held, that they were entitled to recover the amount of the bill as money paid to the defendant's use. Hooper v. Trefry, 1 Ex. 17; 16 L. J., Ex. 233.

To an action by indorsee against drawer, he pleaded that the bill was given in payment of the price of seventeen pockets of hops, sold by the plaintiff to the defendant as hops of a certain grower, and answering certain samples, to be delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant within a reasonable time; that, although a reasonable time had elapsed, the plaintiff had not delivered to the defendant any hops answering the samples, or any hops whatever; and that there was no consideration for the bill except as aforesaid. The plaintiff delivered seventeen pockets of hops, but inferior to the samples:—Held, that the allegation in the plea, that the plaintiff had not delivered any hops whatever, was immaterial, and might be rejected; and that without it the plea showed a total failure of consideration, and was an answer to the action. Wells v. Hopkins, 5 M. & W. 7; 2 H. & H. 11; 3 Jur. 797.

Where an action was brought on a bill given for goods sold and delivered, and the party to whom the goods were sold alleged that he had been fraudulently deceived in his contract, the goods delivered being inferior both in quality and quantity to what he had ordered:—Held, that he could not maintain a bill for an account and for an injunction to restrain the action, inasmuch as his object was to reduce the amount of the bill by the damages which he claimed for the breach of contract; and that as this was not the subject of set-off at law, it could not be the subject of account in equity. Glennie v. Imrie, 3 Y. & C. 436; 3 Jur. 432.

In an action by drawer against acceptor of bills given for goods supplied, which were to be "of good quality and moderate price," and were estimated at about 400l., and the bills given for that amount, it is no defence that the goods turned out to be worth much less than the estimated price, and that the acceptor has paid more than the real value of the goods on the bills. Obbard v. Betham, M. & M. 483.

—Forcibly Retaken by Vendor.—In an action by payee against acceptor of a bill drawn for the balance of purchase-money of articles bought at a sale, it is no defence, that, two months after delivery of the goods to the vendee, the vendor forcibly retook possession of them; for the vendee cannot treat that act as a rescinding of the contract, but must bring trespass. Stephens v. Wilkinson, 2 B. & Ad. 320.

—Delay in Delivery.—H. acting as agent for N., in London, bargained with the defendant, at Hartlepool, for a cargo of coals, to be supplied to N.; payment to be in cash, less discount, in exchange for documents. The coals were shipped, and the shipping documents sent to the defendant's agent in London. N. being unprovided with money, H. agreed with the plaintiff that a bill at fourteen days should be drawn by the plaintiff on N., and indorsed by the plaintiff to H. The bill was accordingly drawn and indorsed on the 26th of March, and was indorsed by H. to the defendant, and by him indorsed to his bankers, who gave him credit for the amount, and again indorsed it. The defendant, on receipt of the bill, caused inquiries to be made as to the parties to the bill; and the result not being satisfactory, the shipping documents were not handed over, and consequently, on the 29th of March, N. repudiated the contract. On the 1st of April, H. offered the coals to N., but he refused to accept them. The plaintiff was afterwards compelled to pay the bill to indorsees for value:—Held, that the defendant having agreed to accept the bill in payment for the coals, there was a good consideration for the acceptance and indorsement of the bill, and that the delay in the delivery of the coals to the plaintiff, although it might give the plaintiff a cause of action against the defendant, did not amount to a total failure of consideration, nor entitle him to rescind the contract in pursuance of which it was given. Osborne v. Donald, 12 W. R. 9. Affirmed on appeal, 12 W. R. 831—Ex. Ch.

Contract Work—Improperly done.—A plea to an action by drawer against acceptor of a bill for 20l. 8s. 6d., that, before the drawing and acceptance of the bill, it was agreed that the plaintiff should do certain carpenter's work for the defendant for 63l.; that the defendant paid the plaintiff 43l. in part payment of the 63l., and afterwards accepted the bill on account of the residue of the 63l.; that the plaintiff did not perform his agreement, but neglected to perform some work, and performed, in an unworkmanlike manner, other work necessary to be done under the agreement; and that the sum of 43l. was more than the whole work done was worth,—is bad, as disclosing, not a total failure of consideration for the bill, but only a partial failure of the consideration, to which the money payment and the bill were alike applicable. Trickey or Briquet v. Larne, 6 M. & W. 278; 8 D. P. C. 174.

Goods Sold under Warranty—Breach of.—In an action on a bill given for the price of goods sold under a warranty, a breach of the warranty is an answer to the plaintiff's demand, if the defendant has tendered back the goods, although the plaintiff did not accept them. Lewis v. Cosgrave, 2 Taunt. 2.

A plea to an action by drawer against acceptor, that the goods which formed the consideration for the bill were sold under a warranty that they were fit and proper materials for the external roofing of buildings, and that they were not fit and proper, and that they were useless. An invoice was adduced at the trial, which consisted of three items, flooring, roofing and material, which were proved to be the goods for which the bill was given.—Held, that no warranty could be implied as to the last item, that the material was fit for the purposes of either flooring or roofing.

Partial Failure of a plea that the 10*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.*, as fraudulently, due to the defendant defendant to A. and by means of defendant to defendant proved and found obtained by a plaintiff that the sum that such represents fraud :—Held, a plea, for that the "deceitfully" might be in substance consideration.
481; 20 L. J., C.

In an action for 25*l.* 10*s.* 3 value received defendant pleaded, that he held a messuage a certain rent, and accepted in payment part of the rent; the plaintiff assigned the defendant had received and accepted due, and before assignment to the plaintiff of and from him; and that, the acceptance failed :—Held, on ground that it was a consideration, though and that fraud was not necessarily true in the plea. Ct consideration for so doing, or for paying the amount thereof, was bad on special demurrer. Stoughton v. Kilmorey (Earl), 2 C., M. & R. 62; 3 D. P. C. 705; 5 Tyr. 568; 1 Gale, 91.

But was good after verdict. Easton v. Pratchett, 1 C., M. & R. 798; 3 D. P. C. 472; 6 C. & P. 736; 4 Tyr. 472; 1 Gale, 30; S. P. (in error), 2 C., M. & R. 542; 4 D. P. C. 549; 1 Gale, 250; 5 Tyr. 1129.

In an action by drawer and payee against the acceptor, a plea, that he received no consideration from the plaintiff for accepting the bill is insufficient. Graham v. Pitman, 5 N. & M. 37; 3 A. & E. 521; 1 H. & W. 132.

In an action by an indorsee against acceptor, a plea, that there was not at any time any consideration for his acceptance or paying the bill, is bad. Reynolds v. Iremey, 3 D. P. C. 453.

In an action against acceptor, a plea is repugnant, which shows a consideration for his acceptance, and concludes that he has not received any value or consideration for the payment thereof. Byass v. Wylie, or White, 1 C., M. & R. 686; 3 D. P. C. 524; 5 Tyr. 377; 1 Gale, 50.

To an action on a bill for 50*l.*, drawn by M. upon and accepted by the defendant, and by M. indorsed to the plaintiff, the defendant pleaded, first, that the bill was drawn by M. and accepted by the defendant, and indorsed by M. to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff first held the same for the special purpose of getting the same discounted, and to hand the proceeds to the defendant; that the plaintiff, acting in fraudulent collusion with M., got the bill discounted, and, contrary to and in violation of the special purpose for which the bill was drawn, accepted and indorsed, and for which the plaintiff first held the same, handed to the defendant 17*l.*, and no more; and that there never was any other consideration for the acceptance by him of the bill, or for the plaintiff being the holder:—Held, that the plea, though informal, was good in substance, since it confessed a prima facie title in the plaintiff by indorsement, and avoided it by shewing that he was the holder of the bill for a special purpose only, and without consideration. Dobie v. Larkan, 10 Ex. 776.

Indorsee against drawer. Plea, that his indorsement was in blank; that he delivered the bill to A. (not a party to the bill) only to get it discounted for him; that A. fraudulently, and in violation of that special purpose, delivered it to B.; of all which the plaintiff had notice—is bad, for not shewing distinctly that the defendant never had value for the bill. Noel v. Rich, 2 C., M. & R. 360; 4 D. P. C. 228; 1 Gale, 225; 5 Tyr. 632. And see Noel v. Boyd, 4 D. P. C. 415.

To an action against drawer and indorser of two bills, he pleaded that the plaintiff was applied to for a loan of money to B., but agreed to give two-thirds of the amount in money and one-third in wine, upon having the two bills given to him as a security for the wine; that the contract for the sale and delivering of the wine was a gross fraud, and that the defendant had not had any value:—Held, that the plea was bad, as being only an answer to a part, and that the allegation of fraud was too general. Connop v. Holmes, 4 D. P. C. 451; 2 C., M. & R. 719; 1 Tyr. & G. 85.

To an action by indorsee against acceptor, he pleaded that the drawer indorsed the bill to the plaintiff without value or consideration, and that the plaintiff always held the same without value or consideration, and that after the bill became due the drawer accepted scrip certificates from the defendant in satisfaction and discharge of the bill:—Held, after verdict, that the plea was bad. Milnes v. Dawson, 5 Ex. 948; 20 L. J., Ex. 81.

To an action by indorsee against maker of a note, he pleaded, that he made the note and indorsed it to the London and Westminster Bank, as a collateral security for advances made, or to be made, to the Marylebone Bank, upon the terms, that, if those advances should be repaid before the note became due, he should not be called upon to pay it. The plea averred that the advances so made were repaid before the note became due; that he had no value for his indorsement; and that the note was indorsed after it became due:—Held, that it was an essential allegation, without which the plea must fail, that the advances were repaid before the note became due; and, therefore, that it was a misdirection for the judge, on the trial of this issue, to tell the jury, that, if the note was given as a part security for the advances so made to the Marylebone Bank, the maker was entitled to a verdict. Richards v. Macey, 14 M. & W. 484; 14 L. J., Ex. 359.

To a note payable on demand, the defendant pleaded that at the time of the making the note the plaintiff was illegally possessed of the goods of the defendant, and wrongfully detained the same, without any right or title so to do, and refused to give them up unless the defendant would make and deliver to him a note payable on demand; that he, in order to gain possession of his goods, and for no other purpose, made and delivered to the plaintiff the note:—Held, that the plea was bad, for not shewing the circumstances under which the plaintiff became possessed of the goods, and negating any colour or pretence of right in him to detain them. Keams v. Durell, 6 C. B. 596; 6 D. & L. 357; 18 L. J., C. P. 28; 13 Jur. 153.

A plea that there were accounts between the plaintiff and the defendant, upon which the plaintiff alleged that a balance was due to him; that thereupon the defendant, at the request of the plaintiff, and on the faith of such allegation, made and delivered to the plaintiff a note for and on account of the balance; that the note was delivered to the plaintiff on the condition that he should not demand payment, unless it should appear that such balance was due; that at the time of making the note there was not any balance or money whatever due from the defendant to the plaintiff, nor was the defendant indebted to the plaintiff in any sum of money whatever:—Held, a good plea of want of consideration; that the agreement therein did not negative the absolute contract stated in the note; and that it was not necessary that the plea should allege that the agreement not to enforce the note, if no debt were due, was in writing. Id.

In an action on a bill by indorsee against acceptor, a plea alleging only that the acceptance was obtained by fraud, is bad. Bramah v. Roberts, 1 Bing. N. C. 469; 1 Scott, 350; 3 D. P. C. 392.

In an action on a note, a plea that the note was given without consideration, and that it was obtained from the defendant by the plaintiff upon a representation that he, the defendant, no such sum of money, or any part thereof, was ever due, is sufficient, without alleging that the representation was made fraudulently. Southall v. Rigg, 11 C. B. 481; 20 L. J., C. P. 145; 15 Jur. 706.

In an action by payee against maker, on a note payable on demand with interest a plea that tioned at the interview concerning her non-liability:—Held, that the note so obtained was invalid, and that the case was too plain to render it necessary to send it to be tried at law. Coward v. Hughes, 1 Kay & J. 443. See La Touche v. La Touche, 3 H. & C. 576.

Promissory Note to Trustee of Illegal Company.]—Persons to a number exceeding twenty had formed themselves into a society called the "Ipswich Mechanics' Mutual Benefit Society." The object of the society was to raise, by monthly subscriptions from the members, a fund for the purpose of making advances to members. The society was not registered under the Companies Act, 1862:—Held, that a promissory note given by a member to the trustee of the society to secure a sum of money advanced to such member under the rules of the society was invalid, and no action could be maintained thereon. Jennings v. Hammond, 9 Q. B. D. 225; 51 L. J., Q. B. 493; 31 W. R. 40.

Forged Bill.]—A. accepted a bill for 1,000*l.* for B.'s accommodation. A bill for that amount, purporting to be drawn by B. and accepted by A., and by B. indorsed to C., and by C. to D. for value, was afterwards presented to A. for payment. A. having had an opportunity of inspecting the bill, gave D. a cheque for 100*l.*, and a renewed bill at three months (similarly drawn and indorsed) for 1,000*l.* in exchange for the bill so presented to him. A. afterwards discovered that the acceptance so delivered up to him was forged:—Held, no answer to an action by C. upon the substituted bill. Mather v. Maidstone (Lord), 18 C. B. 273; 25 L. J., C. P. 311.

If A., the indorsee for value of a bill to which B., the indorser, has forged the acceptance of C., delivers it up to B. on his solicitation, and receives from him, in lieu thereof, a bill accepted by D., without consideration, A. may maintain an action on this bill against D., unless there was an agreement between him and B. to stifle a prosecution for forgery. Wallace v. Hardacre, 1 Camp. 45.

Against Bankruptcy Law.]—A. having petitioned the court for the relief of insolvent debtors, his discharge was opposed by B. An agreement was entered into between them, that A. should give B. a note as a security for his debt, and that B., in consideration thereof, should not oppose the making of a final order for protection. This arrangement was sanctioned by the commissioner of the court, who adjourned the final hearing to allow of its being effected. The note was accordingly given, the opposition withdrawn, and the final order for protection made:—Held, that the agreement was illegal as against the policy of the law, and that the note given in pursuance of it was therefore void. Humphreys v. Welling, 1 H. & C. 7.

Against Gaming Law.]—To an action on a bill drawn by B. upon and accepted by the defendant, and indorsed by B. to the plaintiff, he pleaded, that before accepting the bill he authorized B., in his own name, but on account of the defendant, to lay bets on horse races; and B., in pursuance of such authority, laid such bets, and lost them; that B. afterwards voluntarily, and without the request of the defendant, paid the losses on such bets; the bets were wagering contracts; and that the defendant accepted the bill for repayment to B. of the moneys which he had so paid; and that there was no other consideration for the acceptance, and no consideration for the indorsement:—Held, that the plea was bad; for the defendant, by giving the bill, acknowledged the money was paid on his account, and consequently that there was sufficient consideration for the payment of the bill. Oulds v. Harrison, 10 Ex. 572; 24 L. J., Ex. 66.

Against Usury Law.]—To an action against an acceptor he pleaded that he borrowed 1,500*l.* of the plaintiff, and it was agreed between them that he should pay interest at the rate of more than 5*l.* per cent. per annum, viz., 100*l.*, contrary to the statutes then in force, and that to secure the principal and interest, he accepted bills to the amount of 1,600*l.*; that these bills were dishonoured at maturity, and that after the passing of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90, the bills sued on were given by way of renewal of the old bills, and to secure the payment to the plaintiff of the money secured by the old bills, including the 100*l.* interest:—Held, that there was good consideration for the bills, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on them. Flight v. Reed, 1 H. & C. 703; 32 L. J., Ex. 265; 9 Jur., N. S. 1016; 8 L. T. 638; 11 W. R. 426.

Forbearing to Prosecute.]—A note given in consideration of the payee's forbearing to prosecute a charge against the maker of obtaining money by false pretences, is illegal, and cannot be enforced. Clubb v. Hudson, 18 C. B., N. S. 414.

On an action on a bill, the defence being that the acceptor was threatened by the drawer, that if it were not given, he would make a criminal charge:—Held, that, unless the bill was obtained solely by reason of such threat, it would be no defence. Thompson v. Holland, 11 W. R. 260.

In an action by drawer against acceptor upon a bill of exchange the defence alleged that the bill sued upon had been accepted by the defendant in consideration of the plaintiff abandoning certain civil bill proceedings pending at the time of the acceptance against Mrs. S. for the recovery of a previous bill, to which the plaintiff asserted that Mrs. S. had forged her husband's name, and forbearing to proceed with criminal proceedings which the plaintiff had threatened to institute on the ground of the alleged forgery:—Held (on demurrer), that the defence was bad on the ground that the forbearing to proceed with the criminal proceedings was not illegal, inasmuch as no criminal proceedings had actually been commenced, nor was there any reasonable or probable cause for believing a criminal act to have been committed; that therefore this position of the alleged consideration was simply nugatory, not illegal; and this being so, that the abandonment of the civil proceedings formed a valid and sufficient consideration for the acceptance of the bill. Bourke v. Mealy, 14 Cox, C. C. 329.

Compounding Felony—Liability of Acceptor—Indorsee.]—In order to render illegal the receipt of securities by a creditor from his debtor, where the debt has been contracted under circumstances which might render the debtor liable to criminal proceedings, it is not enough to shew that the creditor was thereby induced to abstain from prosecuting. Ward v. Lloyd (7 Scott, N. R. 499) followed. Williams v. Bayley (L. R., 1 H. L. 200) explained. Flower v. Sadler, 10 Q. B. D. 572—C. A. Affirming 9 Q. B. D. 83; 46 J. P. 503.

Semble, per Brett and Cotton, L. JJ., in an action by an indorsee of a bill of exchange against an acceptor for valuable consideration, it is no defence that the bill was indorsed by the drawer to the plaintiff in order to stifle a prosecution for felony. Id.

If a drawer of a bill payable to his own order, before it is indorsed, gives the acceptor a general release; this is no defence to an action by the indorsee against the acceptor unless the indorsee knew of the release. Dod v. Edwards, 2 C. & P. 602.

A. accepted a bill for the accommodation of B., the drawer, who indorsed it over as a security for a debt, and afterwards became bankrupt. The indorsee entered into an agreement with the assignees, for purchasing part of the bankrupt's property, and for the arrangement of some claims which he, the indorsee, had upon the bankrupt's estate; and he afterwards gave them a release of all demands, no mention being made, during this transaction, of the bill which had been dishonoured. He knew at the time of the agreement, but not when he took the bill, that it was accepted for accommodation:—Held, that notwithstanding the release, the acceptor was still liable at the suit of the indorsee. Harrison v. Courtauld, 3 B. & Ad. 36.

Payment within 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 19, of a bill, so as to render it no longer negotiable, must be a payment by the party ultimately liable. Thomas v. Fenton, 5 D. & L. 28; 2 B. C. Rep. 68; 16 L. J., Q. B. 362; 11 Jur. 633.

—Credit given to Person ultimately Liable.]—Credit given by the holder of a bill to the party ultimately liable, is tantamount to payment. Atkins v. Owens, 4 N. & M. 123.

Secus, as to credit given to a party not ultimately liable, as where the credit was given by the banker of the holder, such banker not being the party to the bill. Id.

When Bill is in hands of bonâ fide Holder for Value.]—Where two bills drawn by C. are accepted, and by him indorsed to his bankers, payment after they become due by the acceptor to C. is not alone sufficient to discharge him, as the holders of the bill are entitled to the amount. Field v. Carr, 5 Bing. 13; 2 M. & P. 46.

An arrangement between drawer and drawee which discharged the latter's acceptance as regards the drawer, has not that effect as regards an indorsee for valuable consideration. Clarke v. Cock, 4 East, 57.

Where the holder of a bill which was a security for a debt due from A., B., C. and D., indorsed it over and put it into the hands of B., C. and D., who settled their accounts with A., saying that the bill had been satisfied by them, but the bill itself was not produced to nor seen by A. at the time of such settlement:—Held, that this was no defence for A. in an action by the holder against A., B., C. and D., the bill not having been in fact satisfied by the persons to whom it had been indorsed and handed over. Featherstone v. Hunt, 1 B. & C. 113; 2 D. & R. 233.

—Part Payment by Stranger.]—To an action by indorsees against an acceptor, he pleaded that whilst they were the holders of the bill, B. paid them the full amount of the bill, and then became entitled to become the holder; yet they did not deliver up the bill to him, but were suing without his or any other person's authority:—Held, that the plea was bad, inasmuch as it was consistent with the facts stated in it, that they were the lawful holders of the bill, and entitled to sue upon it. Agra and Masterman's Bank v. Leighton, 4 H. & C. 656; 2 L. R., Ex. 56; 36 L. J., Ex. 33.

A plea that a bill was accepted by way of payment for certain goods agreed to be sold and shipped for the acceptor by the drawer, and that the drawer only shipped, and the acceptor only received, a portion of the goods, amounting in price and value to 1,200*l.*, and that there was no consideration for the bill except the 1,200*l.*, and that the drawer paid the full amount of the bill to the plaintiffs whilst it was in their hands, and that the acceptor has a set-off against the drawer to the extent of 1,200*l.*, is a good equitable plea. Id.

If one is sued on a bill, and it appears that the plaintiff has agreed with a third person, that if he will advance part of the sum for the defendant the plaintiff will take that in discharge of the whole debt, and such third person so advances it, it is a good defence to the action. Welby v. Drake, 1 C. & P. 557.

To an action by indorsee of a bill for 55*l.*, the defendant pleaded that the bill was an accommodation bill, that the drawer indorsed the bill and other bills to the plaintiffs as security for repayment to them of 30*l.* advanced by them to the drawer, and that the bill was satisfied by payment to them by the acceptor of one of the other bills of the money so advanced and all interest thereon:—Held, no bar to the action, the payment having been made by a stranger and not having been ratified by the plaintiffs. Kemp v. Balls, 10 Ex. 607; 24 L. J., Ex. 47.

An indorsee is entitled to proceed in an action against the acceptor, for the recovery of the costs, though, pending the action, payment in full satisfaction of the amount of the bill, with interest and all moneys due thereon, is made by another party to the bill and accepted by the plaintiff. Goodwin v. Cremer, 18 Q. B. 757; 22 L. J., Q. B. 30; 17 Jur. 2.

—Part Payment by Drawer.]—The holder of a bill, having been paid part by the drawer, can only sue the acceptor as regards that sum as trustee for the drawer. Thornton v. Maynard, 10 L. R., C. P. 695; 44 L. J., C. P. 382; 33 L. T. 433.

A vested right of action in the holder against the acceptor of a bill, can in general only be got rid of by a release, or by an accord and satisfaction as between them. But, if the bill is an accommodation bill, and the holder has notice of that fact when he receives it, payment by the drawer is a complete discharge. Cook v. Lister, 13 C. B., N. S. 543; 32 L. J., C. P. 121; 9 Jur., N. S. 823; 7 L. T. 712; 11 W. R. 369.

Bills which, as between A. and B., the respective drawers, and C., the acceptor, were in the nature of accommodation paper, were indorsed to the plaintiffs for value, and without notice of their character. A., B. and C. eventually stopped payment; and upon the winding up of their estates under inspection, the plaintiffs received on account of the bills drawn by A. upon C., 4s. in the pound from A.'s estate, and 16s. in the pound from the estate of C.; and, upon the bills drawn by B. upon C., they received 5s. 7d. in the pound from the estate of B., and 14s. 5d. in the pound from the estate of C. Upon the result of the whole transactions of consignment and discount between A. and B. and the plaintiffs, there remained a large balance due to the latter; and they sued C. upon his acceptances, seeking to recover the difference between the sums paid thereon by him and the amount of the several bills, and interest:—Held, that they were not entitled to maintain the action either in their own right or as trustees for A. or B. Ib.

— Part Payment in full Satisfaction—Lex loci Contractus.—A merchant abroad drew upon certain persons in this country a bill, and upon its becoming due paid the holder a part of the amount of the bill, both parties being at the time abroad; but such payment was made and received in full satisfaction; which payment, according to the law of the country where the bill was made, was considered to be in full satisfaction of a bill:—Held, that such payment afforded a good defence to an action on the bill in this country. Ralli v. Dennistoun, 6 Ex. 483.

In Action against Drawer or Indorser—What amounts to.—In an action by the indorsees of a bill of exchange against the accommodation drawer and indorser:—Held, that the receipt by the plaintiffs of composition notes of the acceptor, in pursuance of an arrangement in bankruptcy, was not equivalent to payment, and did not suspend their right of action against the defendant during the currency of the notes. Provincial Bank of Ireland v. Dunne, 2 Ir. L. R. 21.

The acceptor, a trader, had executed to the plaintiffs, his bankers, a mortgage for securing all debts due or to become due from him to them:—Held, that they were not bound, in the absence of express stipulation, to appropriate any part of the proceeds of the mortgage towards payment of the bill sued upon. Ib.

Semble, that the amount of the composition notes, when paid, should be appropriated by the plaintiffs in payment rateably of all the debts due to them by the acceptor, and, amongst others, of the sum due on foot of the bill sued upon. Ib.

The indorser of a bill is not discharged by reason of the holder having given the bill to the acceptor, and received his cheque for the amount, which cheque was returned for want of effects. Ridley v. Blackett, Peake's Add. Cas. 62.

— Part Payment by Indorser—Liability of Drawer.—In an action by indorsee against drawer, though the indorser has paid part of the money to the indorsee, he may recover the whole sum in the bill against the drawer. Johnson v. Kennion, 2 Wils. 262.

If the holder receives part payment from the indorser, he may still recover the residue against the drawer, if not the whole. Walwyn v. St. Quintin, 1 B. & P. 552; 2 Esp. 515.

— Part Payment by Drawer.—If the drawer of a bill payable to his own order, indorses it, and it is accepted and dishonoured, the drawer having received it back, and paid the amount to his indorsee, may return the bill to such indorsee for the purpose of his suing the acceptor upon it as trustee for the drawer. Williams v. James, 15 Q. B. 498; 19 L. J., Q. B. 445; 14 Jur. 699.

Payment is no answer to an action by such indorsee if there is evidence that when the drawer paid, the bill was left in the hands of the indorsee for the purpose of its being put in suit. Ib.

Where, after action by indorsee against acceptor, the drawer pays the indorsee part of the amount, the indorsee (unless he is suing as a trustee for the drawer) should take a verdict against the acceptor for the balance and interest only, and, when he is paid, he should give the bill up to the drawer. Hemming v. Brook, Car. & M. 57. See Purshford v. Peck, 9 M. & W. 196.

— Part Payment by Stranger.—Payment by a stranger of the amount of a bill to the bankers at whose house the bill is, by the acceptance, made payable, under an arrangement with such bankers, whereby the party paying obtains possession of the bill for a collateral purpose of his own, is not a payment of the bill by the acceptor. Deacon v. Stodhart, 2 M. & G. 317; 2 Scott, N. R. 557; 9 C. & P. 685.

Nor can such payment, if made before the bill becomes due, be considered as a payment for the honour of an indorser. Ib.

— Satisfaction as between Drawer and Indorser—Rights of Acceptor.—Satisfaction of a bill as between drawer or an indorser and an indorsee, whether before or after the bill becomes due, does not necessarily enure as a satisfaction on behalf of the acceptor, or operate to discharge him from liability to the indorsee. Jones v. Broadhurst, 9 C. B. 173.

To an action on a bill for 49l., by indorsee against acceptor, he pleaded that after the indorsement, and before action, the drawer delivered to the plaintiff who accepted goods of the value of 50l. in satisfaction of the bill, and of all damages in respect thereof, and that the plaintiff, from the time of the satisfaction of the bill, held the same against the will and consent of the drawer, and that the plaintiff commenced and prosecuted the action against and in opposition to the will and consent of the drawer:—Held, that the plea was no bar to the plaintiff's right to recover against the acceptor on the bill. Ib.

Effect of Payment.]—When the drawee of a bill, which had been dishonoured, accepted and paid other bills for the amount, taking an assignment of the mortgage upon which the original bills were secured:—Held, that there being no contract, or sufficient evidence to shew that the intention of the parties was to keep the mortgage alive, such acceptance and payment operated as an extinguishment of the principal security, and not as a transfer of the bills for which it was originally given. Simson v. Wilkinson, 2 Moore, P. C. C. 275.

When by the contract for sale and purchase of goods it is stipulated that payment should be made by the buyers' acceptances of the sellers' drafts, if before the time for delivery of the goods the purchaser becomes insolvent or the acceptances are dishonoured, the vendor still has a lien for unpaid purchase-money. Difference in this respect between acceptances of the purchaser and those of a third person. Gunn v. Bolekow, Vaughan & Co., 10 L. R., Ch. 491; 44 L. J., Ch. 732; 32 L. T. 781; 23 W. R. 739.

By a contract for the supply of iron rails, it was agreed that payment should be made by buyers' acceptance of sellers' drafts at six months' date, against inspector's certificate of approval and wharfinger's certificate of each 500 tons being stacked ready for shipment. Inspector's certificates and wharfinger's certificates were from time to time handed to the buyers in exchange for their acceptances, and were pledged with T. as security for advances made by him, it being an alleged custom of the trade to treat such certificates as delivery warrants. The buyers having become insolvent before the first acceptance became due:—Held, first, that the delivery of the acceptances did not constitute a valid payment for the rails according to the contract. Ib.

Held, secondly, that no custom of the trade could give to the certificates the effect of warrants, and T. therefore had no lien on the rails. Ib.

Receipt by Agent without Authority of Principal.]—A company was the holder of a bill of exchange drawn by the defendant on D. The bill was drawn by him as surety for D. in respect of a debt due by D. to the company, and was to be met by the proceeds of claims of D. on S., which would accrue due before the maturity of the bill. The company took the bill with notice of these facts to their managing director C. D., in addition to his debt to the company, was indebted to C., their managing director. Subsequently, but before the maturity of the bill, C. obtained an order from D. upon S. for the amount of the above claims and received the money from S. This money he applied towards payment of his own demand on D. instead of towards the company's bill:—Held, that the receipt by C. of this money and his application of it to his own purposes did not afford any defence to the action, inasmuch as C. could not be said to have been acting within his authority as managing director when he so received and applied the money. McGowan v. Dyer, 8 L. R., Q. B. 141; 21 W. R. 560.

Effect of Cancellation.]—The mere fact of cancelling the signature of the makers of a dishonoured note and writing "paid" on the note, corrected before the note is sent back to the holder by a memorandum thereon "cancelled in error," cannot be effectual to charge a bank with the receipt of the money. Prince v. Oriental Bank Corporation, 3 App. Cas. 325; 47 L. J., P. C. 42; 38 L. T. 41; 26 W. R. 543.

The plaintiff obtained from the defendants an advance of 15,000*l.* upon the security of goods then in transit to Monte Video, consigned to S., and also of six bills of exchange drawn by the plaintiff upon and accepted by S., against the shipments. The plaintiff authorized the defendants, on the non-payment of the bills, to realize the goods, and held himself responsible for any deficiency. Two of these bills were duly paid; but other two having been dishonoured, the defendants (at Monte Video) proposed to realize the goods at once, whereupon the plaintiff gave them a cheque for 2,500*l.*, accompanied by a letter requesting them not to sell, and authorizing them to hold the 2,500*l.* as collateral security for S.'s acceptance, to be returned to the plaintiff when all the bills should have been paid. The remaining bills having also been dishonoured by S., the defendants took proceedings against him at Monte Video, which resulted in a judicial arrangement under which the goods were sold and the bills were delivered up to S. cancelled, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff. The sale of the goods did not produce sufficient, even with the 2,500*l.*, to pay all the bills. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants to recover back the 2,500*l.*:—Held, that the plaintiff was the principal in the transaction, and as the bills had been dishonoured and there was a deficiency after realizing the goods, it was immaterial that S. had been discharged from liability upon the bills, and the defendants were not bound to refund the 2,500*l.* Yglesias v. Mercantile Bank of the River Plate, 3 C. P. D. 60; 38 L. T. 181; 26 W. R. 369. Affirmed on appeal. 3 C. P. D. 330; 38 L. T. 464; 26 W. R. 454—C. A.

Interest in case of Non-payment.]—The acceptor of a bill having died intestate before it fell due, and administration not being taken out for upwards of thirty-five years from the maturity of the bill:—Held, in a suit to administer the personal estate of the intestate, that interest was payable from the date at which the bill became due. Mazwell v. Tuhill, 1 Ir., Ch. D. 250.

Proof of Payment.]—A general receipt on the back of a bill is prima facie evidence of its having been paid by the acceptor, and will not of itself be evidence of a payment by the drawer, though produced by him. Sholey v. Walsby, Peake, 25.

The production of a bill from the custody of an acceptor is not prima facie evidence of his having paid it, without proof that it was once in circulation after it had been accepted. Pfiel v. Vanbatenberg, 2 Camp. 439.

A first count was on a note, dated 7th December, 1845, by the defendant, for payment of 500*l.* and interest, on demand, to C., the plaintiff's testator. The second count was on a similar note for 500*l.*, dated 20th January, 1846. Pleas: first, payment; and secondly, that it was agreed between C. and the defendant, that the latter should purchase with his own money a piece of paper marked with a 10*s.* receipt stamp, and should write on it as follows:—"Hull, 16 February, 1846. Received of R. D. (the defendant) 1,080*l.*, being the interest and principal on two notes, dated December, 1845, and January, 1846, and in full of all demands;" and that the defendant should suffer C. to sign the same; and that such agreement and purchase of the piece of paper so stamped and such writing on by the defendant, and permitting C. to sign the same, should be accepted by C. in satisfaction and discharge. At the trial it appeared from the defendant's answer to a bill of discovery, that in 1835 and 1842, C. lent to the defendant two sums of 500*l.* upon the security of his notes, payable on demand, with interest. The interest was duly paid, and memoranda thereof indorsed by C. on the backs of the notes. At length, the backs of the notes being covered with these memoranda, it was arranged that new notes should be substituted, and accordingly the defendant gave C. the notes on which the action was brought. In February, 1846, C. told the defendant that he intended to give him the 1,000*l.* secured by the notes, and he wished to give the defendant a release and discharge for the same and interest thereon, and he directed the defendant to write out a receipt for such 1,000*l.* and interest for him, C. to sign as a release and discharge; and thereupon the defendant purchased a 10*s.* receipt stamp, and wrote thereon the receipt, which C. signed, and delivered to the defendant, with the express object of releasing him from payment of the 1,000*l.* and interest. No interest was afterwards applied for or paid. C. subsequently died, having bequeathed the notes to the plaintiff:—Held, first, that the transaction relating to the giving of the receipt did not amount to payment. Foster v. Dawber, 6 Ex. 839; 20 L. J., Ex. 385.

Held, secondly, that such transaction was not evidence in support of the second plea. Ib.

b. Giving Time and Renewing.

i. Giving Time to Acceptor.

Generally.—A mere delay by the holder to sue the acceptor does not discharge the drawer or indorsers, the right to sue not being suspended. Philpot v. Bryant, 1 M. & P. 754; 4 Bing. 717; 3 C. & P. 346.

If the holder, after protest for non-payment, and notice to the drawer, forbears to sue the acceptor, the drawer is not thereby discharged. Walwyn v. St. Quintin, 1 B. & P. 652; 2 Esp. 515.

So, after protest only, if the drawer is not entitled to notice. Ib.

Secus, before protest, or if the holder takes security from the acceptor after protest. Ib.; S. P., Collott v. Haigh, 3 Camp. 281.

After Dishonour of Bill.—If the holder gives time to the acceptor of a bill or drawer of a note, after it has been dishonoured, the indorser is discharged. Tindal v. Brown, 1 T. R. 167; 2 T. R. 186.

Receipt of Composition from Acceptor.—So, if the holder receives a composition from the acceptor, he discharges the drawer. Wilson, Ex parte, 11 Ves. 10.

Agreement to give Time.—If the holder of a bill when due, after taking part payment from the acceptor, agrees to take a new acceptance from him for the remainder, payable at a future date, and that in the meantime the holder should keep the original bill in his hands as a security; such agreement amounts to giving time and a new credit to the acceptor, and discharges the indorser, who was no party to such agreement; though the drawer might have had no effects in the hands of the acceptor. Gould v. Robson, 8 East, 576.

So, if the indorsee, having sued the acceptor, receives from him a part payment, and takes a security for the remainder, with the exception of a nominal sum only, he is precluded from suing the indorser. English v. Darley, 2 B. & P. 61; 3 Esp. 49.

If, after a bill has been dishonoured, and notice of dishonour duly given, the holder takes part of the amount from the acceptor, and offers to take a warrant of attorney to secure the payment of the residue by instalments, which offer is not accepted: this is not such a giving of time to the acceptor as will discharge the drawer. Hewitt v. Goodrick, 2 C. & P. 468.

In an action by indorsee against the executrix of the drawer, it was pleaded that the plaintiff being holder of the bill when overdue, without the authority of the drawer, agreed with the acceptor, that, in consideration that he, the acceptor, would for a reasonable time, to wit, for one month, use his best endeavours to procure a new and approved negotiable bill, to be taken by him, the plaintiff, if satisfactory to him, in lieu and substitution, and for and on account of the overdue bill, he, the plaintiff, would, for and during that period, forbear enforcing payment from the acceptor:—Held, sufficient, as shewing a binding agreement to give time to the acceptor, and that the drawer was therefore discharged. Moss v. Hall, 5 Ex. 46; 19 L. J., Ex. 205.

To an action against drawer, it is no defence that the plaintiff, before action, had consented to a judge's order in an action brought by him against the acceptor, that, upon payment of the principal and interest on a future day, all further proceedings should be stayed, otherwise judgment; it not appearing that such future day was posterior to that on which judgment could have been obtained in the action against the acceptor. Kennard v. Knott, 4 M. & G. 474; 5 Scott, N. R. 247.

An agreement between the holder and the acceptor of a bill dishonoured by non-payment, that the acceptor should pay to the holder the amount of the bill and no more, discharges the drawer, although his assignees (he being then a bankrupt) are parties to such agreement. De la Torre v. Barclay, 1 Stark. 7.

Action by holder of a bill against drawer. Plea, that the plaintiff, after indorsement to him by the drawer, and without his consent, agreed with A. to give time to the acceptor, in consideration that A. would see the bill paid, and that the plaintiff gave time accordingly, whereby he discharged the drawer from payment. A. was not alleged to be a party to the bill:—Held, that the plea was bad, inasmuch as the agreement to give time not being with the principal debtor, but with a stranger, no party to the bill, did not discharge the drawer as surety. Frazer v. Fraser v. Jordan, 8 El. & Bl. 303; 26 L. J., Q. B. 288; 3 Jur., N. S. 1054.

After Judgment.—The rule that the giving time to the acceptor or prior indorser has the effect of discharging a subsequent indorsee, does not apply when the indulgence is given after final judgment has been signed in an action

To an action by indorsee of a bill alleged to have been indorsed by the drawer to the defendant, and by the defendant to W., and by W. to took a cognovit from S., in an action on the bill, by which longer time was given than would have been required for obtaining judgment in that action. Upon general demurrer:—Held, that it sufficiently appeared that S., who indorsed to the plaintiff, was identical with the S. who was the first indorser, and that the plaintiff was cognizant of that fact at the time of taking the cognovit, and that therefore the plea set up a good defence, by shewing that the plaintiff had given time to a party prior to the defendant. Hall v. Cole, 6 N. & M. 124; 4 A. & E. 577; 1 H. & W. 723.

To a declaration on a bill, by indorsee against second indorser, he pleaded an action brought by the plaintiff against a prior indorser (the drawer), and a judge's order therein, by consent of the parties, that, on payment of debt and costs in a month, all further proceedings should be stayed; and that, if not so paid, the plaintiff should be at liberty to sign final judgment; and that unless such order had been obtained, judgment and execution might have been had long before the expiration of the month, and that the time given by the order was given without the defendant's consent:—Held, that the plea was no answer, the order not operating as an absolute stay of proceedings, and therefore not amounting to such a giving of time to the drawer as would discharge a subsequent indorser. Michael v. Myers, 1 D. & L. 792; 7 Scott, N. R. 444; 6 M. & G. 702; 13 L. J., C. P. 14.

To an action on a bill by indorsee against drawer, who pleaded that the drawee accepted, and the plaintiff sued the drawee on the bill, and, while that suit was pending, in consideration of 2l., agreed with the drawee that the plaintiff should stay all further proceedings, and forbear continuing to sue for two months, during which time the plaintiff could have continued further proceedings, which agreement was without the drawer's consent; and that, in pursuance of the agreement, and without the drawer's consent, the plaintiff did stay all further proceedings, and forbear continuing to sue the drawee:—Held, a good plea, though it did not expressly aver that the indorsee could have obtained judgment against the drawee before the time until which he agreed to forbear. Isaac v. Daniel, 8 Q. B. 500; 15 L. J., Q. B. 149.

iii. Renewal.

Giving fresh Bills.—Bills, in lieu of which other bills are given, if permitted to remain with the holder, and the latter bills are not paid, may be enforced. Barclay, Ex parte, 7 Ves. 597.

Indorsee against acceptor. Plea, that the drawer indorsed it to C., in whose hands it remained when due; that C. being unable to obtain payment of it, returned it to B., who continued the holder of it until the defendant, before the indorsement to the plaintiff, delivered to B. another bill drawn by the same party, and accepted by the defendant for a greater amount, which B. accepted in discharge and satisfaction of the former bill—is a sufficient answer to the action, although it does not appear that the second bill was payable to order. Lewis v. Lyster, 2 C., M. & R. 704; 4 D. P. C. 377; 1 Gale, 320.

The defendant, being indebted to the plaintiff, gave him a note for 45l., which was dishonoured; the latter afterwards agreed to accept 5s. in the pound, to be secured by the acceptance of a bill for 11l. 5s. by the defendant's brother, which was accordingly given, but the original note remained in the plaintiff's possession, and was to revive if the acceptance was not honoured. The bill was not paid the day it became due, but on the following morning the defendant tendered 12l. to the plaintiff, including its amount and expenses thereon, which the latter refused to accept, and brought an action on the original note:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover. Soward v. Palmer, 2 Moore, 274.

To a declaration by indorsee against the maker of a note for 420l., he pleaded, that after it became due, he gave the plaintiff two bills for 210l. each, to take up the note, and in lieu thereof: that the defendant was a party to the bills, and liable thereon to the plaintiff, and that they were not due, and were outstanding in his hands. The defendant gave in evidence a memorandum signed by the plaintiff, stating that the defendant had given him two bills for 420l.; and one of the bills was overdue and unpaid at the commencement of the action:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the bills were given in lieu of and satisfaction of the note, or only to gain time for payment; if the former, it was a defence to the action, although the defendant did not prove the latter allegation of the plea; if the latter, it was no defence, unless he proved that both the bills were outstanding at the commencement of the action. Goldshede v. Cottrell, 2 M. & W. 20.

Upon Terms.—A. drew a bill on B., which B. accepted. C. became the holder for value. Before due date it was agreed between A. and C., A. assuring C. of B.'s concurrence, that the bill should be renewed; and C. gave to A. a cheque on C. for the amount of the bill, to the intent that B. should be placed in funds to meet the original bill, and should thereupon accept the renewed bill. A. sent the new bill to B. for acceptance, and also sent him the cheque, and B. knew the purposes for which both were sent. B. cashed the cheque and paid the first bill, but refused to accept the second:—Held, that B. had no right so to appropriate the cheque without accepting the bill. Torrance v. Bank of British North America, 5 L. R., P. C. 246; 29 L. T. 109; 21 W. R. 529.

An action being brought against the acceptor, it was agreed between the parties that the defendant should pay the costs, renew the bill, and give a warrant of attorney to secure the debt. The defendant gave the warrant of attorney and renewed the bill but did not pay the costs:—Held, that the plaintiff might bring a fresh action on the first bill, while the second was outstanding in the hands of an indorser. Norris v. Aylett, 2 Camp. 329.

But where a defendant, being indebted to the plaintiff on a bill which was dishonoured, gave another bill at a longer date, and also a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, in case the second bill should not be paid when due, and agreed to pay the expenses of executing the warrant of attorney; and the second bill was duly honoured, but those expenses were not paid, and the first bill was retained by the plaintiff:—Held, that he could not sue the defendant on such original bill. Dillon v. Rimmer, 7 Moore, 427; 1 Bing. 100.

Effect of.]—A., by taking and renewing the acceptance of C., the agent of his debtor B., does not discharge B.; unless A. has elected between the acceptance and cash, or B. is misled or prejudiced by the arrangement. Robinson v. Read, 4 M. & R. 349.

Where, on a bill becoming due, the holder agrees to receive another bill in renewal of it, his remedy on the first is suspended till the second is dishonoured, as well for expenses incurred by non-payment of the first as for its amount. Kendrick v. Lomax, 2 Tyr. 438; 2 C. & J. 405.

Agreements for.]—The defendant accepted the plaintiff's draft at six months, and the plaintiff agreed in writing to renew the bill, if circumstances should prevent the defendant from meeting it at maturity. He made no application for renewal during the currency of the bill; but on the plaintiff presenting it for payment shortly after it became due, he claimed to have it renewed according to the agreement, circumstances having in fact prevented him from meeting it:—Held, that the defendant was not bound to apply for a renewal during the currency of the bill; but that it was sufficient if he did so within a reasonable time after it became due. Maillard v. Page, 5 L. R., Ex. 312; 39 L. J., Ex. 235; 23 L. T. 80.

A. wrote to B. saying: "I have been requested to grant a credit in favour of C., and I consent to do so, and authorize you to draw upon me for C.'s account, for 15,000*l.* in drafts at three months' date, which I engage to have renewed three times by drafts of the same date, making the currency of the credit twelve months in all, provided you give me an undertaking to furnish me with funds to pay each set of bills previously to maturity, in order to keep me out of cash advance." B. answered, copying and adopting this letter, but after the last word "advance," adding "for the said twelve months." In the next part of B.'s letter was this sentence: "We take note of the said credit, and subscribe to the engagement of renewing three times our drafts, with furnishing you with the funds to pay the drafts renewed, in order to keep you out of cash advance for twelve months." Bills were drawn and renewed under this agreement. The last renewals became due a few days after the expiration of twelve months from the date of B.'s letter:—Held, that the agreement was, in substance, to "pay each set of bills previously to maturity," and that B. had not satisfied it by keeping A. out of cash advance for the first bills and the first and second renewals, but was bound to keep A. out of cash advance for the last renewed bills. English and Foreign Credit Company v. Arduin, 5 L. R., H. L. 64; 40 L. J., Ex. 108.

A., having advanced large sums of money to the defendant, on account of estates in the West Indies, of which they were joint owners, received from the defendant two notes to the amount of 3,000*l.*, upon an agreement which contained these terms:—"Should the crops of the estates not come forward in time to provide for these notes, I shall expect to have them renewed for such period as may be found necessary from the condition of the properties." The crops proved unproductive, and the notes were renewed three times. An action was brought on the third renewed bill, which had been indorsed to the plaintiff with a knowledge of the agreement:—Held, that the agreement stipulated for one renewal only. Innes v. Munro, 1 Ex. 473; 17 L. J., Ex. 71.

A defendant, being indebted in a certain amount, gave his creditor acceptances for a larger amount, which the creditor indorsed to third parties for their accommodation, and they indorsed them to the plaintiffs for value. One of them was dishonoured and twice renewed, and while the last renewal was in the plaintiffs' hands, they were parties to a deed of arrangement with their indorsers, in which they covenanted not to sue any of the other parties on bills, upon which, as between such parties and their indorsers, such parties would not be liable. Previously to the last renewal, the defendant had paid the bills to the amount he owed the drawer, and the plaintiffs then sued upon the last renewal of the bill:—Held, that the question was, not whether there was value for the original acceptance, but whether it was a bill on which, as between the indorsers and the plaintiffs, the indorsers would be liable. Bailey v. Edwards, 11 W. R. 266.

A court of law can only allow a defence to be pleaded on equitable grounds, where a court of equity would grant an absolute and unconditional injunction; and, therefore, to an action on a bill against acceptor, the court refused to allow him to plead, that the bill was accepted upon a distinct promise by the plaintiff that if the defendant would pay certain discount the plaintiff would renew from time to time, until the defendant was of ability to meet the bill; that he had always kept his part of that contract, but that the plaintiff had refused to renew upon application to him to do so; and that he had never been of ability to pay the bill. Flight v. Gray, 3 C. B., N. S. 320; 27 L. J., C. P. 13; 4 Jur., N. S. 13.

— Parol.]—In an action on a note or bill, the defendant cannot give in evidence a parol agreement entered into when it was drawn, that it should be renewed, and payment not demanded when it became due. Hoare v. Graham, 3 Camp. 57.

3. FORGERY.

a. Generally.

When Parties are Estopped from Setting up the Defence of.]—If a party to a bill, on being asked if it is his handwriting, answers that it is, and will be duly paid, he cannot afterwards set up a defence of forgery, for he has credited the bill, and induced others to take it. Leach v. Buchanan, 4 Esp. 226.

So, if he has at any time paid other forged bill of the same party, under similar circumstances. Barber v. Gingell, 3 Esp. 60.

If a holder of a bill agrees not to sue the acceptor, provided the latter will make an affidavit that the acceptance is a forgery, and such affidavit is accordingly made and sworn, he cannot afterwards bring an action on the bill, though the affidavit is false. Stevens v. Thacker, Peake, 187.

When a banker indorses, for the benefit of a customer, two parts of a bill, both being fully stamped, and with the words "eight days" written sufficiently far apart for the insertion after indorsement of the letter "y," such parts do not constitute two bills; there is no negligence such as to disentitle him from setting up the alteration as the defence to an action on the bill;

nor is he estopped from taking advantage of a fraudulent sale by the customer of the two parts as separate bills. Société Générale v. Metropolitan Bank, 27 L. T. 849; 21 W. R. 335.

What amounts to.]—Where a bill with a blank acceptance was drawn and indorsed by one Richardson, in the fictitious name of Wilson:—Held, in the absence of evidence that the drawer passed himself off for a different person of the name of Wilson, or of any intention to defraud any other person, that it was not a forgery, and that the bill was not void on that account. Schulz v. Attley, 2 Bing. N. C. 544; 7 C. & P. 99; 2 Scott, 815; 1 Hodges, 425.

Of Indorsement—After Maturity.]—Where the original indorsement of the payee's name on a bill is a forgery, a real indorsement by the payee after the bill has arrived at maturity will not give the holder any title. Esdaile v. La Nauze, 1 Y. & C. 394.

Promise to Pay Forged Bill—Effect of.]—W. accepted bills in the name, but without the authority, of his brother J., which bills were dishonoured when at maturity. W. was taken up upon another charge of forgery, and, while in custody, the holders of these bills applied to J. for payment of them:—Held, that the written acknowledgment by him (after the bills had been dishonoured), that he was responsible for the bills, and also that he engaged to pay them in case his brother should fail to do so, was not sufficient to make him liable upon the bills; no antecedent authority having been given to W. to accept the bills, and the subsequent acknowledgment of liability being made to screen his brother from a charge of forgery. Edwards, Ex parte, 2 Mont., D. & D. 241; 5 Jur. 706.

Payment by Drawer to Indorsee on a Forged Bill—Recovery of Money Paid.]—If a forged bill is accepted and paid by the drawee, he cannot recover the money back from the indorsee to whom he paid it. Price v. Neal, 3 Burr. 1354; 1 W. Bl. 390.

Evidence to Sustain Defence of.]—In an action against an acceptor who defends himself on the ground of his acceptance having been forged by A., evidence that A. forged his acceptance to another bill, and absconded on that account, is not admissible. Balleotti v. Serani, Peake, 142; S. P., Viney v. Bares, 1 Esp. 293.

In an action by first indorsee against acceptor, evidence is not admissible to shew that the drawer forged the defendant's acceptance to other bills, that the drawer absconded, and that then several bills, some of them with forged acceptances, were taken from a box in his house by the plaintiff's brother, and came into possession of the plaintiff, unless it can be shewn that the bill in question was one of such bills. To prove the forgery, such evidence only can be received as would have been admissible on an indictment against the drawer for the forgery. Griffiths v. Payne, 3 P. & D. 107; 11 A. & E. 131.

In an action on a bill which the defendant contends is a forgery, other bills of the defendant may be produced to the jury to compare the handwriting. Allesbrook v. Roach, Peake, Add. Cas. 27.

Where A., believing a bill shewn to him to have been accepted by himself, gave another acceptance in lieu of it, and in consideration thereof it was delivered up: and it turned out that the first acceptance was a forgery. In an action on the second bill, by an indorsee against the acceptor, the plaintiff admitted that the acceptance of the first bill was a forgery, but set up that he was a bona fide holder of that bill for value:—Held, that the onus was cast on the plaintiff of proving that he was such bona fide holder. Mather v. Maidstone (Lord), 1 C. B., N. S. 273; 26 L. J., C. P. 58; 3 Jur., N. S. 112.

In August, 1867, the defendant paid a bill (of which the plaintiff was the holder) upon which his name had been written as acceptor without his authority. In an action against him upon another bill similarly accepted, the jury found that the acceptance was not his signature nor written with his authority, that the forged signature was not adopted by him, that he did not know that the plaintiff was the holder of the former bill, and that he did not lead the plaintiff to believe that the acceptance of the bill sued upon was his:—Held, that the fact of the defendant having paid the bill in August, 1867, did not estop him from denying that the bill declared on was accepted by him or with his authority, and that the judge was not bound to tell the jury that, as matter of law, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. Morris v. Bethell, 5 L. R., C. P. 47.

Restraining Negotiation.]—Where a bill has been negotiated by means of a forgery of the name of the payee as indorser, a court of equity will restrain even a bona fide holder of the bill from suing the acceptor, and will direct the forged instrument to be delivered up to be cancelled. Esdaile v. La Nauze, 1 Y. & C. 394.

Bills in the hands of foreign indorsees, for value, were accepted in England, on the faith of the genuineness of a bill of lading, which was presented to the acceptor with the bills by the indorsees, but which afterwards proved to have been forged by the drawer. The indorsees were unaffected with notice of the forgery when they obtained the acceptances. In a suit in equity by the acceptor against the indorsees for delivery up of the bills, and an injunction against negotiating or proceeding at law upon them:—Held, that on the indorsees undertaking to deliver up the bills in the event of the judgment at law being against them no injunction ought to be granted. Thiedemann v. Goldschmidt, 1 De G., F. & J. 4; 1 L. T. 50; 8 W. R. 14.

4. EQUITABLE DEFENCES.

Acceptance on behalf of Company—Personal Liability of Acceptor.]—To an action on a bill, the court allowed a defendant to plead, by way of equitable defence (leaving its validity to be questioned on demurrer), that he was chairman of a company completely registered; that the bill was drawn for the company's purposes, and accepted by him as chairman; that in order to bind the company, it ought to have been accepted by another director also, and countersigned by the secretary; that by mistake or accident this was omitted to be done, and that it never was intended that he should be bound personally. Burgoyne v. Cottrell, 24 L. J., Q. B. 28.

previous indorser, to recover the amount of the bill. Low v. Copestake, 3 C. & P. 300.

Partners.—Where indorsees sued the drawer in their own right, and it appeared that the bill had been indorsed to them in blank, before the death of one of the firm, who was a partner with the plaintiffs as bankers:—Held, that the action was well brought without their describing themselves as surviving partners in the declaration, as they were not bound to prove the partnership, or that the bill was indorsed or delivered to them jointly with their deceased partner. Secus, if the bill had been specially indorsed. Attwood v. Rattenbury, 6 Moore, 579.

Where a bill was indorsed to three partners, in respect of a debt due from the drawer and indorser, and was accepted by the defendant at the request of one of the partners, who engaged to provide for it when it became due:—Held, that the assignees of both could not recover against the acceptor, although the one partner was not privy to the engagement of the other. Johnson v. Peck, 3 Stark. 66.

Executor.—The 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 3, empowering a testator to bequeath all personal estate which, if not bequeathed, would devolve upon his executor, does not enable a testator to bequeath a note made to him, so as to pass the right to sue in respect of it. Such right is in the executor. Bishop v. Curtis, 18 Q. B. 878; 21 L. J., Q. B. 391; 17 Jur. 23.

Where the legatee of such note is convicted of felony, the forfeiture caused by such conviction does not divest the executor of his right to sue, though he is a trustee for the crown in respect of the proceeds of the suit. Ib.

Adding Parties.—The plaintiff having sued on a bill of which the defendant was acceptor, he stated by way of defence that the bill was accepted by him on behalf of a company in part-payment of a ship which was afterwards transferred to the company; that the defendant was induced to accept the bill by the fraud of the plaintiff in misrepresenting the seaworthiness of the ship, and that the defendant and the company had a counter-claim over against the plaintiff for the fraud and misrepresentation. On an application by the defendant under Ord. XVI. r. 13, to add the company as a defendant, the court refused the application, holding that on the facts the company ought not, on the application of the defendant, to be joined as a co-defendant under Ord. XVI. r. 13. Norris v. Beasley, 2 C. P. D. 80; 46 L. J., C. P. 169; 35 L. T. 845; 25 W. R. 320.

See further PRACTICE (Parties).

Against Parties out of the Jurisdiction.—A British subject, residing at Florence, there signed two promissory notes and sent them to London, where they were delivered to the payee:—Held, that the "cause of action" arose upon the delivery of the notes, and therefore he could be sued upon them. Chapman v. Cottrell, 3 H. & C. 865.

2. AT WHAT TIME ACTION CAN BE BROUGHT.

Not till Day after Bill becomes Due.—It is too early to issue a writ on the day on which a bill is due; it is sufficient in such case to plead that the bill was not due at the time of commencing the action. Hells v. Giles, 2 Gale, 209.

Against Drawer.—An action cannot be brought against the drawer till notice of the refusal, insolvency or absconding of the acceptor. Dagglish v. Weatherby, 2 W. Bl. 647.

If a bill is not accepted, an action will lie upon it against the drawer before the time when it is made payable. Milford v. Mayor, 1 Dougl. 55; S. P., Bright v. Purrier, Bull. N. P. 269; 3 Burr. 1687.

By Indorsee against Indorser.—So, an action lies by indorsee against indorser immediately on the non-acceptance of the drawee, though the time for which the bill was drawn has not elapsed. Bollingalls v. Gloster, 3 East, 481; 4 Esp. 268.

It is no defence to an action against an indorser, that it was commenced before a reasonable time had elapsed after a notice of the dishonour; the only remedy the defendant has is to apply to the court to stay proceedings on payment of costs. Siggers v. Lewis, 2 D. P. C. 681; 1 C., M. & R. 370; 4 Tyr. 847.

Drawer against Acceptor.—In an action by drawer against acceptor on a bill for the freight of a chartered ship, which the drawer agreed to renew for three months if the charterer did not return before the bill was due:—Held, that where no application appeared to have been made for such renewal, the holder might sue before the expiration of the three months. Gibbon v. Scott, 2 Stark. 286.

When a previous Action has been brought.—Where a note purports to be payable on demand, but was in truth given to secure the payment of money by instalments, the payee having already brought an action on the note, and taken a cognovit for the instalments due, cannot maintain a second action for default in payment of the subsequent instalments. Siddall v. Raveliffe, 1 M. & Rob. 263; 1 C. & M. 263; 3 Try. 411.

The holder of a bill having sued the acceptor upon it at maturity, transferred it during the pendency of the action without consideration, and with notice of the pendency of the former action, and thereupon the transferee brought an action upon the bill against the acceptor:—Held, that the pendency of the first action was not the subject of a plea in bar to the second action, but matter only for an application for the equitable interference of the court. Deuters v. Townsend, 5 B. & S. 613; 33 L. J., Q. B. 301; 10 Jur., N. S. 1072; 10 L. T. 602; 12 W. R. 1002.

Statute of Limitations.—L., in 1846, promised to pay, three months after date, to B. or to C., his wife, 500*l.* B. died in 1863, leaving C. surviving. There was an indorsement on the note in L.'s handwriting of his name and the year 1866. C. died in 1868:—Held, that it was not intended to make a new note, and that there was a sufficient acknowledgment to exclude the Statute of Limitations. Bourdin v. Greenwood, 13 L. R., Eq. 281; 41 L. J., Ch. 73; 25 L. T. 782; 20 W. R. 166.

The plaintiff in the action sued on a promissory note at three months, dated the 11th March, 1874; the note was therefore prima facie due on the 14th June of the same year. The 14th of June was a Sunday. The writ in the action bore date 14th June, 1880, which was a Monday. It was contended that the right of action was

County Court.]—A plaintiff, seeking to recover less than 20*l.* on a bill, was refused a summons out of a county court under the Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, on the ground that, where the claim was for less than 20*l.*, the jurisdiction of the county court was taken away by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 4.—Held, that that section did not take away any jurisdiction possessed by the county court under the Bills of Exchange Act. Holbrook v. Jones, 4 L. R., C. P. 14; 38 L. J., C. P. 22; 19 L. T. 320; 17 W. R. 54.

Letting in to Defend.]—A defendant will be allowed to appear and defend where there is any defence suggested, either in law or in fact, which there is any reasonable ground for supposing may possibly be supported. Mathews v. Maryland, 27 L. J., Ex. 148; S. P., Clay v. Turley, 37 L. J., Ex. 2.

The act gives to a judge a discretion as to the sufficiency of affidavits for leave to appear; and it is doubtful whether the court has any original jurisdiction: therefore, where the judge has considered the application, and deemed the affidavit to be insufficient, the court will not do more than intimate an opinion. Smith v. Dix, 6 Jur., N. S. 1016.

To entitle a defendant served with a writ under the Bills of Exchange Act, 1855, to leave to appear and defend, it is not necessary that he should produce an affidavit of merits. It is enough if the affidavit discloses any defence, whether legal or equitable. Casella v. Darton, 8 L. R., C. P. 100; 42 L. J., C. P. 58.

When on an application upon counter affidavits the court refused to rescind an order for leave to appear and defend, or to pay into court the sum indorsed on the writ:—Held, that the court will not decide between conflicting affidavits as to the credibility of the defence set up, and it has no power to compel a defendant to pay into court the sum indorsed. Freebairn v. Stevens, 30 L. J., Ex. 1; 6 Jur., N. S. 1101; 3 L. T. 672.

When an order has been made it will not be rescinded on affidavits contradicting the defence, and answered by affidavits on the part of the defendant raising a bona fide conflict of testimony. Brutton v. Thomas, 1 F. & F. 377.

In an action commenced by a writ of summons under the Bills of Exchange Act of 1855, leave to appear and plead will be given whenever there is an apparently real defence, and the condition of bringing the money into court, or finding security, will only be imposed where there is reason to doubt its bona fides. Agra and Masterman's Bank v. Leighton, 2 L. R., Ex. 56; 36 L. J., Ex. 33.

If leave has been given on affidavits shewing a good defence as between the original parties to the bill, and stating circumstances which raise the inference that the plaintiff is not a holder for value, or is for any other reason liable to be opposed by the same defence, affidavits in answer will be received to contradict that inference, and will, if clear and cogent, be ground for rescinding the leave. Ib.

Amendment of Affidavits.]—If a defendant obtains leave to appear and defend on an affidavit which appears, upon the facts, to be the court will neither construe such an affidavit strictly, nor try the case on counter affidavits. Edwards v. Ramsey, 10 W. R. 20.

Order obtained by means of Fraud.]—The court will interfere to set aside the order if obtained fraudulently. Pollock v. Turncock, 1 H. & N. 741; 3 Jur., N. S. 92.

Payment of Money into Court under Bills of Exchange Act to abide the Event.]—Money paid into court under the Bills of Exchange Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, pursuant to a judge's order, "to abide the event" of an action then pending, forms no part of the debtor's estate, but is a security to the creditor for the payment of the amount recoverable in the action, notwithstanding that the matters in dispute in the action have been referred, and bankruptcy supervened before any proceedings are taken in the matter of the arbitration. Tate, Ex parte, Keyworth. In re, 43 L. J., Bk. 55; 29 L. T. 849; 22 W. R. 350. Affirmed on appeal, 9 L. R., Ch. 579; 43 L. J., Bk. 102; 30 L. T. 620.

4. WHEN LOST OR DESTROYED.

Generally.]—A payee of a negotiable bill, who has lost the instrument, cannot, on its coming to maturity, maintain, without its production, an action against the acceptor for the amount. Ramus v. Croze, 1 Ex. 167; 16 L. J., Ex. 280; 11 Jur. 715.

Even although the holder offers an indemnity. Hansard v. Robinson, 7 B. & C. 90; R. & M. 404, n.

The loss of a negotiable bill given on account of a debt is an answer as well to an action for the debt, as to an action on the bill. Croze v. Clay (in error), 9 Ex. 604; 23 L. J., Ex. 150; 18 Jur. 654—Ex. Ch.

But a maker of a note not negotiable cannot refuse to pay it when due, on the ground that the payee has it not in his possession or power, and cannot produce it in order to deliver it up to the maker on payment. Wain v. Bailey, 10 A. & E. 816; 2 P. & D. 507.

Courts of equity have never acquired jurisdiction to give relief on account of the destruction of a bill of exchange; but there is a complete remedy in such cases at law. Wright v. Lord Mardstone, 1 Kay & J. 701; 24 L. J., Ch. 623; 1 Jur., N. S. 1013. S. P., Edge v. Bamford, 31 Beav. 247, 31 L. J., Ch. 903; 9 Jur., N. S. 8; 7 L. T. 88; 10 W. R. 812.

Swing in respect of the Consideration for.]—Where an unindorsed bill has been lost by the drawer, he may recover against the acceptor, in respect of consideration. Holt v. Watson, 12 Moore, 510; 4 Bing. 273.

On the sale of goods, the purchaser agreed to accept bills for the price, and to pay the sums of money for which the bills should be given when the bills became due. One of the bills having been afterwards destroyed by the purchaser, in the hands of a person to whom it had been indorsed as trustee for the vendor:—Held, that no action could be maintained by the vendor on the promise to pay the money when the bills should become due. Jungbluth v. Way, 1 H. & N. 71; 25 L. J. Ex. 257.

A cheque given for stock sold was lost by the vendor in going home; the purchaser was immediately informed of this fact, but refused to pay without an indemnity. Four months after, the bankers on whom the cheque was drawn, stopped payment with sufficient money of the drawer's in their hands to answer it:—Held, that under these circumstances an action would not lie for the price of the stock. Beran v. Hill, 2 Camp. 381.

In an action for goods sold, the defence relied on a lost bill of exchange given by the defendant on account of the causes of action. The court allowed the plaint to be amended by adding a count on the bill of exchange. Nash v. Macken, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 51.

Promise to Pay after Loss.]—An express promise to pay the contents of a lost bill, if given without some new consideration, is void. Davis v. Dodd, 4 Taunt. 602; S. C., 1 Wils. Ex. 110.

An averment that the defendant was indebted on a bill, and that the plaintiff, having lost the bill, had at his request given him a bond acknowledging payment, and conditioned to indemnify him against the bill, states a good consideration for a promise by the defendant to pay the contents of the bill. Williamson v. Clements, 1 Taunt. 523.

Indemnity for.]—A plea of a bill given for and on account of the claim, and lost, was struck out on an indemnity being given by the plaintiff to the defendant. Ringrose v. Blizard, 2 F. & F. 375.

Where an action is brought on a bill, which is alleged to have been lost, a judge has no power to order a stay of proceedings until an indemnity is given, the defendant undertaking to pay debt and costs. Aranguren v. Scholfield, 1 H. & N. 494.

When a party brings an action on a lost bill against the acceptor without first offering to give him an indemnity against the claims of other persons on the bill, the court or a judge, in the exercise of discretion, will make an order under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 87, that the loss of the bill shall not be set up as a defence, only on the terms that the plaintiff pay the defendant his costs of the action up to that time as well as give a proper indemnity against such claims. King v. Zimmermann, 6 L. R., C. P. 466; 40 L. J., C. P. 278; 24 L. T. 623; 19 W. R. 1009.

Secondary Evidence as to.]—Upon non acceptance, the plaintiff having proved that the bill was destroyed:—Held, that secondary evidence of its contents was admissible. Blackie v. Pidding, 6 C. B. 196.

Upon an issue that the defendant did not make the note declared on, it appearing that the note is lost, secondary evidence may be given of its contents; and this whether the note be negotiable or not. Charnley v. Grundy, 14 C. B. 608; 2 C. L. R. 822; 23 L. J., C. P. 121; 18 Jur. 653.

A plea that the note had been destroyed, pursuant to an agreement between the maker and the plaintiff's testator to whom it was given, cannot, by rejecting the allegation as to the agreement, be treated as a plea setting up the loss of the note. Id.

Costs.]—See post, XIV., 5.

5. AMOUNT RECOVERABLE.

a. Interest.

How Payable.]—In an action against the drawer of a foreign bill dishonoured here for non-acceptance, where the plaintiff is allowed a per-centage in the name of damages, he is only entitled to interest from the day the bill ought to have been paid. Gantt v. Mackenzie, 3 Camp. 51.

But where there is no allowance for damages, the plaintiff is entitled to interest from the day the bill was dishonoured for non-acceptance. Harrison v. Dickson, 3 Camp. 52, n.

When a bill is made payable with interest, it is to be calculated from the date. Doman v. Dibden, R. & M. 381; S. P., Kennerley v. Nash, 1 Stark. 452.

A bill or note payable on a day certain carries interest from that day, unless the non-payment has been occasioned by the negligence of the holder. Laing v. Stone, 2 M. & R. 561; S. P., Upton v. Ferrers (Lord), 5 Ves. 801.

The drawer of a bill which is dishonoured by the acceptor is not liable to pay interest for the time which elapses between the day whereon the bill becomes due; and the day when the drawer receives notice of the dishonour. Walker v. Barnes, 5 Taunt. 240; 1 Marsh. 36.

A note in this form, "I promise for myself and my executors to pay A. (or her executors), one year after my death, 300l., with legal interest," bears interest from its date. Raffey v. Greenwell, 10 A. & E. 222; 2 P. & D. 365.

In an action against a drawer of a bill not bearing interest, which has been dishonoured by non-acceptance, if the jury finds the plaintiff entitled to interest by way of damages, the measure of damages is the rate of interest at the place where the bill was drawn. Giles v. Fremont, 9 Ex. 25; 22 L. J., Ex. 820; 17 Jur. 302.

Note on Demand.]—In an action on a note payable on demand, the jury cannot give interest, except from the time a demand of payment is made. The issuing of a writ of summons is a sufficient demand. Pierce v. Fothergill, 2 Bing. N. C. 167; 2 Scott, 334; 1 Hodges, 251.

Interest is not allowable on the notes of a banking company where the notes are payable on demand, and no demand for payment has been made before the company is ordered to be wound up. Herefordshire Banking Company, In re, 4 L. R., Eq. 250; 36 L. J., Ch. 806.

Bill must be produced.]—Interest is not recoverable on a bill of exchange unless it is produced. Fryer v. Brown, R. & M. 145.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor, he pleaded by way of confession and avoidance, but failed to establish the matter of avoidance:—Held, that he could not recover interest upon the bill from the date of its maturity, without producing it. Hutton v. Ward, 15 Q. B. 26; 19 L. J., Q. B. 293; 14 Jur. 372.

Renewed Bill.]—Plaintiff held a bill drawn by defendant; when it became due in March, the defendant asked for time, and in June the acceptor gave plaintiff another bill for the same sum, plaintiff telling him at the same time that something was due for interest, and continuing to hold the first bill; the second bill was paid after it became due :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to sue the drawer of the first bill, as well as the acceptor, for the interest due upon it. Lumley v. Hudson, 4 Bing. N. C. 15; 5 Scott, 238.

Where a bill (afterwards paid) has been given to the holder of a former bill, some time after the latter became due, for the amount of the principal only, an action may be maintained on the first bill for the amount of interest previously due thereon. Lumley v. Musgrove, 5 Scott, 230; 4 Bing. N. C. 9; 3 Hodges, 247; 1 Jur. 799.

Bill payable by Instalments.—Where a note is payable by instalments, and, on failure of payment of any instalment, the whole is to become due, the interest is to be calculated on the whole sum remaining unpaid on default of any instalment, and not on the respective instalments at the respective times when they would become payable. Blake v. Lawrence, 4 Esp. 148.

After tender of Amount.—The maker of a note paid money into the hands of an agent to retire it; the agent tendered the money to the holder of the note, on condition of having it delivered up; the note being mislaid, this condition was not complied with; and the agent afterwards became bankrupt with the money in his hands :—Held, that the maker was still responsible on the note, but that interest was not recoverable after the time of the tender. Dent v. Dunn, 3 Camp. 296.

Bill Purchased by Agent upon Death of Principal.—Where an agent, having money in his hands belonging to his principal, purchased bills, which he indorsed specially to the latter, who at the time of the indorsement was dead, but the agent did not know it :—Held, that the administrator of the principal was only entitled to recover interest on bills accepted after the death of the intestate, from the time of the demand of payment made by the administrator, and not from the time the bills became due. Murray v. East India Company, 5 B. & A. 204.

Bankruptcy.—Interest accruing before the act of bankruptcy cannot be added to the principal sum due on a bill, so as to constitute a good petitioning creditor's debt, unless interest is specially made payable on the face of the bill. Cameron v. Smith, 2 B. & A. 305.

Billetes issued by Foreign Government.—The defendant being under agreement to pay the plaintiff the value of certain billetes issued by the Peruvian government, on a remonstrance by the British government, as a compensation for injury done to the plaintiff :—Held, that the prothonotary was to estimate the value, as the value of a bill of exchange for the same number of dollars on a house of respectability at Lima, although the billetes were at a great discount. Delegal v. Naylor, 5 M. & P. 443; 7 Bing. 460.

Acceptance Abroad—Default in England.—A bill was drawn and accepted in Paris, payable in England. The drawer and acceptor were living in Paris. No rate of interest was expressed to be payable on the bill :—Held, that the default being made in England, interest was payable according to the English and not the French law. Cooper v. Waldegrave (Earl), 2 Beav. 282.

Forms part of Debt.—Action upon a note, for 40*l.* payable on demand, with interest. Plea, as to the debt, that the defendant paid 150*l.* in satisfaction of the debt, and of all damages :—Held, that the interest was part of the debt, and not damages merely, and that it was recoverable as such upon the pleadings. Hudson v. Fawcett, 7 M. & G. 348; 2 D. & L. 81; 8 Scott, N. R. 32; 13 L. J., C. P. 141.

Who Liable for.—A party guaranteeing the acceptance and payment of a bill guarantees the payment of the interest as well as the principal. Ackermann v. Ehrensperger, 16 M. & W. 99; 16 L. J., Ex. 3.

Where a bill is drawn for a given sum, with interest at ten per cent. per annum, the drawer, on the default of the acceptor, is liable for interest at ten per cent., after the maturity of the bill, and notice of dishonour. Keene v. Keene, 3 C. B., N. S. 144; 27 L. J., C. B. 88.

Amount of.—If a note is payable, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum twelve months after date, the judge will advise the jury, in allowing interest up to the time of signing judgment, to allow it at the rate of five per cent. only. Ward v. Morrison, Car. & M. 136.

b. Re-exchange.

When Holder entitled to.—An acceptor of a foreign bill is not liable for re-exchange, nor for more than the principal, together with interest, according to the legal rate of interest where the bill is payable. Woolsey v. Crawford, 2 Camp. 445.

Upon a motion to refer it to the master to compute principal, interest and costs upon a bill drawn in Scotland upon and accepted by the defendant in England, the court would not direct the master to allow re-exchange. Napier v. Schneider, 12 East, 420. And see Goldmid v. Tate, 2 B. & P. 55.

A. deposited money at the banking-house of B. in Paris, for which B. gave him his note "payable in Paris, or at the choice of the bearer at the Union Bank in Dover, or at my usual residence in London, according to the course of exchange upon Paris;" after this note was given, the direct course of exchange between London and Paris ceased altogether, having been, previously to its total cessation, extremely low; the note was at a subsequent period presented for acceptance and payment at the residence of B. in London, at which time there was a circuitous course of exchange upon Paris by way of Ham-burgh :—Held, that A. was entitled to recover upon the note, according to such circuitous course of exchange upon Paris at the time when the note was presented. Pollard v. Herries, 3 B. & P. 335.

A., in England, drew a bill on B. in a foreign country, which, after having been negotiated through another foreign country, was presented to B., who refused to pay it on account of the law of the country in which he resided having prohibited such payment :—Held, that the drawer was liable for the whole amount of the re-exchange between the different countries. Mellish v. Simeon, 2 H. Bl. 378.

A verdict having passed for the defendant, in an action to recover the amount of the re-exchange upon the dishonour of a bill drawn in London on Lisbon, upon evidence that the enemy was in possession of Portugal when the bill became due, and Lisbon was then blockaded by a British squadron, and there was in fact no direct exchange between Lisbon and London, though bills had in some instances been negotiated between them through Hamburg and America about that period; the court refused to grant a new trial, on the presumption that the jury had founded their verdict upon the fact that no re-exchange was proved to their satisfaction to have existed between Lisbon and London at the time; the question having been properly left to them, to allow damages in the name of re-exchange, if the plaintiff, who had indorsed the dishonoured bill to the holder, had either paid or was liable to pay re-exchange; and, saving the question of law, whether any exchange or re-exchange could be allowed between this and an enemy's country. De Tastet v. Baring, 11 East, 265; 2 Camp. 65.

Where a bill drawn and indorsed in England and payable abroad is dishonoured by the acceptor's non-payment, the holder is entitled as against the drawer to the amount of the re-exchange, that is, the value at the rate of exchange on the day of the dishonour, of the sum expressed on the face of the bill in the currency of the place where it is payable, with interest and expenses. Suse v. Pompe, 8 C. B., N. S. 538; 30 L. J., C. P. 75; 7 Jur., N. S. 166; 9 W. R. 15.

In an action against the drawer of a bill so drawn, accepted and dishonoured, evidence is not admissible to prove a usage among merchants here to entitle the holder at his option to demand from the drawer the amount of the re-exchange, or the sum which he gave him for the purchase of the bill, this being a usage which in terms contradicts the written instrument. Ib.

c. Costs and Expenses.

What are Necessary.—The holder of two bills of exchange, upon which the same parties were liable, issued two writs under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, and signed judgment for default of appearance. Leave was afterwards given to defend the actions in respect of the bills upon payment of the costs of the judgments:—Held, that the plaintiff ought not to have issued two writs, and was entitled only to those costs which would have been allowed if he had issued one writ. Jackson v. Freeman, 26 L. T. 584; 20 W. R. 683.

The holders of a bill sued the acceptor and drawer concurrently. The acceptor paid, and without any demand for the costs of the writ of summons, they served the drawer with declaration. He pleaded payment before action, and the judge at the trial, considering their conduct improper, entered a nominal verdict, and refused to certify:—Held, that they had a right to go on until payment of costs by the drawer, and that the judge had no power to enter a nominal verdict upon this plea. London and Suburban Bank v. Walkinshaw, 25 L. T. 704.

On Higher Scale.—In an action on a bill of exchange properly brought in the Chancery Division, costs may be allowed on the higher scale under Ord. VI. rr. 2, 3. Pooley v. Driver, 5 Ch. D. 468.

Suing in Wrong Court.—A plaintiff suing in a superior court instead of the sheriff's court, on a lost bank note for less than 20*l.*, cannot recover his costs. Noble v. Bank of England, 2 H. & C. 355; 33 L. J., Ex. 81; 9 Jur., N. S. 778; 8 L. T. 733; 11 W. R. 916.

A plaintiff who recovers judgment by default under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, for a sum not more than 20*l.*, in an action on a bill, which he might have brought in the London Small Debts Court, is entitled to his costs. Healey v. Johns, 8 El. & Bl. 946; 27 L. J., Q. B. 183; 4 Jur., N. S. 508.

But a plaintiff who commences an action under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, for a cause within the jurisdiction of the London Small Debts Court, and after the defendant has obtained leave to plead, recovers an amount not more than 50*l.*, is deprived of his costs by the London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852. Harris v. Swinburn, 5 B. & S. 370; 33 L. J., Q. B. 313; 10 Jur., N. S. 1234; 12 W. R. 978.

Noting and Incidental.—Expenses of noting and postage incurred on the return of an inland bill are not recoverable by the holder, unless specially laid as damages, and proved accordingly. Kendrick v. Lomax, 2 Tyr. 438; 2 C. & J. 405.

Where a bill indorsed over is not duly paid, the indorsee may charge the indorser with interest, exchange and other incidental expenses beyond the amount of 5*l.* per cent., if such charges are reasonable and warranted by usage. Auriol v. Thomas, 2 T. R. 52.

According to Law of Foreign Country.—There being a law in Pennsylvania, that bills drawn or indorsed there on persons in England, and protested, should be paid to the holder, with 20*l.* per cent. for damage; bills drawn on a merchant in England were accepted by him; he becoming bankrupt before they were due, they were protested for non-payment; the drawer, having paid the money due on the bills and the 20*l.* per cent. to the holder, was permitted to prove both under the commission. Francis v. Rucker, Amb. 672.

A drawer in Louisiana of bills upon acceptors in London, is entitled to prove under a deed of arrangement executed by the latter, upon their becoming insolvent, to their creditors, not only for the amount of the bills, but also for 10*l.* per cent. upon that amount in lieu of re-exchange, which, by the law of Louisiana, he had been obliged to pay to the holders of the bills, on their return dishonoured and protested for non-payment in Louisiana. Walker v. Hamilton, 1 De G., F. & J. 602.

A fixed law at a foreign place of drawing, as to damages and interest for non-payment of a bill, binds the drawer as part of his contract. State Insurance Company, In re, 32 L. J., Ch. 300; 9 Jur., N. S. 298.

Who Liable for.—An indorser of a bill having had an action brought against him by the indorsee, is not entitled to recover from the acceptor the costs incurred in such action. Davson v. Morgan, 9 B. & C. 618.

An accommodation acceptor, who takes the bill up and pays it to a bona fide holder after action brought by him, cannot recover the costs of such action against the parties liable to him for the sum paid on the bill. Roach v. Thompson, M. & M. 487.

6. STATING PROCEEDINGS.

When.]—The payee of a note having paid the amount to the indorsee, on default of the maker, sued the latter in the name of the indorsee, but without any authority from him, and obtained a verdict. The maker having paid the debt, the court, upon his application, stayed the proceedings, without costs on either side, and each party bearing his own costs of the rule. Coleman v. Biedman, 7 C. B. 871; 7 D. & L. 121.

Stay of Proceedings—Defence of.]—Two actions having been brought upon a bill, one against the drawer, and the other against the acceptor, the drawer obtained an order for a stay of proceedings on payment of debt, interest and costs:—Held, that the payment under the order could not be pleaded in bar of the further maintenance of the second action, as a payment in satisfaction or discharge of the action, against the acceptor, or relied on as a ground for reduction of damages. Randall v. Moon, 12 C. B. 261; 21 L. J., C. P. 226.

In an action by indorsee against indorser it is no defence that the plaintiff, before action, had consented to a judge's order in an action against the drawer, that, upon payment of the debt and costs within one month, all further proceedings should be stayed, and that, unless such payment were so made, the plaintiff should be at liberty to sign final judgment, although the plea also states that the plaintiff could have obtained such judgment before the expiration of the month, inasmuch as such order did not amount to an absolute stay of proceedings. Michael v. Myers, 6 M. & G. 702; 1 D. & L. 792; 7 Scott, N. R. 444; 13 L. J., C. P. 14; 7 Jur. 1156.

It is no defence to an action against the drawer, that the proceedings in an action against the acceptor had (without his consent) been stayed at an early stage by a judge's order to pay debt and costs in three weeks, otherwise judgment. Kennard v. Knott, 5 Scott, N. R. 247; 4 M. & G. 474.

Right to Bill on.]—A plaintiff sued a defendant on a bill, and at the same time proceeded by summons in bankruptcy, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 78. The action having been stayed, on payment of debt and costs:—Held, that the plaintiff had no right to keep the bill until the costs in bankruptcy were paid. Cornes v. Taylor, 10 Ex. 441; 18 Jur. 963.

In Equity.]—Where an action has been commenced by an indorsee of a note against the maker, which is impeached on the ground of fraud, and a distinct allegation that such note was not to be negotiated, but to be an item in the further settling of accounts between the parties; and also that the indorsee received such note with notice of the terms on which it was given; the court will restrain the indorsee and his alleged agent from issuing execution on any judgment he may obtain in such action until answer or further order. Bainbridge v. Hemingway, 12 L. T. 74.

A., a shareholder in a company, having held 500 shares, and as he alleged forfeited 490, brought an action against the company for services for a given sum. The company pleaded, but did not plead any set-off, and afterwards withdrew the pleas. A. entered up judgment, and issued execution against B., one of the directors, who obtained time on giving a note. He alleged that at the time he gave it he did not know that A. was a shareholder or had forfeited shares, and he alleged that A. was indebted on his 500 shares in more than the sum claimed; but he had signed a return under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, stating that A. had held 500 shares, but had forfeited 490:—Held, that he had no equity to restrain an action by A. on the note. Hammond v. Ward, 3 Drew. 103.

Where a bill given for the price of a guaranteed article, which turned out to be worthless, was negotiated by the seller before notice of the failure of consideration, a court of equity refused to set aside the purchase, and order the bill, though not due, to be retired by him on behalf of the purchaser, coming for relief after notice that the bill had been parted with, his remedy being at law. Jackson v. Shanks, 12 Jur., N. S. 917; 15 W. R. 55.

7. FOR CONSIDERATION UNDER MONEY COUNTS.

Generally.]—If a declaration on a bill, by drawer against acceptor, contains also the common counts, the plaintiff will be entitled to enter the verdict on such of those counts as apply to the consideration of the bill, as well as on the count upon the bill, provided the consideration of the bill is stated in the particulars of demand; and the plaintiff will, after he has closed his case, be allowed to call a witness, and prove the consideration, to prevent these issues being found for the defendant. Ryder v. Ellis, 8 C. & P. 357.

Where a bill is given in payment for goods which, upon presentment to the drawee, is refused acceptance:—Held, that the holder having declared against the drawer on the bill, and joined counts for goods sold, may treat such bill as a nullity, and recover his demand on the latter count, although the credit on the bill is not expired. Hickling v. Hardey, 1 Moore, 61; 7 Taunt. 312.

A bill payable to a fictitious person or order is completely void; but if money paid by the holder as a consideration for the indorsement finds its way to the acceptor, it may be recovered as money had and received. Bennett v. Farnell, 1 Camp. 130.

A declaration alleged that the defendant made his bill of exchange, and directed the same to B., and required him to pay to the defendant's order and then indorsed the bill to the plaintiffs. The bill was drawn by F., and indorsed by the defendant in blank, and having been delivered by the defendant to F., was by him taken to a bank of which the plaintiffs were the managers, where it was received by them in renewal of another bill discounted by them, and drawn and indorsed by the same parties:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover on an account stated. Burmester v. Hogarth, 11 M. & W. 97; 12 L. J., Ex. 178.

When Acceptor discharged by Alteration in Bill.—An indorsee cannot recover on the money counts from an acceptor, who is discharged by a material alteration in the bill. Long v. Moore, 3 Esp. 155, n.

Evidence.—In an action by indorsee against indorser, evidence of an acknowledgment of an existing debt and of a promise to pay by the defendant, is admissible, and sufficient to support a count upon an account stated. Wagstaffe v. Boardman, 9 D. & R. 248.

A promise by a drawer to pay the indorsee and holder of bills overdue, is evidence of an account stated in an action by the indorsee against the drawer. Oliver v. Dorratt, 2 M. & Rob. 230.

—Of what Note or Bill is.—In an action on a bill or note by an indorsee against an indorser, the bill will not be evidence of an account stated, unless there is an admission of the money being due. Bird v. Legge, 7 D. P. C. 814; 5 M. & W. 418; 3 Jur. 823.

A note is evidence under the money counts, only as between the original parties to it. Waynam v. Bend, 1 Camp. 175; S. P., Bentley v. Northouse, M. & M. 66; Eales v. Dicker, M. & M. 324.

A bill payable to the order of the drawer, in an action by him against the acceptor, is good evidence under the money counts. Thompson v. Morgan, 3 Camp. 101.

In August, 1844, the defendant gave the plaintiff a note for 23l. 2s. 6d., which the note described as being the interest due on a note for 117l. 4s., dated the 6th July, 1838, up to the 6th July, 1844:—Held, evidence of an account stated, in August, 1844, of a then subsisting debt of 117l. 4s. Perry or Penny v. Slade, 8 Q. B. 115; 15 L. J., Q. B. 10; 10 Jur. 31.

A note given by the defendant to the plaintiff, payable five years after date, for value received, is evidence of an account stated, against which the Statute of Limitations does not commence to run until the maturity of the note. Fryer v. Roe, 12 C. B. 437.

Where a plaintiff cannot recover on a count on a note for want of a stamp, he may recover on a count for money lent, by proving an acknowledgment on a demand made. Tyte v. Jones, 1 East, 58, n.

Action by indorsee of a bill for 57l. 10s., and upon an account stated against the acceptor. The bill was upon an insufficient stamp; and the plaintiff, in order to recover upon the account stated, produced two letters written by the acceptor after the dishonour of the bill. In the first, which was dated on the day the bill became due, and which was addressed "To the gentleman who calls with the bill," he expressed his regret that it was not in his power to take up the bill. In the second letter, which was in answer to one from the plaintiff's attorney, requiring payment of the acceptance in favour of Tilbury for 57l. 10s., he said, if he had had the money he should not have let his acceptance be dishonoured; and he proposed that Tilbury should draw upon him in a month:—Held, that these letters did not amount to an acknowledgment that the sum of 57l. 10s. was due to the plaintiff, but merely that it was due to the person legally entitled to the bill; that it was necessary, therefore, for the plaintiff to prove an indorsement of the bill; and that the bill not being on a sufficient stamp, could not be looked at by the jury for the purpose of ascertaining this fact. Jardine v. Payne, 1 B. & Ad. 663.

Right to Begin.—In an action on a bill or note, and a common money count, special pleas to the one, and never indebted to the other, if the plaintiff does not undertake to prove a sufficient transaction on the latter count, the defendant is entitled to begin. Oakeley v. Ooddean, 2 F. & F. 656.

8. PLEADINGS.

Declaration—Sufficiency of.—A declaration by indorsee against acceptor of a bill, payable three months after date, which period has elapsed. Breach, that he had not paid. A demurrer that the declaration did not shew that the three days of grace had elapsed before action, was set aside as frivolous. Padwick v. Turner, 11 Q. B. 124; 17 L. J., Q. B. 7; 11 Jur. 930; S. P., Shepherd v. Shepherd, 3 D. & L. 199; 1 C. B. 847; 14 L. J., C. P. 220; 9 Jur. 668.

In an action by indorsee against indorser of a bill, drawn payable in London, the declaration averred a presentment generally, not stating in London; but the venue was London:—Held, a sufficient averment of a presentment in London. Boydell v. Harness, 3 C. B. 108; 4 D. & L. 179; 15 L. J., C. P. 233.

A count on a note payable at a place named in the note is bad, after verdict, for want of an averment of presentment at that place. Emblin v. Dartnell, 12 M. & W. 830; 1 D. & L. 1010; 13 L. J., Ex. 255.

In an action by a banking company as indorsee against indorser, the declaration stated that L. made his note in Scotland payable to the defendant's order, and delivered it to him; that he indorsed and delivered it to the company; that the note was not paid, although duly presented for payment, and that it was protested for non-payment, whereof the defendant had notice:—Held, on motion in arrest of judgment, that the declaration was good, the word "whereof" not being confined to the averment of protest only. Bonar v. Mitchell, 5 Ex. 415; 19 L. J., Ex. 302.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor, it is not necessary to allege his notice of the indorsement. Skelton v. Halstead, 2 D., N. S. 69; 6 Jur. 961.

It is not necessary in a declaration on a bill to aver that the maker delivered it; it is sufficient to state that he made it. Churchill v. Gardner, 7 T. R. 596.

A bill payable to the order of A. is payable to A., without alleging any order made; and it is sufficient to declare that A. delivered the bill to the defendant, which he accepted, without alleging a re-delivery of the bill by the defendant. Smith v. McClure, 5 East, 476; 2 Smith, 43; Bluet v. Middleton, 1 D. & L. 376.

In an action against indorser, if the plaintiff does not allege a demand on, and refusal by the acceptor, on the day when the note was payable, it is error, and not cured by verdict. Rushion v. Aspinall, 2 Dougl. 679.

In like manner it is error, and not cured by verdict, if he does not allege notice to the defendant of the refusal by the acceptor. Ib.

If a conditional acceptance is declared upon, it must be set forth specially, with an averment that the condition has been performed. Ralli v. Sarrell, D. & R. N. P. C. 33. See Russell v. Phillips, 14 Q. B. 891.

The indorsee of note cannot declare against his indorser as maker, even where the latter has indorsed a note not payable or indorsed to him; and where, consequently, his indorsee cannot sue the original maker. Gwinnett v. Herbert, 5 A. & E. 436; 6 N. & M. 723; 2 H. & W. 194.

A declaration against the maker of a note, payable at a particular place, which avers a presentment at the place, need not aver a refusal at the particular place. Butterworth v. Le Despencer (Lord), 3 M. & S. 150.

In an action on a note by indorsee against maker, notice of the indorsement need not be averred. Reynolds v. Davies, 1 B. & P. 625.

So, in a declaration by indorsee against acceptor, it is unnecessary to aver notice of the indorsement. Heald v. Johnson, 2 Smith, 44.

It is not necessary in an action against a drawer for non-acceptance to aver the delivery of the bill to the plaintiff. Devereux v. Morrissey, 17 Ir. C. L. R. 785.

In an action for the non-acceptance of a foreign bill, when drawn in sets of threes, it is not necessary to aver either the non-acceptance or non-payment of the second and third bills. Ib.

The allegation in a declaration that the bill is "now overdue," is not a traversable allegation, but part of the description of the instrument declared on. Hinton v. Duff, 11 C. B. N. S. 724; 2 F. & F. 561; 31 L. J., C. P. 199; 5 L. T. 797; 10 W. R. 295.

Where, therefore, an action was commenced on the 11th of June, and the bill only arrived at maturity on that day:—Held, that the plaintiff failed to sustain the declaration, and that his right to recover was properly put in issue by non acceptavit.

— Foreign Bill.—A declaration against drawer or indorser of a foreign bill should allege that it was made in parts beyond the seas. Armani v. Castrique, 2 D. & L. 432; 13 M. & W. 443; 14 L. J., Ex. 36; S. P., Bank of Ireland v. Archer, 11 M. & W. 383.

— Date of Bill.—It is not necessary to set out the date of a bill; its delivery is its date. Giles v. Bourne, 6 M. & S. 73; 2 Chit. 300.

The statement in a declaration that the defendant, on a certain day, made his note does not require proof that the note bore date on that day. Smith v. Lord, 2 D. & L. 759; 14 L. J., Q. B. 112; 9 Jur. 450.

— When Payable.—Where a count on a note was demurred to, because it omitted to state the time at which it became payable, or whether it was payable before action, the court set aside the demurrer as frivolous. Gurney v. Hill, 2 D., N. S. 936; 12 L. J., Q. B. 297; 7 Jur. 834.

Names of Parties—Before the C. L. P. Act of 1852.—In an action by indorsee against acceptor, the declaration alleged that one J. Bankes made his bill, and the defendant specially demurred, on the ground that the christian-name of Bankes ought to have been set out in full, or that it should have been alleged that he was designated by an initial letter in the bill; the court set aside the demurrer as frivolous. Braithwaite v. Harrison, 1 D. & L. 210; 7 Jur. 898.

But in subsequent cases, the court refused to set aside such a demurrer, as being frivolous. Nash v. Calder, 5 C. B. 177; 5 D. & L. 341; 17 L. J., C. P. 91; S. P., Smith v. Bull, 15 L. J., Q. B. 413; 10 Jur. 946.

Afterwards it was held to be informal to describe any of the parties to a bill or note by the initials only of their christian-names, without shewing that they were so described in the instrument itself. Esdaile v. Maclean, 15 M. & W. 277; 16 L. J., Ex. 71.

Therefore, an averment that J. C. Pawle made his bill, which the defendant accepted, and that J. C. Pawle indorsed it to the plaintiff, was ill. Levy v. Webb, 9 Q. B. 427; 15 L. J., Q. B. 407; 10 Jur. 980; S. P., Kinnersley v. Knott, 7 C. B. 980; 7 D. & L. 128; 18 L. J., C. P. 281; 13 Jur. 658; Miller v. Hay, 3 Ex. 14; 18 L. J., Ex. 487; 12 Jur. 985.

Action against the maker of a note. Plea, that it was made by the defendant as the treasurer of a society, which consisted of divers persons, to wit, fifty persons, and was called "The Silurian Lodge of Odd Fellows," and as a security for any balance due to the society from the defendant, as such treasurer, was bad, on special demurrer, for not stating the names of the persons composing the society, nor any reason for not giving them. Williams v. Miles, 6 D. & L. 433; 18 L. J., Ex. 295.

Plea—Non assumpsit or never Indebted.]—To a declaration on a bill and an account stated, the defendant pleaded non assumpsit, whereupon the plaintiff signed judgment as for want of a plea:—Held, that he was not justified in signing judgment, the proper course being to demur; and the court refused to amend such judgment by confining it to the issue raised on the first count. Eddison v. Pigram or Peagram, 4 D. & L. 277; 16 M. & W. 137; 16 L. J., Ex. 33; 10 Jur. 1090.

In an action on a bill by indorsee against acceptor, and a count on an account stated, he pleaded non assumpsit:—Held, that the cause could not be tried on this plea, and, the jury being sworn, plaintiff took a verdict for the amount of the bill and interest, without adducing any evidence, and without putting in the bill. Neale v. Procter, 2 C. & K. 456.

To a declaration containing a count by indorsee against indorser of a bill, and a count on an account stated, the defendant, who was under terms of pleading issuably, pleaded thus: "And the defendant says, that he did not indorse the bill, as in the first count mentioned; and as to the last count, that he did not promise." The plaintiff having signed judgment, on the ground that the first plea, in terms, applied to the whole declaration, and was therefore non-issuable, the court set aside the judgment for irregularity. Bousfield v. Edge, 1 Ex. 89; 5 D. & L. 99; 17 L. J., Ex. 169.

To an action containing a count on a bill and another on an account stated, the defendant pleaded non assumpsit:—Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to demur, but might apply to a judge to set the plea aside. Robeson v. Ellis, 5 D. & L. 403; 2 B. C. Rep. 185; S. P., Fraser v. Newton, 8 D. P. C. 773.

To a declaration, the first count being on a note, and the other counts being common counts, the defendant, without a rule to plead several matters, pleaded to the first count, a traverse of the making of the note, "and for a further plea as to the whole declaration," non assumpsit:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to sign judgment. Harrey v. Hamilton, 4 Ex. 43; 7 D. & L. 85; 18 L. J., Ex. 377.

By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, s. 40, the general issue may be pleaded, and that act and the special matter given in evidence, in defence of an action on a security given by a bankrupt, with interest, to persuade a creditor to forbear opposing, or consent to the allowance of his certificate:—Held, that the general issue of non assumpsit (by statute) might be pleaded under this enactment in an action on a bill or note. Weeks v. Argent, 16 M. & W. 817; 16 L. J., Ex. 209; 11 Jur. 525.

—Set-off.—In an action by the payee of a joint and several note against one who, to the knowledge of the payee, joined in it as a surety only, it is competent to the surety by way of equitable defence, to plead a plea of a set-off due from the payee to the principal, arising out of the same transaction out of which the liability of the surety arose. Bechervaise v. Lewis, 7 L. R., C. P. 372; 41 L. J., C. P. 161; 26 L. T. 848; 20 W. R. 726.

—Other Pleas.—A declaration by indorsee against indorser stated that A. drew the bill payable to his own order, and indorsed it to the defendant, who indorsed it to the plaintiff. A plea traversed the indorsement by A. to the defendant:—Held, that the defendant was estopped from pleading the plea, and that it raised an immaterial issue. Macgregor v. Rhodes, 6 El. & Bl. 266; 25 L. J., Q. B. 318; 2 Jur., N. S. 834.

There is no material distinction between a plea traversing the indorsement of a bill modo et forma, and one which denies its indorsement to a particular indorsee, as alleged in the declaration. Waters v. Thanet (Earl), 7 D. P. C. 261; 7 Scott, 181; 1 Arn. 509; 3 Jur. 171.

A plea by indorser that he did not make or draw the bill is not a nullity, so as to entitle the plaintiff to sign judgment, as every indorser is, in contemplation of law, a new drawer. Allen v. Walker, 2 M. & W. 317; 5 D. P. C. 460; M. & H. 44; 1 Jur. 57.

In an action by an indorser against acceptor, the court refused to allow a plea denying the drawing as well as a plea denying the acceptance. Gilmore v. Hague, 4 D. P. C. 303; 1 H. & W. 523.

An acceptor of a bill for 78*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* pleaded payment into court of 5*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, and nil debet beyond that sum, which is bad. The plaintiff, however, joined issue, and went to trial, and the defendant had a verdict. On cause shewn against rule nisi for judgment non obstante veredicto, or a new trial:—Held, that as plaintiff had chosen to take issue on the allegation that no more than 5*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* was due, which was an intelligible proposition for trial, it was open to the defendant to avail himself of any defence which he might have to the action. Finlayson v. Mackenzie, 3 Bing. N. C. 824; 6 D. P. C. 71; 5 Scott, 20; 3 Hodges, 211.

A plea to an action by indorsee against maker, that he was not, at the time of the commencement of the action, the lawful holder of the note, is embarrassing, and an amendment was ordered, "that after the indorsement, and at the time when the action was commenced, the plaintiff had ceased to be and was not the holder of the note." Barber v. Doyle, 12 Ir. C. L. R. 342.

On a plea that the defendant did not make the note, he cannot give in evidence that he was of imbecile mind at the time when he made it. Harrison v. Richardson, 1 M. & Rob. 504.

In an action on a bill, averring dishonour by acceptor, and notice thereof to the defendant, a plea that the defendant had not notice of the dishonour on the day the bill became due, is bad, as tendering an immaterial issue. Stericker v. Barker, 9 M. & W. 321; 6 Jur. 154.

Replications.—To an action upon a bill purporting to be drawn by A. payable to the order of B., and to have been indorsed by B. to C., and by C. to the plaintiff, the defendant (who had accepted the bill for the honour of A.), besides traversing the indorsements by B. and C., pleaded that, when the bill was made, there was no such person as B., the supposed payee, but that his name was merely fictitious, whereof the defendant at the time of his acceptance of the bill had no notice or knowledge. The court declined to allow the plaintiff to reply that the names of B. and C. were already on the bill when the defendant accepted it, and consequently that he was estopped from denying that they were real indorsers, holding that the matter was admissible under the traverse of the indorsement. Phillips v. Im Thurn, 18 C. B., N. S. 400.

—Before C. L. P. Act of 1852.—To an action by payees against maker, he pleaded that his brother was in his lifetime indebted to the plaintiffs in the amount of the note; and that after his death, and before interment, one of the plaintiffs, by a threat, that, unless the defendant would make the note, the plaintiffs would prevent the funeral of his brother from taking place, procured the making of the note from the defendant who made and delivered it upon such threat, and for no other cause whatever. Replication, that one of the plaintiffs did not by a threat, that, unless the defendant would make and deliver the note, the plaintiffs would prevent the funeral of his brother from taking place, procure from the defendant the note as alleged:—Held, that the replication was a good answer to the plea. Atkinson v. Davies, 11 M. & W. 236; 2 D., N. S. 771; 12 L. J., Ex. 169.

To a plea by acceptor that the bill was, to the knowledge of the holder, negotiated by fraud, and that no consideration was given for the indorsement to the holder, it was sufficient for the holder to reply that he had no notice of the fraud, and that the bill was indorsed to him for a good consideration. Bramah v. Roberts or Baker, 1 Bing. N. C. 469; 1 Scott, 350; 3 D. P. C. 392; 1 Hodges, 66.

9. EVIDENCE.

a. Production of Instrument.

When Necessary.—Action against acceptor. Plea, that before acceptance, a fiat in bankruptcy issued and was in prosecution against him, and he then owed the plaintiff a debt, provable under the commission, and that the acceptor, in consideration that the plaintiff would prove such debt under the commission, accepted the bill in part payment of the debt to be so proved, whereby the bill was and is void:—Held, that the statements in the plea did not oblige the plaintiff to produce the bill at the trial, nor entitle the defendant, to offer evidence of it, without a notice to produce. Goodered v. Armour, 3 Q. B. 956; 3 G. & D. 206; 11 L. J., Q. B. 56; 6 Jur. 1062.

In an action on a bill, to which there is a plea of fraud and covin, the plaintiff is not bound to produce the bill on the trial without notice. Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250; 3 D. & L. 87; 15 L. J., Ex. 40.

Where a plaintiff has obtained judgment on demurrer in an action on a bill, he is entitled, at the assessment of damages on the demurrer, to the full amount of the bill, without producing it in evidence. Lane v. Mullins, 1 G. & D. 712; 2 Q. B. 254; 1 D., N. S. 562; 5 Jur. 1084; S. P., Davis v. Barker, 4 D. & L. 468; 16 L. J., C. P. 86.

If there is one invariable mode in which bills are drawn between particular parties, this may be proved by parol evidence, without any of the bills being produced. Spencer v. Billing, 3 Camp. 310; 1 Rose, 362.

b. To vary Terms.

Written.—An indorsee of a bill or note taking it under an agreement not to sue the indorser, cannot sue such indorser, though the indorsement is unqualified. Pike v. Street, M. & M. 226. See Foster v. Jolly, 1 C., M. & R. 703.

If A. and B., being partners, dissolve their partnership, and in the deed of dissolution it is stipulated that A. shall receive all debts due to the firm, and afterwards C., a debtor of the firm, accepts a bill drawn by B. for the amount of the debt due to the firm:—Held, that the stipulation in the deed of dissolution is no defence to an action by B. against C. on this bill. King v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 108.

It is not competent to the maker of a note, in an action by a payee, to give in evidence an oral agreement to vary or contradict the express contract upon the face of the note, but a contemporaneous agreement in writing may be adduced for that purpose. Brown v. Langley, 4 M. & G. 466; 5 Scott, N. R. 249; 19 L. J., C. P. 62.

In an action by A. & Co., indorsees and holders of a note payable twelve months after date, against B., the payee and indorser, he pleaded a verbal agreement existed between A. & Co. and C. and D. the makers, to withhold the enforcement of the note till a balance of a floating account was struck:—Held, that the verbal agreement qualifying the written contract expressed in the note was bad in law. Pollock v. Bradbury, 8 Moore, P. C. C. 227.

A. made his note payable on demand, with interest, in favour of B. and C., executors of D. A. was, with other relatives, to be entitled to benefits under D.'s will upon the coming of age of the youngest legatee named in the will. By agreement between the legatees, the executors were authorized to lend the funds in their hands on personal security; and a part of these funds having been lent to A. (as well as to the other legatees), he gave the executors the note. By the agreement it was settled that the note given to the executors should not be sued on till the youngest legatee had arrived at the age mentioned in the will. The executors did not sign this agreement, but when it had been signed by the other parties, took it into their possession. The executors brought an action on the note while the legatee was alive, and before he had attained the specified age. A. pleaded the agreement as an answer, averring that the executors had accepted and received the note on the terms and conditions of the agreement, and that the youngest legatee was still under age. At the trial the agreement was proved:—Held, by the Queen's Bench, that the executors were bound by the agreement, the meaning of which was that the securities should remain outstanding until the legatee attained twenty-five, and that the plea was proved. Webb v. Spicer, 13 Q. B. 886; 18 L. J., Ex. 143.

But the Exchequer Chamber held, that the agreement was collateral to the note, because, though stated to be contemporaneous with it, it was not stated to be parcel of it, and was not between the same parties; that as a collateral agreement it was invalid for want of consideration, and was no defence, being at most a covenant not to sue for a limited time, and also a covenant with other covenantees than the defendant alone. S. C., 13 Q. B. 894; 7 D. & L. 324; 19 L. J., Q. B. 34; 14 Jur. 33.

Held afterwards, by the House of Lords, that the plea was bad in substance, for that the agreement was collateral to, and was not between the same parties as the note. Salmon v. Webb (in error), 3 H. L. Cas. 510.

Parol.—It is not competent to an acceptor to set up a parol contract inconsistent with the contract upon the face of the bill. Benant v. Cross, 10 C. B. 895; 2 L., M. & P. 351; 20 L. J., C. P. 173; 15 Jur. 828.

A parol agreement contemporaneous with a promissory note, to the effect that the note, though on the face of it payable on demand, should not be enforced for three years, is immaterial and inoperative to contradict the terms of the note. Stott v. Fairlamb, 52 L. J., Q. B. 420; 48 L. T. 574.

As to Payment.—To an action by payee against the drawer of a bill payable twelve months after date, he pleaded that he drew the bill and delivered it to the plaintiff for the accommodation of the acceptor and as surety for him; that it was agreed between the plaintiff and himself and the acceptor that the acceptor should deposit with the plaintiff securities to be held by the plaintiff as security for the due payment of the bill, and that, in case the bill should not be duly paid, the plaintiff should sell the securities and apply the proceeds in liquidation of the bill, and that, until the plaintiff should have so sold the securities, he should not be liable to be sued on the bill. The plea then went on to aver that the securities were deposited with the plaintiff by the acceptor, but that he had not sold but still held them:—Held, that oral evidence of the agreement alleged in the plea was not admissible, inasmuch as it contradicted or varied the express written contract on the face of the bill. Abrey v. Cross, 5 L. R., C. P. 37.

In an action by payee against the maker of a note, parol evidence is inadmissible to prove an agreement that he should not be liable if the assets of a third party should be sufficient to pay the debt for which it was given. M'Dougall v. Field, 6 Ir. R., C. L. 185.

In an action on a bill, it is an inadmissible defence, that by a contemporaneous parol agreement it was stipulated that payment should not be called for until the determination of another suit, and that that suit was still undetermined. Adams v. Wordley, 1 M. & W. 374; 2 Gale, 29.

When a note is payable fourteen days after date, and is not deposited as a collateral security, and the consideration is not disputed, no parol testimony is admissible to prove any agreement that it was not to be paid if a verdict was obtained in an action pending between other parties; for that would be to contradict a written contract by parol evidence. Foster v. Jolly, 1 C. M. & R. 703; 5 Tyr. 239; S.C., nom. Foster v. Sibley, 1 Gale, 10.

The legal effect of a bill cannot be controlled or varied by a parol condition; therefore, where it was verbally understood between the acceptor and payee of a bill, that its amount should be paid out of a particular fund:—Held, that this did not control the legal operation of the bill. Campbell v. Hodgson, Gow, 74.

— As to Renewal.—In an action on a note or bill, the defendant cannot give in evidence a parol agreement entered into when it was drawn that it should be renewed, and that payment should not be demanded when it became due. Hoare v. Graham, 3 Camp. 57.

To a declaration on a bill by the drawer and payee against the acceptor, he pleaded that he accepted the bill on a condition then agreed on between him and the drawer, viz., that in a certain event which occurred the drawer would renew the bill. The plea did not aver that this agreement was in writing:—Held, that, as the agreement would not be a defence unless it was in writing, the plea must be construed as alleging a written agreement, and that the plea was therefore good. Young v. Asten, 4 L. R., C. P. 553; 38 L. J., C. P. 233; 21 L. T. 327; 18 W. R. 63.

— As to Consideration.—Where a testatrix in her lifetime gave the plaintiff a note to pay him or order, on demand, 100l. "for value received and his kindness to me," with a verbal engagement on his part that the note should not be demanded until after her death. In an action upon the note, parol evidence cannot be received to shew that it was not given for a valuable consideration. Woodbridge v. Spooner, 1 Chit. 661; 3 B. & A. 233.

Where a bill or note expresses the consideration for which it is given, evidence cannot be given of a consideration inconsistent with its terms. Ridout v. Bristow, 1 Tyr. 84; 1 C. & J. 231.

Where a widow gave a note "for value received by my late husband:"—Held, first, that the note was valid on the face of it; and, secondly, that she was not at liberty to shew as a defence, that it was given as an indemnity against liabilities incurred on behalf of her late husband, and that the payee had not been damaged. Id.

It is no defence to an action by payee against maker of a note, that the payee had agreed to convey an estate to the maker, in consideration of a sum of money then paid or secured to be paid to the maker (being the sum mentioned in the note), and of a further sum to be paid at a future day; and that such estate had never been conveyed. Spiller v. Westlake, 2 B. & Ad. 155; S. P., Jones v. Jones, 6 M. & W. 84.

A sum of 400l. belonging to A. was put by him into the hands of B., his solicitor, who laid it out on mortgage, and the deeds were deposited with A. Interest being in arrear, and A. pressing for payment, B. gave a note, payable three months after date, to A. for the amount of principal and interest; and it was agreed, at the time of giving the note, that A. should deliver up the deeds to B. and should hold the note till the sale of the mortgaged premises should be completed. When the note became due, A. sued B. upon it, though the deeds had not been delivered up, or the sale of the mortgaged premises been completed. The judge left it to the jury to say whether the note was given on a condition precedent, that the deed should be delivered up:—Held, that it ought to have been left to them to say what the consideration of the note was, and whether it had wholly failed or not. Richards v. Thomas, 1 C., M. & R. 772.

In an action by payee against maker of a note, though it is not competent to him to controvert or vary by parol the contract that appears on the face of the note, he may shew that there was no consideration, or that the consideration has failed. Abbott v. Kendricks, 2 Scott, N. R. 183; 1 M. & G. 791.

— Note on Demand.—Where a defendant undertook to pay a note on demand, he cannot adduce evidence to shew a liability on a contingency only. Rawson v. Walker, 1 Stark. 361.

Where a note is, on the face of it, payable on demand; oral evidence of an agreement entered into when it was made, that it should not be paid until a given event happened, is inadmissible. Moseley v. Handford, 10 B. & C. 729.

— To shew that Note was given as Security for Interest only.—Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove a note expressed to be a security for 500l. and interest, to have been intended to secure the interest only. Hill v. Wilson, 8 L. R., Ch. 888; 42 L. J., Ch. 817; 29 L. T. 238; 21 W. R. 757.

c. Declarations and Admissions.

Of Party outside the Note.—What is said by a third party at the time of signing a note as to the consideration for which it is given, is not evidence against the payee, if he was not present. Healey v. Jacobs, 2 C. & P. 616.

Declarations of former Holders.—In an action by indorsee against maker of a note, where the plea alleged that the note was obtained from him by fraud, and the name of A. (who had indorsed to the plaintiff), had been fraudulently indorsed, of all which the plaintiff had notice:—Held, that the maker was not at liberty to read letters of A. written while he was holder of the note, which, it was alleged, would have implicated the plaintiff in the fraud, for no evidence had been given to connect the plaintiff with A., or to shew that the note had been indorsed to the plaintiff without consideration, or when overdue. Phillips v. Cole, 2 P. & D. 289; 10 A. & E. 106; 4 Jur. 83.

In an action by indorsee against maker of a note, declarations of the payee (not uttered at the time of making the note) are not evidence to prove that the consideration for the note was money lost at play, unless previously shewn that the indorsee is identified in interest with the payee, as by having taken the note after it was due, or without any consideration. Beauchamp v. Parry, 1 B. & Ad. 89.

The declarations of the holder of a bill made whilst it is current, are not admissible against a subsequent holder under an indorsement made before the bill became due. Smith v. Di Wruit, R. & M. 122.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor, the declarations of a former holder are evidence, if shewn that he was the holder at the time, and was making such declarations against his own interest; but it is otherwise, if he made them after he had given up the possession of the bill. Pocock v. Billing, 2 Bing. 269; 9 Moore, 499; 1 C. & P. 230; R. & M. 129.

The declarations of a former holder of a note, payable on demand, made while he was the holder, are not evidence for the defendant in an action by a subsequent holder, unless the note had been presented for payment before such declarations were made. Borough v. White, 2 C. & P. 8.

Where, in an action by indorsee, the defence is that the defendant had settled it in account with the holder when due, and that the plaintiff took it after it became due, what was said by the person represented as the holder and indorsee when it became due is not evidence; he should himself be called. Duckham v. Wallis, 5 Esp. 251.

The declaration of an indorser, made whilst he was holder, is evidence to go to the jury against a holder under an indorsement made before the bill was due; if there is evidence which satisfies the judge that the indorsee is merely an agent to sue for the indorser; and the jury is afterwards to judge, first, of the agency, and then of the effect of the declaration. Welstead v. Levy, 1 M. & Rob. 138.

In an action against maker of a note, letters of an indorser are not admissible to impeach the indorsee's title, though the indorsement was made after the note was payable. Clipsam v. O'Brien, 1 Esp. 10.

Admissions of Acceptor.—In an action by indorsee against acceptor the defence was that the bill was a forgery; he had represented it to be so to certain bankers, who were applied to to discount it for a prior holder; the bankers wrote a letter, stating what the acceptor had said, and minutely entering into the circumstances. This letter was received in evidence preliminarily to the observation which was made upon it by the holder.—Held, properly received. Miers v. Bowler, 2 Jur. 95.

Declarations of Drawer.—The declarations of the drawer are admissible in evidence to shew that the bill was obtained by fraud; the plaintiff must, however, be shewn to be in some way privy to the fraud. Peckham v. Potter, 1 C. & P. 232.

A written memorandum, given by a drawer to the acceptor, stating that the bill was drawn altogether for his accommodation, and that he will save him harmless against it, is evidence to shew that the bill was an accommodation bill, even in an action against the acceptor by a bona fide indorsee. Reeces v. Toome, 5 Jur. 370.

As to Consideration.—On an issue, whether consideration was given by the plaintiff for a note, his letters shewing that he was pressed for money, are evidence for the defendant. Homan v. Thompson, 6 C. & P. 717.

Of Handwriting.—In action upon a note dated the 10th of November, an admission by the defendant of the handwriting of a note dated the 10th of October, was produced.—Held, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to give evidence of the handwriting of the note mentioned in the declaration, since it was evident that the defendant's intention in the admission was to admit the handwriting of the note declared upon, and that the misdescription could not have misled him. Field v. Hemming, 5 D. P. C. 450; M. & H. 21; 1 Jur. 24.

In an action on a bill, the defendant was, by a judge's order, to make the admission specified in a notice to admit, and the notice called on him to admit that the document specified to be original was written, signed or executed, as it purported to have been, saving all just exceptions to its admissibility as evidence in this cause. The notice described the bill of exchange in the usual manner.—Held, that this admission did not preclude the defendant from objecting that the bill was not properly stamped, and also that this was not such an admission as dispensed with the production of the bill. Vain v. Whittington, Car. & M. 484.

As to Authority of Acceptor.—If an order to admit a bill is made where the notice describes it as having been "accepted by one H. B. for the defendant," it is not competent to the defendant to dispute the authority of H. B. to accept as his agent. Wilkes v. Hopkins, 3 D. & L. 184.

d. Proof of Consideration and Fraud.

What Sufficient.—In an action by a third indorsee against the acceptor, he cannot put the plaintiff to prove consideration, by giving prima facie evidence to shew the want of it, merely as between the drawer and his indorsee, and each subsequent indorser and indorsee; but he must also shew the want of consideration as between himself and the drawer. And for this purpose, it is not enough to prove that the drawer, on the day before the maturity of the bill, procured all the indorsements to be made without consideration, in order that the action might be brought by an indorsee, on the understanding that the money, when recovered, should be divided between one of the indorsees and the drawer. Whittaker v. Edmunds, 1 A. & E. 638; 1 M. & Rob. 366.

Action by the indorsees against the indorser of a note for 500*l.* Plea, except as to 200*l.*, that the note was delivered to the defendant, in order that he might indorse it for the accommodation of the maker, to enable him to obtain advances of money thereon; that the plaintiffs had only advanced to the amount of 200*l.*, and that there was no consideration for the residue. Replication, that the plaintiffs were the holders of the note for good and valuable consideration, given to the maker in respect of their being the holders of the note to the full amount:—Held, first, on this issue, that it was not incumbent upon the plaintiffs, in the first instance, to prove the consideration given for the note; but that it was necessary for the defendant to begin, and impeach the plaintiff's title. Percival v. Frampton, 2 C., M. & R. 180; 3 D. P. C. 748; 5 Tyr. 579.

Held, secondly, it having been proved that more than 500*l.* being due from the maker to the plaintiffs at the time the note was paid in to them, they entered the note as a bill discounted to his credit, but that 18*l.* only were paid to him, that that was equivalent to their having advanced the amount mentioned in the note, and was a giving of a valuable consideration within the meaning of the issue. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that if the note was given to them as a security for a previous debt, the plaintiffs might be properly stated to be the holders for a valuable consideration. Ib.

Presumption of—How rebutted.—Action on a note at two months after date by indorsee against maker. Plea, that he delivered the note to the indorsee in payment of a bet on the amount of hop duty, and that the plaintiff took it when overdue, and without value. It was proved that the note was made and given for the bet to the indorser in January, 1855; it bore date 1st January, 1854; but across it, at the time it was delivered by the maker, was written, "Due the 4th March, 1855." In fact, the date of 1854 was a mistake for 1855, not noticed by any one. It was indorsed to the plaintiff in January, 1855. The judge left it to the jury to say whether there was value for the indorsement, telling them that the burthen lay on the defendant to prove that there was none:—Held, that the memorandum, that the note was due on the 4th March, 1855, was equivalent to a memorandum correcting the error in the date, and being made before the note was issued, operated as a correction, and consequently, that the note was not overdue. Fitch v. Jones, 5 El. & Bl. 238; 24 L. J., Q. B. 293; 1 Jur., N. S. 854.

Held, also, that there was no misdirection; for that, though proof that a negotiable instrument was affected with fraud or illegality in the hands of a previous holder, raises a presumption that he would indorse it away to an agent without value, and consequently calls on the plaintiff for proof that he gave value, the presumption does not arise when the previous holder merely held without consideration. And that the bet, though void, and therefore no consideration, was not illegal, so as to raise a presumption that the indorsement was without value. Ib.

The presumption, that the holder of a bill has given value for it, is rebutted when it appears that the acceptance is a forgery; and it then lies on the holder to prove that he gave consideration. Mather v. Maidstone (Lord), 1 C. B., N. S. 273; 26 L. J., C. P. 58; 3 Jur., N. S. 112.

In an action on a bill, proof of any such circumstances of suspicion as might be left to the jury as evidence of fraud in the original negotiations of the bill will be sufficient to call upon the plaintiff to prove that he is a holder for value. Hill v. Featherstone, 3 H. & N. 284; 27 L. J., Ex. 308; 4 Jur., N. S. 813.

Reference made in Note to an "Annexed Contract" not annexed—Production of.—In an action on a note, the note purported to be "for value received in Pennance shares, pursuant to annexed contract;" no contract was in fact annexed:—Held, that this special description of the consideration for the note did not render it incumbent on the plaintiff to put in any contract or other document beside the note itself, in order to establish his case. For v. Frith, Car. & M. 502.

Plea of No Consideration.—In an action by the holders against maker of a cheque, he pleaded that the cheque had been given and indorsed without consideration. It appeared that the plaintiffs were trustees of a bank; that the cheque had been one of a number obtained by a person against whom the bank had a large account, and paid by him over to one of the bank agents, on a corrupt understanding between them, that it was to be entered in the bank books, for the purpose of creating a colourable balance of the account, but that, after the books were inspected by the trustees, the cheques should be returned, and none of the parties were to be sued upon it. The cheque had originally been obtained from the defendant, in consideration of a counter cheque for the like amount given by the payee, and on an understanding that neither was to be presented for payment:—Held, that neither of the allegations was proved. Bosanquet v. Corser, 8 M. & W. 142; 5 Jur. 369; S. C., at nisi prius, 9 C. & P. 604.

In an action on a note, by indorsee against maker, he pleaded that he was induced to make the note by the fraud of the payee, and that it was indorsed by the payee without consideration, and that the plaintiff sued thereon as trustee. The defendant having closed his case, the judge told the jury that there was no evidence to sustain the plea. The jury, however, returned a verdict for the defendant. The court granted a new trial, without examining whether the direction of the judge was right or wrong. Wood v. Cox, 17 C. B. 280.

Onus probandi.—Where an acceptor or other party sued upon a bill pleads only that it was given for goods not delivered, or for any other consideration which has failed, the defendant has a right to begin, but the onus of proof is upon him, and he is bound to satisfy the jury that the goods have not been delivered, or that the consideration has failed in toto, and if he does not prove this, except as to part, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for the rest. Clark v. Holmes, 2 F. & F. 79.

Where the immediate indorser of a bill to the plaintiff has parted with the bill in violation of good faith, want of consideration as between him and the plaintiff is presumed, so as to throw upon him the onus of proving consideration. Smith v. Braine, 16 Q. B. 244; 20 L. J., Q. B. 201; 15 Jur. 287.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor, the mere absence of consideration for the acceptance and prior indorsements, does not throw the onus on the plaintiff of proving the consideration for the indorsement to him, where no circumstances of fraud or illegality appear. Whittaker v. Edmunds, 1 M. & Rob. 366; S. P., Jacob v. Haggate, 1 M. & Rob. 445; Batley v. Catterall, 1 M. & Rob. 379.

Action by an indorsee against the acceptor. Plea, that he accepted the bill for the accommodation of the drawer, and that the drawer did not give nor did the defendant receive, any consideration for his accepting or paying the bill; that the drawer indorsed the bill to the plaintiff without any consideration; and that the plaintiff held the bill without consideration. Replication, that the drawer indorsed the bill to the plaintiff for a good and valuable consideration:—Held, that it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to begin, and prove, in the first instance, that he gave value for the bill; but that the rule is otherwise where the title of the holder is impeached on the ground of fraud, duress, or that the bill has been lost or stolen. Mills v. Barber, 1 M. & W. 425; 5 D. P. C. 77; 2 Gale, 5.

Upon a plea of no consideration to an action on a note, to which the plaintiff replied that there was a consideration, the onus of proving that there was no consideration lies upon the defendant. Lacey v. Forrester, 3 D. P. C. 668; 2 C., M. & R. 59; 5 Tyr. 567; 1 Gale, 139.

Action against maker of a cheque. Plea, that it was delivered to a third person to secure a gaming debt, and by him delivered to the plaintiff without consideration. Replication, that it was delivered for a good consideration:—Held, that the illegal drawing of the cheque was so admitted as to throw on the plaintiff the onus of proving consideration. Bingham v. Stanley, 1 G. & D. 237; 2 Q. B. 117; 6 Jur. 381.

Action by indorsee against maker of a note. Plea, that the note was given for a gaming debt, and indorsed to the plaintiff with notice, and without consideration. Replication, that the note was indorsed to the plaintiff, without notice of the illegality, and for a good and sufficient consideration:—Held, that, on these pleadings, the illegal making of the note was not so admitted as to render it necessary for the plaintiff to give any evidence of consideration; but that, in order to compel him to do so, the defendant ought to have proved the illegality. Edmonds v. Groves, 2 M. & W. 642; 5 D. P. C. 775; M. & H. 211; 1 Jur. 592.

When a promissory note is given by principal and surety for a definite sum, and payable on a fixed day, it is presumed to be given in consideration of an advance at the date of the note; and if the payee asserts, as against the surety, that the object of the note was to secure the payment of the balance of an account current between the principal and the payee, the burden of proof lies on the payee. Boys, In re, Eedes v. Boys, Hop Planters' Company, Ex parte, 10 L. R., Eq. 467; 39 L. J., Ch. 655.

Indorsee against maker of a note payable to B. Plea, that the note was delivered to B. by the maker, without consideration, and in order that B. might raise money thereon in the maker's behalf; that the plaintiff advanced upon the security of the note a small sum, to wit, 200l., and no more, and the note was therefore indorsed by B. to the plaintiff; that before the action, the plaintiff was paid and satisfied by the defendant all the money by him advanced, and all his right, title and cause of action, upon and in respect of the same. The replication denied the payment and satisfaction. At the trial, the defendant gave no evidence in support of his plea, and the jury found a verdict under the direction of the judge for the whole amount of the note:—Held, that the direction was right, and that the defendant could not avail himself of the admission in the pleading, that only 200l. had been advanced, to limit the plaintiff's right to recover to that sum. Robins v. Maidstone, D. & M. 30; 4 Q. B. 811; 12 L. J., Q. B. 321; 7 Jur. 694.

—Where there is Fraud or Illegality.]—

To an action by indorsee against maker, he pleaded, that the note was indorsed to the plaintiff by his indorser, in violation of good faith, and in fraud and contempt of an order for referring the claim of that indorser to arbitration; and that the plaintiff took the note with knowledge of the premises. The plaintiff replied that he had not, when he took the note, any knowledge of the premises:—Held, that the defendant was bound to begin at the trial, and to prove the plaintiff's knowledge of the fraud; and that the plaintiff was not bound in the first instance to prove consideration given for the indorsement to him. Smith v. Martin, 9 M. & W. 304; 1 D., N. S. 418; Car. & M. 58.

In an action by indorsee against acceptor, to which the defendant pleads that the bill was obtained by fraud, and that it was indorsed to the plaintiff without consideration, to which he replies de injuria, although the latter allegation is necessary to render the plea good, proof of the fraud casts on the plaintiff the onus of proving consideration. Harvey v. Twiss, 6 Ex. 556; 20 L. J., Ex. 318; 15 Jur. 544; S. P., Bailey v. Bidwell, 13 M. & W. 73.

Upon the trial of such an issue it is not the duty of the judge, to determine as a preliminary fact whether fraud is sufficiently proved, to cast on the plaintiff the onus of proving consideration, but only whether there is evidence of fraud for the jury; and it is correct for him to direct them, that if they think the fraud proved in the absence of proof by the plaintiff of consideration, the defendant is entitled to the verdict. Id.

Action on a bill, drawn by M. upon and accepted by the defendant, indorsed by M. to K. and by K. to the plaintiff. Plea, that the bill was accepted by the defendant, and drawn and indorsed in blank by M., without value, and that the defendant gave it to E. to get it discounted for the defendant; that E. did not get it discounted, but in fraud of the defendant, and without the consent of M., delivered it to some person unknown, and that neither K. nor the plaintiff gave value for the indorsements to them. A second plea was the same as the first, except that instead of alleging want of consideration by H. and the plaintiff, it alleged that H. and the plaintiff had notice that the bill had been obtained from the defendant by fraud. On the part of the defendant, evidence was given that E. had obtained possession of the bill by fraud, upon which the judge ruled that the onus was cast upon the plaintiff of proving that he gave value:—Held, that this ruling was correct. Berry v. Alderman, 14 C. B. 95; 2 C. L. R. 691; 23 L. J., C. P. 34.

Where a bill or note is shewn to have originated in illegality or fraud, a presumption arises that a subsequent holder gave no value for it; and such presumption will support a plea that the plaintiff is a holder without consideration, unless rebutted by the defendant shewing that he gave value. But where there is a mere absence of consideration between the original parties, no such presumption arises, and the defendant is bound to prove by evidence the allegations in his plea. Fitch v. Jones, 5 El. & Bl. 238; 24 L. J., Q. B. 293; 1 Jur., N. S. 854.

What is Evidence of Fraud.—In an action by indorsee against acceptor, in order to raise a presumption that the plaintiff had received the bill fraudulently and without value, evidence was offered to shew that the defendant had been defrauded of it; that H., the person from whom the plaintiff received it, had stood at the dock in the Old Bailey, that he had retired thence and was seen no more at large for eighteen months, and that the plaintiff had admitted that he "had known H. for a considerable time :"—Held, no evidence to go to the jury that the plaintiff was aware of H.'s conviction or disreputable character. Berry v. Alderman, 13 C. B. 674; 1 C. L. R. 566.

Under a plea, alleging that the bill declared on was delivered to a party for a specific purpose, and afterwards handed to the plaintiff, who is not a bona fide holder, evidence of fraud in the plaintiff is not receivable. Uther v. Rich, 10 A. & E. 784; 2 P. & D. 579.

e. Proof of Payment.

What is Sufficient.—A. kept an account at a bank, who discounted for him a bill for 365*l.*, drawn by him upon and accepted by the defendant. The day before the bill became due, A. went to the bank, who held another bill of his for 370*l.*, due that day, and requested the manager to retire the two bills by discounting two others of similar amounts. The manager consented, and A. gave him a bill for 365*l.*, purporting to be accepted by the defendant, to retire the bill of that amount. The bank discounted the second bill for 365*l.*, and placed the proceeds to the credit of A. minus the discount, and the bank got back from their London agent the first bill for 365*l.*, with the acceptance cancelled. Several thousand pounds had been subsequently paid by A. into the bank. It afterwards turned out that the acceptance of the second bill for 365*l.* was forged by A. In an action by the bank against the defendant, as acceptor of the first bill :—Held, that the facts did not support a plea of payment of the bill by A. Bell v. Buckley, 11 Ex. 631; 25 L. J., Ex. 163.

Lapse of Time—Note unaccounted for.—Where a note of twenty years' date is unaccounted for, it is a presumption of payment. Duffield v. Creed, 5 Esp. 52.

Effect of Receipt.—A bill was drawn by A. on B., and indorsed to C. The bill was not satisfied when due, but part payments were afterwards made by the drawer and acceptor. Two years after it had become due, D. paid the balance to C., the holder, and the latter indorsed the bill, and wrote a receipt on it in general terms :—Held, that the receipt was not conclusive evidence that the bill had been satisfied either by the acceptor or drawer, but that parol testimony was admissible to explain it. Graves v. Key, 3 B. & Ad. 313.

An acceptor of a bill, on its presentation to him when due, did not take it up; but afterwards, on the same day, a person unknown called at the banker's where it lay, and paid the amount, and received back the bill with a general receipt indorsed upon it. In an action by the indorsee against the acceptor, the bill was produced bearing that receipt :—Held, no evidence of payment of the bill by the acceptor. Phillips v. Warren, 14 M. & W. 379; 14 L. J., Ex. 280; 9 Jur. 930.

Without Production of Note.—To an action by indorsee against maker of a note, he pleaded, that, before making the note, he made another note for the accommodation of the indorser, who indorsed it to the plaintiff; that when it became due he (the defendant) made the note in the declaration, and gave it to the indorser, to take up such prior note. He then averred payment by the indorser to the plaintiff of the note in the declaration, and acceptance by the plaintiff :—Held, that the only material part of the plea was payment of the note declared upon, and that such payment might be proved without producing the note; and that all the averments as to the prior note were surplusage, of which the defendant was not bound to give any evidence. Shearman v. Burnard, 2 P. & D. 565; 10 A. & E. 593.

In Cash.—Payment of a bill is understood in the lex mercatoria, and is used in 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 19, as a payment in cash of the bill when it comes to maturity. Morley v. Culterwell, 7 M. & W. 174; 1 H. & W. 13; 4 Jur. 1163.

A plea in an action on a bill by indorsee against drawer, that the bill was paid by the acceptor before it became due, and afterwards reissued by him without any new stamp, can be supported only by proof of actual payment in cash, and not by evidence of any arrangement between the drawer and acceptor, whereby the bill is treated as being satisfied. Id.

By Stranger.—To an action by indorsees of a bill for 55*l.*, the defendant pleaded that the bill was an accommodation bill, that the drawer indorsed the bill and other bills to the plaintiffs as security for repayment to them of 30*l.* advanced by them to the drawer, and that the bill was satisfied by payment to them by the acceptor of one of the other bills of the money so advanced, and all interest thereon :—Held, no bar to the action, the payment having been made by a stranger, and not having been ratified by the plaintiffs. Kemp v. Balls, 10 Ex. 607; 24 L. J., Ex. 47.

Of Joint and Several Note.—A plea of payment by one of several makers of a joint and several note is supported by proving a payment of the note by one of his co-makers. Braumont v. Greathead, 3 D. & L. 631; 2 C. B. 494.

Payment and acceptance of the amount of a note after it becomes due, and when the holder is entitled to nominal damages, is a plea of payment and acceptance in discharge of the debt and damages; consequently, the holder, after such payment and acceptance, cannot maintain an action for such nominal damages. Id.

An agreement between the payee and one of several makers of a joint and several note, that the payee shall take another note in satisfaction of the first, with payment of the note taken by the payee on such understanding, amounts to payment by the other makers of the joint and several note. Thorne v. Smith, 2 L. M. & P. 43; 10 C. B. 659; 20 L. J., C. P. 71; 15 Jur. 469.

Of part Payment of Note Payable on Demand.

—By the rules of a money-loan society, it was provided that each holder of shares should pay a sum per week upon each share, and that each member should take his share by sale, or, for want of a purchaser, by ballot; that for each share he was to receive 40*l.*, when paid by the members, upon giving a security, to be approved of by the committee. A. purchased a 40*l.* share, and, by way of the security required, he gave with two parties a joint note, payable on demand, for 40*l.*, to the treasurer of the society. He continued the weekly payments regularly for some time, and others were made by his sureties, and then default was made:—Held, in an action upon the note, in default of payment of the weekly sums, that the preceding payments of the weekly sums were no evidence in support of a plea of part payment of the note. Jones v. Grattan, 8 Ex. 773; 22 L. J., Ex. 247.

Plea of Payment—Sufficiency of.—In an action on a bill by indorsee against acceptor, a plea that the indorsement was in blank; that, at the time the bill became due, it was in the hands of W., as lawful holder for value, who, while he was holder, and in pursuance of an agreement with the acceptor, and after the bill was due, and before the plaintiff's possession, and before action, accepted of the acceptor 10*l.* in part payment of the bill, and a note at three months for the residue, which note he paid when due:—Held, that the plea sufficiently disclosed W.'s title to the bill, and also a payment to him in discharge of the bill. Lomas v. Landells, 6 C. B. 577; 6 D. & L. 296; 18 L. J., C. P. 88; 13 Jur. 38.

To an action by indorsee against acceptor, a plea puis darrein continuance, that an earlier indorser paid to the plaintiff, then being holder, and the plaintiff accepted, the full amount of the bill, and all interest thereon, in full satisfaction and discharge of the bill, and all moneys due in respect thereof, not mentioning damages or costs, is a bad plea. Goodwin v. Cremer, 18 Q. B. 757; 22 L. J., Q. B. 30; 17 Jur. 2.

XV. APPROPRIATION OF SECURITIES.

Generally.—When a drawer of an accommodation bill deposits securities in the hands of the acceptor, and appropriates such securities to the meeting of the bill, such appropriation overrides any general lien of the deposittee upon the securities. Inman v. Clare, 5 Jur., N. S. 89; Johns. 769.

Right to Securities, but not to Money arising from them.—The Gothenburg Company in London were in the habit of accepting bills drawn upon them by the Merchant Bank at Gothenburg, and the bank from time to time forwarded bills payable in London, which the company either discounted or collected as they arrived at maturity, and a running account was kept by the company as between themselves and the bank. The company stopped payment on the 20th January, 1879, and went into liquidation on the 22nd of the same month, and consequently the bank had to take up the company's acceptances to the amount of 2,197*l.* The bank claimed to be paid this sum out of the proceeds of bills amounting to 2,300*l.*, which had been remitted by itself to the company, and some of which remained in the hands of the company at the commencement of the liquidation:—Held, that the proceeds of bills discounted before the stoppage could not be followed by the bank; but that the bank was entitled to all bills remitted by it to the company which were in the hands of the company when it stopped payment. Gothenburg Commercial Company, In re, 44 L. T. 166; 29 W. R. 358—C. A.

Bill of Sale.—A. being indebted to C., A. and B. gave their joint and several note for the amount to C.: A. becoming further indebted, and pressed for further security, by a bill of sale (reciting that C. having demanded payment of the debt, A. had requested him to accept a further security), assigned his household effects to C. as a further security, with a proviso that he should not be turned out of possession of the effects till after three days' notice:—Held, that C.'s remedy on the note was neither suspended nor extinguished by the bill of sale, but that he might sue A. on the note at any time, notwithstanding the bill of sale. Twoopeny v. Young, 5 D. & R. 259; 3 B. & C. 208.

Agreement that Acceptor's Effects should be first Sold before calling upon Surety.—Defendant drew bills as surety for H., who accepted them, and it was provided by a deed to which the plaintiff, the holder, as well as the defendant, was a party, that he should not sue defendant on the bills till H.'s effects should have been sold, and the proceeds applied in discharge of the bills. H.'s effects were seized, and sold under a commission of bankruptcy, the trustee, to whom they had been conveyed by the deed, having, with the knowledge and assent of the defendant, omitted to take possession of them in time:—Held, that the plaintiff was not barred from suing the defendant on the bills. Lancaster v. Harrison, 6 Bing. 726; 4 M. & P. 561.

Of Mortgage.—K. & Co. accepted bills for L. & Co., and L. & Co. mortgaged to K. & Co. an estate in Guiana to secure a cash credit, granted by K. & Co., to the extent of 75,000 dollars. There was a general current account between the two firms. K. & Co. and L. & Co. each became insolvent:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the mortgage was a security for money advanced to meet the bills. City Bank v. Luckie, 5 L. R., Ch. 773; 23 L. T. 376; 18 W. R. 1181.

Held, also, that the holders of the bills were entitled to the benefit of the mortgage security, and to have the money received from the mortgage security applied in payment of the bills. Id.

Of Consignments.—P. & Co. were cotton merchants at Pernambuco. A., at Liverpool, wished to obtain consignments of cotton from them. They desired some security other than his own. He obtained from Bamed's Banking Company at Liverpool a letter of credit, by which the bankers authorized the Pernambuco firm to draw on them "against cotton purchased in conformity with instructions." The drafts were to be "covered by shipping documents, say invoices and bills of lading of cotton addressed to this company, and forwarded under separate cover by the same mail which brings the drafts for acceptance, on receipt of which documents we engage to honour such drafts." Some shipping documents of cotton were sent, and some bills were accepted—one bill was accepted without any shipping documents being sent—and then, before any of these bills were due, the bankers became bankrupt, and bills arriving immediately afterwards were left unaccepted. On a winding-up order, issued in the matter of the bank, the agent of the Pernambuco firm, who was also a partner in that firm, claimed to prove against the bankers for the whole amount of the bills, without bringing into account the value of the cotton which had been sold, or which remained in hand:—Held, that he was not in a position to do so, but was entitled only to prove for the balance. Banner v. Johnston, 5 L. R., H. L. 157; 40 L. J., Ch. 730; 24 L. T. 542.

The bill holders had no lien over the goods in the hands of the bankers, so as to enable them to treat the bankers as trustees for their interests. The bankers were only debtors to the bill holders for the surplus remaining after the goods consigned had been applied to satisfy the acceptances. Ib.

A banking company in Liverpool, at the request of L., granted to his agent in New Orleans a credit for 20,000*l.*, under which they were to be at liberty to draw bills upon the bank against cotton purchased by them on his account. The bills were to be accompanied by the corresponding bills of lading for cotton, and the bank undertook to accept the bills, on the bills of lading being given up to them, and to pay them at maturity. Under this credit his agent drew on the bank a bill for 7,798*l.* against 242 bales of cotton. The bill was discounted at New Orleans, and the discounters sent it with the bills of lading of the cotton to their agents in Liverpool, who presented it for acceptance, and it was accepted by the bank, to whom the bills of lading were handed. Soon afterwards the bank, in pursuance of some arrangement which they made with L., handed the bills of lading to him that he might raise money upon them. He pledged them with certain brokers for 6,000*l.*, and paid that sum into the bank to an account called his cotton account. Before the bill matured the bank stopped payment and was ordered to be wound up. Afterwards the brokers sold the cotton, and, after repaying themselves what they had advanced, with interest, paid the balance of the purchase-money to the holders of the bill. They were afterwards admitted to prove in the winding-up for the amount of the bill. The Master of the Rolls ordered that the balance of the proceeds of sale of the cotton which the bill holders had received should be set off against the dividends payable to them upon the amount of their proof:—Held, that no such set-off could be admitted. Barned's Banking Company, In re, Leech, Ex parte, 6 L. R., Ch. 388; 40 L. J., Ch. 590; 24 L. T. 647; 19 W. R. 552—L. J.J.

Leave was given to the liquidators to apply to have the amount of the proof reduced by the sum which the bill holders had received from the proceeds of the sale of the cotton. Ib.

On the 14th of September P. & Co. purchased from H. a floating cargo of maize, and on the same day resold it to the defendant. On the 4th of October P. & Co., according to the custom of the trade, paid H. (who retained the shipping documents) a deposit of 883*l.* on account of the cargo, and the same day drew a bill on the defendant for that amount, which he accepted. P. & Co. thereupon discounted the bill with his bankers. On the arrival of the cargo in November, P. & Co., acting on the defendant's instructions, sold the cargo for him to C., who paid H. the balance due from P. & Co. on the first sale, and received direct from H. the shipping documents. There was then remaining in C.'s hands a balance of 415*l.* due to the defendant. On the 2nd of December P. & Co. executed a deed of inspectorship; on the 17th the bill for 883*l.* was dishonoured at maturity; and on the 20th the defendant filed in Dublin a petition for arrangement with his creditors. Had P. & Co. not suspended payment, they would have been entitled, according to the regular course of business, to have appropriated the balance of 415*l.* to the taking up of the bill; and it would also have been their duty towards the defendant to have done so and to have retired the bill. C. having paid the 415*l.* into court:—Held, that the money paid in ought to be applied towards taking up the bill, and ought not to be paid to the defendant or his trustees. Bank of Ireland v. Perry, 7 L. R., Ex. 14; 41 L. J., Ex. 9; 25 L. T. 845; 20 W. R. 300.

Two firms of G. & Co. and L. & Co. engaged in a joint transaction, which consisted in the purchase of cotton by L. & Co. in Bombay, which was consigned to G. & Co. in London for sale by them on the joint account. The cotton was paid for by means of the proceeds of bills of exchange which were drawn by L. & Co. upon G. & Co. and were sold to bankers in Bombay. The bills of lading of the cotton were sent to G. & Co. to put them in funds to meet their acceptances when due. Both firms went into liquidation. Some of the cotton which had been bought on the joint account came into the hands of the trustee of L. & Co.:—Held, that the holders of acceptances of G. & Co., the proceeds of which had been employed in paying for this cotton, were entitled to have the proceeds of the cotton specifically appropriated to meet the bills, subject, however, to the right of the creditors (if any) of the aggregate partnership composed of the two firms to have the proceeds of the cotton applied as part of the joint estate of that partnership. Deuchurst, Ex parte, Leggatt, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 965; 42 L. J., Bk. 87; 29 L. T. 125; 21 W. R. 874.

A firm of merchants in England employed a firm of merchants in South America as their agents to purchase goods and send them to England. The foreign firm drew bills on the English firm, and sold them in South America, and with the proceeds purchased goods which they shipped to England, sending the bills of lading directly to the English firm, and at the same time advising them of the drawing of the bills, by means of which they had purchased the goods, and requesting them to carry the invoice price of the goods to their account. The English firm went into liquidation, and the foreign firm also became bankrupt. When the English firm stopped payment a cargo of goods was in transitu, and some of the bills drawn for purchasing them had been accepted by the English firm, but not paid, and others had not been accepted. The trustee in the liquidation took possession of the cargo on its arrival. The creditors of the foreign firm claimed to have the goods appropriated to meet the bills drawn in respect of them:—Held, that the foreign firm, whether regarded as the agents of the English firm or as vendors, had parted with all property in the goods, and had no power to direct the appropriation of the proceeds; and, therefore, no equity arose on the insolvency of the two firms in favour of the holders of the bills to have the proceeds applied in payment of the bills under the doctrine of Waring, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 345. Banner, Ex parte, Tappenbeck, In re, 2 Ch. D. 278; 45 L. J., Bk. 73; 34 L. T. 199; 24 W. R. 476—C. A.

A direction by consignor to consignee to place the invoice price of goods to his credit, and the bills drawn against them to his debit, does not amount to an appropriation of the goods to protect the bills. Ib.

A company employed an agent for the sale of goods in a shop taken for that purpose. The agent was to be paid a commission on the sale, and he was to accept bills for the company for such a reasonable amount as was represented by the goods on his premises; and if on the bills arriving at maturity the agent had not sufficient funds in his hands to meet the bills, the company was to make good the difference. The company failed and was wound up, and at that time a bill accepted by the agent had not arrived at maturity:—Held, that the agent had a lien upon the goods in his hands for the amount of the bill. Pary's Patent Felted Fabric Company, In re, 1 Ch. D. 631; 45 L. J., Ch. 318; 24 W. R. 507.

Y., a merchant at Costa Rica, consigned goods to M., L. & Co., of London, and at the same time drew bills on M., L. & Co., intending that the goods should be a provision for the bills. Two of the bills came into the hands of the plaintiff, who presented them to M., L. & Co. for acceptance, but they declined to accept them. Y., on being informed of this, wrote to S., in London, requesting him to take charge of the consignment and to realize it, honouring all his drafts which on account of it he had drawn upon M., L. & Co., and to telegraph if the proceeds were insufficient to cover the drafts. Upon these instructions S. wrote to the plaintiff, referring to the bills, and informing him that he expected delivery of the goods sent by the drawer against them, and would then write again. Shortly afterwards S. obtained the delivery warrants from M., L. & Co., and wrote to the plaintiff, saying that he would dispose of the same as instructed by the sender:—Held, that the plaintiff and other holders of the bills had a specific charge upon the proceeds of sale. Ranken v. Alfaro, 5 Ch. D. 786; 46 L. J., Ch. 832; 36 L. T. 529—C. A. Reversing 35 L. T. 664.

A firm at Bombay shipped cotton to a purchaser in London, drawing against him for the amount of the invoice prices of the cotton, with a direction to place the amount to the account of the shipments. The purchaser accepted the bills, and received the bills of lading, but his acceptances were dishonoured at maturity, and were taken up for the honour of the vendors by their London agents. The purchaser subsequently went into liquidation, and the London agents claimed the proceeds of sale of the cotton as against the trustee in the liquidation:—Held, that there had been no specific appropriation of the proceeds of the cotton to answer the bills of exchange, and that the trustee was entitled. Entwistle, In re, Arbutnot, Ex parte, 3 Ch. D. 477; 25 W. R. 238—C. A.

chased from the New Orleans Bank a bill drawn by them upon the Bank of Liverpool, and was told by the persons representing the New Orleans Bank at the time of the purchase that the Liverpool Bank had, or would have, funds of the New Orleans Bank sufficient and applicable to meet the bill, and appropriated for the purpose. Before the bill was presented for acceptance, the New Orleans Bank stopped payment, and the Liverpool Bank declined to accept the bill on presentation, or to pay it at maturity, on the ground that though they had sufficient funds of the New Orleans Bank to meet the bill, none of such funds were specifically appropriated to the payment of it. The course of business between the two banks was for the New Orleans Bank to remit to the Liverpool Bank bills for collection, and to draw bills against the remittances, taking care to keep them always in funds to meet the bills drawn upon them:—Held, that there was no specific appropriation of the funds of the New Orleans Bank in the hands of the Bank of Liverpool to meet the bill, and that the statement made to him amounted to no more than a representation of the course of dealing between the two banks. Thompson v. Simpson, 5 L. R., Ch. 659; 39 L. J., Ch. 857; 18 W. R. 1090. See next case.

A representation or an assurance given by the drawer of a bill, that the bill was drawn "specially" or "expressly" against funds already remitted by him more than sufficient to meet the bill on maturity, does not amount to a specific appropriation or equitable assignment of the funds so remitted, although it is given to one who is induced thereby to purchase the bill, unless it is also represented, or the fact is, that there was a trust already constituted, by which the payer of a bill would hold funds in trust for the payment of the particular bill, or of bills of that particular class or description. Citizens' Bank of Louisiana v. First National Bank of New Orleans, 6 L. R., H. L. 352; 43 L. J., Ch. 269; 22 W. R. 194.

A customer paid in a sum of money to a country banker with instructions to remit 500*l.*, part of the sum, to a London banker to meet acceptances of the customer. The banker on the same day sent several bills to a bill broker, directing him to remit the proceeds to the London banker, and directed the London banker to meet the acceptances. Next day the country banker stopped payment:—Held, that the 500*l.* was appropriated, and that the customer was entitled to recover it back in full. Farley v. Turner, 3 Jur., N. S. 532; 26 L. J., Ch. 710.

M. paid a certain sum into a country bankers' with written directions to apply it to meet a bill of exchange payable the next day at the country bankers' London agents. The country bankers stopped payment the next day without having advised their London agents of the payment of the sum, and the bill on being presented was dishonoured:—Held, that the country bankers having made no specific appropriation of the sum, A. was only entitled to prove as a general creditor. Barned's Banking Company, In re, Massey, Ex parte, 39 L. J., Ch. 635; 22 L. T. 853; 18 W. R. 818.

L., a merchant of Bremen, on various occasions consigned goods to S., of Havana, against which by the direction of S. he drew bills upon a common correspondent of theirs, R. of London, who accepted them. S. then remitted to R. sundry bills, accompanied by directions to hold them against certain specified bills on account of which S. was liable to R., amongst them R.'s acceptances of L.'s bills on behalf of S. Previous to the maturing of the bills so remitted, S. and R. both suspended payment. Upon an application by L. against the trustee of R.'s estate to have the proceeds of the bills so remitted by S. to R. appropriated to R.'s acceptances of L.'s bills:—Held, that the rule in Waring, Ex parte (19 Ves. 346), was applicable; that in the course of business between the parties, the remittances of S. were specifically appropriated to certain items of liability, and among them to R.'s acceptances, and that the appropriation was not affected by the abatement caused by the two bankruptcies. Smart, Ex parte, Richardson, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 220; 42 L. J., Bk. 22; 28 L. T. 146; 21 W. R. 237.

Held, also, that there was sufficient privity between the parties to admit of the application of Waring, Ex parte. 1b.

On the day before certain acceptances fell due, the acceptors handed to their country bankers short bills and cash specifically to meet the acceptances which were payable at the country bankers' London agents. The bankers remitted the bills to the agents, with part of the cash and some small cheques, accompanied by a letter of advice in their usual form, debiting the remittances, and advising the agents of the acceptances, but also crediting or directing certain payments, the total of which with the acceptances exceeded the amount of the remittances. The agents acknowledged the remittances and advice in the usual manner, but on presentation refused payment of the acceptances, which they indorsed "Awaiting further advice;" and before the acceptances could be again presented, the country bankers had stopped payment. On a bill filed by the acceptors seeking to have the short bills specifically appropriated to meet their acceptances:—Held, that the agents might retain the bills to answer the general balance due to them from the country bankers. Johnson v. Roberts, 44 L. J., Ch. 465; 32 L. T. 446. Affirmed on appeal, 10 L. R., Ch. 505; 44 L. J., Ch. 678; 33 L. T. 138; 23 W. R. 763.

Y. & Co. used to accept accommodation bills drawn upon them by G., a foreign merchant, and the latter used to remit to them other bills to meet the acceptances at maturity, and to keep them out of cash advances. The account of these bills was kept separately from the general account between the parties. Y. & Co. filed a liquidation petition, under which their creditors duly resolved to accept a composition of 3s. 4d. in the pound. A trustee had been appointed under the liquidation petition, and into his hands came certain remittances sent by G. to meet bills drawn by him on Y. & Co., who accepted them, but failed before the bills matured:—Held, that G. was entitled to have the remittances returned to him, subject to the right of Y. & Co. to be indemnified for the 3s. 4d. in the pound paid by them under the composition to the holders of the acceptances, to meet which the remittances were specifically appropriated. Gomez, Ex parte, Iglesias, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 639; 32 L. T. 677; 23 W. R. 780.

When securities which have been given as between drawer and acceptor or indorser of bills to secure payment of those bills are realized and distributed amongst the bill holders, such realization and distribution are to be considered as effected at the time when the bills accrued due, and all questions as to the proof or reduction of proof of the bill holders against the indorser as to dividends paid on proof before such actual distribution are to be determined on this footing; and that whether the administration of the insolvent estates is in bankruptcy or in chancery. Barned's Banking Company, In re, Joint Stock Discount Company, Ex parte, 19 L. R., Eq. 1; 44 L. J., Ch. 97. Affirmed on appeal, 10 L. R., Ch. 198; 44 L. J., Ch. 494; 31 L. T. 862; 23 W. R. 281.

M., a foreigner, drew a bill on Y., which was accepted, and remitted a bill of exchange to cover it. Before the acceptance became payable Y. filed a petition for liquidation and the remittance came in specie to the hands of the receiver appointed in the liquidation. Shortly afterwards resolutions were duly registered for accepting a composition payable by instalments. M. was also insolvent, and had, since making the remittance, entered into a composition with some of his creditors, but had not made any cession of his property, and remained liable to be sued on the bills. He was indebted to Y. on the account between them beyond 2,000*l.*:—Held, that as M., though unable to pay his debts, was liable to be sued, was free to deal with his property as he pleased, and was not subject to the jurisdiction of any court, the doctrine of Waring, Ex parte (19 Ves. 345), did not apply, and that the holder of Y.'s acceptance could not claim payment out of the remittance. General South American Company, Ex parte, Iglesias, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 635; 45 L. J., Bk. 54; 33 L. T. 112; 23 W. R. 343.

It was agreed between T., a London merchant, and S. & Co., a firm carrying on business at London and Shanghai, that T. should from time to time accept bills to be drawn upon him by S. & Co., on the security of the bills of lading of goods to be consigned by them to their house at Shanghai for sale, and the net proceeds were to be remitted to the London house, which was to pay them over to T. Amongst other transactions carried out in pursuance of this agreement, T. in March, 1873, accepted two bills at six months' sight for 825*l.* and 750*l.* respectively against goods, and sent the bills of lading of the goods to S. & Co.'s house at Shanghai. They sold part of these goods in two lots for 247*l.* and 757*l.* and paid the proceeds of the sales, together with those of other sales, into a bank at Shanghai to their own credit, and on the 26th July, with those two sums, and with other moneys, they purchased drafts on London for 1,198*l.* and 1,000*l.*, which they remitted to their London house "to our credit," and in their letter of that date enclosing the drafts they sent lists of sales with which they credited their London house, and which comprised the two sales for 247*l.* and 757*l.* The drafts, on reaching London, came into the hands of the trustee in the liquidation of S. & Co., who had filed a liquidation petition in August, 1873:—Held, that there was no specific appropriation, so as to entitle T. to receive the 247*l.* and 757*l.* out of the remittances of 1,198*l.* and 1,000*l.* in payment pro tanto of his acceptances for 825*l.* and 750*l.* Cooper, Ex parte, Scheibler, In re, 31 L. T. 417.—L. J.

A shipper at Bombay having consigned goods to merchants in England, drew on them for

1,200l., and insured the goods for 1,700l. He sold the drafts to a bank, and handed them at the same time the policy of insurance and the bills of lading, with a letter of hypothecation signed by him. This letter stated that the shipper, having sold the bills to the bank, and having at the same time handed to them, "as collateral securities for the due payment of" the bill, "the bills of lading and shipping documents of the several goods stated at foot," thereby authorized the bank, "on default being made in acceptance on presentment, or in payment at maturity" of the bill, to sell the goods and apply the proceeds in payment of the bill; "the balance, if any, to be placed against any other of my bills which may at the time be in the hands of the said bank, or any other liability of me to the said bank." The only documents stated at foot were the bill of exchange and the bill of lading. The ship was burnt at sea and the cargo lost. The draft for 1,200l. was duly accepted, but the acceptors failing, it was dishonoured at maturity. The bank recouped themselves out of the policy moneys which had been paid to them by the insurance office, and had a balance in their hands. This balance having been claimed by assignees for value of it from the shipper, the bank claimed it as a collateral security for a debt due to them from the shipper on another account. He had shipped goods to other consignees, and had drawn against the goods bills, which were also in the hands of the same bank. When the bills fell due the drawees had requested the bank to defer presentment of the bills. The bills had not been presented, but the goods had been sold at a loss, and the bank had re-drawn upon the shipper for the deficiency; but he had failed:—Held, that the letter of hypothecation did not extend to any other liability of the shipper to the bank than that arising upon the 1,200l. bill. Latham v. Chartered Bank of India, 17 L. R., Eq. 203; 43 L. J., Bk. 612; 29 L. T. 795.

Held, also, that the bank having, at the request of the drawees, refrained from presenting the bills, had practically given them time, and had thus released the drawer, and that the shipper was not indebted to the bank on this account. Id.

Held, on both grounds, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the surplus in the hands of the bank. Id.

Bills Drawn against Bills of Lading.—A party accepted bills to meet goods consigned to him. The acceptances were made payable "on delivery of the bills of lading." The bills of lading remained, with the bills of exchange, in the possession of the bank who had discounted the latter for the drawers:—Held, on the bankruptcy of the acceptor, that the goods were part of his estate which the bank held as security for their debt, and therefore that the bank could only prove for the amount due on the bills of exchange after deducting the value of the goods. Brett, Ex parte, Howe, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 838; 40 L. J., Bk. 54; 25 L. T. 252; 19 W. R. 1101.

Corn merchants in California agreed to send cargoes of wheat to a miller in England, the reimbursement to be by his acceptance against bill of lading. The corn merchants shipped a cargo, and made out the bill of lading in six parts. Three parts, with corresponding bills of exchange drawn on the miller for the price of the cargo, were indorsed by the corn merchants, and transferred to a Californian bank for valuable consideration. These bills of exchange were, with the bills of lading annexed, accepted by the miller. One indorsed part of the bill of lading was inadvertently sent by the corn dealers to the miller, and by him transferred to an English bank for valuable consideration. The bills of exchange were not met by the miller:—Held, that the corn merchants were entitled to deal as they did with the cargo by transferring the bills of lading; that the English bank could not, under the circumstances, claim as holders of the bill of lading without notice; and that the English bank had no priority. Gilbert v. Guignon, 8 L. R., Ch. 16; 21 W. R. 281.

A bank presented a bill of exchange to the drawees for their acceptance, accompanied by a ticket representing that the bank held bills of lading to cover it. The drawees thereupon accepted the bill, relying on the statement that the bank held bills of lading which both parties thought to be genuine. The bills of lading had been forged by the drawer of the bill of exchange:—Held, that the drawees were not entitled to demand from the bank genuine bills of lading before paying the amount of the bill of exchange. Barter v. Chapman, 29 L. T. 642.

L. & Co. employed S. & Co. as their correspondents at Havannah, and R. as their correspondent in London. They consigned certain cargoes to S. & Co., at the same time informing them that they would draw bills on R. for the value. This they accordingly did, and the bills were accepted by R. Before the bills came to maturity, S. & Co. sent remittances in short bills to R. to cover the amount of the bills, telling him to take them, "against the acceptances." R. became bankrupt, and the acceptances were not paid, and soon after S. & Co. became insolvent:—Held, that the remittances must be applied to meet the acceptances, under the ruling of Waring, Ex parte (19 Ves. 345). Smart, Ex parte, Richardson, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 220; 42 L. J., Bk. 22; 28 L. T. 146; 21 W. R. 237.

It is no objection to the application of the rule in that case that the party sending the remittances was not a party to the bills as drawer or indorser, provided the bills were drawn in respect of a transaction in which he is liable. Id.

1. PARTIES.

By Fictitious Owner.]—A., who was living in the same house with B., was the owner of certain goods therein, which goods A. for a fraudulent purpose, permitted B. to raise and receive money upon by way of bill of sale in his own name to C., who believed the goods to be the goods of B. The goods being afterwards seized under a fi. fa. against A.—Held, that the sale to C. of the goods was valid, B. being in effect the agent of A. in the transaction. Low v. McGill, 10 L. T. 495; 12 W. R. 826.

A party in apparent possession of household furniture gave a bill of sale for value, and complied with the formalities required by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36; another person, whose property the goods really were, represented to the grantee that they were the property of the grantor. A fieri facias having been issued against the property of the real owner, the goods were taken in execution by the sheriff, and an interpleader issue directed to try the right to them as between the grantee of the bill of sale and the execution creditor:—Held, first, that the owner of the goods was estopped from alleging that the goods were not the property of the party giving the bill of sale. Richards v. Johnson, 4 H. & N. 660; 28 L. J., Ex. 322; 5 Jur., N. S. 520.

Held, secondly, that the execution creditor was not so estopped. Id.

A bill of sale was executed by A. to B., but the person who was really interested in the goods was C., who advanced the money, but whose name did not appear either in the bill of sale or in the affidavit filed therewith:—Held, that though B. might be treated in equity as a mere trustee, there was no trust which need appear upon the face of the instrument. Robinson v. Collingwood, 17 C. B., N. S. 777; 34 L. J., C. P. 18; 10 Jur., N. S. 1080; 11 L. T. 313; 13 W. R. 84.

By Company.]—A trading company may give a bill of sale of its effects as a security for a debt due from the company in respect of goods supplied for the purpose of its trade. Shears v. Jacobs, 35 L. J., C. P. 241; 14 L. T. 286; 14 W. R. 609.

A bill of sale was given by a company; two directors affixed their signatures near the seal:—Held, that the directors signed as such, and not as attesting witnesses; and that, consequently, their residences and occupations need not be stated in the affidavit filed pursuant to 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. Defield v. White, 2 L. R., C. P. 144; 36 L. J., C. P. 25; 12 Jur., N. S. 902; 15 L. T. 211; 15 W. R. 68.

By Executrix.]—An assignment by an executrix after probate and after judgment against her for a debt due from her testator, of all his property and effects to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, is valid as against the judgment creditor. Wolverhampton and Staffordshire Banking Company v. Marston, 7 H. & N. 148; 30 L. J., Ex. 402; 7 Jur., N. S. 1040; 4 L. T. 524; 7 W. R. 790.

May be set up by an Executor de son tort.]—A duly registered bill of sale from a deceased party may be set up by an executor de son tort, if bonâ fide, though possession was not taken until after the death, but for any goods not included in the bill of sale he must account as executor. Webster v. Blackman, 2 F. & F. 490.

Insolvent Testator—Rights against Executor.]

—Where a testator assigned his property, and the plaintiff, in an action against the executor, set up fraud in the assignment, and suggested, to prove the fraud, that the testator was insolvent at the time of the assignment, it is sufficient for the purposes of the plaintiff in the action, if, by the very act of assignment, the testator made himself insolvent—that is, if the property left after the conveyance was not enough to pay his debts. Jackson v. Bowley, Car. & M. 97.

But where the sum realized after the death of the testator very nearly equalled the amount of his debts, the judge still left it to the jury to say whether there had been fraud in the assignment. Id.

2. WHAT AMOUNTS TO, SO AS TO REQUIRE REGISTRATION.

Statutes.]—See 41 & 42 Vict. c. 31, and 45 & 46 Vict. c. 43.

Form—Instrument not in Accordance with the Form given by the Act.]—The Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, s. 9, provides that a bill of sale made or given by way of security for the payment of money by the grantor thereof, shall be void, unless made in accordance with the form in the schedule to the act annexed. The act also provides (s. 7) that personal chattels assigned under a bill of sale shall not be liable to be seized by the grantee for any other than the following causes, viz., amongst others—1. If the grantor shall make default in payment of the sum or sums of money thereby secured at the time therein provided for payment, or in the performance of any covenant or agreement contained in the bill of sale, and necessary for maintaining the security. 2. If the grantor shall become a bankrupt, or suffer the said goods or any of them to be distrained for rent, rates, or taxes. 4. If the grantor shall not, without reasonable excuse, upon demand in writing by the grantee, produce to him his receipts for rent, rates, and taxes. By a bill of sale the grantor assigned to the grantee the goods enumerated in the schedule thereto, by way of security for the payment of 300*l.* money advanced, and 180*l.* for agreed capitalized interest thereon at the rate of 60*l.* per cent. per annum, making together the sum of 480*l.*, by instalments of a certain amount, at certain specified dates. The grantor also covenanted, amongst other things, that she would deliver to the grantee the receipts for rent, rates, and taxes, in respect of the premises on which the goods assigned might be, when demanded "in writing or otherwise;" and also that she would not make any assignment for the benefit of creditors, or file a petition for liquidation or composition with creditors, or do or suffer anything whereby she should render herself liable to be made or become a bankrupt. It was also by the said bill of sale agreed, that if the grantor should break any of the covenants, all the moneys thereby secured should immediately become due and be forthwith paid to the grantee, and it was provided that the chattels assigned should not be liable to seizure for any other cause than those specified in the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882:—Held, that the bill of sale was void, as not made in the form given in the schedule. Davis v. Burton, 11 Q. B. D. 537; 52 L. J., Q. B. 636—C. A. Affirming 10 Q. B. D. 414; 52 L. J., Q. B. 334; 48 L. T. 433; 31 W. R. 523; 47 J. P. 392.

Held, also, that the bill of sale could not be supported, inasmuch as it enabled the grantee to seize the goods upon a failure by the grantor to produce the receipts for rent, rates, and taxes, after a verbal demand. Id.

By a bill of sale, a mortgagor in consideration of 30*l.* paid to him by the mortgagee, and also in consideration of the sum of 10*l.* charged by the mortgagee by way of bonus or commission, assigned certain chattels to the mortgagee to secure the repayment of the principal sum of 40*l.*, with interest at 5 per cent. It was agreed between the parties that the mortgagor should "forthwith" pay to the mortgagee the said principal sum, and interest, and costs then due; and also all rents, taxes, &c., and forthwith produce the receipts for the same. And it was also agreed and declared, amongst other things, that if the mortgagor should make default in payment of the sums at the time and in the manner appointed, or do or suffer anything whereby he should render himself liable to become a bankrupt, or remove or suffer the chattels to be removed, or if execution should be or should have been levied against the goods of the mortgagor, or if default should be made in the performance of any of the covenants, then it should be lawful for the mortgagee to enter and seize. There was a proviso at the end of the bill of sale that the chattels assigned should not be liable to seizure or to be taken possession of by the mortgagee for any cause other than those specified in s. 7 of the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882:—Held, that the bill of sale was void as not in accordance with the form in the schedule to the act; and further, that the invalidity of certain of the causes for which the mortgagee might enter and seize, was not cured by the proviso at the end of the bill of sale. Pearce, Ex parte, Williams, In re, 49 L. T. 475; 32 W. R. 187.

— Rate of Interest.—A bill of sale was given by way of security for the payment of 100*l.*, being the amount advanced, and the sum of 76*l.*, being the interest agreed to be paid for the advance; and the mortgagors agreed to pay to the mortgagees the principal sum, together with the agreed interest thereon, by sixteen equal consecutive quarterly instalments of 11*l.* each. The bill of sale authorized the mortgagees, in events within the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, to enter into the mortgagors' premises, and take possession and sell the chattels comprised in the security, and out of the proceeds pay themselves the principal and interest secured, or so much as should be unpaid, with costs. The mortgagees having entered and taken possession:—Held, upon motion for an injunction by the mortgagors against the mortgagees, that for the purpose of the motion the bill of sale must be held to be valid within the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, s. 9, and that it was not necessary to state specifically in the bill of sale the actual rate of interest secured. Wilson v. Kirkwood, 48 L. T. 821.

Sale and Receipt.—A tradesman expecting the execution of a fieri facias issued by the Court of Chancery for payment of costs in a suit, effected a sale of the whole of his furniture and stock in trade. The only document passing upon the occasion was a receipt for the money paid upon the purchase:—Held, that the receipt given for the goods did not amount to a bill of sale, and therefore that it did not require registration. Hall v. Metropolitan Saloon Omnibus Company, 4 Drew 492; 28 L. J., Ch. 777; 7 W. R. 316.

A creditor having agreed with his debtor to take a growing crop in satisfaction, the debtor gave him a receipt for the amount of the debt as if for money paid on a sale of the crop, and the creditor having taken possession:—Held, that the transfer, though not registered, was good as against an execution creditor. Newman v. Cordinal, 2 F. & F. 840.

B. mortgaged two engines to an association as security for a loan made to him; the association marked its initials upon the engines. The mortgage of the engines was taken in the form of a memorandum of sale and receipt, with a power of removal at the convenience of the mortgagees. On the afternoon of the day on which B. had filed his petition for liquidation, the association, without any notice of such petition having been filed, made a demand of possession of the engines. The sheriff was in possession at the time of the demand under some execution for debts, each under 50*l.*:—Held, that the receipt was a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Act, and not having been registered, was void as against the trustees in the bankruptcy. Bamfield, In re, Newport Credit Company, Ex parte, 20 W. R. 925.

Being pressed to pay rent in arrear, a tenant and his partner sold their furniture to the landlord under an arrangement, by which the purchase-money was to be applied in payment of the rent due, and the following document was drawn up:—"Bought of Messrs. D. & J. W. [certain goods at specified prices]. Memorandum.—We acknowledge that we have this day sold and delivered to Mr. M. the above articles and effects for the price above named, 163*l.* 13*s.*, and that payment therefor has been made to us of that amount in account between us, and under the agreement arranged to be made with respect to the amount owing by us to him for rent, interest and expenses." The sale was subsequently advertised. The goods were delivered to the landlord, and then let by him to the tenant, who remained in possession of them until the 30th of October, when they were seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa. issued by an execution creditor of the tenant:—Held, that the document was a mere receipt, and, notwithstanding the memorandum, did not need registration as a transfer under the Bills of Sale Act. Graham v. Wilcockson, 46 L. J., Ex. 55; 35 L. T. 601.

Upon the trial of an interpleader issue, the claimant, in order to prove a sale of goods to him, put in a (stamped) receipt, as follows:—"Received of Mr. J. B. the sum of 90*l.*, being the amount agreed to be paid for the purchase of household furniture and effects on the premises, No. 94, &c., of which I have this day taken possession. G. E. B." No money passed at the time; but the consideration for giving the receipt was a past debt; and the goods remained in the debtor's possession:—Held, that the instrument did not require registration as a bill of sale. Byerley v. Prevost, 6 L. R., C. P. 144. But see next case.

Inventory of Goods with Receipt for Purchase-money attached.—An inventory of goods with receipt for purchase-money attached, the vendor remaining in apparent possession of the goods, is a bill of sale within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, and requires registration. Cooper, Ex parte, Baum, In re, 10 Ch. D. 313; 48 L. J., Bk. 40; 39 L. T. 521; 27 W. R. 298—C.A.

Sale of Goods with Contemporaneous Agreement to re-demise them to the Vendor.—On the 18th of July, 1877, C. advanced to A., a trader, 150*l.* to pay out an execution then on his premises. A. signed a receipt, annexed to an inventory of certain articles of furniture belonging to him, and handed it to C. On the same day C. and A. executed an agreement by which C. agreed to let, and A. to hire, the furniture for two months for 170*l.*, with power to sell upon default of payment, and in case of such sale any balance remaining after payment of the 170*l.* to be handed over to A., and any deficiency to be made good by him, and on payment of the whole sum due the goods to belong to A. Neither of these documents was registered. A. made default in paying the 170*l.*, and C. sent in W., an auctioneer, to take possession. W. paid C. the money owing to him, for which C. gave a receipt indorsed on the agreement of the 18th of July, 1877, as follows:—"Received of W. 120*l.* for the absolute sale to him of the whole of the goods herein specified." On the same day (22nd of September, 1877) W. entered into an agreement with A. to let him the furniture for three months for 145*l.*, to be paid by three instalments. The agreement contained terms identical with those in the agreement of the 18th of July. This document was not registered. A. made default in paying the instalments, and W. sold the furniture. A. remained in apparent possession of the goods until the happening of the act of bankruptcy on which he was adjudicated bankrupt.

Upon a motion by A.'s trustee in bankruptcy against W., for payment to him of the proceeds of sale:—Held, on appeal (reversing the decision of the registrar, sitting as chief judge), that the two documents of the 18th of July, together constituted a conditional sale or mortgage of the chattels, and consequently required registration, and not having been so registered were void as against the trustee in bankruptcy, and that the transaction of the 22nd of September was a transfer of C.'s rights as a mortgagee and gave W. no better title than C. himself had, and that the trustee was entitled to the proceeds of sale. Odell, Ex parte, Walden, In re, 10 Ch. D. 76; 48 L. J., Bk. 1; 39 L. T. 333; 27 W. R. 274—C.A.

Inventory of Goods with Receipt given by Sheriff's Officer.—A receipt containing an inventory and given by a sheriff's officer for the price of goods sold under an execution, is not an "assurance" within the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, and does not require registration under that statute, even although the purchaser from the sheriff allows the execution debtor to remain in possession of the goods. Woodgate v. Godfrey, 5 L. R., Ex. 24; 49 L. J., Ex. 1; 42 L. T. 34; 28 W. R. 88—C.A.

The sheriff having seized the goods of the defendant under a writ of fi. fa. issued by C., sold them to the claimant for 65*l.* A deposit of 40*l.* was paid at the time of sale, and 25*l.* on the following day; the sheriff thereupon gave to the claimant an inventory of the goods, and a receipt for the price, which were never registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. The defendant remained in possession of the goods, which were afterwards seized by the sheriff under a writ of fi. fa. issued in the present action:—Held, that the inventory and receipt did not amount to a "bill of sale" within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878; and that the claimant was entitled to the goods as against the plaintiffs. Woodgate v. Godfrey (5 Ex. D. 24) followed: Marsden v. Meadows, 7 Q. B. D. 80; 50 L. J., Q. B. 536; 45 L. T. 301; 29 W. R. 816—C.A.

When possession actually changed.—Where there is an assignment, with actual delivery, and visible change of ownership and possession, the statute does not apply, and although some portion of the assignor's family remains on the premises, that is only evidence on the question of possession. Davies v. Jones, 7 L. T. 130; 10 W. R. 779.

Crops when severed from Land.—Though a bill of sale under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, does not require registration in respect of growing crops, yet when the crops are subsequently severed by the grantor they become personal chattels, and, if possession has not been taken of them by the grantee before the commencement of the bankruptcy of the grantor, they will pass to the trustee in the bankruptcy. Branton v. Griffiths (1 C. P. D. 349; 2 C. P. D. 212) distinguished. National Mercantile Bank, Ex parte, Phillips, In re, 16 Ch. D. 104; 50 L. J., Ch. 231; 44 L. T. 265; 29 W. R. 227—C.A.

Deed for Benefit of Creditors.—A deed for the benefit of creditors, whereby the debtor, in consideration of the surety's joining him in signing promissory notes for the composition, and covenanting with the creditors to pay them the composition, assigns all his property to the surety absolutely, is not a deed requiring to be registered. Beevor v. Savage, 16 L. T. 358.

In order to bring a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors within the exception in the statute, it is not necessary that the deed should appear on the face of it to be executed by all the creditors. General Furnishing and Upholstery Company v. Venn, 2 H. & C. 153; 32 L. J., Ex. 220; 9 Jur., N. S. 550; 8 L. T. 432; 11 W. R. 756; S. P., Ashford v. Tinte, 7 Ir. C. L. R. 91.

An agreement to assign chattels to a bona fide creditor, followed by open delivery and possession of the same, need not be registered. Piercy v. Humphreys, 17 L. T. 463.

Post-nuptial Settlements.—Trustees under a settlement of a married woman purchased of her husband his household furniture, when he gave them a receipt as follows:—"Received of J. D. and C. J., the trustees under the deed of settlement for the benefit of my wife, 93l. 6s. 6d., for the purchase of my household goods and effects mentioned in the inclosed inventory and valuation as purchased this day by J. D. and C. J., as trustees named in the deed of settlement, and empowered to purchase by such deed:—"Held, that the document was not a bill of sale. Allsopp v. Day, 7 H. & N. 457; 31 L. J., Ex. 105; 8 Jur., N. S. 41; 5 L. T. 320.

A post-nuptial settlement, made in consideration of natural love and affection, is not a marriage settlement within the exception in the statute, and therefore requires to be filed as a bill of sale. Fowler v. Foster, 28 L. J., Q. B. 210; 5 Jur., N. S. 99.

Debentures.—A company whose business it was to buy and sell house property, hotel buildings, land and furniture, and to furnish hotels and carry on the business of hotel-keepers, issued debentures whereby they purported to pledge the property belonging to them for the time being during the subsistence of the debentures, with all the buildings and stock on and connected with their property, and all the receipts and revenues to arise therefrom; and they thereby declared that the debenture loan should be "a first charge on their undertaking and property, and receipts and revenues:—"Held, that these debentures created a charge upon the property of the company, but did not include the capital of the company, and that the issuing of them was not on that account ultra vires. And that the non-registration of these debentures under the Bills of Sale Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, did not make them invalid as to the chattels as against the liquidator of the company. Marine Mansions Company, In re, 4 L. R., Eq. 601; 37 L. J., Ch. 113.

The term liquidation in s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, refers to the liquidation of a person's affairs in bankruptcy, and not to the winding-up of a company. A company issued debentures which were a first charge upon its plant and stock-in-trade. The company was ordered to be wound up, and the official liquidator sold the plant and stock-in-trade, and claimed to be entitled to retain the proceeds as against a holder of debentures of the company on the ground that the debentures had not been registered under the Bills of Sale Act, and that they were therefore void under s. 8 against the liquidator of the company:—Held, that the Bills of Sale Act had nothing to do with the winding-up of companies; that the debentures retained their priority although not registered under the act; and that the debenture holder had a right to have the proceeds of the sale paid to him by the official liquidator. Asphaltic Wood Pavement Company, In re, 49 L. T. 159; 32 W. R. 16.

Building Agreement—Power for Landlord to seize Materials on Default of Builder.—

A building agreement between a landowner and a builder contained a stipulation that the landowner, upon the default of the builder in fulfilling his part of the agreement, might re-enter upon the land and expel the builder, and that on such re-entry all the materials then in and about the premises should be forfeited to and become the property of the landowner "as and for liquidated damages:—"Held, that this stipulation was not a bill of sale within the meaning of s. 7 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, inasmuch as, though it was a "licence to take possession of personal chattels," the possession was not to be taken "as security for any debt." Newitt, Ex parte, Garrud, In re, 16 Ch. D. 522; 51 L. J., Ch. 381; 44 L. T. 5; 29 W. R. 344—C. A.

Semble, that if the ground of forfeiture was the omission of the builder to complete the buildings on the day appointed by the agreement, and the landowner had after that day made advances of money to the builder for the purposes of the agreement, or had in any other way treated the agreement as still subsisting, he would have waived the forfeiture. The decision in Doe v. Brindley (12 Moo. C. P. 37) questioned. Under such a stipulation, the interest of the builder in the materials being a defeasible one, the right of the landowner to seize is not defeated by the commission of an act of bankruptcy by the builder before the seizure is made. The trustee in bankruptcy of the builder takes subject to the right of the landowner under the agreement. Id.

By a building contract, after providing for the erection of houses, and the granting of leases to the builder as they should be finished, and for advances to be made by A., the owner of the land, to enable B., the builder, to carry on the work, to be repaid before the leases were granted, it was agreed by Article 7, that all materials which should have been brought upon the premises by B. for the purpose of erecting such buildings, should be considered as immediately attached to and belonging to the premises, and that no part should be removed therefrom without A.'s consent; and by Article 8, in case B. should fail to proceed with the erection and completion of the houses, or any of them, within the times specified, it should be lawful for A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, to enter upon and take possession of the whole or any part of the land not leased, with all buildings and improvements thereon, and all bricks and other building materials thereon, for his and their own absolute use and benefit:—Held, that the instrument was not an assignment, transfer, or other assurance of personal chattels, or a "licence to take possession of personal chattels as security for a debt," within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. Brown v. Bateman, 2 L. R., C. P. 272; 36 L. J., C. P. 134; 15 L. T. 658; 15 W. R. 359.

By a building contract it was agreed that all materials brought on the land by the intended lessee should become the property of the intended lessors. The intended lessee entered and commenced building, but obtained no lease:—Held, that the materials brought on the land by him vested in the intended lessors, and were not liable to be taken in execution by a creditor of the intended lessee, and that the agreement was not a bill of sale. Blake v. Izard, 16 W. R. 108.

An agreement, by a clause in an ordinary building contract, that all building and other materials brought by the builder upon the land, shall become the property of the landowner, is not a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31). Reeves v. Barlow, 11 Q. B. D. 610.

Brewer's Lease—Stock-in-Trade.—A brewer's lease, which contains a licence and an authority to the lessor, in case of default being made in payment of such sum of money as should be due and owing to him from the lessee on the balance of the account current, to take possession of the stock-in-trade and effects of the lessee, must be registered, otherwise it will be void as against assignees in bankruptcy. Hopcraft, Ex parte, 14 W. R. 168.

Mortgage.—B., in consideration of advances from his bankers, conveyed to them two pieces of ground by a deed reciting that one portion was already mortgaged in fee, upon trust for the sale of the land and application of the purchase-money. By the terms of the deed B., as a further security for the principal and interest for the time being due from him in respect of the advances, attorned and became tenant to the bankers, their heirs and assigns, at and from the date of the deed, of such of the hereditaments and premises thereby conveyed "as were in his occupation, for and during the term of ten years," if that security should so long continue, "at and under the yearly rent of 800*l.*, to be paid yearly on every 1st of October in every year, the first yearly rent to be paid and payable on the first day of October then next; provided, that notwithstanding anything therein contained, and without any notice or demand of possession, it should be lawful for the bankers, their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, upon or after the execution of the trusts of sale therein contained, to enter into and upon the mortgaged premises or any part thereof, and to eject B. and any tenant or person claiming or to claim under him therefrom, and to determine the term of ten years, notwithstanding any lease or leases that might have been granted by B." This deed was not executed by the mortgagees, but B. continued his exclusive occupation of the premises until they distrained upon him for arrears of rent, no rent having been paid by him:—Held, that the deed was not rendered invalid by reason of its not being registered as a bill of sale. Morton v. Woods, 4 L. R., Q. B. 293; 38 L. J., Q. B. 81; 17 W. R. 414; 9 B. & S. 659—Ex. Ch.

Mortgage of Stone Quarry—Fixtures—Tramways and Steam Crane.—By a deed of mortgage of a stone quarry the quarry was granted, together with the mills, buildings, steam engines, motive power, plant, fixed and moveable machinery, apparatus, rails, sleepers, implements, fittings, and fixtures of every description, then or at any time thereafter fixed to, or placed upon, the hereditaments; all in the same clause of the deed. The mortgage was executed after the passing of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, but before the 1st of January, 1879, when that act came into operation. At the date of the mortgage there was a tramway in the quarry, and there was also a steam crane, cramped on to large stones, and kept in position by two guys:—Held, that the tramway and crane were fixtures, and that the mortgage did not require registration either under the old or under the new Bills of Sale Act, in order to give the mortgagee the right to retain the tramways and crane as part of his security, as against a liquidation trustee. Moore and Robinson's Banking Company, Ex parte, Armytage, In re, 14 Ch. D. 379; 49 L. J., Bk. 60; 42 L. T. 443; 28 W. R. 924.

41 & 42 Vict. c. 31, s. 7.]—Observations on the meaning and object of the 7th section of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. Ib.

Mortgage of an Agreement for a Lease of a Theatre, with a Covenant to charge the Furniture and Fittings "brought or to be brought into the said Theatre."—C. and B. being, under an agreement, tenants for a short period of a theatre, with power to renew the tenancy and take a lease, charged the agreement, and the lease to be executed in pursuance thereof, with the payment to N. of 275*l.* by weekly instalments of 10*l.*, and interest at the rate of 30 per cent. per annum; and covenanted with N. (amongst other things) to charge the furniture brought or to be brought into the theatre with the payment of the moneys thereby secured. The deed was not attested by a solicitor:—Held, that this deed was in fact a bill of sale within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and not having been executed by a solicitor of the Supreme Court, in accordance with the 10th section of that act, it was, so far as it was a bill of sale, wholly void, even as against the grantor. Baghott v. Norman, 41 L. T. 787.

Transfer or Assignment of Bill of Sale—Fresh Advance not exceeding Amount originally secured.—A bill of sale of goods, which was duly registered, was given to secure 500*l.* with interest, part of which was at a subsequent date paid off. A deed was afterwards made between the two parties to the bill of sale and the plaintiff, whereby the security was transferred and the goods assigned to him, on his paying off the amount remaining due on the bill of sale and making a further advance to the grantor, the whole amount secured by this deed being 501*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.*, with interest, and the rate of interest and the times of payment being different from those of the former deed:—Held, by the Queen's Bench Division, that this deed was a transfer and not a new bill of sale, and need not be registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, to be effectual as to the whole amount secured by it, against an execution creditor:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that whether or not the deed was an effectual security, without registration, for the fresh advance, it was, as to the amount which remained due on the former bill of sale, a transfer and valid to that extent without registration under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, so as to entitle the plaintiff to the goods. Horne v. Hughes, 6 Q. B. D. 676; 44 L. T. 678;

29 W. R. 576; 45 J. P. 604—C. A. Affirming 50 L. J., Q. B. 403; 44 L. T. 421.

At law non-existing property to be acquired at a future time is not assignable; in equity it is so. Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. Cas. 191; 33 L. J., Ch. 193; 9 Jur., N. S. 213; 7 L. T. 172; 11 W. R. 171.

Agreement for Hire.—R., on the 29th of November, 1877, entered into an agreement with C. & Co. to hire some furniture from them, which was of the value of 63*l*. R. was to pay C. & Co. 10*l*. on the signing of the agreement, 5*l*. on the 4th of January then next, and 5*l*. on the 4th of each succeeding month during the continuance of the agreement, and he was also on the signing of the agreement to deposit with C. & Co. promissory notes for the total amount of the instalments as collateral security, and without prejudice to their title to the furniture and to the rights under the agreement. In case of the furniture being seized by them under the agreement, the notes, or so many of them as should then be current, were to become void. In the event of non-payment of any of the notes when due, C. & Co. might seize, remove, and retake possession of the furniture as in their first and former estate, notwithstanding any payments made by R., which payments were then to be forfeited to C. & Co. Upon payment by R. to C. & Co. of the full amount of 66*l*. by the above instalments, the furniture was to become his property, but, until the whole of that sum had been paid, the furniture was to remain the sole property of C. & Co., and was only let on hire to R. The furniture was delivered to R. and he gave the promissory notes. On the 9th of January, 1878, he filed a liquidation petition, under which a trustee was appointed, who took possession of the furniture, which was then in R.'s house. On the 19th of March, some of the monthly instalments being overdue, C. & Co. seized the furniture:—Held, that the property in the furniture did not pass to R. until payment of the full amount of the instalments, and that consequently the agreement did not amount to a bill of sale by R., and did not require registration. Craucour, Ex parte, Robertson, In re, 9 Ch. D. 419; 47 L. J., Bk. 94; 39 L. T. 2; 26 W. R. 733—C. A.

Mortgage of Share in Partnership.—A mortgage by a partner of his share in a partnership is an assignment of a chose in action, and not within the order and disposition clause of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, or the Bills of Sale Act, 1854. Bainbridge, In re, Fletcher, Ex parte, 8 Ch. D. 218; 47 L. J., Bk. 70; 38 L. T. 229; 26 W. R. 439.

Under a will B. was entitled to a share in a distillery business, carried on in partnership with A., on trust for himself and his three brothers equally. B., in 1872, purchased the interests of his brothers under the will, and secured the purchase-money by assignment of all his share and interest in the distillery, and the partnership and goodwill. The deed was never registered under the Bills of Sale Act. B. and A. then entered into fresh articles of partnership, under which they became interested in the business in equal moieties. In 1877 B. became bankrupt:—Held, that the assignment by B. in favour of his brothers created a valid charge against the trustee in bankruptcy, both on the plant, stock-in-trade, assets, goodwill, and book debts of the partnership, and on the tenant's or trade fixtures. Id.

Furniture of Married Woman—Separate Estate.—A married woman gave up to her husband 500*l*., held upon trust for her separate use, upon the understanding that he would settle his furniture upon her for her separate use. He assigned the furniture to a trustee to hold for the use and benefit of his wife, and the property remained in the joint possession of husband and wife. The assignment was not registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, and the husband afterwards became bankrupt. Upon a bill filed by the wife to have the assignment reformed so as to create a binding trust for her separate use, and to restrain the assignee from keeping possession of the furniture:—Held, that independently of that statute, the wife would have been entitled to have the furniture secured for her separate use; but the assignment operating as a bill of sale came within the act, and not being registered, the furniture remained in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, and could not be protected against the assignee. Ashton v. Blackshaw, 9 L. R., Eq. 510; 39 L. J., Ch. 205; 21 L. T. 197; 18 W. R. 307.

Chattels in Scotland.—A bill of sale of personal chattels situate in Scotland, though made in England, and by a domiciled Englishman, need not be registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. Coote v. Jech, 13 L. R., Eq. 597; 41 L. J., Ch. 599.

Letter of Hypothecation.—A letter of hypothecation does not require registration as a bill of sale. North-Western Bank, Ex parte, Slee, In re, 15 L. R., Eq. 69; 42 L. J., Bk. 6; 27 L. T. 461; 21 W. R. 69.

Dock Warrant.—Nor does a dock warrant. Id.

Mercantile Transactions.—The Bills of Sale Act does not apply to ordinary mercantile transactions. Id.

Agreement for Lien.—By an agreement under seal, W., a manufacturer at Bradford, agreed from time to time to supply goods to L., so that he might, during the continuance of the agreement, have a credit to a certain amount, for which W. was to draw bills of exchange which L. should accept from time to time for the invoice price of the goods; that L. should ship all goods purchased under this agreement to R. & Co., of Shanghai, for sale on his account, the bills of lading to be sent by L. immediately on receipt, by post, to R. & Co., to whose order the bills of lading were to be made out; that W. should have a lien on the bills of lading, and each shipment of goods, in transit outwards, such lien to extend only to the particular shipment. Under this agreement L. purchased of W. goods which W. sent in the ordinary course to a packer at Bradford to be packed and forwarded to L. for shipment:—Held, that the agreement was not a bill of sale within s. 1 of the Bills of Sale Act. Watson, Ex parte, Love, In re, 5 Ch. D. 35; 46 L. J., Bk. 97; 37 L. T. 75; 25 W. R. 489—C. A.

Ships.—A ship built in order to be sold to a foreigner, and to be delivered to him at a foreign port, was assigned by her builder to the plaintiff for a valuable consideration, under an agreement which was not in the form of a bill of sale of a ship given by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. The assignment was not registered, either under that Act, or under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854. At the time of the assignment the vessel had been completely built and had been tried:—Held, that the assignment fell within the proviso in the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, s. 7, which exempts assignments of a ship from the operation of that statute. Union Bank of London v. Lenanton, 3 C. P. D. 243; 47 L. J., C. P. 409; 38 L. T. 698—C. A.

When Grantor in Custody.—A., when in custody on a criminal charge, executed a bill of sale upon some jewels, which were then in the hands of the police. The bill of sale was never registered, and A. was afterwards adjudicated a bankrupt:—Held, that the bill of sale was void as against the claim of the trustee in bankruptcy. Newsham, Ex parte, Wood, In re, 40 L. T. 104.

Assignment of Bill of Sale.—When a bill of sale executed before the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, is assigned after the act, registration of the assignment is not necessary in order to render it valid as against a trustee in bankruptcy. Shaw, Ex parte, 46 L. J., Bk. 114; 36 L. T. 805; 25 W. R. 686.

Agreement to give.—An agreement to give a bill of sale need not be registered. Homan, Ex parte, Broudbent, In re, 12 L. R., Eq. 598; 19 W. R. 1078. But see following cases.

An agreement for a bill of sale, if relied on as an equitable assignment of the property, requires to be registered. Mackay, Ex parte, Brown, Ex parte, Jeavons, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 643; 42 L. J., Bk. 68; 28 L. T. 828; 21 W. R. 664.

Traders, in consideration of goods being supplied to them by brokers on credit, signed a written document addressed to the brokers, by which they undertook and agreed "to hold at your disposal all our stock of soap and raw materials, and from time to time, whenever required by you so to do, to execute a valid and effectual transfer and assurance of the same to you . . . to the intent that out of the premises all claims and demands for the time being owing from us to you may be fully paid and satisfied." The security was to be a continuing one. This document was never registered under the Bills of Sale Act, nor was any bill of sale ever executed. Some time afterwards the traders filed a liquidation petition. A few days before the petition was filed the brokers demanded possession of the soap and raw materials then on the traders' premises, but did not succeed in obtaining it:—Held, that the document not having been registered, was void against the trustee under the liquidation. Conning, Ex parte, Steele, In re, 16 L. R., Eq. 414; 42 L. J., Ch. 74; 21 W. R. 784.

A deed by which a debtor covenants that if the debt is not paid on a day named certain chattels shall be charged with it, and that he will, when required, assign them to the creditor as security, requires registration as a bill of sale. Edwards v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. 291;

45 L. J., Ch. 391; 34 L. T. 472; 24 W. R. 713—C. A.

A parol agreement to give a bill of sale does not require registration under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and a bill of sale given in pursuance of such an agreement is not void under the act by reason of the non-registration of the agreement. Hawwell, Ex parte, Hemingway, In re, 23 Ch. D. 626; 52 L. J., Ch. 737; 48 L. T. 742; 31 W. R. 711—C. A.

3. FIXTURES AND GROWING CROPS.

a. Fixtures.

Trade—Generally.—A lessee for years demised by an indenture of mortgage buildings used as an iron factory for the residue of the term, except the last two days, and by it he also assigned all the machinery, plant, fixtures, implements, utensils and effects, then or thereafter to be fixed to or used in or about the buildings, subject to redemption on payment of the mortgage money and interest:—Held, that the indenture, being an assignment of fixtures, was an assignment of personal chattels within the Bills of Sale Act, and required registration. Hautry v. Butlin, 8 L. R., Q. B. 290; 42 L. J., Q. B. 163; 28 L. T. 532; 21 W. R. 633.

The Bills of Sale Act, (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36), by the interpretation clause, declares fixtures to be personal chattels, but makes them so only for particular purposes, such as are therein described, and not for all purposes and under all circumstances whatever. Mear v. Jacobs, 7 L. R., H. L. Cas. 481; 44 L. J., Ch. 481; 32 L. T. 171; 23 W. R. 526.

Assignment by way of mortgage of a piece of ground held by underlease, together with the steam saw mills and buildings thereon, and the steam engines, boilers, fixed and moveable machinery, plant, implements and utensils, then or thereafter fixed to or placed upon, or used in or about the premises; to hold the hereditaments, and such of the machinery, plant, utensils and premises as were in the nature of landlord's fixtures, and could not lawfully be removed by the lessee, unto the mortgagee, his executors, administrators and assigns, for the residue of the term; and as to such of the machinery and premises as were in the nature of tenant's or trade fixtures, and could lawfully be removed by the lessee, unto the mortgagee, his executors, administrators and assigns absolutely. There was power to the mortgagee to sell the premises thereby assigned, or any part or parts thereof, either together or in parcels:—Held, that the mortgage, not being registered as a bill of sale, was void against a trustee in bankruptcy as to the trade fixtures. Eslick, In re, Alexander, Ex parte, 4 Ch. D. 503; 46 L. J., Bk. 30; 35 L. T. 914; 25 W. R. 260.

A lease of a piece of land was granted to a trader, he covenanting to build upon it a steam saw-mill, messuages, or dwelling-houses, and at the end of the term to yield up to the lessor the land, buildings, and fixtures, except the steam saw-mill, machinery, fixtures, and things connected therewith which it was agreed the lessee might remove. The lessee afterwards mortgaged the property, the mortgage deed assigning the land, together with the steam saw-mills and buildings thereon, and the steam-engines, boilers, fixed and moveable machinery, plant, implements, and utensils fixed to, placed upon, or used in or about the ground, hereditaments, saw-mills, and buildings, to hold the hereditaments, and such of the machinery, plant, &c., as were in the nature of landlord's fixtures, to the mortgagee for the residue of the term, and as to such of the machinery and premises as were in the nature of tenants' or trade fixtures to the mortgagee absolutely, subject to redemption. The deed contained a power for the mortgagee, in default of payment of the mortgage money, to sell the premises, or any part or parts thereof, either together or in parcels. The deed was not registered under the Bills of Sale Act. The mortgagor filed a liquidation petition. The mortgage money remained due. The mortgagee had not taken possession of any of the property comprised in the deed:—Held, that the effect of the deed was to authorize the mortgagee to sever the trade fixtures from the premises, and to deal with them separately, and consequently that the deed, not having been registered under the Bills of Sale Act, was void quâ the trade fixtures as against the trustee in the liquidation. Ib.

The lease of a shipbuilding yard and the trade fixtures therein were assigned to a shipbuilder, to hold the leasehold premises for the residue of the term granted by the lease, and to hold the trade fixtures absolutely. He deposited the lease and the assignment with his bankers as a security for advances made by them to him. No memorandum of charge was executed. The mortgagor afterwards filed a liquidation petition. The bankers had not taken any possession of the trade fixtures:—Held, that, as against the trustee in the liquidation, the bankers had no title to the trade fixtures. Trethowan, In re, Tweedy, Ex parte, 5 Ch. D. 559; 46 L. J., Bk. 43; 36 L. T. 70; 25 W. R. 399.

— Public-house.—The lessee of a public-house and two cottages, who was bound by the covenants of his lease to deliver up, at the expiration of the term, all fixtures, except trade fixtures, demised by way of mortgage the public-house and premises, including all the tenant's fixtures, to a mortgagee for all the residue of the term except the last three days. The deed contained a power to the mortgagee, in case of default, to sell the premises or any part, either together or in parcels, and either for the term thereby granted or for the original term, with a declaration that in case of a sale the mortgagor should hold the last three days of the term in trust for the purchaser. The lessee filed a petition for liquidation, and a trustee was appointed:—Held, that the deed gave no power to the mortgagee to sell or take possession of the fixtures separately from the buildings, and that therefore it did not require to be registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36). Barclay, Ex parte, Joyce, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 576; 43 L. J., Bk. 137; 30 L. T. 479; 22 W. R. 608.

The true test whether a mortgage deed of a building and of fixtures requires registration under the Bills of Sale Act, as respects the fixtures, is, whether it gives power to the mortgagee to sell or take possession of the fixtures separately from the building. Ib.

A publican demised by way of mortgage a leasehold public-house to his brewers:—Held, that the instrument, as regarded trade fixtures included in the demise of the premises to which they were attached, required registration. Meux v. Allen, 22 W. R. 609, n.

— Looms.—Looms put up by the lessee of a cotton mill for his convenience during the existence of his term, and fastened to the floor by nails driven through the loom feet into wooden plugs fitted into the floor, are, though easily movable without injury to the freehold, fixtures which will pass under an assignment of "the mill, fixed machinery, and hereditaments, with all looms and other machinery, fixed or movable," without the necessity of registering the assignment as an assignment of chattels. Boyd v. Shorrocks, 5 L. R., Eq. 72; 37 L. J., Ch. 144; 17 L. T. 197; 16 W. R. 102.

— Machinery, &c.—In 1862, the owner in fee in possession of land and premises, deposited the title deeds relating to them with the trustees of a banking company, to secure the balance of his account. Afterwards he built a mill upon the land, and fitted it with engines and machinery, as well as shafting and pipes, for the purpose of supplying and communicating steam power and gas throughout the building. He also supplied and affixed all the machinery and articles necessary for adapting the mill for the business of a woollen manufacturer, which he carried on there. The machines were in general firmly fixed to the floor, roof or side walls of the building in a quasi permanent manner by screws or bolts, or soldered with lead. The object of fixing was to secure steadiness and keep the machines in their places when worked. There was also a washer or a washing-machine, press plates and papers, a loom machine, a beaming frame, a desk in the counting house, condenser, bobbins, and fencings and clogs. By a bill of sale dated the 18th January, 1865, the owner assigned all the machinery and articles in the mill at that time to the plaintiff, who knew of the deposit of the title deeds with the trustees of the banking company. On the 25th August, 1866, the land, premises, machinery, &c., were conveyed to the trustees, the plaintiff not acquiescing in that conveyance:—Held, first, that the machines passed to the mortgagees under the equitable mortgage and the conveyance of the 25th August, 1866, as fixtures annexed to the freehold, the annexation being necessary and permanent; though as between landlord and tenant they would be considered as trade fixtures. Longbottom v. Berry, 5 L. R., Q. B. 123; 39 L. J., Q. B. 37; 22 L. T. 385; 10 B. & S. 852.

Held, secondly, that the articles were movable chattels and passed to the plaintiff under the bill of sale. Ib.

F. was holder of a mortgage created by a deed containing two witnessing parts, one assigning the property, the other the machinery. B. was holder of a second mortgage on the same property, and F. of a third mortgage of the same property. The first two mortgages were not registered under the Bills of Sale Act, the third was. F. entered into possession, and kept the property in repair, but could not obtain a tenant. On taking the accounts between them, an attempt was made to surcharge F. with a large sum, on the ground that the trade fixtures passed to him by the first mortgage, though not registered, and with a heavy occupation rent:—Held, first, that the fixtures did not pass by the first mortgage, as it was not registered. Begbie v. Fenwick, Fenwick v. Begbie, 24 L. T. 58; 19 W. R. 402. See S. C. on appeal, 6 L. R., Ch. 869; 25 L. T. 441; 20 W. R. 67.

Held, secondly, that, under the circumstances, F. could not be charged with an occupation rent. Id.

M. by a bill of sale assigned to the plaintiff the machinery and plant standing and being on certain premises used as a refinery, and specified and described in an inventory, "subject to the additions to and alterations and renewals of parts of the machinery which have taken place since [a certain previous date], and are shewn by the alterations in red ink in the inventory or which shall hereafter be in or upon the same premises:—"

—Held, that these words included machinery and articles brought on the premises for the purposes of the refinery subsequently to the execution of the bill of sale, the assignment being absolute, and the goods, though not specific at the date of the bill of sale, having become so by being brought into and made a part of the machinery of the refinery. Leatham v. Amor, 47 L. J., Q. B. 581; 38 L. T. 785; 26 W. R. 739.

The freehold of a mill was mortgaged by J. to M., and for further security, J. afterwards assigned to him machinery then upon the premises. By a deed of the 14th September, 1853, J. assigned to the defendant, subject to the mortgage, the equity of redemption of the mill, and all the machinery included in the assignment to M., and also other machinery that had been subsequently erected and fixed in the mill. By another deed of the 14th of August, 1854, J. assigned to the defendant, to secure a further advance of 500*l.*, machinery then on the premises, and set forth in a schedule to the deed, and which did not include any of the machinery assigned by the deed of the 14th of September, 1853; and also further charged with the 500*l.* the equity of redemption in the premises before charged to the defendant. The machinery assigned by this latter deed was affixed to the premises only for the purposes of trade, and this deed of sale treated them as machinery which J. had a right to sell distinct from the land. The deed of the 14th of August had not been registered. J. became bankrupt, the defendant at the time having taken possession of the machinery:—Held, in an action by the assignees of J., first, that the machinery assigned by the deed of the 14th of August, 1854, was personal chattels within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, s. 7; and that the deed itself was a bill of sale, as it created a primary charge on the machinery distinct from the land; and, therefore, that the deed, not having been registered, was inoperative. Waterfall v. Penistone, 6 El. & Bl. 876; 26 L. J., Q. B. 100; 3 Jur., N. S. 15.

Held, also, that being trade fixtures, the machinery did not by subsequent annexation pass to the mortgagee of the freehold. Id.

A mortgage of trade fixtures, together with the freehold, by the owner of the freehold, does not require to be registered as a bill of sale. Mather v. Fraser, 2 Kay & J. 536; 25 L. J., Ch. 361; 2 Jur., N. S. 900.

—Substituted Property.—A lessee for years of premises and a cloth mill standing thereon, mortgaged them all by deed, conferring a power of sale on the mortgagees and containing a covenant by the mortgagor to keep insured against fire, but not registered under the Bills of Sale Act:—Held, that the deed passed to the mortgagees all articles of trade machinery affixed to the mortgaged premises, whether they were so affixed before the mortgage or subsequently affixed in place of others of the same description which were affixed at the time of the mortgage, but afterwards destroyed by accidental fire. Irish Civil Service Building Society v. Mahony, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 363.

Tenant's.]—A mortgage by a leaseholder of his tenant's fixtures with his lease, in whatever form, requires registration under the Bills of Sale Act, as a bill of sale of fixtures. Such a mortgage is quite different from a mortgage by a freeholder of fixtures with the freehold. There the title to the land and to the fixtures is identical, for the fixtures belong to the landlord simply as part of the land, and it is for this reason that such a mortgage does not require registration. Daglish, Ex parte, Wilde, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 1072; 42 L. J., Bk. 102; 29 L. T. 168; 21 W. R. 893.

When there is a mortgage of leasehold property and fixtures with a power of sale, the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, applies not only where the power of sale authorizes the mortgagee to sell the fixtures separately from the leasehold property, but also where there is a separate assignment of the fixtures. Brown, Ex parte, Reid, In re, 9 Ch. D. 389; 48 L. J., Bk. 10; 39 L. T. 338; 27 W. R. 219—C. A.

b. Growing Crops.

Generally.]—Growing crops are goods and chattels within the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, being capable of complete transfer by delivery. Sheridan v. McCarty, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 506; 5 L. T. 27.

After growing crops had been seized and taken possession of under a bill of sale, but before sale of them, a fi. fa. on the judgment of another creditor of the vendor was delivered to the sheriff, who seized and sold the crops, and paid the proceeds to the execution creditor. The debtor subsequently became insolvent, and petitioned the Insolvent Debtors Court for protection under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96; but his assignees withdrew from contesting the right of the vendee of the bill of sale:—Held, that the vendee of the bill of sale was entitled to the proceeds of the crops as against the execution creditor, and that it would have made no difference in this respect if the assignees had not withdrawn. Congree v. Everett, 10 Ex. 298; 23 L. J., Ex. 273; 18 Jur. 655.

A tenant for years of a farm being indebted to his landlord, assigned by a bill of sale all the household goods and furniture, horses, cows, and all the hay, corn and grain as well in stock, and in the barn and granary, as now standing, growing and being upon the farm, and all carts, waggons, &c., and also all the tenant right and interest yet to come and unexpired of the debtor, in trust to sell and pay the debt, and the residue to the debtor:—Held, that, under this assignment, the tenant's interest in crops grown in future years of the term passed to the landlord. Petch v. Tutin, 15 M. & W. 110; 15 L. J., Ex. 280.

A document, by which A. agrees to sell to B.

"five acres of wheat now standing in, &c., at 6l. per acre, B. to cut and carry the corn any time he may require; and B. agrees to purchase the said five acres upon the above conditions," is a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36), s. 1, as the intention is apparent to pass the immediate property. Brantom v. Griffiths, 2 C. P. D. 212; 46 L. J., C. P. 408; 36 L. T. 4; 29 W. R. 313.

A bill of sale of growing crops does not require registration under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854. Payne, Ex parte, Cross, In re, 11 Ch. D. 534; 40 L. T. 563; 27 W. R. 808.

Validity of Bill of Sale as affecting Assignee.]

—B., the tenant from year to year of a farm of the defendant, assigned by bill of sale to the plaintiff all his property upon the farm together with all growing and all other crops, which at any time thereafter should be in or about the same or any other premises of his. On the 25th of April, after the execution of this bill of sale, the defendant distrained for rent, and while in possession under that distress, he, having no knowledge of the bill of sale, agreed with B., that he would forego all claim for rent, that B. should surrender the farm to him, and that the tenancy should be determined as from the 24th of June next ensuing. In May, B. having made default in payment of the instalments under the bill of sale, the plaintiff took an inventory of the goods on the farm, and put locks on the gates of the fields in which the crops were growing. The defendant then informed the plaintiff of the agreement between himself and B.; whereon the plaintiff removed the locks and shortly after gave the defendant notice of the assignment to him by the bill of sale of the crops. The defendant attended to the cultivation of the crops, took possession of the farm on the 24th of June, and reaped and sold the crops as they came to maturity. In an action of trover and for the conversion of the crops:—Held, that although the plaintiff was in equity entitled to relief, yet an action of trover could not be maintained; that the surrender by the tenant to the landlord was a valid surrender at law, but that it could not affect prejudicially the equitable rights of the plaintiff as assignee of the crops; that if there could be no valid surrender as against the plaintiff, and if the tenant must still be considered with regard to the plaintiff to be in possession, so that the plaintiff could claim to be by the assignment in the same position as the tenant, then the plaintiff, although entitled to the value of the crops when sold, was also liable to pay the rent of the farm, and the expenses of cultivating and harvesting the crops, and that as the balance on a settlement of account was in favour of the defendant, judgment must, in the circumstances of the case, be entered for the defendant. Clements v. Mathews, 11 Q. B. D. 808; 52 L. J., Q. B. 772—C. A. Reversing 47 L. T. 251.

4. POSSESSION OF THE GOODS.

a. In Grantor.

Apparent Possession.—By a bill of sale all the furniture and effects in a private dwelling-house were assigned for a valuable consideration. Soon after the bill was made, an agent of the holder of the bill took possession of the furniture and effects, and resided in the house armed with a copy of the bill, which he was directed to shew to any person claiming the furniture, or interfering with his possession. The assignor, who was tenant of the house, continued as before to reside there, and to have the use of the furniture, subject to the possession of the agent. Shortly after the agent's entry the assignor was adjudicated a bankrupt. The transactions being assumed to be bonâ fide:—Held, that nothing had been done to change, in the view of the outer world, that appearance of ownership with which the assignor was invested, and that the chattels were in his "apparent possession" within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, s. 7, and passed to the assignee in bankruptcy, the bill not having been duly registered. Honnann, Ex parte, Vining, In re, 10 L. R. Eq. 63; 39 L. J., Bk. 4; 22 L. T. 179; 18 W. R. 450.

Held, also, that the definition of "apparent possession" in the interpretation clause applies to cases where more than merely formal possession has been taken by or given to another person. Ib.

The occupation mentioned in the 7th section of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, means a de facto occupation; and therefore, where goods comprised in an unregistered bill of sale had been deposited in rooms rented by the grantor, and the keys of the premises had been demanded by and given up to the grantee in consequence of non-compliance by the grantor with the conditions of the bill of sale, and the grantor never returned to the premises, but the grantee entered, marked the goods, and kept the keys, the jury found rightly, that the premises were not occupied by the grantor; and the goods were therefore not in his "apparent possession." Robinson v. Briggs, 6 L. R., Ex. 1; 40 L. J., Ex. 17; 23 L. T. 395.

H., on the 3rd November, in the year 1870, executed a bill of sale assigning the furniture in his house to L., to secure a debt of 1,000l. This bill of sale was never registered. On the 28th November, 1870, L. sent a broker's man to take possession of the furniture. This man continued to live in the house of H., and to sleep there, until he became bankrupt, but he was permitted to use and enjoy the furniture just as before the possession was taken. On the 19th December, bills were posted in the neighbourhood announcing a sale of the furniture by auction on the 28th December. On the 23rd December H. was adjudicated a bankrupt:—Held, that at the date of the bankruptcy the furniture remained in the possession or in the apparent possession of H., and that the trustee was entitled to it. Lewis, Ex parte, Henderson, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 626; 24 L. T. 785; 19 W. R. 835.

An advertisement of an intended sale of goods comprised in a bill of sale, if it is to have the effect of taking the goods out of the possession or apparent possession of the maker of the bill of sale, must, even though posted upon the premises where the goods are, state that the sale is to take place under a bill of sale. Ib.

The grantor of a bill of sale of household furniture managed a business as servant to the grantee at a weekly salary, and was allowed to reside in the house where the business was carried on and to use the furniture as part of his salary, the grantee residing elsewhere. The furniture having been taken in an execution against the grantor, and the bill not having been duly registered:—Held, that the furniture was in the apparent possession of the grantor within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, ss. 1, 5, and that the execution creditor was entitled to it as against the grantee. Pickard v. Marriage, 1 Ex. D. 364; 45 L. J., Ex. 594; 35 L. T. 343; 24 W. R. 886.

Goods formally seized by the sheriff under an execution remain in the apparent possession of the debtor within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act. Mutton, Ex parte, Cole, In re, 14 L. R., Eq. 178; 41 L. J., Bk. 57; 26 L. T. 916; 20 W. R. 882. See Saffery, Ex parte, contra, post, col. 1849.

The goods of a debtor having been seized in execution, and a man left in possession, the holder of an unregistered bill of sale over them paid the debt and costs and took possession himself. On the same day, and before he did so, the debtor was adjudicated bankrupt:—Held, that the bill of sale was void against the trustee in bankruptcy. Ib.

Held, also, that the holder of the bill of sale was entitled to be paid, out of the proceeds of the goods, the amount of the executions, which were good against the trustee. Ib.

Goods comprised in a bill of sale, which entitles the holder to take possession upon default in payment after demand, remain, notwithstanding the registration of the bill of sale, until demand is made, in the reputed ownership of the grantor. Harding, Ex parte, Fairbrother, In re, 15 L. R., Eq. 223; 42 L. J., Bk. 30; 28 L. T. 241.

H. having borrowed various sums of money from A., on the 10th September, 1874, executed a bill of sale to him of furniture and other articles as a security for the repayment of the money with interest. By the terms of the bill of sale, H. was to retain possession of the goods until payment of the debt was demanded by A., who was entitled to take possession of the goods if the debt was not repaid with interest within twenty-four hours after demand. The bill of sale was not registered. H., intending to reside at Ogbear Hall, the house of the interpleadant, delivered possession of some of the goods to one B., who, under her directions, kept the goods for some time, and then took them to the hall. On arriving there, B. was allowed to place the goods in four rooms, and, having locked the doors, to take away the keys. A. subsequently served H. with a written demand for payment of the money owing to him, and not having been paid within twenty-four hours after such demand, he went to the hall and demanded possession of the goods from the interpleadant, to whom he gave notice of his title and threatened to take away the goods by force. The interpleadant, however, refused to allow him to take possession of the goods, or to enter the house. Subsequently, H. filed a petition for liquidation:—Held, that, when the petition for liquidation was presented, the goods were still in the possession of H., within the Bills of Sale Act, s. 1, and that her trustee in liquidation was therefore entitled to them as against A. claiming under the bill of sale. Ancona v. Rogers, 1 Ex. D. 285; 46 L. J., Ex. 121; 35 L. T. 115; 24 W. R. 1000—C. A. Reversing 33 L. T. 749.

Held, secondly, that if the effect of the deposit of the furniture at the house of the interpleadant had been to make him the bailee of the goods for the grantor, they would have still been in possession of the grantor; possession of a bailee being, for the purposes of the Bills of Sale Act, possession of the bailor. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that whether the goods were in the possession of the grantor as occupant of the rooms, or as bailor of the goods to the interpleadant, the demand of possession by the grantee (though the refusal to accede to it was wrongful) had not the effect of taking the goods out of the possession of the grantor, for the purposes of the Bills of Sale Act. Ib.

Question of Fact.—The possession or apparent possession of a vendor or mortgagor, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, is in general a question of fact. Gough v. Ewerard, 2 H. & C. 1; 32 L. J., Ex. 210; 8 L. T. 363; 11 W. R. 702.

E., by an agreement, sold certain timber lying partly on his private wharf, and partly on a public wharf, to G. for 300*l.*, E. agreeing to pay all rent and other charges upon the timber for six months, within which time G. was to remove it. G. took possession of the key of the private wharf, and sold some of the timber lying there, but he did nothing with reference to the timber on the public wharf, the key of which remained in the hands of the wharfinger, except taking persons to look at it with a view to its sale. E., by another written agreement, sold to G., for 50*l.*, some furniture lying in a house, the property of E., and part of which house E. had previously used as an office, and occasionally slept in, but of which apartments he had the use. By the agreement G., out of the 50*l.*, was to pay the wages due to E.'s servant, who remained in the house, and the rates and taxes. E. did not use the house after the agreement:—Held, that on these facts, there was no possession, or apparent possession of the timber, either at the private or public wharf, or of the furniture, by E., so as to render them liable to seizure under an execution against E. Ib.

Sale of Machinery—Apparent Possession by Vendor after the Sale.—P., a trader, being in want of capital, sold to the plaintiffs certain agricultural machinery (including a steam-engine and threshing machine, with their appurtenances) for the sum of 700*l.*, and signed a sale or receipt note for the same. The plaintiffs, thereupon, by an agreement in writing, let the said machinery on hire to P. for a term of three years at or for the sum of 882*l.*, payable by quarterly instalments of 73*l.* 10*s.*, and the said agreement provided (amongst other things) that in case of default being made by P. in the payment of the sum of 882*l.*, or the said quarterly instalments, or any part thereof, or if P. during the term became bankrupt, or assigned, or parted with the possession of the machinery or any part thereof, without the consent of the plaintiffs, it should be lawful for them to resume and take absolute possession of the said machinery. Neither the sale note nor the agreement was registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36), and P. paid two instalments of 73*l.* 10*s.* due under the agreement and no more. P., without the consent or knowledge of the plaintiffs, and after he had made default in the payment of the instalments, parted with the possession of the steam-engine and threshing machine, with their appurtenances, and delivered the same to the defendant, who had no notice of the above agreement, for the purpose of having them sold by auction, and the defendant advanced 100*l.* to P. on them, and also incurred expenses in attempting to sell them. P. then committed an act of bankruptcy by absconding, and the plaintiffs demanded possession of the steam-engine and threshing machine with their appurtenances from the defendant, who claimed a lien upon them in respect of his commission and charges as auctioneer in such attempted sale, and also in respect of the advance of 100*l.*, which had not been repaid to him by P. In an action brought to recover the steam-engine and machinery with their appurtenances, or their value, and damages for their detention :—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment on the grounds that the steam-engine and machinery (whether the agreement amounted to a bill of sale or not) were not in the possession or apparent possession of P. at the time of his bankruptcy, within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36), s. 1 ; nor in the order and disposition of P. within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 15, sub-s. 5. Lincoln Waggon and Engine Company v. Mumford, 41 L. T. 655.

Stock-in-Trade—Implied Licence to dispose of.—B., a trader, assigned to the plaintiff his stock-in-trade by a bill of sale with a proviso that until default in payment of the money advanced, B. should be entitled to make use of such stock without hindrance or disturbance on the part of the grantee. B. afterwards sold the goods to the defendants by private contract and absconded. The jury found that "B. sold the goods fraudulently, and not in the ordinary course of his business ; but the defendants did not know this, and bought the goods bonâ fide :"—Held, that, upon this finding, the verdict was properly entered for the plaintiff ; the right of the grantor to deal with the goods being subject to the implied condition that the dealing should be only in the ordinary course of his business. Taylor v. McKeand, 5 C. P. D. 358 ; 49 L. J., C. P. 363 ; 42 L. T. 833 ; 28 W. R. 628 ; 44 J. P. 784.

Implied Licence to carry on Business—Liability of Purchaser.—Claim : That the plaintiffs were holders of a bill of sale duly registered, comprising, amongst other things, all the growing crops and all the goods, chattels, and effects which then were or thereafter should be on or about the farm and premises of S., a farmer, and that defendant wrongfully deprived the plaintiffs of the use and possession of twelve quarters of wheat comprised in the bill of sale. —Defence : That the plaintiffs suffered S. to have the possession of the goods, and to hold himself out as having not only the possession but the property in them, and that he sold the same to the defendant, who bought them in the ordinary course of business, and without any notice that they did not belong to S. That S. was suffered by the plaintiffs to carry on his business as a farmer and dealer in grain at the time of the sale, and it was the ordinary course of business of S. in such business to make such sales :—Held, that the defence was good, for the bill of sale by implication conferred a licence on the grantor to carry on his business and dispose of the goods so as to give a valid title to purchasers. National Mercantile Bank v. Hampson, 5 Q. B. D. 177 ; 49 L. J., Q. B. 480 ; 28 W. R. 424.

The grantor of a bill of sale, described in the instrument as an innkeeper and horsedealer, in consideration of a loan of 100*l.*, assigned to the plaintiff by the said bill of sale all his personal property, including "an entire horse called Fireaway, a cob called Charley, and a pony called Nelly." The bill of sale contained a covenant that so long as the money should remain owing, the grantor would not remove any of the said property from the said messuage without the consent of the plaintiff, and provided that until default in payment the grantor should hold, make use of and possess the property thereby assigned. Subsequently, and without the consent of the plaintiff, the grantor sold the three horses, Fireaway, Charley and Nelly, at a public auction, where one of them, the cob, was purchased by the defendant. In an action of detinue brought by the plaintiff to recover the cob or its value from the defendant, it was held, that the object of the bill of sale being to enable the grantor to carry on his business, the sale of the horses, which must be taken to have been sold in the ordinary course of his business, was not a breach of the covenant, and that the action was, therefore, not maintainable. National Mercantile Bank v. Hampson (supra) followed ; Walker v. Clay, 49 L. J., C. P. 560 ; 42 L. T. 369 ; 44 J. P. 396.

Seizure within Twenty-one Days.—The assignee of goods assigned under a bill of sale has twenty-one days from the date of the bill of sale, within which he may either file the bill of sale, or take the goods out of the apparent possession of the assignor ; and, therefore, the title of such assignee to the goods is not defeated by their seizure while in the apparent possession of the assignor, but before the twenty-one days have expired, under a fi. fa. issued on the goods of the assignor by an execution creditor. Marples v. Hartley, 3 El. & El. 610 ; 30 L. J., Q. B. 92 ; 7 Jur., N. S. 446 ; 3 L. T. 774 ; 9 W. R. 334.

Rights of Assignee.—Where goods are assigned as security for an advance of money, upon trust, to permit the assignor to remain in possession of them until default in payment at the time stipulated, and upon further trust to sell them upon such default being made, the assignee has a sufficient possession to enable him to maintain trespass against a wrongdoer. White v. Morris, 11. C. B. 1015 ; 21 L. J., C. P. 185 ; 16 Jur. 500.

Such an assignment, though void as against creditors, is good as between the parties, and as between either party and a stranger. Id.

A bailiff of a county court, claiming to seize goods on behalf of a judgment creditor, is a stranger within that rule, unless he proves the legal authority under which he seized on behalf of such creditor, viz. the judgment. Id.

b. In Grantee.

Possession of Grantee—Immaterial how obtained.—If the grantee under an unregistered bill of sale has, before the bankruptcy of the grantor, acquired possession of the goods so as to exclude the apparent possession of the grantor, it is immaterial whether the possession has been obtained by means of a transaction which, taken per se, would have amounted to a fraudulent preference. Symons, Ex parte, Jordan, In re, 14 Ch. D. 693; 42 L. T. 106; 28 W. R. 803—C. A.

Per James. L. J.: Observations on Darby v. Smith (8 T. R. 82). Id.

When the grantee of a bill of sale takes possession of the goods comprised in it, and advertizes them for sale as the goods of the grantor sold under a bill of sale, the goods, though still in the house of the grantor, are no longer in the apparent possession of the grantor within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, ss. 1, 7; and the bill of sale, although not duly registered, is valid against an execution levied on the goods of the grantor. Emanuel v. Bridger, 9 L. R., Q. B. 286; 43 L. J., Q. B. 96; 30 L. T. 194; 22 W. R. 404.

Actual possession taken by the grantee of an unregistered bill of sale, even though taken wrongfully, may exclude the operation of the Bills of Sale Act. Fletcher, Ex parte, Henley, In re, 5 Ch. D. 809; 46 L. J., Bk. 93; 37 L. T. 758; 25 W. R. 573—C. A.

If the grantee of an unregistered bill of sale given by way of mortgage attempts to take possession of the property comprised in it before he is authorized to do so by the terms of the deed, he is a mere trespasser and his possession will not be extended by construction of law beyond the articles of which he has obtained actual physical possession, though in the case of a person who is entitled to take possession the possession of one article may be construed as the possession of all that is comprised in the deed. Id.

When taken within Time limited for Registration.]—When possession is taken by the assignee of the property comprised in a bill of sale, within the twenty-one days limited by the Bills of Sale Act, the deed does not require to be registered in order to be available. Northern Investment and Discount Company, Ex parte, Carlisle, In re, 27 L. T. 520.

When the goods and chattels comprised in a bill of sale are seized within twenty-one days from its making, under an execution issued against the grantor, and the sheriff interpleads upon a claim by the grantee, upon the trial of the issue the grantee is entitled to the goods and chattels as against the execution creditor, although the bill of sale is never registered. Brignall v. Cohen, 21 W. R. 25—Ex. Ch.

A. made a bill of sale to the plaintiff on the 27th June, and the assignee remained in possession under it on the 2nd July. On the 6th July the sheriff seized under a fieri facias at the suit of the defendant against S.:—Held, that as A. was not in apparent possession for twenty-one days, the bill of sale did not require to be filed, and therefore, without being filed, gave the assignee a good title. Marples v. Hartley, 3 El. & El. 610; 30 L. J., Q. B. 92; 7 Jur., N. S. 446; 3 L. T. 774; 9 W. R. 334.

A. executed a bill of sale of goods to B. on the 20th November, 1860. On the 10th December A. executed to B. a second bill of sale of the same goods, and the first was cancelled, but neither was registered; and on the 31st December A. executed a third bill of sale of the same goods to B., but the second one was not cancelled. The defendant levied under a fi. fa. on the 4th January, and the third bill of sale was registered on the 10th:—Held, that the property in the goods passed from A. by the execution of the first bill of sale, and that the execution of the other bills of sale was but the exercise of his right of redemption, and the granting a fresh security, and that the third bill having been registered within the twenty-one days was good as against the execution-creditor. Hollingsworth v. White, 6 L. T. 604; 10 W. R. 619.

A bill of sale is not invalid in consequence of not having been filed within twenty-one days, if the goods referred to in it are seized within the twenty-one days in which it might have been filed. Hanbury v. White, 2 H. & C. 300; 32 L. J., Ex. 258; 9 Jur., N. S. 913; 8 L. T. 508; 11 W. R. 785

— After such Time.]—Possession taken under an unregistered bill of sale more than twenty-one days old will not avail against the title of the trustee in liquidation under a subsequent petition, if the grantor of the bill of sale has committed a prior act of bankruptcy, though such act of bankruptcy may have been unknown to the holder of the bill of sale at the time when he took possession. Turner, In re, Attwater, Ex parte, 5 Ch. D. 27; 46 L. J., Bk. 41; 35 L. T. 682; 25 W. R. 206—C. A.

In s. 1 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, the "time of such bankruptcy" means the time of the act of bankruptcy. The grantee, under an unregistered bill of sale, took possession of the property comprised in it before the filing of a liquidation petition by the grantor. The day before possession was taken the grantor had committed an act of bankruptcy of which the grantee had no notice:—Held, that the title of the grantee was defeated by virtue of the relation back of the title of the trustee in the liquidation to the earlier act of bankruptcy. Id.

Husband and Wife.]—R.'s wife, during her minority, executed a conveyance of a house of which she was seised in fee to R.'s father, with whom R. was in partnership, for 5000. The deed was not acknowledged by the wife. R. was credited with the purchase-money in the partnership. On a subsequent sale, the purchaser required the wife's concurrence in and confirmation of the deed of conveyance. R. procured her concurrence by executing at her request a bill of sale upon his furniture to secure payment of the value of the house to a trustee for her. The bill of sale was registered, and formal possession of the furniture was given to the trustee. The furniture remained in the house occupied by R. and his wife, until he presented a petition for liquidation:—Held, that the transaction amounted to a purchase by R. of his wife's concurrence to the second sale, that the possession was consistent with the terms of the deed, and that the wife's trustee was entitled to the furniture as against the trustee in liquidation. Cox, Ex parte, Reed, In re, 1 Ch. D. 302; 33 L. T. 757; 24 W. R. 302.

What is taking Possession.]—The holder of a bill of sale, which was not registered, sent a man to take possession and prevent the grantor retaining the goods. This man entered the premises in which the goods were, but could not get into the room in which they were, but kept watch outside the door of such room, the grantor being absent. The jury having found that the man intended bonâ fide to take possession:—Held, that there was evidence to justify such finding, and that a verdict found for the holder of the bill of sale against an execution creditor whose execution was put in after such taking of possession was rightly found. Furber v. Finlayson, 34 L. T. 323; 24 W. R. 370.

Actual Possession of Sheriff under Execution.]

—If the goods comprised in an unregistered bill of sale are, at the time of the filing of a bankruptcy petition against the grantor, in the actual visible possession of the sheriff under an execution, issued either by the grantee or by a third person, they are not, even though the grantee has himself taken no possession, in the "apparent possession" of the grantor, and the Bills of Sale Act does not apply. Mutton, Ex parte (ante, col. 1843), not followed. Saffery, Ex parte, Brenner, In re, 16 Ch. D. 668; 44 L. T. 324; 29 W. R. 749—C. A.

Possession of Grantee by Man put in by Him.]

—J., having executed a bill of sale, a man was put in possession of the goods comprised in it by the grantee. The house, in which the goods were, belonged to J., and he had a key of it; he did not sleep in it, but he went in and out as he pleased:—Held, that the goods were in the possession or apparent possession of J. within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, ss. 4, 8. Seal v. Claridge, 7 Q. B. D. 516; 50 L. J., Q. B. 316; 44 L. T. 501; 29 W. R. 598—C. A.

Power to Grantee to take Possession, with subsequent Proviso that Grantor shall retain Possession.]—A bill of sale of chattels empowered the grantee to take possession in case (inter alia) the grantor should become embarrassed in his affairs, or in case any action at law should be commenced against him. There was a subsequent proviso that, until default should be made in payment, according to the covenant and proviso therein contained, it should be lawful for the grantor to retain possession:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the prior clause was not controlled by the subsequent proviso, but that, on the happening of one of the specified events, the grantee was entitled to take possession, though no default in payment had been made by the grantor. National Guardian Insurance Company, Ex parte, Francis, In re, 10 Ch. D. 408; 40 L. T. 237; 27 W. R. 498—C. A.

Mortgage of House and Furniture—Letting by Mortgagor.]

—The mortgagor of a house and furniture let the same to a tenant for six months with the consent of the mortgagee, to whom, by arrangement between the parties, a certain portion of the rent was paid. The mortgage deed was not registered as a bill of sale. The mortgagor having become bankrupt, the mortgagee, at the termination of the six months' tenancy, took possession of the furniture and goods in the house, and claimed to retain them as against the trustee in the liquidation. The county court judge declared that the furniture and goods formed part of the debtor's estate, and ordered them to be delivered up to the trustee:—Held, on appeal, that inasmuch as the furniture and goods comprised in the mortgage deed were not used and enjoyed by the bankrupt so as to be in his apparent possession within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, the mortgagee was entitled to retain them. Morrison, Ex parte, Westray, In re, 42 L. T. 158; 28 W. R. 524.

5. PROPERTY PASSING BY.

Property in Possession at time of making Deed.]—An assignment, by way of mortgage, from a lessee to his lessor, of furniture and stock-in-trade in, about, upon and belonging to an inn, with a power, upon non-payment, to enter into, possess, hold and enjoy the inn for the residue of the assignor's term therein, and to take, possess, hold and enjoy all the goods, chattels, effects and premises, passes nothing but what was in, upon, or about the inn at the time of the assignment. Tupfield v. Hillman, 6 M. & G. 245; 6 Scott, N. R. 967; 12 L. J., C. P. 311; 7 Jur. 771.

Secus, if power had been given to enter upon default, and take the goods, chattels and effects then in, upon or about the inn. Id.

A deed of bargain and sale cannot pass the property in goods which do not belong to the grantor at the time of the execution of the deed, unless there is some new act done by the grantor after he acquires the property, indicating his intention that such subsequently acquired property should so pass. Lunn v. Thornton, 1 C. B. 379; 14 L. J., C. P. 161; 9 Jur. 350.

A deed purported to assign to G. absolutely "the household goods and furniture, cows, horses, and other farming stock, implements of husbandry, corn, hay and other agricultural produce, cheese, dairy utensils, and other things which are now, or which, at any time during the continuance of this security, shall be, in, about and belonging to the dwelling-house;" but a clause followed, by which it was declared, "that, if A. shall pay to G. the sum advanced on the security of the property, on the 1st of January, 1845, or at such earlier day as G. shall appoint by notice in writing, and shall in the meantime pay the interest," then the deed shall be void. It was further declared, that, after default in payment of the sum after notice, it shall be lawful for G. to receive and take into his possession, and thenceforth to hold and enjoy, the household goods, &c.; and also to sell and dispose of the same. And that, until default, it shall be lawful for A. to hold, make use of, and possess the household goods, &c.:—Held, first, that the deed was a present conveyance from A. to G. Gale v. Burnell, 7 Q. B. 850; 14 L. J., Q. B. 340; 10 Jur. 198.

Held, secondly, that it did not operate as an assignment of goods thereafter to be brought upon the premises. Id.

A., being indebted to B., by a bill of sale, which was found to have been bonâ fide executed, conveyed to him all his stock-in-trade, household furniture, &c., absolutely. The bill of sale contained a covenant by A. to pay the debt on demand, and a proviso for redemption on payment of the debt and interest on demand; and a further proviso, that the assignor should continue in possession until default. The goods having been subsequently, and before any demand made by B., seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa., upon a judgment entered up against A. on a warrant of attorney:—Held, that B. had not such a right of immediate possession as to entitle him to maintain trover against the sheriff. Bradley v. Copley, 1 C. B. 685; 14 L. J., C. P. 222; 9 Jur. 599.

A bill of sale of goods, described as being in warehouses belonging to A., was given by him for the loan of a sum expressed to have been paid on the day of the date thereof. Upon trover brought against the assignee of A., who had seized the goods, it appeared that a portion only of the goods was in the warehouse specified at the date of the sale, and that no part of the loan was paid on that day, the same being discharged by instalments a few days afterwards, whereupon the Supreme Court of Bombay held, that there had been no valid transfer, and consequently no conversion, and gave judgment and verdict in accordance with such view:—Held, on appeal, that the judgment and verdict were not justified by the evidence, and must be reversed, and a new trial granted. Muttyloll Seal v. O'Dowda, 6 Moore, P. C. C. 324.

Looms and Things belonging thereto.—C. assigned to S. by bill of sale "all and singular the 104 power looms, and other effects and things belonging thereto, now being in, upon or about the mill, particularly set forth in the schedule." The schedule was as follows: "Looms made by S." The looms were in use at the date of the execution of the bill of sale. Healds, reeds, wefts and waste cans are attached to the looms when in use, and the looms are not complete for weaving till they are supplied; but they form no part of the looms as they come from the makers. They are made, and often sold at sales, separately from the looms. Different healds and reeds are used in weaving cloth of different degrees of fineness; they do not ordinarily belong to any particular loom, but can be detached and used with any loom indifferently:—Held, that the healds, reeds, weft and waste cans which were on the premises at the time of the execution of the bill of sale passed to S. Coot v. Sagur, 3 H. & N. 370; 27 L. J., Ex. 378.

Personal Estate in Dwelling-house.—B., who was a yearly tenant of a house which he occupied, being indebted to A., executed a bill of sale, by which he assigned to A., "all the household goods, furniture, stock-in-trade, and other household effects in or about the dwelling-house, and all other the personal estate whatsoever," of B., with power to A. to sell in case of default in payment of the debt due to him from B., and to stand possessed of the moneys to arise from such sale, upon trust to satisfy the expenses and debt, and to account for the surplus, if any, to B.:—Held, that, notwithstanding the general words used, B.'s term or interest in the dwelling-house did not pass under such bill of sale to A. Harrison v. Blackburn, 17 C. B., N. S. 678; 34 L. J., C. P. 109; 10 Jur., N. S. 1131; 11 L. T. 453; 13 W. R. 135.

Held, also, that even if the term did pass, A. could not, before entry, maintain an action of trespass in respect of such dwelling-house. Id.

Goods in Schedule—Received after Deed executed.—In an assignment of all the furniture in a house, and comprised in a schedule annexed, goods bought and inserted in the schedule before, but not received until after the execution of the bill of sale, will pass. Sutton v. Bath, 1 F. & F. 152.

Property Elsewhere.—The plaintiff, a contractor for carrying the mails from Halstead, in Essex, to Haverhill, in Suffolk, and back, being indebted in 30*l.* to the defendant, executed in October, 1871, a bill of sale as a security for the debt, whereby he granted to the defendant "all and every the household furniture, plate, linen, china, books, live and dead stock, horses and other cattle, carts and carriages, corn and hay, and all other the goods, chattels, personal estate and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, of him the plaintiff, and which now or at any time hereafter, may be in, about, or upon his dwelling-house and premises at Halstead or elsewhere," with a proviso making void the indenture on payment by the plaintiff of the principal and interest on a day therein mentioned. And it was provided that in default in payment of the principal and interest at the time therein mentioned, the defendant should, and might, enter upon the message and premises of the plaintiff, where any of his goods, chattel and personal estate were deposited, and take possession of the same, and for that purpose, if necessary, break open any doors or other obstructions, and sell and dispose of the goods, and receive the money arising from the sale, and apply the same in manner in the bill of sale mentioned. On the 18th May, 1875, the plaintiff drove the mail-cart from Halstead to Haverhill, as usual, and put up his horse and cart at the Bull Inn stables there, where also was standing at the time a second horse belonging to him, two horses being necessary for working the mail. He then went away on business, and during his absence the defendant came to the stables and seized and carried away the plaintiff's two horses, and afterwards sold them, and applied the proceeds in payment of 13*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, balance of the plaintiff's debt of 30*l.* which then remained due under the bill of sale. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for so seizing his horses, the court made absolute a rule to enter the verdict for the plaintiff for 30*l.*, the value as found by the jury of the horses seized, on the ground that there was not in the bill of sale any assignment of future property, nor any assignment of property "elsewhere" than on the plaintiff's premises. Greenbirt v. Smea, 35 L. T. 168.

Held, also, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything in addition to the value of the horses, as special damage resulting from the loss of them; and that the defendant was not entitled to make any deduction on account of the balance of the debt remaining due to him from the plaintiff on the security of the bill of sale, but must recover that, if at all, by a proper proceeding against the plaintiff. Id.

A debtor, who carried on his business at No. 111, Fore-street, London, but who resided at No. 10, The Grove, South Lambeth, executed a bill of sale to a creditor of all and singular the plate, linen, goods and chattels, which then were in or about the message and premises, No. 10, The Grove, South Lambeth. There was then a clause in the bill of sale, "that all the household furniture, plate, linen, china, glass, pictures, prints, wines, liquors, and all other the goods, chattels, and effects of whatever nature, which the mortgagor now is, or during the continuance of the security shall become, possessed of, shall be subject to the security hereby made, and it shall be lawful for the mortgagor to enter into any messuage or premises and to take possession thereof." There were other provisions inserted with a view of securing the mortgagee; but although the house, No. 10, The Grove, was frequently mentioned, no mention in terms was made of the premises, No. 111, Fore-street:—Held, that, upon a proper construction of the bill of sale, it did not operate upon the property upon the premises, No. 111, Fore-street, but operated alone upon the property upon the premises, No. 10, The Grove. Nee v. Parren, 14 L. T. 591. Affirmed, 15 L. T. 320—Ex. Ch.

Substituted Property.—A lessee for years of premises and a cloth mill standing thereon mortgaged them all by deed, conferring a power of sale on the mortgagees and containing a covenant by the mortgagor to keep insured against fire, but not registered under the Bills of Sale Act:—Held, as against an execution creditor of the mortgagor, who remained in possession, that the deed passed to the mortgagees all articles of trade machinery affixed to the mortgaged premises, whether they were so affixed before the mortgage or subsequently affixed in place of others of the same description which were affixed at the time of the mortgage, but afterwards destroyed by accidental fire. Irish Civil Service Building Society v. Mahony, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 363.

An assignment of goods on the premises, with power to seize substituted effects, includes goods ordered and delivered to a carrier the day before, but not delivered to the assignor until the day after the execution of the bill of sale. Sladden v. Sergeant, 1 F. & F. 322.

R. assigned to the defendant all the dye-ware and consumable stores on his premises, upon trust to permit R. to remain in possession, and carry on his trade until a specified event, and on that happening, to stand possessed of the premises upon trust to enter and take possession of all the premises, including all substituted consumable stores, pursuant to the declaration thereafter contained, and to sell the same. There also was a clause, that when any of the dye-ware, &c., thereby assigned and specified in the schedule should be consumed, and others substituted for them, in the ordinary way of the business, the substituted dye-ware, &c., should belong to the defendant upon the trusts before declared, and should be considered as included in the assignment, in like manner as if they were now the property of R., and were included in the schedule, so that the security might at all times be of an adequate value. R. continued in possession until the specified event, and during that time substituted dye-ware, &c., for others consumed in the way of his business. After the event happened, the defendant took possession of all the dye-ware, &c., then on the premises, including those which had been substituted by R., and several months after sold the same dye-ware, &c. R. had become bankrupt after the seizure, and before the sale, and his assignees sued in trover for the substituted dye-ware:—Held, that the property in the substituted dye-ware vested in the defendant when he took possession under the deed, either by a transfer of them, made valid by a new act subsequently done by the grantor, or by virtue of the express authority to take possession of them, completed by possession being actually taken. Hope v. Hayley, 5 El. & Bl. 830; 25 L. J., Q. B. 155; 2 Jur., N. S. 486.

By a bill of sale the grantor assigned to the grantee the stock-in-trade then in certain specified premises, and also the stock-in-trade which should or might at any time during the continuance of the security be brought into the premises, either in addition to or in substitution for stock-in-trade therein at the date of the bill of sale:—Held, by Lopes, J., that the assignment was sufficient to pass the property in stock-in-trade afterwards brought into the premises in addition to or in substitution for that previously there. Lazarus v. Andrade, 5 C. P. D. 318; 49 L. J., C. P. 847; 43 L. T. 30; 29 W. R. 15; 44 J. P. 697.

Effect of, as passing Property, where no Covenant of Mortgagor not to Sell.—In consideration of a loan of money, G., the mortgagor, by bill of sale conveyed his furniture, stock-in-trade, and other effects in and upon the farmhouse occupied by him, to the plaintiff, and all things of the like nature which might at any time during the continuance of the security be brought on the premises. The bill of sale contained provisos that if the mortgagor should upon demand made to him or his assigns pay the amount secured the security should be void, and that in case he should make default in payment of the amount, or in case he should assign the goods or permit them to be removed from the premises before such payment, it should be lawful for the plaintiff to enter upon the premises and take possession of and sell the goods assigned. There was a further proviso that until the mortgagor or his assigns should make default, or do any act whereby the power of entry might be put in force, it should be lawful for him or his assigns to hold and possess the goods assigned. The mortgagor, while part of the consideration-money remained unpaid, sold and delivered off his premises to the defendant part of the goods assigned. The plaintiff thereupon demanded these goods from the defendant, and upon his refusal to give them up, brought an action for their conversion. At the trial the jury found that the sale to the defendant was not in the ordinary course of business:—Held, that the defendant was liable, for upon the true construction of the bill of sale, the sale and removal of the goods gave no title to the defendant as against the plaintiff. Payne v. Fern, 6 Q. B. D. 620; 50 L. J., Q. B. 446; 29 W. R. 441.

Inventory including Goods not mentioned in Mortgage.—A mortgage of a manufactory and the machinery, working plant, &c., in or upon the same, and more particularly enumerated and specified in an inventory attached to the mortgage, does not include stock-in-trade described in the inventory but not mentioned in the mortgage. Jardine, Ex parte, McManus, In re, 23 W. R. 382. Affirmed on appeal, 10 L. R., Ch. 322; 44 L. J., Bk. 58; 32 L. T. 681; 23 W. R. 736.

Words sufficient to comprise Book Debts—Sale of Goods left in Possession of Grantor.—H. was in business as a tobacconist, and B. lent him the sum of 2,500*l.* on security of an unregistered bill of sale, by the provisions of which a share in the profits was to be paid to B. in lieu of interest, and the leasehold premises on which the business was carried on were mortgaged to B. to secure his loan, together with the goodwill "and all the goods, wares, merchandize, stock-in-trade, fixtures, furniture, articles, effects, and things belonging to" H. in respect of the business, and it was declared "that all fixtures, furniture, goods, wares, merchandize, articles, and things" which should during the continuance of the security "be brought upon the premises" or "be in any other place or places in the actual or constructive possession of H." should be included in the security. The deed also provided that the property should remain in the possession of H. until B. should take possession, for its insurance, and for the keeping of proper books of account, in which entries were to be made "of all the moneys, goods, wares, merchandize, debts, and other effects belonging or owing to" H. in respect of the business. H. sold some of the goods on credit, but did not receive the price. B. took possession of the premises under the powers contained in the deed, and gave notice to the persons who had bought goods on credit to pay the price to him. Shortly afterwards H. presented a liquidation petition. The trustee in liquidation and B. both claimed the book debts:—Held, that the book debts were not assigned by the deed, but they were the proceeds of goods allowed to be sold by H. for his own profit in his own business, and belonged to H.'s trustees. Broune v. Fryer, 46 L. T. 636—C. A. Reversing 45 L. T. 521.

Book Debts, Exception of.]—In estimating whether a bill of sale comprises the whole of a trader's property, the value of his book debts is to be taken into account. Burton, Ex parte, 13 Ch. D. 102; 41 L. T. 571; 28 W. R. 268; S. P. Field, Ex parte, Marlow, In re, 13 Ch. D. 106, n.; 28 W. R. 267—C. A.

After-acquired Property.]—A., in consideration of a debt due from him to B., assigned to B., for securing that or any future debts, "all the fixtures and fittings, household furniture, stock-in-trade, chattels and effects, in and about the premises of A., and which were more particularly mentioned in a schedule thereto, and all the right and interest of A. thereto;" and for the more effectually securing the payment of the debt, and other moneys and interest, A. thereby authorized and empowered B., his executors or administrators, to enter into and upon the premises of A., whether acquired subsequently to the date of the deed, and not legally passing under it, or previously thereto, which before the satisfaction of that security should at any time be upon the premises, in the name or names of A., his executors, administrators or otherwise, to make and perfect any assignment, transfer or delivery thereto, to any agent or trustee, for B., or to a purchaser or otherwise:—Held, that, under this deed, A. was justified in seizing after-acquired property of B. upon the premises built subsequently to the date of the instrument. Chidell v. Galsworthy, 6 C. B., N. S. 471.

When on the face of an assignment of personality it is plain that it was intended to operate as a continuing security, and to apply to property afterwards acquired and substituted for that which was originally assigned, it will, if the words are capable of such a construction, be so applied. Carr v. Allatt, 27 L. J., Ex. 385.

Where in such a case the deed was found capable of such a construction, although rather in the indirect form of a power of attorney than in the way of direct conveyance, it was construed to extend to stock and young crops on a farm not occupied by the assignor at the time of the execution of the deed. Ib.

In 1852, certain traders mortgaged to the plaintiff their machinery, stock-in-trade, &c., present and future. In January, 1855, they made an invalid assignment of all their effects to trustees for the benefit of creditors. The plaintiff having afterwards sold, without notice of an act of bankruptcy, all the property of the bankrupts, including that specified in his mortgage deeds, as well as after-acquired property:—Held, that he was entitled to that property only which was specified in his own mortgage deed. Carr v. Acraman, 11 Ex. 566; 25 L. J., Ex. 90.

At law non-existing property to be acquired at a future time is not assignable; in equity it is so. Hutroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. Cas. 191; 33 L. J., Ch. 193; 9 Jur., N. S. 213; 7 L. T. 172; 11 W. R. 171.

At law, although a power is given in a deed of assignment to take possession of after-acquired property, no interest is transferred, even as between the parties themselves, unless possession is actually taken; in equity, the moment the property comes into existence, the agreement operates upon it. Ib.

H. sold to T. all the machinery on T.'s mill and premises. The deed, registered as a bill of sale, after reciting the purchase, witnessed that H. assigned to a trustee all the machinery specified in a schedule on trust, if T. paid to H. 5,000*l.* on demand, for T. absolutely; but in default of such payment, then to sell and apply the proceeds. The deed also provided that all the machinery which, during the continuance of the security, should be fixed or placed on the mill and premises, in addition to or substitution for the present machinery, should be subject to the same trusts. T. remained in possession, working the mill, and from time to time sold part of the machinery, and purchased new, of which he gave notice to H. Afterwards H. demanded payment of the 5,000*l.*, which was not paid. An execution creditor of T. issued a fi. fa., and the sheriff seized the added or substituted machinery:—Held, that the added and substituted machinery became, as soon as it was put in the mill, subject to the deed: and H. was equitable owner, and had priority over the execution creditor, without the formality of taking actual possession. Ib.

An assignment of chattel property, with a power to seize future chattels, does not operate in equity as an assignment of such future chattels, nor give the assignee a present interest in them. Irvine v. Whitmore, 4 De G., J. & S. 1; 33 L. J., Ch. 63; 9 Jur., N. S. 1214; 9 L. T. 311; 12 W. R. 113.

S., lessee of a brickfield, in 1858 assigned to H., by way of mortgage, "the stock of bricks then being, or at any time thereafter to be," in or upon the brickfield. In 1859, S., in consideration of an advance, executed a bill of sale, in which H. joined, for the purpose of postponing his security, by which he assigned to G. all and singular the prepared clay and earth, and stock of bricks in and upon the brickfield; and S.

granted to G. "full licence, power and authority, at all times during the continuance of the security, to enter into or upon the brickfield, and to seize and take possession of and sell all and every the clay, bricks and machinery, plant, &c., which might be in and upon the same premises, in such and in like manner as if the same formed part of the chattels and effects thereby assigned, or intended so to be:"—Held, that the deed of 1859 operated as an equitable assignment of the chattels on the premises at the date of the security, with a power to the mortgagee, at any future time during the continuance of the security, to enter and seize the property which he might then find there. Id.

When a bill of sale given to secure a debt contains, together with an assignment of existing property, words which amount to a licence to seize after-acquired property, but which do not amount to an equitable assignment of the latter, such licence is co-extensive with the debt, and cannot be exercised after the debt has been barred by the bankruptcy of the debtor. Cole v. Kernot, Thompson v. Cohen, 7 L. R., Q. B. 527; 41 L. J., Q. B. 221; 26 L. T. 693.

A bill of sale, purporting to convey a right to after-acquired property, gives only an equitable right, which can only be enforced by taking possession after a demand. Belding v. Read, 3 H. & C. 955; 34 L. J., Ex. 212; 11 Jur., N. S. 547; 13 L. T. 66; 13 W. R. 867.

A bill of sale by a debtor to a creditor purported to convey all the personal estate and effects of the debtor, then being or thereafter to be upon certain premises or elsewhere in Great Britain. It also contained a power, in case the debt secured was not paid on demand, to enter any premises in the occupation of the debtor and distrain the goods there. The creditor went to the debtor's house and demanded payment of the debtor's wife; the debtor being absent from home and the debt not being paid, he thereupon seized furniture, stock-in-trade, and other goods of the debtor, acquired since the bill of sale, some being on the debtor's premises and some not.—Held, first, in an action by the assignees of the debtor, who had become bankrupt, against the creditor, that the conveyance passed neither at law nor in equity the after-acquired property, it not having been specifically ascertained within the principle of Holroyd v. Marshall, supra. Id.

Held, secondly, that the power never came into operation, no sufficient demand having been made, and that therefore the assignees were entitled to recover from the creditor the value of all the after-acquired property. Id.

—Assignment of future-acquired Property—Stock-in-trade—Substitution of.—By a bill of sale the grantor assigned to the grantee the stock-in-trade then in certain specified premises, and also the stock-in-trade which should or might at any time during the continuance of the security be brought into the premises, either in addition to or in substitution for stock-in-trade therein at the date of the bill of sale:—Held, by Lopes, J., that the assignment was sufficient to pass the property in stock-in-trade afterwards brought into the premises in addition to or in substitution for that previously there. Lazarus v. Andrade, 5 C. P. D. 318; 49 L. J., C. P. 847; 43 L. T. 30; 29 W. R. 15; 44 J. P. 697.

—Growing Crops.—By a bill of sale the grantor assigned to the grantee (inter alia) the "growing crops" then in and about certain specified premises, and also (inter alia) the "growing crops" which at any time thereafter should be in or about the same or any other premises of the grantor during the continuance of the security:—Held, that the assignment was sufficient to pass the property in the future-growing crops on their coming into existence. Clements v. Mathews, 47 L. T. 251; 47 J. P. 21. Affirmed on this point, but reversed on another point, 11 Q. B. D. 808; 52 L. J., Q. B. 772—C. A. See also ante, col. 1840.

—Charge of.—A person by a written instrument charged "all his present and future personalty" to secure to the plaintiff any sums he might become indebted to him for, and afterwards incurred debts to the plaintiff:—Held, that this instrument operated to charge all the personal property belonging to the debtor at the date of the instrument, but did not operate to charge after-acquired property. Holroyd v. Marshall (10 H. L. C. 191) distinguished. D'Epineuil, In re (No. 2), Tadman v. D'Epineuil, 20 Ch. D. 758; 47 L. T. 157; 30 W. R. 702.

—Bankruptcy of Assignor—Liability provable—Order of Discharge—Release from Liability.—An assignment for value of general future property operates as a contract to assign the property if and when acquired, the liability upon which, in the event of the bankruptcy of the assignor, is a "liability provable" under the 31st section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869; therefore an order of discharge (Bankruptcy Act, s. 49) releases the debtor from all further liability upon such an assignment. But quære, whether the liability upon an assignment of particular future property would be barred by an order of discharge. By bill of sale, duly registered, A. assigned to B. all the chattels then upon his business premises, and also all the chattels which might thereafter be brought upon the same premises, as a security for 300l. A. afterwards went into liquidation and obtained his discharge. He then commenced a new business, and brought a new set of chattels upon his premises. B., who had not come in under the liquidation, claimed A.'s new set of chattels, as forming part of his security:—Held, that A.'s discharge released him from all further liability upon the assignment. Culley v. Isaacs, 51 L. J., Ch. 14; 30 W. R. 70—C. A. Reversing 50 L. J., Ch. 707; 44 L. T. 872.

—Marriage Settlement.—A debtor by a bill of sale assigned for value to a creditor certain specified chattels at his place of business, "and all other chattels which might be or at any time thereafter be brought thereon in addition to or in substitution thereof." The debtor became bankrupt, and after his order of discharge brought other chattels upon the premises. The creditor did not prove for his debt in the bankruptcy:—Held, that the assignment of the after-acquired chattels, although absolute in form, amounted merely to a contract to assign, for the breach of which the assignor incurred a liability provable in his bankruptcy, and from which he was released by the order of discharge; that consequently the goods brought on the premises after the order of discharge could not be seized by the creditor under his bill of sale. Whether the same rule applies to a covenant in a marriage settlement to settle future property, quære. Culley

v. Isaacs, 19 Ch. D. 342; 51 L. J., Ch. 14; 45 L. T. 567; 30 W. R. 70—C. A. See 45 & 46 Vict. c. 43, ss. 5, 6.

6. SUCCESSIVE BILLS OF SALE.

Validity of, without Registration, against Execution Creditors.—When a bill of sale is given for good consideration, but not registered, and before the expiration of the time for registration it is annulled, and a similar bill of sale given which also is not registered, and, after this process has been repeated several times, at last a bill of sale is duly registered, such last bill of sale is valid against execution creditors, if made bona fide with the intention of passing the property comprised in it. Smale v. Burr, 8 L. R., C. P. 64; 42 L. J., C. P. 20; 27 L. T. 555; 21 W. R. 193.

A debtor renewed bills of sale on his goods to the plaintiff from time to time, so as to evade the necessity for registration, and after seizure by the sheriff on a judgment against the debtor, the plaintiff duly registered his last bill. Before the execution of this last bill, but after that of the plaintiff's previous bills, the defendant had, without the plaintiff's knowledge, obtained and registered another bill of sale from the debtor:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the goods, notwithstanding the defendant's previously registered bill of sale. Hunter v. Turner, 32 L. T. 556; 23 W. R. 792.

W., owing 500*l.* to E., and being pressed to give security, an agreement was come to between them and the plaintiff that W. should give the plaintiff a bill of sale of the furniture in W.'s house, that the bill should be kept renewed for twelve months, and neither the original bill nor the renewals should be registered unless W. should get into difficulties. Accordingly W. executed a bill of sale on the 8th of March, 1872, by which he assigned all the furniture to the plaintiff, with a proviso for redemption if the 500*l.* were paid on the 8th of March, 1873, or on any earlier day after twenty-four hours' demand in writing; and it was agreed that after default in payment the plaintiff might take possession and sell, but in the meantime the goods should remain in W.'s possession. A second bill of sale in similar terms was executed on the 27th of March, 1872; but the first bill remained in the plaintiff's possession uncanceled. On the 13th of April he demanded payment; on the 15th of April W. was in difficulties, and the bill of sale was duly registered on that day. The goods were afterwards taken in execution at the suit of a judgment creditor of W.:—Held, that, though the transaction might be an evasion of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, there was nothing in that statute to render it illegal; that the substitution of the second bill of sale for the first amounted to a transfer of the goods from the plaintiff to W., and from him to the plaintiff again; so that the property passed by the second bill, which, being registered, was good against the judgment creditor. Ramsden v. Lupton, 9 L. R., Q. B. 17; 43 L. J., Q. B. 17; 29 L. T. 510; 22 W. R. 129—Ex. Ch.

Against Trustee in Bankruptcy.—A trader procured a loan of 55*l.* on the security of two bills of sale which included the whole of his property, which was worth more than 600*l.* At the same time he agreed verbally with the lender of the money that the bills of sale should be given up and fresh bills substituted for them within the time allowed for registration, and that this should be repeated from time to time. The original bills were executed in May, 1870, and they were renewed in June and again in July, no fresh advance being made to the mortgagor on either occasion. Early in August the mortgagor filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement, and the July bills were then registered within the proper time:—Held, that the bills of July were void as against the trustee of the bankrupt. Cohen, Ex parte, Sparke, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 20; 41 L. J., Bk. 17; 25 L. T. 473; 20 W. R. 69—L. J.

Although a registered bill of sale, which is in fact the last renewal of a series of unregistered bills of sale, each renewed within twenty-one days of the preceding one, with a view to avoid publicity, and being fac-similes and in substitution of the original bill of sale, may be good as against an execution creditor, it will be void as against a trustee in bankruptcy, as being an act of bankruptcy within the Bankruptcy Act, 1859. s. 6. Sterens, Ex parte, Sterens, In re, 20 L. R., Eq. 786; 44 L. J., Bk. 136; 33 L. T. 135; 23 W. R. 908.

Arrangement between Debtor and Creditor not fraudulent Evasion of Act.—A trader executed a bill of sale of the furniture in his house to a creditor, as security for the payment of two bills of exchange which the creditor had discounted for him. The bills were to become due before the expiration of the twenty-one days allowed for registration under the Bills of Sale Act; and, in compliance with the debtor's request, the creditor agreed not to register the bill of sale till the bills of exchange had become due and been dishonoured, nor did he take possession of the furniture. On the bills falling due the creditor took them up, and the debtor gave him a new bill of sale of the furniture, and new bills of exchange, which were to fall due on the 30th October, were substituted for the old ones. The new bills of exchange having been dishonoured at maturity, the creditor instructed an auctioneer to take possession of the furniture, but the men who were sent to do so on the 31st October failed to get into the house till the following morning, when they seized the furniture and removed it. The new bill of sale was duly registered on the 31st October, and on the same day the debtor filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement, and was subsequently adjudicated bankrupt:—Held, that the arrangement between the debtor and his creditor was not a fraudulent evasion of the Bills of Sale Act, and that the creditor was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the furniture. Harris, Ex parte, Pulling, In re, 8 L. R., Ch. 48; 42 L. J., Bk. 9; 27 L. T. 501; 21 W. R. 44—L. J.

Bill given in Pursuance of Agreement not an Act of Bankruptcy.—A trader gave a bill of sale of all his property to secure an existing debt and a fresh advance, with a stipulation that the bill should not be registered, but that, when required by the creditor, the debtor would give a fresh bill of sale, which the creditor might register. A fresh bill of sale was given in pursuance of this agreement without any further advance being made, which was duly registered by the creditor, and under which he took possession. The debtor subsequently filed a liquidation petition :—Held, that the agreement to give a fresh bill of sale was valid ; and that the bill, being given in pursuance of such agreement, did not constitute an act of bankruptcy. Jackson, In re, Hall, Ex parte, 4 Ch. D. 682 ; 46 L. J., Bk. 39 ; 35 L. T. 947 ; 25 W. R. 382.

7. STAMPING.

When Unstamped.—The registration of a bill of sale is not avoided because the stamp is insufficient at the time of registration. The defect may be cured by having the proper stamp affixed afterwards. Bellamy v. Saul, 4 B. & S. 265 ; 32 L. J., Q. B. 366 ; 8 L. T. 534 ; 11 W. R. 800.

Horses substituted—Names Indorsed on Bill.—A bill of sale, assigning certain horses as a security, and also such other horses as might be substituted for them in the business of the assignor, provided the names and descriptions of such substituted horses were indorsed :—Held, that the indorsements did not require an additional stamp, being only for the purpose of identification. Barker v. Aston, 1 F. & F. 192.

Authority to act under.—A mere authority to act under a particular bill of sale, semble, does not require to be stamped as a letter or power of attorney. Baker v. Dale, 1 F. & F. 271.

Cancelled Bill of Sale.—On an issue to try the property in goods which the plaintiff claimed under a bill of sale, a previous bill of sale of the same goods, though cancelled, is not admissible to prove bona fides, unless stamped. Williams v. Gerry, 2 D. N. S. 201 ; 10 M. & W. 296 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 389.

8. WHEN FRAUDULENT AND VOID.

a. Continuation of Possession.

Generally.—The mere continuance in possession, by a debtor, of property which he has assigned by bill of sale to his creditor, is not, per se, such a badge of fraud as renders the bill of sale fraudulent and void ; it is only prima facie evidence of fraud. Macdonald v. Swiney, 8 Ir. C. L. R. 73 ; S. P., Eastwood v. Browne, R. & M. 312.

Continuance in possession, to render such a transaction void, must be accompanied by other circumstances, from which a jury may arrive at the conclusion that its object was fraudulent. Id.

The question of fraud or no fraud is always one for the jury, not for the judge. Id.

It is a general rule in the transfer of chattels, that the possession must accompany and follow the deed. Edwards v. Harben, 2 T. R. 587.

Therefore, where the conveyance is absolute, the possession must be delivered immediately ; where it is conditional, it will not be rendered void by the vendor's continuing in possession till the condition is performed. Id.

A bill of sale of goods made for a valuable consideration, unaccompanied with the possession, is valid as against the vendor ; and as against a creditor, with whose knowledge and assent it was given. Steel v. Brown, 1 Taunt. 381.

Goods were taken under a fi. fa. as the goods of Sophia W., and on an issue directed to try whether the goods were the property of B., it was proved that the goods, prior to 1836, belonged to Martin W., when they were distrained for rent, and the sum for which they were distrained, paid in the name of Sophia W., with the money of the plaintiff. In 1837, Martin W. became bankrupt, and the plaintiff paid 128*l.* to the official assignee for Martin W.'s interest in the goods. Early in 1839, Martin W. took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, but his assignees never claimed the goods. In November, 1839, Sophia W. executed an assignment of the goods to the plaintiff, and in March, 1840, the goods were seized under a fi. fa. against Sophia W. The goods always had remained in the possession of Martin W. as the ostensible owner of them, and Sophia W. never was in the possession of them :—Held, that B. had made out his property in the goods ; and that, as Sophia W. had never been in the possession of the goods, and never could have gained false credit by them, there was nothing from which the jury ought to infer that the assignment was fraudulent. Burling v. Paterson, 9 C. & P. 570.

Held, also, that the fact, that the assignment was kept at Martin W.'s house, was immaterial, and that it was also immaterial that no possession of the goods had been delivered by Sophia W. to the plaintiff, as the right to them would pass by the execution of the deed. Id.

Until Default.—A., being indebted to B. in 10*l.* for goods, applied for a further supply upon credit, and for a loan. B. refused to grant either without security ; and it was then agreed that A. should give a bill of sale of his household furniture and fixtures, and that B. should give him credit for 200*l.* on that security. Before the bill of sale was executed, B., upon the faith of such agreement, advanced to A. 90*l.* in money and goods, and afterwards, on the 8th of May, 1828, A. executed a bill of sale, whereby in consideration of the debt of 100*l.*, he bargained and sold to B. all his (A.'s) household goods and furniture, with a proviso, that if A. should pay the 100*l.* by instalments, the first of which was to be due on the 7th of June, the deed should be void ; but in default of payment of any of the instalments at the time appointed, it should be lawful, although no advantage should have been taken of any previous default, for B. to enter upon the premises and take possession, and sell off the goods. There was a further proviso, that until such default it should be lawful for A. to keep possession of them. In 1823, A. had given a warrant of attorney to C. and D. as a security for a debt of 1,100*l.*, and they, in 1828, entered up judgment and sued out a fi. fa., under which the sheriff seized the goods :—Held, in an action by B. against the sheriff, that the bill of sale was not fraudulent by reason of A.'s having continued in possession. Martindale v. Booth, 3 B. & Ad. 498.

Grantee allowing Grantor to exercise Acts of Ownership.—Where a party who obtains a bill of sale takes possession under it, but suffers the late owner of the goods to interfere or exercise any act of ownership, it will avoid the bill of sale as against a subsequent bona fide execution. Paget v. Perchard, 1 Esp. 205.

And it is not enough that a person is put in to keep possession jointly with the assignor. Worrell v. Smith, 1 Camp. 333.

b. Under Bill of Sale from Sheriff.

[The following cases were decided under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 74, which has been repealed by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 83, s. 20.]

The goods of A. being taken in execution, and put up to sale, B. became the purchaser, and took a bill of sale from the sheriff, but permitted A. to continue in possession: A. then executed another bill of sale of the goods to C. a creditor, under which the latter took possession, whereupon A. brought an action against C. for the goods:—Held, that the first bill of sale was valid, and that A. was therefore entitled to recover. Kid v. Rawlinson, 2 B. & P. 59; 3 Esp. 52.

A creditor having taken in execution the goods of a debtor who had confessed judgment, and having herself bought them by public auction, and taken a bill of sale for a valuable consideration from the sheriff, and let the goods to the former owner for a rent which was actually paid, has a title which cannot be impugned as fraudulent by other creditors having executions against the same debtor. Watkins v. Birch, 4 Taunt. 823.

Where a person, pretending to be a purchaser of goods under an execution, leased the goods at a rent to the former owner, who still continued in possession, no money having been proved to be given for the purchase, nor rent paid under the lease, it was a question for the jury, whether the lease was not fraudulent. Reed v. Blades, 5 Taunt. 212.

The goods of A. being in possession of the sheriff under a fi. fa., he executed a deed of assignment to B. for a valuable consideration, on which the execution was withdrawn; B. superintended the management of the property, but allowed A. to continue in possession: the property was afterwards seized under a subsequent execution at the suit of C.; held, that such property was protected by the assignment to B., although A. continued in the visible possession. Jezepeh v. Ingram, 1 Moore, 189.

A., a farmer, executed a bill of sale on the 26th of September of all his property absolutely to B. for a debt of 600*l.*; B. put his son in possession, A. continuing to reside on the premises, and to conduct the farm. On the 30th of November, the sheriff took the stock, corn, &c., in execution, at the suit of C. against A. After satisfying the execution, enough remained to cover the 600*l.* due to B.:—Held, that the jury, allowing for the fluctuation of the market, was warranted in finding that the goods, at the time of executing the bill of sale, were not worth more than the 600*l.*, and therefore that the bill of sale was made bonâ fide, and that A. was entitled to recover the amount of 600*l.* in trover against the sheriff. Benton v. Thornhill, 2 Marsh. 427; 7 Taunt. 149.

An assignment from the sheriff under a fi. fa. on a judgment obtained by a friendly creditor, with intent to preserve the use of the property to the debtor and defeat another execution, although the transaction will be of no greater force than an assignment from the debtor, will be valid, provided there was a real debt, and the assignment by the sheriff was bonâ fide. Cookson v. Fryer, 1 F. & F. 328.

Where a bill of sale of goods taken under a fi. fa. is made by an officer of the sheriff, the court will presume that he was duly authorized to make it. Robinson v. Collingwood, 17 C. R., N. S. 777.

9. OPERATING AS AN ACT OF BANKRUPTCY— See BANKRUPTCY.

10. REGISTRATION.

a. Affidavit.

i. Generally.

Time of Filing.—A bill of sale, and the affidavit of the time at which it was made, must be filed simultaneously with the officer acting as clerk of the dockets and judgments in the Queen's Bench. Grindell v. Brendon, 28 L. J., C. P. 333; 5 Jur., N. S. 1420; 33 L. T., O. S. 224; 7 W. R. 579.

Sufficiency.—An affidavit accompanying a bill of sale on filing, describing the maker as of Westbourne Rectory, near Emsworth, in the county of Hants, Westbourne Rectory being, in fact, in the county of Sussex, and adjoining Emsworth, which is in the county of Hants, is sufficient. Bellamy v. Saul, 7 L. T. 345.

In registering a bill of sale, the affidavit purported to be made by A. B., of such a description, who was also the attesting witness to the bill of sale, but the affidavit did not contain any further allegation of the residence and occupation of the attesting witness:—Held sufficient. Allen v. Thompson, 1 H. & N. 15; 25 L. J., Ex. 249; 2 Jur., N. S. 451.

A bill of sale, which was filed, containing a description of the residence and occupation, but the affidavit of the time of the execution of the bill of sale which was filed with it not containing such description, was void, upon the ground of non-compliance with s. 1 of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. Hatton v. English, 7 El. & Bl. 94; 26 L. J., Q. B. 161; 3 Jur., N. S. 294, 934, n.

An affidavit annexed to a bill of sale describing the grantor's residence and occupation to the best of the belief of the deponent is sufficient. Roe v. Bradshaw, 1 L. R., Ex. 106; 35 L. J., Ex. 77; 12 Jur., N. S. 29; 14 L. T. 641; 14 W. R. 284.

The affidavit filed with a bill of sale stating that the bill of sale was executed "on the day of which the same bears date," and, in another part, stating the day with a clerical error in substituting 1806 for 1876, is a sufficient affidavit of the time of execution. Lamb v. Bruce, 45 L. J., Q. B. 538; 35 L. T. 425; 24 W. R. 645.

Defective.—An execution having been levied on goods within twenty-one days after the making of a bill of sale thereof, a defective affidavit filed therewith does not vitiate the bill of sale. Banbury v. White, 9 Jur., N. S. 913.

Amending.—In the jurat of an affidavit of the execution of a bill of sale the date was written 10th January, 1860, instead of 1861:—Held, a clerical error which might be amended. Hollingsworth v. White, 6 L. T. 604; 10 W. R. 619.

Making False Oath.—A false oath sworn in an affidavit for the purpose of procuring the registration of a bill of sale is a misdemeanor at common law. Reg. v. Hodgkiss, 11 Cox, C. C. 365.

ii. Attestation.

Statute.—By 45 & 46 Vict. c. 43, s. 10, the execution of every bill of sale by the grantor shall be attested by one or more credible witness or witnesses, not being a party or parties thereto. So much of s. 10 of the principal act as requires that the execution of every bill of sale shall be attested by a solicitor of the Supreme Court, and that the attestation shall state that before the execution of the bill of sale the effect thereof has been explained to the grantor by the attesting witness, is hereby repealed.

By Solicitor of Grantee.—The execution by the grantor of a bill of sale attested and registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31, s. 10), may be attested by the solicitor of the grantee. Penwarden v. Roberts, 9 Q. B. D. 137; 51 L. J., Q. B. 312; 46 L. T. 161; 30 W. R. 427.

By Solicitor who is also Grantee.—A solicitor who is the grantee of a bill of sale cannot also be the attesting solicitor of that bill of sale, so as to satisfy the requirements of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 10. Szal v. Claridge, 7 Q. B. D. 516; 50 L. J., Q. B. 316; 44 L. T. 501; 29 W. R. 598—C. A.

Validity between Grantor and Grantee for want of.—A bill of sale to which the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), applies, if it be not explained to the grantor and attested by a solicitor in compliance with the provisions of ss. 8, 10, is not void as between the grantor and grantee. Davies v. Goodman, 5 C. P. D. 128; 49 L. J., C. P. 344; 42 L. T. 288; 28 W. R. 559—C. A.

Explanation by Solicitor.—Sect. 10, though it requires that the attestation clause shall state that the effect of the bill of sale has before its execution been explained by the attesting solicitor to the grantor, does not require that any such explanation should have in fact been given. National Mercantile Bank, Ex parte, Haynes, In re, 15 Ch. D. 42; 49 L. J., Ch. D. 62; 43 L. T. 36; 28 W. R. 848; 44 J. P. 780—C. A.

Liability of Solicitor omitting.—Semble, that a solicitor who stated in the attestation clause to a bill of sale that he had explained the effect of it to the grantor when he had not in fact done so, would be liable to civil and penal consequences. Id.

Nature and Sufficiency of.—Per James, L. J.: Quære, whether, if the attestation clause states that before the execution of the bill of sale the effect thereof has been explained by a solicitor, the court can go into the question of the nature or sufficiency of the explanation. Hill v. Kirkwood, 42 L. T. 105; 28 W. R. 358—C. A.

That Witness explained Bill.—It is not necessary that the affidavit filed on the registration of a bill of sale should state that the solicitor who attested the execution of the deed explained the effect of it to the grantor before he executed it. Bulland, Ex parte, Roper, In re, 21 Ch. D. 543; 52 L. J., Ch. D. 113; 47 L. T. 488; 31 W. R. 102—C. A.

Qualification of Solicitor.—Per Cotton, L. J.:

The act does not require the solicitor who is the attesting witness to be a practising solicitor, nor one in any way connected with the grantee. Hill v. Kirkwood, supra.

"Of its due Execution and Attestation."—The affidavit "of its due execution and attestation" filed with a registered bill of sale under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 31, s. 10, sub-s. 2, must state, inter alia, that the bill of sale was "duly attested" by the attesting solicitor, i.e. that he was present and witnessed the due execution; an affidavit merely verifying his signature to the attestation clause, and describing his residence and occupation, is defective, and will therefore invalidate the registration. Sharpe v. Birch, 8 Q. B. D. 111; 51 L. J., Q. B. 64; 45 L. T. 760; 30 W. R. 428; 46 J. P. 246.

The affidavit which is filed on the registration of a bill of sale must shew that the solicitor whose name appears as the attesting witness to the deed did in fact attest it, i.e. was present when it was executed by the grantor. The affidavit, therefore, is not sufficient if it only verifies the signature of the solicitor to the attestation clause. Sharpe v. Birch (supra) followed. Ford v. Kettle, 9 Q. B. D. 139; 51 L. J., Q. B. 558; 46 L. T. 666; 30 W. R. 741—C. A.

The affidavit of the due execution and attestation of a bill of sale, filed, together with a copy of the bill of sale, by virtue of s. 10, sub-s. 2, of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, is not sufficient, unless it contains a statement that the attesting witnesses were present and saw the execution of the bill of sale by the grantor. Knightley, Ex parte, Moulson, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 823; 46 L. T. 776; 30 W. R. 844.

Attestation may be Inferred.—The affidavit of an attesting witness to a bill of sale under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 41), need not state in so many words that he did attest the bill of sale. It is sufficient if this can be inferred from the affidavit. Yates v. Ashcroft, 47 L. T. 337; 31 W. R. 156.

Description of Residence and Occupation of Attesting Witness.—An attesting witness's description of himself as deponent is sufficient. Sladden v. Sergeant, 1 F. & F. 322; S. P., Nicholson v. Cooper, 3 H. & N. 384; 27 L. J., Ex. 392.

The statute requires that the description of the residence and occupation of the attesting witness to a bill of sale shall be given, though the bill of sale is not made by a person in execution. Id.

Where a person has any fixed profession or business, or a vocation by which he gains his living, it must be mentioned in the description of an attesting witness, though it is not necessary to insert a description of an occupation which he has only casually and temporarily followed. Sutton v. Bath, 1 F. & F. 152; 27 L. J., Ex. 388.

The affidavit filed on registration of a bill of sale in pursuance of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 10, sub-s. 2, contained, in the introductory part describing the deponent, an accurate description of his residence. The body of the affidavit contained, inter alia, the following statements:—"I (the deponent) was present and saw the said (grantor of the bill of sale) duly execute the said bill of sale on the 15th day of December, 1881. The name subscribed to the said bill of sale as that of the witness attesting the due execution thereof is in the proper handwriting of this deponent. I am a solicitor of the Supreme Court, and reside at—;" there being thus no description of the residence of the attesting witness in the body of the affidavit:—Held, that the affidavit was sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 10, sub-s. 2, in respect of the description of the residence of the attesting witness.—By Manisty, J.: The body of the affidavit sufficiently incorporated by reference the description of the residence of the attesting witness contained in the introductory part.—By North, J.: It is sufficient that the description of the occupation and residence of the attesting witness should be found in the introductory part of the affidavit. Blaisberg v. Parke, 10 Q. B. D. 90; 52 L. J., Q. B. 110; 48 L. T. 311; 31 W. R. 246.

It is sufficient if the affidavit filed with the bill of sale refers to the description of the residence and occupation of the attesting witness mentioned in the bill of sale. Banbury v. White, 2 H. & C. 300; 32 L. J., Ex. 258; 9 Jur., N. S. 913; 8 L. T. 508; 11 W. R. 785.

A bill of sale given by a company had the seal of the company affixed to it, and opposite such seal were the signatures of two directors, with the addition of the word "directors" after the signatures, and also the signature of the secretary, with the word "secretary" after it. It was the practice of the company to affix the seal in the presence of the board, and for two directors to attest the sealing, and the articles of association authorized the directors to make regulations for the use of the seal:—Held, that the two directors did not sign as attesting witnesses, and that therefore their residence and occupation were not required to be stated in the affidavit of verification. Shears v. Jacobs, 35 L. J., C. P. 241; 14 L. T. 286; 14 W. R. 609.

The registration of a bill of sale, the execution of which has been attested by two witnesses, will be invalid unless the affidavit filed with the copy of the bill of sale contains a description of both witnesses. Pickard v. Marriage, 1 Ex. D. 364; 45 L. J., Ex. 594; 35 L. T. 343; 24 W. R. 886.

An attestation to a bill of sale correctly described the witness as, "Solicitor, Bloomfield Street, in the City of London." In the affidavit the witness describing himself as "Solicitor, of 16, Bloomfield Street, in the City of London," proceeded to state that he resided at "Grove House, Acton, in the City of London." His residence was in fact at Grove House, Acton, Middlesex. There were three places called Acton in England, none of them being in the City of London:—Held, a sufficient description of the residence of the attesting witness, it being one which, though inaccurate, would, coupled with the description in the bill of sale, enable a person of ordinary intelligence to conclude that the suburban Acton must be the place of residence of a solicitor carrying on business in the City of London. Blount v. Harris, 47 L. J., Q. B. 596. Affirmed on appeal, 4 Q. B. D. 603; 48 L. J., Q. B. 159; 39 L. T. 465; 27 W. R. 202—C. A.

—"Clerk."—It is sufficient if an attorney's clerk is described as of the office or place of business of his employers, though he sleeps elsewhere. Attenborough v. Thompson, 2 H. & N. 559; 27 L. J., Ex. 23; 3 Jur., N. S. 1307.

Therefore, where a bill of sale contained the following description of the attesting witness, "W. R. Cuthbert, of King's Bench-walk, Inner Temple, in the City of London, clerk to Messrs. Brundrett & Randall, of the same place, solicitors:—"—Held, that such a description was sufficient. Blackwell v. England, 8 El. & Bl. 541; 27 L. J., Q. B. 124; 3 Jur., N. S. 1302.

But it is not sufficient to describe as gentleman a witness who, though formerly an attorney, was at the time of the attestation acting as an attorney's clerk. Tuton v. Sanoner, 3 H. & N. 280; 27 L. J., Ex. 293; 4 Jur., N. S. 365.

Where the occupation of a party to or the witness of a bill of sale is not stated, the onus of proving that such party or witness has an occupation lies on the party seeking to impeach the bill of sale on that ground. Id.

An affidavit describing an attesting witness to the bill of sale, who was a clerk in a bank, as a "clerk" is a sufficient description of his occupation. Lamb v. Bruce, 45 L. J., Q. B. 538; 35 L. T. 425; 24 W. R. 645.

An attestation of the execution of a bill of sale purported to be by "Isac Simpson, clerk to F. L. L." The affidavit filed with it, commencing "I, Isaac Simpson, clerk to F. L. L., of," &c., stated that he was present, and saw the bill of sale executed, and was signed "Isac Simpson:—"—Held, that, by reasonable inference, the attesting witness to the execution of the bill of sale and the deponent were the same person, and therefore the affidavit contained a description of the residence and occupation of the attesting witness. Routh v. Roublot or Boutell, 1 El. & El. 850; 28 L. J., Q. B. 240; 5 Jur., N. S. 548; 7 W. R. 444.

A description of a clerk to an attorney as a gentleman is an insufficient description of an attesting witness. Dryden v. Hope, 3 L. T. 230; 9 W. R. 18.

And "P. M., of the City of Cork, law clerk," is insufficient. The residence of the witness must be described in such a manner as that a stranger may thereby be enabled to discover it with reasonable certainty. Hams, In re, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 100.

The affidavit filed with a bill of sale must give, either directly or by reference to the bill of sale, a description of the residence and occupation of the attesting witness at the time of his attesting a bill of sale. Brodrick v. Scalé, 6 L. R., C. P. 98; 40 L. J., C. P. 130; 23 L. T. 864; 19 W. R. 386.

Therefore, where the witness was described in the attestation as "clerk to a solicitor," but in the affidavit he was described as being then "a gentleman," without any statement that the description of him in the attestation to the bill of sale was true:—Held, that the statute had not been complied with. Id.

"Law clerk, Carlrow, in the county of Carlrow," is a sufficient description of an attesting witness to a bill of sale. McCue v. James, 19 W. R. 158.

"Insurance clerk" is a sufficient description of the occupation of an attesting witness. Grant v. Shaw, 7 L. R., Q. B. 700; 41 L. J., Q. B. 305; 27 L. T. 602.

An insufficient description of an attesting witness to a bill of sale contained in his affidavit registered therewith may be cured by reference to a sufficient description of him in the attestation clause of the bill of sale. Mackenzie, Es parte, Bent, In re, 42 L. J., Bk. 25; 28 L. T. 486.

In an affidavit filed with a bill of sale, the attesting witness, William Knight Moston, stated, "I reside at Hanley, in the county of Stafford, and am an accountant." Moston was clerk to a Mr. Hayes, an accountant, who lived at Manchester, and Moston managed the business for him at Hanley, Moston being allowed by Hayes occasionally to do accountant's business on his own account; the name of Hayes and not Moston was over the door of the place of business. The parliamentary borough of Hanley contains a population of 40,000 persons. Hundreds of letters reached Moston by the post with the address of Hanley only:—Held, that the affidavit contained a sufficient description of the residence and occupation of the attesting witness. Briggs v. Boss, 3 L. R., Q. B. 268; 37 L. J., Q. B. 101; 17 L. T. 599; 16 W. R. 480.

— "Gentleman."—An attesting witness to a bill of sale was described in the affidavit as "gentleman." He had been a proctor's managing clerk, but had ceased to be for six years. Since that time he had lived on an allowance from his mother, and had, on a few occasions, collected debts and written letters for other persons, and had drawn four bills of sale, but he had no regular occupation:—Held, that the description "gentleman" was sufficient. Smith v. Cheese, 1 C. P. D. 60; 45 L. J., C. P. 156; 33 L. T. 670; 24 W. R. 368.

A description of a clerk in a government office as a gentleman is not a compliance with 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, which requires every bill of sale, and a description of the occupation of the person giving the same, to be filed. Allen v. Thompson, 1 H. & N. 15; 25 L. J., Ex. 249; 2 Jur., N. S. 451.

Esquire.—A person was described in an affidavit as an esquire. Upon objection taken it was proved that he was a miller and a farmer, but it was not disproved that he was an esquire:—Held, that the affidavit was sufficient. Doughty, In re, 18 L. T., 188; 2 Ir. R., Eq. 235.

The lessee and manager of a theatre described himself, in a bill of sale, as an esquire. At the time of giving it he was not in any acting capacity, although he did occasionally appear on the stage:—Held, that the description was insufficient under the Bills of Sale Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. Vining, In re, 18 W. R. 450.

— Of no Occupation.—A bill of sale, and affidavit annexed, described the attesting witness as "W. J. Miller, 21, Remington-street, Islington, in the county of Middlesex, now in no occupation." The witness had been in the militia, but at the time of the execution of the bill of sale had no occupation:—Held, a sufficient description of the witness. Trousdale v. Sheppard, 14 Ir. C. L. R. 370.

Where the attesting witness to a bill of sale is a person having no occupation, and in his affidavit of the due execution of the bill of sale as required by the Act of 1854 has omitted so to state in describing himself, the court will not declare the bill of sale to be void upon the ground that it has not been properly registered. Young, Ex parte, Symonds, In re, 42 L. T. 744; 28 W. R. 924.

Sworn before Solicitor of both Parties.—An affidavit filed with a bill of sale is good, though sworn before a solicitor acting for grantor and grantee of the bill. Vernon v. Cooke, 49 L. J., C. P. 767—C. A.

iii. Description of Grantor.

What Sufficient.—The object of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, is to give the assignee and creditor a true idea of the position in life of the assignor; and, therefore, a misdescription, or absence of a true description, in regard to his occupation, is substantial, and invalidates the transaction. Allen v. Thompson, 1 H. & N. 15; 25 L. J., Ex. 249; 2 Jur., N. S. 451.

A bill of sale purported to be given by A. B., of a certain place, "gentleman," and in respect of the furniture of his house there. The assignor carried on no business at that place, but was a clerk in the Audit Office:—Held, that "gentleman" was a misdescription of the party, which vitiated the bill of sale. Id.

It is not sufficient that the bill of sale, which is filed, itself contains a description of the residence and occupation of the grantor. Hatton v. English, 7 El. & Bl. 94; 26 L. J., Q. B. 161; 3 Jur., N. S. 294, 934, n.

In a bill of sale and affidavit of registration A. was described as a gentleman. He had been formerly a coal agent, but having been dismissed, he was at the time of the bill of sale out of employment:—Held, that there was no such misdescription as affected the validity of the bill of sale. Morewood v. South Yorkshire Railway and River Don Company, 3 H. & N. 798; 28 L. J., Ex. 114.

In an affidavit filed with a bill of sale under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 10, sub-s. 2, R., the grantor of the bill of sale, was described as "carrying on the business of a wine and spirit merchant, and dealer in provisions and general goods, at 4A, Dean-street, Liverpool, under the style of the London and Westminster Supply Association." At the time the bill of sale was granted, R., who formerly owned the business, was the manager, and received a salary:—Held, a misdescription. Cooper v. Davis, 48 L. T. 831; 31 W. R. 721.

A bill of sale and the affidavit filed on its registration described the grantors (who were father and son) by their true addresses, and added that they were mantle manufacturers carrying on business together under a specified firm. They had in fact formerly carried on the business of mantle manufacturers in partnership, but, at the time when the bill of sale was executed, the partnership had been dissolved, and the business was being carried on by the father alone, the son being in his employment as a clerk. The property comprised in the deed in fact belonged to the father alone, though both father and son joined in the assignment. The father alone filed a liquidation petition:—Held, that there was no misdescription of the grantors such as to affect the validity of the registration; (1) because the son not being a bankrupt, any misdescription of him was immaterial; (2) because, as to the father, the statement that he was carrying on business with the son was mere surplusage, and was not misleading. Popplewell, Ex parte, Storey, In re, 21 Ch. D. 73; 52 L. J., Ch. 39; 47 L. T. 274; 31 W. R. 35—C. A.

In the affidavit filed with a bill of sale, the deponent swore to the description of the grantor's residence and occupation "to the best of his belief :"—Held, that the use of these words did not affect the description, which was sufficient if its truth in fact was not impeached. Roe v. Bradshaw, 1 L. R., Ex. 106; 35 L. J., Ex. 71; 12 Jur., N. S. 29; 14 W. R. 284; 4 H. & C. 178.

When a Company.]—The name of a company giving a bill of sale as "The Glucose Sugar and Colouring Company," is a sufficient description of its trade or occupation to satisfy the statute. Shears v. Jacobs, 1 L. R., C. P. 513; 35 L. J., C. P. 241; 12 Jur., N. S. 785; 14 L. T. 286; 14 W. R. 609; 1 H. & R. 492.

If a company gives a bill of sale, it is unnecessary to mention in the affidavit filed pursuant to the statute its residence and occupation, and it is not requisite that the directors, who execute it as directors, and not as attesting witnesses, should add descriptions of their residences and occupations. Ib.

A bill of sale was executed under the common seal of a trading company. Opposite the seal were the names of two of the directors, who purported to sign as directors. The secretary, who was called as a witness, stated that "it was usual to affix the seal in the presence of the board, and for two directors to attest it :"—Held, that the directors so signing were not attesting witnesses within the meaning of the statute. Ib.

When a Corporation.]—To a bill of sale given by a corporation there was affixed the seal of the company, with the following written opposite to the seal :—"Seal of company affixed at a board meeting this 23rd day of June, 1865, in the presence of R. O., chairman; R. C., director. Countersigned, C. D., Sec. pro temp." There was a resolution of the directors, that the seal should be "affixed to documents only in the presence of two directors, and such affixing should be attested by their respective signatures :"—Held, that R. O. and R. C. signed not as attesting witnesses, but only as part of the execution of the bill of sale by the company, and that, therefore, their residence and occupation were not required to be stated in the affidavit for registering the bill of sale. Deffell v. White, 2 L. R., C. P. 144; 36 L. J., C. P. 25; 12 Jur., N. S. 902; 15 L. T. 211; 15 W. R. 68.

—"A. B. the younger."—There is nothing in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, which requires a son bearing the same name as his father, and being the grantor of a bill of sale, to describe himself as "A. B. the younger" in the bill of sale and affidavit. Foulger v. Taylor, 1 L. T. 57.

When "Gentleman" sufficient.]—In a registered bill of sale, T. was described as a gentleman. He had been clerk to a firm of attorneys which was dissolved, but at the time of giving the bill of sale, he was employed in making up the accounts, and sending out the bills of the firm :—Held, a misdescription, which vitiated the bill of sale. Beales v. Tennant, 29 L. J., Q. B. 188; 6 Jur., N. S. 628; 1 L. T. 295.

A medical student, who has only temporarily acted as a surgeon's assistant, may be described as a gentleman. Sutton v. Bath, 3 H. & N. 382; 1 F. & F. 152; 27 L. J., Ex. 388.

Where the occupation of a party to a bill of sale is not stated, the onus of proving that such party has an occupation lies on him who impeaches the validity of the bill of sale. Ib.

A grantor of a bill of sale at the time of the execution thereof was living apparently without occupation, but was in fact in the employ of a mercantile firm as a buyer of silk. He was described in the affidavit filed therewith as a gentleman :—Held, a misdescription, and that the bill of sale was therefore invalid. Adams v. Graham, 33 L. J., Q. B. 71; 10 Jur., N. S. 356; 9 L. T. 606; 12 W. R. 282.

An uncertificated bankrupt, following no occupation at the time of granting a bill of sale, may properly be described in the affidavit as a gentleman, although at the time of filing the affidavit he carries on the business of a commission agent. London and Westminster Loan Company v. Chase or Chace, 12 C. B., N. S. 730; 31 L. J., C. P. 314; 9 Jur., N. S. 412; 6 L. T. 781; 10 W. R. 698.

One who, up to and at the time of the execution of a bill of sale, has never been actually engaged in any trade or occupation, is properly described therein (or in the affidavit filed therewith) as a gentleman. Gray v. Jones, 14 C. B., N. S. 743.

Misdescription of Residence.]—A farmer, whose real name was Joseph Wood, but who had assumed the name of Joseph Albert Wood, and had become known to his creditors by that name, executed a bill of sale in which he was described as "Joseph Wood, of Lache Hall Farm, in the county of Chester, farmer." The same name and description were given in the affidavit filed on the registration of the bill of sale. Lache Hall Farm was situate a short distance outside Chester, but was really within the county of the city of Chester, not in the county of Chester. It did not appear that there was any other farm of the same name in the county of Chester :—Held, by the chief judge and by the Court of Appeal, that the registration was valid. M'Hattie, Ex parte, Wood, In re, 10 Ch. D. 398; 48 L. J., Bk. 26; 39 L. T. 373; 27 W. R. 327—C. A.

The grantor of a bill of sale was therein correctly described as of "No. 37, Malpas Road, Deptford, in the county of Kent," and the attesting witness to such bill of sale was therein also correctly stated to be of "2, South Terrace, Hatcham Park Road, New Cross." In the affidavit, however, which was filed with a copy of the bill of sale, the residence of the grantor was described as "No. 73, Malpas Road, Deptford, in the county of Kent," and the residence of the attesting witness was described as "3, South Terrace, Hatcham Park Road, New Cross :"—Held, that there was not a true description of residence of the grantor, and attesting witness thereto, filed as required by the Bills of Sale Act, 1854. Murray v. Mackenzie, 10 L. R., C. P. 625; 44 L. J., C. P. 313; 32 L. T. 777; 23 W. R. 595.

In a bill of sale and affidavit filed, the grantors, G. and H., were described as residing at New-street, Blackfriars, in the county of Middlesex, and as printers and co-partners. G., residing at Wellington Place, Stoke Newington, in the county of Middlesex, and H., residing at Palsgrave Place, Temple Bar, in the county of Middlesex, carried on their business of printers at New Street, Blackfriars, in the city of London :—Held, that the description of residence contained in the bill of sale and affidavit was sufficient, inasmuch as creditors could not be misled by it. Heuer v. Cox, 30 L. J., Q. B. 73; 6 Jur., N. S. 1339; 3 L. T. 508; 9 W. R. 143.

Change of Occupation between Execution and Registration.]—The description of the residence and occupation of a person making or giving a bill of sale, to be contained in the affidavit filed with the bill of sale, must be that which fits the party at the time of giving the security, and not at the time of filing it. London and Westminster Loan Company v. Chase or Chace, 12 C. B., N. S. 730; 31 L. J., C. P. 314; 9 Jur., N. S. 412; 6 L. T. 781; 10 W. R. 698.

Change of Residence between Execution and Registration.]—The "description of the residence" of the maker of a bill of sale, required by the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, s. 1, to be stated in the affidavit filed therewith, must be his residence at the time of swearing the affidavit and not of executing the bill of sale. Button v. O'Neill, 4 C. P. D. 354; 48 L. J., C. P. 368; 40 L. T. 799; 27 W. R. 592—C. A.

By Reference to Bill of Sale.]—The description of the residence of the grantor of a bill of sale, required to be stated in the affidavit for registration, will not be held incorrect so as to invalidate the registration upon the ground that the grantor was therein described in the same manner as in the bill of sale, notwithstanding that at the time of the filing of such affidavit, the person making it was aware that the grantor had in fact absconded. Kaken, Ex parte, Heuer, In re, 21 Ch. D. 871; 51 L. J., Ch. 904; 46 L. T. 856; 30 W. R. 954.

In an affidavit filed with a copy of a bill of sale, the deponent stated "that the paper writing annexed is a true copy of a bill of sale made by Isaac Anthony," and "that Isaac Anthony resides at Dynevor Lodge, and is an auctioneer." By the copy of the bill of sale annexed to the affidavit, Isaac Anthony was described as "of Dynevor Lodge, in the parish of Llanarthney, in the county of Carmarthen, auctioneer," which was the true residence.—Held, that the description in the affidavit of the residence of the person making the bill of sale was not sufficient, but that the copy of the bill of sale in which the situation of the residence was stated with particularity enough to guide any inquiry as to the identity of the individual, might be referred to, in order to explain and supplement the description given by the affidavit; and that, therefore, the provisions of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, were satisfied. Jones v. Harris, 7 L. R., Q. B. 157; 41 L. J., Q. B. 6; 25 L. T. 702; 20 W. R. 143.

A bill of sale described the grantor as "I. B., of No. 9, George Street, Minories, in the City of London, hotel keeper." The affidavit annexed to the bill of sale described him as "the said I. B., of No. 9, George Street, Minories, in the said City of London, in the said bill of sale mentioned."—Held, that there was no sufficient description of the occupation of the grantor of the bill of sale. Pickard v. Bretz, 5 H. & N. 9; 29 L. J., Ex. 18; 5 Jur., N. S. 1134; 1 L. T. 45.

An affidavit filed with a bill of sale, and stating it to have been made between the parties residing at the places, and of the occupations therein mentioned, is sufficient. Foulger or Foulgar v. Taylor, 5 H. & N. 202; 29 L. J., Ex. 154; 1 L. T. 57.

Widow.]—The "occupation" of the person making or giving a bill of sale, within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, means the ordinary business or calling in life of such person, by reference to which he may be identified. Luckin v. Hamlyn, 21 L. T. 366; 18 W. R. 43.

Therefore, a woman who, at the time of giving a bill of sale, carried on a farm, which belonged to her deceased husband, merely as his executrix and not with a view to taking permanently to it, and has no other occupation, need not be described as a farmer in the affidavit; but is sufficiently described as a widow. Id.

E. W. was described in a bill of sale as of "W. S. Street, N. S., in the county of N., a widow, about to remove to E. U. Hotel, N. S., aforesaid." She had carried on the business of a licensed victualler for several years until about a month previously, when she removed to the above address, which was a private house.—Held, that the description of widow was sufficient and not likely to mislead, and that the latter part of the description was unnecessary, as shewing an intention only to take the hotel which might not be carried into effect. Wolfe or Chapman, Ex parte, Davey, In re, 44 L. T. 321. Affirmed, 45 L. T. 268—C. A.

Lessee of Theatre.]—The lessee and manager of a theatre, who occasionally acted there himself though not under any acting engagement, was described in a bill of sale, and in the affidavit filed at the registry, by his full names, his private dwelling-house, and as "esquire":—Held, that his occupation was not described so as to satisfy the statute. Homann, Ex parte, Vining, In re, 10 L. R., Ex. 63; 39 L. J., Bk. 4; 22 L. T. 179; 18 W. R. 450.

Government Clerk.]—In an affidavit of the execution of a bill of sale the maker was described as "government clerk;" he was a clerk in the Admiralty.—Held, that the description was sufficient. Grant v. Shaw, 7 L. R., Q. B. 700; 41 L. J., Q. B. 305; 27 L. T. 602.

Circus Proprietor.]—The proprietor of a travelling circus, which was then at Southampton, granted a bill of sale upon his circus property, in which he was described as "T. B., of No. 9, Ponton Terrace, Nine Elms, in the county of Surrey, but now carrying on business at Bar Street, in the town and county of the town of Southampton, and lodging at No. 3, Weymouth Terrace, in the said town of Southampton, circus proprietor." And in the affidavit it was stated that "T. B. at present resides at 3, Weymouth Terrace, and carries on business at Bar Street, in the town of Southampton, and has a permanent residence at 3, Ponton Terrace, Nine Elms, in the county of Surrey." He had not resided at Ponton Terrace for six years, but was the owner of the house, and lent it to his brother-in-law.—Held, that it was a sufficient and proper description. Cooper v. Ibberson; Cooper v. Warnlow, 44 L. T. 309; 29 W. R. 566.

Shipbroker.]—Describing a shipbroker as a broker is sufficient. Gugen v. Sampson, 4 F. & F. 974.

"Until lately, &c."]—The affidavit filed with a registered bill of sale stated that the grantor "was until lately" a commercial traveller. It appeared that the grantor was a commercial traveller at the date of the execution of the bill of sale:—Held, that the description of his occupation was insufficient to satisfy the provisions of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, s. 1. Castle v. Downton, 5 C. P. D. 56; 49 L. J., C. P. 6; 41 L. T. 528; 28 W. R. 257.

Accountant.—The grantor of a bill of sale was described in the affidavit filed under the Bills of Sale Act as an "accountant." He was, in fact, a clerk in the accountant's department at the Euston Square station of the London and North Western Railway Company, but in his leisure time was occasionally employed to balance tradesmen's books:—Held, an insufficient description. Larchin v. North Western Deposit Bank, 10 L. R., Ex. 64; 44 L. J., Ex. 71; 33 L. T. 124; 23 W. R. 325—Ex. Ch.

Variation in Christian-name.—A variation between one of the christian-names of the grantor of a bill of sale in the bill itself and in the accompanying affidavit, which cannot mislead, is immaterial. Orbrett v. Roue, 25 W. R. 59.

Part of Occupation only Set out.—W. carried on business as a foreman tailor's cutter, and his wife kept a school and took in boarders at the house in which she and her husband lived. He borrowed 50*l.* upon the furniture in the house, to secure which he executed a bill of sale wherein he was described as a foreman tailor's cutter, no mention being made of the school:—Held, that the description was sufficient, and the registration valid. National Deposit Bank, Ex parte, Willis, In re, 26 W. R. 624—C. A. Reversing 38 L. T. 264; 26 W. R. 375.

A statement in the affidavit that the grantor resides at 18, St. Andrew's Place, Bradford, in the county of York, and is a stone merchant and quarry owner:—Held, to be sufficient, although he carried on business as lessee of stone quarries at two other places. Knightley, Ex parte, Moulson, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 823; 46 L. T. 776; 30 W. R. 844.

iv. Description of Grantee.

Clerical Error.—In a bill of sale given to Gardnor, such name was correctly spelt; but in the copy which was filed it was erroneously spelt as Gardner:—Held, that the error being merely clerical, and not calculated to mislead, it was immaterial, and did not vitiate the bill of sale. Gardnor v. Shaw, 24 L. T. 319; 19 W. R. 763.

Residence of—Affidavit on Re-registration.—Under s. 11 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, when a bill of sale is re-registered the affidavit must set forth the names and addresses of the parties as in the bill of sale stated, though such description may be erroneous. In a bill of sale the grantee was described as "of London Road, Baldock, in the county of Hereford," her real address being London Road, Baldock, in the county of Hertford. Upon re-registration the affidavit gave her right address and not that given in the bill of sale:—Held, that the affidavit did not comply with the directions of the act, and that the bill of sale was void accordingly. Webster, Ex parte, Morris, In re, 22 Ch. D. 136; 52 L. J., Ch. 375; 48 L. T. 295; 31 W. R. 111—C. A.

To "B." and "C." carrying on Business as a Company.—A. made a bill of sale to B. and C., and described them as "The City Investment and Advance Company:—Held, that the conveyance of the goods to "The City Investment and Advance Company" enured as a conveyance to B. and C. so soon as it was ascertained that they were the persons who carried on business under that name. Maughan v. Sharpe, 17 C. B., N. S. 443; 34 L. J., C. P. 19; 10 Jur., N. S. 989; 10 L. T. 870; 12 W. R. 1057.

b. Statement of Consideration.

What Necessary and Sufficient.—Sect. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, requires that the consideration for a bill of sale should be truly stated in it, as it would properly have been stated independently of the act. But it does not require that a collateral agreement between the grantor and grantee as to the application of the consideration should be set forth. Carter, Ex parte (12 Ch. D. 908), questioned. National Mercantile Bank, Ex parte, Haynes, In re, 15 Ch. D. 42; 49 L. J., Bk. 62; 43 L. T. 36; 28 W. R. 848; 44 J. P. 780—C. A. Reversing 42 L. T. 64; 28 W. R. 399.

The consideration for a bill of sale was stated to be "the sum of 182*l.* 3*s.* now paid by the grantee to the grantor." That sum was, at the request and with the assent of the grantor, in fact paid thus,—8*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* and 103*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* to discharge two executions against the grantor's goods—25*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.* to a solicitor (who attested the execution of the bill of sale) for money lent and for costs due to him from the grantor,—and the balance 45*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.*, in cash to the grantor:—Held, in the absence of any suggestion of fraud, a sufficient setting forth of the consideration within 41 & 42 Vict. c. 31, s. 8. Hamlyn v. Betteley, 5 C. P. D. 327; 49 L. J., C. P. 465; 42 L. T. 373; 28 W. R. 956; 44 J. P. 411.

In a bill of sale, dated the 24th October, 1879, the consideration was stated to be 560*l.* that day paid by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, whereas in fact only 500*l.* were paid by the mortgagee to the mortgagor. Of the remaining 60*l.*, 20*l.* were paid to an auctioneer for valuation of the debtor's effects, and 40*l.* were retained by the mortgagee in respect of the costs of the bill of sale and other professional charges:—Held, that the consideration was truly set forth within the meaning of the 8th section of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and that the bill of sale was therefore good, as against the trustee in liquidation. Challinor, Ex parte, Rogers, In re, 16 Ch. D. 260; 44 L. T. 122; 29 W. R. 305—C. A.

The "consideration" mentioned by s. 8 is that which the grantor receives for giving the bill of sale, not necessarily the amount secured by it. Id.

A bill of sale, dated the 10th of January, 1879, recited that in the month of June preceding, the mortgagor applied to the mortgagee for a loan of 340*l.*, which the mortgaggee consented to make on the mortgagor agreeing to execute a bill of sale, when called upon to do so, of certain chattels; and that in the month of July following, the mortgagor applied for a further loan of 60*l.*, which the mortgagee agreed to make, on the condition that the advance should be secured in like manner. The facts were, that a sum of 73*l.* on the 3rd of March, 1878, another sum of 60*l.* on the 6th or 7th of April, 1878, and a third sum of 107*l.* on the 26th or 27th of April, 1878, were severally advanced by the mortgagee to a partnership firm, consisting of the mortgagor and another person. On the 8th of June, 1878, the partnership was dissolved, the mortgagor, taking over the assets, and undertaking in an informal way to indemnify his late co-partner against the debts of the partnership, of which the above 240*l.* remained one. On the 14th of June, 1878, the mortgagee advanced 100*l.*, and on the 16th of July he advanced the remaining 60*l.* to the mortgagor alone:—Held, that the consideration for which the bill of sale was given was not “set forth” therein sufficiently to satisfy the requirement of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878; and that the bill of sale was void. Carter, Ex parte, Threapleton, In re, 12 Ch. D. 908; 41 L. T. 37; 27 W. R. 943.

Small Inaccuracy, does not Avoid.—A small inaccuracy in the statement of consideration is not sufficient to avoid a bill of sale. Winter, Ex parte, Fothergill, In re, 44 L. T. 323; 29 W. R. 575—C. A.

A Promise to give Bill of Sale.—A sum of money advanced upon the faith of a promise that a bill of sale should be given, will be treated as an advance made on the execution of the bill of sale. But the promise must be a bona fide binding one, and the postponement of the execution of the bill of sale must also be bona fide, and not with any view to protect the credit of the borrower or other collateral object. Fisher, Ex parte, Ash, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 636; 41 L. J., Bk. 62; 26 L. T. 931; 20 W. R. 849.

On Easy Terms.—A money-lender advertised loans on easy terms. A clergyman, sixty-nine years of age, and in needy circumstances, seeing the advertisement, borrowed 100*l.* of him, for which he took a bill of sale of the borrower's furniture, and this bill of sale contained provisions in case of non-payment on specified days, which, if carried out, would bring the interest up to 39 per cent. per annum:—Held, that the terms were not easy and did not comply with the advertisement. Helsham v. Barnett, 21 W. R. 309.

Knowingly Misstated.—An insertion in a bill of sale knowingly of a wrong sum does not necessarily invalidate the security as against creditors, if done without fraud, and with the intention of making the security available only to the extent of the sum actually due. Biddulph v. Gould, 11 W. R. 882.

Forged Bill of Exchange.—M. being already indebted to B., wrote telling him he had forged his signature to a bill of exchange for 100*l.*, and entreating B. to take up the bill to save him from prosecution and ruin, and offering, if B.

would do so, to give a bill of sale of all his property to secure the amount of the existing debt and the further advance. B. advanced the money and took the bill of sale. Shortly afterwards he took possession under it and sold the goods, and subsequently M. was adjudicated bankrupt, the execution of the assignment being the alleged act of bankruptcy. On an application by the trustee to recover the proceeds of the sale:—Held, that assuming the transaction between B. and M. was illegal, yet as B. had obtained possession of the property, M., being in pari delicto, could not, if he had remained solvent, have recovered it back, and that, there having been no offence against the bankruptcy laws, the trustee in bankruptcy stood in no better position. Butt, Ex parte, Mapleback, In re, 4 Ch. D. 160; 46 L. J., Bk. 14; 35 L. T. 503; 25 W. R. 103; 13 Cox, C. C. 374—C. A.

Semble, that the transaction did not amount to compounding a felony, or to misprision of felony. Id.

Deduction for Commission on Loan and Costs of preparing Bill of Sale.—At the execution of a bill of sale expressed to be “in consideration of 700*l.* now in hand paid,” and which the grantor covenanted to repay with interest thereon at the rate of 12*l.* 10*s.* per cent. per annum, the grantee, having previously paid 271*l.* for the grantor, handed to her his cheque for 429*l.*, which was immediately cashed, and the proceeds were thus applied: 350*l.* was paid by her directions to a creditor, 21*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* was paid to a solicitor as costs for preparing the bill of sale, 7*l.* 10*s.* was paid to or retained by the grantee for commission on the loan and expenses in connexion therewith in pursuance of a previous arrangement to that effect between the grantor and grantee, and the grantor further gave to the grantee her promissory note for 10*l.* also in respect of commission on the loan and expenses connected therewith. The balance, 50*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, was paid to her:—Held, that the consideration was not truly stated, and the bill of sale was void as against an execution creditor of the grantor. Hamilton v. Chaine, 7 Q. B. D. 319; 50 L. J., Q. B. 466; 44 L. T. 764; 29 W. R. 676—C. A. Affirming 7 Q. B. D. 1; 44 L. T. 555; 29 W. R. 488.

Rate of Interest.—A bill of sale was given by way of security for the payment of 100*l.*, being the amount advanced, and the sum of 76*l.*, being the interest agreed to be paid for the advance; and the mortgagors agreed to pay to the mortgagee the principal sum, together with the agreed interest thereon, by sixteen equal consecutive quarterly instalments of 11*l.* each. The bill of sale authorized the mortgagees, in events within the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, to enter into the mortgagor's premises, and take possession and sell the chattels comprised in the security, and out of the proceeds pay themselves the principal and interest secured, or so much as should be unpaid, with costs. The mortgagees having entered and taken possession:—Held, upon motion for an injunction by the mortgagors against the mortgagees, that for the purpose of the motion the bill of sale must be held to be valid within the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, s. 9, and that it was not necessary to state specifically in the bill of sale the actual rate of interest secured. Wilson v. Kirkwood, 48 L. T. 821.

Sum paid "immediately before Execution of these Presents"—No Money paid.—A mortgage of a leasehold brewery and some chattels was stated to be made in consideration of 2,000*l.* paid by the grantee to the grantor "immediately before the execution of these presents." No money was in fact paid by the grantee to the grantor, but the 2,000*l.* was the balance due by the grantor to the grantee in respect of the purchase-money of the brewery, which had been assigned by the grantee to the grantor, in consideration of 2,500*l.* by deed executed immediately before the mortgage. Of this sum only 500*l.* was paid by the grantor, it being agreed that the balance of 2,000*l.* should be secured by the mortgage:—Held, that the consideration was truly stated in the mortgage deed, so as to satisfy s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. Bolland, Ex parte, Roper, In re, 21 Ch. D. 543; 52 L. J., Ch. 113; 47 L. T. 488; 31 W. R. 102—C. A.

Payment at or before Execution of Bill of Sale.

—A bill of sale of chattels, dated the 23rd March, was expressed to be made "in consideration of 50*l.* by the assignee paid to the assignor at or before the execution hereof." In fact only 21*l.* 10*s.* was paid to the assignor on the execution of the deed, 3*l.* 10*s.* being retained by the assignee for the expenses of the deed, and 25*l.* being also retained and paid by him on the 30th March to the landlord of the assignor's house, in which the chattels comprised in the deed were, for two quarters' rent, for the quarters ending respectively the 25th March and the 24th June. The rent of the house was payable quarterly, but there was nothing to shew that it was payable in advance. The 3*l.* 10*s.* and the 25*l.* were retained upon the written request of the assignor, dated the day of the execution of the deed. On the 25th April the assignor filed a liquidation petition, and the trustee in the liquidation claimed the goods, on the ground that the consideration for the deed had not been stated in it in compliance with s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878:—Held, that the consideration was not truly stated in the deed, and that it was, therefore, void as against the trustee—1. Because the 25*l.* was not paid to the assignor, but only agreed to be paid on his behalf; 2. Because, even if the 25*l.* were taken to have been paid to the assignor, it was not paid "at or before the execution" of the deed. National Mercantile Bank, Ex parte, (15 Ch. D. 42), and Challinor, Ex parte (16 Ch. D. 260), explained. Rolph, Ex parte, Spindler, In re, 19 Ch. D. 98; 51 L. J., Ch. 88; 45 L. T. 482; 30 W. R. 52; 46 J. P. 181—C. A.

Deduction of Expenses.—If the amount of the expenses incident to the preparation of a bill of sale, given by way of mortgage, is deducted from the sum stated in it as the consideration, and the balance only is actually paid by the lender to the borrower, the consideration is not truly stated so as to satisfy s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. National Mercantile Bank, Ex parte (15 Ch. D. 42), and Challinor, Ex parte (16 Ch. D. 260), must be treated as binding authorities only in so far as they decide that, if part of the sum stated in a bill of sale as the consideration is, by the grantor's direction, given at the time of the execution of the deed, applied in satisfying a then-existing debt due by him, the money so applied may be properly stated in the deed to be money then paid to him. Firth, Ex parte, Couburn, In re, 19 Ch. D. 419; 51 L. J., Ch. 473; 45 L. T. 120; 30 W. R. 529—C. A.

Agreement not to Register—Payment of increased Bonus.—A bill of sale was expressed to be made in consideration of 242*l.* advanced by the grantee to the grantors, and the grantors agreed to repay the advance, together with a sum of 100*l.* by way of interest and bonus, in certain instalments. There was a verbal agreement by the grantee not to register the bill of sale, in consequence of which he charged a larger bonus for the advance than he would otherwise have done:—Held, that the agreement not to register was a mere collateral agreement, and not part of the consideration for the bill of sale, and that, therefore, it was unnecessary to state it in the deed. Popplewell, Ex parte, Storey, In re, 21 Ch. D. 73; 52 L. J., Ch. 39; 47 L. T. 274; 31 W. R. 35—C. A.

Held, also, that the agreement was not a "defalcance or condition" to which the deed was subject within the meaning of s. 10 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. Id.

Loan of 70*l.*—Deduction of Interest from Loan.

—A bill of sale, after reciting that the mortgagor had applied to the mortgagees to advance him the sum of 70*l.*, less 16*l.* the agreed interest and expenses, to be deducted and retained as thereinafter expressed, witnessed that, in consideration of 54*l.*, being the said sum of 70*l.* less the said sum of 16*l.* deducted and obtained therefrom, and being the agreed interest and expenses in consideration of which the loan was granted, and which said sums of 54*l.* and 16*l.* conjointly were (thereinafter called the loan) by the mortgagees paid to the mortgagor at or before the execution thereof, the receipt whereof the mortgagor thereby acknowledged, &c. It was proved or admitted that 54*l.* only had been paid by the mortgagees to the mortgagor at the execution of the bill of sale:—Held, that the consideration was truly set forth within the meaning of s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. Collis v. Tawn, 46 L. T. 387.

Retention of Part to pay Costs of Solicitor and Auctioneer.—A bill of sale is not vitiated under s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, because a part of the sum stated in it as the consideration is retained by the grantee to pay the solicitor's costs of preparing the deed and a further agreed sum for costs previously incurred, and the fee of an auctioneer for valuing the property with a view to the making of the loan. Charing Cross Advance and Deposit Bank, Ex parte (infra), distinguished. Challinor, Ex parte, Rogers, In re, 16 Ch. D. 260; 44 L. T. 122; 29 W. R. 205—C. A.

Recitals omitting Part of Sum advanced.—A bill of sale was given to secure, not only a present advance, but also the amount for the time being due to the grantee upon a mortgage including future advances which had been previously given to him by the grantor. The recitals in the bill of sale in stating the amount then due on the mortgage omitted a sum which had been advanced on a bill then current:—Held, that this misstatement formed no objection under s. 8 to the validity of the bill of sale. Ib.

Statement of Consideration not made Valid by Receipt.—In the operative part of a bill of sale it was expressed to be made in consideration of 120*l.* advanced upon its execution by the grantee to the grantor. In fact, only 90*l.* was paid to the grantor; 30*l.* being retained by the grantee for "interest and expenses." The execution of the deed was attested by a solicitor, and the attestation clause stated that before its execution the effect of the deed was explained by him to the grantor. At the foot of the deed, immediately after the attestation clause, there was a receipt, signed by the grantor, which stated that the 90*l.*, "together with the agreed sum of 30*l.* for interest and expenses," made "the sum of 120*l.*, the consideration-money within expressed to be paid."—Held, that the receipt was not part of the deed; and that the deed did not set forth the consideration for it, and was therefore made, by s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, void as against the trustee in the liquidation of the grantor. National Mercantile Bank, Ex parte (15 Ch. D. 42), distinguished. Charing Cross Advance and Deposit Bank, Ex parte, Parker, In re, 16 Ch. D. 35; 50 L. J., Ch. 157; 44 L. T. 113; 29 W. R. 204—C. A.

Motive of Advance immaterial.—"To prevent Institution of Proceedings."—A bill of sale, dated the 17th January, 1880, recited that the mortgagor was indebted to the mortgagee in the sum of 1,44*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, and that the mortgagor had agreed to execute the mortgage deed in order to induce the mortgagee not to institute proceedings against him. The facts as to the debt were, that, on the 13th January, 1880, the mortgagee drew a cheque for 1,44*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, and gave it to the mortgagor, but that, upon hearing rumours about the mortgagor, payment of the cheque was stopped at the bank. On the 16th January the stop was withdrawn by the mortgagee upon the distinct understanding that good security should be given, and the cheque was accordingly paid a few hours prior to the execution of the bill of sale. No proceedings had been threatened by the mortgagee.—Held, that the consideration was properly set forth within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. Ord or Winter, Ex parte, Fothergill, In re, 44 L. T. 323; 29 W. R. 575—C. A. Affirming 43 L. T. 637.

Sum "now paid," but really to Secure past Debt.—Where a bill of sale, given to secure a past debt contracted by instalments, states that the consideration is "now paid," the consideration is not truly set forth within s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. Berwick, Ex parte, Young, In re, 43 L. T. 576; 29 W. R. 292.

No Money passing at Time of Execution—Previous Advances.—A. being indebted to B. gave him a bill of sale to secure the sum of 7,350*l.*, which, on stating the accounts between them, was found to be the balance due, and by such bill of sale this sum was to be paid by A. with interest on demand in writing. The bill of sale recited that B. had agreed to lend A. 7,350*l.*, and the consideration for such bill of sale was stated therein to be 7,350*l.* then paid by B. to

A.—Held, that the bill of sale truly set forth the consideration for which it was given so as to satisfy s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, although no money in fact passed from B. to A. at the time the bill of sale was given. Credit Company v. Pott, 6 Q. B. D. 295; 50 L. J., Q. B. 106; 44 L. T. 506; 29 W. R. 326—C. A.

Previous Advance and Present Payment.—A bill of sale was expressed to be "in consideration of the payment of 81*l.* 18*s.* by the grantee to the grantor, and in further consideration of the payment of 16*l.* 3*s.* by the grantee to the sheriff of Surrey for and at the request of the grantor." The former sum was a past payment, and the latter sum was a present payment made in discharging an execution levied on the goods of the grantor.—Held, a sufficient setting forth of the consideration within s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. Carrard v. Meek, 50 L. J., Q. B. 187; 43 L. T. 760; 29 W. R. 244.

When possession of goods has been taken under a bill of sale, part of the consideration for which is money advanced, for the bona fide purpose of obtaining security for a pre-existing debt, the transaction is not invalid, though the creditor is aware, at the time of the advance, that the debtor has committed felony and intends to leave the country, and to apply a portion of the money advanced for that purpose. Bagot v. Arnott, 2 Ir. C. L. R. 1.

Delay in Payment of.—The registration of a bill of sale as of the day of its execution, is not invalidated by reason of the consideration-money not having been paid nor the deed attested until two days after the execution. Darrell v. Terry, 6 H. & N. 807; 30 L. J., Ex. 355.

c. Renewal of.

When Possible.—A bill of sale, void for want of renewal of registration at the commencement of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, cannot be renewed under s. 14 of that act. Askew v. Lewis or Lewis v. Driscoll, 10 Q. B. D. 477; 48 L. T. 534; 31 W. R. 567; 47 J. P. 312.

Effect of not Renewing.—On the 10th May, 1873, one S. Vaughan executed a bill of sale over certain of his goods and chattels in favour of Swire, the plaintiff in the action. Swire failed to renew the registration of the bill of sale within five years of the date of its original registration. The goods remained in the ostensible possession of the grantor. The bill of sale gave the grantee power to enter the grantor's house and seize and sell. On the 11th January, 1883, the plaintiff put in an execution in the house of S. Vaughan, and left a man in possession until the 19th January. On the 19th January the plaintiff agreed to sell, and did sell, the said goods and chattels to C. Vaughan, son of S. Vaughan, the original grantor, for 250*l.* S. Vaughan continued to live in the same house, and the said goods and chattels remained in his apparent possession and control. On the same day C. Vaughan executed a bill of sale of the said goods and chattels to the plaintiff Swire for the sum of 250*l.* The defendant in the action issued his writ on the 11th January, 1883, against S. Vaughan for the amount of goods sold and delivered; judgment was signed against S.

Vaughan under Ord. XIV. r. 1, for the amount claimed. The fi. fa. was issued on the 26th January, and executed in the dwelling-house of S. Vaughan. The defendant was met with the claim of Swire that the goods and chattels assigned by the bill of sale of the 19th January, 1883, were his. An interpleader issue was ordered to be tried between them. At the trial the jury found for the plaintiff. The points of law were reserved by the judge for further consideration. It was contended, on behalf of the defendant (1) that the bill of sale of May, 1873, was within the operation of ss. 3 and 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, and void as against the grantor; (2) that as the goods seized by the execution creditor were in the apparent possession of the execution debtor, the bill of sale of January, 1883 (purporting to assign them to the plaintiff), was, under s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, void as against him, and that the plaintiff must rely on the bill of sale of 1873, which was also void (for want of renewal of registration) as against the execution creditor; and that therefore C. Vaughan acquired no title or interest in the goods by his purchase from Swire, and consequently passed none by his bill of sale of 11th January, 1883, to the plaintiff:—Held, that the operation of ss. 3 and 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, was not retrospective, so as to render the bill of sale of May, 1873, void as against the execution creditor:—Held, further, that as the goods seized by the execution creditor were in the apparent possession of the execution debtor, the bill of sale of January, 1883 (purporting to assign them to the plaintiff) was void as against the execution creditor, and that the plaintiff could only rely on the bill of sale of 1873, which was also void as against the execution creditor for want of renewal of registration. The purchaser from the plaintiff under the first bill of sale acquired no title or interest in the goods by reason of his purchase, and consequently passed none by his bill of sale of them to the plaintiff. Swire v. Cookson, 48 L. T. 877.

After Assignment.]—The 29 & 30 Vict. c. 96, s. 4, which requires the registration of a bill of sale under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, to be renewed every five years, in default of which the registration ceases to have any effect, is equally imperative when the grantee, before the period for renewal, assigns his interest under the bill of sale to a third person; and the assignee, if the registration is not renewed, has no title as against an execution creditor. Karet v. Kosher Meat Supply Association, 2 Q. B. D. 361; 46 L. J., Q. B. 548; 36 L. T. 694; 25 W. R. 691.

Correctness of Dates.]—Affidavits, presented at the office of the master for obtaining a renewal of the registration of two bills of sale, stated the original registration to have been respectively “on or about the 6th April, 1858,” and “on the 31st day of July, 1861;” the former was registered on the 7th April, 1858, the latter on the 30th July, 1861. The officer refused to file the affidavits on the ground that they did not state the exact and correct dates:—Held, that the duty of the master was ministerial, and therefore the court ordered him to file the affidavits. Nedham, In re, 8 B. & S. 190; 15 L. T. 467; 15 W. R. 346.

d. Condition.

What is.]—A parol arrangement to repay by instalments a loan secured by a bill of sale is a condition within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, s. 2, and as such must be reduced into writing and appear on the registered copy of the bill of sale, otherwise the latter will be void against a trustee in bankruptcy. Southam, Ex parte, Southam, In re, 17 L. R., Eq. 578; 43 L. J., Bk. 39; 30 L. T. 132; 22 W. R. 456.

A bill of sale of chattels, with power to take immediate possession, was expressed to be made in consideration of an advance of 130*l.* to be repaid by certain instalments without interest, the whole to become payable on default in any instalment. In fact, the sum advanced was only 100*l.*, the mortgagee, who was a money lender, charging the 30*l.* by way of bonus and interest. A written memorandum was signed by the mortgagor, at the same time as the bill of sale, which stated that the 30*l.* was to be paid in full, notwithstanding that the money secured by the bill of sale might be repaid, or the mortgagee's rights under it enforced, before the expiration of the time limited for payment. The bill of sale was registered; the memorandum was not:—Held, that the memorandum was not a condition within the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, s. 2, and that its not being registered did not affect the validity of the bill of sale. Collins, Ex parte, Lees, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 367; 44 L. J., Bk. 78; 32 L. T. 106; 23 W. R. 862. Reversing 31 L. T. 622.

C., a money lender, advanced 150*l.* to B., a trader, to pay out an execution, and B. gave C. the following receipt, written at the foot of an inventory of his furniture:—“Received of C. 150*l.* for the absolute sale to him of the above-mentioned articles of furniture.” On the same day C. and B. executed a memorandum of agreement, whereby C. agreed to let and B. to hire the same furniture for two months for 170*l.*; and it was agreed that in default of payment or in the event of the bankruptcy of B., C. should be entitled to seize and sell the furniture; and that, if it should realize more than 170*l.* he should pay the surplus to B., but if less, that B. should make good the deficiency to him; and it was agreed that when the 170*l.* and expenses had been paid to C. by B., the furniture should become the property of B. Neither of these two documents was registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854. Default having been made in payment of the 170*l.* W., an auctioneer, paid the amount to C., and B. indorsed on the memorandum of agreement a receipt for the amount “for the absolute sale to W. of the whole of the goods herein specified.” and W. executed an agreement relating the furniture to B. upon terms similar to those of the agreement between C. and B. This agreement was not registered under the Bills of Sale Act. The furniture remained in the apparent possession of B. till after the commission of an act of bankruptcy, upon which he was adjudicated a bankrupt, and his trustee claimed the proceeds of the furniture which had been sold by W.:—Held, that the two documents executed on the occasion of the advance of the money by C. were one transaction, and together constituted a conditional bill of sale, which was void as against the trustee for want of registration; that the transaction with W. was a mere transfer to him of C.'s rights as mortgagee, and gave him no better title than C. had, and that the trustee was therefore entitled to the proceeds of sale. Odell, Ex parte, Walden, In re, 10 Ch. D. 76; 48 L. J., Bk. 1; 39 L. T. 333; 27 W. R. 274—C. A.

e. Effect of.

A. mortgaged furniture to B. with a power of sale on default, and after that mortgaged the furniture to C. by a second bill of sale. B. entered into possession of the goods on A.'s default in payment, and left his servant in possession. D., without notice of the second bill of sale, agreed with A. to purchase the goods, and B.'s servant delivered possession of them to D. D. then paid the balance due to B., and B. then delivered to D. his bill of sale, and gave him a receipt which purported to sell and assign the goods to D.:—Held, that D. had no title to the goods as against C. Cooper v. Braham, 15 L. T., 610.

In the Event of the Bankruptcy of the Grantor.—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, does not alter s. 125 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, as to the doctrine of reputed ownership. Badger v. Shaw, 2 El. & El. 472; 29 L. J., Q. B. 73; 6 Jur., N. S. 377; 1 L. T. 323; 9 W. R. 210.

Therefore, where goods assigned to the plaintiff by a registered bill of sale remained in the possession of a bankrupt with the consent of the plaintiff:—Held, that the goods were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, and that the plaintiff could not recover them from the assignees under the bankruptcy. Id.

A., a trader, on the 19th of April, 1856, executed to B. a bill of sale of furniture on the premises where he, A., carried on business, the consideration being stated as for goods sold, money lent, and money for which B. had become responsible for A. At the request of A. the bill of sale was not registered within the twenty-one days required by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36; but on the expiration of that time another bill of sale of the same furniture was executed in similar terms, and was not registered. A third, a fourth, and a fifth bill of sale were in the same manner executed, and not registered; and ultimately a sixth was executed on the 5th of August, 1856, and was registered within the prescribed time, but not any of the other bills of sale were cancelled. A. was adjudicated bankrupt in December, 1856, the act of bankruptcy being committed in July previously by being denied to his creditors. Assignees were appointed, who filed a bill against B., praying an injunction to prevent him from removing the furniture, and a declaration that the bills of sale were fraudulent and void, and that they might be delivered up to be cancelled:—Held, that neither of the bills of sale, nor the registration of the last, constituted a dealing within the meaning of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 133, and that, notwithstanding the registration of the last bill of sale, the furniture remained in the order and disposition of the bankrupt. Stansfield v. Cubitt, 2 De G. & J. 222; 27 L. J., Ch. 266; 4 Jur., N. S. 395.

Abandonment after Registration.—A bill of sale duly registered, but afterwards abandoned, has no operation. Robertson v. Morley, 16 L. T. 7.

Registering Copies—Original Bill of Sale Lost.—The filing of a copy of a bill of sale of personal chattels is valid and effectual, although the original bill of sale has been previously altered or destroyed. The property in the chattels will remain in the person to whom they were conveyed by the deed on its execution. Green v. Attenborough, 3 H. & C. 468; 34 L. J., Ex. 88; 11 Jur., N. S. 141; 11 L. T. 513; 13 W. R. 185—Ex. Ch.

f. Non- or Defective Registration.

Rectification of Register—Statute.—By 41 & 42 Vict. c. 31, s. 14, any judge of the High Court of Justice on being satisfied that the omission to register a bill of sale or an affidavit of renewal thereof within the time prescribed by this act, or the omission or mis-statement of the name, residence, or occupation of any person, was accidental or due to inadvertence, may in his discretion order such omission or mis-statement to be rectified by the insertion in the register of the true name, residence, or occupation, or by extending the time for such registration on such terms and conditions (if any) as to security, notice by advertisement, or otherwise, or as to any other matter, as he thinks fit to direct.

The Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction to rectify the register under s. 14 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. Webster, Ex parte, Morris, In re, 22 Ch. D. 136; 62 L. J., Ch. 375; 48 L. T. 295; 31 W. R. 111—C. A.

Unregistered Bill of Sale.—The Bills of Sale Act, 1882, s. 8, which makes a bill of sale void unless it is registered within seven clear days after execution, does not avoid an unregistered bill of sale which was executed more than seven clear days before the act came into operation. Hickson v. Darlow, 23 Ch. D. 690; 48 L. T. 449; 31 W. R. 417—C. A. Affirming 52 L. J., Ch. 453; 31 W. R. 361.

Want of registration of a bill of sale does not nullify it, if the goods were in the actual possession of the assignee at the time of the execution. Minister v. Price, 1 F. & F. 686.

The statute only renders bills of sale void for defect of registration, not as between the parties, but as against creditors. Hills v. Shepherd, 1 F. & F. 191; S. P., Barker v. Aston, 1 F. & F. 192.

Effect on subsequent Bill of Sale—41 & 42 Vict. c. 31.—Sect. 9, by which a subsequent bill of sale executed within or on the expiration of seven days after the execution of a prior unregistered bill of sale is, under certain circumstances, void, does not affect a subsequent bill of sale executed after the expiration of that time. Carrard v. Meek, 50 L. J., Q. B. 187; 43 L. T. 760; 29 W. R. 244.

Seizure of Goods by unregistered Bill of Sale Holder—Rights of registered Bill of Sale Holder.—Chattels were assigned to the defendant by a bill of sale, which was not registered. The grantor subsequently gave another bill of sale comprising the chattels to the plaintiff, who registered it. The defendant afterwards took possession of the chattels under his bill of sale. In an action against him by the plaintiff for conversion:—Held, that the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 10, enacting that "in case two or more bills of sale are given, comprising in whole or in part any of the same chattels, they shall have priority in the order of the date of their registration respectively as regards such chattels," affected the priority of the unregistered bill of sale. Lyons v. Tucker, 7 Q. B. D. 523; 50 L. J., Q. B. 661; 45 L. T. 403—C. A. Reversing 6 Q. B. D. 660; 50 L. J., Q. B. 322; 44 L. T. 312.

The provision in s. 10 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, as to the priority of bills of sale, applies to all competing bills of sale in all cases in which registration is necessary. It is a provision independent of s. 8 of the act, and applies equally in such cases whether there has or has not been a bankruptcy or an execution, and whether there are or are not two or more registered bills of sale. Conelly v. Steer, 7 Q. B. D. 520; 50 L. J., Q. B. 326; 45 L. T. 402; 29 W. R. 529—C. A.

Estoppel of Grantee—By Notice of prior Unregistered Bill.—The fact that an execution creditor was, at the time when his debt was contracted, aware that his debtor had given a bill of sale of chattels, does not prevent his availing himself of the objection that it has not been registered. Edwards v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. 291; 45 L. J., Ch. 391; 34 L. T. 472; 24 W. R. 713—C. A.

Clerical Error in Copy filed.—A mere clerical error, consisting of the accidental omission of a few words, in the copy of a bill of sale carried into the Registration Office and filed pursuant to s. 10, sub-s. 2, of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, if it be clear from the context that no one could be deceived or misled thereby, will not prevent the copy being a "true copy" within the meaning of the act or vitiate the bill of sale. Kahn, Ex parte, Hever, In re, 21 Ch. D. 871; 51 L. J., Ch. 904; 46 L. T. 856; 30 W. R. 964.

Amendment after Registration.—A bill of sale, and copy filed, stated in the recital the sum for which it was given as being 100*l.*, but, by mistake, in the operative part of the instrument, the sum was described as 1,000*l.* In all other parts the sum was correctly described as 100*l.*—Held, that this was a clerical error which might be amended, and therefore did not invalidate the bill of sale. Elliott v. Freeman, 7 L. T. 715.

An affidavit of registration of a bill of sale, omitted to state the description and occupation of the grantor, and of each of the attesting witnesses. An application to have the bill of sale and the affidavit of registration taken off the file, for the purpose of having this omission rectified, refused; the proper course being to file a new bill of sale and affidavit of registration, with an indorsement thereon, and referring to the first bill of sale, and to the effect that each of the bills of sale is made for the same purpose, and relates to the same transaction; but that by reason of an irregularity in the affidavit of registration of the first bill of sale, it had become necessary to file the second bill of sale and affidavit of registration. O'Brien, In re, 10 Ir. C. L. R. App. xxxiii.

g. Proof of.

What is.—The certificate of registration of a bill of sale at the Queen's Bench office is no evidence that the affidavit of execution has been filed, as required by the Bills of Sale Act. Mason v. Wood, 1 C. P. D. 63; 45 L. J., C. P. 76; 33 L. T. 571; 24 W. R. 41.

Upon the trial of an interpleader issue, the plaintiff, in order to prove the due filing of a bill of sale, produced the bill of sale itself and the following certificate stamped with the seal of the Court of Queen's Bench—"Johnson and Mason. A document purporting to be a copy bill of sale, and dated the 8th day of April, 1875, indorsed with the above names, was registered at the judgment office of the Court of Queen's Bench on the 15th day of April, 1875 :"—Held, no evidence that an affidavit satisfying all the requirements of the statute had been filed with the bill of sale. Ib.

A certificate under the seal of the Queen's Bench Division, that an affidavit and copy bill of sale were filed as required by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, does not relieve the party relying upon such bill of sale from the necessity of producing the copy filed, so as to shew that it is in the same terms as that proved to have been executed. Emmott v. Marchant, 3 Q. B. D. 553; 38 L. T. 508; or Halkett v. Emmott, 47 L. J., Q. B. 436; 26 W. R. 632.

Seemle, that such certificate of the filing of an affidavit under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, is, without production of the affidavit itself, prima facie evidence that the affidavit was in the form required by the act. Ib.

An office copy of the registry is admissible as proof under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14. Sutton v. Bath, 1 F. & F. 152; 27 L. J., Ex. 388.

The book which the officer is required to keep, for the entering therein of an alphabetical list of all bills of sale filed, and the dates of the execution and filing thereof, is a book of a public nature, within 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, so that a certified copy of it is admissible in evidence. Grindell v. Brendon, 6 C. B., N. S., 698; 28 L. J., C. P. 333; 5 Jur., N. S. 1420; 33 L. T., O. S. 224; 7 W. R. 579.

11. PRIORITY.

Between Holders of Bills of Sale.—The holder of a prior bill of sale does not lose his priority by reason of the holder of a subsequent bill of sale of the same goods proceeding to take possession of them. Allen, Ex parte, Middleton, In re, 11 L. R., Eq. 209; 40 L. J., Bk. 171; 19 W. R. 274.

A and P. were each of them holders of a bill of sale on the same part of a non-trader's property. A's security was dated the 10th of February, 1870, and registered on the 2nd of March, 1870. P's was dated the 28th of February, 1870, and registered on the 18th of March, 1870. P. had no notice of A's bill of sale at the date of his own, and took possession before he received notice. On the 4th of April A. gave notice of his charge, but notwithstanding this P. proceeded to sell the goods. After the seizure, and before the sale, the debtor was adjudicated bankrupt :—Held, that the fact that P. had been the first to take possession did not give him priority over A., and that the latter was entitled to the first charge upon the proceeds of the sale. Ib.

A. was indebted to B., to C., and to D. B. obtained judgment for his debt and sued out a f. fa. thereon, whereupon A., on the day before the execution was levied, executed a bill of sale in favour of C. and D., D. however being no party to the deed, and having had no notice of it until after the time when the sheriff proceeded to execute B.'s writ. The case not being one of bankruptcy:—Held, that the bill of sale was a valid security in favour of C. and then of D. in priority over B. Westbury v. Clapp, 12 W. R. 511.

A bill of sale of chattels was executed but not registered. The mortgagor executed a second bill of sale of the same chattels to another person, which was registered. Afterwards the mortgagor filed a liquidation petition:—Held, that the second mortgagee was entitled to such of the chattels as had not been seized by the first mortgagee before the liquidation. Leman, Ex parte, Barraud, In re, 4 Ch. D. 23; 46 L. J., Bk. 38; 35 L. T. 422; 25 W. R. 65—C. A.

A. executed a bill of sale to B., which was not registered. Subsequently he executed a bill of sale of the same property to C., which was registered. On the following day, C. took possession under his bill of sale and advertised the property for sale. After the seizure, but before the sale, A. filed a petition in bankruptcy, and a trustee was appointed. C. sold the goods, and after satisfying his own claim, paid over the balance to the trustee. B. brought an action for illegal seizure and sale of goods assigned to him against C., and claimed the amount owing to him by A.:—Held, that C.'s seizure was illegal and gave B. a good cause of action against him, which A.'s bankruptcy did not take away. Payne v. Cales, 38 L. T. 855.

The consequence of avoiding by an execution a bill of sale which is not registered, is to displace it altogether. Richards v. James, 2 L. R., Q. B. 285; 36 L. J., Q. B. 116; 16 L. T. 174; 15 W. R. 580; 8 B. & S. 302.

By a bill of sale dated the 12th April, the defendant assigned his goods to S. This bill of sale was not registered. On the 21st the same goods were assigned by the defendant to H., who, on the 11th May, registered his bill of sale. S. on the 9th May procured from the defendant another bill of sale for the same consideration as the former, and registered it on the 14th. On the 11th and 14th the sheriff levied under executions against the defendant. Claims being made by both S. and H. the sheriff took out an interpleader summons, and the execution creditors being content to be barred:—Held, that H. was entitled to priority over S. Ib. See cases contra, post, col. 1896.

Between other Parties.—A deed of assignment of chattels by a debtor to trustees void as against assignees in bankruptcy of the debtor for want of registration is nevertheless operative as between the immediate parties to it from the time of its operation until the proceedings in bankruptcy so as to pass the property in the chattels from the debtor. Reg. v. Crease, 2 L. R., C. C. 105; 43 L. J., M. C. 51; 29 L. T. 897; 22 W. R. 375.

An equitable assignment of chattels was not registered under the Bills of Sale Act. The chattels were taken in execution by a creditor of the mortgagor, before the mortgagee had more than a merely formal possession of them. The execution creditor had, before his debt was contracted, actual notice of the bill of sale:—Held, that the execution creditor could not be deprived of his statutory right to priority over the mortgagee. Edwards v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. 291; 45 L. J., Ch. 391; 34 L. T. 472; 24 W. R. 713—C. A.

A made a fraudulent bill of sale of goods to

B., who subsequently, in the presence and with the sanction of A., but without his being a party to it, assigned to C., bonâ fide, and for a valuable consideration. The actual possession of the goods throughout remained in A.:—Held, that the second bill of sale was not affected by the fraud in the first, and that therefore C.'s assignment was protected against the creditors of A. Morewood v. South Yorkshire Railway and River Dun Company, 3 H. & N. 798; 28 L. J., Ex. 114.

12. PUTTING IN FORCE.

Suspension of Right.—Where a debt is secured by a bill of sale and a bill of exchange, the fact that the latter is outstanding does not suspend the right of the creditor to seize under the former. Bramwell v. Eglington, 5 B. & S. 39; 33 L. J., Q. B. 130; 10 Jur., N. S. 583; 10 L. T. 295; 12 W. R. 551.

An assignee under a bill of sale being entitled to take possession, on default in payment of the debt for which the bill of sale was given as security, after demand left at the debtor's last place of abode, may make a good demand of payment under that stipulation, although he has indorsed away a bill of exchange given as collateral security for part of the same debt, and which was outstanding in the hands of third parties at the time of the demand. Ib.

Goods were assigned by S. to the defendant by a bill of sale, in consideration of 50*l.* advanced by the defendant, with a proviso that if S. paid the 50*l.* upon demand in writing given to him, or left at his last place of abode, the deed should be void, but in default of payment contrary to the proviso, "then at any time thereafter" it was to be lawful for the defendant to take possession of the goods, which were to remain in S.'s possession until default. At the same time S. accepted and gave the defendant a bill at four months for 50*l.* to secure the same debt, and the defendant at once indorsed it over for value. On the 16th of February, the bill being still current, the defendant, knowing S. to be in gaol under a ca. sa., left a demand in writing at his house, and took possession of the goods the same evening. S. was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 23rd of February:—Held, assuming the 23rd of February to be the material date, that on that day the goods were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the defendant, the true owner; for that, if the defendant had been premature in taking the goods the same day as the demand, yet that did not prevent his taking possession in proper time before the 23rd; and that the mere taking of the bill of exchange did not suspend his remedy under the bill of sale. Ib. Affirmed on appeal: 1 L. R., Q. B. 494; 35 L. J., Q. B. 163; 12 Jur., N. S. 702; 14 L. T. 735; 14 W. R. 739—Ex. Ch.

Seizure under Bill of Sale.—S. advanced to an execution debtor, being a baker by trade, 155*l.* on the security of a bill of sale of his goods, and took possession of them by putting a man into possession of them in his house on the 15th May. The doors were kept locked, and the trade and business stopped, the key being kept by the man in possession. On the 17th May notices announcing a sale by auction of the goods were posted up outside the house, and in places about the neighbourhood, and the catalogues stated that the sale would take place under a bill of sale on the 24th May. The debtor, who was an infirm old man, was allowed, though against the wish of the man in possession, to remain on in the house, on the plea that he could not get lodgings elsewhere. Between the 17th and the 24th May an execution was put in, the bailiff procuring admission by knocking at the door, and when it was opened forcing his way in. On these facts the verdict, at the trial of an interpleader issue to determine the right to the goods, was entered for the execution creditor:—Held, that the necessary inference from the facts was, that more was done than the taking merely formal possession, and that actual and real possession and control were in fact taken and kept by S., and that public notice of this was given by the catalogues announcing the sale, and therefore the verdict ought to be entered for S. Smith v. Wall, 18 L. T. 182.

The goods of a debtor being seized under a county court execution, A. set up a claim to them under a bill of sale to secure the repayment to him of a sum of money lent to the debtor. Under the power given to A. by the bill of sale to sell the goods, and out of the proceeds to reimburse himself and pay the surplus to the debtor, he had sold sufficient to repay the amount of his original loan, and the amount of a distress levied on the farm of the debtor and of rent due by him; but he had not been repaid a further sum advanced by him subsequently to the county court execution to pay a quarter's rent of the farm falling due on the day after the date of the execution:—Held, that he paid the last-mentioned sum of his own wrong; and that he could not, after the bill of sale had been actually satisfied, set up the bare legal property vested in him by it, as against the execution creditor. Waterton v. Baker, 17 L. T. 494.

A., in consideration of an advance of 650*l.*, made to him by B. and C., who carried on business under the name of "The City Investment and Advance Company," by a deed in the form of a mortgage, assigned to them all the goods, chattels and effects upon his farm and premises, to secure the repayment of the advance, with power to the mortgagees, on default, to sell at their discretion, and to pay over the surplus to A. B. and C. took possession under this deed (which was not registered), and sold the goods by auction. D., after B. and C. had taken possession, entered under a subsequent bill of sale (duly registered), and paid out a claim of the landlord for rent:—Held, that B. and C., having perfected their title by taking possession under their mortgage, had a right to sell, and that they were not responsible to D. for any default in the mode of conducting the sale. Maughan v. Sharpe, 17 C. B., N. S. 443; 34 L. J., C. P. 19; 10 Jur., N. S. 989; 10 L. T. 870; 12 W. R. 1057.

Held, secondly, that D. could not recover against B. and C. the sum paid by him to the landlord, as money paid to their use. Ib.

— After Demand.—A bill of sale contained a proviso for redemption if the debtor should "instantly on demand and without delay, on any pretence whatsoever," pay the sum due, such demand to be made "personally on the debtor, or by giving or leaving verbal or written notice to or for him at his place of business, so nevertheless that a demand be in fact made:"—Held, that the notice to be left for the debtor in his absence must be such as might reach the debtor, so as to give him an opportunity of answering within a reasonable time. Massey v. Staden, 4 L. R., Ex. 13; 38 L. J., Ex. 34.

By a bill of sale dated the 15th April, 1873, the plaintiff assigned all his goods, &c., to the defendant to secure a sum of 100*l.*, upon the express condition that if the plaintiff did not, "immediately upon demand in writing" delivered to the plaintiff, or left for him at his home, pay the money due, it should be lawful for the defendant to seize and sell the goods comprised in the bill of sale. On the 22nd April, 1873, the defendant went with bailiffs to the plaintiff's house, and there saw his wife and son, who told him that the plaintiff was from home, they knew not where, and that he might be gone to America for aught they knew. The defendant then read and delivered to the wife and son a written demand for payment, which not being complied with, he at once put the bailiffs in possession, and after an interval of eight days sold the goods. The plaintiff returned to his home on the 8th May, and said he had started with the 100*l.* to go to S. on business, but had gone to R., had got drunk, and remained away on a spree. In an action against the defendant for so seizing and selling the plaintiff's goods:—Held, that the defendant was under the circumstances perfectly justified by the terms of the bill of sale in seizing the goods as he did, immediately upon the demand having been made as stated. Whariton v. Kirkwood, 29 L. T. 644; 22 W. R. 93.

By a bill of sale, A. assigned all his goods to secure a debt due from him to the assignee, subject to a proviso that the deed should become void upon payment of the debt on a certain day, or on some earlier day, to be appointed by the assignee by a notice in writing, to be served on A. twenty-four hours before the day of payment so appointed; interest to be paid in the meantime. It was agreed that, after default made in payment contrary to the proviso, it should be lawful for the assignee to enter and take possession of the goods, and to sell them, and reimburse himself out of the proceeds, accounting to A. for any surplus; and that, until such default, it should be lawful for A. to hold, use, and possess the goods without hindrance from the assignee. The assignee served A. with a notice to pay on a day earlier than that named in the deed, and afterwards entered and took, and sold the goods, but the notice was bad, having been served less than twenty-four hours before the day of payment appointed:—Held, that A. had, under the deed, the right of possession of the goods, defeasible only by default in payment after due notice, and that he might therefore sue the assignee in trespass, for having wrongfully entered and sold. Brierly v. Kendall, 17 Q. B. 937; 21 L. J., Q. B. 161.

Held, also, that in such action the measure of damages should be, not the value of the goods, but the value of A.'s interest in them at the time of the trespass. Ib.

By a bill of sale, the grantor covenanted to pay the sum secured immediately upon demand in writing, signed by or on behalf of the grantees, being given to him or left at his last known place of abode; and if he did not immediately upon such demand pay the money, the grantees were authorized to enter and seize the goods comprised in the bill of sale; and until default in payment on such written demand, the grantor was to remain in possession of them. A written demand, signed by their attorneys on behalf of the grantees, "we hereby demand of you the immediate payment of" &c., was given by the attorneys to a sheriff's officer, who was authorized to receive the money; but he simply handed the document to the grantor, and then seized the goods:—Held, that the grantor was entitled to a reasonable time to get the money, and see the grantees, or some one whom he knew to be authorized to receive it. Toms v. Wilson, 32 L. J., Q. B. 33; 9 Jur., N. S. 492; 7 L. T. 421; 11 W. R. 117. Affirmed on appeal, 4 B. & S. 442; 32 L. J., Q. B. 382; 10 Jur., N. S. 201; 8 L. T. 799; 11 W. R. 952—Ex. Ch.

— What demand sufficient.—A bill of sale contained a provision that it should be void in case the mortgagor should pay the principal money thereby secured "upon demand, if and when the mortgagee should so require by a notice in writing," and until payment of the principal should pay interest thereon half-yearly, and also a proportionate part thereof "to the expiration of the said notice, when the same shall be given." And in default of payment power was given to the mortgagee to seize and sell the property comprised in the deed:—Sembles, that the mortgagee was not entitled to seize on the same day on which he made a demand for payment, the demand not being at once complied with. Trevor, Ex parte, Burgharte, In re, 1 Ch. D. 297; 45 L. J., Bk. 27; 33 L. T. 756; 24 W. R. 301.

By a deed, in consideration of money advanced, the present and future stock of the plaintiff were assigned to the defendant, subject to a proviso, that if the money were repaid at the end of ten years, or at such earlier day or time as the defendant should appoint by notice in writing, sent by post, or delivered to the plaintiff, or left at his house or last place of abode, the deed should cease and be void; provided, that if default should be made in payment contrary to the proviso, then and immediately thereupon it should be lawful for the defendant to enter upon the plaintiff's premises, and seize and sell the goods. The defendant served a notice on the plaintiff at noon to pay the money due at half-past twelve p.m. of the same day, and then, on default, seized and sold the goods on the plaintiff's premises:—Held, that the notice under the deed must be a reasonable notice, and that half-an-hour's notice was not reasonable. Brighty v. Norton, 3 B. & S. 305; 32 L. J., Q. B. 38; 9 Jur., N. S. 495; 7 L. T. 422; 11 W. R. 167; S. P., Rogers v. Mutton, 31 L. J., Ex. 275.

Sale of Goods comprised in Bill of Sale in ordinary course of Business.—Farm produce, &c., over which a bill of sale had been granted, were seized by the landlord of a farm under a distress for rent, and were appraised at a considerably greater amount than the amount of rent due. The agent of the landlord knowing that the tenant was indebted to the landlord in respect of the incoming valuation, but in ignorance of the bill of sale, allowed the tenant to sell a quantity of wheat which had been seized under the distress. Upon obtaining the amount realized by the sale of the wheat, the agent paid to the landlord the amount due under the valuation. In an action by the landlord against the tenant and the grantor of the bill of sale, for breach of the covenants of the lease of the farm, and for an injunction to restrain the removal of the goods, &c., the grantor of the bill of sale counter-claimed in respect of the amount so paid to the landlord:—Held, that the sale of the wheat under the circumstances was not a sale in the ordinary course of business, and that the grantee of the bill of sale was entitled to recover the amount realized thereon from the landlord. Musgrave v. Stevens, 47 J. P. 295.

"Reasonable excuse" for Non-production of Receipt for Rent.—The provisions of s. 7 of the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, apply to goods seized after the date of the commencement of the act under a bill of sale executed and registered before such date. Where the grantor of a bill of sale did not, upon demand in writing by the grantee, produce a receipt for rent which had only become due a few days, and of which it appeared the landlord had not yet required payment:—Held, that the grantor had not "without reasonable excuse" failed to produce his last receipt for rent, within the meaning of the 4th sub-s. of s. 7 of the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882. Cotton, Ex parte, 11 Q. B. D. 801; 49 L. T. 52; 32 W. R. 58; 47 J. P. 599.

Relief against Seizure of Goods.—Where, after goods had been seized under a bill of sale for default in payment of instalments due thereunder, the grantor offered to pay the amount due, but the grantee refused to receive the same:—Held, that the court had power, under the above-mentioned section, to make an order restraining the grantee from selling the goods on condition that the amount due was paid. Id.

"Order and Disposition."—The Bills of Sale Act, 1882, repeals the 20th section of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, in respect of bills of sale given by way of security, but not in respect of bills of sale given by way of absolute transfer, and therefore chattels comprised in a registered bill of sale given by way of absolute transfer are not in the order and disposition of the grantor within the Bankruptcy Act. Swift v. Punnell, 24 Ch. D. 210; 48 L. T. 351; 31 W. R. 543.

An agreement, by a clause in an ordinary building contract, that all building and other materials brought by the builder upon the land, shall become the property of the landowner, is not a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31). Reeves v. Barlow, 11 Q. B. D. 610.

Notwithstanding the repeal of s. 20 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, by s. 15 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, the effect of s. 3 of the latter act is, that the grantee of a bill of sale, registered under the Act of 1878 before the coming into operation of the Act of 1882, is, so long as the registration is subsisting, entitled to the protection afforded by s. 20 against the "order and disposition" of the grantor, even when an act of bankruptcy is committed by the grantor after the coming into operation of the Act of 1882. Izard, Ex parte, Chapple, In re, 23 Ch. D. 409; 52 L. J., Ch. 802; 49 L. T. 230; 32 W. R. 218—C. A.

Consolidation of Mortgage with.]—The doctrine of consolidation of mortgages does not enable the grantee by a registered bill of sale of goods seized under a fi. fa. to take a prior mortgage of other property of the grantor, and claim that the surplus proceeds of the goods, after discharging the sum secured by the bill of sale, shall be applied in satisfaction of the prior mortgage, so as to defeat the right of the execution creditor to such surplus. Chesworth v. Hunt, 5 C. P. D. 266; 49 L. J., C. P. 507; 42 L. T. 774; 28 W. R. 815; 44 J. P. 605.

Payment by Instalments—Default—Giving Time—Waiver.]—A bill of sale contained a proviso for redemption, and also a proviso if the grantor should make default in payment of 62l. or any part thereof, when and as the same should become due and payable according to the proviso for that purpose thereinbefore contained, the whole amount of moneys secured should be then immediately due and payable, and it should be lawful for, but not obligatory on, the grantee to take possession. The sum advanced was payable by instalments of 2l., the first on Monday, the 22nd May, and the others on Monday in each succeeding week, until the entire sum was paid. The grantor was unable to pay the instalment which became due on the 28th August, but the grantee of the company consented to wait till the 11th September, when the sum of 6l. was to be paid. Upon the 7th September, he took possession of the goods, and on the 11th he carried away the goods and sold them. An action having been brought to recover damages for such seizure and sale:—Held, that the time having been enlarged for paying the money, there had been no default, and therefore the grantor was entitled to recover damages. Albert v. Grosvenor Investment Company, 3 L. R., Q. B. 123; 37 L. J., Q. B. 24; 8 B. & S. 664.

The plaintiff gave the defendant a bill of sale on his goods as security for money advanced. The loan was to be repaid by instalments, and the bill of sale authorized the defendant at any time after the execution thereof to take and retain possession of all the goods comprised in it, until all the money payable under it should have been satisfied. It also contained a power of sale. The plaintiff, having paid thirteen instalments, on the day when the fourteenth became due, called upon the defendant and asked for time; the defendant replied that he would wait for a week, but he seized the goods upon the third day and sold them before any further default had been committed by the plaintiff. An action having been brought to recover damages for the seizure and sale, at the trial the judge asked the jury whether the defendant had so acted as to induce the plaintiff to believe that the defendant would hold his hand: the jury answered this question in favour of the plaintiff:—Held, that there was no evidence of a waiver by the defendant, and that there must be a new trial. Quære, whether Albert v. Grosvenor Investment Company (3 L. R., Q. B. 123) was correctly decided. Williams v. Stern, 5 Q. B. D. 409; 49 L. J., Q. B. 663; 42 L. T. 719; 28 W. R. 901—C. A.

Injunction restraining Grantee—When granted.]—On an interlocutory application by the grantor of a bill of sale for an injunction to restrain the grantee who has taken possession under it from selling or continuing in possession, unless the bill of sale is clearly invalid, the only relief which will be granted is, that on the grantor bringing into court the amount which the grantee swears is due, the grantee will be restrained from making away with the mortgaged property. Hill v. Kirkwood, 42 L. T. 105; 28 W. R. 358—C. A.

The holder of an unregistered bill of sale was in possession of the chattels therein comprised when the debtor filed a petition for liquidation and obtained an order restraining the mortgagee from proceeding under his seizure until after the appointment of the trustee in liquidation. No evidence impeaching the deed or possession was produced in support of the application for the order:—Held, that the order had been improvidently granted and must be discharged. The court will not restrain the exercise of a mortgagee's legal rights, upon a mere suggestion that when the trustee in the liquidation is appointed he may be able to find evidence enabling him to impeach the mortgage deed. The court will require in support of an application for such an order evidence of belief at least, in the existence of facts sufficient to impeach the deed, and ample security to the mortgagee seeking to exercise his legal rights. Shell, Ex parte Loneragan, In re (4 Ch. D. 789; 36 L. T. 270), approved. Bayly, Ex parte Hart, In re, 43 L. T. 181—C. A.

Interlocutory Injunction against Trespasser in Possession of Land.]—Where after the expiration of a tenancy for years the holder of a bill of sale of the furniture of the late tenant put and continued a man in possession of the furniture upon the premises under a power in his security:—Held, that the landlord was entitled to treat the bill of sale holder as a mere trespasser; and in an action against him by the landlord to restrain him from selling the goods on the premises or continuing in possession, an interlocutory injunction was granted in those terms. Smith v. Brown, 48 L. J., Ch. 694.

Effect of Execution on unregistered Bill of Sale.]—Whether, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, the taking in execution of goods comprised in an unregistered bill of sale defeated the bill of sale wholly or only to the extent necessary to give effect to the execution, quære. The position in Richards v. James (2 L. R., Q. B. 285), that it has the former effect, doubted. Artistic Colour Printing Company, In re, Fouldrinier, Ex parte. 21 Ch. D. 510; 31 W. R. 149—C. A.

The effect of s. 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, in avoiding an unregistered bill of sale as against an execution creditor of the grantor, is to avoid it only to the extent necessary to satisfy the execution. Richards v. James (2 L. R., Q. B. 285) distinguished, on the ground that the words of s. 1 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, are different from those of s. 8 of the Act of 1878. Blaiberg, Ex parte, Toomer, In re, 23 Ch. D. 254; 52 L. J., Ch. 461; 49 L. T. 16; 31 W. R. 906—C. A.

If after the sheriff under an execution has seized the goods comprised in an unregistered bill of sale to which the Act of 1878 applies, the bill of sale holder takes a sufficient possession before the filing of a bankruptcy petition, on which the grantor is afterwards adjudicated a bankrupt, and the execution is then avoided by virtue of the relation back of the title of the trustee in the bankruptcy to an act of bankruptcy committed before the levy of the execution, the execution is swept away as if it had never existed, and the bill of sale holder is entitled to the goods as against the trustee. Id.

Wrongful Seizure under Bill of Sale—Damages Recoverable by Grantor.]—Where a defendant had, under an assignment by an executrix of all moneys due to her under her husband's will, seized and sold the stock upon the plaintiff's farm, claiming under a bill of sale to her by a former occupier of the stock then on the farm, as security for money advanced by her, and the plaintiff had repeatedly applied to the defendant in vain for accounts of his claim, and there was no satisfactory evidence as to whether the original debt was subsisting, and the sale included many things which the defendant must have known were not in the bill of sale at all, and there were circumstances of great aggravation:—Held, that it was rightly left to the jury whether they believed the debt to be due, and whether it was due to the assignor, as executrix, and that if not they should find for the plaintiff, and that it was a proper case for vindictive damages; and they, having given beyond the full value of the stock seized, more than double that value by way of damages, the court was reluctant to interfere, although they thought the amount excessive, and recommended a compromise. Thomas v. Harris, 27 L. J., Ex. 353; S. C., at nisi prius, 1 F. & F. 67.

Bill of Sale by Equitable Owner.]—Goods were vested in a trustee with power to sell them upon the direction of his cestui que trust. The cestui que trust, with the authority of the trustee, executed and registered a bill of sale assigning the goods:—Held, that the bill of sale was void as against execution creditors. Chapman v. Knight, 5 C. P. D. 308; 49 L. J., C. P. 425; 42 L. T. 538; 28 W. R. 919; 44 J. P. 491.

—By Grantee of unregistered Bill not in Possession.]—A county court judge decided that a registered bill of sale, given by a person out of possession of the goods assigned and deriving title from a grantee under an unregistered bill of sale, was invalid against an execution creditor:—Held, by Grove, J. (Lopes, J., dissenting), that this decision was correct. Id.

13. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF AGREEMENT TO GIVE BILL OF SALE.

Effect of.]—On the 13th March A. commenced an action against B. to enforce specific performance of an agreement to execute a bill of sale of the chattels and effects in an inn. On the 16th March A., on his ex parte application, was appointed interim receiver, pending a reference for the appointment of a receiver, and the same day he took possession of the inn, and left a man in charge. The same night B. left the inn, and the next day filed a liquidation petition. The trustee under the liquidation claimed the chattels and effects in the inn on the ground that the agreement was void as against him under the Bills of Sale Act, and that the chattels and effects were in the apparent possession of B. at the commencement of the liquidation:—Held, that the Bills of Sale Act did not apply, that the agreement created a good equitable charge in favour of A., and that the possession taken by A. as interim receiver took the chattels and effects out of the order and disposition of B. Taylor v. Eckersley, 5 Ch. D. 740; 36 L. T. 442; 25 W. R. 527.

Interim Receiver, Appointment of.]—In an action for specific performance of an agreement to execute a bill of sale, the plaintiff applied ex parte, and before the appearance of the defendant, for the appointment of a receiver, and the usual order was made directing a reference to chambers to appoint a receiver:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the property protected in the meantime, and the order of the court below varied by directing the appointment of the plaintiff as interim receiver without security for fourteen days, or until a receiver should be appointed under the order. Taylor v. Eckersley, 2 Ch. D. 302; 45 L. J., Ch. 527; 24 W. R. 450—C. A.

14. EVIDENCE TO IMPEACH VALIDITY OF.

As to Fraud.]—A., being sued as executor de son tort of his father, claimed goods under an assignment from his father to himself, the consideration whereof was stated in the deed to be a debt due from his father to him; and to prove that the deed was not fraudulent, it was proposed by A.'s counsel to go into evidence to shew that A.'s father really owed A. money:—Held, that, for this purpose, what A.'s father said to A., or in A.'s presence, as to his owing A. money, was receivable, as it was proof of an account stated between them, but that what A.'s father said on the subject in the absence of A. was not receivable, as that would be merely an admission by A.'s father, under whom A. claimed, but under whom the plaintiff did not claim. Yardley v. Arnold, Car. & M. 434.

To prove a bill of sale fraudulent, declarations made by the vendor at the time of executing it are admissible, but not those made at another time. Phillips v. Eamer, 1 Esp. 355.

In an action against the sheriff for seizing and converting goods as the goods of A., in which the plaintiff claimed property under a prior bill from A., it is necessary for the sheriff, in order to be let in to contend that the bill of sale is fraudulent and void, to give some evidence that he seized by authority from an execution creditor of A., as the bill of sale would be valid between the parties and against strangers, but void only as against creditors. Bessey v. Windham, 6 Q. B. 166; 14 L. J., Q. B. 7.

Subsequent Bankruptcy of Grantor.]—Trover by A. against the assignees of a bankrupt, for selling goods of A. A. gave evidence that, prior to the bankruptcy, the person in possession, and apparently the owner, had assigned them to C., who had for valuable consideration assigned them to A. A. had put a person in possession of the goods, but C. continued to carry on the business of the house where they were. On the part of the assignees it was suggested that the transaction was colourable, and that the goods belonged to the bankrupt. Before any evidence was offered of any connexion between A. and the bankrupt, one of the witnesses for the defence was asked "whether he remembered C. making a claim to the goods after the bankruptcy." The question was disallowed:—Held, that it ought to have been allowed. Ford v. Elliott, 4 Ex. 78; 18 L. J., Ex. 447.

A. conveyed goods by bill of sale to B. By a second bill of sale A. conveyed the same goods to C. A. having become bankrupt, and the first bill of sale not having been duly registered, A.'s assignees brought trover for the goods:—Held, that B. could not set up the bill of sale to C. against the assignees. Nicholson v. Cooper, 3 H. & N. 384.

Admissions.—On an interpleader issue to try the right to goods claimed by the plaintiff under an assignment to secure a debt alleged to be due to him, the admissions of the assignor, before the date of the assignment, that he was indebted, are not receivable in evidence for the plaintiff. Coole v. Braham, 4 Ex. 183; 18 L. J., Ex. 105.

As against Execution Creditors.—Goods having been seized under an execution upon a judgment in a county court against R., the plaintiff, who claimed the goods under an assignment which was void against creditors, brought an action against the bailiffs of the county court for such seizure, and, to prove the trespass, put in evidence the writ of execution, with the levy indorsed thereon. The writ recited the judgment recovered in the county court:—Held, that this was not sufficient evidence of the judgment to justify the bailiffs. White v. Morris, 11 C. B. 1015; 21 L. J., C. P. 185; 16 Jur. 500.

In an interpleader issue between a claimant under a bona fide bill of sale duly registered, and an execution creditor of the assignor, the latter cannot set up a prior bill of sale to a third party, also bona fide, but void as against execution creditors for want of due registration. Edwards v. English, 7 Bl. & Bl. 564; 26 L. J., Q. B. 193; 3 Jur., N. S. 934.

In an interpleader issue between claimant and execution creditor, the plaintiff claiming under a bill of sale for alleged advances to the assignor, a son, the question is, whether the property was really intended to pass, and this will greatly depend upon whether the advances were really made; but it is not conclusive that the assignor's object was to evade an execution, because, except in cases of bankruptcy or insolvency, a debtor may prefer a particular creditor, and pay him in money or in goods; and the question will be whether he really meant to do so, or only to pretend and appear to do so for the purpose of escaping the execution, the goods to be afterwards resumed by the assignor. Sutton v. Bath, 1 F. & F. 152.

In an interpleader suit the question being between a claimant under a bill of sale from the sheriff and an execution creditor, the bill of sale, though it may not per se be sufficient prima facie evidence of the title of the claimant, is so coupled with some evidence of a prior seizure by the sheriff. Hornidge v. Cooper, 27 L. J., Ex. 814.

A claimant was plaintiff, and an execution creditor defendant, in an interpleader issue, to try whether certain goods were, at the time of the seizure thereof by the sheriff, under a writ of execution, the goods of the plaintiff. The plaintiff proved a valid bill of sale to him of the goods:—Held, that it was competent for the defendant to defeat the plaintiff's title by proving a prior bill of sale to a third party. Gadsden v. Barrow, 2 C. L. R. 1063; 9 Ex. 514; 23 L. J., Ex. 134.

Person Selling under—Estoppel.—A party who has, under an authority from the assignee, acted upon a bill of sale by selling the goods, cannot, in an action by the assignee, for the proceeds, impeach its validity. Neither can he, if the authority to sell is in general terms to sell all the effects at a certain place, and he has afterwards admitted a balance in his hands on the sale, set up in such an action that part of the goods sold was not comprised in the bill of sale, and that the proceeds of the goods which were so have been exhausted by expenses or payments in pursuance of the authority. Baker v. Dale, 1 F. & F. 271.

1. HOW DETERMINED.

When two Counties separated by a River—Inaccurate Description—Presumption.—Upon an indictment against the inhabitants of Brecknockshire for non-repair of half a bridge, it was found, upon a special verdict, that the mid-channel of the river Wye had always formed the boundary between the counties of Brecon and Radnor, above and below, and partly within the parish of G., but that before 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, the boundary receded, at a certain point within the parish, from the mid-channel to the right bank of the river, and thence inland, at a slant, and then back to the mid-channel of the river, so as to include within Radnorshire a part of the river, and 470 acres of land, on its right bank, part of the parish of G. No other portion of the parish of G., on the right bank of the Wye, than the 470 acres ever was in the county of Radnor, and no part of the parish of G., which up to the passing of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, was situate in the county of Radnor, was isolated or detached from the remainder of the county, unless it was the portion of 470 acres. The bridge was within the parish of G., and crossed the river Wye between the points where the old boundaries of the counties of Radnor and Brecon left and returned to the mid-channel of the river, and the only part of the bridge which was out of repair was that extending from the mid-channel to the right bank of the river:—Held, that the inhabitants of Brecknockshire were liable to repair half the bridge, since it stood half in their county and half in Radnorshire; for that, upon such finding, it was clear that the 470 acres were the part of the parish of G. which was intended to be described in 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, as isolated from the main body of the county of Radnor, and therefore to be transferred to the county of Brecon, though in strictness it was not isolated, but touched the remainder of the county on one side, and though it was inaccurately described in the first column of the schedule as belonging, at the time of the passing of the act, to Brecknockshire. Reg. v. Brecknockshire, 15 Q. B. 813; 19 L. J., M. C. 203; 15 Jur. 351.

Held, also, that 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 61, transferred to Brecknockshire not only the 470 acres, but also half the river, where it abutted upon them, so as to make the boundary between the counties of Radnor and Brecon run there, as elsewhere, per medium flum aquæ. Id.

Where two parishes are separated by a river, the medium flum is the presumptive boundary between them. Rees v. Landulph, 1 M. & Rob. 393.

In a Borough under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64—Place forming part of Ancient Borough.—By a charter of James I. the bailiffs and burgesses of a borough had a right to return a member to parliament. By the same charter, twelve capital burgesses were nominated, and that body was to be thereafter kept up by electors from the common burgesses, and the office of capital burgess required residence within the borough. To the bailiff and capital burgesses power was given from time to time to elect and appoint such and so many other men, inhabitants or not inhabitants of the borough (with certain restrictions), to be thereafter burgesses of the borough. F. was, before the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, a part of the ancient borough, but so detached from the borough, that, by reason of including it, the boundary established by that act would not be continuous:—Held, by Wilde, C. J., and Maule, J., that F. had, before the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, formed part of the boundary for the purpose of the election of members to serve in parliament, and that it therefore was brought within the saving part of s. 37:—Held, contra by Cresswell and Williams, JJ. Palmer v. Allen, 6 C. B. 51; 18 L. J., C. P. 257; 13 Jur. 708.

When Parish extends up to a Highway.—An act of Charles II., creating a new parish of A. out of the old parish of M., enacted that "all that precinct included within the bounds hereinafter expressed" should form the new parish. On the northern boundary, where the old parish was divided from the parish of S. by a highway, the precinct was described thus : " with all the houses and grounds abutting on and upon the king's highway or great road : "—Held, that the boundary of the new parish extended beyond the houses abutting on the highway to the medium flum of the highway. Reg. v. Strand Board of Works, 4 B. & S. 526; 12 W. R. 828.

Where Parish extends up to a Tidal River.]

—Where a parish extends up to a tidal river, but there is nothing to shew whether it does or does not extend beyond the line of the ordinary or medium high water mark, land between such high water and low water mark cannot be assumed to be within the parish, as there is no distinction in this respect between land on the sea-shore and land on the shore of a tidal river. Bridgewater (Trustees) v. Hootle-cum-Linacre, 2 L. R., Q. B. 4; 36 L. J., Q. B. 41.

For a Town under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 128.]

In fixing the boundaries of a town, within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 128, the court will be guided by the circumstance of there being a certain continuity of houses or otherwise, and not by what may be the legal boundaries of the borough. Corington v. Wycombe Railway Company, 2 L. R., Eq. 825; 14 W. R. 1018. See sub tit. TOWN.

When described in a Deed and on a Map.]

A grant of a mine was made to L. by a deed, with a map indorsed; the southern boundary being described in the deed as "a straight line drawn from V.'s house" to a certain boundstone; and the description of parcels concluded with these words, "which premises are particularly delineated by the map on the back hereof." On this map the line appeared to be drawn from the north-east corner of V.'s house. L. brought an action against R. for working through his southern boundary, and taking his ore. At the trial, parol evidence was admitted to shew that V.'s house was wrongly placed on the map, and that, if corrected, the line would run to the south of V.'s house; and the whole question was left to the jury:—Held, that though it was properly a question of evidence for the jury to identify and determine the position of V.'s house, it was a question of construction for the judge to decide what was the true meaning of the deed; that, in so doing, the judge was bound to look at the map, and that he ought to have directed the jury, that the true boundary line was that drawn from the north-east corner of V.'s house, when identified and correctly placed. Lyle v. Richards, 1 L. R., H. L. 222; 35 L. J., Q. B. 214; 12 Jur., N. S. 947; 15 L. T. 1.

See POOR LAW (PARISHES)—LOCAL GOVERNMENT—WAY.

2. EVIDENCE.

Where the same Boundary separates other Properties.]

—Where the boundary between two manors is formed by a ridge of hills which run beyond those manors, and, on an issue as to the boundary between one of those manors and a third manor, one of the parties wishes to prove that the same ridge is the boundary between the two latter manors; evidence of its being the boundary of the other two is admissible for this purpose, the three manors being contiguous.

Briaco v. Lomar, 3 N. & P. 308; 8 A. & E. 198; 1 W., W. & H. 235; 2 Jur. 682.

Of Reputation.]—Where, on an issue as to the boundary of a tenement, evidence has been given that the boundary in question is the same with the boundary of a certain hamlet, evidence of reputation as to the boundary of that hamlet is receivable as proof of a fact relevant to the issue. Thomas v. Jenkins, 1 N. & P. 687; 6 A. & E. 525; W., W. & D. 265; 1 Jur. 261. See 2 N. & P. 464.

In an action which turned on a question as to the boundary of two manors, a verdict was taken for the plaintiff, subject to the award of an arbitrator, who was to determine for which party the verdict was to be finally entered, and to set out the boundaries. He directed the verdict to be entered for the defendant. In a subsequent action by the defendant against a third party, where, also, the question substantially was as to the boundary of the same manors, the verdict was received, but the award rejected, as evidence of reputation. Evans v. Rees, 10 A. & E. 151; 2 P. & D. 626.

An ancient presentment by the homage of a manor, in the form of a book, set out the boundaries of the manor, and gave in alphabetical order the names of the several parishes within it, and of the tenants resident in each parish, but this part of the presentment contained nothing as to boundaries. Two or three sheets at the concluding part of it, where a parish, Y., should have followed in order, had been cut off, but it did not appear under what circumstances. In an action involving a question as to the boundary of the manor where it was admitted that the manor and Y. were conterminous in the direction of the locus in quo, the presentment was admitted in evidence of the reputed boundary, as the document, although mutilated, was perfect in that part of it which related to the subject of the boundary. Id.

Cancelled Leases.]—Expired leases, and counterparts of expired leases, though cancelled, are admissible upon a question of boundary. Parton v. Dare, 5 M. & R. 1.

Old Assessments.]—Old assessments to church rates are evidence upon a question of boundary, though the parish officers do not charge themselves with the receipt of the rate otherwise than by crosses set against the names of the parties rated. Id.

Ancient Orders of Sessions.]—Ancient orders of sessions containing statements respecting the extent of a district within the jurisdiction of the court of quarter sessions, made when no dispute as to boundary appears to have existed, are admissible in evidence. Newcastle (Duke) v. Broxtowe, 1 N. & M. 598; 4 B. & Ad. 273.

Presentments or Answers of a Jury.]—In an action by a lord of a manor for carrying away dollars claimed by him as wreck, two instruments dated in 1639 and 1657, and purporting to be presentments or answers of a jury, partly consisting of the tenants of the manor, to questions by commissioners of survey appointed by the lord, were put in to prove the boundaries of the manor, and also the lord's title to wreck, which was affirmed in particular passages:—Held, that they were only evidence of the boundaries, and could not be admitted as declarations by the tenants of the manor, of the title of the lord to wreck, that being a matter of private right derived from the crown, respecting which they could not be taken to have any peculiar knowledge, as they had no concern with it. Talbot v. Lewis, 5 Tyr. 1.

1. WHO ARE.

A person who hires or procures for another, persons to be employed by him in the laying out and surveying of a line of railway, is not a broker. Milford v. Hughes, 16 M. & W. 174; 16 L. J., Ex. 40; 14 Jur. 990.

A person who for brokerage and hire negotiates and concludes bargains for stock is a broker in point of law. Tomson v. Green, 4 Burr. 2103.

Within Statutes relating to London.—A ship broker, or one who obtains on commission freight and passengers for vessels, is not a broker, within the statutes regulating the admission of brokers for the city of London. Gibbons v. Rule, 12 Moore, 539; 4 Bing. 301.

But a stock broker is, and must be admitted by the lord mayor and aldermen. (Lark v. Powell, 1 N. & M. 492; 4 B. & Ad. 846.

An auctioneer is not. Wilkes v. Ellis, 2 H. Bl. 555.

2. ACTING AS A BROKER.

Evidence of.—A witness stated that he took S. to an office in the city of London used by the defendant, and that upon that occasion four memoranda were made by the defendant, each of the sale by S. of 1,000*l.* stock to a person whose name did not transpire; that nothing was handed over at the time, and that he did not see any money pass:—Held, evidence of an acting by the defendant as a broker, within 6 Anne, c. 16, and 57 Geo. 3, c. 1*x.* Scott v. North, 2 L. R., C. P. 270; 15 L. T. 508.

By 57 Geo. 3, c. 1*x.* s. 2, it is provided, that anyone acting as a broker within the city of London without a licence shall be subject to a penalty of 100*l.* A. was an officer of a company formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of stock-broking, and in the course of business bought some stock for a customer, and signed the bought and sold notes, the principals not seeing one another, and no one else acting as broker in the transaction. A. had no licence to act as broker:—Held, that he was liable to the penalty. Scott v. Cousins, 4 L. R., C. P. 179; 38 L. J., C. P. 156.

The dealing in, or buying and selling for reward of, shares in English or foreign joint stock banks or companies, or the debts, stocks or securities of foreign governments, is an acting and assuming to act as broker, within 57 Geo. 3, c. 1*x.* Scott v. Jackson, 19 C. B., N. S. 134.

3. DUTY AND OBLIGATION.

To Principal.—A broker is authorized, from a previous course of dealing between himself and his principal, on an approval of a purchase by the latter, to make out a contract note in his own name, without inserting that of his principal; and, under such circumstances, does not violate the bond and oath imposed on him by the regulations of the city of London, provided he makes an entry in his book in the name of his principal. Kemble v. Atkins, 1 Moore, 6; 7 Taunt. 260; Holt, 427.

It is the duty of a sworn broker of the city of London to charge his principal only the cost price of articles purchased for him, in addition to his commission, and the principal having averred in an action that the broker had charged him a greater price than the cost price which the plaintiff had paid:—Held, that it was sufficient proof of such averment to produce a running unsettled account between the parties, by which it appeared that the principal had paid more than the amount of the overcharges, although on the whole account, and when the balance, at a subsequent period, was struck, the principal was indebted to the broker in a sum far exceeding such overcharges. Procter v. Brain, 2 M. & P. 284; 3 C. & P. 536.

Liability to Discovery.—A sworn broker of the city of London is in the nature of a public agent; and, therefore, in an action against him for negligence in making a contract, the court will compel him to produce his books for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to inspect them and take a copy of the contract. Browning v. Aylwin, 9 D. & R. 801; 7 B. & C. 204.

In one case it was held that a London broker might refuse to allow his employer to inspect his contract book; and it is no breach of his bond, if he at the same time adds it shall be produced at the proper time, and does produce it afterwards before a court of aldermen. London (Mayor, &c.) v. Brandon, Holt, 438; 2 Stark. 14.

A person who holds himself out as a broker of the city of London, and is employed by a person who believes him to be such, cannot, when sued by his principal for an account of his transactions as such broker on the principal's behalf, protect himself from discovery, in a suit in equity, on the ground that it may render him liable to penalties for having acted as a broker without having been duly admitted as such, imposed by 57 Geo. 3, c. lx. Robinson v. Kitchin, 25 L. J., Ch. 441; 2 Jur., N. S. 294—L. J.; affirming, 21 Beav. 365; 25 L. J., Ch. 354; 2 Jur., N. S. 57.

Bonds—Default.—A bond was given by a broker to secure to the corporation of London the due performance of his duties. He made default:—Held, on his death, that the amount recovered on the bond was equitable assets, and in trust for the general body of his creditors, and not exclusively for those who had suffered by his defaults. Nash v. Bryant, 25 Beav. 533; 27 L. J., Ch. 748; 4 Jur., N. S. 550.

It is not a breach of the bond to employ a person who is not a sworn broker. London (Mayor, &c.) v. Brandon, Holt, 438; 2 Stark. 14.

Nor if he mistakes the quantity of goods he had bought, where he derived no advantage from such mis-statement, though it was the cause of considerable loss to his principal. Ib.

4. REMUNERATION.

When Acting without a Licence.—A broker cannot maintain an action for work and labour, and commission for buying and selling stock, unless duly licensed by the mayor and aldermen of the city of London. Cope v. Rowlands, 2 M. & W. 149; 2 Gale, 231.

—Recovery of Money paid.—To a declaration for money paid and on accounts stated, a plea that the causes of action accrued to the plaintiff, as a broker in the city of London, about the purchasing and selling for the defendant, in the city of London, of shares, and that he was not duly licensed, is a bad plea, inasmuch as the 6 Anne, c. 16, does not prevent an unlicensed broker from recovering money paid at the request of his employer, or for money due on accounts stated with his employer. Jessopp v. Lutwyche, 10 Ex. 614; 3 C. L. R. 359; 24 L. J., Ex. 65.

To a declaration on two bills by drawer against acceptor, a plea, that he retained the plaintiff to act as his broker in the city of London, and to enter into contracts in the city of London for the defendant in the purchase of stock and shares, and to pay, in and about completing such contracts and purchases, moneys, and that, in pursuance of such retainer, the plaintiff entered into contracts for the purchase of shares; and as incidental thereto paid for the defendant, in and about completing such contracts and purchases, moneys; that the plaintiff was not, at the time of the retainer and employment, and making such contracts and purchasing such shares, or paying such moneys, a broker duly licensed within the city of London; and that the bills were accepted by the defendant, and received by the plaintiff, on account of money due from the defendant to the plaintiff for his having entered into the contracts, and paid such moneys,—is bad on general demurrer, on the ground that as the words incidental thereto were ambiguous, it did not appear by the plea that the payment of the moneys was a necessary part of the plaintiff's duty as broker, and forasmuch as the contract in such case was not void; and although the plaintiff could not recover any recompense for his services, yet he was entitled to recover the money he had paid at the defendant's request. Pidgeon v. Burslem, 3 Ex. 465; 18 L. J., Ex. 193.

A dealer in London in shares in a public company (whether British or foreign) is a broker within 6 Ann. c. 16, and incapable of suing for his commissions unless duly licensed. Smith v. Lindo, 4 C. B., N. S. 395; 27 L. J., C. P. 196. Affirmed on appeal, 5 C. B., N. S. 587; 27 L. J., C. P. 335; 4 Jur., N. S. 974—Ex. Ch.

But, where an unlicensed person assumed to act as a broker in the purchase of such shares:—Held, that he might recover from his principal the price which, pursuant to a usage of the share market, he had been obliged to pay, the 6 Ann. c. 16, not making the contract void, but merely preventing the unlicensed broker from recovering any remuneration for his services in making it. Ib.

1. CONSTITUTION.

When duly Constituted.]—A building society is duly constituted, and is entitled to all the advantages conferred upon such societies, from the time when the certified rules are framed, and not from the date of the certificate. Williams v. Hayward, 22 Beav. 220; 25 L. J., Ch. 289; 1 Jur., N. S. 128.

Power of Lending Money.]—A building society may lend money upon mortgage security to one of its own members, and such security will be within 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 21, and therefore vested in the trustees or treasurer for the time being. Morrison v. Glover, 4 Ex. 430; 19 L. J., Ex. 20.

A member of a building society may hold shares exceeding 100l. in value. Ib.

By a rule of a society, if the committee is satisfied that the premiums offered by any member to whom shares have been awarded are a sufficient security, they are to direct the trustees to pay to such member the money he is entitled to receive, on his executing a deed in trust to sell, or other valid conveyance, mortgage, or assurance:—Held, that the society might lend money on mortgage to its own members, as well as to strangers. Cutbill v. Kingdom, 1 Ex. 494; 17 L. J., Ex. 177.

Power of Borrowing Money.]—The directors of a building society, the rules of which gave no power to borrow money, borrowed a sum of money for the purpose of advancing it to their members on the security of their shares. The lender of the money afterwards presented a petition for an order to wind up the company:—Held, that the transaction was ultra vires, and that the petitioner had no legal or equitable debt against the company, and the petition was accordingly dismissed. National Permanent Benefit Building Society, In re, Williamson, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 309; 22 L. T. 284; 18 W. R. 338.

A building society has no power to borrow except for the purposes and to the extent specified in its rules. Moye v. Sparrow, 22 L. T. 154; 18 W. R. 400.

The officers of a building society have no power to deposit the mortgages held by it as security for a loan from its bankers. Ib.

The persons who authorize are jointly liable with those who actually give a security for an improper loan. Ib.

Though bankers are also treasurers of a building society, an account will not be decreed against them if their pass-book has been inspected and approved in the usual manner as between banker and customer. Ib.

A rule of a building society authorizing the borrowing of money by the society to an unlimited amount is illegal under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32. Victoria Permanent Benefit Building Investment and Freehold Land Society, In re, Hills' Case, Jones' Case, 9 L. R., Eq. 605; 39 L. J., Ch. 628; 22 L. T. 777; 18 W. R. 967.

The rules of a society contained no express power of borrowing money, but provided that "persons merely joining the society to invest or deposit money" should not be entitled to vote at meetings, nor be called upon to serve any office, and that "investors not in the building branch" might withdraw their deposits on giving a month's notice, if no other time was agreed upon when the deposits were made, and should be entitled to interest on all moneys which should have been in the hands of the society more than one month. The rules also provided that any member having received advances on his shares should be held as legally discharged from all connection with the society as soon as he had discharged all subscriptions and moneys due from him on account of his shares, according to the rules. The directors received money on deposit from persons who did not subscribe for shares in the society, and gave to each depositor a book which contained printed rules purporting to be rules of the deposit branch, one of which provided that the general rules of the society should be binding on all persons who might make deposits. The society was wound up, and the advanced shareholders, under an order in the winding-up, redeemed their shares:—Held, that the rules of the society, if and so far as they authorized borrowing money on deposit, were illegal, as no limit was fixed to the amount which might be borrowed; and that the depositors were not entitled to have a call made upon the members for the repayment of their deposits. Ib.

Held, also, that the rules did not authorize the borrowing of money from persons who were not members of the society, and that the depositors were bound by the rules of the society, by which the advanced shareholders who had redeemed their shares were discharged from all connection with the society; and, consequently, on that ground also were not entitled to have a call made on the advanced shareholders for the repayment of their deposits. Ib.

The objects of a building society on the permanent principle, as stated in its certified rules, were to raise a fund for the purpose of enabling its members to purchase freehold land or other real or leasehold estate, to erect suitable cottages and other buildings thereon, to provide the means for the profitable investment of small savings, and in cases of accidental death to relieve the widows and families of deceased shareholders by adding the interest and estimated profits of the current year on the withdrawal of their shares at the time of death. The rules contained no borrowing power, but in 1867 an alteration in the rules, giving the directors "power from time to time to borrow for the purposes of the society such sums and at such rates of interest and under such terms and conditions as they might think proper and expedient," was certified by the barrister:—Held, that the borrowing power conferred by this altered rule was strictly limited to the purposes of the society as stated in the 1st rule, and that persons who had lent money to the directors, which was employed in a loan to another society, could not enforce their claim under the winding-up of the society. Durham County Permanent Investment, Land, and Building Society, In re, Duris's case, Wilson's case, 12 L. R., Eq. 516; 41 L. J., Ch. 124; 25 L. T. 83.

A loan to a building society was secured by the promissory note of the trustees, and by a deposit of the mortgage deeds executed by members of the society:—Held, that the official liquidator was not entitled, without payment of the money advanced, to deprive the lender of his securities. Ib.

— Society not authorized to borrow—Overdrawing Banker's Account—Lien.—A benefit building society which had no power to borrow money, were permitted by their bankers to overdraw their account to a large amount; and in 1876 a memorandum of agreement was signed by the officers of the society and confirmed by the directors, stating that certain deeds of borrowing members which had been deposited with the bankers were deposited not only for safe custody but as a security for the balance from time to time due. In 1881 an order for winding up the society was made, and the bankers claimed to retain the deeds as security for the balance of their account. No evidence was given as to the application of the money which was advanced by the bankers; but the solicitors on both sides signed an admission that some part was applied in payment of members withdrawing from the society and the remainder in payment of salaries, legal expenses, and expenses of mortgaged property:—Held, that the overdrawing of the bankers' account was ultra vires, being a borrowing unauthorized either by the rules or the objects of the society, and therefore that the bankers had no lien on the deeds either under the agreement or by the course of dealing with the society; but that they were entitled to hold the deeds as a security for such part of the money advanced by them as had been applied in payment of the debts and liabilities of the society properly payable and had not been repaid to the bankers; but that in ascertaining what had been so applied the bankers could not rely on the rule in Clayton's case (1 Mer. 572). Blackburn Building Society v. Cunliffe, 22 Ch. D. 61; 52 L. J., Ch. 92; 48 L. T. 33; 31 W. R. 98—C. A.

Held, also, that the admission by the solicitors of the society that some part of the money had been applied in payment of lawful expenses was sufficient to entitle the bankers to a declaration and an inquiry as to the amount so applied. Ib.

Extension of Business.—When a plaintiff alleged in a bill misconduct against the directors of a building society in extending the business of the society to that of a bank of deposit, but did not state when the extension was made, and prayed no relief on the ground of the alleged misconduct, the court, on demurrer, treated the allegation as immaterial. Thompson v. Planet Benefit Building Society, 15 L. R., Eq. 333.

Purchase of Lands by.—A registered benefit building society, having employed its funds in the purchase of an estate, a member, to whom a portion of the estate had been allotted, subsequently refused to pay the amount of fines and subscriptions due from him, upon the ground that, in making such purchase, the society had acted ultra vires, and had in consequence ceased to exist. A. was aware when he took shares in the society that one of its objects was the purchase of land. An award having been made against him, in pursuance of 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27:—Held, that the misapplication (if any) of the funds had not the effect of putting an end to the society; that such misapplication might be remedied by a court of equity; and that, therefore, justices had jurisdiction, under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27, to enforce compliance with the award. Hughes v. Layton, or D'Eyncourt, 4 B. & S. 820; 35 L. J., M. C. 89; 10 Jur., N. S. 513; 9 L. T. 712; 12 W. R. 408.

A building society is not precluded from investing its funds in the purchase of a real estate. Mullock v. Jenkins, 14 Beav. 628; 21 L. J., Ch. 63.

A society whose rules are certified as a benefit building society is not justified in acting as a freehold land society. Grimca v. Harrison, 26 Beav. 435; 28 L. J., Ch. 823; 5 Jur., N. S. 528; 33 L. T., O. S. 115.

A rule of a building society directed that un-employed money should be invested "in such a manner and upon such legal security" as the board of directors should deem necessary:—Held, that it might be invested in the purchase of freeholds. Ib.

Transactions with Members.—In support of an avowry by G. for a distress for rent due under a demise to L., at a yearly rent of 200*l.*, a deed was given in evidence, whereby L., a member of a building society, assigned to G. and others, trustees thereof, a lease of premises, as security for the monthly contributions payable in respect of his shares, and agreed to become tenant to the trustees of the premises, thenceforth, during their will, at the net yearly rent of 200*l.*, payable quarterly, subject to a power of re-entry for non-payment, and to all usual covenants in leases of the like property; and it was declared that the assignment should not be for security for a greater sum than 840*l.*:—Held, that this did not amount to a demise to the trustees, at a yearly rent of 200*l.*, so as to support the avowry; for that, if it did, L. must be deemed to have contracted to pay his contributions, and rent of 200*l.* a year as well, which was contrary to the intention of the parties. Walker v. Giles, 6 C. B. 622; 18 L. J., C. P. 323; 13 Jur. 753.

Trustees of a building society purchased a piece of freehold land. The conveyance was executed by the vendor, who signed a receipt for the purchase-money. Only one-fourth of the purchase-money was in fact paid, and the conveyance was retained in the possession of the vendor, the trustees agreeing to execute a legal mortgage, if required so to do, the vendor in the meantime to have an equitable charge thereon. Immediately after the conveyance, the land was allotted to the members of the society, who, without inquiring into the title, paid their purchase-money, and took a conveyance of their lots. The trustees failing to pay the balance of the purchase-money, the vendor filed a bill against the allottees of the land and their several sub-purchasers. A decree was made for payment by the allottees of the balance of the purchase-money, otherwise the estate to be sold; in case any of the allottees redeemed the plaintiff, the others to contribute towards the money paid for redemption, otherwise their portions of the land to be sold to discharge what was due in respect thereof. Peto v. Hammond, 30 Beav. 495; 31 L. J., Ch. 354; 8 Jur., N. S. 550.

Members of a building society, and purchasers claiming through them, are bound, as in a case of other purchasers of land, to examine into the title; and if the trustees, from whom they take their conveyance, do not give a good title, they are affected with all the consequences. Ib.

Certificate of Incorporation—Power of Court to declare Certificate Void.—The court has no power to declare the certificate of incorporation of a building society, given by the registrar under the provisions of the Building Societies Act, 1874, void on the ground that it has been obtained irregularly. Glover v. Giles, 18 Ch. D. 173; 50 L. J., Ch. 568; 45 L. T. 344; 29 W. R. 603.

Bankruptcy of Treasurer—Priority.—A benefit building society is not entitled, on the bankruptcy of its treasurer, to priority over the other creditors. Bailey, Ex parte, 5 De G., Mac. & G. 380; 23 L. J., Bk. 36; 18 Jur. 988.

Rules—Validity of.—The principal and interest of a mortgage debt lent by a building society was payable by equal instalments. By the rules of the society incorporated in the mortgage, there was a fine of a shilling per month per pound on all instalments due and unpaid:—Held, first, that the rule was not void as being unreasonable. Parker v. Butcher, 3 L. R., Eq. 762; 16 L. J., Ch. 552.

Held, secondly, that the fines were not interest in the way of a penalty for unpunctual payment, against which a court of equity would relieve. Ib.

A rule empowering the trustees of a building society to borrow a limited amount of money for the purposes of the society is not illegal. Laing v. Reed, 5 L. R., Ch. 4; 18 W. R. 76.

The certificate of the barrister appointed to certify rules under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, is not conclusive as to the legality of a rule. Ib. See further Guardian Permanent Building Society, In re, post, col. 1939.

2. LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS AND OFFICERS.

Directors—Borrowing Money against Rules of Society.—A person lent 70*l.* to a building society, and received a receipt signed by two directors of the society, certifying that he had deposited 70*l.* with the society for three months certain, to be repaid with interest after fourteen days' notice. The society was formed under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, and had no power to borrow money; and the lender being unable to get her money back from the society, sued the two directors:—Held, that they were liable to the lender in damages for a breach of warranty of authority, they having, by signing the receipt, in effect represented that they had authority to make a binding contract of loan on behalf of the society, and so induced her to part with her money. Richardson v. Williamson, 6 L. R., Q. B. 276; 40 L. J., Q. B. 145.

Deposits against Rules of Society.—The directors of a building society deposited money, in a manner unauthorized by its rules, with a finance company, the manager of which was also manager of the building society. Afterwards the deposit was called in, and the directors of the finance company gave a cheque for the amount to their manager, to be paid by him to the building society. He appropriated it to his own use. A bill was afterwards filed by the trustees of the building society to recover the money from the finance company:—Held, that the manager held the money as agent for the finance company until he should pay it to some person competent to give a receipt on behalf of the building society; and that as he never had paid it over, the money must be taken to be still in the hands of the finance company, who was liable to repay it to the building society. Hardy v. Metropolitan Land and Finance Company, 7 L. R., Ch. 427; 41 L. J., Ch. 257; 26 L. T. 407; 20 W. R. 425. Reversing 12 L. R., Eq. 386.

Held, also, that as it was trust money a suit to recover it was maintainable, and the finance company was accordingly ordered to repay the money, with interest. Ib.

Deposits or Loans in excess of Limits prescribed by the Act.—By sect. 15 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, any society under the act may receive deposits or loans at interest from the members or other persons within the limits provided by the section; and in a terminating society the total amount so received on deposit or loan and not repaid may either be a sum not exceeding two-thirds of the amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages from its members, or a sum not exceeding twelve months' subscriptions on the shares for the time being in force. By s. 16 the rules of every society shall set forth whether the society intends to avail itself of the borrowing powers contained in the act, and if so within what limits not exceeding the limits prescribed by the act. By s. 43, if any society receives loans or deposits in excess of the limits prescribed by the act, the directors or committee of management of such society receiving such loans or deposits on its behalf shall be personally liable for the amount so received in excess. Where by the rules of a terminating society the amount to be received upon deposit or loan was limited to an amount not exceeding two-thirds of the amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages from its members:—Held, in an action against the directors under s. 43, that they were personally liable in respect of sums received by the society on deposit or loan in excess of the limit prescribed by the rules, notwithstanding that the amount received on deposit or loan did not exceed the other of the alternative limits prescribed by s. 15. Looker v. Wrigley; Leigh v. Wrigley, 9 Q. B. D. 397; 46 J. P. 758.

Overdrawn Banking Account, whether a "Loan" within Building Societies Act.—Held, also, that a loan at interest to the society from its bankers, secured by deposit of title-deeds, and made by allowing the society to overdraw its account at the bank, was a "loan" within the meaning of sect. 15. Ib.

On holding out Agent as authorized to borrow Money in excess of prescribed Limit.—By the certified rules of an unincorporated building society the directors might borrow money not exceeding a prescribed amount. Loans were made to the society through its secretary in accordance with advertisements, issued with the authority of the directors, that such loans might be so made by bringing the money to the office of the secretary. In each case a receipt was given by the secretary for the money as a loan to the society, with a written undertaking by him "to procure the promissory note of the directors for the loan," and afterwards, in pursuance of such undertaking, the receipt was exchanged for such note, which always bore the date of the receipt. After an amount had been so borrowed, exceeding the limit prescribed by the rules, the plaintiffs, who had on several previous occasions lent money to the society according to the above mode, paid a sum to the secretary as a loan to the society, and received from him the usual receipt and undertaking, but no promissory note of the directors was ever afterwards given, and the secretary absconded, appropriating that sum, with other moneys of the society, to his own use. In an action against the society and directors, the jury found that the society held out the secretary to the plaintiffs as having authority to receive the loan on their behalf on the terms on which it was received, and that the directors did the same:—Held, that such finding was bad in point of law as against the society, and that, as the limit for borrowing, prescribed by the rules, had been exceeded when the loan was made by the plaintiffs, the society, which had derived no benefit, was not liable for such loan. Chapleo v. Brunswick Permanent Building Society, 6 Q. B. D. 696; 50 L. J., Q. B. 372; 44 L. T. 449; 29 W. R. 529—C. A.

Held (Bramwell, L. J., doubting), that although there was no fraud on the part of the directors they were personally liable to the plaintiffs for the money which had been so advanced. Ib.

— On Orders given by Secretary.—A benefit building society is bound by orders for necessary repairs given by the secretary, though not sanctioned by the number of trustees required by the rules for transacting the ordinary business of the company, or entered in the minute-book. Allard v. Bourne, 15 C. B., N. S. 468.

— To Surveyor of Society.—A. was a surveyor of a building society, the object of which was to advance money to its members to enable them to buy or build houses, but not itself to buy or build. By one of the rules of the society, the surveyor was to look only to the funds of the society for his compensation. By resolutions at general meetings, at which the directors were present, the surveyor was directed to prepare plans for houses which the society was building, the compensation being a per-centage upon the outlay. Upon the society becoming insolvent, the surveyor sued one of the directors for this per-centage:—Held, that the surveyor was bound by the rules of the society to seek his compensation from the funds of the society solely. Alexander v. Worman, 6 H. & N. 100; 30 L. J., Ex. 198; 3 L. T. 477.

— On Promissory Note.—A note was made in the following form: "Midland Counties Building Society, Birmingham, March 12, 1858. Two months after demand, in writing, we promise to pay to T. P. 100*l.* W. H. and J. T., trustees; W. F., secretary":—Held, that the parties who signed the note were personally liable upon it, and that the right of the holder to sue them was not affected by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, and 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 21. Price v. Taylor, 5 H. & N. 540; 29 L. J., Ex. 381; 6 Jur., N. S. 402.

A promissory note in this form: "On demand we promise to pay Mr. James Allan 200*l.*, value received for the Second Gateshead Provident Benefit Building Society, and interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly," signed thus: "G. M., C. D. G., J. N., trustees: T. N., secretary":—Held, that the trustees were personally liable on the note. Allan v. Miller, 22 L. T. 825.

— On Purchases of Land.—Directors of a building society had power to invest unemployed moneys in the purchase of freeholds. Having only 621*l.* in hand, they contracted for the purchase of an estate for 2,300*l.*, payable by instalments. In the treaty they held themselves out as a land society, and they paid 800*l.* on account, in cheques signed, by their order, by the trustees, who were not directors:—Held, first, that the directors had committed a breach of trust, and were liable to replace the 800*l.* Grimes v. Harrison, 26 Beav. 435; 28 L. J., Ch. 823; 5 Jur., N. S. 528.

Held, secondly, that the vendor was under no liability. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the trustees, who had only acted ministerially, under the directors, were not liable, notwithstanding there was some informality in the authority given to them by the directors. Ib.

A society was enrolled as a benefit building society; its rules did not indicate an intention that it should act as a benefit freehold land society. The directors bought land, and mortgaged it, to secure money borrowed for the purchase, and certain members, acting as trustees, covenanted to pay the mortgage debt, and under that covenant they had to pay money. It did not appear that every member acquiesced in or was even cognizant of the transaction:—Held, that the act of the directors and trustees was ultra vires, and the trustees could not compel contribution among the shareholders to recover their loss. Kent Benefit Building Society, In re, 1 Drew. & Sm. 417; 30 L. J., Ch. 785; 7 Jur., N. S. 1045; 4 L. T. 610; 9 W. R. 686.

Unless a transaction by the committee, which is beyond the rules of the society, is authorized by each individual member, it cannot, as between the committee and the society, bind the society. Ib.

Officers.—The members of a society whose rules have been duly confirmed according to 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, have no right to compel the secretary, or other chief officer of the society, to sign a notice to convene a general meeting for the purpose of considering the question of altering the rules of the society, but such officers have a discretionary power to give or withhold their signatures to any such notice. Reg. v. Bannistyne, 20 L. J., Q. B. 210.

By the rules of a building society, all matters in dispute should be referred to two justices of the peace:—Held, on motion for a mandamus to the judge of a county court to proceed and hear a plaint brought by one of the members against the officer of the society, that the jurisdiction of the county court did not extend to any disputes arising between the members of any such society.

Payne, Ex parte, 5 D. & L. 679; 18 L. J., Q. B. 197; 13 Jur. 634.

— To replace Money Stolen from.—A treasurer of a building society is only a bailee of moneys which he receives on account of the society, and does not become a debtor to the society; and consequently where he is robbed of the society's moneys, he is discharged from liability to repay the amount by the robbery. Walker v. British Guarantee Association, 18 Q. B. 277; 21 L. J., Q. B. 257; 16 Jur. 885.

— Liability of Deceased Officer's Estate.—The secretary and manager of a building society, established and certified under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, with rules providing for the inspection and auditing of its officers' accounts, having as such officer obtained possession of moneys of the society and misappropriated them, and having died insolvent:—Held, that his estate was liable under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 12, to discharge the claim of the society for the moneys so misappropriated in priority to the claims of the other creditors; and that the negligence of the society in not examining and auditing his accounts as prescribed by the rules was no bar to the claim. Marriott, In re, Moors v. Marriott, 7 Ch. D. 543; 47 L. J., Ch. 331; 26 W. R. 626.

3. RELATIONS BETWEEN SOCIETIES AND THEIR MEMBERS.

a. Stamps.

On Drafts.—The rules of a building society enabled members after twenty-eight days' notice to withdraw their shares, in the order of the notices, as the society had money in hand enough to pay. The withdrawal was effected by drafts payable to bearer furnished by the society, and signed by the member. Members holding uncompleted shares might in the same way withdraw any part of their money. Such drafts were usually paid a few days after the notice of withdrawal. Drafts payable to bearer were also sent by the society for signature to those members entitled to interest on their shares. The society did not purchase land, but merely advanced money on mortgage:—Held, that these drafts were liable to stamp duty as cheques or orders for the payment of money, and were not within the exemption in 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 37, which is to be regarded as limited to drafts or orders drawn by an officer of the society for its purposes, or by a member of the society payable to himself only. Att.-Gen. v. Gilpin, 6 L. R., Ex. 193; 40 L. J., Ex. 134; 19 W. R. 1027.

On Mortgage Deed.—A mortgage to the trustees of a building society by a stranger to secure the repayment of money advanced to him out of the surplus funds, was exempt from stamp duty. Thorn v. Croft, 36 L. J., Ch. 68; 3 L. R., Eq. 193; 15 L. T. 205; 15 W. R. 54.

A mortgage given to a building society by one of its members, to secure the payments to become due upon his shares, is exempt from stamp duty. Walker v. Giles, 6 C. B. 662; 18 L. J., C. P. 323; 13 Jur. 588; S. P., Barnard v. Pilsworth, 6 C. B. 698, n.

A building society took a mortgage from a member before its rules had been certified and deposited. These formalities having afterwards been complied with:—Held, that the deed was exempt from stamp duty. Williams v. Hayward, 22 Beav. 220; 25 L. J., Ch. 289; 1 Jur., N. S. 128.

On Receipts.—The secretary of a building society received 12*l.* from K., and gave an unstamped receipt for that amount. The sum mentioned was paid for rent of a cottage and premises. K. had been the occupier of the cottage and premises as tenant to the owner, who, being a duly inrolled member of the society, had mortgaged it to the trustees of the society as security for an advance made to him out of the funds of the society. The mortgage deed contained a provision that, if three of the monthly subscriptions should be in arrear, the trustees might enter into possession of the mortgaged property or the receipt of the rents. At the time when the receipt was given the mortgage was in force, and the member had made default in the payments by the deed covenanted to be made by him to the trustees, who had entered into the receipt of the rents, and K. had attorned tenant to the trustees:—Held, that the receipt was liable to stamp duty, and was not exempt by reason of the provisions contained in 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 37, and 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4. Att.-Gen. v. Phillips, 24 L. T. 832; 19 W. R. 1146.

b. Mortgages.

Members' Qualification to Vote.—The monthly payments secured by mortgage to the trustees of a building society constitute a charge upon the estate within 8 Hen. 6, c. 7. Copland v. Bartlett, 6 C. B. 18; 18 L. J., C. P. 50.

A member of a building society purchased land of the yearly value of 6*l.*, and mortgaged it to the society for 84*l.* 14*s.* By the rules of the society he was bound to pay the annual sum of 11*l.* 14*s.*, of which the sum of 8*l.* 18*s.* was appropriated in part liquidation of the mortgage debt, 6*s.* for incidental expenses of the society, and 2*l.* 10*s.* for interest due on the principal remaining unpaid. By the mortgage deed, a power was reserved to the society, in case of neglect to fulfil the covenants therein, to receive the rents, sell the premises, and retain all moneys due or to become due to the society:—Held, that the entire sum of 11*l.* 14*s.* must be deducted from the annual value of the estate, and that therefore he had not an estate worth 40*s.* a-year, within 8 Hen. 6, c. 7, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 74, and was not entitled to a vote for a county. Beamish v. Stoke, 2 Lutw. Reg. Cas. 189; 11 C. B. 29; 21 L. J., C. P. 9; 16 Jur. 597.

A member of a building society purchased freehold land of the society, in which he held one share. The society advanced the purchase-money of the land, the member mortgaging the land as a security. The member was bound to make monthly payments to the society, which amounted annually to 4*l.*, and upon his failure to do so, the society might re-enter and take possession of the land. The land would have been clear of all payments when the member had paid instalments to the amount of 73*l.*, of which he had paid 71*l.* on the 31st of January, 1863. The annual value of the property unincumbered was 3*l.*:—Held, that the member had an interest of the clear yearly value of 40*s.*, and was entitled to vote as a freeholder. Robinson v. Dunkley, 15 C. B., N. S. 478; 1 H. & P. 1; 33 L. J., C. P. 57.

By Executors.—An executor effected a mortgage of leasehold property, for executorship purposes, with a power of sale, to a building society, to secure the repayment of the money advanced, as well as all fines, premiums, and interest on certain advanced shares in the society, taken by the executor for the purpose of obtaining the loan:—Held, that the executor might legally effect a mortgage with power of sale and with the incidents of a building society mortgage on advanced shares. Cruikshank v. Duffin, 13 L. R., Eq. 555; 41 L. J., Ch. 317; 26 L. T. 121; 20 W. R. 354.

Costs.—A building society made an advance on mortgage of 900*l.*, to be repaid with interest by 120 monthly payments. These payments, as well as the payment of certain fines, were, under the rules of the society, secured by the mortgage deed. A sum of 300*l.* became due to the society for such fines beyond the amount due for principal. The sum due to the society was found on taking the accounts to be about 517*l.* The master allowed costs on the lower scale only:—Held, that he was right. Cotterell v. Stratton, 9 L. R., Ch. 514; 43 L. J., Ch. 573; 30 L. T. 589; 22 W. R. 607.

On an ordinary taxation the master had disallowed the costs of a deed of re-conveyance from a benefit building society of property in a registered county, thinking that a receipt was sufficient under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 2. The decision was reversed by the court. Page, In re, 32 Beav. 485.

A member of a building society mortgaged leaseholds to the society to secure an advance, which was to be repaid by monthly instalments. The payments being in arrear, the society entered into possession. The mortgagor disputed the amount claimed by the society, but offered to deposit the amount claimed till the accounts were settled. The society then gave notice of its intention to sell, whereupon the mortgagor filed a bill for redemption, and for an injunction to restrain the sale. In taking the accounts, it was found that a smaller sum than that claimed was due to the society:—Held, that the society was entitled to costs, of which a mortgagee will be deprived only when he has been guilty of vexatious and oppressive conduct. Cotterell v. Stratton, 8 L. R., Ch. 295; 42 L. J., Ch. 417; 28 L. T. 218; 21 W. R. 234.

By One of Three Trustees to other Two.—A mortgagor, being one of three trustees of the society, executed the mortgage to the other two, one of whom subsequently resigned, and a successor was appointed:—Sembles, that the interest of the original mortgagees vested, without assignment, in the remaining trustee and the successor, exclusively of the mortgagor. Walker v. Giles, 6 C. B. 662; 18 L. J., C. P. 323; 13 Jur. 588.

Covenant to consolidate Mortgages in Rules.—A. mortgaged two leasehold plots of land, and the houses in course of erection thereon, to a building society to secure 500*l.* On the same day he executed a second mortgage of the same property to B. Subsequently A. mortgaged three other plots of land and houses to the society to secure 600*l.* B. had a charge on this property. The first mortgage contained a covenant by A. to observe all the rules of the society. One of such rules provided that if the society held more than one mortgage from any member, such member should not have power to redeem one property alone without the consent of the board. B. acted as A.'s solicitor in the matter of the first mortgage, and was the witness to his execution thereof. A. having become bankrupt, and the society having taken possession of all the houses, B. brought a redemption action. The society claimed to consolidate their mortgages as against him:—Held, that the covenant to observe the rules amounted to an express covenant that the society should have power to consolidate, and B. having notice of that covenant had expressly taken his mortgage subject to the risk of consolidation, and that the society had a right to consolidate. Andrews v. City Permanent Benefit Building Society, 44 L. T. 641.

Retaining Proceeds of Sale.—A member of a permanent building society obtained an advance in respect of his shares on his executing a mortgage in the form prescribed by the rules, by which he was to pay the principal and interest at 5*l.* per cent. by monthly subscriptions, extending over seven years. The deed contained a power of sale by the trustees of the society in case of default in payment of the subscriptions, and it was declared that the trustees should retain out of the purchase-money, after payment of expenses, "all such subscriptions, fines, and other sums of money and payments which should be then due, or which should afterwards become due, in respect of the shares during the remainder of the period of seven years, it being agreed that in case of any such sale all the moneys which would at any time afterwards become due from the mortgagor in respect of the shares, according to the rules of the association, should be considered as then immediately due and payable, and should pay the residue of the purchase-money to the mortgagor." The mortgagor paid a few of the subscriptions and then fell into arrear, and the mortgaged property was sold by the trustees:—Held, that the trustees of the society were entitled to retain out of the proceeds of the sale all subscriptions and fines payable up to the time of the completion of the sale, and such further sum as represented the balance of the principal sum remaining at that time unpaid, but that they were not entitled to any payment in respect of interest accruing after the principal had been all repaid. Osborne, Ex parte Goldsmith, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 41; 44 L. J., Bk. 1; 31 L. T. 366; 23 W. R. 49. But see Matteron v. Elderfield, 4 L. R., Ch. 207; 20 L. T. 503.

Foreclosure.—A building society is entitled to a foreclosure of mortgages to members made in respect of their shares, although the deeds and rules contain only powers of sale in case of default in payment of subscriptions. Ingelby v. Riley, 28 L. T. 55.

A decree for foreclosure in such a case properly includes an account of all subscriptions "due and owing and payable, and hereafter to become due and owing and payable," and an account of the mortgagor's share of profits made by the society, if the rules provide for their distribution. Ib.

Fines secured by covenant in a mortgage to a building society form part of the principal in taking the account of principal, interest, and costs in a foreclosure suit by the building society, and are payable with interest. Provident Permanent Building Society v. Greenhill, 9 Ch. Div. 122; 38 L. T. 140; 27 W. R. 110.

The form of foreclosure decree in the case of a mortgage to a building society does not differ from that in the case of an ordinary mortgage. Ib.

Property was conveyed by a member of a building society to the trustees, on trust for sale, to secure the moneys due to the society:—Held, that the trustees were not entitled to a foreclosure, but to a decree for sale. Seewitzer v. Mayhew, 31 Beav. 37.

— Charge upon "all the Funds, Assets, and Effects of the Society."—The defendants were an incorporated society established under the Building Societies Act, 1874. The directors being empowered by the rules of the society to borrow money, accepted a loan from the plaintiff, giving as security a bond, by which it was declared that "all the funds, assets, and effects of the society shall be held liable for the repayment." The defendants failing to repay the loan, the plaintiff sued them on the bond, and having recovered judgment, commenced an action of foreclosure in the Court of Chancery, which action was pending when a petition was filed in the county court, and an order was made for the winding up of the defendant society. The county court judge having refused to grant the plaintiff leave to continue the action of foreclosure:—Held, that the action of foreclosure ought not to be allowed to proceed, for that the society did not amount to a mortgage. Andrew or Jones v. Swansea Cambrian Benefit Building Society, 50 L. J., Q. B. 428; 44 L. T. 106; 29 W. R. 382; 45 J. P. 507.

Effect of Statutory Receipt as to vesting Legal Estate.—When the legal estate in land has been vested in a building society as mortgagees, and the society, on being paid off, indorses a receipt on the mortgage deed, as provided by s. 42 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, the effect of the receipt is to vest the legal estate in the person who in equity is best entitled to call for it, and not necessarily in the person who actually paid off the society. Thus, where there are successive equitable mortgages, and the society is paid off by the mortgagor, the effect of the statutory receipt is to vest the legal estate in the equitable mortgagee who is first in point of time; unless the society is paid off by an equitable mortgagee who had no notice of prior incumbrances, in which case the legal estate vests in that mortgagee, notwithstanding that there are incumbrances prior to his in point of date. Pease v. Jackson (3 L. R., Ch. 576) considered; Fourth City Mutual Benefit Building Society v. Williams, Marson v. Cox, 14 Ch. D. 140; 49 L. J., Ch. 245; 42 L. T. 615; 28 W. R. 572.

A., having made a lease of lands to B. for a term of years, the latter, for the purpose of obtaining a loan, mortgaged the lands to a building society, and having subsequently applied to A. for a further loan, for the purpose of paying off the money advanced by the society, and A. having agreed to lend, upon the security of the premises, a memorandum of agreement was indorsed upon the deed of mortgage, whereby B. purported to transfer to A. the premises in consideration of a loan of 100l., A. agreeing to accept the mortgage. This memorandum was signed by both parties, but was not under seal. The trustees of the society subsequently indorsed upon the mortgage deed a receipt for the money secured thereby:—Held, that the receipt of the trustees, so indorsed, was effectual under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 5, to pass the legal estate to A., although the memorandum of agreement was not under seal. Stamers v. Preston, 9 Ir. C. L. R. 351.

Some property was mortgaged to a building society, and afterwards to A. The mortgagor borrowed money from B., to pay off the building society, and a receipt was indorsed on the mortgage. Fourteen days afterwards the mortgagor executed a new mortgage to B.:—Held, that the legal estate vested, under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, in A., and not in B. Prosser v. Rice, 28 Beav. 68.

A member of a building society executed a mortgage to the trustees of the society for securing subscriptions and other moneys due in respect of his shares. He afterwards executed a second mortgage to P., and then J., without notice of the second mortgage, paid off the mortgage to the building society, and received from them the original mortgage deed, with a receipt indorsed, and the other title-deeds of the estate, and at the same time the member executed a mortgage to J. for a sum slightly exceeding the money so paid off:—Held, that the operation of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 5, was to vest the legal estate in J., as the person entitled to the equity of redemption, and that he was the first incumbrancer in respect of the mortgage money paid. Pease v. Jackson, 3 L. R., Ch. 576; 37 L. J., Ch. 725; 17 W. R. 1.

Held, secondly, that he was not entitled to tack his further advance against P., the second incumbrancer. Ib.

A. being possessed of houses held by two underleases borrowed money from a building society, and in order to secure repayment demised the houses to the society by two leases, each ten days short of the term out of which it was derived. A. afterwards obtained an assignment of the lease which had been granted to his own lessor, and then, concealing the mortgage of the underleases, mortgaged the houses to B. for a term one day short of the original lease. Subsequently C. paid off the building society and made a further advance to A., C. at the same time took from the building society a receipt in conformity with 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, and from A. two leases similar to those which had been granted to the building society. B., on discovering C.'s mortgage, commenced an action of ejectment against A. & C. for breaches of covenants contained in the leases to C.:—Held, that the action must be restrained, C. being entitled to priority over B. in respect of the sum paid to the building society, though not in respect of the further advance. Lawrence v. Clements, 31 L. T. 670.

Powers of Distress.—On a mortgage of premises to secure repayment of money advanced by a building society, it was agreed that upon non-payment the trustees of the society might distress for the amount in arrear as for rent in arrear upon a common demise. The mortgagor took possession of the premises with the consent of the trustees, but afterwards let them for three years at a quarterly payment, without the consent of the trustees, and the lessee had no knowledge of the mortgage. The mortgagor's payment and the lessee's rent were in arrear, and the trustees distrained upon the lessee's goods:—Held, that the trustees of the society were not justified in distraining. Gibbs v. Cruikshank, 28 L. T. 104.

By a deed between T., proprietor of shares in a building society, and the trustees of the society, reciting that T. had, pursuant to the rules of the society, agreed to pay unto the society, for the term of fourteen years, the quarterly sum of 16l. 3s. 2d. in respect of his shares, and that for securing the quarterly payments he had agreed to execute the security intended to be effected by that deed, T. conveyed a house of which he was seised in fee to the trustees in fee. The deed contained a proviso for quiet enjoyment by T. if he paid the quarterly sums, and observed the rules of the society and the covenants in the deed; but that in case he made default, the trustees might enter and lease or sell the house, and out of the proceeds retain the amount of payments in arrear, and pay the surplus, if any, to T.; and a clause by which T. agreed to become tenant of the house to the trustees, their heirs or assigns, or other the trustee or trustees for the time being of the society thenceforth during their will, at the clear net yearly rent of 66l., payable on the usual quarterly days, subject to the powers of distress and entry for non-payment, and to all usual remedies as in leases of like property. T. died, leaving payments in arrear; the trustees distrained upon the goods in the house, which was in the occupation of his widow, who subsequently took out administration:—Held, that the tenancy under the mortgage being at most only a tenancy at will, the distress was not made during the possession of the tenant from whom the rent became due within the proviso in 8 Ann. c. 4, s. 7, and therefore was not justified under s. 6. Turner v. Barnes, 2 B. & S. 435.

Incorrect Recitals.—The surveyor to a building society purchased land from the trustees of the society, and then mortgaged it to the trustees to secure the purchase-money. The mortgage, which was a filled-up printed form prepared by the society's solicitor, recited that the surveyor was the holder of eleven shares in the society, whereas he had never applied for shares, nor had he in fact ever been treated by the society as a shareholder. He did not read over the deed, nor were its contents explained to him by the society's solicitor prior to execution. The society having been ordered to be wound up, he was placed on the list of contributories:—Held, that as the recital was incorrect, and as he was ignorant of its existence at the time he executed the deed, he was not liable as a contributory. Victoria Permanent Benefit Building Investment and Freehold Land Society of Birmingham and the Midland Counties, In re, Empson's case, 9 L. R., Eq. 597; 22 L. T. 855; 18 W. R. 565.

Assignment by Mortgagor, "Subject to the Mortgage to the Building Society"—Effect of.—A member of a building society received an advance from the funds of the society, and deposited the lease of his land with the trustees as security for repayment, at the same time signing an agreement to execute a mortgage. He afterwards executed a mortgage to the trustees containing a power of sale, under which they sold the property for the remainder of the term. Previously, however, to the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagor assigned the premises, "subject to the mortgage to the building society," to the defendant for valuable consideration, who thereby became possessed of the legal estate:—Held, that the defendant must be taken to have had notice that the mortgage would contain a power of sale, and he was declared to be trustee of the property for the plaintiff. Leigh v. Lloyd, 2 De G., J. & S. 330.

Liability of Members to New Rules.—A building society advanced to members the amount of their shares, taking mortgages to secure the sums advanced, with premiums and interest. Each mortgage deed contained a covenant by the member to pay, at the times and in manner prescribed by the rules for the time being applicable thereto respectively, the sum payable periodically by way of subscription or otherwise in respect of the shares until the shares, with interest, should be realized and paid, and the premium, with interest, should be paid, and that in the meantime (except where varied by the deed) the rules for the time being of the society should, in respect of the same shares, be observed by the member. The proviso for redemption was on due realization and payment of the said shares, premiums, and interest according to the covenant. Afterwards new rules were adopted by the society, which subjected the equity of redemption of advanced members to certain additional payments towards meeting the society's losses; and Rule I. of the new rules declared that, so far as the rules of law and equity would permit, those rules should apply to all the members as well present as future, and to all its transactions as well past as future:—Held, that members advanced prior to the adoption of the new rules were entitled to redeem their securities on payment of those sums which they were liable to pay according to the rules existing at the date of their advances. Norwich and Norfolk Provident Permanent Building Society, In re, Smith, Ex parte, 1 Ch. D. 481; 45 L. J., Ch. 143; 24 W. R. 103.

Held, also, that the covenant to make certain payments and in the meantime to observe the rules did not involve a liability to further payments imposed by subsequent rules. Id.

Held, also, that Rule I. exempted from the application of the new rules existing members whose contracts with the society would, by the new rules, be substantially varied. Id.

Covenants of Members to repay Advances.—The trustees of a building society advanced to a member 4,000l., to be repaid by monthly instalments, and he by deed, for securing such payments and the observance of the rules of the society, demised leasehold premises to the trustees. It was agreed that upon non-payment of three successive instalments, or non-observance of the rules, they might sell the premises, and upon any sale the whole amount thereinbefore stipulated to be paid by instalments as aforesaid, and remaining unpaid, should be held immediately payable, and be retainable accordingly from the proceeds of sale, subject to such discount as the directors of the society for the time being might think proper to allow. The member also covenanted to pay the instalments. Upon non-payment, the trustees exercised their power of sale, and brought an action upon the deed to recover the whole of the difference between the proceeds of sale and the amount of unpaid instalments:—Held, that these words implied a covenant to pay the whole amount upon non-payment of three instalments. Sherriff v. Glenton, 28 L. T. 65.

Another deed for acquiring a further sum on the same terms, incorporated all powers and authorities given by the deed for the recovery of the moneys thereby made payable:—Held, also, that these words implied the same covenant. Ib.

Repayment of Advances.—A member of a building society, in May, 1873, obtained from it as advanced shares a loan of 3,000*l.*, repayable by way of annuity in thirteen years by 156 monthly subscriptions or instalments of 30*l.* each, together with certain fines in default of punctual payment. One of the rules provided that "should any member desire to pay off or satisfy the money due by him to the society, he shall be at liberty to do so by paying all subscriptions, fines and other moneys which may be then in arrear, as well as the present value of all future payments, to be computed at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. on all annuities having not more than five years unexpired of the original term . . . and at the rate of 6*l.* per cent. when there shall be more than ten, and not more than fifteen years unexpired." The loan was secured by a mortgage deed of the 30th January, 1874, whose terms were in accordance with those directed by another rule, and which stipulated that in case of the borrowers being two months in arrear, the society's trustees might sell the mortgaged premises, and after paying all expenses, should "retain in trust for the society all repayments, fines and other payments and sums then due to the society in respect of the shares and the then present value of the future repayments to be made in respect of the shares to the society, calculated to the end of the term for which the shares have been advanced, and which future payments shall be discounted after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum interest on such repayments upon the principle of repayments made at the end of each year." The mortgaged premises were subsequently sold in the Landed Estates Court, on the petition of an incumbrancer puisne to the society, the borrower being over two months in arrear at the date of its being filed; and in July, 1875, on the settlement of the final schedule, the society claimed besides twenty-three months' instalments, which were then in arrear, and the fines upon them, "the present value of future payments at 6*l.* per cent. discount, as per rule." This mode of estimating the future instalments was objected by puisne incumbrancers, and the judge of the court decided that (in addition to arrears and fines) the future principal remaining due to the society at the date of the sale was to be ascertained, and interest thereon calculated from that date at a rate to be fixed by an actuary, having regard to the terms of the mortgage and the rules. The society having appealed:—Held, that the society was entitled (in addition to arrears and fines) to the value, at the date of payment, of the future repayments in respect of the mortgage, calculated from such date, to the end of the term for which the mortgage was originally taken in pursuance of the rule under which the deed was framed, subject to a rebate or discount at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum. O'Donohoe, In re, 10 Ir. R., Eq. 221.

Redemption.—In a suit in equity by a borrowing member of a building society against the trustees of the society to redeem his mortgage:—Held, first, that in taking the accounts the member was entitled to be given credit for the same proportion of profits (bonus) to which, at the date of his notice to redeem, a withdrawing but unadvanced member would have been entitled. Fleming v. Self, 3 De G., Mac. & G. 997; 3 Eq. B. 14; 24 L. J., Ch. 29; 1 Jur., N. S. 25.

Held, secondly, that in taking the accounts of the monthly payments, which would have to be paid by him as the price of redemption, the possible and not the probable duration of the society must be considered. Ib.

The decision in Fleming v. Self, supra, extends to the deduction of redemption-moneys paid in by a mortgagor, although that point is not expressly referred to in the judgment. Smith v. Pilkington, 1 De G., F. & J. 120; 29 L. J., Ch. 227.

Trustees of a building society, acting on the rules of the society, declared a bonus of 23*l.* per share, calculating the amount in forgetfulness, as they alleged, of the decision in Fleming v. Self, and therefore on the assumption that advanced members, that is, members who had borrowed money of and executed mortgages to the society, could not be entitled, on redeeming those mortgages, to anything on account of bonuses. A., an advanced member, then gave notice of his desire to redeem:—Held, that he was entitled to have credit for the bonus of 23*l.* on each of his shares, and that the court would not interfere to relieve the society from the consequences of the act of the trustees. Archer v. Harrison, 7 De G., Mac. & G. 404; 3 Jur., N. S. 194.

A member of a benefit building society obtained an advance on his shares, on executing a mortgage in the form prescribed by the rules, by which he covenanted to repay the advance with interest by monthly subscriptions, calculated to extend over a certain number of months. The mortgage contained a power of sale in the event of the subscriptions falling into arrear for three months, and the purchase-money was to be applied in satisfaction of all moneys then due or thereafter to become due from the mortgagor in respect of subscriptions, fines, insurance or otherwise, under the mortgage deed, and the surplus to be paid to the mortgagor. The mortgagor paid a few of the subscriptions, and then fell into arrear, and the mortgaged premises were sold by the directors:—Held, that the mortgagor was not entitled to any rebate or discount upon the amount of subscriptions not due at the time of the sale, although the rules prescribed that such an allowance should be made in case of a mortgagor redeeming his mortgage before the expiration of the full period of payment. Matterson v. Elderfield, 4 L. R., Ch. 207; 20 L. T. 503; 17 W. R. 422.

In such a case there is no difference between a permanent society, and one intended to be wound up after a definite period. Ib.

— Before Period fixed—Premium to be Paid.—A building society may properly, if in accord-arrear upon a common demise. The mortgagor took possession of the premises with the consent of the trustees, but afterwards let them for three years at a quarterly payment, without the consent of the trustees, and the lessee had no knowledge of the mortgage. The mortgagor's payment and the lessee's rent were in arrear, and the trustees distrained upon the lessee's goods:—Held, that the trustees of the society were not justified in distraining. Gibbs v. Cruikshank, 28 L. T. 104.

By a deed between T., proprietor of shares in a building society, and the trustees of the society, reciting that T. had, pursuant to the rules of the society, agreed to pay unto the society, for the term of fourteen years, the quarterly sum of 16l. 3s. 2d. in respect of his shares, and that for securing the quarterly payments he had agreed to execute the security intended to be effected by that deed, T. conveyed a house of which he was seised in fee to the trustees in fee. The deed contained a proviso for quiet enjoyment by T. if he paid the quarterly sums, and observed the rules of the society and the covenants in the deed; but that in case he made default, the trustees might enter and lease or sell the house, and out of the proceeds retain the amount of payments in arrear, and pay the surplus, if any, to T.; and a clause by which T. agreed to become tenant of the house to the trustees, their heirs or assigns, or other the trustee or trustees for the time being of the society thenceforth during their will, at the clear net yearly rent of 66l., payable on the usual quarterly days, subject to the powers of distress and entry for non-payment, and to all usual remedies as in leases of like property. T. died, leaving payments in arrear; the trustees distrained upon the goods in the house, which was in the occupation of his widow, who subsequently took out administration:—Held, that the tenancy under the mortgage being at most only a tenancy at will, the distress was not made during the possession of the tenant from whom the rent became due within the proviso in 8 Ann. c. 4, s. 7, and therefore was not justified under s. 6. Turner v. Barnes, 2 B. & S. 435.

Incorrect Recitals.—The surveyor to a building society purchased land from the trustees of the society, and then mortgaged it to the trustees to secure the purchase-money. The mortgage, which was a filled-up printed form prepared by the society's solicitor, recited that the surveyor was the holder of eleven shares in the society, whereas he had never applied for shares, nor had he in fact ever been treated by the society as a shareholder. He did not read over the deed, nor were its contents explained to him by the society's solicitor prior to execution. The society having been ordered to be wound up, he was placed on the list of contributories:—Held, that as the recital was incorrect, and as he was ignorant of its existence at the time he executed the deed, he was not liable as a contributory. Victoria Permanent Benefit Building Investment and Freehold Land Society of Birmingham and the Midland Counties, In re, Empson's case, 9 L. R., Eq. 597; 22 L. T. 855; 18 W. R. 565.

Assignment by Mortgagor, "Subject to the Mortgage to the Building Society"—Effect of.—A member of a building society received an advance from the funds of the society, and deposited the lease of his land with the trustees as security for repayment, at the same time signing an agreement to execute a mortgage. He afterwards executed a mortgage to the trustees containing a power of sale, under which they sold the property for the remainder of the term. Previously, however, to the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagor assigned the premises, "subject to the mortgage to the building society," to the defendant for valuable consideration, who thereby became possessed of the legal estate:—Held, that the defendant must be taken to have had notice that the mortgage would contain a power of sale, and he was declared to be trustee of the property for the plaintiff. Leigh v. Lloyd, 2 De G., J. & S. 330.

Liability of Members to New Rules.—A building society advanced to members the amount of their shares, taking mortgages to secure the sums advanced, with premiums and interest. Each mortgage deed contained a covenant by the member to pay, at the times and in manner prescribed by the rules for the time being applicable thereto respectively, the sum payable periodically by way of subscription or otherwise in respect of the shares until the shares, with interest, should be realized and paid, and the premium, with interest, should be paid, and that in the meantime (except where varied by the deed) the rules for the time being of the society should, in respect of the same shares, be observed by the member. The proviso for redemption was on due realization and payment of the said shares, premiums, and interest according to the covenant. Afterwards new rules were adopted by the society, which subjected the equity of redemption of advanced members to certain additional payments towards meeting the society's losses; and Rule I. of the new rules declared that, so far as the rules of law and equity would permit, those rules should apply to all the members as well present as future, and to all its transactions as well past as future:—Held, that members advanced prior to the adoption of the new rules were entitled to redeem their securities on payment of those sums which they were liable to pay according to the rules existing at the date of their advances. Norwich and Norfolk Provident Permanent Building Society, In re, Smith, Ex parte, 1 Ch. D. 481; 45 L. J., Ch. 143; 24 W. R. 103.

Held, also, that the covenant to make certain payments and in the meantime to observe the rules did not involve a liability to further payments imposed by subsequent rules. Ib.

Held, also, that Rule I. exempted from the application of the new rules existing members whose contracts with the society would, by the new rules, be substantially varied. Ib.

Covenants of Members to repay Advances.—The trustees of a building society advanced to a member 4,000l., to be repaid by monthly instalments, and he by deed, for securing such payments and the observance of the rules of the society, demised leasehold premises to the trustees. It was agreed that upon non-payment of three successive instalments, or non-observance of the rules, they might sell the premises, and upon any sale the whole amount thereinbefore stipulated to be paid by instalments as aforesaid, and remaining unpaid, should be held immediately payable, and be retainable accordingly from the proceeds of sale, subject to such disposition as himself, as the sole defendant thereto, and seeking to have the benefit of the restrictive covenants entered into by the defendant, and to restrain him from building in contravention thereof, and a mandatory injunction to compel him to take down buildings already erected by him in contravention thereof, and for damages:—Held, that the trustees of the society were necessary parties to the suit. Eastwood v. Lever, 4 De G., J. & S. 114.

d. Shares.

Forfeiture of.—By a rule of a building society, each member was to pay 10s. per share per month, together with certain fines in case of default; and any member not having executed a mortgage to the society, "thereinafter mentioned, continuing to neglect the payment of his or her monthly subscriptions for six consecutive monthly months, should thereupon cease to be a member of the society, and forfeit all his or her interest therein." By other rules the management was vested in twelve directors, a meeting of quorum of whom was to consist of five. A., a member of the society (not having executed a mortgage), neglected for seven successive months to pay his monthly subscriptions in respect of a share held by him, but afterwards tendered the amount of his subscriptions, and the fines payable thereon, to two of the directors, who were in attendance for the purpose of receiving payments, and who accepted the same. At the first monthly meeting of the directors after the money was so paid, it was resolved that A. had, on the sixth default, ceased to be a member of the society, and forfeited all his interest therein; and it was ordered that his name should be erased, and the money received from him by the two directors be returned to him:—Held, that the share was properly forfeited; that the acceptance of the money by the directors did not amount to a waiver of the forfeiture; and that the rule was not unreasonable. Card v. Carr, 1 C. B., N. S. 197; 26 L. J., C. P. 113.

Where a rule of a society provided that if any member shall for any cause whatever permit any monthly subscription on any share or shares held by him or her to be in arrear for six months, such share or shares and all moneys paid in respect thereof shall at the expiration of such six months become absolutely forfeited to the company:—Held, that the neglect of a member to pay his subscriptions and fines for six months operated a forfeiture of his share or shares at the option of the directors. Moore v. Rawlins, 6 C. B., N. S. 289.

Extinguishment of.—A plaintiff, a member of a benefit building society, received the amount of his shares in advance, and executed a mortgage to the society as a security. He afterwards conveyed the property to the defendant, subject to the mortgage, and the defendant covenanted to pay all subscriptions and other payments to become due in respect of the shares by the rules of the society. The shares were not assigned, but remained in the name of the plaintiff. By one of the rules, the managers were to have power to determine the amount of money to be paid by any mortgagor in full for the claims of the society upon his property, on payment of which the shares in respect of which the security might be made should be wholly extinguished. The society having resolved that members might redeem their mortgages on payment of so much per share, the defendant paid the amount, and the usual receipt was indorsed on the mortgage deed as under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4:—Held, that the shares were thereby extinguished, and the plaintiff released from any further liability to the society, and consequently that the defendant could not be called on under the covenant to pay to the plaintiff money which he had paid to the society in respect of the shares subsequently in consequence of the sum fixed by the managers for the payment in full not being found sufficient to meet the exigencies of the society. Priestly v. Hopwood, 10 L. T. 646; 12 W. R. 1031.

A rule declared, that "the minutes of the managers entered in the minute-book and signed by the managers concurring therein, shall be sufficient authority for the execution of any of the aforesaid powers:—Held, that the omission of the managers to sign, in conformity with the above rule, did not invalidate their execution of the powers intrusted to them. Ib.

How far within Mortmain Act.—Shares in a company, of which the object was to purchase land, and build upon or otherwise improve it and sell or let it, and shares in a building society are not within the Mortmain Act, 9 Geo. 2, c. 36. Entwistle v. Davis, 4 L. R., Eq. 272; 36 L. J., Ch. 825.

e. Fines.

Amount of.—An action was brought for the redemption of a mortgage made to the trustees of a building society by one of their borrowing members, who was the holder of twenty-eight shares. The question was, what amount of fines the trustees were entitled to charge the mortgagor, under the rules of the society, for non-payment of his subscriptions. Table IV. at the end of the society's book of rules purported to shew the fines which borrowing members were liable to pay on default of payment of their monthly subscriptions and interest on shares from one to ten, for a period of from one to six months, the fines being progressive from month to month; but there was no express charge of fines for the seventh and subsequent months:—Held, that according to the true construction of Table IV., the fines were not to increase in amount after the sixth month. Looejoy v. Mul-karn, 46 L. J., Ch. 630; 37 L. T. 77—C. A.

Held, also, that the claim of the society was not restricted to fines for instalments due during the first six months, but that they were entitled to charge a fine of 5s. for each instalment of each share during the five years during which the instalments were payable. Ib.

Construction of Rules, as to.—The trustees of a building society, established for the purpose of raising by monthly subscriptions a fund from which money might be advanced to its members to enable them to erect or to purchase freehold or leasehold property, such money to be secured by mortgages of such property, and to be repaid by monthly instalments, were, under one of its rules, empowered to charge borrowing members, as a penalty in case of such repayments being in arrear, "fines at the rate of threepence per share for the first month, and for each and every succeeding month threepence per share additional on such repayments." The trustees having charged a borrowing member fines as cumulative in arithmetical progression:—Held, that on such computation the fines would not be reasonable within 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 1, and that the rule of the society, admitting of different constructions, was to be construed in favour of the party who had incurred the penalty. Tierney, 1a re, 9 Ir. R., Eq. 1.

Four months after ruling of the final schedule of incumbrances and allocation of the funds, a puisne incumbrancer, who had had notice of all the proceedings in the matter, applied to have the claim of the petitioners re-examined, on the ground that they had erroneously computed certain charges against the estate of the owners. A considerable portion of the funds, though allocated, being still in court undistributed, and it appearing that the computation of the petitioners had been erroneous, the application was granted on condition of the applicant paying all the costs consequent upon his laches. Ib.

Interest on.]—No interest is chargeable upon fines imposed upon the mortgagor for default, or for acting in contravention of the rules of the society. Ingoldby v. Riley, 28 L. T. 55.

2. Determination of Disputes.

By Arbitration.]—It is contrary to the language of the statute, and against the policy of the law, that internal disputes between the members or office-holders of a building society and the society should be the subject of actions at law and suits in equity. Thompson v. Planet Benefit Building Society, 15 L. R., Eq. 333; 42 L. J., Ch. 364; 28 L. T. 549; 21 W. R. 474.

A bill, filed by a member of a building society against the society, its trustees and directors, stated that the rules were duly certified, and were, "so far as material," as followed. It then set out certain rules, numbered 12, 13, and 14; but no rule as to referring disputes to arbitration. It set out a letter containing an offer by the directors to refer all matters in dispute between the member and them to arbitration under the rules, and stated that the defendants sometimes alleged that the dispute ought to be referred to arbitration, but that the plaintiff charged that, having regard to the relief therein-after prayed, he was not bound to refer the dispute to arbitration, and prayed, amongst other things, that it might be declared that the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the 12th and 13th rules of the society. The act requires that the rules of every building society shall contain a rule for referring disputes to arbitration. The defendants demurred:—Held, that the court was able to take judicial notice of the rule of the society for referring disputes to arbitration, though it was not set out in the bill. Ib.

A bill by a holder of shares in a building society against the society and their directors alleged misconduct against the directors in respect of acts which, for anything that appeared, might have been authorized by the rules of the society as stated by the bill; prayed that the plaintiff was not bound by certain new rules that had been passed; and prayed the benefit of certain of the original rules, and for relief against the directors personally:—Held, that this was a dispute for the decision of which arbitrators were the proper authority; and demurrers by the society and by the directors allowed. Ib.

To bring a dispute within the arbitration clause of the rules of a building society, it must be one which arises between the trustees and the party claiming as a member of the society. Prentice v. London, 10 L. R., C. P. 679; 44 L. J., C. P. 353; 33 L. T. 251.

The plaintiff was a transferee for value of shares in a building society. The transferor had been the secretary of the society, and in that capacity had incurred liabilities to the trustees to a considerable amount. The latter, after the transfer, but before they had notice of it, passed a resolution to forfeit the shares of the transferor, and appropriated their value towards the deficit. The plaintiff sued the trustees for refusing to admit him to the benefits to which he claimed to be entitled as a member of the society and as the holder of shares therein. The trustees pleaded that the cause of action was a dispute between them as trustees, and the transferor as a member and the plaintiff as a person claiming on account of a member of the society, and was a dispute which, according to the rules of the society and the statutes, ought to be settled by arbitration:—Held, that, as the trustees denied the right of the plaintiff to be a member of the society, they were estopped from saying that the dispute was a dispute between them and him as a member, within the rule. Ib.

The rules of a building society incorporated under the Building Societies Act, 1874, provided, pursuant to s. 16, sub-s. 9, that disputes between the society and any of its members should be settled by reference to arbitration. A member of the society having commenced an action for account against the society:—Held, that the jurisdiction of the court was ousted, and that the matters in dispute must be referred to arbitration. Wright v. Monarch Investment Building Society, 5 Ch. D. 726; 46 L. J., Ch. 649.

The defendants were trustees of a benefit building society, inrolled pursuant to 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, and the statement of claim alleged that the plaintiff became a member of the society, and was the holder of first-class shares, and during his membership paid his subscriptions; that by a rule of the society any member holding first-class shares, desiring to withdraw from the society, should, after giving three months' notice, receive back the whole amount paid by him for subscriptions; that the plaintiff gave the requisite notice of withdrawal, and there then became due to him from the society the sum of 35l. 8s. 6d., which the plaintiff was entitled to be paid according to the rule:—Held, that the statement of claim was bad; for it alleged a dispute between a building society and a member, and a rule must be assumed to exist referring disputes of that kind to arbitration or justices, pursuant to 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27, incorporated by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4, and the mere notice of withdrawal given and assented to would not prevent the application of the rule. Huckle v. Wilson, 2 C. P. D. 410; 26 W. R. 98.

A rule of a building society, which requires that all disputes which may arise between the society and any member thereof shall be referred to arbitration, relates only to disputes between the society and a member as member. Morrison v. Glover, 4 Ex. 430; 19 L. J., Ex. 20.

A rule of a building society provided that any member who should be desirous of withdrawing from the society any share or shares should be allowed to do so on giving two months' notice in writing of such his intention to the secretary, subject to the payment of all fines then due, and to a certain deduction as a proportionate share of expenses incurred: provided that the deduction should not extend to widows and children of deceased members, who should always have priority in cases of withdrawal. Another rule provided, that the board of management for the time being should determine all disputes which might arise respecting the construction of the rules or of any of the clauses, matters or things therein contained, and also of any additions, alterations or amendments which should or might thereafter arise between the board and any member, and in the event of their decision being unsatisfactory, then to be referred to arbitration. A member of the society gave notice of his intention to withdraw, and claimed the amount of his shares. The board refused to pay it, on the ground that previously to the notice other members had given notice of withdrawal, and were therefore entitled to priority of payment, and that the society had no funds to pay the claim. The member brought an action:—Held, that his claim was a dispute between the board and a member of the society respecting the construction of a rule, and therefore the action was not maintainable, but the dispute must be determined by the board or arbitrators. Wright v. Deley, 4 H. & C. 209.

— Summons to refer to Arbitration and to Stay the Action—Dispute between Society and Member.—By the rules of a building society incorporated under the Building Societies Act, 1874, it was provided, pursuant to s. 16, sub-s. 9 of the act, that a reference of every matter in dispute between the society and any member of the society should be referred to the arbitration of the registrar of friendly societies. The plaintiff, who was an advanced member of the society and had executed a mortgage for securing his subscriptions and fines in respect of the advance, commenced an action against the society for an account in respect of the mortgage transaction:—Held, that the jurisdiction of the court was ousted, and that the society was entitled to have the dispute referred to arbitration. Wright v. Monarch Investment Building Society (5 Ch. D. 726) approved. Hack v. London Provident Building Society, 23 Ch. D. 103; 52 L. J., Ch. 541; 48 L. T. 247; 31 W. R. 392.—C. A. Affirming 52 L. J., Ch. 225; 31 W. R. 378.

— Validity of Awards.—Where the rules of a society authorized the directors to invest the funds on mortgage for ten years at any rate of interest, or in building on or improving land mortgaged to them, and authorized members to withdraw their shares upon giving notice, and provided that such members should not be liable to any future fines, but should be entitled to receive the net amount of their subscriptions paid, with interest, and also a share of profits, but no time was specified for making such payments; and the directors had power to pay such claims in the order in which they arose: the amount payable to a withdrawing member having been referred:—Held, that it was competent to the arbitrator to consider, when, consistently with the due prosecution of the other objects of the society, such payment should be made, and to fix a time for such payment accordingly. Armitage v. Walker, 2 K. & J. 211; 2 Jur., N. S. 13.

Held, also, that a court of equity had no jurisdiction to alter the award, unless there was error upon the face of it, or it was shewn to have been corruptly obtained. Ib.

Therefore, where principal and interest only were awarded, the court would not calculate whether the amounts were correct according to the rules, or whether the principal included profits or not. Ib.

The award directed a sum to be paid for costs, which the arbitrator had no power to do, except by a rule made after a member had given notice to withdraw:—Held, that this part of the award was bad, but, being separable, it did not vitiate the rest. Ib.

— By Action—To Recover Amount of Subscriptions.—The rules of a building society formed under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, provided that the directors should determine all disputes which might arise concerning the affairs of the company, or respecting the construction of the rules or any of the clauses or things contained, and also of any bye-laws, additions, alterations or amendments which should or might arise between the trustees, officers, or other shareholders of the company, and the decision of the board if satisfactory should be conclusive, but if not satisfactory, reference should be made to arbitration pursuant to 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27:—Held, that a claim by the trustees of the company for subscriptions on shares under a covenant entered into by a shareholder with them to pay the subscriptions and interest on his shares according to the rules of the society, and to perform the rules thereof in respect of the shares, was not a dispute within the meaning of the statute or rule, and therefore that the shareholder was properly sued in a court of law. Farmer v. Giles, 5 H. & N. 753; 30 L. J., Ex. 65; 8 W. R. 649.

Held, also, that the covenant was absolute, and that it was no answer that the covenantor had ceased to be a shareholder of the society at the time the subscriptions became due. Ib.

A building society was established to enable parties to purchase freehold or leasehold property within twenty-five miles of London; and actions and suits were to be brought and defended in the names of the trustees; but no such proceedings were to be taken or defended until the approbation of a majority of the members present at a special meeting should have been obtained. The president had power to call a special meeting of the committee; and, on receiving a written request, signed by twelve of the members, to convene a special general meeting, he was, within three days after, to convene such meeting:—Held, that an action brought with the approbation of the majority of the members present at a special general meeting was well brought within the meaning of the rule. Cutbill v. Kingdom, 1 Ex. 494; 17 L. J., Ex. 177.

By a rule, the committee was to determine all disputes which might arise respecting the construction of their rules, or any of the clauses, matters or things therein contained; the decision to be conclusive if satisfactory; but, if not satisfactory, reference to be made to arbitration:—Held, that this rule referred only to disputes respecting the construction of the rules, and did not prevent the trustees suing for the recovery of subscriptions and fines. Ib.

Action upon a mortgage between trustees of a building society and a member, whereby, in consideration of a sum of money the amount appropriated in respect of his shares, and paid to him by the trustees, he mortgaged lands to the trustees, for the use of the society, and covenanted to make the payments required by the rules of the society, and to perform all the rules in respect of his shares. Breach; the non-payment of certain monthly instalments, and of certain subscriptions and fines. Pleas, first, that by a rule the directors should decide upon all disputes that might arise between the society and any member respecting any matter relating to the society and such member, and the decision of the directors, if satisfactory to both parties, should be conclusive, but if not satisfactory, such dispute should be referred to arbitrators, pursuant to 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27; and that arbitrators had been appointed, and that the member had never assented to any decision of the directors. Secondly, that by a rule, if, after the execution of a mortgage, a member failed for six monthly nights to pay all subscriptions, the directors should appoint a person to collect the rents of the premises, and if insufficient, or the member refused to allow or to empower such collection, then the directors to sell the property; that the causes of action were in respect of certain subscriptions, which were for more than six calendar months after the execution of the mortgage due; that the defendant had failed for six monthly nights; and that the mortgaged premises were a sufficient security.—Held, first, that the declaration shewed a right of action in the trustees, under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4, and 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 21. Reeves v. White, 17 Q. B. 995; 21 L. J., Q. B. 169; 16 Jur. 637.

Held, secondly, that the first plea was good, inasmuch as the summary remedy provided by the statutes for settlement of the disputes by arbitration is conclusive, and ousts the courts of jurisdiction. Ib.

Held, also, that the trustees were entitled to judgment, inasmuch as the power to collect rents, or to sell, given to the directors, did not prevent their bringing an action on the express covenant to pay the subscriptions. Ib.

— In respect of Accounts under a Mortgage.—A benefit building society made certain rules, one of which was, that in case of any dispute arising between the society and any member thereof, reference should be made to arbitration, pursuant to the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56. L. became a member of the society and executed certain mortgages to the persons who acted as its trustees. In these mortgages he covenanted, among other things, to observe the rules of the society. L. did not keep up the payments secured by the mortgages, and the trustees took possession of some of the mortgaged premises, and sold them. L. brought an action praying for accounts, and an injunction to prevent future sales, &c. The trustees insisted that he was, by the rules, precluded from any right of action, and must proceed by arbitration under these rules.—Held, that the rules did not preclude him from a right of action, for that proceedings in respect of accounts under a mortgage and sale of the property, which might include title to redemption or a judgment of foreclosure, were not such disputes, between the society and a member, as the statutes had contemplated. Mulhern v. Lord, 4 App. Cas. 182; 48 L. J., Ch. 745; 40 L. T. 594; 27 W. R. 510.

Per Lord O'Hagan:—The onus of shewing that a complaining party has lost the ordinary right to maintain an action lies on him who denies such right. Ib. Affirming 47 L. J., Ch. 228; 38 L. T. 265; 26 W. R. 319—C. A.

A member of a building society had, upon having the amount of his shares advanced to him, executed a mortgage of premises to the trustees, under the rules of the society, to secure the payments of the subscriptions, interest and bonus, payable by the rules of the society in respect of those shares. Subsequently he claimed to redeem his mortgage for a less sum than the trustees, as mortgagees, were willing to accept, and upon their refusal to refer the dispute to arbitration, obtained an order of two justices for the delivery to him of the mortgage deed.—Held, that this was not a dispute which could be referred to arbitration; and therefore the court granted a certiorari to remove the order of the justices in order to be quashed for want of jurisdiction. Reg. v. Trafford, 4 El. & Bl. 122; 24 L. J., M. C. 20; 1 Jur., N. S. 252.

By a rule, disputes between the society and any of its members were to be referred to arbitration. A member, borrowing the amount of his share from the society, gave the trustees a mortgage of premises held by him on lease, which contained a clause of forfeiture on non-payment of rent, and he covenanted, by the mortgage deed, to pay his dues to the society, and to pay his landlord the rent reserved by his lease.—Held, that on default by the mortgagor in payment of the dues, and of the rent, the trustees might proceed at law, and were not bound by the arbitration clause. Doe d. Morrison v. Glover, 15 Q. B. 103.

4. WINDING-UP.

Jurisdiction of Court.—The Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to wind up a building society under the Companies Act, 1862. Midland Counties Benefit Building Society, In re, 4 De G., J. & S. 468; 33 L. J., Ch. 739; 11 Jur., N. S. 229; 13 W. R. 339.

Building societies are quite distinct from friendly and also industrial or provident societies, and are not affected by the provisions of the statutes regulating the latter two classes of companies. Ib.

The winding-up provisions of the Companies Acts, 1862 and 1867, are applicable to societies registered under the Building Societies Act, 1874. Andrew or Jones v. Scahsea Cambrian Benefit Building Society, 50 L. J., Q. B. 428; 44 L. T. 106; 29 W. R. 382; 45 J. P. 507.

A building society of the ordinary kind, certified under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, was within the winding-up acts, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108. St. George's Building Society, In re, 4 Drew. 154; 27 L. J., Ch. 96; 3 Jur., N. S. 683.

On whose Petition.—An order to wind up a building society whose rules do not give it express power to borrow, may be obtained on the petition of a person, who, under the rules of the society, has deposited money therein with a view of becoming a shareholder, but before becoming one, has given proper notice to withdraw the money and been unable to obtain it. But such petition must not be a mere creditors' petition, but must express that the petitioner is a creditor in respect of money advanced by him as a member of the society which he has given notice to withdraw. Queen's Benefit Building Society, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 815; 40 L. J., Ch. 381; 24 L. T. 346; 19 W. R. 597, 762.

A petition was presented by four members of a permanent building society, whose shares had been advanced on mortgage, for winding up the society. One of the rules of the society gave the trustees powers to borrow any money that might be necessary for the purposes of the society, under which considerable sums of money had been borrowed on deposit, and some of the depositors pressed for their money, which the society was unable to pay without calling on their members. The committee of the society had accordingly proposed that the business should be transferred to another company and the society wound up, to which the great majority of the shareholders had agreed. After the petition was presented, the creditors of the society executed a release to the petitioners from their debts, and the committee offered to effect a transfer of their mortgages:—Held, that, as the release of the petitioners operated as a release to the whole society, the petitioners were under no direct or indirect liability in respect of the existing debts; that the society being one of unlimited liability, and the rule as to borrowing ultra vires, the insolvency was not proved; and that the interest which the petitioners had in the profits, as advanced members, was not sufficient to induce the court to make a winding-up order contrary to the wishes of the great majority of the other members, and the petition was therefore dismissed, but without costs. Professional, Commercial and Industrial Benefit Building Society, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 856; 25 L. T. 397; 19 W. R. 1153.

Directors of a building society, the rules of which gave no power to borrow, borrowed a sum of money for the purpose of advancing it to their members on the security of their shares. The lender of the money afterwards presented a petition for an order to wind up the company:—Held, that the transaction was ultra vires, and that the petitioner had no legal or equitable debt against the company, and the petition was accordingly dismissed. National Permanent Benefit Building Society, In re, Williamson, Ex parte, 5 L. R., Ch. 309; 22 L. T. 284; 18 W. R. 388.

By the rules of a building society it was provided that any member holding investment shares who should be desirous of withdrawing his investment should be allowed to do so upon giving a month's notice in writing, and that if several members should give notice at one time they should be paid in rotation according to priority of notice. Provisions were also made for the reference of disputes to arbitration. A., the holder of five investment shares representing 250*l.*, gave notice of withdrawal. The society had previously received notices from a large number of members of their desire to withdraw their investment shares to the amount of about 350,000*l.*, which sum then remained to be paid. Subsequently alterations were made in the rules, and it was provided that payment to withdrawing members of their shares should be made by instalments. A., not having been paid, at the expiration of the month, gave the statutory notice under the 199th section of the Companies Act, 1862, and subsequently presented a petition for winding up the society. The society was perfectly solvent, but time was required to realize the assets:—Held, that the petitioner as a withdrawing member was in a different position to an outside creditor, and was not entitled ex debito justitiæ to an order for winding up the society; and the court, in the exercise of its discretion, dismissed the petition with costs. Planet Benefit Building and Investment Society, In re, 14 L. R., Eq. 441; 41 L. J., Ch. 738; 27 L. T. 638; 20 W. R. 935.

Winding-up Order—Position of Members—Compulsory Withdrawal.—A building society, registered under the Building Societies Act, 1874, had for its objects—(1) to form a good investment for investors; (2) to advance to shareholders money for building and other purposes, to a not greater extent than the amount of their shares, on their granting a bond for the same over heritable security. The rules provided that the shares were to be limited to 25*l.*; that a shareholder who had not received an advance was to pay up his shares by monthly instalments; and when such instalments with profits amounted to 25*l.* per share he was to be paid out. As to a member who had received an advance, it was provided that he should pay up his advance by monthly instalments on his shares with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. on the loan. It was also provided that members could withdraw on giving a month's notice. On withdrawal by an unadvanced member, he was to receive the whole instalments paid on his shares with interest. On withdrawal by a borrowing member, he was to pay up the whole of his debt, interest, and penalties, after deducting the amount of the monthly instalments paid upon his shares with interest calculated thereon. A. took shares for the sole purpose of obtaining an advance. He executed a bond in common form as security; and the society granted him a backletter, to the effect that they agreed not to enforce the bond so long as the regular payments of the instalments, interest, and other sums due upon his shares were paid. A. regularly paid his instalments with interest charged on the whole sum lent. Losses having been incurred, the society was in February, 1880, ordered to be wound up voluntarily. There were no outside creditors. In July, 1880, A. gave notice, under the rules, of withdrawal to the liquidators, and claimed a discharge of his bond on his paying to them the difference between his loan and the amount in cumulo of the instalments paid by him, with interest added. The liquidators denied his right to withdraw after liquidation, unless he paid up the whole loan and left the instalments to be refunded according to the result of the liquidation:—Held, that the advance had pro tanto been extinguished by the total amount of the instalments paid by A.; that from and after the date of the winding-up order A. had a right to redeem his security by paying to the liquidators the difference between his advance and his instalments, with interest added thereon, as against excess of interest which he had been charged; and on payment of such difference, with interest thereon, he was entitled to be relieved of all further liability as a contributory or otherwise. Brownlie v. Russell, 8 App. Cas. 235; 48 L. T. 881; 47 J. P. 757—H. L. (Sc.).

— Unlimited—Advanced and Unadvanced Members—Priority.—A rule giving an unlimited power of borrowing money to the directors of a building society is void, although it was certified by the certifying barrister. And persons advancing money under it on the security of the deposit of the title-deeds of borrowing members, must, in the winding up of the society, give up their securities, and prove against the residue of the assets after payment of the outside creditors and unadvanced members. Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society, In re, 23 Ch. D. 440; 52 L. J., Ch. 857; 48 L. T. 134; 32 W. R. 73—C. A.

A rule giving the directors power to issue deposit or paid-up shares at a fixed rate of interest, with the right to withdraw the money in preference to the ordinary unadvanced members, is valid, and the holders will be entitled in the winding up of the society to be paid in preference to the unadvanced members. Ib.

The effect of s. 1 of the Building Societies Act, 1875, repealing s. 8 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, is that all deposits with and loans to a building society certified under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, made in the interval between the 2nd of November, 1874, and the 22nd of April, 1875, are valid; but deposits and loans made before the 2nd of November, 1874, if otherwise invalid, are not made valid thereby, although they may be continued during that interval. Ib.

Securities given by a building society may be enforced against the society, although ss. 14 and 15 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, are not indorsed thereon; the enactment in s. 15 directing this to be done being only directory. Ib.

The certifying barrister struck out a rule of a building society, but the directors notwithstanding printed and acted upon it. Some years afterwards the rule was amended, and the barrister certified the amendment:—Held, that the effect of his certificate was to make valid the whole rule as amended. Ib.

— Withdrawal of Members—Notice of Withdrawal—Power to claim Payment “provided the Funds permit”—Applicability of Rules to a Winding-up.—One of the rules of a building society gave power to the investing members to withdraw their money, provided the funds permitted, on giving notice according to a prescribed form printed in the schedule. The society was ordered to be wound up, and the assets were insufficient to pay the investing members in full. Several of the investing members had given notice to withdraw all their money, and their notices had expired before the commencement of the winding-up, but they had not been paid. Some of them had not used the printed form of notice prescribed by the rules, but their notices had been accepted by the directors:—Held, that the rule as to the withdrawal of members must not be confined to the society as a going concern, but was applicable to adjust the rights of the withdrawing and continuing members inter se in the winding-up; that the members who had given notice to withdraw, either in the prescribed form or otherwise, and whose notices had expired before the commencement of the winding-up, were entitled to be paid out of the assets next to the outside creditors, and in priority to the other investing members who had not given notice of withdrawal, notwithstanding that at the date of the winding-up there were no funds in hand for their payment. Blackburn and District Benefit Building Society, In re, 24 Ch. D. 421; 52 L. J., Ch. 894; 32 W. R. 159—C. A. S. P., Mutual Society, In re, 24 Ch. D. 425, n.

Whether the members who had given notice of withdrawal but had not been paid before the commencement of the winding-up remained members of the society, quære. Ib.

Two Classes of Members—Rights of.—By the rules of a building society realized members, who had by their subscriptions with interest and bonuses, made up the full amount of their shares, were entitled to payment, or certificates for payment in rotation, of such amount, and withdrawal members, who had not made up the full amount of their shares, but had given notice to withdraw, were entitled to like payment or certificates for the amount of their subscriptions with interest. In the winding up of the society:—Held, that these two classes stood in the position of creditors entitled to be paid in priority to investing members, who had not made up their shares, and had given no notice of withdrawal. Norwich and Norfolk President Building Society, In re, Rackham, Ex parte, 45 L. J., Ch. 785—C. A.

Incorrect Recitals.—The surveyor to a building society purchased land from the trustees of the society, and then mortgaged it to the trustees to secure the purchase-money. The mortgage, which was a filled-up printed form prepared by the society's solicitor, recited that the surveyor was the holder of eleven shares in the society, whereas he had never applied for shares, nor had he in fact ever been treated by the society as a shareholder. He did not read over the deed, nor were its contents explained to him by the society's solicitor prior to execution. The society having been ordered to be wound up, he was placed on the list of contributories:—Held, that as the recital was incorrect, and as he was ignorant of its existence at the time he executed the deed, he was not liable as a contributory. Victoria Permanent Benefit Building Investment and Freehold Land Society of Birmingham and the Midland Counties, In re, Empson's case, 9 L. R., Eq. 597; 22 L. T. 855; 18 W. R. 565.

Society not authorized to Borrow—Overdrawing Banking Account—Lien of Bankers.—A building society not authorized to borrow money, from time to time overdrew their banking account, and deposited deeds and other documents with the bank as security for the overdraft, it being agreed that the amount overdrawn should never exceed 25,000*l.* A portion of this overdraft was applied in the necessary payments of the society. The society was subsequently wound up by order of the court:—Held, that the bankers had a lien upon the deeds in their possession for such part only of the overdrafts as had been so applied in necessary payments, and had not been covered by subsequent payments into the bank, all of which must be appropriated to reduce such lien, and an account was ordered upon that footing from the date when the balance last turned against the society, and so continued. Blackburn Benefit Building Society (Liquidator) v.

— Payments to Bankers during Winding-up Proceedings.—The bankers had, between the date of the presentation of the winding-up petition and the winding-up order, received payments from certain borrowing members and delivered up to them their securities:—Held, that the bankers must account to the society for the sums so received by them. Id.

X. CARRIERS BY SEA.—See SHIPPING.*I. WHO ARE.

Undertaker of Casual Jobs is not.—A town carman, not conveying goods from any one known terminus to another, nor at any fixed rate, nor the goods of several persons at the same time; but plying in the streets, and undertaking jobs as he can get them, is not a common carrier. Brind v. Dale, 2 M. & Rob. 80; 8 C. & P. 327.

If goods are delivered to A., under a contract that the owner should go with them, and take care of them, that is not a delivery of the goods to A. as a common carrier. Id.

Ferry—Owners of.—Declaration against owners of a ferry stated that they were possessed of a ferry across the river Mersey, from Woodside to Liverpool, and that the plaintiff delivered to them a phaeton, and jewellery and watches contained in it, to be by the defendants, for reward, taken care of and carried in a steamboat from Woodside to Liverpool, and there landed for the plaintiff; that the defendants accepted and received the carriage so containing the jewellery and watches from the plaintiff, and it became their duty to take proper care of them while they remained in their custody, and in and about the carriage, conveyance, and landing of the same. Breach, that they took such bad care of the carriage, jewellery, and watches, and so negligently conducted themselves in and about the carriage, conveyance, and landing of the same, that they were injured:—Held, that a contract to carry and land the carriage and jewellery, as stated in the declaration, could not be implied from the mere character of the defendants as owners of the ferry. But that it was a question for the jury, whether there was in fact a contract between the parties, either express or implied from usage, to receive the carriage on board, and to land it again at the end of the transit across the river. Walker v. Jackson, 10 M. & W. 161; 12 L.J. Ex. 165.

Lighterman.—One who exercises the ordinary employment of a lighterman by carrying goods in his flats for reward, although not bound as a common carrier to receive the goods of all comers indifferently, nevertheless incurs the liability of a common carrier for the safety of goods carried by him. Liver Alkali Company v. Johnson, 9 L. R., Ex. 338; 43 L. J., Ex. 216; 31 L. T. 95—Ex. Ch.

Such person is not a common carrier, but, in the absence of any special agreement, is, by a custom adopted and recognized by the courts, liable as a shipowner upon an implied undertaking to carry at his own absolute risk, the act of God and the Queen's enemies alone excepted. Ib.

If a person holds himself out to carry goods for every one as a business, and he thus carries from the wharves to the ships in harbour, he is a common carrier. The criterion is, whether he carries for particular persons only, or whether he carries for every one. If he holds himself out to do it for every one who asks him he is a common carrier, but if he carries for particular persons only, that is matter of special contract. Ingate v. Christie, 3 C. & K. 61.

The liability of a wharfinger who undertakes to convey goods from his wharf to the vessel in his own lighters, is similar to that of a carrier. Maving v. Todd, 1 Stark. 72; 4 Camp. 225.

A hoyman who undertakes to carry goods must deliver them safely at all events, except damaged by the act of God or by the King's enemies. Dale v. Hall, 1 Wils. 281.

On a declaration against a lighterman in the common form for negligence, the plaintiff cannot recover if it appears that the loss was not occasioned by a neglect of the common and ordinary duty of the defendant. Whalley v. Wray, 3 Esp. 74.

Where a declaration stated an undertaking to carry safely goods by water, with an exception of all accidents arising from the act of God, the King's enemies, fire, pirates and all other dangers and accidents of seas, rivers and navigation of what nature and kind soever:—Held, that this exception being beyond the common law exception, must be specially proved. Richardson v. Sewell, 2 Smith, 205.

A carrier of goods by water is liable for damage occasioned by running against an anchor to which no buoy appeared to be fastened. Trent Navigation v. Wood, 3 Esp. 127; Abb. Ship. 256; 4 Dougl. 287; 1 T. R. 28, n.

Where a man undertook to carry goods from London to Amsterdam, and they were accidentally damaged in being let down into the hold of the ship:—Held, that he was liable for such damage. Goff v. Clinkard, 1 Wils. 282.

Packers of Goods—Special Contract.—A contractor who undertakes to pack goods as well as to carry them, and who enters into an express contract by which he undertakes "risk of breakages (if any) not exceeding 5l. on any one article," is not liable as a common carrier. Seafie v. Farrant, 44 L. J., Ex. 36; 32 L. T. 563; 23 W. R. 469. Affirmed on appeal, 10 L. R., Ex. 358; 44 L. J., Ex. 234; 33 L. T. 278; 23 W. R. 840—Ex. Ch.

The defendant was the agent of a railway company for collecting and delivering goods and parcels, and also carried on upon his own account the business of a carrier, removing goods and furniture for hire for all persons indifferently who applied to him, in his own vans, which he sent by road or rail to all parts of England, the goods and furniture being previously inspected before any contract was made. Generally in such contracts the van or vans were hired by and filled with the goods of one person only. The plaintiff having applied to the defendant to remove his furniture from one town to another, and the defendant's foreman having inspected it, the parties agreed that the defendant should remove the furniture for 22l. 10s., the defendant "undertaking risk of breakages (if any) not exceeding 5l. on any one article." After the furniture was placed in the defendant's vans, and while in transit, it was burnt without any negligence on his part. The plaintiff having brought an action for the loss, contended that the defendant was liable as a common carrier:—Held, that the special contract shewed that the parties intended to limit the defendant's liability to loss by breakage or by his negligence, and excluded any question of liability as a common carrier; and that the plaintiff could not recover. Ib.

Partners.—Before 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 5, in an action on the case against the proprietor of a coach as a common carrier, for not safely conveying a passenger, he could not plead in abatement the non-jointure of a co-proprietor. Ansell v. Waterhouse, 2 Chit. 1; 6 M. & S. 385. See Powell v. Layton, 2 N. R. 365.

A. and B. were partners in the business of public carriers; by contract between them, A. found horses and drivers for certain stages, and B. supplied them for the remaining stages. They were, notwithstanding this division of the concern between them, responsible for the misconduct and negligence of their drivers and servants throughout the whole distance, and it was no defence to B. that the servant by whom an injury was committed was the special servant of A., and hired and paid by A. alone. Weyland v. Elkins, Holt, 227; S. C., nom. Waland v. Elkins, 1 Stark. 272.

— Who are Partners.—If several persons horse, with horses their several property, the several stages of a coach, in the general profits of which they are partners, they are not all jointly liable for goods furnished to one partner for the use of the horses drawing the coach along his part of the road. Barton v. Hanson, 2 Taunt. 49; 2 Camp. 97.

Where two persons contracted to assist the defendant with their respective horses, but to give in their accounts separately:—Held to be separate contracts. Smith v. Taylor, 2 Chit. 142.

Where the plaintiff and defendant ran a stage-coach from Bath to London, the former providing horses for one part of the road, and the latter for another, and the profits of each party were calculated according to the number of miles his horses went; and the plaintiff received the fares of the passengers, and gave a weekly account thereof to the defendant:—Held, that they were partners. Fremont v. Coupland, 9 Moore, 319; 2 Bing. 170; 1 C. & P. 276.

A special contract made by one of several joint coach proprietors for the carriage of parcels, is binding upon them all, though some of them became proprietors after the contract was made. Helsby v. Mears, 8 D. & R. 289; 5 B. & C. 504.

If a party recovers damages against one of two joint proprietors for an injury sustained by the negligence of their servants, such proprietor may maintain an action against his co-proprietor for contribution, if he proves at the trial that he was not personally present when the accident happened. Wooley v. Batte, 2 C. & P. 417. But see Merryweather v. Nison, 8 T. R. 186.

— Verdict found against Part of those Sued.—In an action against ten, the plaintiff declared, that they were proprietors of a stage-coach, for the conveyance of passengers for hire from A. to B.; and that being so, they received the plaintiff as an outside passenger, to be safely conveyed thereon from A. to B. for hire to them in that behalf; and that by reason thereof they ought to have safely conveyed him accordingly; and assigned for breach, that they conducted themselves so carelessly in this behalf, that by and through the carelessness, unskilfulness, and default of themselves and their servants, the coach was upset, by means whereof the plaintiff was hurt, and sustained other injuries: a jury having found a verdict against eight only, and in favour of the other two, and judgment being entered accordingly:—Held, that as the action was founded on a breach of duty, imposed by the custom of the realm, which was a breach of the law; and as the declaration was framed on a misfeasance; such verdict and judgment were not erroneous, and they were therefore affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber. Bretherton v. Wood (in error), 6 Moore, 141; 3 B. & B. 54; 9 Price, 408. See Pozzi v. Shipton, 1 P. & D. 4; 8 A. & E. 963.

II. PASSENGERS AND THEIR LUGGAGE.

1. THE CONTRACT.

a. Generally.

Nature of Duty.—To enable the plaintiff to maintain an action for negligence, it is not necessary that the duty neglected should have arisen out of a contract between the plaintiff and defendant. Collett v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 16 Q. B. 984; 20 L. J., Q. B. 411; 15 Jur. 1053.

However the duty may arise, if it exists and is neglected to the injury of the plaintiff, he has a right to sue for damages. Id.

Where a duty was cast by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 98, upon a railway company to carry any officer of the post-office whom the postmaster-general might elect, for which service the company was to be remunerated by the postmaster-general, and the plaintiff was the officer elected, and he was injured by the negligence in carrying him of a railway company:—Held, that it was the duty of the company to carry him with proper care and diligence, and that for a breach of such duty, to his injury, he might well sue the company, though there was no contract between him and the company, but the duty arose only from the obligation imposed upon the company by the act of parliament. Id.

Independent of Contract.—A declaration alleged that the mails from L. to T. were carried on a railway, pursuant to 1 & 2 Vict. c. 98. That the plaintiff was an officer of the post-office, whom the railway company had been reasonably required by the postmaster-general to take up and carry, and had taken up and was carrying, as such officer, in and upon the carriage of the company in which the mails were being conveyed. That the plaintiff was lawfully in and upon the carriage, and that thereupon it became and was the duty of the company to use due and proper care and skill in and about the carrying and conveying the plaintiff. Breach, that the company omitted and neglected to use due and proper care and skill, and so negligently and unskilfully conducted themselves in and about carrying and conveying the plaintiff, and in conducting, managing and directing the carriage, and the engine and other carriages, and the railway itself, that the carriages sustained a violent concussion, and the plaintiff was thereby injured, and prevented from attending to his business:—Held, that a duty as alleged arose out of the obligation imposed upon the company by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 98, and that the action was maintainable. Id.

Duty to Receive—Refusal.—If a declaration states that the defendant, being the owner of a stage-coach, undertook to carry the plaintiff, her children, and servants together, in and by a stage-coach, evidence that the whole inside of the coach was taken for the plaintiff and her three daughters, and two outside places for her servants, will support the declaration; and the defendant having sent a double-bodied coach, and refusing to take them, unless one of them would travel in one body and the others in the other body, is a breach of this agreement. Long v. Horne, 1 C. & P. 610.

A person paying the whole fare of a stage-coach may take his place at any stage of the journey; aliter if he pays only a deposit. Kerr v. Mountain, 1 Esp. 27.

Though a postmaster cannot be compelled to let a chaise, if he does so, and the passenger takes his seat in it, the postmaster must proceed if his fare is tendered. Massiter v. Cooper, 4 Esp. 260.

Where the conductor of an omnibus, by means of a fraud, or by making use of a false statement, induces a person not to persist in his attempt to be carried as a passenger, this does not amount to such a refusal to carry him, as will entitle the person so deceived to maintain an action against the proprietor of the omnibus. Marshall v. Matson, 15 L. T. 514.

An allegation in a declaration that an omnibus plies between D. and C., will not be supported by evidence which shews that the omnibus, although running from D. to C., yet starts from a point beyond D., and runs to a point beyond C. Id.

Carriage by Land and Sea.—A carrier who enters into a contract with a passenger to convey him from A. to B., part of the journey to be performed by land in England, and the rest by sea, is entitled to the protection of the Carriers Act, 11 Geo. 4, & 1 Will. 4, c. 68. Le Conteur v. South-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., Q. B. 54; 35 L. J., Q. B. 40; 6 B. & S. 961; and see Doolan v. Midland Railway Company, 2 App. Cas. 792.

Gratuitous Carriage—Non-transferable Ticket—["Lawful Journey."]—A railway company was in the practice of allowing the reporters of a London newspaper, when going to the country races on their line, for the purpose of framing their reports, to travel on the line carriage free. The reporter was for such purpose supplied with a ticket by the company, which had written upon it the name of a person in the reporting department. The ticket also purported on the face of it to be not transferable; and there was also a memorandum on it to the effect that any party other than the person named in it using the pass would be liable to the penalty which a person incurs by travelling without having paid his fare, or that he should be liable to pay the fare; but it did not distinctly appear which of the two liabilities was stated in the memorandum; and if the former, it did not appear what the penalties were which were alluded to. H. acting bonâ fide, and going on the business of the journal, and entitled by the usage to have the benefit of a ticket with his name on it, went to the station with a ticket such as described. His name was not upon it, but there was that of another person, who was also a reporter, and in the same department with himself. H. shewed this ticket to the porter at the station, whose business it was to examine the passengers' tickets, who said it was all right, and placed him in a carriage. There was no distinct evidence that the porter knew personally who H. was. H. and other reporters had on several occasions before travelled with similar tickets, not bearing the names on them of those who used them; and there was evidence that the persons whose names were on the tickets were personally known to some of the officers and servants at the station. In an action by H. against the company for an injury received on their line, whilst travelling in one of the company's carriages, in which the declaration alleged that he "then lawfully was," and which allegation was denied by the plea, the question having been left to the jury, and a verdict having been found for the plaintiff:—Held, that there was evidence for the jury in support of the issue, and that the question was rightly left to them. Great Northern Railway Company v. Harrison (in error), 10 Ex. 376; 2 C. L. R. 1136; 23 L. J., Ex. 308—Ex. Ch.

Special Conditions.—A declaration alleged that the plaintiff was received by a railway company as a passenger to be safely carried on their railway on a journey from Piel Pier to Carlisle, and that the company so negligently managed the railway and the traffic upon it that a collision took place, by which he was injured. Plea, that he was received as a passenger under an agreement that he should travel at his own risk. Replication, that it was by reason of gross and wilful negligence and mismanagement of the company that the collision took place:—Held, that the replication was bad, for the agreement stated in the plea must be taken to include the negligence mentioned in the replication. Macaulay or McCauley v. Furness Railway Company, 8 L. R., Q. B. 57; 42 L. J., Q. B. 4; 27 L. T. 485; 21 W. R. 140.

A railway passenger took a ticket containing a printed condition, which stated that, inasmuch as the holder would travel in a passenger carriage attached to a goods train, the company should be relieved from responsibility for any personal injury to him consequent on or in any way arising from such passenger carriage being attached to a goods train. In an action by the passenger for personal injuries sustained by him whilst alighting from a carriage attached to a goods train, which, after certain goods waggons had been shunted, stopped short of the platform of the station to which he was travelling:—Held, that he, though in fact unaware of this condition, was bound by it, and that the company was exempted from liability for injuries from any accident within the scope of the condition. Johnson v. Great Southern and Western Railway Company, 9 Ir. R., C. L. 708.

Drover's Ticket—Own Risk.—A condition in a cattle ticket that persons in charge of cattle, who travel without payment, shall travel at their own risk, applies to the whole of a through railway journey. Hall v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 10 L. R., Q. B. 437; 44 L. J., Q. B. 164; 33 L. T. 306; 23 W. R. 860.

A cattle drover booked stock at a station on the North British line to a station on the North-Eastern line, taking from the North British Company a free pass to travel by the same train with the stock at his own risk, and exonerating the company from all responsibility for injury or loss to himself however occasioned on the journey for which it was issued or used. By the negligence of the North-Eastern Company a train of that company ran into the train in which he was on the North-Eastern line, and injured him:—Held, that the North-Eastern Company was free from liability to the passenger by reason of the contract, and that he could not recover against them. Id.

A drover, who had travelled with cattle by a railway on the terms that he was to be free of charge, but, at his own risk, was, in consequence of the negligence of the servants of the company, injured, after leaving the train, in the course of his departure from the premises of the company:—Held, that he took upon himself the risks incidental to the whole transaction, the access to and departure from the train as well as the actual transition, and therefore that the company was not liable. Gallin v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 10 L. R., Q. B. 212; 44 L. J., Q. B. 89; 32 L. T. 550; 23 W. R. 308.

A drover in charge of his cattle signed a contract with a railway company which stated that the cattle were to be conveyed upon the conditions mentioned upon the back of the invoice handed to him, and on the back of the invoice there was printed, amongst other conditions, the following:—"That, as a drover is allowed to attend the cattle during transit, they will allow such drover to travel free of charge, upon condition that he so travel at his own risk." On the face of the invoice there was nothing referring to passengers except the words, "Drover in charge free;" and at the foot of it were the words, "For conditions of carriage, see back hereof." The drover did travel free, and in consequence of a collision occurring on the journey, he received personal injuries, for which he brought an action against the railway company:—Held, that the condition allowing a drover in charge of his cattle to travel free, provided he did so at his own risk, was part of the written contract signed by the drover, and that, as he had elected to travel free, he was bound by the conditions, and could not recover damages

Agreement as to Passes—Uncertainty.]—A merchant residing at B., and carrying on business in the towns and throughout the district traversed by a railway, in 1846 entered into an agreement with the company that he would, in consideration of the company granting him yearly, during so long a time as he should carry on business at B., a free pass over their line, between the towns of B. and C., and should have, for so long a time as the scale of charges of the company, and of a canal company, should bear the same proportion to each other as they then bore, all his goods carried by the railway company, in preference to the canal company. That arrangement continued to 1849, when the merchant, at the request of the company, to prevent the annoyance to them of constant applications for free passes, consented to pay 5*l.* as a nominal consideration for such free pass. This arrangement continued to 1857, when the company refused to renew it. The agreement of 1845 was not executed by or on behalf of the company:—Held, that the agreement, being uncertain in its terms, could not be specifically enforced in equity against the company. Sturge v. Midland Railway Company, 4 Jur., N. S. 273.

Evidence of Acceptance for Carriage.]—In an action for negligence, the declaration stated that the plaintiff agreed to become a passenger by the defendant's omnibus, and that the defendant received the plaintiff as such passenger. The plaintiff held up his finger to the driver of the omnibus, who stopped to take him up; and just as the plaintiff was putting his foot on the step of the omnibus, the driver drove on, and the plaintiff fell on his face on the ground:—Held, that this was evidence in support of the declaration, as the stopping of the omnibus implied a consent to take the plaintiff as a passenger. Brien v. Bennett, 8 C. & P. 724.

b. Taking Ticket, Effect of.

Master and Servant.]—A servant took a ticket and travelled on a railway, and was injured on his journey through the negligence of the railway company. The master brought an action against the company for the loss of his servant's services through their negligence; but there was no contract between the railway company and the master:—Held, that inasmuch as the servant was injured, not by a simple wrong, but by a wrong arising out of a breach of duty imposed on the railway company by their contract with the servant, the action was founded on the contract, and would not lie. Alton v. Midland Railway Company, 19 C. B., N. S. 213; 34 L. J., C. P. 292; 11 Jur., N. S. 672; 13 W. R. 918.

Where a master took tickets for himself and his three servants, keeping the tickets in his own care but telling the guard that he had the servants' tickets, and the servants were allowed to enter the train:—Held, that the company was estopped from pleading in an action for trespass that they had not paid their fare. Jennings v. Great Northern Railway Company, 1 L. R., Q. B. 7; 35 L. J., Q. B. 15; 12 Jur., N. S. 331; 13 L. T. 231; 4 W. R. 28. And see cases infra, under 3. PASSENGER'S LUGGAGE.

Contract limiting Liability—Conditions inside Book of Coupons.]—Outside the cover of a paper book of coupons forming a railway ticket, issued to the plaintiff by the defendants, was printed the name of their railway, the words "Cheap return ticket, London to Paris and back, second class," and a statement of the period and journey for which the ticket was available, but no reference to the inside of the cover. On the inside and apparent on turning the leaf, was a condition limiting the responsibility of the defendants to their own trains. The plaintiff having been injured while travelling by virtue of the ticket, in a French train, sued the defendants. They set up the condition. The plaintiff had not read and did not know of it. The jury were directed that if it was brought to his notice it would afford a defence, and on being asked the question, suggested in Parker v. South-Eastern Railway Company (2 C. P. D. 416), whether what was done by the company was reasonably sufficient to bring the condition to the notice of the plaintiff, answered that it was not, and found a verdict in his favour. He moved for judgment:—Held, distinguishing Henderson v. Stevenson (2 L. R., H. L., Sc. 470), that the whole book was the contract accepted by the plaintiff, and that he, therefore, could not reject the condition which was one of its terms, and that judgment should be entered for the defendants. Burke v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 5 C. P. D. 1; 49 L. J., C. P. 107; 41 L. T. 554; 38 W. R. 306; 44 J. P. 283. And see Zuz v. South-Eastern Railway, 4 L. R., Q. B. 359, &c., infra, as to PASSENGER'S LUGGAGE.

Action against—Which Company.]—Plaintiff travelled with a ticket issued by the D. company over defendants' railway in a carriage belonging to the D. company. By the defendants' act of parliament, the D. company had running powers over the line, the defendants receiving a percentage on the traffic receipts, such percentage to include the cost of all services connected with manning the lines, use of stations, and services of station staff necessary for despatch of business connected with the traffic. The plaintiff was injured at a station belonging to the defendants by the negligence of a porter employed on a platform which was exclusively allotted to the D. company's traffic:—Held, that the porter was acting as the defendants' servant, and that therefore the defendants were liable. Self v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 42 L. T. 173; 44 J. P. 344—C. A.

Duty of Contracting Company.]—Where a railway company, being in connexion with another company, undertakes to carry a passenger to a place on the other company's line, and an accident happens on the latter company's line, by reason of the negligence of the second company's servants, and the passenger is thereby injured, he has a right of action against the company from whom he takes the ticket. Great Western Railway Company v. Blake, 7 H. & N. 987; 31 L. J., Ex. 346; 8 Jur., N. S. 1013; 10 W. R. 388—Ex. Ch. See John v. Bacon, 5 L. R., C. P. 439; Francis v. Cockerell, 5 L. R., C. P. 215.

The contract into which a railway company enters with a passenger on giving him a ticket between two places is the same, whether the journey is entirely over their own line or partly over the line of another company, and whether the passage over the other line is under an agreement to share profits, or simply under running powers—viz., that due care shall be used in carrying the passenger from one end of the journey to the other, so far as is within the compass of railway management. Thomas v. Rhymney Railway Company, 6 L. R., Q. B. 266; 40 L. J., Q. B. 89; 24 L. T. 145; 19 W. R. 477—Ex. Ch. Affirming 5 L. R., Q. B. 226; 39 L. J., Q. B. 141; 22 L. T. 297; 18 W. R. 668.

The plaintiff took a ticket of the R. Railway Company, entitling him to be carried from A. to B. An intermediate portion of the journey was over the line of the T. V. Company, over which the R. Company had running powers on payment of tolls, the whole of the traffic arrangements over the T. V. line being left by the special act in the control of the T. V. Company. On that portion of the line the train in which the plaintiff was ran into a train of the T. V. Company, and he was injured by the collision. The collision was owing solely to the negligence of the servants of the T. V. Company, in sending on their own train without the proper tail-light, and allowing the R. Company's train to proceed on the same line of rails too soon after their own train, without giving any warning to the driver of the train:—Held, that the R. Company was liable for the negligence of the T. V. Company. Id.

Under statutory powers the London and North Western Railway Company ran passenger trains over a certain portion of the Midland line of railway, paying to the Midland Company a fixed mileage rate. The times of the passing of these trains over the Midland line were regulated by that company, and the signals, at the point of junction between the two lines of railways, were under their control and management. In consequence of the driver of a London and North Western train negligently disobeying the signal duly given to him by the Midland Company's servants, such train, whilst running under the above-mentioned powers, and without any negligence on the part of any of their servants, came into collision, on the above-mentioned portion of the Midland Company's line, with a train of the Midland Company, in which the plaintiff was travelling as a passenger under a contract with the company, and caused the injury to him, for which an action was brought:—Held, that the action was not maintainable against the Midland Railway Company, inasmuch as the London and North Western Railway Company's servants, through whose negligence alone the collision occurred, were not concerned in the carrying of the plaintiff, and were not either in the employment or under the control of the Midland Company, who consequently were not liable for the injuries resulting from such collision. Wright v. Midland Railway Company, 8 L. R., Ex. 137; 42 L. J., Ex. 89; 29 L. T. 436; 21 W. R. 460.

Liability of Company not issuing Ticket.]—The defendants, the Metropolitan District Railway Company, have running powers over the South Western Railway between Hammersmith and the New Richmond Station of the South Western Railway Company. Above the booking office at the New Richmond Station are the words "South Western and Metropolitan Booking Office and District Railway." The plaintiff took from the clerk there employed by the South Western Railway a return ticket to Hammersmith and back. The ticket was not headed with the name of either company, but bore on it the words "Via District Railway." On his return journey from Hammersmith to Richmond the plaintiff travelled with this ticket in the carriage of a train belonging to the defendants and under the management of their servants. The plaintiff, on alighting at Richmond, fell and was hurt. He brought an action against the defendants, and the jury found negligence in them:—Held, that having invited or permitted the plaintiff to travel in their train, the defendants were bound to make reasonable provision for his safety; and that there was evidence of their liability, even assuming the ticket not to have been issued by or for them, but by the South Western Company. Foulkes v. Metropolitan District Railway Company, 4 C. P. D. 267; 48 L. J., C. P. 555; 41 L. T. 95. Affirmed, 5 C. P. D. 157; 49 L. J., C. P. 361; 42 L. T. 345; 28 W. R. 526—C. A.

Purchase of Tickets for Excursion.]—See Skinner v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 5 Ex. 787, infra, col. 1962.

Season Tickets—Performance of Contract—Condition precedent to Right to recover Deposit.]

—The plaintiff bought from the defendant company a season ticket entitling him to travel by their railway for one month, paying the usual charge for such a ticket, and 10s. deposit, and agreed to be bound by certain conditions. The fourth condition was, the ticket "is to be considered as the property of the company, to be delivered up at the secretary's office on the day after expiry or on forfeiture." The sixth condition was "That the ticket and all benefit and advantages thereof, including the deposit, shall be absolutely forfeited to the company, if it shall be lost, or in case of any breach of any of the above conditions." Some few days after the expiry of the month, but within a reasonable time, the plaintiff delivered up the ticket, and claimed the deposit; and on the company's refusal brought an action to recover it:—Held, that the performance of every one of the conditions was a condition precedent to the right to a return of the deposit; and that as the ticket had not been delivered up "on the day after expiry" the conditions had not been performed, the deposit was forfeited, and the plaintiff could not maintain the action. Cooper v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 4 Ex. D. 88; 48 L. J., Ex. 434; 40 L. T. 324; 27 W. R. 474.

Passenger Travelling at Own Risk.]—See cases under preceding head.

c. Duty of Passengers as to Tickets under Bye-laws and otherwise.

Proof of Bye-laws.]—The original bye-laws of a railway company, framed under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, are documents of a public nature, and provable, as such, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14. Mottram v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 7 C. B., N. S. 58; 29 L. J., M. C. 59; 6 Jur., N. S. 583.

The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 110, provides that the substance of the bye-laws shall be painted on boards, and affixed on the front of every wharf or station, so as to give public notice thereof to the parties interested therein or affected thereby, and that no penalty under any bye-law shall be recoverable unless the same shall have been published as aforesaid; and s. 111 makes it sufficient, for proof of the publication of bye-laws, to shew that a copy of them was affixed as by this act directed. Upon an information before justices for a penalty for infringing a bye-law, it was proved that a copy of the bye-law was affixed at the stations at which the passengers got into and left the train respectively:—Held, sufficient proof of publication, without shewing that copies of every bye-law were affixed at all the other stations between the termini of the line. Ib.

Obtaining Tickets by False Pretences.]—A railway ticket is a chattel, and the obtaining of it by false pretence from a servant of the company, so as to enable the holder to travel on the line, is an obtaining a chattel by false pretences. Reg. v. Boulton, 3 New Sess. Cas. 705; 2 C. & K. 917; 1 Den. C. C. 508; T. & M. 201; 13 Jur. 1034.

Season Tickets.]—A bye-law of a railway company ran thus: "each passenger booking his place will be furnished with a ticket which he is to shew and deliver up when required to the guard," and "each passenger not producing or delivering up his ticket when required, is hereby subjected to a penalty not exceeding 40s.:"—Held, that holders of annual tickets for travelling on the line were bound to produce their tickets to the railway officers as much as ordinary passengers. Woodard v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 30 L. J., M. C. 126; 7 Jur., N. S. 971; 4 L. T. 336; 9 W. R. 660; and see Cooper v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway, supra, col. 1954.

Estoppel.]—A railway company, in order to enforce a bye-law as to the production of tickets, must bring themselves strictly within the terms of such bye-law. Jennings v. Great Northern Railway Company, 1 L. R., Q. B. 7; 35 L. J., Q. B. 15; 12 Jur., N. S. 331; 13 L. T. 231; 14 W. R. 28.

A master took tickets for himself and three servants, keeping the tickets in his own care, but telling the guard that he had the servants' tickets, and the servants were allowed to enter the train without each having or shewing his own ticket:—Held, that by so doing the company was estopped from pleading, as a defence to an action by the master against the company for afterwards expelling the servants from the train and refusing to carry them, the bye-law: "No passenger will be allowed to enter any carriage or travel therein without having paid his fare and obtained a ticket, which ticket such passenger is to shew when required, and to deliver up before leaving the company's premises." Ib.

Recovery of Penalties—Unreasonable Bye-laws—Intention to Defraud.]—The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 103 (Railway Clauses Act), has only reference to persons travelling without a ticket, and with fraudulent intent. Dearden v. Townsend, 1 L. R., Q. B. 10; 35 L. J., M. C. 50; 12 Jur., N. S. 120; 13 L. T. 323; 14 W. R. 52.

By a bye-law of a railway company passengers not delivering up their tickets when required were made liable to pay the fare from the place where the train started, or in default a penalty of 40s. D. took a return ticket, but after returning to the place from which he started, did not get out, but went on to a further station, without, however, any intention to defraud, and offering to pay the fare for the excess of the distance:—Held, that he was not liable to be convicted under such bye-law, which only applied to the case of a person wilfully refusing to shew his ticket when he had one. Ib.

Held also, that if the bye-law did apply to D., then it was unreasonable and void, and unwarranted by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20. Ib.

A bye-law of a railway company provided that "any passenger travelling without a ticket, or failing or refusing to shew or deliver up his ticket" to any duly authorized servant of the company when required to do so, "shall be required to pay the fare from the station whence the train originally started to the end of his journey:"—Held, that, as against a person who had, in good faith, travelled a short distance upon the line without having procured a ticket, this bye-law was unreasonable and void, inasmuch as it was in substance an attempt to inflict a penalty for doing without fraud that which, by the joint operation of ss. 103 and 109 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, can be punished only if done fraudulently. London and Brighton Railway Company v. Watson, 3 C. P. D. 249; 47 L. J., C. P. 634; 39 L. T. 199; 26 W. R. 856.

Held, on appeal, that inasmuch as the penalties contained in the bye-law could by s. 145 be recoverable only before justices, there was no debt which could be recovered in a court of civil jurisdiction. Ib. 4 C. P. D. 118; 48 L. J., C. P. 316; 40 L. T. 183; 27 W. R. 614—C. A.

—Travelling with Non-transferable Ticket.]

—The respondent who was travelling on the G. W. Railway in a train going to N. produced the "forward half" of a tourist return ticket from L. to N. and back. This ticket had been originally issued to another person and was stated on the back thereof to be not transferable. The original taker had used the ticket as far as H. on the way from L. to N., and then proceeded on a different route, and, consequently not having given up the forward half of the ticket, sold it to the respondent who was travelling with it between H. and N.:—Held, that the respondent was liable to be convicted under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 103, for travelling without having previously paid his fare with intent to avoid payment thereof. Langdon v. Howells, 4 Q. B. D. 337; 48 L. J., M. C. 113; 40 L. T. 880; 27 W. R. 657.

—Refusing to shew Ticket—Penalty varying with Distance Train has travelled.]—A bye-law of the respondents' company provided "that a passenger should shew and deliver up his ticket to any duly-authorized servant of the company whenever required to do so for any purpose, and that any person travelling without a ticket, or failing or refusing to shew or deliver up his ticket as aforesaid, should be required to pay the fare from the station whence the train originally started to the end of his journey." The appellant had a ticket entitling him to travel on the lines of the respondents and the London and South Western Railway Company from Charing Cross or Cannon-street to Windsor and back. Having come to the Waterloo Junction station on the respondents' line, where he had to change trains, he had for this purpose to go from the respondents' station to that of the London and South Western Railway Company. On passing out of the respondents' station he was asked to shew his ticket but refused to do so. There was no intention to defraud on the appellant's part. The respondents summoned him under the above bye-law, and he was convicted in the amount of the fare from the station whence the respondents' train by which he travelled had started.—Held, that the conviction must be quashed. Saunders v. South Eastern Railway Company, 5 Q. B. D. 456; 49 L. J., Q. B. 761; 43 L. T. 281; 29 W. R. 56; 44 J. P. 781.

By Cockburn, C. J., assuming that the power given by the 108th section of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, to make bye-laws for "regulating the travelling upon or using and working the railway," applied to persons travelling in the company's carriages, which he was inclined to think it did not, it was not competent to the company by their bye-law to make the refusal to shew the ticket an offence in the absence of a fraudulent intention; secondly, the bye-law was void for unreasonableness, because the penalties thereunder for offences of equal criminality would vary with the distances from which the train might originally have started; and thirdly, the bye-law was inapplicable to the case, as the power to make bye-laws was confined to the case of persons travelling on the railway, which the appellant was not doing when required to shew his ticket. Ib.

By Lush, J.: The bye-law was void for unreasonableness, because the penalty for not shewing the ticket varied according to the distance the train had travelled, and also because the passenger was required not only to shew but to deliver up his ticket whenever required for any purpose. Ib.

A railway company was empowered to make bye-laws for the good government of the affairs of the company, and for the management of the undertaking, and of the officers and servants of the company, in all respects whatever, and to impose and inflict reasonable fines and forfeitures upon persons offending against the same, not exceeding 5*l.* for any one offence, to be levied and recovered as any penalty might by the act be levied and recovered; such bye-laws to be binding upon and be observed by all parties, provided that they were not repugnant to the laws of England, or the directions of the act. It was also enacted, that it should be lawful for the company to make orders and regulations for regulating the travelling upon and use of the railway, and for or relating to travellers upon the line, such orders and regulations to be binding upon travellers and passengers passing upon the railway, upon pain of forfeiting and paying a sum not exceeding 5*l.* Penalties and forfeitures imposed by the act, of which there were several, or by any bye-law, might be recovered in a summary way by the adjudication of justices, half the penalty to go to the informer, and the other half to the company. And it should be lawful for any officer or agent of the company to seize any person whose name and residence should be unknown to such officer or agent, who should commit any offence against that act, and to convey him before a justice, without any warrant or other authority than that act. The company made a bye-law, whereby a passenger not producing or delivering up his ticket was to be required to pay the fare from the place where the train originally started:—Held, that this was not a bye-law imposing a penalty or forfeiture, and that the arrest of a passenger not producing his ticket, and refusing to pay the fare from the place where the train originally started, was illegal. Chilton v. London and Croydon Railway Company, 5 Railw. Cas. 4; 16 M. & W. 212; 16 L. J., Ex. 89; 11 Jur. 149.

— Travelling in Superior Class.—By a bye-law of a railway company, "any person travelling, without special permission of some duly-authorized servant of the company, in a carriage or by a train of a class superior to that for which his ticket was issued is hereby subject to a penalty not exceeding 40*s.*, and shall, in addition, be liable to pay his fare, according to the class of carriage in which he is travelling, from the station where the train originally started, unless he shews that he had no intention to defraud." The defendant, with the intention of defrauding the company, travelled in a carriage of a superior class to that for which his ticket was issued, and having been charged under the bye-law, was convicted in a penalty of 10*s.* and costs:—Held, that the bye-law was illegal and void, for assuming that it could be divided after the words "penalty of 40*s.*," and that each part was capable of being enforced apart from the other, the first part was repugnant to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 103, which makes a fraudulent intention the gist of the offence of travelling without having paid the fare, and that, if taken as a whole and indivisible, it was unreasonable according to Watson v. London and Brighton Railway Company (4 C. P. D. 118), and Saunders v. South Eastern Railway Company (5 Q. B. D. 456). Dyson v. London and North Western Railway Company, 7 Q. B. D. 32; 50 L. J., M. C. 78; 44 L. T. 609; 29 W. R. 565; 45 J. P. 650.

Held, further, that the conviction must be quashed, for it was founded upon the bye-law, and could not be upheld as disclosing an offence under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 103. Ib.

A passenger who has paid a fare and taken a ticket, but who travels in a carriage of a class superior to that in which his ticket entitles him to travel, with intent to defraud the railway company of the difference between the fares for the two classes, is liable to be convicted under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 103, for travelling without having previously paid his fare. Gillingham v. Walker, 44 L. T. 715; 29 W. R. 896; 45 J. P. 470.

A bye-law was made by a railway company under the powers of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, in the terms following:—"All passengers travelling without the special permission of some duly authorized servant of the company in a carriage or by a train of a superior class to that for which his ticket was issued, is hereby subject to a penalty not exceeding 40*s.*, and shall, in addition, be liable to pay his fare according to the class of carriage in which he is travelling from the station where the train originally started, unless he shews that he had no intention to defraud." B. was convicted under the bye-law of travelling in a first-class carriage between Stacksteads and Bacup with a second-class ticket. The justices found, as a fact, that he had no intention to defraud:—Held, that the conviction was wrong, and that in order to constitute an offence under the bye-law, an intention to defraud must exist, inasmuch as otherwise the bye-law itself would be unreasonable and repugnant to the provisions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 103. Bentham v. Hoyle, 3 Q. B. D. 289; 47 L. J., M. C. 51; 37 L. T. 753; 26 W. R. 314.

— Demand of Fare Necessary.—A bye-law was made by a railway company, under the powers of their special act, and of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, in these terms: "No passenger will be allowed to enter any carriage on the railway, or to travel therein upon the railway, unless furnished by the company with a ticket, specifying the class of carriage and the stations for conveyance between which such ticket is issued. . . Any person travelling without a ticket, or failing or refusing to shew or deliver up his ticket as aforesaid, shall be required to pay the fare from the station whence the train originally started to the end of the journey":—Held, that in order to entitle the company to take proceedings under this bye-law, a notice of demand for the fare due must have been first made to the passenger who refused or was unable to produce his ticket. Brown v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 2 Q. B. D. 406; 46 L. J., M. C. 231; 36 L. T. 767; 25 W. R. 792.

— Fare charged for between Stations, though Fare from Station of Departure same to both.—A railway return ticket only entitles the passenger to travel to and from the stations named in the ticket. If the passenger goes beyond the stations named to another station he must pay the additional fare, even though the price of a return ticket from the departure station to the further station be the same. A. took a return ticket from W. to D., but on the return journey he did not alight at W., but went on to P.:—Held, that A. was liable for the fare between W. and P. on the return journey, notwithstanding that the price of a return ticket from W. to D. and from W. to P. was the same. Great Western Railway Company v. Pocock, 41 L. T. 415; 28 W. R. 49; 44 J. P. 40.

— Less Payment for greater Distance.—A. intending to go by railway from C. to D. which is an intermediate station between C. and N., took a ticket for N., and upon his arrival at D. left the railway. The fare from C. to D. exceeded in amount the fare from C. to N., and the difference was demanded of A., but he refused to pay it. By a bye-law of the company, every passenger was to pay his fare previously to entering a carriage of the company, upon payment of which he would be furnished with a ticket specifying the class of carriage and distance for which the fare was paid; and any passenger who entered a carriage without having paid his fare was subject to a penalty. Under this bye-law A. was convicted by the borough justices of C. for having within the borough unlawfully and wilfully entered the carriage of the company for the purpose of travelling upon the railway from C. to D., not having previously paid his fare for so travelling:—Held, that the borough justices had jurisdiction over the alleged offence, but that the conviction could not be sustained, as A. had paid his fare within the meaning of the bye-law. Reg. v. Freere, 4 El. & Bl. 598; 24 L. J., M. C. 68; 1 Jur., N. S. 700.

— Distress Warrant—Non-payment—Committal.—By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. cvi. s. 237 (Eastern Counties Railway Act), penalties are recoverable before a justice, who is authorized to summon before him any person against whom complaint is made for any offence against a bye-law, and to proceed therein. By s. 238 any officer of the company is empowered to seize and detain any person whose name and residence shall be unknown to him, who shall commit any offence against the act, and to convey him before a justice, without any warrant; and the justice is required to proceed immediately to the conviction or acquittal of the offender. A person having been seized and detained by an officer of the company on the 21st of September, was brought before a justice for an offence against a bye-law. He committed the plaintiff to the house of correction by a warrant in the form (D. 1) in the Schedule to 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. The warrant stated that the party had been charged on oath before the justice for having travelled on the railway without having paid his fare, contrary to a bye-law of the company, and commanded him to be taken to the house of correction, and there kept until the 27th, and to be then brought before the justices at petty sessions to answer the charge. On the 25th the justice, having ascertained that no offence had been committed, sent to the house of correction and caused the plaintiff to be discharged:—Held, first, that the justice was justified by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 16, in committing the plaintiff to the house of correction. Gelen v. Hall, 2 H. & N. 379.

Held, secondly, that under ss. 237 and 238 of the above act a justice has no authority to issue a warrant before conviction; that the authority to arrest in the first instance is confined to the officer of the company, and that the duty thereby imposed upon the justice is forthwith, upon an offender being brought before him, to proceed to the determination of the case. Ib.

— Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879—Sum of Money "claimed to be due."—The penalty imposed by s. 103 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), for travelling in a railway carriage without having paid the fare and with intent to avoid the payment of it, is not "a sum of money claimed to be due and recoverable on complaint to a court of summary jurisdiction" within the meaning of s. 6 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), and is not subject to the procedure for the recovery of civil debts in a court of summary jurisdiction prescribed by s. 35 of the same act. Reg. v. Paget, 8 Q. B. D. 151; 51 L. J., M. C. 9; 45 L. T. 794; 30 W. R. 336; 46 J. P. 151.

— Removal from Carriage.—A. took a return ticket from H. to D., and got out at D. On his return, instead of getting in at D., he went to S., which was a station next to D., but further than D. from H. Before getting into the train there he was told that he would not be allowed to travel without getting a ticket from S. to D. He refused to take a ticket from S. to D., but he shewed his return ticket, and offered to pay the fare from S. to D. The servants of the railway company refused to accept the difference in fare, and removed him forcibly from the carriage. One of the bye-laws of the company provided that "no passenger will be allowed to enter any carriage without having first paid his fare, and obtained a ticket, which ticket such passenger is to shew whenever required. Any passenger not producing his ticket will be required to pay the fare from the place whence any part of the train originally started, or in default of payment shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 40s." :—Held, that the company was entitled to remove A. from the carriage. McCarthy v. Dublin, Wicklow and Wexford Railway Company, 18 W. R. 762.—Ir. Ex. Ch.

2. DUTY OF CARRIER UNDER CONTRACT.

a. Accident to Passenger. Prima facie Evidence of Negligence.

Exclusive Management.]—A passenger injured on a railway proves a prima facie case of negligence against the company, by shewing that, when the accident occurred, the train and railway were exclusively under their management. Carpue v. London and Brighton Railway Company, 5 Q. B. 747; D. & M. 608; 3 Railw. Cas. 692; 13 L. J., Q. B. 138; 8 Jur. 464.

Assuming it is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of a railway company that a train has got off the line, such evidence is entirely rebutted by proof that the accident arose from the wilful and wrongful act of a stranger. Litch v. Rumner Railway Company, 27 L. J., Ex. 155.

Onus on whom.]—In an action against a railway company for negligence, the fact of the occurrence of an injury not necessarily importing negligence, even if it is prima facie proof, is not conclusive proof of negligence. Bird v. Great Northern Railway Company, 28 L. J., Ex. 3.

Merely proof of an accident having happened to a train, does not cast upon the railway company the burthen of shewing the real cause of the injury. Hammack v. White, 11 C. B., N. S. 594.

When an accident happens to a passenger on a railway, either by the carriage breaking down or running off the rails, that is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Such evidence, if not rebutted by evidence on the company's part, will justify a verdict against the company. Dawson v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 5 L. T. 682.

It is evidence of negligence in the conduct of the carrying, that the train was run over a rail known to have been defective and fractured: the jury considering that this was the cause of the accident. Pym v. Great Northern Railway Company, 2 F. & F. 619.

A declaration against a railway company alleged that the plaintiff, at the request of the company, became a passenger for hire in one of their trains; and that in consequence of the carelessness, negligence, and want of skill of the company and their servants, the train ran against another train on the line, whereby he was injured. At the trial it appeared that the train in question was hired of the company by a society for an excursion, the tickets of which were sold and distributed by the secretary of the latter body, from whom the plaintiff purchased his, and that the accident was occasioned by the train running, in the dark, against another train which was standing still at an intermediate station on the line :—Held, first, that the mere fact of the accident having occurred was prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Skinner v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 5 Ex. 787; 15 Jur. 299.

Held, secondly, that there was evidence to go to the jury in support of the allegation that the plaintiff became a passenger for hire with the company. Id.

A goods train and a passenger train met, and were passing each other on a double line of railway. Some timber on a truck in the goods train projected and struck the passenger train, injuring a passenger. The timber had been loaded on the truck without stanchions, and was secured by a chain only, which broke, and there was evidence that the breakage was caused by a latent flaw in the chain. There was also evidence that it would have been safer to load the timber with stanchions, but that the use of them for that purpose was comparatively recent, and there was no evidence of any accident having happened from not using stanchions. In an action by the passenger against the railway company to recover for the injury :—Held, that it was for him to shew that the accident was caused by the negligence of the company, and that the company was not bound to shew how the accident happened. Hanson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 20 W. R. 297.

— Train leaving Line.]—Where a plaintiff sustained injuries in consequence of a portion of the train in which she was travelling having left the rails, and the railway, the engine and the carriages were under the management of the company :—Held, that the fact of the accident was sufficient evidence to cast upon the company the burthen of shewing that there was no negligence on their part; and that as they declined to afford any explanation of the cause of the accident, there was a case for the plaintiff proper to be submitted to the jury. Flannery v. Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, 11 Ir. R., C. L. 30.

Stage-Coach breaking down.]—In an action against a proprietor of a stage-coach for negligence, whereby the coach broke down, and the plaintiff, travelling by it as a passenger, was hurt, to prove negligence, it is prima facie enough to give evidence of the coach having broken down; from which negligence will be presumed. Christie v. Griggs, 2 Camp. 79.

b. Condition of Carriages, &c.

Sufficiency of Stage-Coach.]—Every stage-coach proprietor impliedly undertakes that his coach shall be sufficiently secure to perform the journeys which he undertakes by it, and he ought to examine its sufficiency previously to each journey, and if he does not, and by the insecurity of the coach a passenger is injured, an action is maintainable against him for negligence, though the coach has been examined previously to the second journey before the accident, and though it has been repaired at the coachmakers' only three or four days before. Bremner v. Williams, 1 C. & P. 414.

If through the default of a coach proprietor in neglecting to provide proper means of conveyance, a passenger is placed in so perilous a situation as to render it prudent for him to leap from the coach, whereby his leg is broken, the proprietor will be responsible in damages, although the coach was not actually overturned. Jones v. Boyce, 1 Stark. 493.

If a declaration in an action against coach proprietors, for an injury received by the overturning of a coach, states that it was their duty to carry the plaintiff safely for a certain hire, it does not mean to carry safely at all events, but will be sufficiently supported by proof of the want of due care. Harris v. Costar, 1 C. & P. 636.

Concealed Defect.]—And if an accident happens from a defect in the original construction, the proprietor is liable, although the defect is out of sight, and not discoverable upon ordinary examination. Sharp v. Gray, 9 Bing. 457; 2 M. & Scott, 621. See Redhead v. Midland Railway Company, and cases infra, col. 1964.

Too many Passengers.]—Proof that at the time of the accident there were more passengers than the statute allows, is conclusive evidence of negligence. Israel v. Clark, 4 Esp. 259.

Improper Construction.]—In an action against a coach proprietor for negligence, it appeared that the plaintiff became an outside passenger; that there was luggage on the roof of the coach, and no iron railing between the luggage and passengers; and that the plaintiff, being seated with her back to the luggage, was, by a sudden jolt, thrown from the coach, and her leg was thereby broken. The judge directed the jury to find for the plaintiff, if of opinion that the injury sustained was occasioned by the negligence of the defendant. The jury found for the plaintiff, and stated that they so found on account of the improper construction of the coach, and of the luggage being on the seat:—Held, that the case was properly submitted to the jury, and that the facts found specially by them amounted to negligence. Curtis v. Drinkwater, 2 B. & Ad. 169.

In an action by a passenger in a coach, against the owner, for an injury done to him by the coach overturning, if the declaration states that the servant of the defendant negligently "drove, conducted, and managed the coach," the plaintiff cannot recover, if the negligence was in sending out an insufficient coach. Mayor v. Humphries, 1 C. & P. 251.

— Liability of Owner to Servant for Injuries caused by.]—A. contracted with the postmaster-general to provide a mail coach to convey the mail bags along a certain line of road; and B. and others also contracted to horse the coach along the same line. B. and his co-contractors hired C. to drive the coach:—Held, that C. could not maintain an action against A. for an injury sustained by him while driving the coach, by its breaking down from latent defects in its construction. Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 M. & W. 109.

Railway Companies—Reasonable Precautions.]

—A railway company is bound to use the best precautions in known practical use to secure the safety of their passengers, but not every possible precaution which the highest scientific skill (according to speculative evidence) might have suggested. And if there are several grounds of negligence suggested, the jury must be satisfied that some one or other of them existed, and caused damage to the party injured, though they need not be able to ascribe the whole injury to either. Ford v. London and South Western Railway Company, 2 F. & F. 730.

Railway companies who undertake to carry passengers for hire, although bound to use the utmost care, skill, and vigilance in everything that concerns the safety of the passengers, do not warrant the roadworthiness of the carriages they use, and consequently are not responsible for an accident to a passenger arising from a latent defect in the wheel of one of their carriages, such as no care or skill could detect. Per Mellor and Lush, J.J., dissentiente Blackburn, J. Redhead v. Midland Railway Company, 2 L. R. Q. B. 412; 36 L. J., Q. B. 181; 16 L. T. 485; 15 W. R. 831; 8 B. & S. 371. Affirmed, 4 L. R. Q. B. 379; 38 L. J., Q. B. 169; 17 W. R. 737; 9 B. & S. 519—Ex. Ch.

From an imperfect weld in the formation of a driving-wheel used to a carriage on the line of a railway company, the wheel gave way and caused serious injury to a passenger. When that wheel was new, and before using it, it had been properly and regularly tested by hammering it all round and all over, and although this was a test not absolutely fixed and certain to discover defect, yet it was the best known and useful course pursued; no defect was then discoverable. The wheel was afterwards much used, and by it reduced in thickness and considerably worn; after this, and after the tire had been re-turned, it was not again tested or hammered all round; if it had been after it had been so worn, according to the evidence, the defect which in fact existed in the wheel would in all probability have been discovered. The jury found that the company should have again tested the wheel after it had been so worn and re-turned, and was, under the circumstances, guilty of negligence and liable for not doing so:—Held, that the question of the company's liability was properly left to the jury upon the evidence given. There was evidence in favour of the plaintiff's case, and a rule for a new trial was refused. Manser v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 3 L. T. 585.

Possibility of Discovery.]—It is the duty of a railway company to see that trucks coming on their line to be forwarded are in such a state as to travel safely; but a minute examination of such trucks would defeat the purposes of through traffic, and, therefore, cannot be required. Nor does it become the duty of the company to make a minute examination of the whole of a truck merely because a defect has been discovered in it. Richardson v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 1 C. P. D. 342; 35 L. T. 351; 24 W. R. 907—C. A. Reversing the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, 10 L. R., C. P. 480; 32 L. T. 248.

Therefore, where after a company had discovered two defects in a truck, and had caused the only one which was of any importance to be remedied by the owners, and had examined the truck in the usual way after the owners had sent it back, an accident was caused by another defect, in no way connected with or to be expected from either of the two discovered defects, and which could only have been found out by a minute examination, the company was held not to be liable for negligence to a person injured by the accident. Ib.

The Great Eastern Railway Company has a junction at Peterborough, at which junction they receive from other lines merchandize in trucks to the extent of more than 20,000 weekly, to be conveyed by them to London. In the course of a journey from Peterborough to London, one of these foreign trucks, laden with coal, broke down in consequence of the fracture of an axle, and caused the break-van to come into collision with a passenger train, whereby a passenger sustained injury. The truck belonged to a waggon company, whose duty it was to keep it in repair. The course of business at Peterborough was, that every truck, before coming on to the line, underwent some kind of examination as to its general fitness to travel. The particular truck, when submitted to such examination, was found to have a defective spring, and a serious crack in one of its main timbers, and it was accordingly taken into a siding, and was detained there four or five days, for the purpose of having a new spring put on. The truck (which had not been unloaded) was then sent on, with a direction chalked on it by a servant of the waggon company, that it should "stop at Peterborough for repairs when empty." Upon a minute examination of the truck after the accident, it was found that the fore-axle, which was 3½ inches thick, had across it, near the wheel, an old crack an inch and a quarter deep, and this was admitted to have been the sole cause of the breakdown. There was conflicting evidence as to whether or not, regard being had to the extent of the traffic at the junction, it was possible to have discovered this defect in the axle by any practical examination at Peterborough; and the following questions were submitted to the jury:

—1. Would the defect in the axle which was the cause of the accident have been discovered or discoverable upon any fit and careful examination of it to which it might have been subjected? 2. Was it the duty of the railway company to examine this axle by scraping off the dirt and minutely looking at it, so minutely as to enable them to see the crack, and so to prevent or remedy the mischief? 3. If that was not their duty upon the first view of the truck, did it become their duty so to do when, upon having discovered the defect (i. e. in the spring and in the sole of the truck), they ordered it to be repaired, and it remained four or five days upon their premises for the purpose? The jury answered the first question in the affirmative and the second in the negative; and to the third question they answered, "It was their duty to require from the waggon company some distinct assurance that it had been thoroughly examined and repaired." The judge thought the last answer immaterial, and directed a verdict for the company, reserving leave to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for him for an agreed sum, if upon the facts and findings of the jury the court should be of opinion that the company had been guilty of negligence; and this ruling was upheld by the Court of Appeal, as such a duty was not incumbent on the company. Ib.

In an action against a railway company for an injury alleged to have been caused by negligence, the negligence being the use of engines or machinery with a flaw or a defect which ought to have been observed, the question is not whether, according to evidence of a scientific and speculative nature, it might possibly have been detected, but whether practically and by the use of ordinary and reasonable care it ought to have been observed. Stokes v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 2 F. & F. 691. And compare the following case.

Defect in Carriage—Warranty of Fitness.]—

The plaintiff hired from the defendant, a job-master, for a specified journey, a carriage, a pair of horses, and a driver. During the journey a bolt in the underpart of the carriage broke, the splinter-bar became displaced, the horses started off, the carriage was upset, and the plaintiff injured. In an action against the defendant for negligence, the jury were directed that, if in their opinion the defendant took all reasonable care to provide a fit and proper carriage, their verdict ought to be for him. The jury found a verdict for the defendant, and in particular that the carriage was reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was hired, and that the defect in the bolt could not have been discovered by the defendant by ordinary care and attention:—Held, that the direction was wrong, for that it was the duty of the defendant to supply a carriage as fit for the purpose for which it was hired as care and skill could render it, and the evidence was not such as to shew that the breakage of the bolt was, in the proper sense of the word, an accident not preventable by any care or skill, or to warrant the finding of the jury that the carriage was reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was hired. Hyman v. Nye, 6 Q. B. D. 685; 44 L. T. 919; 45 J. P. 554. See Jones v. Page, 15 L. T. 619; Warner v. Banks, 17 L. T. 147.

c. Management of Carriages.

Injury to Hand by Shutting Door.]—The plaintiff was a passenger by railway, and at one station, though all the seats in the carriage in which he was were filled, three more persons got in and stood up. There was no evidence that the servants of the company were aware of this, but the plaintiff remonstrated with the persons who had so got in. At the next station, the door of the carriage was opened by persons who tried to get in, and the plaintiff rose and held up his hand to prevent them. After the train had started, a porter pushed away the persons who were trying to get in and slammed the door, which caught and injured the hand of the plaintiff, who had been thrown forward by the motion of the train:—Held, that there was no evidence from which the jury might infer negligence on the part of the company so as to entitle the plaintiff to recover damages. Metropolitan Railway Company v. Jackson, 3 App. Cas. 193; 47 L. J., C. P. 303; 37 L. T. 679; 26 W. R. 175. Reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal. 2 C. P. D. 125; 46 L. J., C. P. 376; 36 L. T. 485; 25 W. R. 661—C. A.; and the judgment of the Common Pleas, 10 L. R., C. P. 49; 44 L. J., C. P. 83; 31 L. T. 475; 23 W. R. 78.

— Evidence of Negligence—Duty of Judge and Jury.—In an action for negligence it is for the judge to say whether any facts have been proved from which a case of negligence may reasonably be inferred, and then it is for the jury to say whether from those facts negligence ought to be inferred; and Bridges v. North London Railway Company (7 L. R., H. L. 213) does not lay down any new rule as to what is evidence for the jury. Ib.

The plaintiff was a passenger by railway, booking at one of the metropolitan stations, accompanied by his son. On the arrival of the train at the platform, the son entered the carriage first, followed by the father. After the plaintiff had completely entered the carriage, but before he had taken his seat, or passed the passenger sitting next the door, a servant of the company shut the door without warning. The father's thumb was in the hinge, and received injuries, to recover damages for which the action was brought. The jury found for the plaintiff with 20*l.* damages:—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury. Mad-dox v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, 38 L. T. 458.

— Negligence of Passenger.—A passenger in getting into a carriage put his hand on the hinge side of the door, which was standing open, and before he had got quite in, the guard of the train came, and, without any warning, slammed the door upon his hand, and so jammed it between the door and door-post. There was no handle to get into the carriage by, or at least none which could be seen, it being after dark, and no light sufficiently near. In an action against the railway company for the negligence of the guard in so shutting the door:—Held, that there was not such clear evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the passenger that the judge ought to have withdrawn the case from the jury. Fordham v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 3 L. R., C. P. 368; 37 L. J., C. P. 176.

But where a passenger, after getting into a carriage of a train, left his hand for about half a minute on the door-jamb; the guard, after crying out to the passengers to take their places, shut the doors of the carriages of the train, and not seeing the passenger's hand, injured his thumb in shutting the door:—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence by the railway company, and that there was evidence of negligence by the passenger. Richardson v. Metropolitan Railway Company, 37 L. J., C. P. 300.

Door opening.—A passenger by railway, without necessity for so doing, leant against the carriage door, which flew open; he fell out and was injured:—Held, that there was evidence of the liability of the company to go to the jury. Gee v. Metropolitan Railway Company, 8 L. R., Q. B.

161; 42 L. J., Q. B. 105; 28 L. T. 282; 21 W. R. 584—Ex. Ch.

Semble, when there is more than a scintilla of evidence of contributory negligence the court will not go into the question of degree, that being for the jury. Ib. Affirming 25 L. T. 822.

A railway company ought to take reasonable care to see that the handles of the carriage doors are fastened, and if they neglect to do so, they are guilty of negligence. But if a passenger leans too heavily upon a door and meets with an accident by its opening, he will be guilty of contributory negligence. Warburton v. Midland Railway Company, 21 L. T. 835.

The fact of the door of a railway carriage being imperfectly fastened, is evidence of negligence on the part of the company, even when the train was not in a state of motion at the time when the accident happened. Richards v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 28 L. T. 711.

A woman, on arriving at a station at which it was her intention to alight, left her seat for the purpose of taking up her child, which was sitting on the seat opposite to her. In turning round to sit down again and wait till the porter should open the door, she "touched" the door which flew open, and she fell out and injured herself:—Held, that these facts were evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company, proper for the consideration of the jury. Ib.

A passenger having taken a ticket by a train which stopped at short intervals, not exceeding five minutes each between each station, and having entered a carriage, sat by the door, which flew open and was shut by him between the point of departure and each of the first three stations at which the train stopped. At the third station he called for a porter, but the train started too quickly for one to come. The passenger held the door, but getting tired let it go, and it again flew open. He then pulled it to with one hand and put his other arm out to fasten the lock, which was on the outside, and put some of his weight on the door in doing so. The door opened and he fell out. It would have taken only two or three minutes to arrive at the next station, and only about five minutes more to finish his journey:—Held, that there was no evidence of liability on the part of the company. Adams v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 4 L. R., C. P. 739; 38 L. J., C. P. 277; 20 L. T. 850; 17 W. R. 884.

Falling of Window.—The mere fall of a railway carriage window from the ledge upon which it rests, while closed, into the receptacle it occupies when lowered, is not evidence of negligence which will support an action against the company for personal injury caused to a passenger in the carriage by the sudden descent of the window. Murray v. Metropolitan District Railway Company, 27 L. T. 762.

d. Management of Trains.

i. Overshooting Platform, etc.

Invitation to Alight before Stopping—What is.]

—A female was a passenger by railway from Manchester to Huddersfield, which was due at the latter place at 7.55 p.m. Upon the arrival at the station, several porters, who were servants of the company, ran up to the train before it stopped and unlocked and threw open the doors of the carriages and called out, "All out for Huddersfield." She supposing that the train had come to a stand, began to get out, and had placed her foot on the first step for that purpose, when the break, which had been applied to stop the train, was suddenly taken off, which caused an increase of speed; whereby she fell on the platform of the station and broke her leg:—Held, that these facts constituted actionable negligence on the part of the railway company. London and North-Western Railway Company v. Hellewell, 26 L. T. 557.

The carriage of a train in which the plaintiff travelled overshot the platform of the station at which it stopped. The name of the station was called out. The train was not backed. The plaintiff descended from the carriage in a dark place, and alighting on rough ground, sprained his foot. He had not been requested to alight there:—Held, that the company was not liable. Plant v. Midland Railway Company, 21 L. T. 836.

A long train was stopped at a platform so that part of it was alongside the parapet of a bridge; in the dark W., after the train had stopped, and the servants had called out the name of the station, stepped upon the parapet, believing it was the platform, and fell over:—Held, in an action to recover damages for the injuries he sustained by his fall, that the judge was right in leaving the jury to determine whether the circumstances amounted to an invitation to the passenger to alight; and that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the company to justify the verdict which the jury had found for W. Whittaker v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 22 L. T. 545.

A train arrived at a terminus, and was stopped fifteen or twenty feet short of the fixed buffers placed at the extreme limit to which it might have gone. The platform of the station, at the end which would be first reached by an arriving train, instead of having its edge parallel with the line of rails used by the arriving trains, was bevelled off into a curve so as to allow space for a siding which there joined that line of rails. A passenger sat in the last compartment of the last carriage, which was drawn up opposite the curved part of the platform, so that a space of eighteen inches or two feet was left between the carriage and the platform. A guard opened the door but said nothing. It was a dark evening, and the station was dimly lighted. The passenger stepped out, expecting to alight on the platform, and fell between the carriage and the platform, thereby sustaining injuries, in respect of which he brought his action against the company:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the company, inasmuch as there was a clear invitation to the passenger to alight, and no warning given, although in consequence of the insufficiency of light the danger was not apparent. Praeger v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 24 L. T. 105—Ex. Ch.

A traveller by train arrived at the railway station for which he was bound at night. The part of the platform at that station at which passengers could alight was of sufficient length for the whole train to have been drawn up alongside of it, but, in addition to that part, the platform extended some distance gradually receding from the rails. When the train drew up the body of it was alongside the platform; but the last carriage, in which the passenger rode, was opposite the receding part of the platform and about four feet from it. The night was very dark, and the place where the last carriage stopped was not lighted, though the rest of the station was well lighted with gas. There was no express invitation given to the passengers by the company's servants to alight, but the train had been brought to a final standstill and did not move on again until it started on its onward journey. No warning was given to the passenger that the carriage was not close to the platform, or that care would be necessary in alighting. The passenger opened the carriage door, and stepping out, fell into the space between the carriage and the platform, and sustained injuries for which she brought an action against the company:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the servants of the company to go to the jury. Cockle v. London and South-Eastern Railway Company, 7 L. R., C. P. 321; 41 L. J., C. P. 140; 27 L. T. 320; 20 W. R. 754—Ex. Ch.

Bringing a railway carriage to a standstill at a place at which it is unsafe for a passenger to alight under circumstances which warrant the passenger in believing that it is intended he shall get out, and that he may do so with safety, without any warning of his danger, amounts to negligence on the part of the company, for which, in the absence of contributory negligence on the part of the passenger, an action may be maintained. Id.

An invitation to railway passengers to alight on the stopping of a train without any warning of danger to a passenger who is so circumstanced as not to be able to alight without danger, such danger not being visible or apparent, amounts to negligence on the part of the railway company; and the bringing up a train to a final standstill for the purpose of the passengers alighting amounts to an invitation to alight, at all events, after such a time has elapsed that the passenger may reasonably infer that it is intended he should get out if he proposes to alight at the particular station. Id.

A person who had for many years been a frequent traveller on a railway, on arriving, on a winter evening, at the station at which he was to alight, heard the name of the station called out two or three times by one of the railway porters. The part of the train in which he was was drawn up at a place about thirty-five feet from the end of the platform. There were no lights there, and he, in stepping out, fell upon his head and was injured. In an action against the railway company for negligence, the jury having found a verdict in his favour:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the company to go to the jury. Gill v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 26 L. T. 945—Ex. Ch.

A train in which a woman was travelling, having arrived at the end of the journey, was drawn up so as to leave some of the carriages, including that in which she was travelling, beyond the platform. She waited some time, and looked out for assistance, and was seen by the station-master, who was then helping passengers out of the other carriages, and gave her no caution; whereupon she alighted, and, doing so, received injuries:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence which ought to be submitted to the jury. Thompson v. Belfast, Holywood, and Bangor Railway Company, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 517.

When that part of a railway train, including the carriage in which a passenger rode, overshot the platform in daylight, and a porter called out several times the name of the station, and let out some of the passengers, who were departing from the station, and a reasonable time for backing the train had elapsed, and there was, apparently, no intention to back it, and there was at hand no servant of the company whom the passenger could request to have the train backed, and he, though cautiously attempting to alight, fell and was injured in the attempt:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Nicholls v. Great Southern and Western Company, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 40; 21 W. R. 387.

In an action against a railway company, for negligently causing the death of one of their passengers, it appeared that deceased, who was short-sighted, was in the habit of travelling daily from Highbury station to Broad Street station, and back. One evening after dark he arrived at the Highbury station in one of the company's trains. The train was stopped when part of it was brought up to the platform and part of it was in a tunnel, through which the station is approached from the Broad Street station. Part of the platform runs a short distance into the tunnel, and from the end of the platform a slope leads down to the level of the line. On the night in question there was a quantity of hard rubbish from one to two feet high lying along beyond the slope. The carriage in which he was riding was pulled up opposite this rubbish, at the distance of twenty-seven feet from the mouth of the tunnel. After the train had stopped, a passenger in the next carriage gave evidence that he heard the company's servant call out "Highbury;" that he got out; that he then heard called out, "Keep your seats;" that he then heard a groan, and going to the sound, found the deceased, lying partly on the rubbish, and partly with his legs on the rails between the wheels, and having sustained such internal injuries in attempting to alight from the carriage that he died soon afterwards. The wheels of the carriage had not gone over the deceased, the train must therefore have been at a standstill long enough for the passenger who gave evidence to alight, and then to proceed in the darkness, and to find the deceased in the situation described. The tunnel was dark, being filled with steam, but there was a lamp at the end of the tunnel. The judge having on this evidence directed a nonsuit:—Held, that, without laying down any rule as to the effect in all cases of the company's servant calling out the name of the station, the evidence of the calling out the name in this case, coupled with the stopping of the train, and the interval of time which elapsed before it was again moved on, was evidence which ought to have gone to the jury, as it was, in the absence of rebutting evidence on the part of the company, sufficient to authorize their finding a verdict for the plaintiff. Bridges v. North London Railway Company, 7 L. R., H. L. 213; 43 L. J., Q. B. 151; 30 L. T. 844; 23 W. R. 62. Reversing 6 L. R., Q. B. 377; 40 L. J., Q. B. 188; 24 L. T. 835; 19 W. R. 824. The mere stopping of a train and calling out the name of a station, is no evidence of an invitation to alight. Lewis v. London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company, 9 L. R., Q. B. 66; 43 L. J., Q. B. 8; 29 L. T. 397; 22 W. R. 153.

The plaintiff was a passenger from St. Mary's

Cray to Bromley. While the train was passing through Bromley Station, the company's servants called out the name of the station, and shortly afterwards the train stopped. The carriage in which he travelled stopped a little way beyond the platform, and several carriages and the engine, which were in front of that carriage, stopped at some distance from the platform. The plaintiff, who was well acquainted with the station, in alighting from the carriage, was thrown down and injured in consequence of the train being backed into the station for the purpose of bringing the carriages alongside the platform. A very short interval elapsed between the time that the train stopped and the time it was backed into the station:—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the company to render them liable to an action. 1b.

On the approach of a train to a station, a porter called out the name of the station, and the train was brought to a standstill. Hearing carriage-doors opening and shutting, and seeing a person alight from the next carriage, a season-ticket holder, accustomed to stop there, stepped out of a carriage; but the carriage in which he was having overshot the platform, he fell on to the embankment and was hurt. It was night, and there was no light near the spot, and no caution was given, nor anything done to intimate that the stoppage was a temporary one only, or that the driver intended to back the train:—Held, that there was evidence from which a jury might reasonably find negligence on the part of the company's servants, and no evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the passenger. Weller v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 9 L. R., C. P. 126; 43 L. J., C. P. 137; 29 L. T. 888; 22 W. R. 302.

A railway train consisting of six carriages drew up at a small station with the last carriage beyond the platform. The platform was adapted for five carriages only, but on market days the train usually consisted of six carriages; the plaintiff, who frequently travelled by the train, was in the last carriage. The train was drawn up as far as possible, the engine being against a dead end, and the porters called out, "All change here." The plaintiff's son got out and took her parcels across to a train waiting on the other side of the platform. The plaintiff knew the carriage was not at the platform; she, however, did not call for assistance, but proceeded to get out as quickly as she could. She put one foot on the iron step, and as she was about to put the other on the wooden step, the first slipped, and she fell:—Held, that the above circumstances did not constitute any evidence of negligence for the jury. Owen v. Great Western Railway Company, 46 L. J., Q. B. 486; 36 L. T. 850.

Reasonable Means for Alighting.—When a passenger by a railway is invited to alight at a spot where there is no platform, so that the usual means of descent are absent, the duty of the railway company not to expose the passenger to undue danger requires them to provide some reasonably fit and safe substitute; and, in the case of a female passenger, a jury may reasonably find that the company fails in this duty where the only means of alighting provided are the usual iron step and footboard, with no attendants to assist the passenger in alighting. Robson v. North Eastern Railway Company, 10 L. R., Q. B. 271; 44 L. J., Q. B. 112; 32 L. T. 551; 23 W. R.

791. Affirmed, 2 Q. B. D. 85; 46 L. J., Q. B. 50; 35 L. T. 535; 25 W. R. 418—C. A.

A female was a passenger by railway to a very small station; on the arrival of the train at the station, the engine and part of the carriage in which she was riding, were driven past the end of the platform, which is short, and came to a standstill; the door of the compartment in which she was being beyond the end of the platform. Upon the train stopping she rose and opened the door, and stepped on to the iron step: she looked out and saw the station-master, who was the only attendant kept there, taking luggage out of or putting luggage into a van. She did not see the guard or any other railway servant, and she stood on the step looking for somebody to help until she became afraid of the train moving away; and, no one then coming, she tried to alight by getting on to the footboard; she had her back to the carriage, and she had hold of the door with her right hand, and got one foot on to the footboard, and whilst endeavouring to get the other foot on to the footboard she lost her hold of the carriage-door, and slipped, and fell, and was injured. She had a small bag on her left arm, and an umbrella and two small articles in her left hand, but nothing in her right hand. The judge having nonsuited the plaintiff with leave to move to enter a verdict for the plaintiff:—Held, first, that there was evidence from which a jury might have properly found that she was invited or had reasonable ground for supposing she was invited to alight by the company's servants; and that the company had failed in their duty towards the plaintiff, and had not provided a reasonable substitute for a platform. Id.

Held, secondly, that the jury might not improperly have found that the expectation of being carried beyond the station was reasonably entertained by her, and that the inconvenience would have been such as not to render it imprudent on her part to expose herself to the danger incurred in alighting; and that the company was therefore liable for the injury resulting from the plaintiff's act, which had been caused by their negligent breach of duty. And that the nonsuit was therefore wrong, and the verdict ought to be entered for the plaintiff. Id.

A railway train drew up at a station with two of the carriages beyond the platform. The servants of the company called out to the passengers to keep their seats, but were not heard by the plaintiff and other passengers in one of these carriages. After waiting some little time, and the train not having put back, the plaintiff got out, and in so doing fell and was injured; for which injury she brought an action against the company:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company to go to the jury. Rose v. North Eastern Railway Company, 2 Ex. D. 248; 46 L. J., Ex. 374; 35 L. T. 693; 25 W. R. 205—C. A. Reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Division, 34 L. T. 761.

An excursion train, in which husband and wife were passengers to Rhyl, arrived at the Rhyl station, and the train being too long for the platform, the carriage in which they were overshot it. It was then daylight. The passengers were not warned to keep their seats, nor was any offer made to back the train to the platform; nor was it in fact so backed; nor did it move until it started for Bangor. After waiting a short time the husband, following the example of other passengers, alighted, without any request to the railway servants to back the train or any communication with them. The wife, standing on the iron step of the carriage, took both his hands and jumped down, and in doing so strained her knee. There was a foot-board between the iron step and the ground which she did not use, but there was no evidence of any carelessness or awkwardness on her part in the manner of descent. In an action brought for the injury:—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence in the railway company, and that the accident was entirely the result of the passenger's own acts. Siner v. Great Western Railway Company, 4 L. R., Ex. 117; 38 L. J., Ex. 67; 20 L. T. 114; 17 W. R. 417—Ex. Ch.

On the arrival of a train at a railway terminus, there not being room for all the carriages to be drawn up to the platform, some of the passengers were required to alight upon the line beyond it, the depth from the carriage to the ground about three feet. In so alighting, a lady, instead of availing herself of the two steps, with the assistance of a gentleman jumped from the first step to the ground, and sustained a spinal injury from the concussion. The jury having found that the company was guilty of negligence in not providing reasonable means of alighting, and that the lady had not by any misconduct on her part contributed to the injury, and having awarded her 500*l.*, the court held that there was evidence to warrant their finding, and declined to interfere with the amount of damages. Foy v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 18 C. B., N. S. 225; 11 L. T. 606; 13 W. R. 293.

ii. In other Cases.

Collision with Permanent Buffers.]—A passenger train proceeding from one station to another three hundred yards distant, at which permanent buffers were erected, jolted, and so injured the plaintiff. The train stopped after the jolt and near the buffers:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence. Burke v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 22 L. T. 442; 18 W. R. 694.

Collision while Loading Truck.]—A first count alleged that the plaintiff was engaged in loading a truck with stones, and was standing in the truck for that purpose, and a railway company by their servants so negligently backed, shunted, and managed certain trucks under the care and management of the company by their servants, that they were by the negligence and carelessness, breach of duty, and improper conduct of the company in that behalf, driven with great force and violence against the truck in which the plaintiff was standing, and he was thereby with force and violence cast out of the truck in which he was standing, and was greatly hurt. A second count repeated the allegations in the first count, with the addition that the plaintiff was "lawfully engaged in loading the truck:—Held, that the first count could not be supported; but that on the second count, although it would probably have been set aside as embarrassing, yet, inasmuch as it contained allegations showing some duty of care on the part of the company towards the plaintiff, to which he was entitled by being "lawfully" there, and a breach of that duty by an act of active negligence of the company, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. Bulman v. Furness Railway Company, 32 L. T. 430.

Communication between Passengers and Guard.—A railway train is or is not within the operation of the Railways Regulation Act, 1868, s. 22 (which required railway companies to provide communication between passengers and guard when a train runs twenty miles without stopping), according to the actual instructions as to stopping given to the company's servants in charge of the train. And, therefore, where the primary cause of an accident to a train not provided with such means of communication was the breaking of a wheel-tire (without any negligence on the part of the company or their servants), and several minutes elapsed between the first shock felt by the passengers and the actual disaster resulting in the mischief complained of, it was properly left to the jury to say, first, what was the effect of the company's time tables, taken together with the special instructions given to their servants, with regard to the train in question; and, secondly, whether the absence of the statutory precaution was conducive to the accident which occurred. Blamires v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 8 L. R., Ex. 283; 42 L. J., Ex. 182—Ex. Ch.

e. Condition of Premises of Railway Company.

Condition of Station—Prima facie Evidence of Negligence.—The plaintiff went to the station of a railway company, intending to travel by their line to C. A train had started previously, and upon inquiring of a porter when the next train for C. would start, the plaintiff was directed to go to a time bill which was hanging outside the door of the booking office and under a covering or a portico. While standing looking at the time bill, he received an injury from a plank and a roll of zinc which fell through the covering, and upon looking up he saw the legs of a man protruding through the covering.—Held, that, there being nothing to show that the railway company knew that the covering was insecure, or that the man who was upon it was employed by them, there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury, and that the plaintiff must be non-suited. Welfare v. London and Brighton Railway Company, 4 L. R., Q. B. 693; 38 L. J., Q. B. 241; 20 L. T. 743; 17 W. R. 1065.

Obstruction on Platform.—A party being at a railway station in the daylight, with a crowd of persons, awaiting the arrival of a train, caught his foot against the edge of a weighing-machine, the base of which was raised a few inches above the level of the platform, and falling, broke his knee-cap. The machine was of a description in use at railway stations, and was in its usual place, adjoining the end of a counter on which passengers' luggage was placed on the arrival of trains, and was used for weighing luggage.—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence. Corrigan v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 4 H. & N. 781; 29 L. J., Ex. 94; 4 Jur., N. S. 657.

A passenger being in the waiting-room at a railway station at night, and being told by a porter that her train had just drawn up at the station, left the room with a great number of other passengers, and as she went in the direction of the train, which had drawn up past the door, she caught her foot against the edge of a weighing-machine (the base of which was raised a few inches above the level of the platform), fell, and injured herself. The weighing-machine was of the ordinary description for weighing luggage, and stood with its back to the ticket office window, through which a light was thrown on the top of it. The machine was placed between two lamps, ten yards apart, which were suspended from the roof of the platform.—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury. Blackman v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 17 W. R. 769.

Ice.—A person, while waiting for a train, was walking by daylight up and down the platform of one of the stations; a strip of ice nearly an inch thick extended half way across the platform, and he, slipping on the ice, fell, and sustained injuries, in respect of which he sued for damages. The presence of the ice was unexplained.—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Shepherd v. Midland Railway Company, 25 L. T. 879; 20 W. R. 705.

Dangerous Place adjacent to.—On the platform of a railway station there were two doors, in close proximity to each other, the one for necessary purposes, had painted over it the words "for gentlemen," the other had over it the words "lamp room." The plaintiff having occasion to go to the urinal, inquired of a stranger where he should find it, and having received a direction, by mistake opened the door of the lamp room, and fell down stairs, and was injured.—Held, that, in the absence of evidence that the place was more than ordinarily dangerous, the judge was justified in nonsuiting the plaintiff, on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Toomey v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 3 C. B., N. S. 146; 27 L. J., C. P. 39.

Condition of Staircase.—A railway company had a staircase at one of their stations for the use of passengers; it led from the arrival platform to the street, was about six feet wide, had walls on each side, and had wooden steps nosed with brass, which had become smooth from use. A passenger, who together with large numbers of others had used these stairs without accident for months, slipped and hurt himself, and in an action for negligence against the company, he relied on the evidence of a builder, who said that he thought brass dangerous, that lead would be proper and less slippery, and that there should be a hand-rail.—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence. Crafter v. Metropolitan Railway Company, 1 L. R., C. P. 300; 35 L. J., C. P. 132; 12 Jur., N. S. 272; 14 W. R. 334; 1 H. & R. 164.

In an action against a railway company for an injury by a passenger sustained through falling down some stairs at their station, it is not enough to shew that the stairs were of improper condition or construction unless the fall was caused thereby. Davis v. London and Brighton Railway Company, 2 F. & F. 588.

Opinion as to Dangerous Place—Evidence.]—A railway company had a platform extending from their station to their steam-boat pier on a river, 4 ft. 3 in. in width. On one side the platform was protected by railings, but on the side next the railway, which ran parallel with it for some distance, there was a guard of wood 9 in. high. In an action against the company for the injury of a passenger, two witnesses stated they considered it a dangerous platform:—Held, that this was merely an expression of opinion, and that there was no evidence of negligence. Rigg v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 12 Jur., N. S. 525; 14 W. R. 834.

Obstruction on Bridge—Licensee.]—A railway porter was standing, in broad daylight, upon a plank thrown across from parapet to parapet of a footbridge connecting the two platforms of a station, cleaning a lamp, when the plaintiff accompanying her daughter to a train, in crossing the bridge, struck her head against the plank and was injured:—Held, that the plaintiff was not a mere licensee; but that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company. Watkins v. Great Western Railway Company, 46 L. J., C. P. 817; 37 L. T. 193; 25 W. R. 905.

The question whether there was, or was not, negligence on the part of the company should have been left to the jury. Id.

Condition of Bridge.]—A railway company, for the more convenient access for passengers between the two platforms of a station, erected across the line a wooden bridge, which the jury found to be dangerous:—Held, that the company was liable for the death of a passenger through the faulty construction of this bridge, although there was a safer one about 100 yards farther round, which the deceased might have used. Longmore v. Great Western Railway Company, 19 C. B., N. S. 183.

Injury by Portmanteau falling.]—The stations of the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company and another railway company adjoined and were open to each other, and the passengers by either railway had long been permitted to reach it by passing through the station of the other company. A party, while so passing across the platform of the Bristol and Exeter station to get to the other, was injured by a portmanteau, which fell from a truck, owing to the negligence of a porter of the company:—Held, without deciding what would have been the case if the accident had happened through the condition of the Bristol and Exeter Company's premises, that they were liable, as the injury was caused by the misfeasance of one of their servants in the course of his employment, and there was no presumption that the injured party had agreed to undergo greater risks than if he had been one of their passengers. Tebbutt v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 6 L. R., Q. B. 73; 40 L. J., Q. B. 78; 23 L. T. 772.

Crowd on Platform.]—The plaintiff was one of a crowd of passengers assembled at a railway station. The crowd, caused by special excursion traffic, of which the company had previous notice, had been allowed to enter the station and to disperse over the platform at will. No precautions were taken to regulate its movements. On the approach of a train the plaintiff was, through the pressure caused by the swaying of the crowd, thrust off the platform and hurt. An action for negligence being brought against the company in respect of the injury thus occasioned, she was nonsuited on the ground that the facts were no evidence of negligence:—Held, that the nonsuit must be set aside, as the precautions to be taken by the company, the character of the crowd, and all the other circumstances, were questions for the jury. Hogan v. South Eastern Railway Company, 28 L. T. 271.

See also Jackson v. Metropolitan Railway Company, in C. A. and C. P., supra, col. 1967.

In an action under Lord Campbell's Act, to recover damages for death through the alleged negligence of a railway company, it appeared that on the occasion of the accident the deceased had taken a ticket for a special train at a cheap rate for harvest-men. There being no room in the special train, the deceased remained on the platform until the arrival of the next ordinary train, together with a crowd composed of harvest-men, who had also taken tickets for the special train, and of other persons, a large number of whom had entered the station without permission. The company had an extra number of porters at the station, but in consequence of great disorderliness of the persons so assembled on the platform, and by a sudden and violent rush of the crowd, the deceased was pushed on the line, and was killed by the engine of the ordinary train as it approached. At the trial the jury found that the deceased was not entitled to proceed by the ordinary train; that the accident was caused by the rush of the crowd; that the company had not taken due precautions to prevent injuries from the crowding on the platform; and that, by using due precautions, they might have prevented the rush of the crowd:—Held, that even assuming the deceased to have been lawfully on the platform, the company were not liable for the accident. Cannon v. Midland Great Western Railway Company, 6 L. R., Ir. 199—C. A.

Number of Porters necessary.]—A railway company is not bound to provide at a station (even when an unusually large number of passengers by a special train is expected) a staff of servants sufficient not merely for the guidance and assistance of passengers and the preservation of order amongst them, but adequate to control the violence of an assemblage of persons entering the station without permission, and overcrowding the platform. Id.

f. Condition of Line.

Primâ facie Evidence of Improper Construction.]—Where an injury is alleged to have arisen from the improper construction of a railway, the fact of its having given way will amount to primâ facie evidence of its insufficiency; and this evidence may become conclusive from the absence of any proof on the part of the company to rebut it. Great Western Railway Company of Canada v. Fawcett, 1 Moore, P. C. C., N. S. 101; 9 Jur., N. S. 339; 8 L. T. 31; 11 W. R. 444.

A railway company, in the formation of its line, is bound to construct its works in such a manner as to be capable of resisting all violence of weather which, in the climate through which the line runs, might be expected, though perhaps rarely, to occur. Id.

In an action against a railway company to recover compensation for injuries resulting to a passenger from an accident caused by the giving way of a portion of the railway, it was proved, that the company had always employed skilful engineers in the construction of its works, and that the giving way of the railway was caused by a storm of unusual violence. The judge, in directing the jury, never explained to them the effect of such evidence upon the question of negligence:—Held, that the jury ought to have had their minds distinctly and pointedly directed to this question. Id.

In an action against a railway company for compensation for injury received by a party by the breaking down of a bridge over which he was passing in a passenger train:—Held, that it was a proper question for the jury, whether the company engaged the services of a competent engineer, who had adopted the best method, and had used the best materials, and that if the company had done so, they would not be liable; but that the mere fact of their having engaged the services of such a person, would not relieve them from the consequences of an accident arising from a deficiency in the work. Grote v. Chester and Holyhead Railway Company, 2 Ex. 251; 5 Rail. Cas. 649.

— Knowledge by Company of Defective Condition.—In an action by a passenger against a railway company for an injury sustained while travelling on their line, the declaration complained that the company kept and maintained their line in an insecure state, the evidence being, that the embankment ran through a country subject to floods, and had, five years before, been constructed of sandy soil, with insufficient culverts to carry off water; that an extraordinary fall of rain had caused a flood, which had washed away the soil, or a part of the embankment, leaving the sleepers unsupported, so that the earth gave way, and the train, an express train, passing over it at night, at the ordinary express rate, went off the line. There being no evidence that the water was seen on the line, or that there had been anything to indicate danger, and no engineer or skilled witness having been called to prove that the nature of the soil of the embankment was such that water would wash it away in ordinary floods:—Held, that although the evidence as to the construction and condition of the line at the time of the accident, and of the rate of speed at which the trains had been going, had been properly admitted, as these were circumstances which might have shewn negligence if it had been proved that the line was known, or ought to have been known, to be in an insecure state, yet that as there was nothing to shew that it was so known, there was no evidence of negligence, or so little, that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. Withers v. North Kent Railway Company, 27 L. J., Ex. 417; S. C., at Nisi Prius, nom. Withers v. Great Northern Railway Company, 1 F. & S. F. 165; S. P., Wyborn v. Great Northern Railway Company, 1 F. & F. 162.

— Fall of Girder.—A party, while travelling on a railway, was injured by the fall of a girder through the negligence of the workmen employed by a contractor (unconnected with the railway company), whilst placing it across the retaining walls of the railway. It was proved that the work in question was extremely dangerous, though none of the witnesses had ever known of a girder falling; that it was the practice, when such work was being done over railways, for the company to place a man to signal to the work-people the approach of a train, and that this precaution was not adopted on the occasion in question, but there was no evidence that the company's servants knew that the girder was in the course of being moved at the time the train was passing, or of the means used by the contractor for moving it:—Held, that as a fact the company was not guilty of negligence, although the evidence of negligence was such that it could not have been withdrawn from the jury. Daniel v. Metropolitan Railway Company, 3 L. R., C. P. 591; 37 L. J., C. P. 280—Ex. Ch. Affirmed, 5 L. R., H. L. 45; 40 L. J., C. P. 121; 24 L. T. 815; 20 W. R. 37—H. L.

The Corporation of London was authorized to execute certain works over the line of the Metropolitan Railway Company. These works consisted partly in placing heavy iron girders upon the walls running along the line of railway, and were therefore works in the execution of which danger was involved, but which were often executed elsewhere without mischief. The railway company had no control over these works, which were executed by contractors engaged by the corporation. Several girders had been safely put in their places by manual labour, but on this occasion, the contractors brought into use for one of the girders a monkey steam-engine which moved the girder with a jerk, and so caused it to over-balance and fall. It fell on a passing train, and injured the plaintiff:—Held, that this was not a mischief the occurrence of which the railway company was bound to anticipate, and against which it was bound to take precautions, and consequently that the railway company was not liable. Id.

— Condition of Switch.—The defendants' line ended at a station which belonged to another company; but for the use of it and for the use of a switch (which was self-acting) for entering the station the defendants paid a rent. A servant of the defendants' company was employed to look after some neighbouring gates, and also to see that the switch acted correctly. He omitted to do so on the occasion of the approach of the train in which the plaintiff's husband was riding. The switch did not act and the defendants' train ran into the trucks of another company and the passenger was killed. In an action by the widow a verdict was given for the plaintiff:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence to affect the railway company, and the verdict was upheld. Birkett v. Whitehaven Junction Railway Company, 4 H. & N. 730; 28 L. J., Ex. 348.

Train Colliding with Cattle.—A passenger by railway sustained injuries by the collision of a train with cattle which were trespassing from adjoining lands, and had come on the line at a private level crossing through a gate open at the time of the accident. Two other private crossings and a public crossing were within 300 yards ; and the train, when approaching, could not be seen at a distance of more than twenty perches from the place where the accident occurred. Evidence was given that the gate had been left unlocked on previous occasions, and that the post to which it should be locked was loose at the time of the accident :—Held (per Pigot, C. B., and Deasy, B.), that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company ; but (per Fitzgerald, B.), that, in the absence of any evidence that the gate was open in consequence of the looseness of the post, or of the post having been loose previously to the accident, the plaintiff was properly nonsuited ; and (per Hughes, B.), that, in the absence of evidence as to the nature or degree of the looseness of the post, or the length of time during which it was loose, there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company to be left to the jury. Patchell v. Irish North-Western Railway Company, 6 Ir. R., C. L. 117.

Coal-shed—Licensee—Usual Practice.—[At a railway station it was the practice to unload coal waggons by shunting them, and tipping the coal into cells ; it was also the practice for the consignees or their servants to assist in the unloading, and for that purpose to go along a flagged path by the side of the waggons. A consignee of a coal waggon could not unload it in the usual way on account of all the cells being occupied. With the permission of the station-master, he went to his waggon, which was shunted in the usual place, took some coal from the top of the waggon, and descended on to the flagged path. The flag he stepped on gave way and he fell into one of the cells and was injured :—Held, that, although not getting his coal in the usual mode, he was not a mere licensee, but was engaged, with the consent of the company, in a transaction of common interest to both parties, and was therefore entitled to require that the premises should be in a reasonably secure condition. Holmes v. North Eastern Railway Company, 6 L. R., Ex. 123 ; 40 L. J., Ex. 121 ; 24 L. T. 69—Ex. Ch.

No Fence.—[A man went with a cart and team, by implied invitation, to fetch lime from a railway yard. While in the yard he unharnessed a mare that was leading his team. A passing train frightened the mare ; she backed some considerable distance, and, in spite of his efforts to hold her, fell over a dwarf wall of the company's, and was hurt. An action having been brought in the county court by him against the company for not having a sufficient fence to the yard, it was proved at the trial that he knew the place well, and had been there often before. The county court judge found that the fence was insufficient, and decided in his favour :—Held, that there was no proof of want of reasonable care on the part of the company to prevent damage from unusual danger to persons visiting the premises with full knowledge of the state of the place, and that, therefore, he was not entitled to recover. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company v. Woodcock, 25 L. T. 333. And compare the following cases.

Brick Falling from Bridge.—[A person was walking on a highway under a bridge forming part of a line of railway, when a brick fell from its place in the perpendicular pier of the bridge, and injured him. He at the time heard a noise as of a train passing above :—Held, that these facts were sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company. Kearney v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 6 L. R., Q. B. 759 ; 40 L. J., Q. B. 285 ; 24 L. T. 913 ; 20 W. R. 24—Ex. Ch. Affirming 5 L. R., Q. B. 411 ; 39 L. J., Q. B. 200 ; 22 L. T. 886 ; 18 W. R. 1000.

Footbridge over Railway.—[A railway company, in lieu of and substitution for an old public footpath crossing their line on the level, built a footway bridge over the railway, and also over an adjoining road running parallel therewith, at a height of about 15 feet from the ground. This bridge was fenced on both sides with close wooden boarding 6 feet high, where it crossed the railway, and with open ornamental iron work 4 feet high, with triangular apertures 3 feet 3 inches high by 1 foot 6 inches wide, where it crossed the road. There was no interval between the wooden boarding and the iron work, nor any aperture than those above mentioned, in the fencing or the bridge. A child four and a half years old, together with another child seven years old, went upon the bridge to cross over, when he, instead of walking straight forward in the ordinary way, placed his back against the wooden boarding, and slid or edged himself along against it until he came to the iron work, when he fell backwards, through one of the above-mentioned triangular apertures, on to the road, and was injured. In an action to recover damages, the county court judge ruled that there was evidence of negligence in the company, and asked the jury whether they thought the bridge was reasonably safe for all her Majesty's subjects, and whether the child materially contributed to the accident :—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the company, and that the plaintiff ought to have been nonsuited. The only duty upon the company was to keep the bridge, which they had substituted for the old public footpath, in a state ordinarily safe for persons using it for the purpose of crossing over it in the ordinary way, and that the plaintiff's user of it in this instance was not such a user. Lay v. Midland Railway Company, 30 L. T. 529. See infra.

A railway company, in place of a public footway crossing their line on the level, built a bridge over the line, and also over a roadway adjoining. The bridge was fenced with wooden hoardings where it crossed the rails, and with open ornamental work with triangular openings where it crossed the road. A child about four years of age went upon the bridge, in company with another child, for the purpose of crossing over, and instead of walking straight forward, he placed his back against the hoardings and slid along until he came to the ornamental ironwork, when he fell through backwards on to the road and was injured. In an action to recover compensation, evidence was adduced as to the dangerous character of the bridge. The jury found that the child was lawfully using the bridge when the accident occurred, and that the bridge was not reasonably safe for all her Majesty's subjects :—Held, that there was evidence of negligence, and that it was the duty of the company to keep the bridge in such a state as not to be dangerous to any one using it in a lawful manner, and that there was no negligence on the part of the child contributory to the accident. Ib., 34 L. T. 30. And see further, NEGLIGENCE.

g. Crossing the Line.

At the Station, no Invitation—Alternative Method.]—W. was in the habit of travelling by the last train from K. to L., which departs from the up platform. Adjoining the down platform at the K. station was a booking-office and waiting-room; but there was no office or room or any shelter whatever on the up platform. In the middle of the station opposite the booking-office the ground between the rails was covered with wood for the width of several feet, over which passengers used to cross when there was no train standing in the station. Near the south end of the station there was also a covered wooden bridge over the rails, the steps leading to which opened on to the causeway of a highway, so that any person who wished to cross over from one platform to another by the bridge would have to go from the station to the high road, ascend the steps, cross the bridge, descend again to the high road, and then re-enter the station. On the 1st May, 1875, W. arrived in time for his train, and went to the waiting-room. Shortly before his train approached the up platform a porter called out, "All the other side for L." At that time there was no train in the station, so that passengers could safely use the middle crossing. W., however, had not then taken his ticket, and by the time he had done so a train had entered the station, and was standing on the down line, thereby blocking up the middle crossing. W., therefore, being in a hurry to catch his train, did not cross over the rails by the bridge, but walked along towards the end of the platform, and then jumped on to the rails for the purpose of reaching the up platform. In doing so he sustained considerable injury, the ground between the rails at that point having been excavated, and the ballast removed. At the trial several witnesses were called to prove that when the middle crossing was blocked they were in the habit of getting across from one platform to the other as best they could, and did not make use of the bridge. The company's officials denied, however, that they had ever sanctioned such a proceeding:—Held, that as a proper place had been provided for crossing, of which W. was aware, and there was no evidence of an invitation on the part of any servant of the railway company to cross where he did, the company was not liable for the injuries which he had sustained. Wilby v. Midland Railway Company, 35 L. T. 244.

— Crossing in Common Use.]—A wife having arrived at a station proceeded to cross the rails, to a platform on the opposite side, by a path which the railway company had always allowed the passengers to use for that purpose. While in the act of crossing she was knocked down and killed by a train, which had been suddenly, and without any warning, driven backwards along the line of rails which she was so crossing. In an action by her husband against the company:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Rogers v. Rhymney Railway Company, 26 L. T. 879; 21 W. R. 21.

Where no Crossing.]—A passenger, travelling by railway, whose train, from which he had alighted at a junction, was shunted to an unusual siding, out of sight from the platform, on a dark night, was killed while crossing the main line:—Held, that although there was no accommodation by a bridge for the passengers, and no servant of the company at hand to direct them, there was no evidence of positive negligence on the part of the company. Falkiner v. Great Southern and Western of Ireland Railway Company, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 213.

Evidence of Negligence and Contributory Negligence.]—At a railway station trains were in the habit of crossing twice a day, the entrance to the station and the ticket-office being situated at the down side of the line. The platform on the other side was not directly opposite, and was reached by an oblique level crossing, which met it at a point where it gradually sloped to the line. The space between the double lines of rail, where intersected by the crossing, was about eighteen feet, and there was a lamp midway in the space. A gate, which was usually left open, was at the end of the down platform. The plaintiff, an intending passenger by an up-train, sought to cross the line while a down-train was standing at the platform; he was unacquainted with the station, and was not warned against crossing. He passed through the gate which was open. While running across he saw the up-train, but had not heard any whistle, and, in endeavouring to jump on the siding, he was struck by this train and severely hurt. If he had remained on the spot at which he first saw the approaching train, he would have escaped injury, as there was sufficient room for him to have stopped safely in the space between the trains. The accident occurred on a dark and misty evening, and there was at the time much smoke and noise from the down-train, which was standing in the station. At the close of the case some of the jury, speaking apparently from their personal knowledge of the station, suggested that the crossing was dangerous from its obliqueness, and that the plaintiff might have been misled by running straight across to a steep part of the up-platform, instead of the place where it sloped to meet the crossing. This point was not referred to in the opening statement, or in the evidence, nor much pressed in reply. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, but stated, in the first instance, that both parties were to blame, and, in answer to the learned judge, it appeared that their verdict was really based on the ill construction of the crossing. In answer to specific questions, they, however, found that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff (which had been pleaded), and that the company had not been guilty of negligence, either in leaving the gate at the down-platform open, or in not having a porter to warn persons against crossing at a dangerous time, or in the train not having whistled. The judge, having directed the verdict to be entered for the plaintiff, with liberty for the defendants to move to have it changed into a verdict for them:—Held, that the verdict could not be sustained, because, per Morris, C. J., and Lawson, J., it was both unsatisfactory and against the weight of evidence on the plea of contributory negligence. Wright v. Great Northern Railway Company, 8 L. R., Ir. 257. Affirmed in C. A.

Held, further, per Harrison, J., that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants which could be legitimately connected with the accident; that the injury to the plaintiff was solely caused by his own negligence; and that the verdict and judgment should, therefore, be entered for the defendants. Ib. And see Darcy v. London & South-Western Railway, 12 Q. B. D. 70; 53 L. J., Q. B. 58.

— Direction by Servant of Company.—A railway passenger was set down after dark on the side of the line opposite to the station and place of egress. The train was detained more than ten minutes at this place, and from its length blocked up the ordinary crossing to the station, which is on the level. The ticket collector stood near the crossing with a light, telling the passengers, as they delivered their tickets, to pass on. The passenger passed down the train to cross behind it, and from the want of light stumbled over some hampers put out of the train, and was injured. The practice of passengers had been to cross behind the train, when long, without interference from the railway company:—Held, that these facts disclosed evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Nicholson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 3 H. & C. 534; 34 L. J., Ex. 84; 12 L. T. 391.

— Swing Gate open.—A railway intersected a public foot and carriage way upon the level close to a station on the line. At the place of intersection spring carriage gates opened both ways, and there was also a swivel gate on each side of the line for persons on foot. A return ticket holder, while crossing the line at this place to reach the passenger station, was killed by an overdue express. At the time of the accident one of the swing gates was partially open, and there was no gatekeeper:—Held, that this circumstance (which was in contravention of the provisions by statute, and by the company's rules for the protection of carriage traffic along the road) constituted an invitation to the ticket holder to cross the line, and evidence of the company's negligence. Stapley v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 1 L. R., Ex. 21; 35 L. J., Ex. 7; 11 Jur., N. S. 954; 13 L. T. 406; 14 W. R. 132; 4 H. & C. 93.

And compare the following cases.

Accidents to Licensees.—The defendants' railway crossed a level crossing which was some twenty yards distant from a foot-bridge. Both the crossing and the bridge were private crossings, intended for the use of persons employed in a neighbouring manufactory. About thirty yards from the crossing was a box where a railway man was commonly stationed, who was sometimes shouted to by persons wishing to pass the level crossing with carts, and answered "All right." The plaintiff, a boy of eleven years of age, who was employed at the manufactory, having occasion to go over the line, was waiting at the level crossing until one train had passed, but was knocked down and severely injured, when in the act of crossing, by another train which he had not observed, and which was passing in the opposite direction immediately afterwards. At the trial there was evidence that the bridge was dirty and not lighted at the time of the accident; that the train did not whistle; that the plaintiff knew the bridge, having crossed it several times; and that the man at the box used to bring out a stick to stop him from going over the bridge, but that when the accident happened he was not present. There was no evidence to shew what the man's special duties were, or whether he had any duties in respect to foot passengers. Upon this evidence the learned judge was asked to nonsuit the plaintiff:—Held, on further consideration, that there was evidence of negligence to go to the jury, and that the conduct of the railway man was a distinct breach of duty which amounted to negligence and contributed to the accident. Clarke v. Midland Railway Company, 43 L. T. 381.

S. attempted to cross the line of railway at night at a spot where persons were in the habit of crossing with the acquiescence of the company. At the time that he attempted to cross there was a train standing still on the up line in such a position as to prevent a person on the line behind it from seeing anything approaching on the down line. S. came from behind the train on the up line, and, on crossing on to the down line, was struck by an express train and killed. It was a rule of the company that express trains should whistle at that point, but evidence was produced that the train had not in fact whistled on that occasion. This evidence was contradicted by the servants of the company, who also proved that the train carried lights, and might have been seen by S. before he stepped on to the down line:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the company, and that the case was properly left to the jury. Dublin, Wicklow and Wexford Railway Company v. Slattery, 3 App. Cas. 1155; 39 L. T. 365; 27 W. R. 191. Affirming 10 Ir. R., C. L. 256—Ex. Ch.

Notices not to Cross, Effect of.—When notices have been put up by a railway company forbidding persons to cross the line at a particular point, but these notices have been continually disregarded by the public, and the company's servants have not interfered to enforce their observance, the company cannot, in the case of an injury occurring to any one crossing the line at that point, set up the existence of the notices by way of answer to an action for damages for such injury. Ib.

Told not to Cross.—A public footway crossed a railway on a level. The plaintiff while crossing on the footway in the evening, after dark, was knocked down and injured by a train on the crossing. He stated at the trial, that he did not see the train until it was close upon him; that he saw no lights on the train and heard no whistling. He stated also that he did not hear any caution or warning given to him by any servant of the company. The driver and fireman of the engine were called on behalf of the company, and stated that there were lamps on the engine and train, which were lighted in due course on the night in question, at the commencement of the journey, and which, if lighted, could be seen for a considerable distance by anyone standing at the crossing. A porter also stated that he had seen the plaintiff at the crossing on the night in question, and had called to him not to cross. The judge ruled that there was evidence to go to the jury of negligence on the part of the company which caused the injury to the plaintiff:—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence. Ellis v. Great Western Railway Company, 9 L. R., C. P. 551; 43 L. J., C. P. 304; 31 L. T. 874—Ex. Ch.

Company acquiescing in Use.]—There is no duty upon a railway company acquiescing in persons crossing a portion of its line in no definite track to use care for the protection of those persons. Harrison v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 29 L. T. 844; 22 W. R. 335. See cases above.

A railway company drove trains over a line belonging to a dock company, and running between the dock and a public promenade. The public was allowed to cross the line at all points, but there was one regular crossing where they more usually crossed. The plaintiff crossed the line at a point some distance from the regular crossing, and was knocked down and injured by a train of the railway company driven at four miles an hour. There was a short curve at the spot, but no whistle or other warning was given:—Held, no evidence of negligence. Id.

State of Level Crossing—Passage of Carriages.]—When a railway company constructs its line across a highway on a level under the sanction of an act of parliament, it is the duty of the company to keep the crossing in a proper state for the passage of carriages across the rails; and if a carriage is damaged in consequence of the rails being too high above the surface of the roadway, the company is liable. Oliver v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 9 L. R., Q. B. 409; 43 L. J., Q. B. 198.

Gates open.]—A railway crossed a highway at a level. There were gates to stop carriages, horses and cattle, and a watch-box and a person to close the gates as soon as such horses, &c., should have passed. There were also swing-gates for foot passengers. A boy, aged fourteen, came to the crossing soon after a cart had passed over the line; the gates were still open, and he went through and got on the line; but, seeing an up train approaching, he waited on the down line till it had passed. While he was thus waiting, a down train approached, but the boy did not see it, though he might have done so if he had been on the look-out for it, or if his attention had not been engrossed by the up train. The up train having passed, the boy was just leaving the down line to cross, when the train knocked him down:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence; for the company being bound by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 47, to have closed the gates at the time, the fact that they were open was an invitation to the boy to cross, whereby he was put off his guard, and so, perhaps being embarrassed by the train which he did see, he was injured by the other, which, in consequence of that embarrassment, he failed to see. North-Eastern Railway Company v. Wanless, 7 L. R., H. L. 12; 43 L. J., Q. B. 185; 30 L. T. 275; 22 W. R. 561. Affirming 6 L. R., Q. B. 481; 25 L. T. 103—Ex. Ch.

A railway crossed diagonally on a level by a public road, and also diagonally by a private road, the two roads converging and forming a right angle. A gate placed by the company on that side of the railway on which the roads met, in pursuance of s. 47 of the Railways Clauses Act, served for both, and was under the control of the company, who placed a gatekeeper in charge thereof. The private road led to a stoneyard on the opposite side of the railway, abutting thereon, and communicating therewith by means of a private gate. A carman, having occasion to cross the line from the stoneyard, called to the gatekeeper to know if the line was clear, and receiving an answer in the affirmative, attempted to cross with a lorry and two horses, which were run into by a train:—Held, that it was the duty of the gatekeeper placed in charge of the gate, not merely to open it when required for the passage of horses and carriages, but there was an implied duty on him to exercise reasonable caution and discretion in doing so; and that the fact that the private road to the stoneyard was only available by means of the gate serving the public road, placed the carman in the same position with respect to the gatekeeper, as if he was using the public road, and that the company was therefore liable for the damage occasioned by his negligence. Low v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., Q. B. 277; 35 L. J., Q. B. 105; 12 Jur., N. S. 409; 14 L. T. 225; 14 W. R. 497.

Evidence of Negligence—Neglect to Fence.]—A line crossed a public footpath on the level; but the railway company had not erected any gate or stile, as provided by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 61. A child of four years and a half old, having been sent on an errand, was shortly afterwards found lying on a level crossing, a foot having been cut off by a passing train:—Held, that there was evidence that the accident was caused by the neglect of the company to fence. Williams v. Great Western Railway Company, 9 L. R., Ex. 157; 43 L. J., Ex. 105; 31 L. T. 124; 22 W. R. 531.

Where persons are in the habit of crossing a railroad at a particular place, though there is no right of way there, it throws upon the company the responsibility of taking reasonable precautions in their use of such place. Barrett v. Midland Railway Company, 1 F. & F. 361.

Contributory Negligence—Deafness.]—A railway crossed a footway on the level, and on each side of the railway the company put a swing-gate which closed of its own accord, and on the top of the post of each gate was a ring, which a pointsman at an adjoining signal-box was able, by working a lever there, to raise or let fall. When it so fell, it would ordinarily fall over the post so as to keep the gate securely closed; and this was usually done when a train was approaching. There were several lines of railway running over this crossing, and a foot passenger standing at the gate could only see about twenty yards up or down the lines; but when he had crossed to the first line he could see a distance of 300 yards; and when he had reached the six-foot way, being a space between the two sets of rails, he could see as far as 500 or 600 yards. A foot passenger came to the gate when the ring was up and the gate capable of being opened, but a goods train was standing on the first line, in the way of the crossing, and the passenger waited until the train had moved off. He then opened the gate and attempted to cross the railway; but after he had reached the six-foot way he was run over and killed by a train. The pointsman and another person called out to him before the accident to warn him of his danger, and he might have escaped had he heard them, but he was deaf :—Held, that the company was not liable, as he had contributed by his negligence to the accident. Skelton v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 2 L. R., C. P. 631 ; 36 L. J., C. P. 249 ; 16 L. T. 563 ; 15 W. R. 925. And see Stubley v. London and North-Western Railway Company, infra.

Opening Gates—Illegal Act.—A declaration alleged that a railway crossed on a level a turnpike road, and gates were erected and maintained by the company across the turnpike road, and were so constructed that when open they would shut themselves by their own weight, and which gates the company kept constantly closed, except when horses were passing ; that the company not regarding their duty, did not employ or have proper persons to open and shut the gates, and negligently left the gates wholly without any person to open and shut the same, and that during the time while there was no person to open and shut the gates the plaintiff was travelling along the turnpike road with a carriage and horse, and necessarily had occasion to cross the railway through the gates, and by reason of the company's neglect of duty was unable to cross the railway without himself necessarily opening the gates ; that he waited a reasonable time for some person to come and open the gates, and used all reasonable means to make known his desire to pass through the gates ; but no person came to open the gates, and by reason thereof he was obliged to and did open the gates and pass through, and it being night-time and dark, and having passed through one of the gates, the gate, without any default on his part, by its own weight flew back and struck the horse, which became unmanageable, whereby he was thrown out of the carriage and hurt :—Held, that the declaration disclosed no cause of action, for the plaintiff had no right to open the gates himself, and the injury was caused by his own act in doing so. Wyatt v. Great Western Railway Company, 6 B. & S. 709 ; 34 L. J., Q. B. 204 ; 11 Jur., N. S. 825 ; 12 L. T. 568 ; 13 W. R. 837.

Negligent Whistling at Level Crossing.—Where a railway crosses a highway on a level at a place where there is considerable traffic, the fact of the engine driver blowing off the steam from the mudcocks at that spot, so as to frighten horses waiting to pass over the line, is sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the company has been guilty of actionable negligence. Manchester South Junction Railway Company v. Fullarton, 14 C. B., N. S. 54 ; 11 W. R. 754.

Duty to post Watchmen.—There is no general duty on railway companies to place watchmen at public footways crossing the railway on a level, but it depends upon the circumstances of each case whether the omission of such a precaution amounts to negligence on the part of the company. Stubley v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., Ex. 13 ; 35 L. J., Ex. 3 ; 11 Jur., N. S. 954 ; 13 L. T. 376 ; 14 W. R. 133 ; 4 H. & C. 83.

A railway crossed on a level a public footway, and on each side of the line were swing-gates through which passengers entered. At one of these gates the view up and down the line was obstructed by the piers of a railway bridge which crossed it, but near the line there was a clear view of 300 yards in each direction. A woman who approached the line by that gate waited until a luggage train passed, and immediately afterwards proceeded to cross the line, when a person on the other side twice called out to her, but being deaf she did not hear, when an express train which the luggage train prevented her from seeing, knocked her down and killed her. Thirty-six passenger trains passed along the line daily, besides luggage trains. No person was stationed at the crossing to warn passengers of danger, but caution-boards were placed there :—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Ib.

A railway crossed a highway on a level. At the crossing there was a swing-gate for foot passengers. It was proved that 100 trains passed this crossing daily, and that there was no attendant at the crossing. A person, in crossing the line at this point, was knocked down and injured by a train :—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Bilbee v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 18 C. B., N. S. 584 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 182 ; 11 Jur., N. S. 745 ; 13 L. T. 146 ; 13 W. R. 779.

C., while passing along an occupation road which crossed a railway on a level, was knocked down and injured by a train, owing, as was alleged, to the negligence of the railway company. There were gates across the road left unfastened, and the company had at one time kept a gatekeeper, but had ceased to keep one some time before the accident. About three years before the accident the company had obtained powers under an act to make a new road and discontinue the level occupation road ; the powers of the act were to be exercised within five years and then to cease ; and nothing had been done as to the road till after the accident. The jury negatived negligence in the driver of the engine ; but found for the plaintiff on the ground generally of "negligence as to the crossing." The judge, in summing up, left to the jury, as evidence of negligence in the company, the omission to keep a gatekeeper, and the omission to exercise the powers of their act :—Held, a misdirection. Cliff v. Midland Railway Company, 5 L. R., Q. B. 258 ; 22 L. T. 382 ; 18 W. R. 456.

h. Unpunctuality and Non-Starting of Trains.

No Implied Warranty of Punctuality.—The mere taking of a ticket for a railway journey by railway does not amount to a contract on the part of a railway company, or impose upon the company a duty, to have a train ready to start at the time at which the passenger is led to expect it. Hurst v. Great Western Railway Company, 19 C. B., N. S. 310 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 264 ; 11 Jur., N. S. 730 ; 12 L. T. 634 ; 13 W. R. 950.

A. took a ticket at C. on a railway for N., via Midland Railway, having been told that by a train about to start he could travel on to N. by that route ; on arriving at G. the train was late, and the corresponding train from G. to N. had started. A. was compelled to stay at G. for the night, and was put to various expenses. In an action for these expenses, he declined to put in the time-bills of the company, but relied on the ticket, on which was printed in the ordinary

Of Infant's Attendant.—A child of five years old was under the care of his grandmother, who purchased a ticket for him, and another for herself, to go from A. to B., on the railway of the company. While crossing the line at A., to be ready for their train, they were both knocked down and injured by another train. The accident was partly owing to the company's negligence, and partly to such negligence on the part of the grandmother as would disentitle her to recover damages from the company for injury:—Held, that the infant not being able to take care of himself, and being under his grandmother's care, there was such an identification between the grandmother and the child that, by reason of her negligence, he was unable to maintain an action for the injury to himself. Waite v. North-Eastern Railway Company, El., Bl. & El. 719; 27 L. J., Q. B. 417; 4 Jur., N. S. 1300. Affirmed on appeal, El., Bl. & El. 719; 28 L. J., Q. B. 258; 5 Jur., N. S. 936; 7 W. R. 311—Ex. Ch. And see Skelton v. London and North-Western Railway Company, ante, col. 1988.

Of Fellow-Servant.—A travelling inspector of the carriage department of the London and North-Western Railway Company was travelling with a free pass of that company in a train of theirs upon a journey on the railway of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company over which the London and North-Western Company had running powers, and whilst so travelling the train in which he was came into collision with a number of coal trucks of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, which were being shunted on their line by their servants, and the inspector received bodily injuries. Either in consequence of the hazy state of the weather and the slippery state of the rails the driver of the train was unable to stop the train when he came in sight of the distance signal, which had been put up at "danger" by the servants of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, or he disregarded it. The jury, in an action by the plaintiff against the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, found that the accident was due to the joint negligence of them in shunting the trucks when a passenger train was due, and of the London and North-Western Railway Company in their driver running past the danger signal:—Held, that the contributory negligence of the driver of the London and North-Western Railway Company's train, with whom the plaintiff must for the purpose of the action be identified, disentitled him to maintain an action for damages against the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company for their negligence. Armstrong v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 10 L. R., Ex. 47; 44 L. J., Ex. 89; 33 L. T. 228; 23 W. R. 295.

But see now, Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and MASTER AND SERVANT.

J. Measure of Damages.

Loss of Profits of Trade or Profession.—In an action against a railway company for personal injury to a passenger, the jury in assessing the damages may take into their consideration, besides the pain and suffering of the plaintiff, and the expense incurred by him for medical and other necessary attendance, the loss he has sustained through his inability to continue a lucrative professional practice. Phillips v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 5 C. P. D. 280; 49 L. J., C. P. 233; 42 L. T. 6; 44 J. P. 217—C. A.

The directions proper to be given to a jury as to the damages to be awarded to the plaintiff further considered. A new trial will be granted in an action for personal injuries sustained through the defendant's negligence, where the award of the jury is so small as to shew that they must have omitted to take into consideration some of the elements of damage. S. C., 5 Q. B. D. 78; 41 L. T. 121; 28 W. R. 10—C. A.

A person in business, travelling to meet his customers, booked himself by railway as a passenger from London to Hull by a train, which the company advertised to arrive at Hull the same night. On reaching Grimsby, where the company's line ended, it was found that the Hull train had left, and although the party might have reached Hull that night by taking a special conveyance and hiring a boat to cross the Humber, he remained at Grimsby and proceeded by train the next morning; but he was too late to reach Driffield and other places by the hour he had previously appointed for meeting his customers, and in consequence he was obliged to hire conveyances to see some of his customers elsewhere, and was detained several days waiting for the market days to see others. He having brought an action against the company for breach of their contract to convey him to Hull:—Held, that he was only entitled to recover the amount of hotel expenses at Grimsby, and the railway fare next day to Hull, and was not entitled to recover for any damage occasioned by his not reaching Driffield and other places by the time he might have reached them if the company had performed their contract. Hamlin v. Great Northern Railway Company, 1 H. & N. 408; 26 L. J., Ex. 20; 2 Jur., N. S. 1122.

Put into wrong Train by Porters.—A husband took tickets at Wimbledon for himself, wife, and two children of five and seven years of age respectively, to go to Hampton Court station by the last train at night; by the negligence of the porters they were put into the wrong train and carried to Esher; being unable to obtain accommodation for the night at Esher or a conveyance, they walked home, a distance of between four and five miles, and the night being wet the wife caught cold, and medical expenses were incurred:—Held, that the husband was entitled to recover damages in respect of the inconvenience suffered by being compelled to walk home, but that the illness of the wife was a consequence too remote from the breach of contract for damages to be recoverable for it. Hobbs v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 10 L. R., Q. B. 111; 44 L. J., Q. B. 49; 32 L. T. 352; 23 W. R. 520.

Expenses of Special Train.—See cases ante, col. 1991.

Deduction of Insurance Money.—In an action against a railway company for negligence, the company cannot deduct from the damages awarded by the jury the amount of money received under an insurance in an accidental insurance office as compensation for the same injuries. Bradburn v. Great Western Railway

3. PASSENGER'S LUGGAGE.

a. What is.

Those articles only, which travellers usually carry with them as part of their luggage, come within the definition of ordinary or personal luggage, which a railway company is bound to carry with a passenger free of charge. A railway company refused to carry a spring horse for a child to ride on, weighing 78 lbs., and measuring 44 inches in length, tendered to them by a passenger, who was entitled to take with him 112 lbs. weight of ordinary or personal luggage:—Held, that the spring horse was not ordinary or personal luggage, and the company was justified in refusing to carry it free of charge. Hudston v. Midland Railway Company, 4 L. R., Q. B. 366; 38 L. J., Q. B. 213; 20 L. T. 526; 17 W. R. 705.

Whatever the passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or to the ultimate purpose of the journey, is to be considered as personal luggage. Macrow v. Great Western Railway Company, 6 L. R., Q. B. 612; 40 L. J., Q. B. 300; 24 L. T. 618; 19 W. R. 873.

Furniture.—A passenger by railway from Liverpool to London took with him in a trunk, as his personal luggage, six pairs of sheets, six pairs of blankets, and six quilts. He had given up his residence in Canada, and these articles were intended for the use of his household when he should have provided himself with a home in London. The trunk having been lost, he sought to recover the value of the articles from the company:—Held, that the articles, being intended for the use of his household when permanently settled, could not be considered as personal or ordinary passengers' luggage. Id.

Miscellaneous Articles.—A carpenter had with him as a passenger by railway a box containing a concertina, a rifle, a revolver, two gold chains, a locket, two gold rings, a silver pencil-case, a sewing machine, and a quantity of tools of his trade, such as chisels, planes, &c. The box having been lost while in the care of the railway company:—Held, that the articles in italics were ordinary personal luggage, for which the company was responsible, but that the other articles were not: Wilson, J., dissenting as to the concertina. Bruty v. Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, 31 Upper Canada R. 66.

Held, also, that the fact of the other articles being in the box could not prevent the passenger from recovering for such as were personal luggage. Id.

Articles of Clothing—Exemption by Special Act.—A railway company whose act enabled every passenger to take with him his articles of clothing not exceeding a specified weight and dimensions, and absolved the company from all liability or responsibility for the safe carriage of articles so carried, and who by one of their published regulations, required passengers, after taking their tickets, to claim their luggage on the platform, and to see it marked with the company's labels, and declared that no luggage would be placed in the train until it was so marked, and that they would not be responsible for any article of luggage that was not so marked, could not refuse to place in their van, and convey as passengers' luggage, a package brought by a passenger, and made up in a railway wrapper or a horse rug, on the ground that it consisted of articles of clothing, nor could they oblige the passenger to take it along with him in the carriage in which he sat, so as to throw on him the responsibility of its safe carriage. Munster v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 676; 27 L. J., C. P. 308; 4 Jur., N. S. 738.

Sketches of Artist.—Pencil sketches of an artist, placed in his portmanteau, do not form part of his ordinary luggage, so as to entitle them to be conveyed free of charge. Mytton v. Midland Railway Company, 28 L. J., Ex. 385.

Title-Deeds.—Ordinary luggage for which a railway company is responsible does not include title-deeds belonging to a client, which an attorney is carrying with him in his bag or portmanteau for the purpose of producing on a trial in a local court; or bank-notes (to a considerable amount) carried by him for the purpose of meeting the contingencies or exigencies of the case. Phelps v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 19 C. B., N. S. 321; 34 L. J., C. P. 259; 11 Jur., N. S. 652; 12 L. T. 496; 13 W. R. 782.

Concealed Merchandise.—A railway company is not liable for the loss of merchandise delivered to them by a passenger as his personal luggage, without notice that the luggage contained merchandise. Cahill v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 10 C. B., N. S. 154; 30 L. J., C. P. 289; 7 Jur., N. S. 1164; 4 L. T. 246; 9 W. R. 653. Affirmed on appeal, 13 C. B., N. S. 818; 31 L. J., C. P. 271; 8 Jur., N. S. 1063; 10 W. R. 321. S. P., Belfast and Ballymena Railway Company v. Keys, 9 H. L. Cas. 556; 8 Jur., N. S. 367; 4 L. T. 841; 9 W. R. 793.

Duty as to.—A carrier of passengers for hire is, at common law, only bound to carry their personal luggage. Shepherd v. Great Northern Railway Company, 8 Ex. 30; 7 Railw. Cas. 310; 21 L. J., Ex. 286.

Therefore if a passenger has merchandise among his personal luggage, or so packed that the carrier has no notice that it is merchandise, he is not responsible for its loss. Id.

But if the merchandise is carried openly, or so packed that its nature is obvious, and the carrier does not object to it, he will be liable. Id.

A passenger, on his arrival by a train, left his luggage at a railway cloak-room on Saturday night. On Sunday night he called for it, but found the room closed, and no one in attendance to deliver it. After a delay of forty minutes he got it, but too late to go by another railway that night:—Held, that he had a cause of action against the company for the delay in the delivery of it. Stallard v. Great Western Railway Company, 2 B. & S. 419; 31 L. J., Q. B. 137; 8 Jur., N. S. 1076; 6 L. T. 217; 10 W. R. 488.

Amount.—The rule that each passenger by a third-class parliamentary train may carry with him 50 lbs. weight of luggage, permits a husband and wife travelling together to take 112 lbs. weight of luggage between them. Great Northern Railway Company v. Shepherd, 21 L. J., Ex. 114.

Liability for Loss apart from Contract.]—The G. W. R. issue through tickets from Stourbridge on their line to Euston (via Birmingham) on the defendants' line. The journey from Stourbridge to Birmingham is by the G. W. R., and from Birmingham to Euston by the defendant railway. The plaintiff travelled with one of these tickets, and his portmanteau was labelled and carried in the van of the G. W. R. as far as Birmingham. At Birmingham he changed into the defendants' train, and his portmanteau was seen to be transferred into the van of the defendants' train, but at Euston it was not forthcoming, and was not recovered till three months afterwards, when its contents were injured by contact with some perishable articles he had packed inside it. The plaintiff having sued the defendant company for the delay and injury to his goods, it was held, that the action was maintainable in accordance with the principle of Foulkes v. Metropolitan Railway Company (5 C. P. D. 157), for the defendants, having received the portmanteau to forward it, had committed a breach of duty in neglecting to do so, for which they were responsible, apart from any question of contract. Hooper v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 50 L. J., Q. B. 103; 43 L. T. 570; 29 W. R. 241; 45 J. P. 223.

Master and Servant—Luggage.]—A servant travelling with his master on a railway may have an action in his own name against the company for the loss of his luggage, although the master took and paid for his ticket. Marshall v. York, Newcastle and Berwick Railway Company, 11 C. B. 655; 21 L. J., C. P. 34; 16 Jur. 124.

The liability of the company in such a case is independently of the contract. Ib.

But the owner of a portmanteau who allows his servant to carry it by train as his own personal luggage, the servant taking and paying for his ticket, and the owner travelling by a later train, cannot maintain an action against the company for the loss of the portmanteau. Becher v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 5 L. R., Q. B. 241; 39 L. J., Q. B. 122; 22 L. T. 299; 18 W. R. 627.

b. Receiving Luggage.

When given into Charge of Porter.]—When a porter receives luggage at the entrance of a station for the purpose of labelling it and putting it in a train, he receives it as agent of the company, and the company is liable for its safety although the passenger has not taken a ticket. Lovell v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, 45 L. J., Q. B. 476; 34 L. T. 127; 24 W. R. 394.

A traveller arrived at a station twenty-five minutes before the train started by which she intended to travel; a porter took her luggage, which she left with him while she went to the ticket office. The ticket office was not open. She waited till it was opened and then took her ticket. On returning to the platform she found that part of her luggage was missing.—Held, that these facts were evidence that the porter had received the luggage as agent of the company; and that the company was not protected by a notice to the effect that the company would not be answerable for luggage left in the custody of porters, but was liable for the loss as a common carrier. Ib.

— With Directions not to Label.]—L., on his arrival at the station, handed his bag to a porter, at the same time telling him he was going to Woolwich. The porter took the luggage to the platform and was about to have it labelled, when L. told him he would take it with him in the carriage. The porter then left suddenly, leaving the bag on the platform, and L. went to get his ticket. On his return the bag was found to be missing. At the trial L. was nonsuited:—Held, that the nonsuit was wrong, and that there was evidence to go to the jury that the bag was entrusted to the servant of the railway company to go to Woolwich as passenger's luggage; also that there was no evidence of the bailment having been determined. Leach v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 34 L. T. 134.

Luggage placed in Carriage.]—When a passenger's luggage is at his request placed by the company's servants in the carriage in which he is travelling, the contract to carry it safely is subject to an implied condition that the passenger takes ordinary care of it, and if his negligence causes its loss the company is not responsible. Talley v. Great Western Railway Company, 6 L. R., C. P. 44; 40 L. J., C. P. 9; 23 L. T. 413; 19 W. R. 154.

A passenger whose portmanteau had been placed at his request in the carriage with him got out at an intermediate station on his journey, and having negligently failed to find the same carriage again, finished his journey in a different one; the portmanteau having been stolen during the latter part of the journey by persons in the carriage without any negligence of the company:—Held, that the company was not responsible for the loss. Ib.

The luggage of a passenger by railway, though never delivered to any servant of the company, but kept by the passenger during the journey, is nevertheless, in point of law, in the custody of the company, so as to render them responsible for its loss. Great Northern Railway Company v. Shepherd, 8 Ex. 30; 7 Railw. Cas. 310; 21 L. J., Ex. 286.

A railway company has been held liable for the loss of a passenger's luggage, though carried in the carriage in which he himself is travelling. Le Conteur v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., Q. B. 54; 35 L. J., Q. B. 40; 12 Jur., N. S. 266; 13 L. T. 325; 14 W. R. 80.

A railway company is not an insurer in respect of luggage placed at a passenger's request in the same compartment in which he intends to travel; and the company will not be liable to compensate him if luggage so placed is lost or stolen without any negligence on his part. Bergheim v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 3 C. P. D. 221; 47 L. J., C. P. 318; 38 L. T. 160; 26 W. R. 301—C. A.

B. went to the station some time before the train started. A porter, by B.'s direction, placed his bag in the carriage. B. went away for a short time, and on his return the bag was gone. In an action to recover the value of the bag, the jury found that neither the railway company nor B. had been guilty of negligence:—Held, that the company was not liable as a common carrier.

c. Notices and Special Contracts.

Notice.]—A common travelling trunk of a large size, containing apparel and jewels, having been lost by a carrier, either through his having omitted to place it on his coach, or having fastened it there insecurely:—Held, that he was liable to make compensation to the owner, a gentleman travelling by his coach, though no disclosure was made of the value of the contents of the trunk, and though there was a notice in the carrier's office limiting his responsibility to five pounds, in the absence of such disclosure, which notice the owner of the trunk, having been in the office, had an opportunity of seeing. Brooke v. Pickwick, 4 Bing. 218; 12 Moore, 447.

Statutory Liability—Bye-law Limiting.]—A section of an act, incorporating a railway company, enacted, that, without extra charge, it should be lawful for every passenger travelling upon the railway to take with him articles of clothing, not exceeding forty pounds in weight, and four cubic feet in dimensions; and that the company should in no case be responsible for any thing whatsoever carried upon the railway with any passenger, other than such passenger's articles of clothing, not exceeding the weight and dimensions aforesaid; provided that nothing therein contained should extend to make liable the company further than where, according to law, stage-coach proprietors and common carriers would be liable. Another section enabled the company to make bye-laws for the good government of the affairs of the company, and for the management of the undertaking. The company made a bye-law, that every first-class passenger should be allowed to carry 112 lbs. of luggage free of charge, but that the company would not be responsible for the care of the same, unless booked, and the carriage thereof paid for:—Held, that the company had no power to make the bye-law, since it was in contravention of the first section. Williams v. Great Western Railway Company, 10 Ex. 15.

See Munster v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 676; 27 L. J., C. P. 108.

Carriage by Sea—At Common Law—Power to Limit.]—A passenger by an English vessel belonging to an English company, from Southampton to the Mauritius, via Alexandria and Suez, took and signed a ticket, in the body of which the engagement of the company was stated to be subject to the conditions and regulations indorsed thereon, among which was this clause: "The company does not hold itself liable for damage to, or loss or detention of, passengers' baggage." A package of baggage being lost during the voyage, the passenger sued the company in the Supreme Court at Mauritius for damages for the loss:—Held, first, that it was a contract to be interpreted by the law of England, the place where the contract was made. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company v. Sand, 3 Moore, P. C. C., N. S. 272; 13 W. R. 1049. See Truman v. Pacific Steam Navigation Company, 26 L. T. 704.

Held, secondly, that (as neither the 11 Geo. 4

& 1 Will. 4, c. 68, nor the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, applied) the company, as carriers, at common law, had power to limit their common law liability by special agreement, and that the limitation imposed by the stipulations indorsed on the ticket with respect to any loss, exempted the company from responsibility for the loss of the baggage. Id.

By Sea and Land.]—When a carrier makes one contract for carriage, partly by land and partly by water, the contract is divisible so as to bring that part which applies to carriage by land within the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68. Le Conteur v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., Q. B. 54; 35 L. J., Q. B. 40; 12 Jur., N. S. 266; 13 L. T. 325; 14 W. R. 80.

Special Contract Notice on Ticket.]—Z. took a through ticket from the Charing Cross station of the South-Eastern Railway Company to Paris: the ticket was in three coupons: 1, from London to Dover; 2, from Dover to Calais; 3, from Calais to Paris. His luggage consisted of a portmanteau and a hat-box, which were registered through to Paris. Upon the ticket was printed the following condition: "The company is not responsible for loss or detention of or injury to luggage of the passenger travelling by this through ticket except while the passenger is travelling by the company's trains or boats." The portmanteau was lost on the journey between Calais and Paris. In an action for the loss:—Held, that the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), only applied to the traffic of the company on their own line, and therefore the company was at liberty to make the special contract contained in the ticket. Zunz v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 4 L. R., Q. B. 359; 38 L. J., Q. B. 209; 20 L. T. 873; S. C., nom. Turner v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 17 W. R. 1096; 10 B. & S. 594.

Passengers' luggage is within s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), and therefore railway companies are liable for loss or injury to such luggage in the receiving, forwarding or delivering thereof, occasioned by the neglect of such companies or their servants, notwithstanding any notice or condition made and given by them in anywise limiting such liability. Cohen v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 2 Ex. D. 253; 46 L. J., Ex. 417; 36 L. T. 130; 25 W. R. 475—C. A. Affirming 1 Ex. D. 217; 45 L. J., Ex. 298; 35 L. T. 213; 24 W. R. 522.

The provisions of that 7th section are by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119 (The Regulation of Railways Act, 1868), s. 16, extended to the conveyance by water of such luggage by railway companies using steam vessels for the purpose of carrying on a communication between any towns or ports. Id.

C. was an English subject, and the railway company was an English railway company subject to the English statutes as to railways, and authorized to have and work steamers between Boulogne and Folkestone. He took a ticket at an office of the company in Boulogne, for a through journey from Boulogne to London, by the company's steamer to Folkestone, and thence by their railway to London. On the ticket was:—"Each passenger is allowed 120 lbs. of luggage free of charge." "The company is in no case responsible for luggage of the passenger travelling by this through ticket of greater value than 6l." C. had a box with her, which was given in charge of the servants of the company, and in transferring it from the boat to the train it fell into the sea, owing to the negligence of their servants, and the contents were damaged to the amount of 73l. :—Held, that, assuming the contract to be governed by English law, the condition on the ticket was void by reason of the above sections, and the company was liable for the loss. Ib.

Notice of Conditions.]—A passenger on paying his fare received a ticket from the clerk of the steam company, on the back of which was printed a notice exonerating them for liability for loss, injury, or delay to the passenger or his luggage, however caused. There was no evidence that the passenger had been made aware of this condition before or at the time when he took the ticket. During the voyage the steamer was lost by the negligence of the servants of the company, and the passenger lost his luggage and suffered other damage and inconvenience :—Held, that in the absence of proof that the passenger had assented to be bound by the condition indorsed on the ticket, it was no defence to the action by him, to recover the loss he had sustained. Henderson v. Stevenson, 2 H. L., Sc. App. Cas. 470 ; 32 L. T. 709. Distinguished in Burke v. South-Eastern Railway (3 C. P. D. 1), ante, col. 1952. And in Parker v. South Eastern Railway, and Harris v. Great Western Railway, post, col. 2006.

Special Contract—Loss "off the Line of" Company.]—A passenger took a through ticket from Bath to Chester at the office of the Midland Company at Bath, the ticket containing on the back a statement that it was issued subject to the conditions in the company's time tables, one of those conditions being that the company should not be responsible for any delay, detention, "or other loss or injury arising off its lines." Part of the journey, viz., from Birmingham to Chester, is by the London and North-Western Railway, the station at Birmingham being the property of that company, and all the porters and other servants there employed being paid by it ; but by an agreement between that company and the Midland Railway Company, authorized by act of parliament, the latter company, on payment of an annual sum, has a right to the use of the station and the services of the porters. The passenger arrived at the Birmingham station safely with his luggage, which had originally been delivered to the Midland Company. There he saw a porter wheeling his luggage on a truck across to that part of the platform whence the London and North-Western Company's trains departed for Chester. It was never seen afterwards. An action having been brought against the Midland Railway Company for the loss :—Held, that, assuming and without deciding that the passenger was bound by the condition exempting the company from liability for "loss off its lines," his luggage could not be said to be "off the lines" of the Midland Company until it was "out of their custody," that the onus of shewing that the loss took place after the luggage had ceased to be in their custody lay upon the company, and, as they had failed to shew that, they were liable for the loss. Kent v. Midland Railway Company, 10 L. R., Q. B. 1 ; 44 L. J., Q. B. 18 ; 31 L. T. 430 ; 23 W. R. 25.

— With whom made.]—Where, by a traffic arrangement between two railway companies, passengers are booked through, the contract is one entire contract between the passenger and the company issuing the ticket. Mytton v. Midland Railway Company, 4 H. & N. 615 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 385.

A traffic arrangement for booking passengers through existed between the South Wales Railway Company and the Midland Company. The South Wales Company issued a through ticket to a passenger from Newport to Birmingham, the words "via Midland from Gloucester" being printed on the ticket. His portmanteau was lost on the Midland line, between Gloucester and Birmingham. Under the South Wales Company's Act a passenger's ordinary luggage is conveyed at his own risk. The fares paid are divided between the companies according to the mileage :—Held, that he had no cause of action against the Midland Company, the contract entered into by him being with the South Wales Company for the whole distance. Ib.

By Excursion Trains excluding Luggage.]—By a railway company's act, every passenger travelling upon the railways may take with him his ordinary luggage, not exceeding 150 lbs. in weight for first-class passengers, and 100 lbs. in weight for second and third class passengers, without any extra charge being made for the carriage :—Held, that this did not preclude the company from making special arrangements for the exclusion of luggage by cheap excursion trains. Rumsey v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 14 C. B., N. S. 641 ; 32 L. J., C. P. 244 ; 10 Jur., N. S. 208 ; 8 L. T. 666 ; 11 W. R. 911.

A. took an excursion ticket for a journey from Scarborough to Whitby, for which he paid 5s., knowing that the company declined to carry any luggage for passengers travelling with excursion tickets, and that if he went (as he might have done by the same train) as an ordinary passenger, with luggage, the price of the ticket would be 9s. Before taking his ticket he had procured one of the company's porters to place his portmanteau in the luggage-van, not informing the porter how he was going to travel. On arriving at Malton, an intermediate station, he requested that his portmanteau might be taken out of the van to await his return from Whitby on his way to York. The guard, however, refused to allow this to be done, the portmanteau not being booked ; and it was accordingly carried on to Whitby, where the company's servants refused to deliver it up without being paid for the carriage from Scarborough to Whitby :—Held, that the circumstances raised an implied contract for the carriage of the portmanteau for hire, and therefore that the company was justified in detaining it. Ib.

A passenger, who took a ticket for an excursion train, referring him to bills on which it was announced that luggage taken by the train was at the passenger's risk, is not entitled to sue for loss of his luggage by negligence, though he did not see the hand-bills or know of the condition. Stewart v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 3 H. & C. 135 ; 33 L. J., Ex. 199 ; 10 Jur., N. S. 805 ; 10 L. T. 302 ; 12 W. R. 689.

By an excursion train from Liverpool to London and back at greatly reduced fares, there was printed on the railway company's ticket issued for it, "Ticket as per bill ;" and on the back of the tickets, "This ticket is issued subject to the conditions contained in the company's time and excursion bills." On such bills (to be obtained where the tickets were issued) was this notice: "Luggage under 60 lbs. free, at passengers' own risk."—Held, to be a special contract between plaintiff and the railway company, not void under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854; that notice was given that the luggage of passengers under 60 lbs. should by that train be at their own risk; and that the railway company was not liable. Ib.

But see Cohen v. South-Eastern Railway Company, supra.

Evidence of Knowledge.—A passenger on a railway to a station thereon, having taken and paid for a second-class ticket, delivered her luggage to a porter of the company, telling him to what station she was going, and after seeing him label it, took her seat in the train. On her arrival at her destination one of her boxes was missing. By their act the company was empowered to make bye-laws, which were to be painted on a board and hung up at the stations, and were to be binding on all parties. One of the bye-laws was as follows: "Every first-class passenger will be allowed 112 lbs., and every second-class passenger 56 lbs., of luggage, free of charge, but the company will not be responsible for the care of the same unless booked and paid for accordingly." It did not appear that the passenger knew of the bye-law, or that it had been affixed at the stations as required by the act. It was admitted by the company that the box had been stolen. The passenger having sued the company in a county court for the loss, the judge, on these facts, held the company liable, and gave a verdict for the full value of the box:—Held, on appeal, that the judgment must be affirmed, as the prima facie liability of the company was not conclusively rebutted, and there was, therefore, evidence to support the finding. Great Western Railway Company v. Goodman, 12 C. B. 313; 21 L. J., C. P. 197; 16 Jur. 862. And see Henderson v. Stevenson, supra.

d. Delivering Luggage.

Duty as to.—A carrier who undertakes to convey a passenger with his luggage, is bound to deliver it to him at the end of the journey, though it may be in the same carriage with him, and under his personal care; and if the usual course of delivery is at a particular spot, that is the place of delivery. Richards v. London and South Coast Railway Company, 7 C. B. 839; 6 Railw. Cas. 49; 18 L. J., C. P. 251; 13 Jur. 986.

A railway company, as a common carrier of passengers and their luggage, is bound on the arrival of a train at the terminus of the journey to deliver a passenger's luggage into a carriage, to be conveyed from the station, if required so to do, and if such is their usual practice. Butcher v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 16 C. B. 13; 3 C. L. R. 805; 24 L. J., C. P. 137; 1 Jur., N. S. 427.

A., a passenger, brought with him into the carriage a carpet-bag containing a large sum of money, and kept it in his possession until the arrival of the train at the London terminus. On alighting from the carriage with the bag in his hand he permitted a porter of the company to take it from him for the purpose of securing for him a cab. The porter, having obtained a cab (within the station), placed the carpet-bag on the foot-board thereof, and then returned to the platform to get some other luggage belonging to A., when the cab disappeared, and the carpet-bag and its contents were lost:—Held, that this was a loss by negligence of the company, for which the company was responsible in damages. Ib.

Evidence of Delivery.—A., a passenger by the Midland Railway from Gloucester to Bristol, on arriving at the terminus at Bristol, told a porter there that he wished to proceed by the Bristol and Exeter Railway (whose station closely adjoined that of the Midland Railway) to Torquay. The porter thereupon placed A.'s portmanteau on a truck with other luggage, entered the Bristol and Exeter station with the truck, passed down an incline from the arrival platform, crossed the lines of the railway, and ascended an incline to the departure platform of the Bristol and Exeter Railway. There was no evidence that the portmanteau was ever afterwards seen; and it never reached Torquay. In an action against the Midland Railway Company for the loss:—Held, that there was no evidence of a breach of their contract to deliver either to A., or at the departure platform of the Bristol and Exeter Railway. Midland Railway Company v. Bromley, 17 C. B. 372; 25 L. J., C. P. 94; 2 Jur., N. S. 140.

In an action against a railway company for not delivering luggage to another railway company at B., to be carried by such last-mentioned company from B. to C., the plaintiff must give such evidence of a non-delivery at B. as preponderates over the presumption of a delivery. It is not enough to shew that the luggage never reached C., or to give evidence of a loss, which is equally consistent with a loss by the one company as by the other. Ib.

Delivery on Platform.—It is the duty of a railway company with regard to the luggage of a passenger, which travels by the same train with him but not under his control, when it has reached its destination, to have it ready for delivery upon the platform at the usual place of delivery until the owner, in the exercise of due diligence, can receive it; and the liability of the company does not cease until a reasonable time has been allowed to the owner to do so. Patscheider v. Great Western Railway Company, 3 Ex. D. 153; 38 L. T. 149; 26 W. R. 268.

As to Liability of Cab Proprietor for Negligence of Driver.—See HACKNEY CARRIAGE.

e. Deposit in Cloak-room.

Conditions on Ticket—Knowledge of, by Customer.—If a cloak-room ticket has on the face of it a plain and unequivocal reference to the conditions printed on the back, the person taking such ticket is bound by the conditions, whether he has made himself acquainted with them or not. Harris v. Great Western Railway Company, 1 Q. B. D. 515; 45 L. J., Q. B. 729; 34 L. T. 647; 25 W. R. 63.

H. having been a passenger by railway, her luggage (consisting of two packages) was deposited with a clerk of the railway company, at their cloak-room; and the person depositing it received a ticket which was headed "Luggage and cloak office," and on the face of which was printed, in type easily legible, "left, subject to the conditions on the other side. This ticket to be given up when the luggage is taken away." And on the other side, after a statement of the "sums to be paid for warehousing passengers' luggage," there was a notice that "the company will not be responsible for loss of, or injury to, any package beyond the value of 5*l.*, unless at the time of the delivery of such package the true value and nature thereof . . . shall have been declared, . . . and a sum at the rate of 1*d.* per pound sterling . . . be paid . . . in addition to the before-mentioned ordinary warehouse charges. The company will not be responsible for loss of, or injury to, articles except left in the cloak-room." The value of each package was more than 5*l.*, but no declaration of value or additional payment was made. The person who deposited the luggage knew that there were conditions on the back of the ticket, but did not know what those conditions were. The luggage was not put by the servants of the company into the cloak-room, but was left in a vestibule, without any other protection, and was stolen owing to this negligence of the servants of the company.—Held, that the luggage must be taken to have been deposited subject to the conditions on the back of the ticket. Ib.

Held, also, by Blackburn and Mellor, J.J., that the conditions were applicable to the loss, and protected the company, although the luggage was not deposited in the cloak-room. But, by Lush, J., that the contract was to warehouse the luggage in the cloak-room, and that the conditions only protected the company as to a deposit in the cloak-room. Ib.

When a person delivers a parcel at the cloak-room of a railway company, and receives a ticket with conditions on the back limiting the company's liability, he is not bound if he does not know there is writing on the ticket; but if he knows there is writing containing conditions he is bound; if he knows there is writing, but does not know it contains conditions, he is bound, if in the opinion of the jury reasonable notice is given that it contains conditions. Gabell v. South-Eastern Railway Company, Parker v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 2 C. P. D. 416; 46 L. J., C. P. 768; 37 L. T. 540; 25 W. R. 564—C. A.

A person delivered a parcel of a value exceeding 10*l.* at a cloak-room of a railway company, paid 2*d.*, and received a ticket, on which were the words "See back." On the back was a condition that the company would not be responsible for packages exceeding the value of 10*l.* The parcel was lost, and the owner sued for its value. The jury was asked whether he knew of the condition, and whether he was under any obligation in the exercise of reasonable caution to make himself aware of it. The jury answered in the negative, and found a verdict for him.—Held, that there was a misdirection, and there must be a new trial. Ib. Reversing the judgment of the Common Pleas Division, 1 C. P. D. 618; 45 L. J., C. P. 515; 34 L. T. 654.

— Company are not Liable as Carriers in respect of.]—A passenger coming off a journey by a railway, deposited her travelling bag in the cloak-room at a station, taking a ticket for it, and paying 2*d.* On returning to reclaim it, she found that it had been delivered to some one else. It was afterwards recovered, but without several articles of value that had been in it when it was deposited. On the back of the ticket was printed, "The company will not be responsible for articles left by passengers at the station, unless duly registered, for which a charge of 2*d.* per article will be made, and a ticket given in exchange; and no article will be given up without the production of the ticket, or satisfactory evidence of the ownership being adduced. A charge of 1*d.* per diem in addition will be made on all articles left in the cloak-room for a longer period than twenty-four hours. The company will not be responsible for any package exceeding the value of 10*l.*" It did not appear whether the passenger had read the ticket or not, but she brought it back to the cloak-room on applying for the return of her luggage.—Held, in an action against the company for not safely keeping the bag, first, that 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, did not apply, the company not receiving the bag as a carrier. Van Toll v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 12 C. B., N. S. 75; 31 L. J., C. P. 241; 8 Jur., N. S. 1213; 6 L. T. 244; 10 W. R. 578.

Held, secondly, that the inference was that the passenger assented to the terms of the notice on the ticket, and therefore, as the value of the articles missing exceeded 10*l.*, the company was not liable for the loss. Ib.

A. travelled to London by a railway; deposited a box at the cloak-room; paid a charge of 2*d.*, and received a ticket, on the back of which were printed conditions; but it contained no notice of the hours the cloak-room was kept open, or of the time the box was to be redelivered:—Held, that there was an implied contract on the part of the company to deliver the box to A. on reasonable request, and in reasonable time. Stallard v. Great Western Railway Company, 2 B. & S. 419; 31 L. J., Q. B. 137; 8 Jur., N. S. 1076; 6 L. T. 217; 10 W. R. 488.

Loss of Patterns Deposited—Actual Value.]—Where a commercial traveller deposited a case of patterns in a waiting-room of a railway company, and it was lost:—Held, that he, in an action against them as warehousemen for negligence, could not recover damages beyond the actual value of the article lost. There is no undertaking on the part of warehousemen to be answerable beyond the actual value of the article, except by special contract. Anderson v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 4 L. T. 216; 9 W. R. 519.

Protection under Conditions.]—Where an article deposited in the cloak-room of a railway company exceeds 10*l.* in value, a notice on the ticket given to the depositor that "the company will not be responsible for any package exceeding the value of 10*l.*" protects the company from liability, not only for the loss of such an article, but also for delay in delivering it, at least where the delay is caused by no wilful act or default of the company, and without its privity or knowledge. Pepper v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 17 L. T. 469.

Compare also cases ante, col. 2002.

Military Baggage.—“Public baggage, stores, and arms,” &c., sent by railway, in charge of any of Her Majesty's forces, specified in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 85, s. 12, is “their baggage,” no matter what may be the disproportion between the amount of baggage and the number of the forces in charge of it, and must be carried by a railway company at the rates imposed by that section. Att.-Gen. v. Great Southern and Western Railway Company, 14 Ir. C. L. R. 447.

III. CARRIAGE OF GOODS AND ANIMALS AT COMMON LAW.

1. COMMON CARRIERS OF GOODS.

Implied Contracts.—When goods are delivered to carriers for conveyance, the implied contract of the carriers is, safely and securely to convey the goods, and within a reasonable time. Raphael v. Pickford, 2 D. N. S. 916; 5 M. & G. 551; 6 Scott, N. R. 478; 12 L. J., C. P. 176; 7 Jur. 815.

The duty of common carriers to carry safely is independently of any contract made by them, and no contract need be proved in an action founded on the custom of the realm. Pozzi v. Skipton, 1 P. & D. 4; 8 A. & E. 963; 1 W., W. & H. 624.

Reward.—A carrier is not bound to convey goods except on payment of the full price for the carriage, according to their value; and if that is not paid, it is competent to him to limit his liability by special contract. Wyld v. Pickford, 8 M. & W. 443.

But he is not exempted thereby from all responsibility; but is, notwithstanding the notice, bound to take ordinary care in the carriage of the goods, and is liable not only for any act which amounts to a total abandonment of his character of a carrier, or for wilful negligence, but also for a conversion by a misdelivery arising from inadvertence or mistake, if such inadvertence or mistake might have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary care. Ib.

Insurer of Goods.—A carrier was held at common law to be an insurer of the goods which he carried; he was obliged for a reasonable reward to carry any goods to the place to which he professed to carry goods, which were offered him, if his carriage would hold them, and he was informed of their quality and value; he was not obliged to take a package, the owner of which would not inform him what were its contents, and of what value they were; if he did not ask for his information, or if, when he asked, and was not answered, he took the goods, he was answerable for their amount, whatsoever that might be; he might limit his responsibility as an insurer by notice, but that notice would not protect him against the consequences of a loss by gross negligence. Macklin v. Waterhouse, 2 M. & P. 319; 5 Bing. 212; S. P., Riley v. Horne, 5 Bing. 217, 224; 2 M. & P. 331.

— Exceptions.—A common carrier must make good a loss though not in fault, as, if he is robbed. Gibbon v. Paynton, 4 Burr. 2298.

A carrier who undertakes for hire to carry goods, is bound to deliver them at all events, except damaged or destroyed by the act of God or the king's enemies; even though the jury expressly find that they were destroyed without any actual negligence of the carrier. Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27; S. P., Hyde v. Trent and Mersey Navigation Company, 5 T. R. 389; 1 Esp. 86.

Where an order is given to a carrier, antecedently to the delivery of goods, who assents to deal with them when delivered in a particular manner, a duty is imposed on him on the receipt of the goods to deal with them according to the order previously given; and the law implies a promise by him to perform such duty. Streeter v. Horlock, 7 Moore, 283; 1 Bing. 34.

When Customer accompanies.—If A. sends goods by B., who says, “I will warrant they shall go safe;” B. is liable for any damage sustained by the goods, notwithstanding A. sends one of his servants in B.'s cart to look after them. Robinson v. Dunmore, 2 B. & P. 416.

By Water.—Common carriers by water were conveying goods for hire in a boat towed by one of their steam-packets. As the steam-packet approached a pier to take in passengers, the captain of the packet stopped its course, in order to allow another vessel to clear away from the pier. This was a proper course on the part of the captain, but the day being boisterous and the tide running strong, with a good deal of sea, though there was nothing unusual in the weather, the effect of the stoppage was that the tow-boat was driven by the wind and tide against the rudder of the steam-packet, so that it was injured and the goods damaged. There was no negligence on the part of any one:—Held, that though there was no negligence, the carriers were liable to indemnify the owner of the goods for the damage caused by the accident, since it could not be said to be imputable immediately to the act of God, for the proximate cause of the injury was the stoppage of the steam-packet. Oakley v. Port of Portsmouth and Ryde United Steam-packet Company, 11 Ex. 618; 25 L. J., Ex. 99. And see Nugent v. Smith (under CARRIERS OF ANIMALS), infra.

Where Contract in Foreign Country.—Where the contract was made in a foreign country and there was no question raised as to the lex loci contractus, it was left to the jury to say whether there had been negligence, and what would be reasonable care and diligence under the circumstances. Cohen v. Gaudet, 3 F. & F. 455.

Carriages—Ferry.—The owner of a ferry is bound to convey carriages and their contents. Walker v. Jackson, 10 M. & W. 16; 12 L. J., Ex. 165.

2. RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Delay—Ordinary Diligence—Vis major.—A carrier of goods or cattle is only bound to carry in a reasonable time under ordinary circumstances, and is not bound to use extraordinary efforts or incur extra expense in order to surmount obstructions caused by the act of God, as a fall of snow. Briddon v. Great Northern Railway Company, 28 L. J., Ex. 51; 32 L. T., O. S. 94.

A common carrier of goods is not, in the absence of a special contract, bound to carry within any given period of time, but only within a time which is reasonable, regarding all the circumstances of the case; and he is not responsible for the consequences of delay arising from causes beyond his control. Taylor v. Great Northern Railway Company, 1 L. R., C. P. 385; 35 L. J., C. P. 210; 12 Jur., N. S. 372.

A railway company was prevented by an unavoidable obstruction on its line from carrying goods within the usual time. The obstruction was occasioned by an accident resulting solely from the negligence of another company, having parliamentary running powers over the line:—Held, that the railway company was not liable to the owner of the goods for damage to them caused by the delay. Ib.

In the absence of an express contract, the obligation of a carrier of goods is to carry them according to the usual route professed by him to the public, and to deliver them within a reasonable time. Hales v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 4 B. & S. 66; 32 L. J., Q. B. 292; 8 L. T. 421; 11 W. R. 856.

A railway company undertaking to carry goods from A. to B., must deliver them within a reasonable time, having reference to the means at their disposal for forwarding them; and they are not justified in delaying the delivery by adopting a particular mode of forwarding the goods, merely because that is the usual mode adopted. Ib.

Effect of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 86.—The Railway Clauses Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 86, does not impose on railway companies acting as carriers any further liabilities than those which attached to common carriers. Johnson v. Midland Railway Company, 6 Railw. Cas. 61; 4 Ex. 367; 18 L. J., Ex. 366.

Intermediate Stations.—Therefore, although a company carries coals and other goods for hire from one end of their line to the other, and carries goods other than coals from an intermediate station, they are not bound to carry coals from that station unless they have publicly professed to do so; and even if they have held themselves out as carriers of coals from that station, no action for refusing to carry coals from it will lie, unless it is shewn that the company has conveniences at the station for receiving and carrying the coals. Ib.

Unreasonable Conditions.—A railway company acting as a common carrier is bound to carry such goods as are tendered to it for the purpose of being carried, together with the proper charge for such carriage; and the company cannot insist upon the sender signing such conditions as are unreasonable. Garton v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 1 B. & S. 112; 30 L. J., Q. B. 273; 7 Jur., N. S. 1234; 9 W. R. 734.

A railway company has no right to close its offices, and refuse to receive goods which are tendered to it with the proper amount for carriage, while at the same time they continue to receive goods, prepared, assorted and packed in the same manner, from a particular individual. Ib.

No Obligation to Carry except as Advertised.—There is no obligation on railway companies, whether at common law or under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, to carry goods otherwise than according to their profession. Oxlade v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 15 C. B., N. S. 680.

Therefore, it is competent to a railway company to restrict its coal traffic to the carriage of coals for colliery owners, from the pit's mouth to stations where such colliery owners have cells or depôts appropriated to them for the reception and sale of their coals, and to decline to carry coals from station to station, or for coal merchants, such arrangement being essential to the regulation of the large traffic in that article, and the company not being common carriers of coal. Ib.

Posting up Tolls.—A railway company posting up tolls, including those charged for coals, do not thereby hold themselves out as common carriers of coals. Oxlade v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 3 L. T. 671; 9 W. R. 272.

Beyond Limits of Line.—A parcel was delivered at Lancaster, to the Lancaster and Preston Junction Railway Company, directed to a person at a place in Derbyshire. The person who brought it to the station offered to pay the carriage, but the book-keeper said it had better be paid by the person to whom it was directed on the receipt of it. The Lancaster and Preston Junction Railway Company were known to be proprietors of the line only as far as Preston, where the railway united with the North Union line, and that, afterwards, with another, and so on into Derbyshire. The parcel having been lost after it was forwarded from Preston:—Held, that the Lancaster and Preston Railway Company was liable for its loss. Musehamp v. Lancaster and Preston Junction Railway Company, 8 M. & W. 421; 2 Railw. Cas. 607; 5 Jur. 656.

One who holds himself out as a carrier of goods between two places, one of which is beyond the confines of England, is still subject to the common law liability of a carrier for hire, and is bound to accept all goods which are reasonably tendered to him for conveyance between these limits. Crouch v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 14 C. B. 255; 7 Railw. Cas. 717; 2 C. L. R. 188; 23 L. J., C. P. 73; 18 Jur. 148.

Where a railway company receives goods for reward to carry from one station to another, they are answerable for a loss occurring between them during the transit, though it may happen on a line of railway belonging to another company. Scotthorn v. South Staffordshire Railway Company, 8 Ex. 341; 22 L. J., Ex. 121; 7 Railw. Cas. 810.

Under Special Contract.—The Great Northern Railway Company agreed with A. to carry for him, at the rate of 170 tons a day, 30,000 tons of coal from a colliery to London, the York and Berwick Railway Company undertaking to haul the waggons from the colliery to York; and it was agreed that the contract was founded on the basis that there should be no unreasonable detention of the waggons by the York and Berwick Company:—Held, that it was a condition precedent to the Great Northern Company's obligation to carry the coal, that there should be no unreasonable delay by the York and Berwick Company in hauling the waggons. Johnassohn v. Great Northern Railway Company, 10 Ex. 434; 24 L. J., Ex. 31.

F. delivered at Bristol to a railway company goods, and took from them a receipt note, which stated that the goods were received to be conveyed by the company, and on the conditions stated on the other side. Then followed a statement that Bristol was the station from which, and Paddington the station to which, the goods were to be carried, and that F.'s address was at Brompton. One of the conditions stated, that goods addressed to consignees resident beyond the immediate vicinity of the company's goods stations would be forwarded by public carrier or otherwise, as opportunity might offer, but that the delivery of the goods by the company would be considered as complete, and the responsibility of the company cease, when such carriers received the goods, and that the company would not be responsible for loss or damage to goods beyond the limits of their railway. The goods were safely conveyed by the company to their London terminus at Paddington, and then given over to a person specially appointed by them for the collection and delivery of goods; and, through the negligence of his servant, were damaged on their delivery at F.'s house at Brompton. The company made one entire charge for the carriage from Bristol to Brompton:—Held, that the company was not liable for the damage; and consequently a declaration, which stated that they as common carriers received the goods to be carried from Bristol to Brompton could not be supported. Fowles v. Great Western Railway Company, 7 Ex. 699; 7 Railw. Cas. 421; 22 L. J., Ex. 76; 17 Jur. 214.

At the Bath station of the Great Western Railway Company goods were received for the purpose of being forwarded to Torquay. The line of that company ends at Bristol, at which place the line of the Bristol and Exeter Company begins. The goods would have to be put on a third railway before reaching Torquay. The receipt note given at Bath was thus headed: "To the Great Western Railway Company: Receive the undermentioned goods on the conditions stated on the other side, to be sent to Torquay station, and delivered to C., consignee, or his agent." The Great Western Company received the carriage-money for the whole distance from Bath to Torquay. On the arrival of the goods at Bristol they were put on the line of the Bristol and Exeter Company, where they were destroyed by fire. An action was brought against this latter company to recover compensation for the loss:—Held, that the contract was with the Great Western Company alone, and that the Bristol and Exeter Company was not liable. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company v. Coblins, 7 H. L. Cas. 194; 29 L. J., Ex. 41; 5 Jur., N. S. 1367.

After a verdict for the plaintiff a rule to enter a nonsuit was obtained, and the grounds were stated to be "that the goods lost or damaged were received and carried under a contract, by the conditions of which the company was not liable for loss or damage by fire." A judgment was given, which was reversed in the Exchequer Chamber, and the case was brought up to the House of Lords:—Held, that it was competent to the Bristol and Exeter Company on the hearing of the case to discuss the question, whether any contract whatever existed as between itself and the plaintiff. Id.

— Damage on other Lines.—A. delivered to P., at Worcester, a package addressed to him to be carried from Worcester to Chester. P. (who acted as agent for receiving goods both of the Great Western Railway Company and London and North-Western Railway Company) wrote under the address "Viâ Stafford," and delivered the package to the Great Western Railway, who carried it on their line to Stafford, whence it was carried in the Great Western Railway Company's waggons on the line of the London and North-Western Railway to Chester:—Held, that there was evidence of a contract with the Great Western Railway Company to carry the whole distance from Worcester to Chester, and therefore the Great Western Railway Company was liable for damages done to the contents of the package during the journey. Webber v. Great Western Railway Company, 34 L. J., Ex. 170; 12 L. T. 498; 13 W. R. 755; and 4 H. & C. 582—Ex. Ch.

Where a railway company receives goods at one terminus to carry them to another, they are answerable for any loss that may occur between them, although it may be on a line of railway that does not belong to such company; and the receipt of goods so to be carried is prima facie evidence of such liability. Watson v. Ambergate Railway Company, 15 Jur. 448.

— By Sea and Land.—When a carrier makes one contract for carriage partly by land and partly by water the contract is divisible so as to bring that part which applies to carriage by land within 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68. Le Conteur v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., Q. B. 44; 35 L. J., Q. B. 40; 12 Jur., N. S. 266; 13 L. T. 825; 14 W. R. 80.

The principle that where a railway company undertakes the carriage of goods to a specified place, and the goods are lost at a point beyond the terminus of its line, the company is responsible, applies when a portion of the transit is to be effected by water, or even by sea. Wilby v. West Cornwall Railway Company, 2 H. & N. 703; 27 L. J., Ex. 181; 4 Jur., N. S. 284.

A parcel was delivered at Penzance to the West Cornwall Railway Company, addressed to a person at Wolverhampton "per first steamer from Hayle." The company's railway only extends from Penzance to Truro; but their practice is to send goods for Bristol, or places above it, to a seaport called Hayle, and there deliver them to the steamboats, and to send parcels for Bristol, or places above it, to Truro, and there deliver them to other carriers, who carry them from Truro to Plymouth (for which distance there is no railway), and from Plymouth they are sent by railway to Wolverhampton. The company carried the parcel by their railway to Hayle, where they delivered it to a steamboat, by which it was conveyed to Bristol, and thence by railway to Wolverhampton. The goods in the parcel having been damaged after the delivery to the steamboat:—Held, that, under these circumstances, a jury might infer a contract by the company, as common carriers, to carry the whole distance from Penzance to Wolverhampton; and, consequently, that they were liable for the damage to the goods. Id.

Held, also, that it was not ultra vires for the company to carry beyond their own line by sea or by coach. Id.

3. NOTICES AND SPECIAL CONTRACTS.

Before the Carriers Act—Effect of Notice.]—Before this statute a carrier might not only limit, but exclude all responsibility by notice. Maving v. Todd, 1 Stark. 72; 4 Camp. 225.

As well against a loss by robbery, as against an accidental loss. Corington v. Willan, Gow, 115.

Where a carrier gave notice that he would not be liable for goods lost, beyond the value of 5*l.*, that extended to the property of passengers going by the coach or other carriage, and not to goods sent to be carried only. Clarke v. Gray, 6 East, 564; 2 Smith, 622; 4 Esp. 177.

Where a carrier receives valuable goods to carry after notice to the bailor that he will not be responsible for loss or damage to them unless a higher rate than usual is paid for the carriage, he receives them on the terms of the notice which amounts to a special contract. Wyld v. Pickford, 8 M. & Co. 443.

— Two Notices.]—A carrier, who gave two notices limiting his responsibility, was bound by that which was least beneficial to himself. Munn v. Baker, 2 Stark. 255.

A carrier placed a board in his office, giving notice that he would not be answerable for jewels, however small their value, unless entered as such; but circulated handbills, stating generally, that he would not be answerable for any article above the value of 5*l.*, unless entered as such:—Held, that he was answerable for the loss of jewels not entered as such, if under the value of 5*l.* Cobden v. Bolton, 2 Camp. 108.

— Commencement of Liability.]—In an action against a carrier for not taking care of, and safely conveying goods according to his promise, it appeared that he had limited his responsibility as such, by means of a notice of which the plaintiff was cognizant:—Held, that he having declared against the defendant as a carrier, could not insist that the goods were lost from his warehouse, before the actual carriage of the goods commenced. Roskell v. Waterhouse, 2 Stark. 461.

A keeper of a booking-house could not set up a notice, that he would not be answerable for goods, if above a certain value, as a defence against the effect of negligence in himself or his servants. Newborn v. Just, 2 C. & P. 76.

— To whom to be given.]—A carrier's notice limiting his liability was not available, if it appeared that it did not come to the knowledge of the customer. Kerr v. Willan, 6 M. & S. 150; 2 Stark. 53.

A notice given to the vendor was equivalent to notice to the vendee who directed the goods to be sent. Maving v. Todd, 1 Stark. 72; 4 Camp. 225.

So notice to the principal was in law notice to all their agents. Mayhew v. Eames, 4 D. & R. 484; 3 B. & C. 601; 1 C. & P. 550.

The carrier's agent telling the female servant of the owner of a parcel above the value of 5*l.*, that it ought to be insured, was not a sufficient notice of the limitation of the carrier's responsibility. Macklin v. Waterhouse, 5 Bing. 212; 2 N. & P. 319.

When a parcel was delivered by the plaintiff's agent at W., to the defendant, to be carried to the plaintiff, who resided in London, it was sufficient for the defendant to prove that the plaintiff received notice in London, that the defendant would not be responsible for goods exceeding 5*l.* in value, unless entered and paid for, without proving any notice to the agent in the country. Alford v. Horne, 3 Stark. 136.

— Whether Read or not.]—In an action against carriers for the loss of goods intrusted to their care, there was contradictory evidence as to whether a ticket limiting their responsibility had been delivered by them to the plaintiff at the time of taking the goods in charge:—Held, that the jury was rightly directed to say, whether that ticket had been delivered to the plaintiff; and that it was not necessary to leave to them whether or not it had been read over or explained to him. Palmer v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 4 M. & W. 749; 7 D. P. C. 232; 3 Jur. 559.

— By whom given.]—Where it was agreed between the plaintiff and one of the proprietors of a stage-coach, to carry certain parcels for the plaintiff free of expense, which were accordingly carried for two years, but there was no evidence of any knowledge of this agreement by the other proprietors; and they had given notice that they would not be accountable for parcels above the value of 5*l.*, unless entered and paid for:—Held, that they were not liable for the loss of a parcel of above the value of 5*l.* sent by the plaintiff under this agreement, of the value of which no notice had been given to the proprietors. Big-nold v. Waterhouse, 1 M. & S. 255.

A notice that the proprietor of a general coach office would not be responsible for the carriage of parcels of more than 5*l.* value, unless entered as such, would not avail the proprietor of a coach who took a parcel from the office, unless otherwise shewn that he was connected with the office. Macklin v. Waterhouse, 5 Bing. 212; 2 N. & P. 319.

— Posted in Office.]—A notice stuck in the office, to be of any avail, must have been in such large characters that a person delivering goods at the office could not fail to read, without gross negligence. Clayton v. Hunt, 3 Camp. 27.

It was not sufficient notice to paste upon the door of the office a bill blazoning the advantages of his conveyances, and stating in small characters, at the bottom of it, that he would not be answerable for goods above the value of 5*l.* unless entered as such, and paid for accordingly. Butler v. Heane, 2 Camp. 415.

It was not sufficient to shew that a printed notice was exhibited in the carrier's office, where the goods were delivered by a porter, although the porter could read, and had seen the notice, if in fact he had never read it. Kerr v. Willan, 2 Stark. 53; 6 M. & S. 150; S. P., Davis v. Willan, 2 Stark. 279.

A notice of certain limitations on a general liability, suspended at the termini of the journey, would not attach upon the delivery of goods at intermediate places, where no such notice was given. Gouger v. Jolly, Holt, 317.

— By Advertisement.]—In an action against a carrier for negligence, he could not read in evidence the advertisement in a newspaper, by which he limited his responsibility, unless he first proved that the plaintiff was in the habit of reading that paper. Leeson v. Holt, 1 Stark. 186.

To fix a party with knowledge of a general notice by which a coach proprietor limited his responsibility, it was proved that he had taken in for three years a newspaper in which the notice had been advertised once a week; the jury having, nevertheless, found a verdict against the proprietor, the court refused a new trial. Rowley v. Horne, 3 Bing. 2; 10 Moore, 247.

Articles outside Notice—Knowledge of Value.]

—A notice given by carriers exempted them from their liability for the loss of goods above the value of 5*l.*, unless the appearance of the goods necessarily indicated that they were above that value. Down v. Fromont, 4 Camp. 40.

A public notice given by carriers that they would not be answerable for certain specified articles, or any other goods of what nature or kind soever, above the value of 5*l.*, if lost, stolen or damaged, unless a special agreement was made, and a premium paid, such value to be entered at the time of delivery, seemed not to extend to goods which did not fall within any of the specified articles, and which from their bulk and quality communicated to the carriers at the time of delivery, must be known to them to exceed the value of 5*l.* Beck v. Evans, 16 East, 244; 3 Camp. 267.

Notwithstanding a notice by carriers that they would not be accountable for goods of a particular description above the value of 5*l.*, unless specified and paid for as such when delivered, they were liable for damage done to an article of this description, much above the value of 5*l.*, although not paid for as such when delivered, their book-keeper having been then informed of its value, and desired to charge for it what he pleased, which should be paid, provided it was taken care of. Wilson v. Freeman, 3 Camp. 527.

Notice was not defeated by proof that the book-keeper who received the goods was conscious of or might have inferred their value. Leri v. Waterhouse, 1 Price, 280.

If a carrier gave notice that he would not be accountable for goods above the value of 20*l.* unless entered, and an insurance paid, over and above the price charged for carriage, according to their value: a person who entered silk exceeding the value of 20*l.* and did not pay the insurance could not recover any part of the value of the goods if lost. Harris v. Packwood, 3 Taunt. 264.

A person, who knew that the carrier had given a notice, delivered to him a parcel containing goods (much exceeding the value of 5*l.*) to be carried, and the carrier accepted them for that purpose. The price of the carriage was not then paid. The carrier knew the parcel contained goods much exceeding 5*l.* The parcel was lost:—Held, that the carrier was not responsible. Marsh v. Horne, 5 B. & C. 322; 8 D. & R. 223.

Other Contracts.]—A railway company published a printed notice, which was fixed over the door of the station for the reception of goods in Liverpool, that all goods received after 4 o'clock P.M. would be forwarded on the next working day. Long after the publication of this notice goods were brought to the station, about half-past 5 P.M., to be forwarded to Birmingham by the railway. The person who brought them (a servant of the owner) saw the company's weigher, and asked if there was time, i.e. for the goods to proceed that evening; he said there was, and the goods were placed by the company's porters, on the trucks on which goods are carried upon the railway. The same person had on former occasions taken goods of the same kind to the station at a later hour, which were never refused for being too late, and which had been forwarded the same evening:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury of a special contract by the company to forward the goods on the same evening on which they were delivered. Pickford v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 12 M. & W. 766.

In an action against a railway company for not delivering cattle at a certain time, according to agreement, the question left to the jury was "whether such an agreement had been entered into:—Held, that that question was proper, and that it was unnecessary to direct the jury to say further "whether the cattle were carried under the bargain," that point not having been made at the trial. Brown v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 4 L. T. 830; 9 W. R. 872.

Evidence to explain Contract.]—M. signed a consignment note, stating that goods were delivered by him to a railway company to be carried to N., but the charge for carriage was not inserted, and oral evidence was given that the company's agreement with M., before the note was signed, was to carry to K., a greater distance; that M. did not read the note; and that the sum to be charged, and which was paid, was for the carriage to K.:—Held, that the note was not conclusive of the contract, and that the evidence was properly received, as proving a contract additional to, and not at variance with, the agreement in writing. Malpas v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., C. P. 336; 35 L. J., C. P. 166; 12 Jur., N. S. 271; 13 L. T. 710; 14 W. R. 391; 1 H. & R. 227.

An averment of a contract to carry goods from London to Bath is supported by evidence of a contract to carry from Westminster to Bath; London must be taken in the enlarged and popular sense of a collective name, and not in a limited sense, applicable to the city only. Beckford v. Crutwell, 1 M. & Rob. 187; 5 C. & P. 242.

In an action against a carrier for negligence in the conveyance of goods by water, whereby they became wetted and spoiled, it appeared that the goods were put on board his boat under one entire contract, for their conveyance from Boston to Leeds, one half to be delivered there, the other to be conveyed to and delivered at Bradford. At the trial the plaintiff proved the contract and its execution by oral testimony; but, it appearing from the examination of one of his witnesses, that, at the time of the receipt of the goods by the carrier, two notes were delivered by him to the plaintiff (each applying to a moiety of the goods), which ascertained the destination of the goods, and the terms upon which they were to be carried, and only one of these being produced, and the absence of the other not satisfactorily accounted for,—Held, that this was a ground for a nonsuit. Thompson v. Travis, 8 Scott, 85.

Before 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31—Special Contract.]—In an action by A. against a railway company to recover damages for not carrying cattle with reasonable despatch, the evidence was that A. engaged trucks for the cattle and paid the carriage money; that the station clerk gave a ticket to A., and thereupon took up the money which had been paid; and that the ticket stated that the cattle was received by the company, subject to the conditions on the back of the ticket, and which were there stated to be that the company was not responsible for the non-delivery of cattle within any certain or reasonable time. The ticket was not read to A., nor was his attention directed to its contents. The judge did not direct the jury as to the legal effect of the ticket, but left it to them to say whether the company were common carriers for hire, and whether they received the cattle as common carriers for hire for carriage, or whether they received them under the special contract set forth in the ticket:—Held, a misdirection, there being no evidence of the company having received the cattle otherwise than under a special contract. York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Company v. Crisp, 14 C. B. 527; 2 C. L. R. 1367; 23 L. J., C. P. 125; 18 Jur. 606.

— Delay.—Declaration against a railway company for non-delivery of pigs within a reasonable time, according to the terms on which the company had received them. Pleas—first, not guilty; secondly, that the pigs were not received on those terms; thirdly, that they were delivered within a reasonable time; and fourthly, that they were received on the terms that the company would not be liable for their delivery within any certain or definite time, or in time for any particular market. Evidence, that the pigs were received on the terms stated in the fourth plea, and that they were forwarded by the first practicable train, according to the company's arrangements (which were unknown to the plaintiff). This, however, involved a detention of a day, from which the pigs suffered damage. The judge expressed an opinion that the pigs had been delivered within a reasonable time, and the plaintiff was nonsuited, without any expressed opposition on the part of his counsel. On a motion for a new trial, on the ground that the question ought to have been left to the jury, the court refused to disturb the nonsuit, as the plaintiff's counsel had not insisted on the case going to the jury, and as, if it had gone to the jury, the judge would have been bound to direct them to find for the company on the traverse of the terms alleged in the declaration. Hughes v. Great Western Railway Company, 14 C. B. 637; 2 C. L. R. 1360; 23 L. J., C. P. 153; 18 Jur. 1001.

— Practice as to Receipt of Goods.—The regular practice with respect to the receipt and carriage of goods and cattle on a railway was that the cattle were taken to a porter appointed for the purpose, who received them, and gave the sender a consignment note for them, which was signed by him and the sender, and contained a notice respecting the receipt, carriage, and delivery of goods; that the company would not be accountable for any articles unless signed for as received by their clerks or agents. The consignment note was taken to the goods clerk, who made out from it a cattle ticket, which was signed by him and the sender, and handed to the latter as his voucher for the delivery of the cattle at their destination. The carriage was generally but not always prepaid. The plaintiff, being well acquainted with this practice, booked some pigs in the regular way at one of the company's stations, and while they were waiting there he sent six other pigs by L., who had also some of his own. L. booked his own regularly, and told the proper porter that the six were the plaintiff's, and were to go with his others. The porter replied that he would take care of them, and put them with the others. No consignment note or cattle ticket was signed or received for them:—Held, in an action against the company for the non-delivery of the pigs, charging them with having received them to be carried for hire, that the company was not liable, as there was no evidence of any authority from the company to the porter, or of his having held himself out as having authority to receive or contract for the carriage of the pigs in any other than the usual manner. Slim v. Great Northern Railway Company, 14 C. B. 647; 2 C. L. R. 864; 23 L. J., C. P. 166; 8 Jur. 1119.

— Extent of Protection.—C. having some cattle to be carried on a railway, saw them put into a truck; and on paying for the carriage, received and signed a ticket, containing at the foot of it the following notice: "This ticket is issued, subject to the owner undertaking all risks of conveyance whatever, as the company will not be responsible for any injury or damage, howsoever caused, occurring to live stock of any description travelling upon their railway, or in their carriages." During the journey some of the cattle became alarmed, and escaped from the truck, owing to its being so defectively constructed as to be unfit and unsafe for conveying cattle:—Held, in action against the company for the injury so caused to the cattle, that the company was protected from liability under the circumstances by the terms of the ticket, as they were such as to exclude any implied stipulation that the truck was fit for the purpose for which it was to be used. Chippendale v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 7 Railw. Cas. 824; 12 L. J., Q. B. 22; 15 Jur. 1106.

M. took a horse to a station of a railway company, who were common carriers of horses, to be conveyed along their railway. On paying for the carriage, he received the following ticket: "This ticket is issued, subject to the owner undertaking to bear all the risk of injury by conveyance and other contingencies. The company will not be responsible for any damage, however caused, to horses travelling on their railway or in their vehicles." The horse was injured by a collision on the railway from want of due care, but without any wilful misconduct or gross negligence on the part of the servants of the company:—Held, that there was a special contract between the parties which was valid under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 6, and that the ticket was not a mere public notice within s. 4, and that by the terms of the contract the company was protected from liability in respect of the injury done to the horse. Great Northern Railway Company v. Morville, 7 Railw. Cas. 830; 21 L. J., Q. B. 319; 16 Jur. 528.

— Owners' Risk.—Declaration stated that defendants were proprietors of a railway, and of carriages for the conveyance of passengers, cattle and goods upon the railway; that they received nine horses of the plaintiff to be safely and securely carried in their carriages by the railway for hire; and that thereupon it was their duty safely and securely to carry and convey and deliver the horses; and averred the loss of one by reason of the insufficiency of one of the carriages. When the horses were received, a ticket was given to the plaintiff, stating the amount paid by him for the carriage of the horses, and the journey they were to go, and having at the bottom the following memorandum:—"N.B. This ticket is issued subject to the owner's undertaking all risks of conveyance whatsoever, as the company will not be responsible for any injury or damage, however caused, occurring to horses or carriages while travelling, or in loading or unloading."—Held, that the terms contained in the ticket formed part of the contract for the carriage of the horses; and that the alleged duty safely and securely to carry and convey the horses did not arise upon that contract. Shaw v. York and North Midland Railway Company, 6 Railw. Cas. 87; 13 Q. B. 347; 18 L. J., Q. B. 181; 13 Jur. 385.

A declaration alleged that the defendants were proprietors of a railway and carriages for the conveyance of passengers, cattle, &c., for hire; that the plaintiff delivered to, and they received, horses from the plaintiff, to be carried for the plaintiff, in their carriages, for reward, and that one of the wheels of a carriage in which some of the horses were being conveyed, caught fire from friction; that the plaintiff, at the next station, requested the defendants to change such carriage and not to persist in further conveying his horses in the same; that, in spite of such request, they did so persist; that the wheel afterwards, from want of precaution against friction, and not otherwise, was snapped asunder, whereby the carriage was thrown off the rails and the horses were injured. It appeared that the plaintiff, at the time of agreeing for the carriage of the horses, was informed by the station master that he would have to run all risks of carriage, to which he assented, and he also signed a ticket in the ticket-book of the company, which contained a memorandum that the owner of the horses was to be required to see to the efficiency of the carriages; that the company was not to be responsible for any alleged defects in their carriages or trucks, unless complaint was made at the time of booking, or before leaving the station, nor for any damage, however caused, to horses, &c., travelling upon the railway:—Held, that whether the declaration was founded upon the common-law liability of the defendants as carriers, or upon a special contract, there was a variance; in the former case because there was proof of a special contract; in the latter case, because the declaration alleged an unqualified contract to carry, whereas the contract proved was to carry, the defendants not being answerable for certain risks; that the allegation traversed by the plea was a material allegation, as the extent of the defendants' liability depended upon the nature of the bailment to them; and that the allegation of a delivery to be carried was equivalent to an allegation of a delivery to be safely and securely carried, subject to such exceptions as the law will create. Austin v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 16 Q. B. 600; 20 L. J., Q. B. 440; 15 Jur. 670.

— Company's Negligence.—A railway company letting trucks for hire for the conveyance of horses delivered to the owner of the horses a ticket, in which it was stated that the owners were to undertake all risks of injury by conveyance and other contingencies, and further stipulated that the company would not be liable for any damages, however caused, to horses or cattle:—Held, that the owner of the horses could not recover for damage done to them through the breaking of an axle, which was attributable to the culpable negligence of the company's servants. Austin v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 10 C. B. 454; 7 Railw. Cas. 300; 21 L. J., C. P. 179; 16 Jur. 763.

A contract entered into with a common carrier by the party who delivers goods to be conveyed, by which contract the carrier was exempted from all liability for any loss occasioned by his negligence, was binding upon both parties. Carr v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 7 Ex. 707; 7 Railw. Cas. 426; 21 L. J., Ex. 261; 17 Jur. 397.

— Special Notice to Customer.—Action against a railway company for not duly carrying fish from S. to M., averred to be received at S., to be carried as common carriers to M. Pleas, that the company did not receive the fish as common carriers, and that they received the fish on certain terms set out in the plea. At the trial there was evidence that the company printed many notices, declaring that they would not carry fish, except on terms relieving them from all liability, and declaring also that none of their servants had power to vary those terms; that a parcel of these notices was sent to S., and served on the fish merchants there; that they generally threw down the notices, and that plaintiff told the company's station master at S. that they were not of any use, after which the fish were sent by railway, and were not duly carried. The judge advised the jury if they were satisfied that plaintiff was served with the notice, to infer as a fact that he sent the fish on a special contract, embodying the terms contained in it, unless the plaintiff, before he sent the fish, unambiguously dissented from the terms, and the company acquiesced in his dissent:—Held, that the direction was, under the circumstances, right; that 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 4, is confined to public notices, and that the jury might rightly infer from the plaintiff having special notice that fish would not be taken except on certain terms, and that no one had power to vary the terms, and from his afterwards persisting in sending his fish, that he assented to a special contract to carry on these terms, and the company was in that case protected by this special contract under s. 6. Walker v. York and North Midland Railway Company, 2 El. & Bl. 750; 23 L. J., Q. B. 73; 18 Jur. 143.

4. ANIMALS.

General Liability.—Quære, whether the common-law liability of railway companies as carriers extends to livestock conveyed by them. M'Manus v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 2 H. & N. 693; 27 L. J., Ex. 201; 4 Jur., N. S. 144.

A railway company carrying living animals is not bound to provide fences or guards at the station where the animals may be landed, between the line and the station-yard, so as to prevent them straying on to the line. Roberts

v. Great Western Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 506; 27 L. J., C. P. 266; 4 Jur., N. S. 1240.

Railway companies are responsible for the safe treatment of animals intrusted to them for carriage from the moment that they receive the animals into their charge till the carriages that have conveyed those animals are unloaded. Moffatt v. Great Western Railway Company, 15 L. T. 630.

A railway company was incorporated by act of parliament, with authority, if they should think fit, to carry goods and passengers on the railway, they to be bound to keep and repair the fences of the same. The company undertook to carry some horses by the railway, to be delivered safely at a particular place: but, in consequence of some of the fences having been broken down, the train was overset by contact with a horse which had strayed from a neighbouring field, whereby one of the horses was killed and the rest injured. The owner having brought an action, and declared against the company as common carriers:—Held, that although it was in the first instance optional with the company whether they would trade at all as common carriers, or not, still, if they elected to do so, they were subject to all the liabilities of carriers at common law, viz., responsible for all accidents not arising from the act of God or of the Queen's enemies. Palmer v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 4 M. & W. 749; 7 D. P. C. 232; 1 H. & H. 489; 3 Jur. 559.

By Ferry.—The lessees of a ferry across a river conveyed, as ferrymen for hire, passengers and animals, but it was not their practice to take charge of animals while on board their boats. For the landing of passengers and animals they used movable slips, with light hand-rails, which, though suitable for foot passengers, were apparently too slight for horses. They received on board their boat a horse of the plaintiff, who paid the usual charge, and remained with his horse until the boat was moored alongside the landing-stage on the opposite side of the river. In leading the horse over the movable slip which was placed from the boat to the landing-stage, the horse pressed against the hand-rail, which parted in consequence, and an iron spike, which it covered, severely injured the horse. The hand-rail had been, shortly before the accident, twice broken by the pressure of horses, and the ferrymen had been cautioned against using the slip, but they, however, continued to do so, merely tying the rail together with a piece of cord:—Held, that it was their duty, as ferrymen, to provide proper means of landing from their boats, and that they were liable for the injury done to the horse, through their negligence in not providing a proper slip, although the horse was at the time under the charge of its owner. Willoughby v. Horridge, 12 C. B. 742; 22 L. J., C. P. 90; 17 Jur. 323.

Defect in Thing carried—Vis major.—A common carrier by sea from London to Aberdeen received a mare to be carried to Aberdeen for hire. In the course of the voyage the ship encountered rough weather, and the mare received such injuries that she died. The jury found that the injuries were caused partly by more than ordinary bad weather, and partly by the conduct of the mare herself by reason of fright and consequent struggling, without any negligence of the carrier's servants:—Held, that the carrier was not liable for the death of the mare. August v. Smith, 1 C. P. D. 423; 45 L. J., C. P. 697; 34 L. T. 827; 25 W. R. 117—C. A. Reversing 1 C. P. D. 19; 45 L. J., C. P. 19; 33 L. T. 731; 24 W. R. 237.

A carrier does not insure against the irresistible act of nature, nor against defects in the thing carried itself; and if he can shew that either the act of nature or the defect of the thing itself, or both taken together, formed the sole direct and irresistible cause of the loss, he is discharged. Ib.

In order to shew that the cause of the loss was irresistible it is not necessary to prove that it was absolutely impossible for the carrier to prevent it, but it is sufficient to prove that by no reasonable precaution under the circumstances could it have been prevented. Ib.

A shipowner, who is not a common carrier, is not subject to the liability of a common carrier—i. e. does not insure the goods bailed to him for carriage. Ib.

In order to come within the exception of loss by the act of God as applied to the liability of a common carrier, the loss need not have been caused directly and exclusively by such a direct and violent, and sudden and irresistible act of nature as the carrier could not by any amount of ability foresee, or (if he could foresee it) could not by any amount of care and skill resist so as to prevent its effect. Ib.

A loss is a loss by the act of God if it is occasioned by the elementary forces of nature unconnected with the agency of man or other cause; and a common carrier is entitled to immunity in respect of loss so occasioned if he can shew that it could not have been prevented by any amount of foresight, pains and care reasonably to be required of him. Ib.

If the loss is occasioned partly by the act of God as above defined, and partly by some other cause, which, if it had been the sole cause of the loss, would have furnished a defence, the carrier will be entitled to immunity in respect of such loss if he can shew that it could not have been prevented by any amount of foresight, pains and care reasonably to be required of him; and per Cockburn, C. J., in such cases a common carrier has done all that is reasonably to be required of him, if he has used all the means to which prudent and experienced carriers ordinarily have recourse to ensure the safety of goods intrusted to them under similar circumstances. Ib.

The liability of a railway company as common carriers of live animals, as well as of goods, is, in the absence of any negligence, subject not only to the exemption of the act of God or of the Queen's enemies, but to the further exemption of any act wholly attributable to the development of a latent inherent vice in the animal itself. Great Western Railway Company v. Blower, 7 L. R., C. P. 655; 41 L. J., C. P. 268; 27 L. T. 883; 20 W. R. 776.

A bullock, one of a number of cattle delivered to a railway company, was properly loaded into a proper truck by the company. The truck was properly fastened and secured, but in the course of its journey the bullock escaped from the truck and was found lying dead on the railway. There was no negligence on the part of the railway company; and the fact was that the escape of the bullock was wholly attributable to the efforts and exertions of the animal itself:—Held, that the company was not liable for the loss of the animal. Ib.

— Proof of.—A saddled horse, delivered to a railway company to be carried on a journey, was placed by their servants in a proper horse-box in the usual manner. - The saddle was left on the horse, according to the usual custom in such cases, with the stirrups hanging down. At the journey's end the horse was found to be injured in the forearm and fetlock. The horse was proved to be free from vice, and it was shewn by the company that nothing unusual occurred to the train during the journey:—Held, by Martin, B., and Bramwell, B., that, in the absence of further proof of the cause of the mischief, the company was not liable. Contra, by Pigott, B., on the ground that, in order to relieve the company from its common-law liability, the company must shew affirmatively the mischief arose from the act of the animal itself. Kendall v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 7 L. R., Ex. 373; 41 L. J., Ex. 184; 26 L. T. 735; 20 W. R. 886.

— Beyond Limits of Line—Condition.—C. sent some oxen to the Craven Arms Station of the Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway, to be carried to Birmingham. The railway from that station to Shrewsbury belonged to the Shrewsbury and Hereford Company, and the railway from Shrewsbury to Birmingham belonged to the Great Western Company. C.'s drover signed a waybill which contained the following condition:—"For the convenience of the owner, the company will receive the charges payable to other companies for conveyance of such cattle over their lines of railway, but the company will not be subject to liability for any loss, delay, default or damage arising on such other railway." One sum was charged for the carriage, which was to be paid at Birmingham. The oxen were placed in trucks belonging to the Great Western Company, and on the arrival of the train at Wolverhampton it was found that the bottom of one of the trucks was broken, and one of the oxen dead, and others injured. In an action by C. against the Great Western Railway Company:—Held, that this was one contract with the Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway Company, for the entire journey from the Craven Arms Station at Birmingham, and consequently that the Great Western Railway Company was not liable for the injury to the oxen. Coxen or Coxon v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 H. & N. 274; 29 L. J., Ex. 165; 1 L. T. 442.

— Contract with whom.—A. caused pigs to be shipped upon a steamer belonging to B., which plied between Cork and Milford Haven. He paid to the agent of B. a through freight for the conveyance of the pigs to London, for the South Wales and Great Western Railways. Over the door of the office in Cork, where the freight was paid, a sign-board was fixed, with the words "South Wales Railway Company's Office" painted on it, and a similar one was over the entrance to the cattle-yard adjoining. The freight receipt-note was also headed with the words "South Wales Steam Navigation Company." It was also proved, by persons who had sent cattle to London, that they had been forwarded for freights paid at this office, and that claims made upon the South Wales Company had been discharged at the office in Cork by the shipping agent. B. proved that the steamer was his property; that the shipping agents were paid by him, and the words painted on the boards referred to him, and were not sanctioned by the railway company; but he admitted having made an agreement with the latter, for running his boat in conjunction with their line, and dividing the through freights:—Held, that, upon the evidence, the judge was bound to have directed the jury to find that the company were joint contractors with B., in respect of the entire journey, and were accordingly liable for breaches of contract, committed in the conveyance of the pigs by the steamer from Cork to Milford. Hayes v. South Wales Railway Company, 9 Ir. C. L. R. 474.

Held, also, that independently of the written agreement, there was evidence to go to the jury of such joint liability. Ib.

A sum of money having been realized by the sale of the carcasses of the pigs destroyed on the voyage:—Held, also, that the company was liable for the same in an action for money had and received. Ib.

— Insufficient Truck.—C. sent off some horses from W., a station on one company's line, in horse-boxes belonging to that company, in charge of a groom, who was to take them to F., a station on the London and South-Western line. At G. was the junction with the London and South-Western Railway, where it was necessary to book again, and whence there are two routes to F. The groom, on going to take tickets, was told, in answer to his inquiries, that the train direct to F. did not go for some hours, but that by paying a little higher fare he could go on by a train which was about to start immediately, and went round a longer way. He said he would go on at once, and he and the horses proceeded in the same trucks in which they had come from W. At F. two porters came to unload the trucks, and the groom told them of the danger of an accident, arising from a wide space between the flap and the body of the horse-box, and how at W. it had been stopped up for the horses to be put in. They accordingly tried to stop it up with straw, while the groom kept the horses quiet inside. When done they said "All right," and he then led out a mare, her foal following. The latter put its foot through the opening and broke its leg:—Held, that the London and South-Western Railway Company was bound to provide a truck reasonably fit for the conveyance of C.'s horses, and there was evidence that this was unfit, and that the company had adopted it from the other company at G., and by sending it on to F. became liable for an accident caused by its defects. Combe v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 31 L. T. 613.

Held, also, that the company was bound to deliver safely at F., and that the facts proved were evidence of negligence in the company's servants in delivering, and not necessarily of any contributory negligence in C., arising from the groom's advice how to remedy the defect. Ib.

— Insufficient Fastening.—A greyhound was delivered by its owner to the servants of a railway company, to be carried, and the fare demanded was paid. At the time of delivery the greyhound had on a leathern collar with a strap attached to it. In the course of the journey, it being necessary to remove the greyhound from one train to another, it was fastened by means of the strap and collar to an iron spout on the open platform of one of the company's stations, and while so fastened it slipped its head from the collar and ran upon the line and was killed:—Held, that the fastening the greyhound by the means furnished by the owner himself, which at the time appeared to be sufficient, was no evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Richardson v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 7 L. R., C. P. 75; 41 L. J., C. P. 60; 26 L. T. 131; 20 W. R. 461.

A greyhound was delivered to a carrier, who gave a receipt for it, the greyhound being afterwards lost:—Held, that the carrier could not set up as a defence that the dog was not properly secured when delivered to him. Stuart v. Crawley, 2 Stark. 323.

Injury to, caused by Compliance with Order in Council.—The statement of claim alleged that the plaintiff delivered certain pigs to the defendants, a railway company, to be carried from M. to L. for reward to the defendants, and first, that at the M. station the defendants placed the pigs in a certain pen, and that the defendants had so negligently kept the said pen, and so negligently permitted it to be covered with lime or some preparation thereof, that the pigs were injured; secondly, that it was the duty of the defendants to provide fit and proper pens, or other accommodation at the said station for keeping the said pigs until they should be carried by the defendants, and that the defendants neglected to provide fit and proper pens or other fit and proper accommodation during the period aforesaid, whereby the said pigs were injured; and thirdly, that at the request, and by the invitation of the defendants, the plaintiff, pending the delivery to and the receipt of the said pigs by the defendants for the purpose of being carried by them, placed the said pigs in a pen of the defendants at the said station at M., pending such delivery and receipt, and that the defendants so negligently kept the said pen for the reception and penning of the said pigs, and so negligently permitted the same to be covered with lime, or some preparation thereof, that by reason of the said pigs coming and being in contact with the said pen while so confined therein, they were injured. The statement of defence stated an order of the lord lieutenant in council, made on the 20th of September, 1878, under the provisions of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878, duly published in the Dublin Gazette, whereby it was inter alia ordered that every loading pen of a railway company should be disinfected before the using thereof, by the application to all parts of the loading pen, with which animals or their droppings had come in contact, of a coating of lime-wash, as in said order prescribed; and alleged that it was necessary for the defendants in the due and ordinary course of traffic, to pen the plaintiff's pigs, and that the defendants, in accordance with the provisions of the said order, carefully, and within a reasonable and proper time for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the said order, before using the pen in the statement of claim mentioned for the plaintiff's pigs, disinfected the said pen, and duly and carefully applied to the said parts thereof the said preparation of chloride of lime, and that the said pigs were injured by coming in contact with the said preparation, and not otherwise, and that, save by reason of the application of the said lime-wash, the said pen was in a fit and proper condition for the reception of and penning the said pigs; similar defences, mutatis mutandis, were pleaded to the second and third causes of action:—Held, on demurrer, that the statement of defence was bad. Shaw v. Great Southern & Western Railway Company, 8 L. R., Ir. 10—C. A.

Charge of Cost of Cleansing Trucks.—By the Consolidated Cattle Plague Order of August, 1867, made under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 107, it was ordered that "every carriage truck required to be cleansed and disinfected should be cleansed and disinfected once in every twenty-four hours during the time when it is used for any animal" in a prescribed manner; and by a clause in their railway act a railway company was empowered to receive a certain rate as a maximum rate of carriage for the conveyance of animals, inclusive of every expense incidental to such conveyance, except for any extraordinary services performed by the company, in respect of which they ought to make a reasonable extra charge:—Held, that the railway company who had carried a cow on their railway for the owner had no right to charge him, in addition to the charge for carriage, with the cost of cleansing the truck, as such cleansing was not a service performed for the owner of the cow within the meaning of the clause of their railway act. Cox v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 4 L. R., C. P. 183; 38 L. J., C. P. 151.

Liability under Carriers Acts and Railway and Canal Traffic Act.—See those titles.

5. DANGEROUS GOODS.

Statutory Exemptions, 29 & 30 Vict. c. 69.—One who employs a carrier to carry an article of such a dangerous nature as to require extraordinary care in its conveyance, must communicate the fact to the carrier, or he will be responsible for any injury which may result to the carrier or his servants from his omission to do so. Farrant v. Barnes, 11 C. B., N. S. 553; 31 L. J., C. P. 137; 8 Jur., N. S. 868.

Where, therefore, a person caused a carboy, containing nitric acid, to be delivered to a servant of a carrier, in order that it might be carried by such carrier for him, and he did not take reasonable care to make the servant aware that the acid was dangerous, but only informed him that it was an acid, and he was burnt and injured by reason of the carboy bursting whilst, in ignorance of its dangerous character, he was carrying it on his back from the carrier's cart:—Held, that he was liable to the servant in an action for damages for such injury. Id.

Guilty Knowledge.—A railway act enacted that every person who shall send or cause to be sent by the railway any vitriol or other good of a dangerous quality, shall distinctly mark or state the nature of such goods on the outside of the package, or give notice in writing to the servant of the company with whom the same are left, at the time of sending, on pain of forfeiting 10*l.* for every default, or being imprisoned.—Held, that the act made the sending of dangerous goods, without notice, a criminal offence; and that therefore a guilty knowledge on the part of the sender was necessary to render him liable under the act. Hearne v. Garton, 2 El. & El. 66; 28 L. J., M. C. 16; 5 Jur., N. S. 648; 33 L. T. 256.

A. received from N. some cases containing vitriol, and sent them by the railway. The nature of the goods was not marked on the packages or known to A. when A. received the packages. N., in answer to an inquiry by A., informed A. that the cases contained gun-stocks and other goods of a harmless nature; and A. so described them in the receiving note sent by him with the goods to the railway, in which note he described himself as the consignor.—Held, that, as A. had been misled by N. as to the nature of the goods, and had no guilty knowledge of their dangerous character, he was not liable as a sender of the goods, within the meaning of the act. Id.

As to Unequal Charges in respect of.—See Bristol Railway Company v. Garton, 4 H. & N. 33.

6. FRAUD OR CONCEALMENT.

Liability of Carrier in Case of.—A carrier who had given notice that he would not be answerable for money sent by him was, nevertheless, responsible if stolen by his servants. But if the sender gave no notice of the value, but attempted to disguise it, and had done so sufficiently to prevent the carrier from taking particular care of the parcel, yet not sufficiently to conceal its nature effectually from the carrier's servants: he could maintain no action against the carrier for the value if the parcel was stolen. Bradley v. Waterhouse, M. & M. 154; 3 C. & P. 318.

A parcel containing two hundred sovereigns, inclosed in six pounds of tea, was sent by coach, and paid for as of ordinary value, both the party sending and the owner of the parcel being aware of a notice by the coach proprietors limiting their responsibility to 5*l.* The parcel was stolen by one of the porters of the coach, while it was standing in the street, at a manufacturing town, in the course of its journey. In an action to recover the value from the coach proprietors, they had a verdict, on the ground that the loss was occasioned by the improper mode in which the parcel had been committed to their care. Id.

The plaintiff went on board the steamboat, with his horse and carriage, paying the charge for a light four-wheeled phaeton; jewellery and watches of great value, which much increased its weight, were contained in a box under the seat, and he made no communication of that fact to the defendants. The carriage was taken safely across the river, and on the arrival of the boat at the pier head at Liverpool, two of the defendants' servants put the carriage out upon the slip, and commenced drawing it up the slip towards the quay, but in doing so were overpowered by its weight, and it ran down into the river, whereby the jewellery and watches were injured.—Held, that the plaintiff's right of action for this injury was not affected by his not having communicated the fact of the jewellery and watches being contained in the carriage. Walker v. Jackson, 10 M. & W. 161; 12 L. J., Ex. 165.

Held, also, that it was a further question for the jury (supposing a contract to land were established) whether the landing was complete under the circumstances. Id.

Held, also, that to rebut evidence of a usage to take on board and land the carriages of passengers, a notice stuck up at the door of entrance for foot passengers to the slip at Woodside, but not visible to those who came with carriages, nor shewn to have been known to the plaintiff, that the defendant did not undertake to load or discharge horses or carriages, and would not be responsible for loss or damage thereto, was not admissible. Id.

Where a carrier gave notice by printed proposals that he would not be answerable for certain valuable goods, if lost, "of more than the value of a specified sum, unless entered and paid for as such;" and goods of that description were delivered to him by A., who knew the conditions, but, concealing the value, paid no more than the ordinary price of carriage and booking; on a loss, the carrier was held, before the statute, to be neither liable to the extent of the sum specified, nor to repay the price actually paid for the carriage or booking. Clay v. Willan, 1 H. Bl. 298; S. P., Izett v. Mountain, 4 East, 370.

Question for Jury.—A carrier gave notice that he would not be answerable for parcels of value, unless entered and paid for as such, and a party, with a knowledge of this circumstance, delivered a parcel containing bank-notes to a large amount, without informing the carrier of its contents, which was afterwards stolen.—Held, that the question whether the person had been guilty of unfair concealment by not informing the carrier of the nature and value of the parcel, was properly left for the determination of the jury. Batson v. Donovan, 4 B. & A. 21.

Fraud—Violence of Mob.—A common carrier to and from B., through W. to R., employed distinct boats to carry to and from B. to R., and to and from B. to W., which passed on different days; the plaintiff knowing this, and having corn at W., which was threatened to be seized by a mob, wrote to the carrier at R. to send a private boat quickly, on account of the state of the country, to take the corn to B., to which he not returning any answer, and the plaintiff fearing to wait till the boat would, in the usual course of employment, go from W. to B., stopped the boat passing by from R. to B., and without disclosing the circumstances to the boatman, prevailed on him to take the corn on board, and then despatched him forward in the night, having privately sent orders to open the lock at any time when he should pass. After verdict for the carrier, negating that the corn was delivered in the usual course of dealing as a common carrier.—Held, that the verdict might be sustained either on the general ground of fraud in the plaintiff; or on the circumstances of the case, furnishing altogether evidence of a tacit stipulation on the part of the carrier to do the best he could, but not to be answerable as a common carrier for the violence of the mob; or titled to the protection of the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, in respect of so much of the transit as is to be performed by land. Le Conteur v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., Q. B. 54; 35 L. J., Q. B. 40; 12 Jur., N. S. 266; 13 L. T. 325; 14 W. R. 80.

Pleading.—To a count alleging a railway company to be common carriers by railway from London to Southampton, and thence to Jersey by steam vessels, charging them with the loss of a passenger's portmanteau, a plea that the goods contained in the portmanteau were writings, silks, furs and lace, and exceeded the value of 10*l.*, and were delivered by the plaintiff to the company, "then being common carriers by land for hire, to be carried by them as such carriers by land over their railway;" that such delivery was made to their servants; that at the time of such delivery the value and the nature of the goods were not declared by the plaintiff, and that the non-delivery of the goods to the plaintiff complained of was by reason of the same being lost by the company out of their possession while the same were upon their railway, and in their possession and under their care as such carriers by land as aforesaid, is a good plea. Pianciani v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 18 C. B. 226.

To a count alleging that the plaintiff became a passenger by the company's railway and steam-vessel from London to Jersey, and charging that the company refused to carry his portmanteau, containing articles of wearing apparel, paper writings and documents, a similar plea is bad, the count not alleging the loss of the package. Id.

2. DECLARATION OF VALUE.

Effect of.—By 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 1, a common carrier by land is exempted from liability for the loss of or injury to any article of the description therein specified, being above the value of 10*l.*, delivered to him to be carried, where such loss or injury has been occasioned by the negligence of his servant, unless the value of such article has been declared, and an increased charge paid. Hinton v. Dibbin, 2 G. & D. 36; 2 Q. B. 646; 6 Jur. 601.

What Sufficient.—It is not essential that a declaration of value within the Carriers Act, 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 1, should be express and formal. Bradbury v. Sutton, 21 W. R. 128—Ex. Ch.

There must be an express formal declaration of the value of pictures, &c., to the value of more than 10*l.* sent by a carrier; and it is not enough that the carrier has a conviction as to what the contents of the package were. Boys v. Pink, 8 C. & P. 361.

Omission to affix Notice.—A person who delivers to a carrier goods of the description mentioned in the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 1, must, in order to fix the carrier with responsibility for their loss, declare to him the nature and value of the goods at the time of their delivery, whether it takes place at his office, or on the road, or elsewhere; and if no such declaration is made, the omission of the carrier to affix in his office the notice required by the statute will not render him responsible. Hart v. Baren- dale, 6 Ex. 769; 21 L. J., Ex. 123; 16 Jur. 126—Ex. Ch.

The notice to be affixed in the office by the carrier is required only for the purpose of his making an increased charge for the conveyance of such goods, after having received notice of their value and nature from the sender. Id.

H. requested B., a carrier, to send to H.'s place of business (away from the carrier's office) for some goods to be conveyed by B., as such carrier, for H. B. did so, and his servant received the goods, which came within the classes of goods mentioned in 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, and exceeded 10*l.* in value; but H. did not declare their value or nature. The notice stating the increased rates of charges required by B. for such classes of goods was affixed in his office, but was not in any way brought to the knowledge of H. The goods having been lost:—Held, that although they had been delivered away from the carrier's office, and therefore the sender had not an opportunity of seeing the notice affixed therein, yet the carrier was not liable, as the sender had not declared the value and nature of the goods at the time of delivery. Id.

Demand of Increased Charge.—Where a carrier receives goods of the description mentioned in the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, and the person delivering the same has declared their value and nature, he is not bound to tender, but the carrier must demand, the increased charge mentioned in the notice affixed in his office, warehouse or receiving-house, whether the goods are there delivered, or to a servant sent to fetch them; and if no such demand is made, the carrier is liable for the loss of or injury to the goods, although the increased charge has not been paid. Great Northern Railway Company v. Behrens, 7 H. & N. 950; 31 L. J., Ex. 299; 8 Jur., N. S. 567; 8 L. T. 323; 10 W. R. 389—Ex. Ch. Affirming 6 H. & N. 366; 30 L. J., Ex. 153; 3 L. T. 863; 9 W. R. 338.

Carriers by Sea and Land—Exemption.—To a declaration alleging a contract by a railway company to carry, from Rotterdam to Harwich and London, goods delivered to them for that purpose, and also alleging the loss of such goods, the company pleaded, in substance, that the goods were articles and property of the description mentioned in the 1st section of the Carriers Act, and were delivered to the company, then being common carriers by land for hire between Harwich and London, to be by them, as such carriers by land, carried from Harwich to London; that the goods were in one parcel, and exceeded in value 10*l.*; that the value and nature of the goods were not declared to the company at the time of delivery to them; that the goods were lost while in the course of being carried from Harwich to London, and whilst the same were in possession of the company as such carriers:—Held, that the plea was a good answer to the declaration. Barendale v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 4 L. R., Q. B. 244; 38 L. J., Q. B. 137; 17 W. R. 412—Ex. Ch.

A railway company were owners of a railway from Harwich to London, and also of a ship, the Avalon, lying at Rotterdam. They carried on the business of carriers between Rotterdam and London via Harwich. A case of pictures was delivered to their agents at Rotterdam and a bill of lading was signed by them, the goods "to be delivered at the port of London via Harwich (the act of God, as also railway accidents, being excepted), and the owners being in no way liable for any consequences of the causes above excepted." The case was placed on board the ship, was unshipped at Harwich, and was sent off by the railway to London, but was lost in the course of transit from Harwich to London. No declaration of the value of the pictures was ever made, but they were found at the trial to have been of above the value of 10*l.* :—Held, that the bill of lading contemplated a conveyance of the case partly by land, and that the fact of there being such a bill of lading was no ground for saying that the plea referred to above was not proved. Id.

Held, also, that although the bill of lading constituted a special contract between the owner of the goods and the company, it was not such a special contract as would, under s. 6, deprive the company of the protection afforded to them by the neglect to declare the value of the case at the time of the delivery. Id.

See Le Conteur v. South-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., Q. B. 54, supra; and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 19, s. 14.

Value of Goods, what is.]—The plaintiff purchased certain articles of jewellery from the manufacturers of the value of 11*l.* 14*s.*, but on the condition that if the price were paid within a month a discount of 15 per cent. would be allowed, reducing the value to 9*l.* 19*s.* The price was paid by the plaintiff within the month. The plaintiff consigned these articles to a customer in J. by the defendant railway without having declared their value, and they were lost in transit. The price charged to the customer exceeded the sum of 11*l.* 14*s.* The plaintiff sued the defendants in the county court of B. for 9*l.* 19*s.*, but the judge gave a verdict for the defendants on the ground that, as the value of the goods exceeded 10*l.* and had not been declared, the defendants were protected by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 1 :—Held, on appeal, that the county court judge was right, and that in such cases value means the value to the consignor of the goods, which is the price his consignee has contracted to pay for the goods, and that as the price contracted to be paid was over 10*l.*, the plaintiff under these circumstances could not recover. Blankenshaw v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 45 L. T. 761.

Estoppel.]—Horses, above the value of 10*l.* each, were delivered to a railway company to be conveyed by them for hire, the owner having previously signed a declaration that the horses were under the value of 10*l.* each. The horses were injured by the negligence of the company. In an action against the company for the damage actually sustained :—Held, that the parties having agreed to act upon an assumed state of facts, both parties were bound by it, and the owner was, therefore, concluded by his statement of value. McCance v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 3 H. & C. 343; 34 L. J., Ex. 39; 10 Jur., N. S. 1058; 11 L. T. 426; 12 W. R. 1086—Ex. Ch.

Nature of Articles.]—The 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, extends to all the articles enumerated in s. 1, although not within the words of the preamble, "an article of great value in small compass." Owen v. Burnett, 2 C. & M. 335; 4 Tyr. 133.

To entitle a party to recover for loss of or injury to any article of such description, he must give express notice to the carrier of the value and nature of the article. Id.

A looking-glass exceeding the value of 10*l.* was packed up in a case, and sent to a carrier's office, to be conveyed from A. to the house of S., near L. A notice was fixed up in the office. The words "Plate glass," "Looking glass," "Keep this edge upwards," were written on the case, but no declaration was made of the nature and value of the article, and no increased rate of carriage paid. The parcel was conveyed from L. to the place of its ultimate destination on a brewer's truck, that being the usual mode in which parcels were conveyed in that part of the country. When the glass was unpacked it was found to be broken :—Held, that the carrier was not liable for the damage occasioned by the breaking of the glass. Id.

Pictures contained in Package.]—Pictures exceeding the value of 10*l.* were laid upon one another without any covering or tie in the owner's waggon, which had sides but no top; and the waggon was delivered to a railway company, and placed by their servants on one of their trucks for carriage by the railway :—Held, that the pictures were "contained in a parcel or package" within the meaning of the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 8, so as to give the company the protection of that statute. Whaite or Waite v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 9 L. R., Ex. 67; 43 L. J., Ex. 47; 30 L. T. 272; 22 W. R. 374.

What are Paintings or Pictures.]—The word "paintings" in the Carriers Act, 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 1, is used in its ordinary and popular sense to denote works of art. Woodward v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 3 Ex. D. 121; 47 L. J., Ex. 263; 38 L. T. 321; 26 W. R. 354.

Coloured imitations of rugs and carpets and coloured working designs, each of them valuable and designed by skilled persons and hand-painted, but having no value as works of art, are not paintings within the Carriers Act. Id.

Pictures and Frames.]—If a package containing pictures in frames exceeding 10*l.* in value is delivered to a carrier to be carried for hire, without any declaration as to the value and nature of the articles, the picture and frame are to be considered as one article; and the carrier is protected from liability as well in respect of damage done to the frames as in respect of damage done to the picture itself. Anderson or Henderson v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 5 L. R., Ex. 90; 39 L. J., Ex. 55; 21 L. T. 756; 18 W. R. 352.

Silks.]—A silk dress, forming part of the wearing apparel of a railway passenger, is within 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 1. Flowers v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 16 L. T. 329.

Silk dresses made up for wearing are not "silk" within 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68. Darey v. Mason, Car. & M. 45.

"Elastic silk webbing" is a woven fabric, each yard of which contains an ounce of silk, an ounce and a quarter of india rubber and three-quarters of an ounce of cotton, the silk being of greater value than the two other materials:—Held, as a matter of fact (the question being reserved for the court, with power to draw inferences), that this webbing was "silks wrought up with other materials." Brunt v. Midland Railway Company, 2 H. & C. 889; 33 L. J., Ex. 187; 10 Jur., N. S. 181; 9 L. T. 690.

Lace in Frame.—A lace corporal in a gilt frame, covered with glass, being intended for an exhibition, was enclosed in a packing-case, and sent, without any declaration, by railway, and lost:—Held, by Bovill, C. J., and Byles, J. (Wilkes, J., dubitante), that as a matter of fact the gilt frame was distinct from and not accessory to the lace, and the packing-case accessory to both or to the frame only, and that the carrier therefore was not protected by the Carriers Act from liability as respected either the gilt frame or the packing-case. Treadwin v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 3 L. R., C. P. 308; 37 L. J., C. P. 83; 17 L. T. 601; 16 W. R. 365.

Furs.—Bodies, which are made partly of the soft substance which is taken from the skins of rabbits, and partly from the wool of sheep, do not come under the description of furs. Mayhew v. Nelson, 6 C. & P. 58.

Trinkets.—An eye-glass with a gold chain attached to it for the purpose of its being hung round the neck of the wearer is not a trinket. Darey v. Mason, Car. & M. 45.

But it is impracticable, with precise accuracy, to define what are trinkets within 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68. Bernstein v. Barendse, 6 C. B., N. S. 251; 28 L. J., C. P. 265; 5 Jur., N. S. 1056; 7 W. R. 396.

But, semble, that the closest approximation is this, that they must be articles of mere ornament, or if ornament and utility are combined, the former must be the predominating quality. Ib.

Bracelets, shirt-pins, rings, brooches and ornamented tortoiseshell and pearl portmonnaies, however small their intrinsic value, are trinkets. Ib.

So, silk watch-guards are "silks in a manufactured state" within the act. Ib.

So, smelling-bottles, and the like, are "glass" within the act. Ib.

Monetary Securities.—C. being indebted to G. in more than 10*l.*, framed a document directed to himself, ordering himself, three months after date, to "pay to my order" the amount. The document had a stamp proper for a bill of exchange of that amount and length of time, and was in all respects like a bill of exchange, except that there was no drawer's name. C. wrote on it his acceptance, and caused it to be forwarded in a parcel, directed to G., by a carrier, in order that G. might add his name as drawer. In an action against the carrier for the loss of other goods of less value than 10*l.*, contained in the same parcel, the defence was, that the parcel contained "a bill, order, note, security for payment of money or writing of value exceeding 10*l.*," and that no notice had been given of the contents, or increased rate of carriage paid or contracted for, though the carrier had publicly exhibited in his office a notice requiring such increased rate for articles. The jury found that the incomplete bill was not at the time of the delivery to the carrier of any value:—Held, that it was not a bill, order, note, security for payment of money, nor writing of any value at the time of such delivery. Stoeniger v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 3 El. & Bl. 549; 2 C. L. R. 1595; 23 L. J., Q. B. 293; 18 Jur. 605.

3. BOOKING-OFFICES.

What is.—An inn where a book is kept for booking parcels by a particular coach, which stops regularly there to take in and deliver parcels, is a receiving-house for parcels, within the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, although other coaches stop at the same inn for the same purpose, and the innkeeper sends the parcels by which coach he pleases. Syms v. Chaplin, 1 N. & P. 129; 5 A. & E. 634; 2 H. & W. 411.

Negligence at.—The contract entered into by a booking-office keeper, who takes in parcels to be forwarded by carriers, is only to deliver safely to a carrier. Gilbert v. Dale, 1 N. & P. 22; 5 A. & E. 543; 2 H. & W. 383.

In an action against the keeper of such an office, where the declaration alleges that a parcel was delivered to D., and that he promised to take care of it, that it might be forwarded to its destination, and avers that it was lost through his negligence, on which issue is joined; it is not sufficient evidence of negligence, to shew that the parcel was delivered to D. and that it had not reached its destination. Ib.

A booking-office keeper, who also keeps a wine vault, is guilty of negligence, if he allows goods to remain in front of the bar, exposed to persons coming in for liquor, even though they are of too large a size to be conveniently taken into the bar, behind the counter. Docer v. Mills, 5 C. & P. 175.

A box was sent by A. to an inn kept by B., who booked parcels for carriers, but did not receive anything for so doing. The person who took the box told B. to keep it till A. called for it, to which B. answered "Very well." On A.'s calling for it, the box was missing, and B. said, he supposed that some carrier had taken it by mistake:—Held, in an action of trover by A., and against B., that this was no evidence of a conversion. Williams v. Gesse or Jessey or Gessary, 3 Bing. N. C. 849; 7 C. & P. 777; 5 Scott, 56; 3 Hodges, 131.

Trover does not lie against the keeper of a booking-office for the mere loss of a parcel deposited at the office for the purpose of being forwarded by a carrier. Ib.

Evidence, that, at the door of a booking-office, there is a board on which is painted "Conveyances to all parts of the world," and a list of names of places, is not sufficient proof that the owner of the office is a common carrier, so as to charge him for the loss of a box that was booked there. Upston v. Slark, 2 C. & P. 598.

If a common carrier demands a certain sum for booking, and refuses to take charge of goods unless such sum is paid, he is not liable to an action if they are left without being paid for and are lost. — v. Jackson, Peake's Add. Cas. 185.

If a carrier directs goods to be sent to a particular booking-office, he is answerable for the negligence of the booking-office keeper. Colepepper v. Good, 5 C. & P. 380.

Evidence of Acceptance at Office.—If a message is left at the booking-office of a carrier from N. to L. for his van to call for luggage at another inn for the purpose of its being carried to L., and the carrier's servant and van go into the other inn, and the luggage is there put into the carrier's van, and afterwards lost therefrom, the carrier is liable for the loss, just as he would be if the luggage had been taken to the regular booking-office of the carrier. Davey v. Mason, Car. & M. 45. And see Williams v. Gessac, supra.

If, in an action against a carrier for the loss of a parcel, he pleads that it was not delivered to him to be carried, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to shew that it was delivered to a person and at a house where parcels were in the habit of being left for the carrier; and it is immaterial whether this person was paid any money or not; and in such an action the person who so left the parcel may be asked, on cross-examination, what direction was on the parcel. Burrell v. North, 2 C. & K. 681.

If in an action against a carrier it appears that the agent of the plaintiff went to the carrier's booking-office, and desired that a man should be sent to the agent's house to fetch a package, and one of the carrier's men did accordingly fetch the package from the agent's house, and bring it to the booking-office, this is a delivery by the plaintiff to the carrier; as, for this purpose, the carrier's man is to be considered as the plaintiff's servant. Boys v. Pink, 8 C. & P. 361.

4. FELONY OF SERVANTS.

Who are Servants.—Every person employed by a common carrier, whether by the name of sub-contractor, agent, servant, or otherwise, to perform any part of the work which the carrier has undertaken to perform, and every person employed by such person for that purpose, is a servant in the employ of the carrier within the 8th section. Machu v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 2 Ex. 415; 5 Railw. Cas. 302; 17 L. J., Ex. 271; 12 Jur. 501.

Where a plaintiff gave a parcel directed to F., in London, to the carrier at B., who drove a mail-cart between B. and M.; and the carrier booked it at M. at an inn where the defendant's coach stopped to take in parcels, and received the carriage for it from the innkeeper, who was in the habit of booking parcels for the defendant's coach, and did book this parcel to London, and delivered it to the coachman:—Held, that the carrier was the agent of the plaintiff, and the innkeeper the servant of the defendant; and therefore that the plaintiff might recover damages from him for the loss of the parcel. Syms v. Chaplin, 1 N. & P. 129; 5 A. & E. 634; 2 H. & W. 411.

A parcel delivered to the guard of a mail-coach, and by him to the porter of the inn where the mail stops, whose business is to carry out the parcels brought by the coach, receiving for such duty a portion of the sum demanded for carriage, does not make such porter personally responsible for its loss. Cavenagh v. Such, 1 Price, 328.

— Estoppel.—To an action for the loss of pictures delivered to be carried by a railway company, they pleaded the Carriers Act, 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 8, and the plaintiff replied that the loss arose from the felonious acts of the servants of the company. The pictures were loaded in a van in the yard of the company ready to be sent to their destination, when a man represented himself to be C., a driver in the employ of M., who carried for the railway company, and their delivery clerk gave the man a pass which enabled him to drive the van out of the yard, and so to steal the pictures. There was a man named C. in M.'s employ, but he was not the guilty person:—Held, that the railway company was not estopped from denying that the thief was their servant. Way v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 1 Q. B. D. 692; 45 L. J., Q. B. 874; 35 L. T. 253.

Proof of.—In an action against a carrier for loss of goods, upon an issue that the loss, under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 8, arose from the felonious act of the carrier's servants, it is sufficient to prove facts which render it more probable that the felony was committed by some one or other of his servants than by any one not in his employment; and it is unnecessary to give such evidence as would suffice to convict any particular servant. Vaughton v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 12 Cox. C. C. 580; 9 L. R., Ex. 93; 43 L. J., Ex. 75; 30 L. T. 119; 22 W. R. 336. But see following cases.

In an action against a railway company for the loss of a parcel of money above the value of 10l., the issue being whether the loss was occasioned by the felonious act of one of the company's servants, who had absconded at the time of the parcel being missed, it is allowable to call a police officer to prove instructions which he received from the station master, tending to shew that he, the station master, had suspicions that the servant had stolen the parcel. Kirkstall Brewery Company v. Furness Railway Company, 9 L. R., Q. B. 468; 43 L. J., Q. B. 142; 30 L. T. 783; 22 W. R. 876.

— Onus.—In an action against a railway company for the loss of a passenger's luggage containing jewellery, the issue was, under the Carriers Act, s. 8, whether the loss had arisen from the felony of the company's servants:—Held, that it was not enough for the plaintiff to disclose a state of facts consistent with a felonious taking, but that it lay on him to prove a state of things rendering such felonious taking more probable than a loss by accident or mistake, and, therefore, that, in the case before the court, there was no evidence to go to the jury that the luggage in question was stolen by any person. Gogarty v. Great Southern and Western Railway Company, 9 Ir. R., C. L. 233—Ex. Ch.

When the Carriers Act is pleaded to an action against a carrier for loss of goods, proof that the goods were stolen, and the servants of the carrier had greater facility of access than other persons, is not evidence for the jury of a felony by servants. Turner v. Great Western Railway Company, 13 Cox, C. C. 191; 34 L. T. 22.

A box containing silk was delivered to a railway company, not declared, and despatched by goods train on a truck. On the journey, after stopping at two junctions where the train divided, the box was found broken open and the silk gone:—Held, no evidence of felony by servants of the company. Ib.

Servants having greater Facilities.]—In an action against carriers for loss of goods, to make out a case for a jury in support of a replication of felony by their servants to a plea of the Carriers Act, 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 8, it is not enough to shew that the servants had greater facilities of access to the goods than any other persons. McQueen v. Great Western Railway Company, 10 L. R., Q. B. 569; 44 L. J., Q. B. 130; 32 L. T. 759; 23 W. R. 698.

A heavy case containing pictures was delivered to a railway company to be forwarded by train from Carliff to London, and was not declared under the Carriers Act. It was packed by the porters on a truck and covered over, and remained for some hours on a long siding to which the public had access, and was stolen. Some of the porters were called by the plaintiff to prove delivery of the case to the company, but none were called by the company:—Held, that there was no evidence of a loss by the felony of the servants of the company. Ib.

Prima facie Evidence.]—A carrier was sued for the value of a parcel lost, and slight evidence was given to raise a suspicion that his servant, who was still in his employ, had stolen the parcel; on a verdict found for the plaintiff, a new trial was refused, on the ground that the carrier ought to have called the servant as a witness. Boyre v. Chapman, 2 Bing. N. C. 222; 2 Scott, 365; 1 Hodges, 338.

A parcel was delivered to a porter of a railway company at the station, to be forwarded from Gloucester to London, after the waybill and the guard's parcel-book had been made up. The parcel was placed by the porter in the usual receptacle, a locked box in the luggage van, and entered by him on the waybill; but the fact of his having so placed it in the box was not communicated to the guard. After several intermediate stoppages the train reached London, when the parcel was missed:—Held, no evidence for the jury of the parcel having been stolen by a servant of the company. Great Northern Railway Company v. Rimell, 18 C. B. 575; 27 L. J., C. P. 201.

A mere suspicion that the loss arose from felony by the carrier's servants, is not sufficient; it must be proved. Ib.

A. sued a railway company for the loss of a travelling case, containing watches, which he was carrying with him as personal luggage. The company pleaded that A. had not made the requisite declaration as to the contents of the parcel; to which A. replied that the loss was occasioned by the felony of the servants of the company. It appeared at the trial that the case had been lost on a part of the journey; that A. was prevented, by a servant of the company, from carrying the case in the same carriage with himself, on the pretence that the luggage-van was the proper place for its conveyance; that the interference of the servant was no part of his duty; that the case was not afterwards forthcoming, and that he subsequently denied all knowledge of the transaction. A question having been left to the jury, they found that a felony had been committed:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury of a felonious taking of the goods. Keys v. Belfast Railway Company, 8 Ir. C. L. R. 167.

Effect of Allegation.]—In cases within the carrier's notice, the carrier is not liable for the felonious acts of his servants, without gross negligence on his part; but felony by his servants is a good answer to a defence by him under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 1. Great Western Railway Company v. Rimell, 18 C. B. 575; 27 L. J., C. P. 201.

Where felony is set up as an answer to a defence, the question of negligence becomes immaterial. Ib.

In an action against a carrier for the loss of a parcel, a replication that the loss arose from the felonious acts of the carrier's servants is a good answer to a plea that the value exceeded 10*l.*, and was not declared at the time of the delivery to the carrier. Metcalfe v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 307; 27 L. J., C. P. 205.

In order to support this replication, in point of fact it is necessary to prove, not only that the goods had been feloniously abstracted by some one of the carrier's servants unknown, but that evidence ought to be given sufficient to convict some one or more of such servants of the felony. S. C., 27 L. J., C. P. 333; 4 C. B., N. S. 311.

V. RAILWAY AND CANAL TRAFFIC ACT.

(17 & 18 Vict. c. 31.)

1. LIMITATION OF RAILWAY AND CANAL COMPANIES BY SPECIAL CONTRACT AND CONDITIONS.

Extent of Application of Statute.]—The Railway and Canal Traffic Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31) does not apply to special contracts entered into between a railway company and other persons as to the receiving, forwarding and delivering of traffic beyond the limits of its own line, or of lines worked by it. Turner v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 17 W. R. 1096; S. C., nom. Zunz v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 4 L. R., Q. B. 539; 38 L. J., Q. B. 209; 20 L. T. 873.

The proviso in s. 7, that no special contract shall be binding upon or affect any party unless the same be signed by him or by the person delivering, &c., only applies where the company is seeking to exempt itself from liability by reason of there being a special contract. Barrendale v. Great Western Railway Company, 4 L. R., Q. B. 244; 38 L. J., Q. B. 137; 17 W. R. 412—Ex. Ch.

Passengers' luggage is within s. 7 of the statute, the provisions of which are extended by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, to the conveyance by water of such luggage; railway companies using steam vessels for the purpose of carrying on a communication between any towns or ports. Cohen v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 2 Ex. D. 253; 46 L. J., Ex. 417; 36 L. T. 130; 25 W. R. 475.

2. SIGNING CONTRACT.

Contract must be Reasonable and Signed.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, makes notices by railway and canal companies, limiting their liability as carriers, void; but it does not prevent them from entering into special contracts for the carriage of goods, provided the conditions contained in such contracts are such as are held just and reasonable by the judge or court before whom any question relating thereto is tried, and provided the contract is signed by the party delivering the goods to be carried. Simons v. Great Western Railway Company, 18 C. B. 805; 26 L. J., C. P. 25.

All the parts of s. 7 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, must be read together, and therefore the conditions there spoken of as capable of being imposed by railway companies in limitation of their liability as common carriers must not only be, in the opinion of a court or a judge, just and reasonable, but must also be embodied in a special contract in writing, signed by the owner or sender of the goods. Peek v. North Staffordshire Railway Company, 10 H. L. Cas. 473; 32 L. J., Q. B. 241; 9 Jur., N. S. 914; 8 L. T. 768; 11 W. R. 1023.

An owner of some marble chimney-pieces desired to send them to London. Messages and notes passed between him and the agent of the railway company on the subject of the terms on which they were to be carried. The agent stated as a condition, that the company would not be responsible for goods sent by the railway, unless their value was declared, and they were insured, the rate of insurance being fixed at ten per cent. on the declared value. After some delay the agent received a note, requesting that the marbles might be forthwith sent to London "not insured;" they were sent, and suffered damage:—Held, that the condition thus sought to be imposed by the company was not just and reasonable; that there was not any special contract signed by the parties; that the note could not be connected with the other communications so as to constitute the required contract; that the words "not insured" could not be made the subject of explanation by parol evidence; and that they left the rights and liabilities of the parties as at common law. Ib.

The burden of shewing that a condition is just and reasonable lies on a railway company. Ib.

A plea that the goods were carried on a just and reasonable condition, made by the company and assented to by the sender, that they should not be liable for loss or injury unless the goods were insured according to value, and that they were not insured, is a plea in bar to the whole cause of action in respect of damage, however caused. Ib.

A special contract in writing must itself, either in terms or by distinct reference, set out or embody the condition. Ib.

— Written or Printed, and Signed.—Any condition limiting the liability of railway companies as carriers must be a condition just and reasonable in the judgment of the court, and must be set out in a written (or printed) contract, signed by or on behalf of the consignor of the goods. Aldridge v. Great Western Railway Company, 15 C. B., N. S. 582; 33 L. J., C. P. 161.

A signature of the special contract by a railway agent employed by the consignor to deliver and by the company to receive the goods for him, is a sufficient signature to satisfy the statute. Ib.

The statute extends to cases where a special contract has been signed, in accordance with the proviso in the section, that no special contract between company and customer, respecting the receiving of animals, shall be binding, unless it be signed by the customer or person delivering the animals. M'Manus v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 4 H. & N. 327; 28 L. J., Ex. 353; 5 Jur., N. S. 651; 33 L. T., O. S. 259—Ex. Ch.

After Signature Contract taken to have been Read.—The plaintiff delivered to a railway company eighteen packages, to be carried on their line. He filled up and signed a receiving-note, describing the goods as furniture. On the paper, under the head "conditions," were these words:—"No claim for deficiency, damage or detention will be allowed, unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods, nor for loss, unless made within seven days of the time they should have been delivered, and that the company will not be answerable for the loss or detention of any goods which may be untruly or incorrectly described in the receiving-note." The plaintiff said "he was told to sign the paper, and did so. He might have seen the word 'conditions,' but he did not read them, and did not know and was not told what they were." One of the packages consisted of a sack of clothes, which was not delivered, but no claim was made until more than seven days from the time when the same should have been delivered:—Held, that there was nothing to rebut the presumption arising from the signature of the paper by the plaintiff that he understood that the contract was subject to the conditions. Lewis v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 H. & N. 867; 29 L. J., Ex. 425.

A declaration against a railway company for damage to goods intrusted to them to carry, alleged that the goods were delivered to the company as common carriers, and that the company received them as such common carriers. Plea, that the goods were received by the company to be carried subject to a special contract, whereby the company was not to be answerable for any loss or damage, however caused. In support of the plea the company produced a paper, signed by the plaintiff, acknowledging that the goods were to be carried subject to certain conditions, one of which was, that the company was not to be responsible for any loss or damage, however caused. On the part of the plaintiff, it was proved, that, when asked by the clerk of the company, at the time the goods were delivered at the company's warehouse, to sign the paper, the plaintiff expressed his unwillingness to do so, inasmuch as he could not see to read it, whereupon the clerk said that it was of no consequence, and that the signature was a mere matter of form; and that the plaintiff, relying upon that assurance, signed the paper:—Held, that upon this evidence the jury was warranted in finding that the goods were not delivered to the company to be carried under the special contract. Simons v. Great Western Railway Company, 2 C. B., N. S. 620.

Effect of employing illiterate Agent to Sign.]

—A man, who can read, who sends an agent who cannot read, to sign a document or to enter into a contract in which a document must to his knowledge be signed, cannot dispute his liability on the document so signed, on the ground that his agent could not read its contents; for in such a case the principal must be taken to be in the same position as though he had signed it himself without reading it. Foreman v. Great Western Railway Company, 38 L. T. 851.

Where Reasonable and Signed, Effect of.]—

In an action against a railway company for negligence in forwarding goods, whereby the plaintiff lost a market, the declaration alleged that the company were common carriers, and received the goods to be carried by them as such common carriers for hire and reward. It appeared that the company did not receive any goods to be carried by them, unless the consignor signed a paper containing various conditions subject to which they were to be carried. The judge, holding that the conditions were reasonable, and the contract a special contract within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, and that consequently the company did not receive the goods to be carried as common carriers, directed a nonsuit:—Held, that the nonsuit was right. White v. Great Western Railway Company, 2 C. B., N. S. 7; 26 L. J., C. P. 158.

In general, notice given by a railway company would be valid in law for the purpose of limiting the common-law liability of the company as carriers. Park v. North Staffordshire Railway Company, 10 H. L. Cas. 473; 32 L. J., Q. B. 241; 9 Jur., N. S. 914; 8 L. T. 768; 11 W. R. 1023.

Such common-law liability might be limited by such conditions as the court or judge shall determine to be just and reasonable, but any condition so limiting the liability of the company must be embodied in a special contract, in writing, between the owner or person delivering the goods to the company, and signed by such owner or person. Ib.

3. WHAT ARE JUST AND REASONABLE CONDITIONS.

a. As to Goods.

i. Generally.

What are.]—A condition, that the company will not be accountable for the loss, detention, or damage of any package, insufficiently or improperly packed, is unjust and unreasonable. Simons v. Great Western Railway Company, 18 C. B. 805; 26 L. J., C. P. 25; S. P., Garton v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 1 B. & S. 112; 30 L. J., Q. B. 273; 7 Jur., N. S. 1234; 9 W. R. 734.

Seem, that a condition that no claim for damage will be allowed, unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods, nor for loss, unless made within three days of the time that they should be delivered, is just and reasonable. Ib.

A condition, that in the case of goods conveyed at special or mileage rate, the company will not be responsible for any loss or damage, however caused, is just and reasonable. Ib. But see cases below.

So a condition that a railway company should not be liable for loss of market, or other delay arising from detention, is a reasonable condition. White v. Great Western Railway Company, 2 C. B., N. S. 7; 26 L. J., C. P. 158.

Owner's Risk-rate, except wilful Default—

Misdelivery.]—Clover seed consigned to the plaintiff by the defendants' railway was misdelivered by the defendants, and the plaintiff did not receive it till after a fortnight's delay, too late for the season's market. The goods had been forwarded at the defendants' lower rate of charge, and, therefore, by special contract "solely at the risk of the sender, with the exception that the company shall be responsible for any wilful act or wilful default of the company or their servants if proved, for fraud or theft by their servants, and for collision of trains conveying the goods within the company's limits":—Held, that, under the circumstances there was nothing in the special contract to free the defendants from their ordinary liability as carriers. Goldsmith v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 44 L. T. 181; 29 W. R. 651.

A case sent by a county court judge for the opinion of the court stated that the goods were received by a railway company, under the following note, signed by the plaintiff:—"Risk-note. London and North-Western Railway Company, Park Lane Station, December 19. 1855. Hay, straw, furniture, glass, marble, china, castings and other brittle and hazardous articles, conveyed at the risk of the owners. Delivered to London and North-Western Railway Company, from R. C. Dunham, three crates of beef, for Duckworth, Newgate Market, to be forwarded from Liverpool to London, at owner's risk:—"Held, that the court could not from this statement judge whether or not the condition was just and reasonable. Dunham v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 18 C. B. 828.

"No Responsibility"—Negligence.]—A railway company carried troops and their baggage in India, under a written contract with the government, which provided for the due supply of suitable goods-waggons and for special trains when required, and contained the following clause:—"The baggage shall remain in charge of a guard provided by the troops, the company accepting no responsibility:—"Held, that this clause did not exempt the company from responsibility for damage caused by their own negligence. Martin v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, 3 L. R., Ex. 9; 37 L. J., Ex. 27; 17 L. T. 349.

Gross Negligence and Fraud excepted.]—A railway company gave public notice that fish would only be conveyed on their line by special agreement, and by particular trains; and that the sender should sign the following conditions:—"The company shall not be responsible, under any circumstances, for loss of market, or for other loss or injury arising from delay or detention of train, exposure to weather, stowage, or from any cause whatever other than gross neglect or fraud":—Held, that the conditions were just and reasonable. Beal v. South Devon Railway Company, 3 H. & C. 337; 11 L. T. 184; 12 W. R. 1115. Affirming 5 H. & N. 875; 29 L. J., Ex. 441; 8 W. R. 651—Ex. Ch.

Time of Claim and Description.]—A party on removing his household effects, delivered them in eighteen packages to a railway company for carriage, and signed a delivery note which described them as furniture, and containing at the foot "Conditions:—The company will not be answerable for the loss of goods truly or incorrectly described; no claim for loss will be allowed unless made within seven days after the time when the goods should have been delivered." The packages arrived in due course at the station of their destination, where they were kept for four days at the owner's request, and they were then delivered by the company at his residence. On opening one of the packages, which contained books and clothes and not furniture, he found that the whole had been abstracted, and empty sacks substituted, and immediately made a claim against the company. This was more than seven days after the arrival of the packages at the station, but within seven days of their actual delivery at the owner's residence. He having brought an action for the loss, the company pleaded that the packages were delivered to them on the conditions, and that the claim was not within seven days of the time when the packages ought to have been delivered, and that the contents were not correctly described. At the trial the judge ruled that the conditions were just and reasonable:—Held, that the conditions were reasonable. Lewis v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 H. & N. 867; 29 L. J., Ex. 425. And see Simons v. Great Western Railway, supra, and Moore v. Great Northern Railway, 10 L. R., 1r. 95, infra.

Loss of Market—Reasonable Time.—A consignment note signed by the party sending meat by a railway company contained a condition as to meat and other perishable articles, in which it was stated that the company would not be responsible "for any damage to any such articles on the ground of loss of market, provided the same was delivered within a reasonable time after the arrival thereof at the station from whence delivery was made:—Held, that the condition was unreasonable. Lord v. Midland Railway Company, 2 L. R., C. P. 339; 36 L. J., C. P. 170; 16 L. T. 576; 15 W. R. 405.

Insurance according to Value.—A condition that the company will not be responsible for injury to a case of marbles, unless the same are declared and insured according to their value, is not a just and reasonable condition. Peck v. North Staffordshire Railway Company, 10 H. L. Cas. 473; 32 L. J., Q. B. 241; 9 Jur., N. S. 914; 8 L. T. 768; 11 W. R. 1023.

Beyond Limit of Line.—Packages, called empties, were delivered to a railway company to be carried to a place beyond their line, the person to whom they were delivered signing on the consignor's behalf a printed note, containing the following conditions: 1. The company will not be answerable for the loss or detention of, or damage to, wrappers or packages of any description charged by the company as empties. 2. Nor in respect of goods destined for places beyond the limits of the company's railway; and as respects the company, their responsibility will cease when such goods shall have been delivered over to another carrier in the usual course for further conveyance. Any money which may be received by the company as payment for the conveyance of goods beyond their own limits will be so received only for the convenience of the consignors, and for the purpose of being paid to the other carrier. 3. The company will not be liable for any loss of or injury to articles, except on proof that such loss or injury was occasioned by the neglect or default of the company or its servants. The goods were carried duly to Gloucester, where the company's line ended, and were there handed over to the Midland Railway Company, in further prosecution of the transit; after which the detention and damage of which the consignor complained took place:—Held, that the second of these conditions discharged the company from liability in respect of the damage and detention complained of. Aldridge v. Great Western Railway Company, 15 C. B., N. S. 582; 33 L. J., C. P. 161.

ii. Alternative Rates.

Condition excluding all Liability.—A fish merchant delivered fish to a railway company to carry upon a signed contract relieving the company as to all fish delivered by him "from all liability for loss or damage by delay in transit or from whatever other cause arising," in consideration of the rates being one-fifth lower than where no such undertaking was granted; the contract to endure for five years. The servants of the company accepted the fish, although from pressure of business they could not carry it in time for the intended market, and the fish lost the market:—Held, that upon the facts the merchant had a bonâ fide option to send fish at a reasonable rate with liability on the company as common carriers, or at the lower rate upon the terms of the contract; that the contract was in point of fact just and reasonable within the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), s. 7, and covered the delay; and that the company were not liable for the loss. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company v. Brown, 8 App. Cas. 703; 32 W. R. 207—H. L. (E.). Reversing 10 Q. B. D. 250; 52 L. J., Q. B. 132; 48 L. T. 473; 31 W. R. 491; 47 J. P. 436—C. A., sub nom. Brown v. Manchester, &c.

At Lower Rate—Owner's Risk.—Goods contained in several packages were delivered to a railway company at Chester to be conveyed to Halifax, under a contract note which expressed that they were to be carried "at owner's risk." Several of the packages were delayed, through the negligence of the company, for an unreasonable time, and their contents were in consequence damaged:—Held, that the special terms of the contract did not absolve the company from responsibility for these consequences, notwithstanding that the goods were to be carried at a lower rate than the ordinary rate. D'Arc v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 9 L. R., C. P. 325; 30 L. T. 763; 22 W. R. 919.

Option — Amount of Higher Rate.—When a railway company charges alternative rates for conveyance of cattle or goods, the lower rate being at owner's risk, a priori the higher rate, if within the parliamentary limit, is not necessarily unreasonable or prohibitory. Foreman v. Great Western Railway Company, 38 L. T. 851.

It is a question for a jury whether the higher rate is unreasonable in the sense that it is so high as to be prohibitory; and the mere fact that the lower rate is so low that cattle dealers invariably avail themselves of it is not, standing alone, evidence that the higher rate is unreasonable or prohibitory. Id.

Where the servant of the sender of goods signed a consignment note on which there was a notice that the railway company charged alternative rates, lower or higher according as the goods were carried at owner's or at company's risk, and it was in evidence that the higher rate which was within the parliamentary limit was posted up in the office of the company; that if the sender had declined to send on the conditions contained in the consignment note at the lower rate a general consignment note would have been offered him for carriage of the goods at the higher rate; and that the consignment note signed on behalf of the sender had been in general use for a long time and had been adopted by the sender:—Held, that under the circumstances there was a sufficient offer of an option to render the contract contained in the consignment note reasonable within the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854. Id.

Reality of Option.—The plaintiff, under a contract in writing signed by his agent, delivered to a railway company certain cheeses to be carried from London to Shrewsbury at owner's risk. As the plaintiff knew, the company had two rates of carriage; a higher rate, when they took the ordinary liability of carriers, and a lower, when they were relieved of all liability, except that arising from the wilful misconduct of their servants. In using the words "owner's risk," the plaintiff intended that the cheeses should be carried at the lower rate, and subject to the conditions restricting the company's liability. The company's servants packed the cheeses in such a manner that during their transit upon the railway they were damaged, but the company's servants did not know that damage would result from the mode in which the cheeses were packed:—Held, that as the company carried at alternative rates, the condition excepting them from liability when carrying at the lower rate was just and reasonable; and that the injury to the cheeses had not arisen from the wilful misconduct of their servants. Lewis v. Great Western Railway Company, 3 Q. B. D. 195; 47 L. J., Q. B. 131; 37 L. T. 774; 26 W. R. 255—C. A.

Wilful Misconduct—Exception.—When a railway company agrees to carry, at a reduced rate (the contract being bona fide and not colourable), upon condition of being relieved from the ordinary liability for negligence, and to be responsible only for the consequences of the wilful misconduct of their servants, it will be for the plaintiff, in an action for injury to the goods carried, to prove more than culpable negligence. There must be evidence of actual wilful misconduct causing the injury. Great Western Railway Company v. Glenister, 29 L. T. 422; 22 W. R. 72.

— Evidence of.—A railway company contracted with the plaintiff to carry a van at a reduced rate, on the terms that the company should not be liable for damage or delay except such as was occasioned by wilful misconduct on the part of its servants. The van was to be delivered at a station outside the company's system and on the line of another company. A delay having been occasioned by the vans having been loaded on a truck which was too high to allow of its passing under the other company's gauge, although it passed under that of the company:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants to go to a jury, inasmuch as it was not proved that they knew that the truck was too high to carry the van under the other company's gauge. Webb v. Great Western Railway Company, 26 W. R. 111.

— Delivery to Wrong Person.—A railway company having carried goods from one of its stations to another, the station master at the place to which they were carried, without making inquiries of the consignor, after a delay of a week, delivered the goods to a person of a name very similar to that of the person named as consignee. The contract of carriage was at a reduced tariff conditioned to exclude all liability except for wilful misconduct:—Held, that the delivery of the goods amounted to wilful misconduct. Hoare v. Great Western Railway Company, 37 L. T. 186; 25 W. R. 63. And see Goldsmith v. Great Eastern Railway, 44 L. T. 181; 29 W. R. 651.

b. As to Animals.

i. Alternative Rates.

Non-liability for "Detention."—The plaintiff delivered cattle, carriage prepaid, to the defendant railway company for carriage on the terms of signed conditions, whereby, in consideration of an alternative reduced rate, it was agreed that the company were "not to be liable in respect of any loss or detention of or injury to the said animals, or any of them, in the receiving, forwarding or delivery thereof, except upon proof that such loss, detention or injury arose from the wilful misconduct of the company or its servants." The cattle were carried; but, on application made for them by the plaintiff, the defendants, in consequence of their clerk having negligently omitted to enter the cattle on the consignment note as "carriage paid," refused to deliver them, and alleged that the carriage was not paid. The cattle were kept exposed to the weather until the next day, when the mistake having then been ascertained, they were delivered. They were damaged by the exposure. In an action for damages by reason of wrongful detention and negligence:—Held, that the withholding of the cattle, under a groundless claim to retain them, at the end of the transit was not "detention" within the conditions, and the company were therefore liable. Gordon v. Great Western Railway Company, 8 Q. B. D. 44; 51 L. J., Q. B. 58; 45 L. T. 509; 30 W. R. 230; 46 J. P. 294.

A knew that there was a certain rate for carrying horses on a railway by a passenger train, and in horse-boxes, and that there was a lower rate for carrying them by goods train and in waggons. He sent his horses by goods train:—Held, that it was a reasonable condition of the contract for conveyance that the horses should be carried entirely at the owner's risk, and that such condition would protect the railway company if the horses were injured on the journey, but would not protect them from the consequences of delay where the contract was to deliver in a reasonable time. Robinson v. Great Western Railway

Injury occasioned by Restiveness.—In an action against a railway company, as carriers, for negligence, whereby a horse delivered to them by the plaintiff was injured at one of their stations, the defendants pleaded (1) that they received the horse under a special contract containing a condition that, in case of animals for which a contract note with two rates of carriage should be offered to the customer, the defendants would give him the alternative of carrying at either rate; that at the full rate, which would be charged when the contrary was not expressed, the defendants would undertake the ordinary duties of carriers, subject to the conditions in the said contract note and their statutory rights; but that at the reduced rate the defendants would carry at the owner's risk, exempt from all liability not occasioned by the wilful misconduct of their servants acting within the scope of their authority; and that the plaintiff elected to have his horse carried at the lower rate; and that the injuries were not caused by the wilful misconduct of the defendants' servants acting as aforesaid; (2) that another condition in the said contract was that the defendants should not be liable for injuries occasioned by the fear or restiveness of animals; and that the injuries complained of were solely occasioned by the restiveness of the horse. The plaintiff signed a contract note containing the above conditions:—Held, that the latter condition did not embrace cases in which the injury immediately flowed from the fear and restiveness of the animals directly occasioned by some act of negligence or want of care on the part of the defendants, but applied only to injury from fear or restiveness caused by the transit with its ordinary incidents, and without any negligence or default on the part of the company; and that, taken in this limited sense, the condition was not unreasonable. Moore v. Great Northern Railway, 10 L. R., Ir. 95.

Need not appear on Face of Contract Note.—Held, also, that it was unnecessary that the alternative rates should appear on the face of the contract, but that it was sufficient that the contract note referred to the defendants' tariff containing all the rates. Ib.

Claim to be made in Three Days—General Lien.—The contract note also contained a condition that no claim in respect of goods would be allowed unless made within three days after delivery; and a further condition that all goods were received subject to the company's general lien both for carriage thereof and all other charges against the customer:—Held, that "goods" in these conditions meant inanimate goods, not horses or cattle, and that the conditions were reasonable. Ib.

Power of Court to decide on Reasonableness.—But semble, that they did not properly come before the court for decision under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, which only deals with the receiving, forwarding or delivering of animals, goods and things, and these conditions related to something occurring after delivery. Ib.

Exemptions from Liability on Unloading.—

As an alternative to a carrier's contract which admittedly contained unreasonable conditions, the carriers offered to carry at certain reasonable rates, but subject to a condition "that they would not be accountable for the correct selection of the owners' cattle on landing, nor on loading into the waggon at L." (the termination of the sea journey), "nor on unloading at destination:"—Held, that this condition, upon its fair construction, would extend to exempt the carriers from responsibility for negligence or default on their own part in the selection of the cattle on landing, and was therefore unreasonable and unjust. McNally v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 8 L. R., Ir. 81.

Semble (per Lord O'Hagan, L. C., and Fitz-Gibbon, L. J.), that a carriers' contract in itself unreasonable may be validated by the offer of an alternative contract, which, though it limited the ordinary common-law liability of the carrier, would in itself constitute a just and reasonable contract, and if standing alone would satisfy the requirements of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act. Ib.

In considering whether conditions annexed to carriers' special contracts are just and reasonable, such conditions must be construed according to the ordinary meaning of their language, without implying any limitation or exception not expressed. Ib.

Through Traffic—Land and Sea Carriage—Burden of Proof.—In an action against a railway company, as carriers, for breach of an alleged contract in failing to carry pigs of the plaintiff from a station on their railway in Ireland to London within a reasonable time, the defendants, amongst other defences, pleaded that the pigs were received by them under a certain "reasonable" condition in that behalf, signed by the plaintiff, providing that, in consideration of carriage at a reduced rate, or charge below the ordinary rate, the defendant company should be free from all liability for injury or delay in the transit or conveyance of the pigs, unless occasioned by the intentional and wilful misconduct of the defendants' servants, and that the injury and delay complained of was not occasioned by such intentional or wilful misconduct. A verdict having been directed for the defendants, subject to leave reserved for the plaintiff to move to have the verdict changed into one for him for damages, contingently assessed, if the case should have been left to the jury upon any of the issues raised by the pleadings:—Held, that assuming this defence valid as a pleading, the burden of proving that the condition relied on was a reasonable one lay upon the defendants, that therefore the question whether an alternative higher price, at which, as the company alleged, they offered to carry upon the ordinary carriers' liability, was a reasonable alternative, should not have been withdrawn from the jury, and that, under the reservation, the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict. Ruddy v. Midland Great Western Railway Company, 8 L. R., Ir. 224.

Owner's Risk—Loading.—The defendants, a railway company, contracted to carry the plaintiffs' cattle from Dublin to certain towns in England. During the sea part of the journey some of the animals were injured and others killed, through alleged negligence in securing and stowing them. In an action for the loss of the cattle, the defendants pleaded that the ordinary rate charged by them for the carriage of the cattle to the places to which the plaintiffs' cattle were booked was a reasonable rate, and that at such rate they undertook the carriage of cattle to those places, without, as regarded the sea portion of their journey, any limitation to their liability so far as imposed by law, and, as regarded the land portion, without any unjust or unreasonable conditions; of which the plaintiffs had notice when delivering their cattle for carriage; and that the plaintiffs elected and contracted to have their cattle carried at a certain reduced rate, upon a special contract that the same should be conveyed at the owner's sole risk in connexion with the sea part of the transit. The plaintiffs, by their reply alleged that the alternative contract of carriage at ordinary rates offered by the defendants was not, as regarded the land portion of the carriage, without any unjust or unreasonable conditions imposed, but was subject to a condition "that, where the charge of conveyance is per waggon, as the owner or his servant is required to superintend the loading of the stock, and is allowed to place as many animals in such waggon as he considers may be conveyed with safety, the company will not be responsible for loss arising in any way from overcrowding of such waggons, or for injuries done in the loading or unloading thereof, or in consequence of one animal injuring another."—Held, on demurrer to the replication, that both the condition respecting the sea part of the transit to which the special contract was subject, and the condition alleged in the replication to have been annexed to the alternative contract of carriage offered, were unjust and unreasonable, and that, therefore, the demurrer should be overruled. Corrigan v. Great Northern and Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Companies, 6 L. R., 1r. 90.

Special Contract supported by Reasonable Alternative.—Query, whether the principle that in such a case the special contract may be supported by the option of a just and reasonable alternative contract, applies where the alternative offered is subject to conditions limiting the common-law liability of the carrier. Ib.

— Lower Rate—"Negligence only."—When a railway company entered into a special contract by which they agreed to carry cattle at a lower rate, on condition that they should be liable for negligence only:—Held, that this was not an unreasonable condition within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7. Harris v. Midland Railway Company, 25 W. R. 63.

Held, also, that the condition took the company out of the category of common carriers, and that accordingly, in an action against the company for damage to the cattle during the journey, the onus of proving negligence was on the plaintiff. Ib.

A railway company contracted to carry goods "through," partly by railway and partly by sea, and to an action for loss and injury to the goods pleaded a special condition exempting them from liability in respect of the negligence of the captain and crew of a steamer (the property of and worked by a steam-packet company, who had made arrangements with the railway company for through booking) which was lost through the negligence either of the captain or the crew:—Held, that (through the operation of the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 16, and the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 78, s. 12) the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, applied, and that the condition, being unreasonable, was null and void. Moore v. Midland Railway Company, 9 Ir. R., C. L. 20.

Unreasonable Contract mended by Alternative Claim.—A railway company may, by a special contract signed as required by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, s. 9, limit their liability for their own neglect or default, and this limitation is subject to but one restriction—that it be adjudged to be just and reasonable. Gallagher v. Great Western Railway Company, 8 Ir. R., C. L. 326.

The principle deducible from the authorities is, that a contract of this nature, prima facie unjust and unreasonable, becomes just and reasonable if an alternative is left to the party forwarding or delivering the goods to enter into a contract which is just and reasonable. Ib.

A railway company had two rates for the carriage of goods—one, the ordinary or higher rate, when it undertook the ordinary liability of the carrier; the other a reduced rate, when the sender relieved the company of all liability for loss, or damage or delay, except upon proof that such loss, or damage, or delay arose from wilful misconduct on the part of its servants:—Held, the higher rate not being shewn to be prohibitive or excessive, that the alternative afforded to the public was just and reasonable; and, therefore, that a contract founded upon the latter branch of it was valid. Ib.

A railway company introduced into a special contract for the conveyance of horses at a low rate, a condition exempting themselves from all liability in respect of the horses, whether in the loading or unloading, or in transit and conveyance, or whilst in the company's vehicles or on their premises:—Held, that the condition was in itself unjust and unreasonable. Lloyd v. Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, 15 Ir. C. L. R. 37; 9 L. T. 89.

Held, also, that it could not be aided by an alternative condition, whereby the company offered to "undertake the risk of conveyance only in consideration of an additional payment of twenty per cent. on the low rate of charge, but refused to entertain any claim for damage sustained by any animal conveyed at such additional rate, unless the injury was stated and pointed out to the company's agent at the time of unloading," that condition also not being in itself just or reasonable. Ib.

"Any Injury."—A condition whereby a railway company stipulates to be free from any injury, however caused, to cattle carried by them, in consequence of over carriage, detention, or delay, is unreasonable, although the rate for carriage charged is reduced below the sum ordinarily demanded. Allday v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 B. & S. 903; 34 L. J., Q. B. 5; 11 Jur., N. S. 12; 11 L. T. 267; 13 W. R. 43.

If cattle become out of condition during the journey, through the default of the company, they are injured, within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7. Ib.

A railway company received certain cattle to be carried for A. to B. station. The master induced him to sign a ticket containing certain special conditions, that the company was not to be answerable for "any consequences arising from over carriage, detention, or delay in, or in relation to, the conveying or delivering of the said animals, however caused." The cattle were sent to a station which was more distant than the B. station, and where they remained for some hours until they were found by A. In consequence of the delay, and from want of food and water, the cattle were injured. There was no consideration for the special contract by charging A. a smaller rate of charge, or anything of the kind:—Held, that the cattle were injured within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, and also that the condition in the ticket was unreasonable within the meaning of that section. Id.

ii. In other Cases.

Where no Contract or complete Delivery.]—A railway company is entitled to the protection against responsibility for the carriage of animals given by the second proviso in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, although no complete contract for carriage of the animal has been entered into, and no complete delivery of it has taken place; it is enough if the animal was in the course of being delivered to or received by the company. Hodgman v. West Midland Railway Company, 5 B. & S. 173; 33 L. J., Q. B. 233; 10 Jur., N. S. 673; 10 L. T. 609; 12 W. R. 1054. Affirmed on appeal, 35 L. J., Q. B. 85; 13 W. R. 758—Ex. Ch.

A railway company has no right to compel the owner of an animal to insure it, and mere statements of value not intended to bind the company do not entitle the company to refuse to receive it. Id.

Declaration of Value.]—A statement of the value of an article sent by a railway company, to be within the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, must be a declaration of value made by the sender, with the intention that it shall be so understood, and for the purpose of insurance. Robinson v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 19 C. B., N. S. 51; 34 L. J., C. P. 234; 11 Jur., N. S. 390; 13 W. R. 660.

No Written Contract.]—The plaintiff's ram, delivered to the defendants to be carried upon their railway, was injured through the negligence of their servants. No written contract was entered into, nor any declaration of its value made on its delivery to the defendants:—Held, in an action to recover the value of the ram, that although no written contract had been made, the liability of the defendants was limited to the amount specified in the second proviso of s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act. Hill v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 42 L. T. 513.

Sufficiency of Conveyance.]—A party sent cattle, under the care of a drover, to be carried by a railway. At the time of receiving the cattle the drover signed a note presented to him by the company, containing the following stipulation:—"The company is to be held free from all risk or responsibility in respect of any loss or damage arising in the loading or unloading, from suffocation, or from being trampled on, bruised or otherwise injured in transit, from fire, or from any other cause whatsoever. The company is not to be held responsible for carriage or delivery within any certain or definite time, nor in time for any particular market." The company gave the drover a free pass to travel with the train. The cattle were not put into the trucks used for the carriage of cattle, but into two vans used for the carriage of goods, which were entirely closed on every side, and could only be opened by a sort of lid or slide. The drover saw all this, and did not complain, and the train started with the cattle in these vans, and the drover in a railway carriage. On arriving at the end of the journey it was found that the lid of one of the vans had from some unascertained cause been closed, and on opening it some of the cattle were found suffocated, and others much injured. Those in the other van where the lid remained open arrived safe:—Held, that the stipulation was a just and reasonable condition. Pardington v. South Wales Railway Company, 1 H. & N. 392; 26 L. J., C. P. 105; 2 Jur., N. S. 1210.

Conditions annexed by a railway company to their cattle tickets, that the company is to be free from all risk and responsibility with respect to any loss or damage arising in the loading or unloading or injury in the transit from any cause whatever, it being agreed that the animals are to be carried at the owner's risk, and that the owner of the cattle is to see to the efficiency of the waggon before his stock is placed therein, complaint to be made in writing to the company's officer before the waggon leaves the station, are neither just nor reasonable. Gregory v. West Midland Railway Company, 2 H. & C. 944; 33 L. J., Ex. 155; 10 Jur., N. S. 243; 12 W. R. 528.

Negligence of Consignee.]—A horse was sent by railway, directed to the owner at Eton. The sender signed a document in the following terms:—"Mr. Wise paid for one horse 12s. 6d., Newbury to Windsor. Notice. The directors will not be answerable for damage to any horses conveyed by this railway." The horse arrived safe at the Windsor station, but the owner not appearing to claim it, it was forgotten and left tied up in a horse-box in an exposed situation for twenty-four hours, and was injured by such neglect:—Held, that the railway company was not responsible (by reason of the signed contract) for the injury done to the horse. Wise v. Great Western Railway Company, 1 H. & N. 63; 25 L. J., Ex. 258.

Semble, independently of such contract, the company would not have been responsible, the injury having been the result of the owner not being ready to receive the horse on its arrival at Windsor. Id.

Horses—Owner's Risk.]—A stipulation, that horses should be carried by a railway company, at the owner's risk, is not unreasonable or void. M'Cance v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 7 H. & N. 477; 31 L. J., Ex. 65; 7 Jur., N. S. 1304; 10 W. R. 154. Affirmed, infra, S. P., Gannell v. Ford, 5 L. T. 604; Harrison v. London and Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 2 B. & S. 122; 31 L. J., Q. B. 113; 8 Jur., N. S. 740—Ex. Ch.

M. delivered to a railway company some horses to be carried on their railway, and at their request signed a declaration that the value of the horses did not exceed 10l. per horse, and that, in consideration of the rate charged for their conveyance, he thereby agreed that the same were to be carried entirely at the owner's risk. In the course of the journey the horses were injured in consequence of the defective state of the truck in which they were carried. In an action against the railway company they paid 25*l.* into court. The horses were, in fact, worth more than 10*l.* each; and if taken at their real value, 40*l.* was the measure of the owner's damage; if at 10*l.* each, the 25*l.* covered his claim:—Held, that the declaration of the value of the horses was no part of the contract, but a statement which formed the basis of the intended contract, and by which it was to be regulated and governed, and therefore it was not competent to the owner of the horses to deny the truth of the statement, and prove that the real value of the horses exceeded 10*l.* each. M'Canee v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 3 H. & C. 343; 34 L. J., Ex. 39; 10 Jur., N. S. 1058; 11 L. T. 426; 12 W. R. 1086—Ex. Ch.

A condition that a railway company will not be liable "in any case" for loss or damage to a horse or dog above certain specified values delivered to them for carriage unless the value is declared, is not just and reasonable within s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, as it is in its terms unconditional, and would, if valid, protect the company, even in case of the negligence or wilful misconduct of their servants. Ashenden v. London and Brighton Railway Company, 5 Ex. D. 190; 42 L. T. 586; 28 W. R. 511; 44 J. P. 203.

Dogs—Restiveness.—A party delivered to a railway company a dog to be carried, subject to the following conditions, printed on a ticket and signed by him:—"The company will not be liable in any case for loss or damage to any horse or other animal above the value of 40*l.*, or any dog above the value of 5*l.*, unless a declaration of its value, signed by the owner or his agent at the time of booking the same, has been given to them; and by such declaration the owner shall be bound, the company not being in any event liable to any greater amount than the value so declared. The company will in no case be liable for injury to any horse or other animal or dog, of whatever value, when such injury arises wholly or partially from fear or restiveness. If the declared value of any horse or other animal exceed 40*l.*, or any dog 5*l.*, the price of conveyance will, in addition to the regular fare, be after the rate of 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent., or 6*d.* in the pound, upon the declared value above 40*l.*, whatever may be the amount of such value, and for whatever distance the horse or other animal is to be carried." The plaintiff made no declaration of the value of the dog, which was estimated at 21*l.*, and paid only the ordinary fare, 3*s.*, for its carriage. During the journey the dog (by no neglect or default of the company) escaped from the train, and was lost:—Held, that 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, has application solely to cases where loss or injury is occasioned by the neglect or default of the company; and that the loss of the dog being attributable to pure accident only, the company was exempt from liability by the terms of their contract. Harrison v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 2 B. & S. 122; 31 L. J., Q. B. 113; 8 Jur., N. S. 740; 6 L. T. 466—Ex. Ch.

Held, also, that the condition was just and reasonable, and was not to be construed as exempting the company from liability in respect of any loss or damage occasioned by their wilful neglect or misconduct. Ib.

Duties of Judge and Jury as to Valuing.—

A judge is incompetent to pronounce as to the reasonableness of the percentage charged upon the declared value of any animal, extra the sum to which by the conditions the liability of the company is limited, such being the office of a jury. Ib.

By Sea and Land—Condition as to Vessels.—

Sect. 16 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, incorporates the whole of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, and extends its provisions to all classes of traffic carried partly by railway and partly by steam vessels, even where the railway company contracting for the conveyance of the traffic has no parliamentary powers to work steam vessels; and the Regulation of Railways Act, 1871, s. 12, extends the whole of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, to all cases where railway companies procure traffic to be carried in a steam vessel belonging to them. Doolan v. Midland Railway Company, 2 App. Cas. 792; 37 L. T. 317; 25 W. R. 882.

An English railway company, having no special powers to work steam vessels, contracted at their office in Dublin to convey cattle by sea to Liverpool, and thence by railway to St. Ives. The cattle were lost on the passage to Liverpool through the negligence of the crew of the steam vessel, with the owners of which the railway company had a through booking arrangement for the conveyance of their traffic. The contract was made subject to a written condition exempting the railway company from liability for "loss of, or any damage or injury to, animals, goods, or property intrusted to them, arising from the dangers or accidents of the sea, or of steam navigation, the act of God, the Queen's enemies, jettison, barratry, collision, improper, careless or unskilful navigation, accidents connected with machinery or boilers, or any default or negligence of the master or any of the officers or crews of the company's vessels":—Held, that the contract was governed by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, s. 7; that its conditions were unreasonable; and that the railway company was liable for the loss of the cattle. Ib.

Held, also, that the words "master and crew of the company's vessels," in this condition applied to all such vessels as the company should employ, and not merely vessels owned by the company itself, and that the condition was unreasonable and void. Judgment of Ir. Ex. Ch., 10 Ir. R., C. L. 47, reversed.

Owner's Risk—Free Pass to Drivers.—

A condition, in a special contract by a railway company for the carriage of cattle, that the owner shall undertake all risks of loading, unloading, and damage, whether arising from the negligence or default of the company or of their servants or from defect or imperfection in the station, platform, or place of loading and unloading, or the carriage in which they may have been conveyed, or from other cause whatsoever, is unreasonable; and it does not cease to be so because, by another condition, the company undertakes to grant free passes to persons having the care of live stock, as an inducement to owners to send proper persons with and to take care of them. Routh v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 2 L. R., Ex. 173; 36 L. J., Ex. 83; 15 L. T. 624; 15 W. R. 695.

Such conditions do not relieve the company from their common-law duty to keep their station in a safe and proper condition, and to deliver the cattle in a fit and proper place. Ib.

Part vitiating Whole—Agent's Authority.]

—A set of conditions in a consignment note is unreasonable and void, if any part of it is unreasonable. Kirby v. Great Western Railway Company, 18 L. T. 658.

A condition not to be liable for delay, however caused, is unreasonable. Ib.

Where an agent, who is employed to deliver cattle to be sent by a railway company, signs the consignment note, he must be taken to have known the contents, and to bind his principal. Ib.

An agent for a railway company, who is employed to obtain custom for them, does not bind them by his representations as to the railway accommodation. Ib.

Beyond Limit of Line—Special Condition—

Extent of Protection—Negligence in Discharging.]—The Great Northern Railway Company and the Manchester Railway Company agreed that a complete and full system of interchange of traffic should be established from all parts of one company and beyond its limits, to all parts of the other company and beyond its limits, with through tickets, through rates and invoices, and interchange of stock at junctions, the stock of the two companies being treated as one stock. The agreement provided for the division of the traffic. The plaintiff, wishing to send a cow from D. to S., went to the station of the Great Northern Railway Company at D. and booked her for S. by the Manchester line. He signed a contract, by which it was agreed that the cow was to be conveyed upon certain conditions, one of which was as follows:—"The Great Northern Railway Company give notice that they convey horses, cattle, sheep, pigs and other live stock in waggons, subject to the following condition: That they will not be responsible for any loss or injury to any horse, cattle, sheep, or other animal, in the receiving, forwarding, or delivering, if such damage be occasioned by the kicking, plunging or restiveness of the animal." The cow was put into a truck belonging to the Manchester Railway Company, and was conveyed to S., where their servant, who was in charge of the yard or loading-place, let her out of the truck, although he was cautioned by the plaintiff not to do so at that time. The cow rushed out of the truck, and after running about the yard, got upon the line and was killed:—Held, that the Great Northern Railway Company was the agent of the Manchester Railway Company to make the contract for the carriage of the cow, and that as the Manchester Railway was not protected by the condition above set out, an action was maintainable against them. Gill v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 8 L. R., Q. B. 186; 42 L. J., Q. B. 89; 28 L. T. 587; 21 W. R. 525.

Held, also, that the accident to the cow was attributable to the fact that the porter let her out of the truck without waiting a reasonable time, as he might have done, and that the Manchester Railway Company was therefore liable to the plaintiff for the value of the cow. Ib. See also cases, supra, III. 4.

4. UNDUE PREFERENCE.

a. In Respect of Goods, &c.

17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 2.]—The power given to the Common Law Courts by that statute is vested in the Railway Commissioners by 36 & 37 Vict. c. 48 (The Regulation of Railways Act, 1873), renewed by subsequent acts.

Effect of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 2.]—This statute does not abolish or abridge the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery or of the Attorney-General. Att.-Gen. v. Great Northern Railway Company, 1 Drew. & S. 164.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, was designed to afford a remedy against an undue preference or undue prejudice to a particular individual or class in respect of the traffic on the railway or canal, and was not intended to apply to the case of a breach or neglect by the company of a public duty, which was already susceptible of redress by mandamus or by indictment. Bennett v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 6 C. B., N. S. 707.

The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company were the proprietors of the Grimsby Old Dock and also of another dock, called the Grimsby New Dock, communicating with their railway. By act of parliament the company was authorized and required to maintain the old dock and the approach thereto of a given depth:—Held, that the failure to perform this duty, so that the dock and its approach became silted up and the depth of water therein insufficient for vessels to get to the wharfs adjoining, was not the subject of redress under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, although it was suggested that the object of the company was to discourage the traffic to the old dock and to divert it to the new one. Ib.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, which gives power to courts of common law to grant the preventive remedy, does not, by giving a concurrent jurisdiction, abridge the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. Bazendale v. West Midland Railway Company, 3 Giff. 650. Affirmed on appeal, 7 L. T. 297.

What is—Facilities for Storing Coal.]—A railway company, having land adjoining one of their stations, let the whole of it to P., a coal merchant, for the purpose of storing coal brought by their line. P. did not require or actually use the whole of the land for this purpose. W., another coal merchant, applied to the company to provide him on similar terms with land for storing coal, or to let to him the part of the land not actually used by P. The company refused to do so. W. applied to the court for an order compelling the company to desist from allowing P. to store coals on the land, or to give similar facilities to him:—Held, by Bovill, C. J., and Keating, J., that a means of storing coals at the station to which it is sent being a necessary facility for the proper carrying on of the coal trade, the company had no right to grant greater facilities to P. than to W., and that they ought to be restrained from doing so; but, by Smith and Brett, JJ., that the Railway and Canal Traffic Act only relates to facilities in the receiving, forwarding and delivering traffic, and that the court had no jurisdiction to interfere with matters not relating to these, and that facilities for storing coal after it had been delivered to the consignee do not relate to the receiving, forwarding or delivering of traffic, and are not therefore under the control of the court. West v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 5 L. R., C. P. 622; 39 L. J., C. P. 282; 23 L. T. 371; 18 W. R. 1028.

Of their own Traffic.]—A railway company, with a view to compete with other carriers in the collection and carriage of goods, established receiving-offices in various parts of London, from which goods were brought in vans to the railway station. The gates of the station were closed against the vans of the complainant and other carriers at 6.30 P.M., but the company's own vans were admitted at a much later hour, and the goods brought by them were forwarded by the same night's trains:—Held, that this was giving an undue and unreasonable preference to the company's own traffic, to the prejudice of the complainant, and a rule for an injunction was made absolute with costs. Palmer and London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, In re, 6 L. R., C. P. 194; 40 L. J., C. P. 133; 24 L. T. 135; 19 W. R. 627.

A railway company formerly charged a uniform rate of 3s. 6d. per ton on all goods conveyed on their line between B. & P. The goods were collected and delivered both by the company and B. at a charge of 4s. 10d. per ton. The company, who had power under their acts to impose their own rates of charge for carrying, but no power to impose tolls for collecting and delivering, raised the charge for carrying to 8s. 4d., being the aggregate of the above two charges, with an intimation to the public that they would collect and deliver goods free from all charge. The real purpose of this arrangement was to compel persons delivering to have their goods conveyed by the railway, to employ the company to collect and deliver such goods, and thus to secure this business, and the profits upon it, to the company, as well as to exclude B. from competing with them in this department of business:—Held, that this arrangement was an undue preference to the company in their separate capacity of carriers, other than on the line of railway; and also an undue prejudice to B. Barndale v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 C. B., N. S. 336; 28 L. J., C. P. 81; 4 Jur., N. S. 1279.

A railway company had been in the habit of carrying goods between the termini of their line, according to a tariff of rates, from which they made deductions to persons who brought or took away their goods to or from the termini up to a certain day, when they put a stop to these deductions, with a view to exclude other carriers from competing with them as carriers:—Held, an undue prejudice to all such customers as did not desire to have their goods collected and delivered for them. Garton v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 C. B., N. S. 669; 28 L. J., C. P. 158; 5 Jur., N. S. 685.

—As regards Time.]—A railway company fixed as a limit for receiving parcels to be forwarded the same night the hour of 6.30 P.M., but after that time, their own waggons, which had been delayed in reaching the station, or in which the goods had been previously sorted and were ready for transmission. A carrier forwarding goods by the railway having applied for an injunction to restrain the company from giving undue preference to themselves:—Held, by Erle, C. J., and Smith, J., that an injunction ought not to issue; by Willes and Keating, JJ., that it ought. Palmer v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., C. P. 588; 35 L. J., C. P. 289; 12 Jur., N. S. 926; 15 L. T. 159; 15 W. R. 11.

Of their own Agent.]—Where a railway company employed an agent to receive goods arriving at the Cirencester station and deliver them to the consignees in the town, and refused to deliver at the station to carriers who had general written orders from persons in the town authorizing delivery of goods arriving for them, but required written orders specifying the goods, the court held that there was an undue preference of the company's agent, and enjoined the company to act on the general orders. Parkinson v. Great Western Railway Company, 6 L. R., C. P. 554; 40 L. J., C. P. 222; 24 L. T. 830; 19 W. R. 1063.

A railway company permitted a carrier (who also acted as superintendent of their goods traffic) to hold himself out as their agent for the receipt of goods to be carried on their line, and his office as the receiving-office of the company; and goods were received by him at that place without requiring the senders to sign conditions which the company required all other carriers who brought goods to their stations to sign:—Held, an undue preference. Barndale and Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, In re, 11 C. B., N. S. 787.

A company, possessed of line from B. to C., advertised to convey goods from A. to C. (in conjunction with another company) at the rate of 50s. per ton, provided they were consigned to their own agents at those respective places; but if consigned through any one else, they charged 2s. 6d. per ton more:—Held, ground for an injunction. Barndale v. North Devon Railway Company, 3 C. B., N. S. 324.

Equal Charges—Competing Traffic.]—Sect. 90 of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20 (Railways Clauses Act, 1845), requires equality of tolls for similar services rendered by railway companies to all persons; and s. 2 of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31 (Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854), forbids the giving of any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person or company. A charge made by a railway against A. for services rendered by that company to him must not, therefore, be greater than the charge made by the same company against B. for rendering him services of the like nature. London and North-Western Railway Company v. Evershed, 3 App. Cas. 1029; 48 L. J., Q. B. 22; 39 L. T. 306.

E. was a brewer at the town of Burton, where three railways had their stations. With one of these railways (Midland), certain brewers in the town had direct communication by sidings, which enabled goods to be sent to the trains, and taken from the trains of the Midland with greater ease and less loss of time than by the way of ordinary cartage. The Midland charged them nothing for cartage, and made a rebate in the charge for station to station conveyance.

These brewers had no such communications with the North-Western, but it was often convenient for them to send by that railway; and the directors of that railway, in order to compete with the Midland, allowed these particular brewers the same advantages as to cartage and rebate as the Midland did. As to all others in the same trade (E. among the rest), the directors of the North-Western made the ordinary charge for cartage, and allowed no rebate on the charge for conveyance on the line:—Held, that this was an inequality and an undue preference within the meaning of the statutes. Id. Affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal, 3 Q. B. D. 134; 47 L. J., Q. B. 284; 37 L. T. 623; 26 W. R. 863.

Where E., one of the persons thus paying the higher rate, had for some time paid it in ignorance of the facts, but afterwards, on finding that he was subjected to this higher charge, paid it under protest:—Held, that he was entitled to recover back, in an action for money had and received, the difference he had so paid under protest. Id.

Small Parcels, same Consignee.]—A railway company was authorized by act of parliament to carry and convey all such passengers, goods, merchandize, &c., as should be offered to them for that purpose, and to make such reasonable charges for such carriage and conveyance as they might from time to time determine on. The company was to fix the sums to be charged in respect of small parcels, not exceeding 500 lbs. weight each. By another act they were empowered to carry passengers and goods on other railways, and to make such reasonable charges for such carriage as they should determine on. And by another act the charges by the former acts authorized to be made for the carriage of passengers or goods should be at all times charged equally, and after the same rate in respect of all passengers, goods, &c., conveyed or propelled by a like carriage or engine, passing on the same portion of the line, and under the same circumstances. The company published a list of rates for the carriage of merchandize, divided into seven classes, of which the lowest was 16s. and the highest 60s. per ton; and for boxes, bales, hampers, or other packages, when they contained parcels or other packages or things under 112 lbs. weight each, directed, consigned, or intended for different persons, or for more than one person, they imposed a charge of 1d. per lb. weight:—Held, that this last was not a reasonable charge in the case of a package above 500 lbs. weight made up by a carrier and directed to one person, although containing a number of parcels under 112 lbs. weight each, consigned or directed to different persons. Pickford v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 10 M. & W. 399; 3 Railw. Cas. 193; S. P., Edwards v. Great Western Railway Company, 11 C. B. 588; 21 L. J., C. P. 72.

A railway company cannot legally charge a greater sum for the carriage of a package containing several parcels belonging to different persons than for a package containing several parcels all belonging to one person. Crouch v. Great Northern Railway Company, 11 Ex. 742; 25 L. J., Ex. 137.

A railway company refusing to carry, at the ordinary rate, packed parcels tendered by a carrier, whereby he is obliged to send them by a more circuitous route and at a greater expense, is not entitled to recover damages for an alleged loss of business. Id.

A railway company was entitled to charge for goods carried on their line at rates not exceeding certain rates per ton. They were permitted to charge a higher rate for small parcels not exceeding 500 lbs. weight, provided that articles sent in large aggregate quantities, although made up of separate parcels, such as bags of sugar, coffee, meal, and the like, should not be deemed small parcels, but such terms should apply only to single parcels in separate packages. A carrier sent to the company at once many packages, all consigned to one consignee, each less than 500 lbs., of articles of similar classes, but not being separate packages of one article. The company charged for these as separate parcels:—Held, that the company was justified in so doing; the proviso applying only to articles that were of such a nature that a large quantity was generally made up in separate packages. Parker v. Great Western Railway Company, 6 El. & Bl. 77; 25 L. J., Q. B. 209; 2 Jur., N. S. 325.

The carrier also sent a parcel of coffee less than 500 lbs. weight, and afterwards, on the same day, another parcel of coffee, both consigned to himself, and for the same train. When the first was left, notice was given that he probably would send more; but it was not received on any special terms. The company charged for these as separate parcels:—Held, that the company was justified in so doing. Id.

— Where no additional Risk.]—A railway company was empowered to fix the sum to be charged by them in respect of the carriage of small parcels (not exceeding 100 lbs. each) as to them should seem proper, but that provision was not to extend to articles, matters, or things sent in large aggregate quantities, although made up of separate and distinct parcels, such as bags of sugar, coffee, meal, and the like, but only to single parcels, unconnected with parcels of a like nature which might be sent upon the railway at the same time. By a subsequent act it was provided, that the charges by that act authorized to be made for the carriage of goods by the company should be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate, in respect of all goods of a like description and conveyed on the same portion of the line; and that no reduction or advance should be made, either directly or indirectly, in favour of or against any particular company or person:—Held, that the company was restricted to a reasonable charge, and was not justified in making an increased charge in respect of the conveyance of packed parcels, the jury having negatived that they incurred any additional risk or expense in the carriage. Piddington v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 5 C. B., N. S. 111; 27 L. J., C. P. 295; 4 Jur., N. S. 953.

A railway company was empowered to charge certain tonnage rates or tolls for all articles, matters, and things carried or conveyed along the line, and to provide locomotive or other power for the carriage and conveyance of passengers, cattle, goods, &c., and to make reasonable charges for such carriage and conveyance, in addition to the tonnage rates. The company might, from time to time, make such orders for fixing, and by such orders fix the sum to be charged by them in respect of small parcels, not exceeding 1 cwt. each, as to them should seem proper. And the aforesaid rates and tolls should, at all times, be charged equally, and after the same rate per ton, throughout the whole of the railway in respect of the same description of articles, matters, or things, and no reduction or advance in the rates and tolls should, either directly or indirectly, be made partially, or in favour of or against any particular person or company. The company framed a scale of charges for the carriage of parcels not exceeding 1 cwt. each with charges higher than the tonnage rates, but which included a reasonable charge for the use of their carriages and locomotive power. Under this scale, where a number of separate parcels (each weighing less than 1 cwt., but exceeding 1 cwt. if taken in the aggregate) was brought to the railway by the same person, and containing the same article, and all directed to the same person at their place of destination, the company charged tonnage or lower rate; but, if similar parcels were brought addressed to several different persons, they were charged the higher or parcels rate:—Held, that there was nothing to induce the court (or which ought to induce a jury) to infer that the charges so made were unreasonable, regard being had to the additional trouble incurred by the company. Barendale v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 63; 27 L. J., C. P. 137.

—Evidence of Knowledge of Company—Former Procedure.—S., whose trade was to pack parcels and forward them by railway in a single package, under protest, paid to the company a sum in excess of what they charged certain wholesale houses for carrying parcels containing enclosures of their customers, and sued to recover the excess; and at the trial adduced evidence (which was excepted to), upon which the judge told the jury they were at liberty to find that parcels had been carried by the company for other persons, viz., the wholesale houses, containing goods of a like description, and under like circumstances, at a less rate than such goods were carried by them for S., and that the company knowingly and purposely charged S. more than other persons. S. obtained a verdict and judgment, and in the Exchequer Chamber the exceptions were overruled and judgment affirmed. The company continuing the same charges, S. issued a fresh writ of summons, indorsed with a claim for an injunction, and applied, upon affidavits stating facts substantially similar to the evidence adduced on the trial, for an injunction to restrain the company from charging him for the carriage of his goods otherwise than equally with all other persons, and after the same rate in respect of goods of the like description, under the like circumstances:—Held, that this was not a case in which the court could enjoin under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 79, 82. Sutton v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 1 L. R., Ex. 33; 35 L. J., Ex. 38; 4 H. & C. 325. See S. C., in H. L., 4 L. R., H. L. 226; 38 L. J., Ex. 177; 18 W. R. 92.

—Sending Goods with Notice of Terms.—A railway company, who carried certain bulky commodities at a certain rate per ton, gave notice to the defendant that they would only carry such commodities on certain terms, that is, at a certain minimum rate per truck (capable of carrying three tons), whether filled or not, the rate per ton being far less than the ordinary rate. The defendant, although objecting to these terms, yet without any departure by the company therefrom, continued to send such commodities, sometimes in quantities of less than three tons, and claimed to be charged at the minimum rate per ton for the quantities actually carried:—Held, that he was not entitled to claim to be so charged, and was bound to pay at the rate charged per truck; that there was nothing unreasonable therein, and that even if there were the remedy was under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31. Great Western Railway Company v. Toornier, 11 W. R. 464.

—Where no Collection or Delivery—Recovery of Overcharge.—A railway company cannot, in addition to the charges for the carriage of goods between the place where the goods are handed to them and the place where they are ordered to be delivered, charge for collection and delivery, where they have not, in fact, collected or delivered the goods. Such charges, if imposed, and paid under protest, may be recovered back. Garton v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 1 B. & S. 112; 30 L. J., Q. B. 273; 7 Jur., N. S. 1234; 9 W. R. 734.

A railway company was empowered to charge for the carriage of parcels. By a subsequent act, amending the former act, the company was authorized to charge at so much per ton per mile:—Held, that this provision overrode the provisions of the former act, so far as concerned parcels exceeding 500 lbs. in weight, but not as to parcels below that weight. Ib.

The company obliged parties to pay more than the maximum amount allowed by the latter act:—Held, that the excess paid on all parcels exceeding 500 lbs. in weight might be recovered back by such parties. Ib.

A railway company, being common carriers from B. to E., and also from B. to B., charged the plaintiffs, who employed them to carry goods between those places, higher rates than were charged to other persons:—Held, that the sums paid in excess of the sums charged to other people could not be recovered by the plaintiffs on the ground simply that the charges made by the company were unequal. Ib.

The company sometimes intentionally and sometimes by mistake charged the plaintiff heavier rates than were set out in the bills published by them:—Held, that he could recover the excess paid. Ib. And see preceding case in H. L.

—Charge for Collection—Receipt at Station.—

A railway company was entitled to charge for goods which they might carry along their line such sum as they should think expedient, not exceeding the sum limited by former acts, and it was provided that in whatever way the charges were made they should be made equally to all persons; and that it should be lawful for the company to enter into such arrangements as they should think fit with reference to the collection and delivery of goods, and upon such terms as the company and such parties respectively might be willing to accept and abide by. By a subsequent act the company might demand for the carriage of small parcels, i.e. parcels not exceeding 500 lbs. weight each, any sum which they might think fit. A railway company, having been in the habit of allowing a rebate in their charge for the conveyance of goods along their line, when the goods were brought to, or received at, their stations, issued a notice, that for parcels under 500 lbs. weight they would no longer make the usual allowance, and they then charged the through rates if the goods had been collected and delivered by themselves:—Held, that the company was not entitled to charge parties who brought their goods to, and received them at, the different stations, the same rate that was charged to others not so bringing and receiving their goods. Barendale v. Great Western Railway Company, 14 C. B., N. S. 1; 32 L. J., C. P. 225; 9 Jur., N. S. 1174; 8 L. T. 833. Affirmed on appeal, 16 C. B., N. S. 137; 33 L. J., C. P. 197; 10 Jur., N. S. 496; 9 L. T. 814; 12 W. R. 602—Ex. Ch.

A railway company has no right to impose a charge for the conveyance of goods to or from their station where the customer does not require such service to be performed by them. Garton v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 6 C. B., N. S. 639; 28 L. J., C. P. 306; 5 Jur., N. S. 1313.

The general rate of charge for the carriage of goods from Bristol to Bridgewater, and vice versa, was 6s. 8d. per ton for first class; 8s. 4d. for second class; 12s. 6d. per ton for third class; and 16s. 8d. per ton for fourth class goods. The company had special contracts with certain grocers and ironmongers at Bridgewater, under which they agreed to carry all their grocery and ironmongery goods at a uniform rate of 6s. per ton, including delivery:—Held, an undue preference, it not appearing that this diminished charge was justified by any special circumstances of advantage to the company, or to meet competition for another railway or any other mode of carriage. Id.

A railway company was required to carry, as common carriers for hire, and to afford to all persons conveying or sending goods upon their railway every reasonable convenience and facility for loading and unloading goods. The act authorized the company for carriage of goods, to demand a toll not exceeding 3d. per ton per mile:—Held, that the company was not entitled to charge an additional sum for services performed, accommodation afforded and expenses and risk incurred in and about the receiving, loading, unloading and delivering the goods. Pegler v. Monmouthshire Railway and Canal Company, 6 H. & N. 644; 39 L. J., Ex. 249; 4 L. T. 331; 9 W. R. 597.

The Grand Junction Railway Company became carriers on the London and Birmingham lines, and published a list of charges for the carriage of goods from Manchester to London, among which "Manchester packs" were charged 3s. 3d. per cwt., or 65s. per ton. At the foot of this list was a notice, that goods were brought to the station at Camden Town without extra charge, and that there was no charge for booking or delivery in London. The company made an agreement with C. and H., that the latter should carry from the station at Camden Town and deliver in London all such goods carried by the railway, and for so doing should receive 10s. per ton out of the entire charge of 65s. per ton:—Held, that the charge of 65s. per ton when made to any other persons who were ready to receive their goods at the station at Camden Town, was both unreasonable and unequal. Pickford v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 10 M. & W. 399; 3 Railw. Cas. 193.

Beyond Limit of Line—Different Consignees—

Packed Parcels.—A railway company, bound by act of parliament to take the same rates and tolls from all persons alike under the same or similar circumstances, charged a tonnage rate upon goods over 1 cwt., and a higher rate for articles under that weight. When several parcels, each under 1 cwt., were delivered to the company by one person in a single consignment, at one and the same time, and addressed to the same consignee, the company charged a tonnage rate upon the aggregate weight. Common carriers sent by the company's railway large consignments of goods directed to themselves as consignees, each consignment consisting of several packages, many of them having the names and addresses of the persons to whom the carriers intended to deliver them. The company charged the carriers for each package contained in each consignment according to the weight of the package:—Held, an inequality of charge, and that the carriers were entitled to recover back the excess. Barendale v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 1 L. R., Ex. 137; 35 L. J., Ex. 108; 12 Jur., N. S. 274; 14 L. T. 26; 14 W. R. 458; 4 H. & C. 130.

B. carried goods from London to the Isle of Wight, using the company's railway for the carriage to Southampton. The company, whose railway did not extend beyond Southampton, also carried goods from London to the Isle of Wight. The company charged B. for the carriage of goods from London to Southampton a higher rate in proportion than, under a contract to carry from London to the Isle of Wight, they charged their customers for the carriage between London and Southampton; but for the carriage between the two latter places they charged B. and the rest of the public alike:—Held, no inequality of charge. Id.

Abroad.—A railway company incorporated for the conveyance of passengers and goods from London to Folkestone under acts of parliament which prohibited them from making unequal charges, obtained another act, enabling them to establish a communication by steam vessels with Boulogne, which act contained no provision as to equality of rates for the carriage of goods. There was nothing in the law of France which disabled the company, as public carriers, from making such contracts for that purpose as they might think most for their own interest. The company, by their tariff, charged certain rates for small parcels, with a double charge for packed parcels:—Held, that, so far as regarded the contract for the carriage of such parcels from Boulogne to London, there was nothing illegal in this increased charge. Branley v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 12 C. B., N. S. 63; 31 L. J., C. P. 286; 9 Jur., N. S. 329; 6 L. T. 468.

Dangerous Goods.—A charge of 50l. per cent., in addition to the usual rate for the highest charged description of goods, made to carriers for packed parcels, which contain articles of a dangerous character, is an unequal charge. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company v. Garton, 4 H. & N. 33; 28 L. J., Ex. 169; 5 Jur., N. S. 1172—Ex. Ch.

Unequal and Unlike.—By their act, a railway company was to take rates and tolls from all persons alike under the same or similar circumstances. Their ordinary price for carrying a parcel from L. to B. was  $\frac{1}{4}$ d. per lb. They refused to carry a parcel for plaintiff from L. to B. unless he paid 1d. per lb., which he did:—Held, that he might recover back the excess. Crouch v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 2 C. & K. 789.

Though limited to a reasonable charge, there is no common-law obligation on a carrier to charge equal rates of carriage to all his customers. Barendse v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 63; 27 L. J., C. P. 137.

Allowance to Class—Refusal to Individual.]—A railway company was authorized to make rates and tolls for goods and passengers conveyed by others than the company along the railway, and which should be reasonable and equal to all persons; and by a subsequent act the charges for the carriage of any passengers, goods, &c., to be conveyed by the company, or for the use of any power supplied by them, should be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate per mile, or per ton per mile, in respect of all passengers and of all goods, of a like description, to be conveyed by a like carriage on the same portion of the line, and no reduction or advance in any charge for conveyance, or for the use of any locomotive power to be supplied by the company, should be made either directly or indirectly in favour of or against any particular company or persons travelling upon or using the same portions of the railway. The company always charged the public for the carriage of goods at a rate specified, and for such charge performed the duties of the loading, &c., of the goods; but, by a general arrangement with carriers, the latter performed those duties, and were allowed by the company a deduction of 10l. per cent. from the charges made to the public (this being a reasonable equivalent); the company having, in consequence of a disagreement, refused to make this deduction to a carrier willing to perform, and in fact performing, all the duties performed by the other carriers:—Held, that they were not justified in their refusal. Parker v. Great Western Railway Company, 7 M. & G. 253; 7 Scott, N. R. 835; 13 L. J., C. P. 105; 8 Jur. 194.

The company also made an allowance to other carriers for the collection and delivery of parcels:—Held, that they were bound to make the same allowance to a carrier, who also collected for himself. Id.

If any of the public, as a consignor (not being a carrier), brought several packages of goods, addressed to different consignees, and paid the charge; or if several of the public brought several packages addressed to one consignee (not being a carrier), who paid the carriage, the company charged upon the weight of the aggregate only; but if, under the same circumstances, a carrier acted as consignor or consignee of goods, the company charged separately for each package:—Held, that the company was not justified in making this distinction between carriers and other members of the public. Id.

The company made an allowance to carriers in cases where they disclosed the names of the consignors and consignees of the goods:—Held, that they were not justified in withholding from a carrier, who refused to make such disclosure, any allowance to which he would otherwise have been entitled. Id.

Overcharge to Carrier.]—A special act of a railway company empowered the company to charge for the carriage of small parcels any sum which the company might think fit; and by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 90, which was incorporated with the special act, after reciting that it was expedient that the company should be enabled to vary the tolls upon the railway, so as to accommodate them to the circumstances of the traffic, but that such power of varying should not be used for the purpose of prejudicing or favouring particular parties, empowered the company to vary tolls, provided that all such tolls be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate in respect of all passengers and of all goods conveyed or propelled by a like carriage or engine passing over only the same portion of the line, under the same circumstances; and no reduction or advance in any such tolls should be made directly or indirectly in favour of or against any particular company or person travelling upon or using the railway:—Held, that the company was bound to charge the public alike, and therefore the fact of a party using the line being a common carrier did not justify the company in charging him more than the rest of the public, although the company might charge for packed parcels at a higher rate than an ordinary package. Crouch v. Great Northern Railway Company, 9 Ex. 556; 7 Railw. Cas. 787; 23 L. J., Ex. 148.

A railway company agreed with agents to collect and deliver goods for them, charging the public a small charge for doing so, in addition to the charge for conveyance on the railway; to those agents the company allowed in addition a sum out of the receipts of the company. A carrier who collected and delivered his own parcels, but was charged as highly as the rest of the public, complained that in effect this arrangement caused his goods to be charged higher than those sent through the agents, and that the difference was an overcharge. By their act the company was to charge all persons equally for conveyance, but there was a proviso that they might make agreements as to the collection and delivery of merchandize; and there was an appeal given by the act to the sessions, by any one prejudiced against any arrangement giving special facilities to others:—Held, that the agreement with the agents, against which there had been no appeal, did not render the charges to the carrier overcharges. Parker v. Great Western Railway Company, 6 El. & Bl. 77; 25 L. J., Q. B. 209; 2 Jur., N. S. 325.

A railway company closed its goods station at B. at 5.15 P.M. against all persons except its agent W., who had a receiving-house about a mile distant from the station, and from whom the company received goods up to 8 P.M. For the conveyance of goods from the receiving-house to the station, W. charged 1s. 8d. per ton on all goods above 3 cwt. and 3d. for each package below that weight:—Held, upon the complaint of a rival carrier, that the refusal to receive goods sent by him to the station at 5.15, unless sent through the receiving-house of W., was imposing upon him an undue prejudice, although it was sworn on the part of the company that the goods so brought to the station by W. came there properly classified, weighed, and prepared for loading. Garton v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 6 C. B., N. S. 633; 28 L. J., C. P. 306; 5 Jur., N. S. 1313.

A railway company is justified in carrying goods for one person at a less rate than that at which the company carries the same description of goods for another, if there are circumstances which render the cost to the company of carrying for the former less than the cost of carrying for the latter. Oxlade v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 1 O. B., N. S. 454; 26 L. J., C. P. 129; 3 Jur., N. S. 637.

Arrangement with Coal Owners to meet Demand—Coal Merchants.—A railway company, in order to prevent the obstruction of their railway, which would be caused by an unlimited coal traffic, ascertained the probable consumption of coal in the neighbourhood of each of their stations, and the sort required, and made arrangements with the collieries supplying the particular sort of coal for the requisite supply; they appointed depôt agents to manage the sale of the coal, who from time to time ordered the quantity wanted from the collieries, and caused the waggons wanted for the carriage to be sent up. All the depôts were in the hands of these agents, who accounted to the collieries for the proceeds of the sale. No coal merchant was dealt with in this way, but only coal owners; but each dealer was treated alike, and as one of the public. On a motion by a coal merchant to enjoin the company to afford him the same facilities for receiving and forwarding his coals as to those who consigned their coals to the company:—Held, that the arrangements of the company were proper, and not such as gave or caused any unreasonable preference or disadvantage. 1b.

A northern railway company, from a desire to introduce the northern coke into Staffordshire, made special agreements with certain merchants for the carriage of coal and coke at a lower rate than their ordinary charge; there being nothing to shew that the pecuniary interests of the company were affected:—Held, that the lowering of the rate for this traffic was giving it an undue preference. 1b.

In dealing with the first branch of the section of the statute which prohibits railway companies from giving any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to or in favour of any particular person, or any particular description of traffic, or subjecting any particular person, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage, the fair interests of the company are to be taken into the account. Ransome v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, In re, 1 O. B., N. S. 437; 26 L. J., C. P. 91; 3 Jur., N. S. 217.

A company made an agreement with A. to carry for him coals during three years, from Peterborough to various places on their lines of railway, at certain rates. B., a coal merchant at Ipswich, sent coals (which had been brought to that port by sea) to various places on the same lines of railway, and the company charged him a much larger sum per ton in proportion to the distance over which his coals were carried than the company charged to A.; the professed object of the difference being to enable A. (whose coal came to Peterborough by railway) to compete in the coal trade of the district with B., who had the advantage of having his coals brought to Ipswich by sea:—Held, that this was giving undue preference to A. 1b.

Advantages of Proximity to Railway.—Carrying coals from a colliery along a railway at a lower rate of charges than coals from other coal pits situate in the same locality, in consequence of a threat from the owner of the colliery to construct another railway, by which the traffic would have been diverted if the railway company had not consented to carry at such lower rate, is an undue preference by the railway company. Harrison v. Cockermouth and Workington Railway Company, 3 C. B., N. S. 693; 27 L. J., C. P. 169; 4 Jur., N. S. 239.

Every one has a right to the natural advantages which have been acquired by the proximity of his land to a railway, and a railway company is not justified in depriving him of it by allowing to another not so favourably situated the expense which the latter has incurred in connecting his place with the railway, in the reduced charge at which they carry his goods on their railway. 1b.

If a railway company is in the habit of carrying coals along the line, belonging to various owners, who compete to supply the population along the line, and a tariff of charges is published by the company, and approved by the Court of Common Pleas, by which they fix lower rates to be paid for the carriage of all coal consigned to places along the line, which are distributed into districts, in quantities of 200 tons at a time, then if such population is supplied with inland coal from P., and with seaborne coal from I., which is situate in No. 8 district, it is no undue preference to the P. owners, and no undue disadvantage to the I. owners, if the company, starting from S. with coal trains of 200 tons each, are in the habit of breaking off portions of those trains at C., in their progress to the No. 8 district, leaving such portions of trains at C., whilst the residue goes on to its original destination, but the parts left at C. being always sent on by detachments of fewer than 200 tons each, and charging the lower rates for such detachments. Ransome v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 8 C. B., N. S. 709; 29 L. J., C. P. 329; 7 Jur., N. S. 99; 2 L. T. 376; 8 W. R. 527.

Small and Large Consignments.—A railway company had been in the habit of unloading goods coming by railway from the Southampton docks, consigned to carriers in London, out of their trucks, and of placing them (by their servants) in or conveniently near to the waggons of the consignees, without extra charge. This practice they discontinued, refusing to allow their servants to unload the trucks without an extra charge for such service, except in the case of Pickford & Co., whose goods they continued to unload as before, the smallness of their quantity and the fact of their being carried intermixed with the company's own traffic, rendering it (as the company alleged) more convenient to themselves to do so. C., however, another carrier, was denied the aid of the company's servants in the unloading of his goods of the same description, and coming from the same place, the company alleging that the same reason did not apply to his goods as to Pickford & Co.'s, inasmuch as the former came in large quantities and in separate trucks. The court refused to make absolute a rule enjoining the company to unload the trucks containing C.'s goods, and to deliver such goods to C., by placing the same in or adjacent to his waggons, holding the demand to be too large; but the court intimated that if C.'s complaint had been confined to the company's giving an advantage to Pickford & Co. in the unloading of their goods, which they withheld from him, C. might have been entitled to relief. Cooper v. South-Western Railway Company, 4 C. B. 738; 27 L. J., C. P. 324.

It is competent to a railway company to enter into special agreements, whereby advantages may be secured to individuals in the carriage of goods upon the railway where it is made clearly to appear that in entering into such agreements the company has only the interests of the proprietors and the legitimate increase of the profits of the railway in view, and the consideration given to the company in return for the advantages afforded by them is adequate, and the company is willing to afford the same facilities to all others upon the same terms. Nicholson v. Great Western Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 366; 28 L. J., C. P. 89; 4 Jur., N. S. 1187.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 2, is not contravened by a railway company carrying at a lower rate, in consideration of a guarantee of large quantities and full-train loads at regular periods, provided the real object of the company is to obtain thereby a greater remunerative profit by the diminished cost of carriage, although the effect may be to exclude from the lower rate those persons who cannot give such a guarantee. Ib.

Consideration—Use of Branch Lines.—A preference given by a railway company to a customer who engaged to employ other lines of the company for traffic, distinct from and unconnected with that in respect of which such preference was given, is an undue preference. Barendale v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 C. B., N. S. 309; 28 L. J., C. P. 69; 4 Jur., N. S. 1241.

Convenience of Company and Wants of Neighbourhood.—A railway company established a system of carrying coals according to assigned districts, comprising certain places on their lines and branches, carrying them within those several districts at certain lower rates for quantities not less than a train load of 200 tons. The complainants, who were coal dealers at Ipswich, also carried on that business at N. S., E. T., and B., also at M. and D., which are on another branch line communicating with that first mentioned, and also at H., which is another distinct branch. These districts were so adjusted that the places where the complainants dealt were distributed into three of them, so that in order to take advantage of the reduced rates the complainants would have to send from Ipswich three full train loads, which was a larger quantity than they could profitably send to those districts, and thus they sustained great injury; whereas, the rival dealers at Peterborough, by reason of one of the assigned districts embracing seven of those places at which the complainants dealt, were enabled to send their coals in such quantities as to avail themselves of the reduction. It being sworn on the part of the company that these districts were adjusted, not with a view to give an undue preference to the one set of dealers over the other, but solely with regard to their own convenience and the wants of the neighbourhood:—Held, that the complaint was not sustained. Ransome v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 135; 27 L. J., C. P. 166; 4 Jur., N. S. 284.

The company made a scale of charges for the carriage of coals from Peterborough and Ipswich respectively to various places, the effect of which was to diminish the natural advantages which the Ipswich dealers possessed over those of Peterborough, from their greater proximity to those places, by annihilating (in point of expense of carriage) in favour of the latter a certain portion of the distance between Peterborough and those places:—Held, an undue preference of the Peterborough dealers over those of Ipswich. Ib.

b. In Respect of Persons.

Trespass on Approaches to Station—Remedies.—Where a party is prejudiced within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 2, by a preference given to some other person, his only remedy is by appeal to the railway commissioners. Holt v. Digby, 27 W. R. 884.

If a railway company licenses one man to ply with carriage for passengers within their station-yard, any person not so licensed may not do so, and if in attempting to do so he commits a trespass within the meaning of s. 16 of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, the justices cannot acquit him on the ground that such licence is, in their opinion, an undue preference, and, therefore, contrary to 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 2. Ib.

A railway company was possessed of a thoroughfare which had the appearance of a public street. The company allowed certain cabs to stand in the thoroughfare upon payment of a weekly sum by the drivers. A person, not being one of the drivers who paid, stood his cab in the thoroughfare, and refused to leave when requested on behalf of the company to do so:—Held, that he was a wilful trespasser within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 16. Fowler v. Steadman, 8 L. R., Q. B. 65; 42 L. J., M. C. 3; 26 L. T. 395.

G. kept his van standing for twenty minutes outside a public-house, during part of which time he was refreshing himself within. The ground upon which the van stood was part of the premises of a railway company, whose station was close by, but the only access to the public-house was across this ground, and the customers frequently went there with vehicles. G. was charged, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 16, with wilfully trespassing on railway premises, but the justices considered his claim of right to use the ground as a customer of the public-house to be bonâ fide, and their jurisdiction to be ousted thereby:—Held, that as there might be a legal foundation for this claim of right, the justices came to a proper conclusion. Wilkinson v. Gaffin, 33 L. T. 824.

An omnibus proprietor who carries passengers and luggage, for hire, to and from a railway station, cannot maintain an action against the company for refusing to allow him to drive his vehicle into the station-yard. Barker v. Midland Railway Company, 18 C. B. 46; 25 L. J., C. P. 184.

A railway company made arrangements, at one of their stations, with A., the proprietor of an omnibus running between the station and K., to provide omnibus accommodation for all passengers by any of their trains to and from K., and allowed A. the exclusive privilege of driving his vehicle into the station-yard for the purpose of taking up and setting down passengers at the door of the booking-office:—Held, that in the absence of special circumstances shewing it to be reasonable, the granting of such exclusive privilege to one proprietor, and refusing to grant the like facilities to another, who also brought passengers from K. as well as from other places beyond, was a breach of the prohibition against the granting of undue and unreasonable preferences. Marriott, In re, 1 C. B., N. S. 499; 26 L. J., C. P. 154; 3 Jur., N. S. 493.

A railway company made arrangements with a cab proprietor, whereby the company gave him the exclusive right to have his cabs standing at their station, and plying there. Another cab proprietor, who had been refused leave for his cabs to stand and ply at the station, applied for an injunction, but the injunction was refused, on the ground that no inconvenience to the public was made out. Beadell v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 2 C. B., N. S. 509; 26 L. J., C. P. 250.

A railway company granted exclusive right to a limited number of fly-proprietors to ply for hire within their station. The court refused to grant a writ of injunction against the company at the instance of a fly-proprietor who was excluded from participation in this advantage, although it was sworn by the complainant, and by several other fly-proprietors who were likewise excluded, that occasional delay and inconvenience resulted to the public from the course pursued. Painter, Ex parte, 2 C. B., N. S. 702.

Reasonableness of Fares.—The court refused to grant an injunction on the complaint of a company having a branch on a trunk line, to restrain the parent company from charging higher rates for the conveyance of passengers to the complainants' terminus than they charged for the conveyance of passengers to the terminus of another branch line (in which they themselves were interested) extending over the same number of miles. Caterham Railway Company, In re, 1 C. B., N. S. 410; 26 L. J., C. P. 161.

To constitute an undue or unreasonable preference, by reason of an inequality of charge, it must be an inequality in the charge for travelling over the same line, or the same portion of the line. Ib.

To induce the court to interfere on a complaint by the proprietors of a branch line, that a sufficient number of trains of the main line does not stop at the junction, or stop at convenient times, it must be distinctly shewn that sufficient accommodation is not afforded to meet the fair requirements of the public. Ib.

It is no ground of complaint that the company working the main line refuses to grant third-class return tickets to the branch line, if it appears that no such tickets are issued to other branches similarly situated. Ib.

But, semble, it is a good ground of complaint that there is no place of shelter provided at the junction, for passengers on the branch line waiting the arrival of trains; the public being entitled in this respect to reasonable accommodation. Ib.

To justify the interference of the court to enforce the running of through trains on a continuous line of railways, it must be shewn that public convenience requires it, and that it can reasonably be done. Barret, In re, 1 C. B., N. S. 423; 26 L. J., C. P. 83.

The court will not interfere, at the instance of an individual, where there is a continuous line by which through tickets may be obtained, though by a somewhat longer route, no additional cost, or serious loss of time, being thereby incurred, and no substantial inconvenience being thereby occasioned to the public, and it appearing that no complaints had been made of the inadequacy of the existing accommodation. Ib.

The court refused to grant a rule for an injunction against the Eastern Counties Railway Company to compel them to issue season tickets between Colchester and London, on the same terms as they issued them between Harwich and London, upon a mere suggestion that the granting the latter (the distance being considerably greater) at a much lower rate than the former was an undue and unreasonable preference of the inhabitants of Harwich over those of Colchester. Jones v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 3 C. B., N. S. 718.

VI. DELIVERY OF GOODS BY CARRIER.

1. LIABILITY FOR SAFE DELIVERY.

Duty Generally.—A carrier is bound to deliver the goods, if it is the general course of his trade so to do. Golden v. Manning, 2 W. Bl. 916; 3 Wils. 429.

So, he is bound to deliver a parcel at the place to which it is directed. Duff v. Budd, 6 Moore, 469; 3 B. & B. 177.

A carrier is bound to deliver goods intrusted to him, at the place to which they are addressed; and if he delivers them elsewhere, trover lies against him. Stephenson v. Hart, 1 M. & P. 357; 4 Bing. 476.

On Acceptance.—If a parcel is given to a waggoner for hire to carry for his own gain, and not for the profit of his master, the master is not liable in case the parcel is lost. Butler v. Basing, 2 C. & P. 613.

In proving a delivery of goods by a carrier, though it is not necessary to give evidence of a delivery into the hands of the consignee or his servants, it is necessary to shew an actual delivery of the goods into their possession. Evans v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 10 W. R. 559.

Where, in an action for the loss of a parcel, the shopman of the consignee proved that he did not know of the delivery of the parcel, and believed that it could not have been delivered without his knowledge:—Held, to be prima facie evidence of non-delivery, or it is, at all events, sufficient to call on the plaintiff to prove a delivery to the carrier. Griffiths v. Lee, 1 C. & P. 110.

Right to know Contents.—A party receiving a parcel to be carried ought to inquire as to its contents, and if nothing is done by the party delivering it to deceive him, or to give the transaction a false complexion, he is answerable for the parcel. Walker v. Jackson, 10 M. & W. 16; 12 L. J., Ex. 165.

A carrier has no general right in all cases to inquire and be informed of the contents of a parcel tendered to him to be carried. Crouch v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 14 C. B. 255; Railw. Cas. 717; 2 C. L. R. 188; 23 L. J., C. P. 73; 18 Jur. 148.

Where Goods Destroyed by Fire—Carrier ceasing to be Liable as such and becoming Warehouseman.—A package of goods was delivered to the Great Western Railway Company, and another to the London and North-Western Railway Company for carriage to the station of the former company at W., both packages being addressed to the plaintiff, "to be left till called for." One of the packages arrived at W. on the 24th of March, the other on the 25th. On their arrival they were placed in the station warehouse to await their being called for. The defendants did not know the address of the plaintiff, who travelled about the country with drapery goods. The goods had not been called for when, on the morning of the 27th of March, a fire having accidentally broken out, the warehouse was burned down and the goods were consumed by fire. The plaintiff on the same day after the fire called for the goods, and, not receiving them, brought actions against the defendant companies as common carriers to recover their value:—Held, that after the interval of time which the plaintiff had suffered to elapse since the arrival of the goods, the liability of the defendants as common carriers in respect of the goods had ceased, and they had become mere warehousemen of them, and consequently that the actions were not maintainable in the absence of any evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants. Chapman v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 Q. B. D. 278; 49 L. J., Q. B. 420; 42 L. T. 252; 28 W. R. 566; 44 J. P. 363.

A., B., C. and D., being in partnership as carriers, entered into an agreement with S. & Co. to carry goods for them from London to Frome, where they should be deposited in the warehouse of A., the resident partner, till S. & Co. should be ready to receive them into their own. The goods, having been forwarded, were, after they had been deposited in A.'s warehouse, destroyed there by fire:—Held, that the liability of A., B., C. and D., as carriers, ceased on the arrival of the goods at Frome, and that when they were deposited in A.'s warehouse, they could only be considered as warehousemen. Widd, In re, 2 Moore, 500; 8 Taunt. 443.

A common carrier between A. and B. (employed to carry goods from A. to B. to be forwarded to C.) carried them to B., and there put them in his warehouse, in which they were destroyed by an accidental fire, before he had an opportunity of forwarding them:—Held, that he was not answerable for the loss. Garride v. Trent Navigation, 4 T. R. 581.

If common carriers from A. to B. charge and receive for cartage of goods to the consignor's house at B. from a warehouse there, where they usually unload, but which does not belong to them, they must answer for the goods if destroyed in the warehouse by an accidental fire, though they allow all the profits of the cartage to another person, and that circumstance was known to the consignee. Hyde v. Trent and Mersey Navigation, 5 T. R. 389; 1 Esp. 36.

In a declaration against a carrier, a count averred the contract to be to carry goods from D. to L., and to take care of them on landing them at a wharf there, and to deliver them to the plaintiff. A plea that he did take care of the goods at the wharf till they were destroyed by fire, without his fault, is a good plea to the count. Bourne v. Gatliff, 11 C. & F. 45; 8 Scott, N. R. 604.

Right to Insurance Moneys.—Where a railway company effected an insurance against fire on goods "their own, and in trust as carriers," in a certain warehouse, and the goods were burnt:—Held, in an action on the policy, that, to the amount named in the policy, the whole value of the goods in the warehouse in their possession as carriers was insured by it, and not merely their interest as carriers; that they were entitled to recover the whole value of such goods destroyed by fire in the warehouse; although, as the value of such goods exceeded 10l., and the owners had not declared their value, the Carriers Act protected the company. London and North-Western Railway Company v. Glyn, 1 El. & El. 652.

Held, further, that the company would be trustees for the owners of the goods of the amount thus recovered. Id.

— Goods Lost—Bailees for Reward.—Goods were forwarded by a carrier's waggon to A., in London, and delivered by the carrier to him. A. sent them back to the carrier's warehouse, with directions that they should remain there to await his orders. They remained there accordingly for upwards of a year, when they were lost out of the warehouse. A printed bill issued by the carrier, and sent to A. with the goods, stated that any goods that should remain three months in the warehouse without being claimed, or on account of the non-payment of the charges thereon, would be sold to defray the carriage or other charges thereon, or the general lien, as the case might be, together with warehouse rent and expenses. The carrier had often before carried goods to A., but no goods of his had before lain in the carrier's warehouse:—Held, that the carrier was not a mere gratuitous bailee of the goods at the time of their loss; and therefore, that A. might recover against him the value of the goods, on a declaration, alleging that they were delivered to the defendant to be safely kept for the plaintiff, for reasonable compensation and reward to be therefore paid by him. Cairns v. Robins, 8 M. & W. 258.

A carrier received hops for the purpose of being carried for hire, and kept them in a warehouse for thirteen months; for that time he had warehouses which before had belonged to another, but had not made any charge for warehousing:—Held, that he was not a gratuitous bailee. White v. Humphrey, 11 Q. B. 43; 12 Jur. 417.

— When Carriage at End.—Cattle delivered to a railway company arrived in London at noon on Sunday. If the train had kept its time it would have arrived at seven in the morning. As the police regulations prevented the cattle being driven through the streets till midnight, they were placed in pens at the station by the servants of the company, assisted by a man who was employed by the owner. After midnight, when his drover went to fetch them away, he found that two were dead; and the servants of the company would not let him take the rest away unless he signed a receipt for the whole number. Afterwards the owner came himself and took them away; but, in the meantime, the Monday's market was lost:—Held, by Bramwell, B., and Channell, B., that the liability of the company as carriers was over before the damage occurred. Contra by Martin, B., that, at the time of the damage, there had been no delivery of the cattle to the owner, and that the company was responsible for the consequences of their servant's refusal to deliver. Shepherd v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 3 L. R., Ex. 189; 37 L. J., Ex. 113; 18 L. T. 528; 16 W. R. 982.

Goods improperly Packed.—B., intending to send furniture by railway, wrote for rates, and subsequently whether the rates included packing and unpacking; the rates were forwarded with an extract of the notices and conditions relating to the terms on which goods could be forwarded, one of which was that the railway company would not be responsible for improper packing. There was also a notice that no officer of the company had power to dispense with the conditions. The company declined the packing and unpacking. When their carman, in pursuance of instructions from B., arrived to fetch away the furniture it was found not to be packed (although there were materials at hand for the purpose); and, as the carman declined to undertake the packing himself, it was conveyed away unprotected, and suffered damage during transit. It was found as a fact that the damage was occasioned by improper packing:—Held, that it was B.'s duty to pack the furniture, and that, as the damage was occasioned by his neglect to do so, he was not entitled to recover compensation from the railway company. Barbour v. South-Eastern Railway, 34 L. T. 67.

If a cargo weighing a certain weight is delivered to a carrier to be carried, and when the cargo arrives at its destination the weight is deficient, this is evidence from which a jury may infer negligence in the carrier; and if the deficiency did not arise from the negligence of the carrier, it is incumbent on him to shew that. Hawkes v. Smith, Car. & M. 72.

A carrier is not responsible for leakage arising from an imperfection in the bung of a cask intrusted to him to be carried, without any negligence or omission on his part. Hudson v. Bazendale, 2 H. & N. 575; 27 L. J., Ex. 93.

In an action against a carrier for damage to goods, it is enough to prove the condition and value of the goods when delivered to him and when received by the consignee, and if damaged in the hands of the carrier he is entitled to recover; and the fact that the damage was partly caused by bad packing goes only to the amount of damage. Higginbotham v. Great Northern Railway Company, 2 F. & F. 796; 10 W. R. 358.

In an action against carriers for injury to casks of oil, alleged by them to have arisen from defects in the casks, it was left to the jury to say whether it arose from such defects, and whether, even if it did, the carriers knew or ought to have known thereof, and had acted negligently in sending them on in that state. Cox v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 3 F. & F. 77.

Necessary Delay.—In the absence of a contract to deliver at a particular time, the duty of a carrier is to deliver goods intrusted to him at a reasonable time, looking at all the circumstances of the case; and since his first duty is to carry safely, he is justified in incurring delay and delivering after the usual time when delay is necessary to secure the safe carriage. Great Northern Railway Company v. Taylor, 1 L. R., C. P. 385; 35 L. J., C. P. 210; 12 Jur., N. S. 372; 14 L. T. 363; 14 W. R. 639; 1 H. & R. 471.

Where a railway company, in exercise of a statutory right, runs its trains over the line of another railway company, and causes an obstruction, and thereby the latter company is prevented from delivering goods within the ordinary time, such company will, nevertheless, have fulfilled a contract to deliver those goods within a reasonable time if it is proved that the company has used every exertion to clear the line, and has delivered as soon as was possible under the circumstances. Id.

By the common law carriers are bound to deliver and are responsible for the loss of goods, unless they are prevented from delivering them by the act of God or the Queen's enemies, or by some act contributing to the loss on the part of the consignors. McKean v. McIver, 18 L. T. 410.

Damages resulting from Misdelivery.—A statement of claim alleged that the defendants were common carriers; that C. and B. were in the habit of sending empty casks by defendants' railway to plaintiff, which plaintiff filled with ketchup and returned; that defendants, by their agents and servants, knew the purpose for which the casks were delivered to plaintiff; that defendants negligently and improperly delivered to plaintiff, as C. and B.'s casks, certain other casks not belonging to C. and B., and which had contained turpentine; that plaintiff, not knowing, or having reasonable means of knowing, that the empty casks delivered were not C. and B.'s, filled them with ketchup, which was spoiled:—Held, on demurrer, that the statement of claim shewed no duty on the part of the defendants which could give rise to a cause of action, and therefore they were not liable. Cunnington v. Great Northern Railway Company, 49 L. T. 392—C. A.

Addresses.—H., agent for obtaining orders for the plaintiffs' goods in Glasgow, directed them to send parcels of goods to C. & Co. and T. & Co. respectively, giving the addresses of those firms in Glasgow. The defendants, in accordance with the plaintiffs' instructions, carried the goods to Glasgow, and there delivered them (having observed all the rules of their ordinary course of business) at the addresses written on the parcels. H., who had indorsed delivery orders in the names of the firms, received the parcels at both addresses and made away with them. The name of C. & Co. was found put up at the one address, but there was no such name or firm as T. & Co. at the other:—Held, that the defendants having, in following the plaintiffs' directions, pursued bonâ fide their usual course of business, were not liable for misdelivery in the case of either parcel. McKean v. McIver, 6 L. R., Ex. 36; 40 L. J., Ex. 30; 24 L. T. 559.

Liability for Loss or Detention excluded, except for Wilful Misconduct—Detention after Transit completed.—The defendants contracted to convey certain cattle belonging to the plaintiff from W. to G. at the "owner's risk rate," by which, in consideration of a reduced rate, they were to be relieved of all liability in respect of any loss, detention or injury to the cattle in the receiving or forwarding, except that arising from the wilful misconduct of their servants. The carriage was prepaid, but through the carelessness of the defendants' servants at W. that fact was not communicated to the servants at G., who in consequence refused to deliver the cattle to the consignee. The cattle were detained for two days before the mistake was discovered, whereby damage by exposure was occasioned. In an action for such detention:—Held, that the protection afforded by the contract was confined to the case of loss, injury or detention during the course of receiving, forwarding or delivery of the cattle, and that the refusal to deliver did not come within the meaning of detention so used, and that consequently the defendants were liable apart from the question of wilful misconduct. Gordon v. Great Western Railway Company, 8 Q. B. D. 44; 51 L. J., Q. B. 58; 45 L. T. 509.

— Reasonable Care.—A railway company, as carriers, brought some goods by their railway to one of their stations, and immediately gave the consignee notice of the arrival, and that they held the goods "not as common carriers, but as warehousemen, at owners' sole risk, and subject to the usual warehouse charges." The consignee acquiesced in this, and the goods remained in the charge of the company, and, by their negligence, were damaged. In an action by the consignee against the company:—Held, that on the true construction of the notice, the company were not exempted from all liability, but were bound as bailees to take reasonable care of the goods. Mitchell v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 10 L. R., Q. B. 256; 44 L. J., Q. B. 107; 33 L. T. 161; 23 W. R. 853.

2. ORDERS AS TO.

Countermanded by Consignor.—A party who delivers goods to a railway company to carry, directed to a particular place, may countermand the direction at any moment of the transit, and demand back his goods, at least on payment of the carriage: unless perhaps when the unpacking and redelivering them would be productive of much inconvenience. Scotthorn v. South Staffordshire Railway Company, 8 Ex. 341; 22 L. J., Ex. 121; 7 Railw. Cas. 870.

A. delivered at a station of a railway company a package addressed "S. & Co., East India Docks, passenger-ship Melbourne, Australia," and paid one sum for the carriage to London. By the practice of the company, goods delivered at that station for London are carried by their own line to Birmingham, and thence by the London and North-Western Railway to London. Before the package reaching London, A. gave the clerk at the London station of the London and North-Western Railway Company an order (written across the receipt which had been given for the package) to send it to "S. & Co., Bell Wharf, Ratcliffe, London," which order the clerk promised to obey, saying there was no extra charge. The package was, however, delivered according to the first address, and consequently lost:—Held, that the company's contract was to deliver according to A.'s directions; that he had a right to countermand his original direction; that the clerk was the agent of the company to carry out their contract, and therefore to receive the countermand; and that the company was liable for the loss consequent on the countermand having been disobeyed. Id.

By Consignee.—Although a carrier has contracted with the consignor of goods to deliver them at a particular place, he may deliver them at any place at which the consignee has ordered their delivery. London and North-Western Railway Company v. Bartlett, 7 H. & N. 400; 31 L. J., Ex. 92; 8 Jur., N. S. 58; 5 L. T. 399; 10 W. R. 109.

B. having sold wheat by sample, to be delivered to the purchaser at his mill, sent it by a railway company. On the arrival of the wheat at a station, two miles from the mill, the company kept it there in consequence of instructions given to them by the consignee that wheat arriving for him at the station should not be forwarded to the mill without his written order. B. had no knowledge of these instructions. The consignee examined the wheat at the station, but refused to accept, and whilst it remained there it became deteriorated in quality and value:—Held, that the consignor had no right of action against the company for not delivering the wheat at the mill, as the non-delivery was by order of the consignee. Id.

A., a carrier between Hull and the continent, employed B. as his agent to carry goods between Hull and Manchester, the course of business being to deliver the goods to the consignee immediately on their arrival. C., a customer, requested B. not to deliver goods consigned to him, but to send him notice of their arrival, and await his orders. To this B. assented, A. being ignorant of the arrangement. A quantity of cotton-waste, consigned to C. from Lisle, arrived at Hull, and was forwarded thence to Manchester by B.; but B. omitted to give C. notice of its arrival, and C. in consequence sustained loss:—Held, that A. was not responsible. Butterworth v. Brownlow, 19 C. B., N. S. 409; 34 L. J., C. P. 266.

What is Effect of Advice Note.—An advice note sent by a railway company to a consignee of goods is not such a representation of the possession by them of the goods as will, without evidence of a custom to do so, entitle the consignee to act upon it in the way of reselling the goods; nor will it, in the absence of wilful misstatement or culpable negligence leading proximately to the consignee's suffering loss, estop the company in an action of trover from denying that they in fact ever had the goods, although the consignee had paid the carriers' charges in respect of them. Carr v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 10 L. R., C. P. 307; 44 L. J., C. P. 109; 31 L. T. 785; 23 W. R. 747.

A contract cannot be implied from the sending of such an advice note to deliver to the consignee's order, so as to make the company liable for a breach in not delivering. Id.

C. entered into a contract with A. & Co. to purchase goods which were consigned to him by railway. The railway company by a mistake, without culpable negligence, advised C. of three parcels, whereas two only had been delivered to them for carriage. C. contracted to sell three parcels, and had to pay damages to his vendees in consequence of being able only to deliver two. The company did not notify the mistake to C. until he had resold:—Held, that the company was not estopped from shewing that they never received the third parcel. Id.

Negligence in issuing two Notes referring to one Consignment—Estoppel.—The defendants, having received a consignment of wheat, sent to the consignees an advice note, which described the consignment as "Sacks wheat, four trucks," and did not contain any details as to weight, rates or charges, but across the printed form was written, "Account to follow." The consignees gave B. a delivery order in respect of this wheat, and he obtained an advance from the plaintiffs upon it; the plaintiffs sent this delivery order to the defendants, and they accepted it. On the following day the defendants sent to B. another advice note on a printed form similar to the one already sent, but across the upper part was written the words, "Charges only"; the invoice number was different; the consignment was described as 151 sacks of wheat; the weight, the rate, and the amount of charges were filled in. B. filled up the delivery order at the bottom in favour of the plaintiffs, produced it to them, and obtained a second advance from them, as they believed it to relate to a second parcel of wheat. The plaintiffs delivered this order to the defendants, who accepted it, and who allowed the plaintiffs on both occasions to take samples of the wheat. There was, in fact, only one parcel of wheat, and the two advice notes related to the same parcel. B. went into liquidation, and the plaintiffs, having lost the amount of one of the advances so made by them, sued the defendants for the amount:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount claimed, for that the defendants had so dealt with the wheat and advice notes as to lead the plaintiffs to believe that there were in fact two consignments of wheat, and that they were in consequence estopped from afterwards alleging that there was in fact but one consignment of wheat. Coventry v. Great Eastern Railway Company, 11 Q. B. D. 776; 52 L. J., Q. B. 694—C. A.

Consignee demanding Delivery before Destination.—When goods are delivered by a vendor to a carrier to be conveyed to a certain place, with the added words, "for Messrs. Stein & Co.," these persons thus appearing to be the consignees of the goods, may demand them of the carrier at another place; and if on such demand, and on receiving payment for the carriage, the carrier (who has not received from the vendor any special communication on the subject of the place of delivery) delivers them up to the consignees, he will not be responsible to the vendor for any damages which may arise to the vendor from such delivery. Cork Distilleries Company v. Great Southern and Western Railway Company (Ireland), 7 L. R., H. L. 269; 8 Ir. R., C. L. 334.

Distillers in Cork, who were under bond to the crown to pay the duties on all spirits which they might be permitted to remove from one bonded warehouse to another, sold a quantity of whisky to Messrs. Stein & Co., spirit dealers in Limerick. The duty on the whisky had not been paid. The distillers obtained the regular permit for its removal (the permit expressly describing the whisky as spirit on which duty had not been paid), and delivered it to a railway company to carry it to Limerick. The delivery note described it as sent from Cork to "Custom Warehouse, Limerick. . . . For Messrs. J. Stein & Co., Limerick Station, Limerick." The railway company gave a receipt note in these terms, "From Hewitt & Co. . . . One puncheon of whisky addressed to 'Seymour's Customs Warehouse at Limerick. For Stein & Co.'" If it had been taken to the customs warehouse the consignees could not have obtained possession of it without having first paid the duty on it, but no special communication was made by the vendor to the railway company on this subject. Before arriving there the consignees, Messrs. Stein & Co., demanded it at the railway station, and on paying the carriage obtained possession of it, and thus escaped paying the duty. The vendors were compelled, under their excise bond, to pay the duty, and brought an action against the railway company for the amount:—Held, that this was the case of an ordinary consignment; that the consignees had the right to demand the whisky from the railway company; and that the latter was not liable to make good the loss occasioned to the distillers by its delivery. Id.

3. REFUSAL OF CONSIGNEE TO ACCEPT.

Duty of Company.—Goods intrusted to a railway company having been tendered by them for delivery at the address of the consignees, were refused acceptance, and the company thereupon took them back to their own premises. They then (in accordance with their practice under such circumstance) sent an advice note to the consignees' address by post, stating that the goods remained at the risk of the consignees, and would be delivered to the person producing the note. They subsequently delivered the goods to a person who had formerly been in the service of the consignees, and who having obtained the advice note fraudulently, produced it at the company's premises:—Held, that upon the goods being returned on the company's hands their duty as carriers was at an end, and they became involuntary bailees; and that in an action brought against them by the consignor for misdelivery and conversion, it was a question of fact whether they had acted under the circumstances with due and reasonable care and diligence. Heugh v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 5 L. R., Ex. 51; 39 L. J., Ex. 48; 21 L. T. 676.

A railway company carried coals to the station to which they were addressed, and gave notice to the consignee of their arrival, upon which, according to the usual course of practice between them and the consignee, it lay upon him to send for them and take them away; and he not having done so within a reasonable time, they unloaded the coals and left them on the siding, where they were lost:—Held, in an action against them as common carriers, for non-delivery, that they had performed their contract by a constructive delivery. Bradshaw v. Irish North-Western Railway Company, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 252; 21 W. R. 581.

Detention of Goods by Carrier.—Where goods are tendered by a carrier to a consignee who refuses to pay the carriage, whereupon the carrier refuses to deliver the goods, it is the duty of the carrier to retain the goods at their place of destination, at least for a reasonable time, and during that time to await any directions from, if not to communicate with, the consignee. Crouch v. Great Western Railway Company, 2 H. & N. 491; 26 L. J., Ex. 418; 3 Jur., N. S. 796.

Notice of.—Where goods have been tendered by a carrier to a consignee, and refused by him, there is no rule of law that the carrier must give notice of such refusal to the consignor; he is only bound to do what is reasonable. Hudson v. Bazendale, 2 H. & N. 575; 27 L. J., Ex. 93. Semble, that whether the circumstances of the case make it reasonable that the carrier should give such notice, is a question for the jury. Id.

Tender—Refusal—Lien.]—Carriers received goods of S., at L., on an undertaking to carry them to W., and deliver them there to S. for his use, on payment of the hire. The goods were carried to W., and sent from the warehouse, nearly half a mile, to the house of S., but, the hire not being ready to be paid, were taken back to the warehouse. Applications to send the goods again to the house were refused, not on the ground that the contract had been performed by the proffer, but until satisfaction of a lien set up on one side, and resisted on the other, and which proved to be unfounded in fact:—Held, that the carriers had waived the benefit which would probably have resulted to them from insisting on the proffer as an execution of their undertaking; that both parties had treated the contract as one continuing contract from the commencement of the transaction till an actual delivery should have taken place; and that the carriers, not having performed their part of the agreement, the consignee was entitled to recover the value of the goods. Stoer v. Crowley, McClell. & Y. 129.

VII. LIEN AND REMUNERATION.

1. GENERALLY.

Insurable Interest.]—Carriers effected an insurance against fire, by which the sum of 15,000*l.* was insured "on goods their own, and in trust as carriers" in a warehouse. One of the conditions of the policy was, that goods held in trust or on commission were to be insured as such, otherwise the policy would not extend to cover such property:—Held, that the words in the policy "goods in trust as carriers" covered the whole value of goods sent to the carriers to be carried, and also any interest they might have in them for their lien as carriers, and also that the goods were properly described. London and North-Western Railway Company v. Glyn, 1 El. & Bl. 652; 28 L. J., Q. B. 188; 5 Jur., N. S. 1004; 33 L. T., O. S. 199; 7 W. R. 238.

Held, also, that the carriers could recover for goods destroyed by fire, for the loss of which they themselves were not liable under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68. Id.

Effect of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 97.]—This enactment gives no lien upon goods for tolls or charges due to the company for other goods previously conveyed by them as carriers, but only for tolls previously due for the use of the line by persons conveying goods in their own carriages. Wallis v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 5 L. R., Ex. 62; 39 L. J., Ex. 57; 21 L. T. 675; 18 W. R. 347.

Lien does not Determine on Refusal of Consignee to accept Goods.]—The plaintiff consigned certain goods for carriage by the defendant company to the consignee's address. The consignment note, which was signed by the plaintiff, contained a condition that "all goods delivered to the company will be received and held by them subject to a general lien for money due to them, whether for carriage of such goods or for other charges," &c.:—Held, that the lien continued so long as the company held the goods, and was in no way affected by the refusal of the consignee to accept the goods after they had arrived at their destination. Westfield v.

Agreement for General Lien with Bankrupt—Receiver's Goods not Liable.]—A trader opened a credit account with a railway company for freight. An account of what was due was to be delivered once a month, and payment was to be made within seven days after delivery; and the company were to have a general lien, for all the moneys due upon any account, upon all goods in the hands of the company. The trader filed a petition for liquidation; and a receiver and manager of his estate and business was appointed, who, in order to carry on the business, bought goods with his own money and sent them to the railway company consigned to the trader. The company refused to deliver the goods until they were paid what was owing to them by the trader for freight due when the petition was filed. The receiver paid the money under protest, and the goods were delivered. The Court of Bankruptcy, on the receiver's application, ordered the money to be repaid:—Held, on appeal, that the company would have no defence to an action by the receiver for the money paid to them, but that the Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction to order repayment. Great Western Railway Company, Ex parte, Bushell, In re, 22 Ch. D. 470; 52 L. J., Ch. 734; 48 L. T. 196; 31 W. R. 419—C. A.

Customary Lien must be clearly Proved.]—The lien of a common carrier for his general balance—however it may arise in point of law from an implied agreement—to be inferred from a general usage of trade, must be proved by clear and satisfactory instances, sufficiently numerous and general to warrant so extensive a conclusion affecting the custom of the realm; yet it is not to be favoured, nor can it be supported by a few recent instances of detention of goods by four or five carriers for their general balance. But such a lien may be inferred from evidence of the particular mode of dealing between the respective parties. Rushforth v. Hadfield, 6 East, 519; 2 Smith, 264. And see Whitehead v. Vaughan, 6 East, 523, n.; Holderness v. Collison, 7 B. & C. 212; 1 M. & R. 55.

And a jury having negatived such a general usage, though proved to have been frequently exercised by the defendant and various other common carriers throughout the north for ten or twelve years before, and in one instance, so far back as thirty years, though not opposed by other evidence, the court refused to grant a new trial. Rushforth v. Hadfield, 7 East, 224; 3 Smith, 221.

A carrier who, by the usage of a particular trade, is to be paid for the carriage of goods by the consignor, has no right to detain them, against the consignee, for a general balance due to him for the carriage of other goods of the same sort sent by the consignor. Butler v. Woolcott, 2 N. R. 64.

Against whom.]—Where a carrier had given notice that all goods would be subject to a lien, not only for the freight of the particular articles, but also for any general balance due from their respective owners; and goods were sent by the carrier addressed to the order of J. S., who was merely a factor:—Held, that the carrier had not any lien as against the real owner, for a balance due from J. S. Wright v. Snell, 5 B. & A. 350.

Where goods are taken by the owner from the waggon, the carrier or warehouseman has no claim for booking or warehouse room, there being in such case no lien. Lambert v. Robinson, 1 Esp. 119.

If a person goes to a coach-office, and directs that a place be booked for him by a particular coach, and that is done, and he leaves his portmanteau, the coach proprietor will have a lien on the portmanteau for something, but not for the full amount of the coach fare; but if the party merely leaves the portmanteau while he goes to inquire if there is an earlier coach, and no place is actually booked, the coach proprietor has no lien at all. Higgins v. Bretherton, 5 C. & P. 2.

If a carrier receives goods to be carried, he cannot retain the goods, and put the consignor of the goods upon proof of his title to them. Anon., cited 3 Esp. 115.

If, before sending goods by a carrier, the sender applies at his wharf to know at what price certain goods will be carried, and he is told by a clerk, who is transacting the business there, 2s. 6d. per cwt., and on the faith of this he sends the goods, the carrier cannot charge more, although it is proved that the carrier had previously ordered his clerks to charge all goods according to a printed book of rates, in which 3s. 6d. per cwt. was set down for goods of the sort in question. Winkfield v. Paekington, 2 C. & P. 599.

Obligation to preserve Goods for a Reasonable Time.—The lien which a carrier has on goods carried for the carriage-money is to be exercised subject to the obligation of keeping the goods for such a time in such a place as may be reasonably adapted for allowing the consignee means of taking possession of them on payment of the charge; which, semble, are questions for the jury in each case. Great Western Railway Company v. Crouch, 3 H. & N. 183; 27 L. J., Ex. 345; 4 Jur., N. S. 457—Ex. Ch.

If a railway company, carrying goods for hire from A. to B., offers them to the consignor's agent at C., to whom they are addressed, and he refuses to pay the sum demanded for carriage, the company is not entitled to take back the goods forthwith to A., but is bound to keep them for a reasonable time at B., so as to give the agent an opportunity of obtaining the goods upon paying the demand. Ib.

When carriers by land have carried goods to their destination, in pursuance of a contract with one who is both consignor and consignee, and through his default the goods are left in the carriers' hands, they are bound to take reasonable measures for the preservation of the goods, and can recover from him payments they have made on account of expenses so incurred. Great Northern Railway Company v. Swaffield, 9 L. R., Ex. 132; 43 L. J., Ex. 89; 30 L. T. 562.

A person sent a horse by railway, consigned to himself at a station on the line, and paid the fare. When the horse arrived at the station there was no one on his behalf to receive it, and the railway company therefore placed it with a livery-stable keeper.—Held, that the company could recover from the owner of the horse the reasonable charges which it had paid to the stable keeper. Ib.

Recovery of Payment by Carrier.—If a carrier, by mistake, delivers goods to B. which were consigned and sold to C., and B. appropriates them, and the carrier on demand, without action, pays C. their value, the carrier may recover it against B., as money paid to the use of B., but not as the price of goods sold and delivered to B. Brown v. Hodgson, 4 Taunt. 189.

2. TOLLS AND CHARGES.

What are.]—The word "tolls" in 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 90, and in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 2, applies to traffic generally, and is not limited to tolls strictly so called. Evershed v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 2 Q. B. D. 254; S. C., 3 App. Cas. 1029; 46 L. J., Q. B. 289; 48 L. J., Q. B. 22; 36 L. T. 12; 39 L. T. 306.

Construction of Acts.]—When the language of an act of parliament, obtained by a company for imposing a rate or toll upon the public, is ambiguous, or will admit of different meanings, that construction is to be adopted which is most favourable to the public. Barrett v. Stockton and Darlington Railway Company, 2 M. & G. 134; 2 Scott, N. R. 337; 11 C. & F. 590.

Reasonableness, how Determined.]—As to the reasonableness of charges, the principle is not what profit it may be reasonable for a company to make, but what it is reasonable to charge to the person who is charged. Canada Southern Railway Company v. International Bridge Company, 8 App. Cas. 723—P. C.

Overcharges Recoverable by Action.]—A colliery owner had paid several sums, which in his action he sought to recover as overcharges, but he had paid them under protest and for the purpose of obtaining possession of his goods.—Held, that his payment of them under such circumstances was not a fact which would disqualify him from recovering them in an action for money had and received. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway v. Gidlou, 7 L. R., H. L. 517; 42 L. J., Ex. 129; 32 L. T. 573; 24 W. R. 144.

And see Evershed v. London and North-Western Railway, supra.

—As Money had and received.]—Money paid in excess, in disregard of the equality clauses of railway acts, can be recovered back in an action for money had and received. Great Western Railway Company v. Sutton, 4 L. R., H. L. 226; 38 L. J., Ex. 177; 18 W. R. 92.

A carrier sent goods by the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, to be carried on their line, as also on that of the Great Western, a continuous line; he objected to the charges as excessive, but paid the amount claimed, under protest, making no tender of any sum as a reasonable charge.—Held, that he was entitled to recover back the amount paid above what was a fair and reasonable charge in an action for money had and received, and that the whole sum so overpaid was recoverable against the Bristol and Exeter Company, though a portion of it was received by them as agents for the Great Western Railway Company. Parker v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 6 Railw. Cas. 776; 6 Ex. 702.

— Payment under Protest.—Carriers refused to redeliver the plaintiff's goods, which they had carried for him, except on payment of 5*l.* 5*s.* charges. He insisted that he was not liable to pay anything; but, ultimately, the carriers, having said that they would take nothing less than the whole sum, he paid the whole to regain his goods, protesting that he was not liable to pay anything, and that, if he was liable, the charge was exorbitant. He had not tendered or named any smaller sum. Afterwards, without having demanded the return of any surplus, he brought an action for money had and received, claiming, by his particulars, the whole sum, as having been paid in order to obtain possession of his goods, under protest that he was not liable to pay the same or any part thereof; or, if he was liable to pay some part, that the sum was exorbitant. The jury found, that the carriers were entitled to charge 1*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the difference in this form of action, and that it was not necessary to his right of recovery, that he should have tendered any specific sum. Ashmole v. Wainwright, 2 Q. B. 837; 2 G. & D. 217; 6 Jur. 729.

— Effect of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31.—This enactment does not interfere with the right of a party aggrieved by overcharges to maintain an action to recover back the sums paid in excess. Barendale v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 63; 27 L. J., C. P. 137.

Publication of.—A company obtained an act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 169) authorizing it to construct a railway and to demand tolls for the conveyance of passengers and goods thereon. The charge for the conveyance of goods was generally thus expressed, "per ton per mile not exceeding," &c. One clause provided that "for articles or persons conveyed on the railway for a less distance than four miles" there might be, "in addition to the prescribed tolls for conveyance, a reasonable charge for the expense of stopping, loading, and unloading." No publication of this charge in the form of a "toll" had been made upon the toll-board:—Held, that this "charge" for stopping was not properly a "toll," and that the non-publication of it on the toll-board in the form required by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, ss. 93 and 95, did not prevent the company from demanding it. Pryce v. Monmouthshire Canal and Railway Companies, 4 App. Cas. 197; 49 L. J., Ex. 130; 40 L. T. 630; 27 W. R. 666.

A pier company was authorized by act of parliament to charge, for goods laden or unladen on the pier, the rates specified in a schedule to the act, but they could only demand them so long as "the rates for the time being authorized to be taken as thereinbefore mentioned" were painted on a board affixed to the premises. By a subsequent section power was given to lower the tolls and to raise them to such sums as the company should think proper, not exceeding the sums authorized by the act. The company lowered some of the rates, but put up a board shewing the tolls contained in the schedule to the act:—Held, that the act required the actual tolls in force for the time being, and not the maximum tolls authorized by the act, to be painted on the board. Gregson v. Potter, 4 Ex. D. 142; 27 W. R. 840.

— Recovery of Charges.—By an act of parliament it was enacted that a railway company should paint on boards an account of the several rates and tolls to be taken by them, and should affix such boards upon the toll-houses, or building at which the rates or tolls should be taken, and that the company should not take any rates or tolls, except during the time that the board should be so affixed:—Held, that the omission to put up such boards did not prevent the company from recovering such sums of money as they had a right to charge, and that the parties who had paid them could not, as a result of such omission, recover back such sums as they had been charged. Garton v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 1 B. & S. 112; 30 L. J., Q. B. 273; 7 Jur., N. S. 1234; 9 W. R. 734.

Mileage—Passengers—Fractions of Miles.—The plaintiff travelled third class up and down between Bristol and Paddington on the defendants' railway, by trains other than those which the defendants run daily in pursuance of the Cheap Trains Acts, 1844 and 1858. He brought this action to recover the amounts, or part of them, which he had paid for his fares under protest; the distance is somewhat less than 118½ miles, the duty actually paid by the defendants amounts to about 6½*d.*, and the amount charged was 10*s.* 6*d.* each way:—Held, upon a special case, that the omission of the defendants to maintain some of the quarter-mile stones required by their local act of 1835, s. 178, and the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 95, as a condition to their charge for tolls on carriages running over their line, did not prevent their making charges for passengers in their own carriages; that the general limit of their charge for third-class passengers at 1*d.* a mile by their local act of 1847 in effect repealed their authority to charge not more than 2*s.* for the five miles next to Paddington given them by their local act of 1837; that the provision for fractions of a mile contained in the Cheap Trains Act, 1858, did not apply to third-class passengers by other than the trains run in pursuance of the Cheap Trains Act, 1844; and that the full amount chargeable third-class by these trains was only the amount of the passenger duty beyond the penny a mile authorized by the local act of 1847. Brown v. Great Western Railway Company, 9 Q. B. D. 744; 51 L. J., Q. B. 529; 47 L. T. 216; 30 W. R. 671; 46 J. P. 803—C. A. Affirming 51 L. J., Q. B. 156; 45 L. T. 471; 30 W. R. 214; 46 J. P. 596.

The private act of a railway company granted tolls for "a fraction of a mile beyond four miles," &c.; the company claimed such tolls when the whole distance traversed was less than four miles. The Lord Chancellor (Earl Cairns) and Lord Selborne were of opinion that the charge was, on the whole, warranted by the words of the act, and that the judgment of the court below must on this point also be affirmed. Lord Penzance and Lord O'Hagan, applying the principle that no charge could be imposed on the public but by the clearly-expressed intention of the legislature:—Held, that in this case the legislature had not clearly expressed an intention, nor had intended, to authorize such a charge.

The judgment of the court below therefore stood affirmed. Pryce v. Monmouthshire Canal and Railway Companies, 4 App. Cas. 197; 49 L. J., Ex. 130; 40 L. T. 630; 27 W. R. 666.

— Increased Exigencies of Traffic.—A railway company, in carrying goods, took them past a junction to a station and back, and then on by other lines, and charged a mileage rate which included the mileage to and fro between these places; such rate was reasonable, usual, and accustomed:—Held, that they could so charge. London and South-Western Railway Company v. Myers, 5 L. R., C. P. 1; 39 L. J., C. P. 57; 21 L. T. 461.

— How Counted.—By the private act of a railway company, the maximum charge for carriage was limited to a certain sum per mile:—Held, that the mileage was not necessarily to be counted by the most direct and shortest route; but that if the route adopted by the company in the carriage of goods intrusted to them was a reasonable one under the circumstances, they were entitled to charge the maximum rate for the number of miles over which they actually carried the goods. Id.

Special Services—Increased Rate—Construction of Acts.—The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company conveyed goods to Wigan, over a portion of their own line, a distance less than six miles; from Wigan the goods were conveyed to their destination at Windermere and elsewhere, a distance more than six miles, over another line of railway, of which the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway was a part owner with another company. By the company's acts, they were entitled to charge as for six miles on goods carried less than that distance on the railway, or any railway of which they were part owners, and the charges were to be computed as if such railways formed one line. The maximum rate of charges fixed by the act was to include all expenses incidental to conveyance, except certain specified services; the company being empowered to make increased charges by special agreement with parties:—Held, that the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company was not entitled to make two distinct charges, viz., as for six miles on the distance to Wigan, and afterwards on the distance from Wigan to the destination of the goods; and that the company could not recover for special services, alleged to have been rendered for the goods, the finding of the jury not clearly shewing that these services were of the kind specified by the act, and there not being sufficient evidence of an agreement for an increased charge for special services. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company v. Gidlow (No. 1), 42 L. J., Ex. 129; 29 L. T. 346; 21 W. R. 649—H. L.

Under a special clause in a railway act, the directors were empowered to make a maximum charge for conveyance of coal along their line, including tolls for the use of waggons, &c., "and every expense incidental to such conveyance, except a reasonable sum for loading, covering, and unloading of goods, and delivery and collection, and any other services incidental to the business of a carrier." Under another clause, the directors were empowered to make increased charges by agreement in respect of any other special service performed by them. By a third clause, it was enacted that the company should "provide sufficient locomotive power when and as the same should be required, and as soon as an adequate and sufficient load should be in readiness, to convey all merchandize," &c. Under the act, the company sought to impose additional charges on a colliery owner, in respect of taking his waggons to and from a siding belonging to the colliery owner. It appeared that whatever peculiar difficulty was experienced in this work arose from the position of the points joining the siding to the company's line. The company also sought to impose an additional charge, in respect of their allowing the coals of the colliery owner to be left on ground adjoining their line:—Held, that neither of these "were services incidental to the business of a carrier," within the meaning of the act. Also, that the second-mentioned charge, being for an advantage obtained by the colliery owner, might have been made the subject of agreement. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company v. Gidlow (No. 2), 7 L. R., H. L. 517; 45 L. J., Ex. 625; 32 L. T. 573; 24 W. R. 144.

The company had also refused to convey the coals of the colliery owner unless he had ready fifteen waggons containing a minimum load of forty tons each, while they conveyed the coals of others in smaller quantities:—Held, that this restriction was unreasonable, and not warranted by the act. Id.

Held, also, that damages in respect of loss of custom to the colliery owner occasioned by the restriction were not too remote. Id.

A railway company, by its act, was empowered to "demand and take for the use of the railway any tolls not exceeding the following: with respect to the conveyance of . . . coals . . . per ton per mile, three farthings." A subsequent section provided that, "Nothing in this act contained shall prevent the company from taking any increased charges, over and above the charges by this act limited, for the conveyance of goods of any description by agreement with the owners of, or persons in charge of, the goods either with respect to the conveyance thereof, except small parcels by passenger trains, or by reason of any other special service performed by the company in relation thereto:"—Held, that the latter section empowered the company to agree with any persons to carry coals at a higher rate than three farthings per ton per mile, notwithstanding that there were no special services involved in the conveyance of the coal. Wrexham Railway Company v. Little Mountain Colliery Company, 38 L. T. 290.

Claim of Through Toll.—Goods carried by a railway company upon their railway, or to their railway station, entirely upon land belonging to them, and not upon any highway or in the enjoyment of any easement or other right reserved by the former owners of the land or those under whom they claim, cannot be the subject of a claim to a toll thorough or toll traverse arising either by prescription or by grant. Brecon Markets Company v. Neath and Brecon Railway Company, 7 L. R., C. P. 555; 41 L. J., C. P. 257; 27 L. T. 316. Affirmed, 8 L. R., C. P. 157; 42 L. J., C. P. 63—Ex. Ch.

The Brecon Markets Local Act, vested in the market company tolls which had been immemorably received by the corporation of Brecon for cattle, goods, and carriages passing to, through, or from the borough. A railway company, under the sanction of an act of parliament passed in the same session, acquired land, not being a highway, on which they constructed a railway and station within the borough, whence passengers, goods, and cattle were conveyed by other lines of railway to other places beyond the limits of the borough. The rights of the corporation and of the market company were expressly reserved by the railway act, but there was no provision either in that or in the railway act enabling them to levy tolls on the railway:—Held, that the Brecon Market Company was not entitled to toll in respect of cattle, goods, or carriages passing along the railway. Ib.

Through Rate—Statute fixing a Company's Tolls subject to Consent of another Company.]—Where it is enacted by a special act that in consideration of a guarantee by a railway company of a dividend on the capital of a canal company, the canal company shall not reduce the rates for the time being payable on the canal without the consent of the railway company, the railway commissioners have no power without the consent of the railway company, and without the railway company being before them, to make an order establishing a through rate over that and other canals, and reducing the rates payable on that canal and others. Warwick and Birmingham Canal Company v. Birmingham Canal Company; Birmingham Canal Company and London and North-Western Railway Company, Ex parte, 5 Ex. D. 1; 48 L. J., Ex. 550; 40 L. T. 846.

Over Junction and Branch Lines.]—A railway company was empowered to make a line between certain termini, and to impose certain tolls and charges for carriage of goods on that line. The company afterwards obtained several other acts, and among them one passed for making a junction and branch railways, and incorporating the Lands and Railways Clauses Acts, and including a number of enactments, in which the words "the railway" were used, in some places, so as to be applicable only to the junction and branch lines, but, in others, also introducing, as to "the railway," a fresh system of tolls and charges:—Held, that the term "the railway" must, upon a consideration of all the statutes of the company, and all the circumstances, be considered to mean the whole system of railway belonging to the company, and that it was over it that the tolls and charges imposed were intended to extend, and not over the junction and branch lines only. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company v. Garton, 4 H. & N. 33; 28 L. J., Ex. 169; 5 Jur., N. S. 1172—Ex. Ch. Affirmed, 8 H. L. Cas. 477; 30 L. J., Ex. 241; 7 Jur., N. S. 173.

Charge for Stopping in Excess of Maximum Toll.]—By 8 & 9 Vict. c. clxiv. s. 104, the Monmouthshire Railway Company was empowered to demand, in respect of coals conveyed upon their railway, tolls not exceeding  $\frac{1}{4}$ d. per ton per mile. And by s. 105, for articles conveyed on the railway for a less distance than four miles, the company might demand, in addition to the prescribed tolls for conveyance, a reasonable charge for the expense of stopping, loading and unloading. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. ccxxii. s. 26, the maximum rates to be taken by the company for the conveyance of all things, including the tolls for the user of the railway, for carriages (when provided by the company), and for locomotive power, and every other expense incidental to the conveyance, except a reasonable sum for loading, covering, and unloading of goods at any terminal station of such goods, and for delivery and collection, and any other services incidental to the business or duty of a carrier, shall not exceed the sums following, that is to say, for coals, 1d. a ton a mile. A number of separate colliery owners, in the course of their business, loaded coals into their own trucks at their respective mines, and sent the trucks so loaded, by a railway to a terminal junction on the Monmouthshire Railway line, whereupon that company sent an engine to fetch the train of trucks thence, and to draw the same along their own line, in order to deliver the trucks at the wharves of the different freighters. The engine had to stop at the junction and occasionally wait there during a period of about half an hour, for the arrival of the trucks:—Held, that this was a stopping for which a reasonable charge might be legally made by the company, under s. 105, in addition to the tolls for conveyance; and that the limitation of rates by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 223, s. 26, to 1d. a ton per mile for coals did not comprise or include such charge for stoppage which was not incidental to the conveyance of the goods. Monmouthshire Railway and Canal Company v. Williams, 27 L. T. 134—Ex. Ch.

Splitting Contract.]—A special act, relating to the company, provided that where goods were carried on the company's railway, or partly on their railway and partly on some other railway of which they were joint owners, or which they had a right to use, for a less distance than six miles, the company should be entitled to take tolls as for six miles. The act also provided that the tolls for goods carried over the company's line and over portions of other lines of which they were part owners, or which they had a right to use, should be computed as if the company's line and the portions of the other lines formed one railway. Goods were passed over the line of which the company was sole owner for a distance of less than six miles; the same goods on their transit to their ultimate destination passed over another line of which the company was part owner for a distance of more than six miles. This latter line was under the sole management of another company. The goods were accompanied by two declaration notes, one made out in the name of the first company and the other in the name of the other company, but the station of ultimate destination mentioned in both notes was the same:—Held, that the company was not entitled to split the contract, that the two lines must be treated as one, and that the six-mile clause was not applicable. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company v. Gidlow (No. 1), 42 L. J., Ex. 129; 29 L. T. 346; 21 W. R. 649—H. L.

Consignee having no Option to do Services Himself.]—The same act of parliament, while providing the maximum rate of tolls to be charged, made an exception in respect of special services to be rendered by the company for loading, unloading, collection and delivery of goods:—Held, that the company was not entitled to charge for special services, though found by a jury to have been actually rendered by them; the customer charged for such services not having had the offer and option first distinctly given him of either availing himself of such services at the company's rate of charge or of doing them himself, such services being incidental to the ordinary business of a carrier, and such as the customer, without notice, might have supposed were covered by the company's charges for toll. Ib.

Extra Charge for Attaching and Returning Waggon.

—A railway act gave the directors of the company power to charge a sum for the conveyance of coal along the line, "including the tolls for the use of the railways and waggons, or trucks and locomotive power, and every expense incidental to such conveyance," which sum was to be a maximum sum, except in certain cases, the exception being thus expressed:—"Except a reasonable sum for loading, covering and unloading of goods, and delivery and collection, and any other services incidental to the business of a carrier, where such services, or any of them, are or is to be performed by the company." The services in respect of which the excepted charges were claimed to be made, were those of taking the waggons of a colliery owner from his own sidings and attaching them to the trains or returning them from the line of the railway to the sidings of the colliery owner; and whatever particular difficulty arose in this work was occasioned by the position of the points effecting the junction of the line with the sidings:—Held, that these were not services which came within the meaning of the exception. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company v. Gidlow (No. 2), 7 L. R., H. L. 517; 45 L. J., Ex. 625; 32 L. T. 573; 24 W. R. 144.

Goods left on Land adjoining Line.—At some of the stations the colliery owner had been allowed to leave his coals on the grounds adjoining the lines:—Held, that this might have been made the subject of an agreement for payment for any advantage thus obtained by him, but did not come within the description of a service contained in the exception. Ib.

Number of Waggon required before providing Engines.—Another clause in the same act required that the company should at all times "provide sufficient locomotive power, when and as the same shall be required, and as soon as an adequate and sufficient load shall be in readiness, to convey all merchandise." The directors required the colliery owner to furnish a declaration of his having ready fifteen waggons with a minimum load of four tons in each wagon, and gave orders not to forward his coals in a smaller number of waggons containing coals. While this restriction existed the coals of other owners were carried in smaller quantities. The regulation requiring fifteen waggons was an unreasonable requirement:—Held, that this restriction was not warranted by the words of the section, and that the colliery owner, having suffered in his business from such restriction, was entitled to damages on that account. Ib.

Railway crossing Turnpike-way—Double Toll.

—An embankment company was, by an act of parliament (not limited in duration), empowered to make a road, and to erect turnpikes upon or across any lanes or ways leading, or that might thereafter lead out of the same, and to take tolls at such turnpikes. By a subsequent act, another company was empowered to make a railway; and it was enacted, that all persons should have free liberty to use the same, with carriages properly constructed, upon payment only of such rates and tolls as should be demanded by the railway company, not exceeding the sums mentioned in the act. The railway was afterwards made, and it crossed the embankment company's road:—Held, first, that the railway, though made and opened to the public by act of parliament, was a "way" within the meaning of the first-mentioned act; and secondly, that the clause in favour of the public, in the railway act, did not take away the vested right of the embankment company to their tolls, and, consequently, that they might take toll from persons crossing their road upon the railway. Rowe v. Shilson, 4 B. & Ad. 726; 1 N. & M. 734.

On Packed Parcels.—A railway company, by s. 149 of its special act, was empowered to demand rates and tolls for the tonnage of all articles, matters and things carried on its line not exceeding certain sums; and by s. 155, the company might fix the sums to be charged or taken in respect of small parcels (not exceeding 500 lbs. in weight): "provided always, that the provisions hereinbefore contained as to parcels shall not extend to goods, articles, matters and things sent in large aggregate quantities, although made up of separate and distinct parcels, but only to single and undivided parcels." The company had two systems of charging. For packages exceeding 112 lbs. in weight it charged a tonnage rate, and for packages under 112 lbs., known as small parcels, it charged a higher rate. In both cases the goods were divided into classes, and the charge varied according to the class. S. sent goods, consisting partly of packages exceeding 112 lbs., and partly of packages under 112 lbs., both belonging to the same class, and contended that the company was bound to aggregate them and charge tonnage rates for the whole. The company, on the other hand, contended that it was only bound to aggregate the small parcels, and charge tonnage rates for them, if, when aggregated, they exceeded 112 lbs. in weight:—Held, that this, and not S.'s contention, was correct. Sutton v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 37 L. T. 158.

On Military Contracts.—A carrier, having a contract for his own benefit with the military authorities for the carriage of military stores and baggage, produced to a railway company the military route or order for the conveyance of military stores and baggage accompanied by a military escort, and required the company to carry them at the low rates prescribed by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 55, s. 20, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 85, s. 12, but the company insisted upon charging the ordinary rate, which was paid by the carrier:—Held, that he could not recover back the excess as money had and received to his use. Great Southern and Western Railway Company v. Robertson, 11 Ir. R., C. L. 63.

"Manufactures."—A railway company was entitled to charge a certain rate "for all cotton and other wools, drugs and manufactured goods."

—Held, that this meant, not all goods on which skill was employed, but those articles which are, in popular language, called "manufactures." Parker v. Western Railway Company, 6 El. & Bl. 77; 25 L. J., Q. B. 209; 2 Jur., N. S. 325.

Right to Sell Goods on Non-Payment.]—By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 97, it is provided that if, on demand, any person fail to pay the tolls due in respect of any carriage or goods, it shall be lawful for the company to detain and sell the carriage, or all or any part of such goods of the party liable to such tolls, and out of the moneys arising from such sale to retain the tolls:—Held, that a demand of the sum actually due for tolls is a condition precedent to the right to sell. Field v. Newport, Abergavenny and Hereford Railway Company, 3 H. & N. 409; 27 L. J., Ex. 396.

A railway company was empowered to take tolls for the use of their railway in respect of the tonnage of articles conveyed upon the railway, certain sums per ton, and a further sum if conveyed in the carriages of the company; and tolls for the use of engines. There was fixed a maximum rate of charge, including the charges for the use of carriages, waggons, or trucks, and for locomotive power and all other charges incident to such conveyance. The company was also empowered to take increased charges for the conveyance of goods by agreement with the owners of goods by reason of any special service. The company having for a considerable time carried on their line coals in carriages belonging to the plaintiff, from P. to H., made a demand of a gross sum equal to the amount of the tonnage rates for coals and use of engines; and also of a sum claimed by them for sending back the plaintiff's empty carriages from H. to P. They gave no explanation of the items making up the gross sum claimed. The plaintiff having omitted to pay the amount claimed, the company sold the plaintiff's carriages and goods to satisfy the amount due:—Held, that the sum claimed for sending back the return waggons was not toll, and that the company having demanded a larger sum than that due for tolls, the sale was unlawful. Id.

An act empowered a railway company to seize and sell goods, for which tolls due to the company had not been paid, providing the persons seizing the goods should have their names annexed to the list of tolls, and a demand had been previously made, and that on refusal the goods had been appraised. Where the first and last conditions had not been complied with by a railway company who had seized coals belonging to A., for tolls due by him, and the only evidence of a demand was the presenting of a bill of A. for the amount of the tolls, which was dishonoured:—Held, that the company had no right to seize the goods. North v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 14 C. B., N. S. 132; 32 L. J., C. P. 156; 9 Jur., N. S. 896; 8 L. T. 246; 11 W. R. 624.

VIII. MEASURE OF DAMAGES FOR NEGLIGENCE.

For Non-delivery—Knowledge of Carriers.]—Where the owners of a flour mill sent a broken iron shaft to an office of carriers, to be conveyed by them, and their clerk, who attended at the office, was told that the mill was stopped; that the shaft must be delivered immediately, and that a special entry, if necessary, must be made to hasten its delivery; and the delivery of the broken shaft to the consignee, to whom it had been sent as a pattern by which to make a new shaft, was delayed for an unreasonable time, in consequence of which the owners did not receive the new shaft for some days after the time they ought to have received it, and they were consequently unable to work their mill from want of the new shaft, and thereby incurred a loss of profits:—Held, that under the circumstances such loss could not be recovered in an action against the carriers. Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Ex. 341; 23 L. J., Ex. 179; 18 Jur. 358; 2 C. L. R. 517.

Liability for Delay in Transmission of Goods with Inherent Defect.]—On the 19th of December, 1881, eighteen bales, marked "Rags," were delivered by the plaintiffs in London to the defendants for conveyance to W. station in Kent, where in the ordinary course they should have been delivered within twenty-four hours. By mistake they were forwarded to another place, and did not reach the W. station until the 4th of January, 1882, when, finding them to have become heated (through being packed in a damp state) and therefore unfit for the manufacture of paper, the consignees rejected them; and ultimately the rags were found useless for any purpose, and were destroyed. There being an admitted breach of duty on the part of the defendants, and it being conceded that the rags would have sustained no injury if they had been packed dry, the county court judge gave a verdict for the plaintiffs, but for nominal damages only, on the ground that the loss was attributable to the plaintiffs' own act in packing the rags in a damp state, without informing the defendants that special care was necessary. Upon a motion to enter a verdict for the plaintiffs for the admitted value of the goods:—Held, that the ruling of the judge was correct. Baldwin v. London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company, 9 Q. B. D. 582.

Wrong Delivery.]—A statement of claim alleged that the defendants were common carriers; that C. and B. were in the habit of sending empty casks by defendants' railway to plaintiff, which plaintiff filled with ketchup and returned; that defendants, by their agents and servants, knew the purpose for which the casks were delivered to plaintiff; that defendants negligently and improperly delivered to plaintiff, as C. and B.'s casks, certain other casks not belonging to C. and B., and which had contained turpentine; that plaintiff not knowing, or having reasonable means of knowing, that the empty casks delivered were not C. and B.'s, filled them with ketchup, which was spoiled:—Held, on demurrer, that the statement of claim shewed no duty on the part of the defendants which could give rise to a cause of action, and therefore they were not liable. Cunnington v. Great Northern Railway Company, 49 L. T. 392—C. A.

Loss, whether or not directly attributable to Breach of Contract.]—The defendants, a railway company, contracted with the plaintiff to provide within a reasonable time a particular description of large waggons, at a specified rate of freight per waggon, for the carriage of a quantity of hay from a station on their line to G., a town about twenty-five miles distant, where the hay was intended for sale. Five tons were delivered to the defendants, but carried by them in smaller waggons, for which they charged and were paid the same rate per waggon, thus increasing the cost of carriage per ton. They did not provide waggons of the description agreed for, and thus (as it was conceded) committed a breach of their contract. The plaintiff did not deliver to them for conveyance the rest of the hay, which he kept for some time, and, after notice to the company, sold and disposed of under cost price. In an action for breach of the contract, in which the defendants paid into court sufficient to cover the extra cost of carriage of the five tons, the jury, in answer to a question submitted to them by the learned judge, notwithstanding an objection by the defendants, found that the plaintiff acted in a reasonable manner in keeping and disposing of the residue of the hay as he did, and the learned judge directed a verdict for him for the profits which the jury found would have been realized, if the hay had been conveyed pursuant to contract, by sales at G. at the market prices, in addition to the actual loss which the plaintiff had incurred upon the sale and disposal of the residue:—Held, a misdirection, and that the question as to the reasonableness of the plaintiff's conduct in keeping, selling, and disposing of the residue of the hay ought not to have been submitted to the jury, inasmuch as the loss thereby sustained was not directly attributable to the breach of contract, and was therefore a loss for which the defendants were not liable. Irvine v. Midland Great Western Railway Company, 6 L. R., Ir. 55.

Held, further, that if the hay had been delivered to the defendants for carriage, or had been otherwise conveyed in a reasonable manner to its destination, the proper measure of damages would have been the extra cost of conveyance, and that the only damages which the plaintiff could recover was the extra cost in respect of the five tons actually delivered and conveyed, such being the only loss sustained by him directly attributable to the defendants' breach of contract. The rule in Hadley v. Baxendale (9 Ex. 341) considered. Id.

Late Delivery—Sub-Contract.—The plaintiffs, in the beginning of 1871, contracted to supply, at 4s. a pair, a large quantity of shoes to H. & Co., who required them to fulfil a contract for the supply of the French army during the war. The last day for delivery by the plaintiffs was the 3rd of February, 1872, and all shoes not so delivered would be thrown back on the plaintiffs' hands. The plaintiffs delivered a certain quantity of shoes to the Midland Railway Company at Kettering, consigned to H. & Co., in London, in time to be delivered on that day. Notice was given to the station-master that the plaintiffs were under contract to deliver on that day, and if not so delivered the shoes would be thrown on their hands, but no further information. The shoes were not delivered by the company till the morning of the next day, and were rejected. The plaintiffs, using their utmost endeavours, could only sell the rejected shoes at 2s. 9d. a pair, and in consequence of the cessation of the war the consignees, but for their French contract, could not have sold them at a higher price even if duly received. The company paid into court 20l., which was sufficient to cover the incidental expenses and the ordinary damages to which the plaintiffs would be entitled, but the latter claimed to be entitled to recover the difference between 4s. and 2s. 9d. a pair:—Held, that they were not entitled to recover the difference. Horne v. Midland Railway Company, 8 L. R., C. P. 131; 42 L. J., C. P. 59; 28 L. T. 312; 21 W. R. 481—Ex. Ch.

R. sent goods from Manchester by railway to his traveller at Cardiff; the delivery of the goods was, through the negligence of the company, delayed until the traveller had left Cardiff, and R. in consequence lost the profits which he would have derived from a sale at Cardiff:—Held, that, in the absence of notice to the company of the object for which the goods were sent, R. could not recover from the company such profits as damages for the delay. Great Western Railway Company v. Redmayne, 1 L. R., C. P. 329; 35 L. J., C. P. 123; 12 Jur., N. S. 692; 14 W. R. 206; 1 H. & R. 97.

Particular Purpose.—The plaintiff was a dealer in cattle-spice and was in the habit of going about to agricultural shows exhibiting samples of his goods. He so exhibited them at Birmingham, and desiring to exhibit them at Newcastle, he had them delivered to an agent of a railway company who had a special office on the show-ground at Birmingham for the purpose of forwarding goods that had been exhibited. The company's clerk supplied a blank consignment note. This plaintiff's agent filled up, describing the goods as sundries, and the address as Newcastle show-ground, and indorsing it, "Must be delivered Monday certain." A conversation also took place with reference to the vital importance of having the goods at Newcastle on Monday. The goods not having been delivered at Newcastle on Monday, nor in time for the show, the plaintiff, who had gone there to meet them, sued the railway company for the non-delivery, claiming damages for his expenses and loss of time or profit. The company paid 10l. into court to cover expenses, and a verdict was entered for 20l. additional in respect of loss of time or profit:—Held, that the verdict was right, the surrounding circumstances justifying the inference that the clerk knew the purpose for which the goods were wanted, and made that the basis of the contract so as to render the company responsible for the damage naturally flowing from the non-delivery. Simpson v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 1 Q. B. D. 274; 45 L. J., Q. B. 182; 33 L. T. 805; 24 W. R. 294.

Held, also, that in the case of a man whose business it was to attend agricultural shows and make profit thereby, the profit which would have been made at a particular show is not too speculative to form the subject of damages. Id.

A prize had been offered for the best plan and model of a machine for loading colliers from barges, and plans and models intended for the competition were to be sent by a certain day; a party sent a plan and model accordingly by a railway, but, through negligence, it did not arrive at its destination until after the appointed day:—Sembles, the proper measure of damages in such case is the value of the labour and materials expended in making the plan and model, and not the chance of obtaining the prize, as the latter is too remote a ground for damages. Watson v. Ambergate Railway Company, 15 Jur. 448.

What is a sufficient Notice of a Sub-Contract.]

—On the 6th June, C. delivered at a booking-office in London, samples to be carried by the Midland Railway Company to Chesterfield; no directions were given as to the mode of carriage, and the goods were sent by goods train at the ordinary rate. The samples were contained in a box, on the top of which was a special printed label in the following terms, "Traveller's goods. Deliver immediately," and underneath was written the address of the consignee. The goods not being delivered before the evening of the 8th of June, although they might reasonably have been delivered on the 7th, C. sued the company to recover one guinea paid by them to their traveller for his expenses at the usual rate of one guinea a day, for which time he was delayed at Chesterfield by the non-receipt of the goods:—Held, that there was no special contract between the parties, nor was the merely labelling the box as "Traveller's goods" sufficient notice to the company of the purpose for which the goods were being sent, so as to make that purpose common knowledge to both parties, or in any way to affect the company with special notice of the facts so as to make particular damages recoverable against them. Candy v. Midland Railway Company, 38 L. T. 226.

Delay—Knowledge of Carrier.]—On Wednesday, 7th August, a railway company received goods from the plaintiff to be carried from A. to B., near S., by luggage train; the plaintiff having contracted to supply them on hire at B. on Saturday, 10th August. The ordinary practice of the company, if goods did not make a truck load, was to send to N., which was farther from B. than S. from N.: they might be sent either by railway to S., from which there is a carrier to B., daily, or direct to B. by a carrier on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The company sent the goods, which were not a truck load, to N., and kept them there from Friday till Tuesday, and then sent them by the carrier to B., where they arrived on Wednesday. The plaintiff did not inform the company that it was important that the goods should arrive at B. on the 10th August, nor was it known to the plaintiff that the goods, if a truck load, would have been sent direct to S. In an action to recover the loss of the hire of his goods and for personal expenses in inquiring for them, the jury having found that the delay at N. was unreasonable:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the latter damages but not to the former. Hales v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 4 B. & S. 66.

The plaintiffs delivered to a railway company ten tons of cotton, to be carried from Liverpool to Oldham. In the usual course the cotton should have been received on the following day, but it did not, in fact, arrive till four days afterwards. In consequence of the delay a new mill of the plaintiffs was stopped for want of cotton to go on with. At the time of the delivery of the cotton to the company nothing was said as to the particular delay likely to result from the delay in forwarding it. But, on the day before it was delivered to the company, and repeatedly on each succeeding day, until it arrived at Oldham, one of the plaintiffs called to inquire about it; and on each occasion told the manager of the goods department, at the Oldham station, that the mill was at a stand, solely on the non-delivery of the cotton. In an action against the company for neglect in delivering the cotton, the plaintiffs proved that during the time the mill was at a stand they had paid in wages 7l.; and that the profit which would have been made, if the mill had been at work, was 7l. 10s. The judge of the county court told the jury, that when, by the neglect of a carrier, a man had no material to carry on his business, he had a right to charge, as legal damage, such loss as naturally and immediately arose from stopping the mill; that the plaintiffs were entitled to the money they had actually paid as wages, 7l.; and that the profit which the plaintiffs would have made was a fair subject of calculation; and the jury should therefore give, over and above the 7l., such amount as would be the actual loss and detriment the plaintiffs had suffered by the non-arrival of the cotton in due course:—Held, that this was a misdirection, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to the amount of wages paid, and of the profits lost as legal damages, inasmuch as it assumed that the stoppage of the mill arose entirely from the non-delivery of the cotton, when, in fact, it arose partly from that, and partly from the plaintiffs having no cotton to go on with. Gee v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 6 H. & N. 211; 30 L. J., Ex. 11; 3 L. T. 328; 9 W. R. 103.

What is Reasonable Expedition.]—Carriers are bound to convey with reasonable expedition, and if their course of business is inconsistent with that, it is no answer to an action against them for damages arising from delay, that they carried at the ordinary rate in which they conducted their business. Blakemore v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 1 F. & F. 76.

Carriage beyond Limit of Line—Extra Demand.]—A party delivered to a railway company goods to carry from A. to B., paying the carriage, to be delivered to a party there. Part of the transit was effected by another railway company, which refused to deliver up the goods to the consignee without payment of an additional specified sum; but an action having been threatened against the contracting company, an offer was made to deliver them up without that payment. The action was, however, persevered in, the plaintiff declaring against the company as carriers, with a count in trover for the conversion of the goods, subsequently to which they were given up in damaged state:—Held, that the additional sum demanded for the goods was not the measure of damage. Davis v. North-Western Railway Company, 4 Jur., N. S. 1303.

Depreciation of Bulk—Injury to Part.]—The plaintiff, a hop grower in Kent, sent to London by railway some pockets of hops consigned to a purchaser. The railway company kept the hops for some days on their premises in an open van, whereby a small portion was stained by wet, and the purchaser rejected the whole, as he was entitled to do by the custom of the market. The plaintiff dried the stained hops, and they were rendered as good as ever for actual use, but the staining had depreciated the market value of the bulk. The plaintiff sent the hops to a factor for sale, but at that time the market price of hops had considerably fallen from what it was at the time the hops ought to have been delivered. The company had no notice that the hops were sent to London for sale:—Held, first, that he was entitled to recover, as damage, the amount of the depreciation in the market value of the hops, and was not confined to the value of the portion actually damaged. Collard v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 7 H. & N. 79; 30 L. J., Ex. 393; 7 Jur., N. S. 950; 4 L. T. 410; 9 W. R. 697.

Held, secondly, that he was entitled to recover, as damages, the difference between the market price on the day when the hops were sold, and the day when they ought to have been delivered. Id.

Value—How estimated.]—Where goods are delivered to a carrier, to be carried from A. to B., and are lost, the owner is entitled to recover the value of the goods at B.; and that value is the price for which they can be got to, not at, B. Rice v. Bazendale, 7 H. & N. 96; 30 L. J., Ex. 371.

C., by an agent at B., received small parcels, and had them put into a hamper addressed to himself at L., and sent by railway; these small parcels, which were addressed to different persons, it was the business of C. to deliver as addressed; in its transit on the railway, a small parcel addressed to Mr. K. was abstracted from the hamper:—Held, in an action by C. against the company, for loss of the parcel, that it was sufficient to prove, that it was not in the hamper when delivered to C. by the company, and that it was not necessary to go into evidence to shew that the company had not delivered it to Mr. K., and that the amount of damages in such action was the value of the lost parcel, as C. would be liable to that amount to the owner of it. Crouch v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 2 C. & K. 789.

Where goods are intrusted to a carrier for conveyance and lost by the way, the measure of damages is the market value of the goods at the place of destination at the time when they should have been delivered. If this test is inapplicable, by reason of there being no market for goods of the description at the place of delivery, the jury, in assessing the damages, must ascertain the cost price of the goods and the expenses of transit (if paid), and add to these items such a sum for importer's profits as in their discretion shall appear reasonable. O'Hanlan v. Great Western Railway Company, 6 B. & S. 484; 34 L. J., Q. B. 154; 11 Jur., N. S. 797; 12 L. T. 490; 13 W. R. 741.

Profits to be derived from Manufacture.]—The measure of damages payable by railway carriers who have received goods, ordered by the plaintiff from his correspondent living at a distance, and delivered to the company directed to the plaintiff, but not delivered until the season for them was past, is the difference between the exchangeable or marketable values of the goods which they would have had at the time when they ought to have arrived, and which they had when they actually arrived; and the loss of profits which the plaintiff would have derived from making up these goods into articles of sale, and disposing of them cannot be taken into account. Wilson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 9 C. B., N. S. 632; 30 L. J., C. P. 232; 7 Jur., N. S. 862; 3 L. T. 859; 9 W. R. 635.

Contract subsequently Perfected.]—The plaintiff having sent a quantity of hops, of more than 10l. value, by a railway company, the consignee, having refused to receive them on account of not being delivered in time, afterwards sent to the plaintiff a signed memorandum of the original contract:—Held, that in assessing the damages for negligence, the jury was not at liberty to take into account the loss of the bargain between the plaintiff and the consignee. Simmons v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 7 Jur., N. S. 849.

If goods are delivered too late by a carrier, the owner ought instantly to sell at market price, and realize his loss; and the difference between the price he obtains by the sale at that time, and that which he would have obtained, is the only measure of damages. Id.

Costs of Removal.]—B. sent goods by carriers, to be delivered in Bedford on a Thursday, in order to be ready for the market on Saturday, but did not give notice that they were sent for that purpose. On that day his clerk proceeded there, and owing to the non-delivery of the goods till the Monday following, he removed them to another place for sale. In an action for the non-delivery of the goods within a reasonable time, the expenses so incurred may be given by the jury as damages. Black v. Bazendale, 1 Ex. 410; 17 L. J., Ex. 50.

Costs of Previous Action.]—A. entered into a contract with B. to forward goods; B. entered into a contract with C. to carry them; the goods were damaged through C.'s default; A. brought an action against B., and B. defended and incurred costs:—Held, that B. could not, in an action against C., recover the costs of the previous action without C.'s express authority to defend it. Bazendale v. London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company, 10 L. R., Ex. 35; 44 L. J., Ex. 20; 32 L. T. 330; 23 W. R. 167—Ex. Ch.

Failing to provide Horse-Boxes for Conveyance of Horses intended for Sale at Auction.]—A railway company having failed to provide horse-boxes, pursuant to contract, for the conveyance of horses for sale by auction in Dublin on the day but one following, the owner was compelled to send them by road, a distance of twenty-four miles, in order that they might arrive in due time for the sale, and for previous inspection by purchasers. The horses, which were valuable hunters, were in soft condition at the time. They were deteriorated in appearance by the fatigue of the road journey; one of them was lamed; and such as were sold realized prices below what would have been otherwise obtained, the others being left on the owner's hands. It appears that if they had been in hard-fed condition they would have borne the journey without injury. The company's station-master was, at the time of the contract, aware of the intended sale, and on the day on which it was to take place:—Held, that the company were not liable in damages for the whole of the loss which the owner sustained in consequence of the injuries occasioned to the horses by the road journey, but that the measure of damages was the deterioration which the horses, if in ordinary condition and fit to make the journey, would have suffered thereby, and the time and labour expended on the road. Waller v. The Midland Great Western Railway (Ireland) Company, 4 L. R., Ir. 376. Reversing 1 Ir. L. R. 520.

The plaintiff sent some horses to stables with which the defendant had contracted to supply him during a fair. Another person to whom the defendant had subsequently let the same stables, with the assistance of the defendant's servants, turned the plaintiff's horses out of the stables without their clothing, and while they were standing in the defendant's yard until other stables could be procured, some of them caught cold and became depreciated in value. The jury found that the depreciation in value was the result of the breach of contract by the defendant.—Held (by the Court of Appeal—dubitante Bramwell, L. J.), that the defendant was liable for the depreciation thus caused, and that the damage was not too remote. Hobbs v. London and South-Western Railway Company (10 L. R., Q. B. 111) questioned. Mahon v. Field, 7 Q. B. D. 591; 50 L. J., Q. B. 552; 45 L. T. 381.—C. A. Reversing 50 L. J., Q. B. 311; 44 L. T. 175; 29 W. R. 472.

Loss of Samples—Traveller—Hotel Expenses.]

—A commercial traveller delivered a parcel of samples to a carrier to be carried to A., but did not state the contents of the parcel, or the purpose for which it was required. By the negligence of the carrier the delivery of the parcel was delayed, and the traveller spent three days at A. unemployed, waiting for it. In an action against the carrier for negligence, in which the hotel expenses of the traveller during the time he was waiting for the parcel were claimed as damages:—Held, that such damages were too remote, and could not be recovered. Woodger v. Great Western Railway Company, 2 L. R., C. P. 318; 36 L. J., C. P. 177; 15 L. T. 579; 15 W. R. 383.

Non-sale—Contract.]—In order to recover damages for non-sale, owing to delay in carrying, there must have been an actual contract to buy for a price. Hart v. Bazendale, 16 L. T. 390.

General Description—Knowledge of Carrier.]

—B. delivered to a carrier's servant on a quay at Glasgow, for shipment on board his vessel which lay alongside, several cases containing machinery, which was intended for the erection of a saw-mill at Vancouver's Island. The master gave a bill of lading for them, describing the cases as containing merchandize. The carrier knew generally of what the shipment consisted. On the arrival of the vessel at her destination, one of the cases, which contained machinery without which the mill could not be erected, could not be found on board; and B. was obliged to send to England to replace the lost articles:—Held, that the measure of damages for the breach of contract was, the cost of replacing the lost articles in Vancouver's Island, with interest at 5 per cent. upon the amount until judgment, by way of compensation for the delay. British

Nominal Damages in Trover for Pre-Delivery.]

—The plaintiffs, grain merchants at Hull, were in the habit of employing G. at Birmingham as their broker and agent to sell grain for them in the Birmingham district, which grain was consigned by the plaintiffs from time to time to a station at Birmingham, to be there held by the company, as warehousemen, "to the plaintiffs' order." The course of business was for G. to take samples from the grain at the station for the purpose of effecting sales, and upon effecting a sale, to communicate to the plaintiffs the buyer's name, together with the quantity, quality, and price of the grain sold; and the plaintiffs would then forward an invoice with a delivery order on the railway company to the purchaser, who would thereupon obtain delivery of the grain from the railway company. In June, 1873, the plaintiffs discovered that, on various occasions between January, 1872, and June, 1873, G. had fraudulently obtained grain from the railway company, which the latter had delivered before receiving the plaintiffs' order, and that he had done this by making sales to persons in his own employ, and fictitious sales to non-existing persons, and then presenting to the company orders sometimes signed ostensibly by such persons, and indorsed by them for delivery to himself, sometimes mere orders for delivery to himself, and sometimes orders signed by himself for the plaintiffs, he not having their authority so to do. The company delivered grain in accordance with such orders before receiving any order from the plaintiffs, and in two instances they delivered without any order whatever. The plaintiffs, however, had been subsequently paid by cheques from G. for the grain so pre-delivered. In other cases of pre-delivery by the company to G.'s orders, the plaintiffs had not been paid; but the purchasers to whom the plaintiffs originally sent the delivery orders, were at the time debited in their books with the amounts which still remained due to them; and subsequently to such pre-deliveries, the company received from G. the plaintiffs' delivery orders, indorsed over to him by the original purchasers; the plaintiffs not knowing, at the time they sent the delivery orders and made the debits in their books, that the company had parted with the goods before receiving the plaintiffs' orders. In an action by the plaintiffs against the company:—Held, by Bramwell and Thesiger, L. JJ. (dissentiente, Baggallay, L. J.), that although there had been a conversion of the corn by the defendants, the plaintiffs were only entitled to nominal damages. By Baggallay, L. J., that the plaintiffs had not been damaged, and were not entitled to even nominal damages. Hiort v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 4 Ex. D. 188; 48 L. J., Ex. 545; 40 L. T. 674; 27 W. R. 778.—C. A. Reversing 38 L. T. 424.

IX. ACTIONS AGAINST CARRIERS.

1. NOTICE OF.

Method of, by Statute.]—By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 138, any notice, writ, or other proceeding at law or in equity may be served by being left at, or transmitted through the post directed to the principal office of the company, or one of their principal offices, where there shall be more than one:—Held, that a notice of action against the Great Western Railway Company for an overcharge for the carriage of goods from Bristol to London, served upon the superintendent of the Bristol station by the plaintiff, who resided at Bristol, was insufficient, inasmuch as the secretary was in London, and the control of the railway was carried on, and the ordinary meetings of the directors were held, there. Garton v. Great Western Railway Company, 27 L. J., Q. B. 375; 4 Jur., N. S. 1036.

Where a railway company was by its act entitled to notice of action, before any action should be brought against them for anything done or omitted to be done in pursuance of their act, and an action was commenced against them for money received by them to the plaintiff's use, and on accounts stated, and they pleaded that no notice of action had been given, but failed to allege that the money was received or the accounts stated in pursuance of their act:—Held, that the plea was bad, as the court could not presume, even after verdict, that the receipt of the money or the stating of the accounts was a thing done in pursuance of their act. Garton v. Great Western Railway Company, El. Bl. & El. 837; 28 L. J., Q. B. 321; 5 Jur., N. S. 1244.—Ex. Ch.

By a railway act it was enacted, that no action should be brought for anything done, or omitted to be done, in pursuance of the act, or in the execution of the powers or authorities given by the act, unless a previous notice in writing should be given. The company having, contrary to the provisions of the act, made excessive charges for the carriage of goods, and claimed and received the amount of such charges from the plaintiff:—Held, that in an action to recover the sums so extorted, the company was entitled to notice of action. Kent v. Great Western Railway Company, 3 C. B. 714; 16 L. J., C. P. 72.

Breach of Common Law Duty.—A railway company was empowered by act of parliament to carry goods and passengers on the railway, and to keep in repair the fences of the same. The act contained a clause, that no action should be brought against the company for anything done or omitted to be done in pursuance of the act, unless fourteen days' previous notice of action was given of such intention. The company undertook to carry some horses by the railway, but in consequence of the fences of the railway having broken down, the train was upset and the horses injured:—Held, that the company, being sued in its capacity of carriers, was not entitled to notice of action. Palmer v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 4 M. & W. 749; 7 D. P. C. 232.

As Carriers of Passengers.—A railway company was empowered to make a railway, which all persons were to have the liberty of using with carriages, on payment of tolls. The company was also empowered to provide locomotive engines, and charge for their use, and to use locomotive engines and carriages for the conveyance of passengers, and to charge for such conveyance, in addition to the tolls, within a limited amount. It was enacted that no action should be prosecuted against any person, for anything done, or omitted to be done, in pursuance of the act, or in the execution of the powers given by it, without twenty days' notice in writing. A declaration against the company charged, that they were owners of the railway, and of carriages used for the conveyance of passengers along it for reward; that the plaintiff became a passenger in one of the carriages, for reward to them; and it became their duty to use due care in conveying him. Breach, that they did not use due care in conveying him, but so negligently conducted themselves in carrying him, and managing the carriage in which he was a passenger, the train to which it was attached, and the engine, whereby it was drawn upon the railway, that the carriage was thrown off the rails, and the plaintiff injured:—Held, that no notice of action was necessary, the company being sued in their capacity of carriers, and not for anything done or omitted under the act. Curpue v. London and Brighton Railway Company, 5 Q. B. 747; D. & M. 608; 3 Railw. Cas. 692; 13 L. J., Q. B. 138; 8 Jur. 464.

2. FORM AND NATURE.

On Tort or Contract.—An action against a common carrier for negligence in non-delivery is an action founded on contract and not on tort within s. 5 of the County Courts Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 142). Fleming v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company, 4 Q. B. D. 81; 39 L. T. 555; 27 W. R. 481.—C. A.

But an action against a carrier for loss of goods by delivery to an insolvent purchaser contrary to notice given by the plaintiff in exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu, is an action founded on tort within the above section, and he is therefore entitled to costs, where he recovers 12*l.* Pontifex v. Midland Railway Company, 3 Q. B. D. 23; 47 L. J., Q. B. 28; 37 L. T. 403; 26 W. R. 209.

Proof of contract is not necessary to support an action against common carriers: they may be sued in an action on the case for the injury as arising ex delicto, and such an action is not necessarily to be considered quasi ex contractu, or founded on contract. Brotherton v. Wood, 6 Moore, 141; 9 Price, 408; 3 B. & S. 54.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff delivered to the defendants, and they accepted, a package to be taken care of and carried from L. to B., and there delivered to A., for reasonable reward, and thereupon it became their duty to take due care in the conveyance of the package. At the trial the jury found a verdict for one of the defendants and against the other:—Held, that the declaration might be read as charging the defendants in tort, on the general custom of the realm, and not on a contract, and the court was bound so to read it after verdict, and to support the finding, though against one only. Pozzi v. Shipton, 1 P. & D. 4; 8 A. & E. 963; 1 W., W. & H. 624.

An action against a common carrier for the breach of his duty to carry safely goods delivered to him as such to be carried for hire, whereby the goods are lost, is an action, not of contract but of tort, in substance as well as in form, the duty being imposed upon him by the custom of the realm, and being distinct from and independent of his obligation under the contract of carriage, in respect of which latter he may also be sued in an action of contract. Taitan v. Great Western

Railway Company, 2 El. & El. 844; 29 L. J., Q. B. 184; 6 Jur., N. S. 800; 8 W. R. 606.

Held, therefore, that a plaintiff in an action against a common carrier for the breach of the duty in question, brought in a superior court to recover a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, is not deprived of his costs by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 30, if the defendant suffers judgment by default; for that the action is not one of contract within that section. Ib. See Legge v. Tucker, 1 H. & N. 500; 26 L. J., Ex. 71; 2 Jur., N. S. 1235.

In an action against a carrier for the loss of a trunk, the terminus a quo is immaterial, as the gist of the action is the non-delivery at the place it ought to have gone to. Woodward v. Booth, 7 B. & C. 301; S. P., Tucker v. Cracklin, 2 Stark. 385.

Where a count against a carrier by water alleged that in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had caused to be shipped on board his vessel a quantity of wheat, to be carried to a certain place for freight, to be therefor paid to the defendant, he undertook to carry the wheat safely, and deliver it for the plaintiff on a given day; but it appeared that the defendant's undertaking to carry was made before the whole of the wheat had been shipped on board the vessel:—Held, that the count might be supported, although it was objected that the consideration for the promise was executory. Streeter v. Horlock, 7 Moore, 283; 1 Bing. 34.

3. PARTIES TO SUE.

With whom Contract made.—A miller in Suffolk sold flour to the plaintiff, and, according to the usual course of business between them, consigned it to him in Kent, paying the carriage by the Great Eastern to London; and that company delivered it to the South-Eastern Railway Company, who forwarded it to the plaintiff in Kent, and charged him for the carriage by their line:—Held, that though the property in the flour might not have passed to the plaintiff under the Statute of Frauds, still, as he had contracted with the South-Eastern Company for its carriage, he could sue them for damage done to it in the transit over their line. Mead v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 18 W. R. 735.

An action lies against a carrier in the name of the consignor who agreed with him and was to pay him. Davis v. James, 5 Burr. 2680.

If the consignor of goods delivers them to a particular carrier by order of the consignee, and they are afterwards lost, the consignor cannot maintain an action against the carrier for the loss, although he paid for booking the goods; the action can only be brought by the consignee. Daves v. Peck, 8 T. R. 330; 3 Esp. 12.

Payment of Hire.—In an action by the consignor of goods against a carrier for non-delivery, where he alleged that the carrier undertook to deliver, in consideration of the hire to be paid by the plaintiff, and proved that the hire was to be paid by the consignee:—Held, not to be a variance, the consignor being liable by law. Moore v. Wilson, 1 T. R. 659.

Property vesting.—Where goods, consigned to a merchant in a foreign country, are stated in the bill of lading to be shipped by order and on account of the consignee, the con-signor cannot maintain any action against the shipowner in respect of the goods, as the property must be taken to have vested in the consignee from the time they were put on board the ship. Brown v. Hodgson, 2 Camp. 36.

Fraud.—Where the plaintiffs consigned goods according to an order received to a person they did not know, and who afterwards appeared to be a swindler, but who got possession of them by the carrier's negligence:—Held, that they might maintain an action against the carrier, as the property had not passed to the consignee. Duff v. Budd, 6 Moore, 469; 3 B. & B. 177. And see Stephenson v. Hart, 4 Bing. 476; 1 M. & P. 357.

Resident Abroad.—A person who ships goods in an English port, as the agent of the owner of the goods resident abroad, and pays the freight of them, may maintain an action in his own name for not delivering them according to the bill of lading. Joseph v. Knox, 3 Camp. 320.

Sale or Approval.—When goods are forwarded for sale on approval, the consignor is the party to sue the carrier. Swain v. Sheppard, 1 M. & Rob. 223.

In an action against a carrier for the loss of a parcel of whalebone, it appearing that the plaintiff had agreed with A. to take such whalebone as he should send by the carrier at a certain price, and the parcel having been so sent:—Held, that the consignor, and not the plaintiff was the party to maintain the action. Coombs v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 3 H. & N. 510; 27 L. J., Ex. 401.

Special Contract.—Though, generally speaking, where there is a delivery to a carrier to deliver to a consignee, the latter is the proper person to bring an action against the carrier: yet, if the consignor makes a special contract with the carrier, such contract supersedes the necessity of shewing the ownership in the goods, and the consignor may maintain the action, though the goods may be the property of the consignee. The question whether the goods were delivered to the carrier at the risk of the consignor or consignee, is a question for the jury. The delivery of goods to a carrier by a consignor does not necessarily vest the property in them in the consignee. Dunlop v. Lambert, 6 C. & F. 600.

Misdelivery—Agent and Principal.—To an action against a carrier for the loss of goods, it is no answer that the goods were delivered to the carrier by A., who, as consignor thereof, claimed compensation for the loss, and that the carrier paid him as such consignor, without notice that he was the agent of the plaintiff, and believing that he delivered the goods on his own account, and was the person entitled to sue. Coombs v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 3 H. & N. 1; 27 L. J., Ex. 269.

Assent by Owner—Accord.—If, on finding that goods have been misdelivered by a carrier, the owner assents to the party who has received them selling them on his account, though that may be an acceptance of the delivery, it is, per se, no defence to an action for the mis-delivery, as there is no consideration to make it a discharge, and it is merely an accord without satisfaction. Sanquer v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 16 C. B. 163; 3 C. L. R. 811.

Vendor or Vendee.—Delivery of goods by the vendor, on behalf of the vendee, to a carrier, is a delivery to the vendee, though the particular carrier is not named by the vendee; and the vendor cannot maintain an action against the carrier for non-delivery. Dutton v. Solomonson, 3 B. & P. 582. And see Jacobs v. Neilson, 3 Taunt. 423.

Even though the carrier is to be paid by the vendor. King v. Meredith, 2 Camp. 639.

Goods exceeding 10l. in price were verbally ordered of C. No particular mode of carriage was specified, nor was there any evidence of any particular course of dealing between C. and the vendee. C. afterwards forwarded the goods by a carrier. The goods were lost while in his custody:—Held, that C. was the party to bring an action for the loss of the goods, the property therein not having passed to the vendee. Coates v. Chaplin, 2 G. & D. 552; 2 Q. B. 483; 6 Jur. 1123.

Bailee or Bailor.—The bailee of goods sending them by a carrier to the bailor, may sue the carrier for negligence. Freeman v. Birch, 1 N. & M. 420; 3 Q. B. 483.

Joint Parties.—If A. and B. are separately owners of several articles contained in a box which they delivered to a railway company to carry for them jointly, they may jointly sue the company for the loss of the goods, though the box is directed to one of them only, and the price of the carriage is paid by that one only. Metcalfe v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 318; 27 L. J., C. P. 333; 4 Jur., N. S. 487.

Estoppel.—When carriers receive goods to be carried there is no estoppel precluding them from disputing the title of the sender of the goods. Sheridan v. New Quay Company, 4 C. B., N. S. 618; 28 L. J., C. P. 58; 5 Jur., N. S. 248.

To trover by such sender, it is an answer for the carriers that they have delivered the goods to the true owner at his request. Ib.

Guardians of a female under age who had eloped are justified in detaining her clothes; and a carrier to whom they had been delivered for the purpose of conveyance is justified in delivering them over to the guardians. Barker v. Taylor, 1 C. & P. 101.

And see ESTOPPEL and BAILMENT.

Passengers and their Luggage.—See supra, II.

4. PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE.

Claims.—A declaration, stating that goods had been delivered to the defendants as carriers, to be conveyed by them for a reasonable reward, and that they undertook to carry them safely and securely, and deliver them accordingly, and assigning for breach that they lost the same, is sufficient to admit proof that they had been guilty of gross negligence. Smith v. Horne, 2 Moore, 18; 8 Taunt. 144; Holt, 643.

VOL. I.

An averment of an undertaking to carry goods to R., to be delivered to C. B., to be paid for on delivery, shews with sufficient certainty that the price of the goods was to be paid by C. B., the consignee, to the carrier. Jacobs v. Nelson, 3 Taunt. 423.

A declaration that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff for the carriage of goods is not supported by proof that the defendant undertook to carry goods for the plaintiff, in consideration that the plaintiff would carry a like quantity for the defendant. Bracegirdle v. Hincks, 9 Ex. 661; 23 L. J., Ex. 128; 18 Jur. 70.

A count alleged a delivery of goods to a railway company to be carried by them from C. to S., and there to be delivered to the plaintiff for reward, yet the company did not carry the goods from C. to S., nor there deliver the same, but therein made default, and by their neglect the goods have never been delivered to the plaintiff, although the time for doing so has long since elapsed. The company pleaded, as to so much of the count as alleged non-delivery within a reasonable time, payment into court of 5l. as sufficient to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the matter therein pleaded to:—Held, that the count was a count, not only for damages for unreasonable delay in delivery, but also for non-delivery of the goods altogether, and comprised a cause of action which was not satisfied by the acceptance of the money paid into court. Levene v. Great Western Railway Company, 18 L. T. 295.

A declaration against a carrier for refusing to carry goods, averred that the plaintiff "was ready and willing, and offered to pay to the defendant such sum of money as he was legally entitled to receive for the receipt, carriage and conveyance of the goods:—"Held, that the averment was sufficient, and that it was not necessary to aver an actual tender of money for the carriage. Pickford v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 8 M. & W. 372; 9 D. P. C. 766; 2 Railw. Cas. 592; 5 Jur. 731.

In an action against a carrier, the declaration alleged that the plaintiff delivered goods to him to be carried for hire from L. to B., and there to be delivered, and that it became his duty safely and securely to carry and deliver the goods at B.; and that a reasonable time for so doing had elapsed, but that he did not safely or securely carry or deliver the same, but so negligently conducted himself, that the goods became wholly lost to the plaintiff:—Held, after verdict, that upon this declaration, the plaintiff might recover damages for the non-delivery of the goods within a reasonable time, inasmuch as the duty to deliver within a reasonable time was a duty engrafted by the law on the duty alleged to deliver generally; and that the breach might be read, as stating that the defendant did not, within a reasonable time, nor at any time afterwards, deliver the goods. Raphael v. Pickford, 2 D., N. S. 916; 5 M. & G. 551; 6 Scott, N. R. 478; 12 L. J., C. P. 176; 7 Jur. 815.

In an action against a cab proprietor, the declaration stated that the plaintiff hired the vehicle, and that, in consideration of the premises, and that the plaintiff with his luggage would become a passenger, and of certain reward, the defendant promised the plaintiff to carry and convey him and his luggage safely and securely, and alleged a loss of part of the luggage by the negligence of the defendant's servant:—Held that the declaration was sufficient to charge the defendant for a breach of his implied duty to use an ordinary degree of care, the words "safely and securely" not necessarily importing a more extended liability. Ross v. Mill, 2 C. B. 877; 3 D. & L. 788; 15 L. J., C. P. 182; 10 Jur. 435.

In an action against a railway company, charging them as common carriers, for the loss of a package intrusted to them to carry, subject to the terms of a special notice by the company not to be responsible for articles of certain descriptions, or of a certain value, unless entered and paid for accordingly; an allegation in the declaration of a loss arising from the gross negligence of the company, and the felonious acts of their servants, is surplusage. Butt v. Great Western Railway Company, 11 C. B. 140; 20 L. J., C. P. 241.

The plaintiffs declared against the defendants on their common law liability as carriers, for the loss of a parcel, which the declaration stated that they, for certain hire and reward, undertook to carry from London, and deliver safely at Dover: and it appearing that the course of dealing between the parties was, for the plaintiffs to pay the defendants an annual sum for the carriage of parcels between London and Dover, and on the receipt of each parcel, the defendants were in the habit of delivering to the plaintiffs a written acknowledgment, stating that they undertook to carry and deliver the same safely (fire and robbery excepted); and the jury having found that this was the contract between the parties, though the loss was occasioned by negligence only:—Held, a variance. Latham v. Rutley, 3 D. & R. 211; 2 B. & C. 20.

Defences.—In an action against carriers, a count stated a delivery to them of a case containing maps to be carried, and alleged a receipt by them, whereby it became their duty to take due and proper care; but that they did not take due and proper care of them, whereby the maps were lost. A second count was in trover. Plea, to the first count, that, at the delivery of the case and its contents, the defendants were common carriers for hire, and gave notice to the plaintiff, who had notice and knowledge that they would not be responsible for the loss of, or damage done to, goods and chattels delivered to them for the purpose of carriage, and, maps in packages or otherwise, unless the same were insured according to their value, and paid for at the time of their delivery; that they received the case and maps to be carried, upon the terms and conditions of the notice, and upon no other terms whatsoever, of which the plaintiff, at the delivery, had notice, and that the maps were not, at the delivery, insured according to their value, or paid for. To the count in trover there was a similar plea, alleging the conversion to have been by a misdelivery through mistake and inadvertence:—Held, first, that the action being founded on a breach of duty ex contractu, the allegation in the plea of a special contract was sufficient; and that, as the defendants accepted the goods only on the terms of the notice, a special averment of the plaintiff's consent was unnecessary; secondly, that the plea was not an argumentative traverse of the facts in the declaration, from which the breach of duty was implied; thirdly, that as the declaration might apply to any kind of negligence, it was not necessary to allege in the plea, that the loss was occasioned by such negligence as the defendants were not responsible for; and that if they had committed negligence, for which they were liable notwithstanding their notice, the plaintiff should have now assigned it; fourthly, that the case was not separable from the maps; fifthly, that the plea to the count in trover could not be supported, inasmuch as it admitted a conversion by inadvertent delivery, and did not shew that the inadvertence was such as was protected by the notice. Wylde v. Pickford, 8 M. & W. 443.

In an action by a passenger travelling on a railway, to a declaration containing counts alleging severally non-delivery of his luggage and injury caused to it by negligence of the company, the company pleaded that the passenger was an officer travelling in command of soldiers, and that the non-delivery and injury were caused by the mutinous acts of the soldiers:—Held, that the plea shewed a good defence as negating any default on the part of the railway company. Martin v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, 3 L. R., Ex. 9; 37 L. J., Ex. 27; 17 L. T. 349.

The company also pleaded that the passenger and his luggage were carried by the company under a contract between them and her Majesty's government, and that there was no contract between the company and the passenger:—Held, that this was an answer to the count for non-delivery which sounded in contract; but not an answer to the count for negligence, there being a duty on the part of the company to carry the passenger and his luggage safely, for a breach of which he could sue. Id.

In an action for negligence against a carrier, it is not competent to him, under not guilty, to set up as a defence that the plaintiff misrepresented the weight of the goods which the defendant agreed to carry; the plea operating only as a denial of the loss or damage, and not of the receipt of the goods by the defendant, who ought either to plead the misrepresentation specially, or traverse the acceptance of the goods for the purpose of being carried. Webb v. Page, 1 D. & L. 531; 6 Scott, N. R. 951; 6 M. & G. 196.

A declaration alleged that the defendants were common carriers of passengers from Southampton to Gibraltar, a place beyond the seas. A plea, that they were not common carriers of passengers only puts in issue the fact of the defendants carrying passengers from Southampton to Gibraltar for hire, and not whether they were common carriers in the strict technical sense of the term, and liable as such according to the custom of England. Bennett v. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Boat Company, 6 D. & L. 387; 6 C. B. 775; 18 L. J., C. P. 85; 13 Jur. 347.

A declaration alleged that the defendants were carriers of goods for hire, and that the plaintiff delivered to them a package, to be carried by them to the Eastern station, and there to be safely and securely kept by them for the plaintiff, and that it became their duty safely and securely to carry and keep the package. Breach, that they did not safely and securely carry the same, but that through their negligence it was lost. Plea, that they gave notice to the plaintiff that they would not carry any package containing several packages addressed to and intended for several parties, unless the addresses and the contents of the enclosed packages were declared; and that they would not be responsible for such packages unless such declaration were made; that each of the packages contained several parcels addressed to and intended for different parties, and that the addresses and contents of the enclosed parcels were not declared, is argumentative traverse of the bailment in the declaration. Crouch v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 7 Ex. 705; 21 L. J., Ex. 207.

Declaration stated that the defendants were the owners of a vessel lying in a certain river, and bound to Liverpool; that the plaintiff caused to be shipped on board her potatoes, to be safely carried by the defendants, as owners of the vessel, to Liverpool; and in consideration thereof, and of freight, they promised the plaintiff to take proper care of and safely carry the goods as aforesaid; with a breach that, through the defendants' negligence, they were damaged. Plea, non assumpsit:—Held, that the ownership of the vessel was not admitted by the plea. Bennion v. Davison, 3 M. & W. 179; 1 H. & H. 46.

In an action against a carrier for the loss of a parcel of more than 10*l.* value, if he wishes to avail himself of the want of notice of value, he must plead it specially. Syms v. Chaplin, 5 D. P. C. 429; 5 A. & E. 634.

Action against the defendant as a common carrier, to recover the value of goods delivered to him, to be taken care of, and safely carried by him as such carrier, in his cart, from N. to B., and there safely to be delivered by him for the plaintiff, but which were lost by his negligence. Plea, that when he received the goods, an express condition and agreement were made between him and the plaintiff, that the plaintiff should accompany the cart, and watch and protect the goods from being lost or stolen, but that he neglected and refused so to do; and by reason whereof, and not by reason of any negligence of the defendant, the goods were lost, was bad on special demurrer, as amounting to the general issue. Brind v. Dale, 2 M. & W. 775; M. & H. 217; 1 Jur. 847.

To a declaration against carriers for the loss of a trunk, containing articles of jewellery and female apparel, they pleaded as to the articles of jewellery, one of the dresses, &c., that the goods consisted of articles and property of the descriptions following, or of some or one of such descriptions, that is to say, gold or silver in a manufactured or unmanufactured state, &c. (enumerating the several articles mentioned in the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68), and that their value exceeded 10*l.*; that at the time of the receipt of the goods by them they had only affixed the notice required by s. 2; and that the plaintiff gave them no notice of the nature or value of the goods, nor did she pay or tender the increased rate of charge demandable under the act:—Held, that the plea was bad, for not alleging with certainty that the articles in question were articles of some or one of the descriptions mentioned in the act. Smith v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 7 C. B. 782.

A defence by a railway company, relying upon an inevitable accident must state all the facts which the company contends constitutes such inevitable accident. Burns v. Cork and Bandon Railway Company, 13 Ir. C. L. R. 543.

A passenger by railway, as to which notice had been given that no merchandize would be carried as luggage, but must be paid for, took a box of merchandize with him as luggage. During the journey a guard demanded and took it to carry separately, but no extra rate was demanded or paid. It was stolen afterwards by some of the company's servants. He sued the company, and alleged that the company undertook to carry safely, and by reason of gross neglect it was lost. Plea, that the case contained merchandize, and that the passenger had not paid for it as such, though he knew the rule. Replication, that the box manifestly contained merchandize, and yet was received as luggage:—Held, that assuming the declaration shewed a good cause of action in tort, the plea answered it. Belfast and Ballymena Railway Company v. Keys, 9 H. L. Cas. 556; 8 Jur., N. S. 367; 4 L. T. 841; 9 W. R. 793.

Held, also, that the replication was bad for not averring that the company had notice that the box contained merchandize. Id.

Replications.—In an action against a railway company for the loss of a package intrusted to them to carry, subject to the terms of a special notice by the company, not to be responsible for articles of certain descriptions, or of a certain value, unless entered and paid for accordingly, the declaration alleging a loss arising from gross negligence of the company and the felonious acts of their servants, the company pleaded (except as to so much of the declaration as alleged that the loss arose from the gross negligence of the company and the felonious acts of their servants), that the goods were within the description, and of the value mentioned in the notice, and that their nature and value were not declared at the time of their delivery to the company. The plaintiff newly assigned, that he issued his writ and declared thereupon, for that, while the goods were in the custody and possession of the company as common carriers, they were feloniously stolen by certain servants of the company unknown to the plaintiff:—Held, that the new assignment was bad, as applying to a portion of the declaration to which the plea was not addressed. Butt v. Great Western Railway Company, 11 C. B. 140; 20 L. J., C. P. 241.

Held, also, that a replication of felony by the company's servants only, without alleging gross negligence in the company, would have been bad. Id.

Declaration against a railway company for the loss of goods delivered to them as common carriers, to be safely and securely carried and conveyed. Plea, that at the time of such delivery the plaintiff became and was a passenger by the railway; and that the goods were delivered to be conveyed with him as such passenger, and that no part thereof was an article of clothing of the plaintiff. To this plea there was a replication de injuriâ:—Held, that replication was ill, inasmuch as the plea did not consist of matter of excuse, but amounted to the general issue, being an argumentative traverse, that the goods were delivered to the defendants as common carriers. Elwell v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 5 M. & W. 669; 8 D. P. C. 225.

Evidence in Actions.—The inscription on a stage-coach of the name of the party licensed to use it, is evidence against him of ownership, as well in an action as on summary proceedings, Barford v. Nelson, 1 B. & Ad. 571.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff delivered a trunk to the defendant, to put in a coach at Chester, in the county of Chester. Proof that it was delivered at Chester, in the county of the city of Chester, is no variance, there being no other place of the same name. Woodward v. Booth, 7 B. & C. 301.

In an action against the proprietor of a stage-coach, for an injury sustained by a passenger, the declaration alleged that the defendant was the owner of a stage-coach for the conveyance of passengers from London to Blackheath, and that the plaintiff agreed to become a passenger, and the defendant to receive him as such passenger, to be carried from London to Blackheath; and the evidence was that the words "London and Blackheath" were painted on the coach door; that the coach was licensed to run from Charing Cross only, and that the plaintiff was taken up at the Elephant and Castle, in St. George's Fields:—Held, that, as Charing Cross and St. George's Fields are both in common parlance styled London, the variance was immaterial, and the allegation sufficiently proved. Ditcham v. Chiris, 1 M. & P. 735; 4 Bing. 706.
